CHARLES DANIEL HOLBROOK.—A successful rancher, located three-quarters of a mile from Dougherty station and two and one-half miles from Lodi, is Charles Daniel Holbrook. He was born in Orleans County, Vt., on June 29, 1874, a son of Oscar J. and Ida (Collins) Holbrook, both parents being of Revolutionary stock. Oscar Holbrook was a farmer of Orleans County, and there Charles Daniel first attended school; later he attended the Bryant-Stratton Business College at Chicago. There were but two children in the family, Charles Daniel and Effie, who passed away in 1892. The father lived to be seventy-four years old, but the mother passed away when only thirty-seven years old.

Leaving home when he was nineteen years of age, Charles Daniel Holbrook took up newspaper work, working first on Chicago papers, and then going into business for himself. For twelve years he edited "The Sheep Breeder's Criterion," a publication devoted almost entirely to live stock and wool; afterwards this publication was absorbed by "The American Sheep Breeder and Wool Grower."

In 1896, Mr. Holbrook's father came to California and bought a twenty-acre ranch, which he has since set to vineyard and orchard, ten acres in vineyard, five acres in cherries, four acres in peaches, and one acre in almonds. On this place Charles Daniel Holbrook now resides. About 1912 Mr. Holbrook installed a pumping plant on his ranch, consisting of a four-inch pump with a ten-horse-power motor. In 1911 he removed to Los Angeles and engaged in an office-equipping business, in connection with the Barker Brothers Furniture Company. For ten years he was engaged in this line of work, returning to his ranch near Lodi on January 1, 1922. He also owns a two-and-a-half-acre place at Gardena, Cal.

On October 25, 1902, at Chicago, occurred the first marriage of Mr. Holbrook, which united him with Miss Mary Stanley, a native of Iowa and a daughter of Willard N. and Cornelia (Tompkins) Stanley. She was a graduate of Simpson College at Indianola, Iowa, whither her parents had removed from near Tonawanda, Niagara County, in northern New York. Of this union there are two children, Cornelia and Marcia. Mr. Holbrook's second marriage occurred at Long Beach, Cal., and united him with Miss Nora McGahen, formerly a grand opera star, who for seven years was with the Henry W. Savage Grand Opera Company, traveling all over the United States. Mr. Alfred Bennett McGahen, who grew up at the family home at Lansing, Mich., and formerly was also a member of the Henry W. Savage English Grand Opera Company, is Mrs. Holbrook's only surviving brother. He is for the present making his home with Mr. and Mrs. Holbrook, and has charge of the church choir in the M. E. Church at Lodi. He has an exceptional voice, and is noted as one of America's foremost tenors, having toured in Grand Opera all over the North American Continent and received flattering press notices in all the leading cities. Mrs. Holbrook is affiliated with the Eastern Star Lodge of Gardena, while Mr. Holbrook is a member of the Masonic Lodge at Gardena. Politically, Mr. Holbrook is a Republican.

CAPTAIN FRED SALBACH.—A popular and well known citizen of Stockton whose record of service with the fire department of that city covers a period of twenty-five years, is Captain Fred Salbach, captain of Engine Company No. 2. He is a native son of San Joaquin County, born on his father's ranch on the Upper Sacramento Road six miles from Stockton, July 6, 1866, a son of Edward and Katherine (Wagner) Salbach, both natives of Germany. Edward Salbach came to California in 1849 and mined at Vallicito, where he met and married Miss Katherine Wagner, who was also a California pioneer. Seven children were born to them: Leo resides in San Francisco; Fred is the subject of this sketch; Edward, deceased; Carl resides in Oakland, Cal.; Adolf, Otto and Bertha, Mrs. Charles Holman, all reside in Stockton.

Fred Salbach began his education in the Greenwood district school, then took a commercial course at the Stockton Business College. At eighteen years of age he went to Modoc County, where he rode the range for a few years, then returned to Stockton and engaged in farming in various parts of the county which occupied him for about five years. He then entered the employ of the Crown Mills in Stockton, and for five years worked under J. M. Welch, when he was appointed patrolman in the police department and served for three years. On June 6, 1898, he was transferred to the fire department as driver for Engine Company No. 2, where he has remained continuously and is now serving as captain of this company. During the twenty-five years of his service with the fire department he was engaged in developing thirty acres of the old home place to a cherry orchard, which he later sold to good advantage.

The marriage of Mr. Salbach occurred in Stockton, May 11, 1894, which united him with Miss Cora Looper, a native of Albany, Ky., and a daughter of William and Mary (Kidd) Looper. Mrs. Salbach was a babe in arms when her parents removed to California where they developed a ten-acre vineyard on West's Lane north of Stockton. There were eight children in the Looper family: Charlotte resides in Santa Cruz; Doshia is deceased; Mecia resides in New York; Cora is Mrs. Salbach; Nellie resides in Oakland; Myra resides in San Francisco; Hattie is also a resident of San Francisco, and Etta, Mrs. Hanford, resides in Stockton. Both parents are living in Stockton. Captain and Mrs. Salbach are the parents of one child, Audrey, who is the wife of Ray Esplin, of Stockton. Captain Salbach erected a modern flat building on Willow Street, Stockton, which was the first building in Stockton to be constructed with radio poles as a built-in feature; this he sold in 1923. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the Eagles; B. P. O. Elks, No. 218; Truth Lodge, No. 55, I. O. O. F.; is a Scottish Rite thirty-second degree Mason; belongs to Sciots and Stockton Parlor, No. 7, N. S. G. W. During the World War, Captain Salbach took an active part in all Liberty Loan drives and was a liberal contributor to all calls.

CHARLES HAAS.—One of Stockton's honored pioneers, the late Charles Haas was a leading merchant of this city. He died July 21, 1911, in his eighty-fourth year, having spent fifty-three years of his life in this city, with whose progress and development he was prominently identified. He was born in Germany on January 12, 1827, in the town of Waldürn, Baden, and was one of that group of high thinking and liberty loving men which came out of Germany by reason of the Revolution of 1848—that movement which Morse Stephens, the historian, often referred to as having brought to this country the very highest type of men. His early life was spent in his native town, where he had his early education, and at the age of fourteen he served for a time as copy clerk in the Probate Court.

In 1842, at the age of fifteen, he started out on foot to tour the country and learn his trade, as was the custom of the times. From 1842 to 1845 he lived in Vienna and served his apprenticeship as a watchmaker. The training was most exacting and accentuated in him that thoroughness and integrity which were characteristic of his whole life. The stories he used to tell of this period of his life were very interesting, such as earning his passage by helping to row a boat down the Danube to Vienna, evading the customs officials that he might go to Trieste to look at the sea for the first time, carrying home offerings to be made at the Cathedral in his native town, where certain sacred relics were worshipped.

On his return to Waldürn, at the age of eighteen, he remained for about a year, but the wanderlust caused him to make a second trip lasting about two years, this time across the Alps by way of the Simplon Pass into Italy, with stops in Switzerland. Returning home at the age of twenty-one he was drafted into the army, according to the custom of all continental countries. During this time the revolutionary movement for greater freedom and against militarism and Prussian aggressiveness was permeating Germany, as were similar movements in France and Italy against their over-lords. Mr. Haas joined in this movement for greater liberty, and when the revolt came and was crushed, he fled to Switzerland, and from there, by means of funds sent to him by his family, he came to New York, arriving in 1849 to start in the new world. Later on his parents, brothers and sisters all came to America and lived to ripe old ages. One brother died recently in Portland, Ore., at the age of ninety-six, while one sister is living and active at the age of ninety-three.

From New York Charles Haas went to Poughkeepsie on the Hudson, where he was employed and for a time managed the business of John Morgan of that city. In 1852 the desire to move on with the new country led him to set sail for California. Traveling by way of Panama he walked across the Isthmus and embarked for San Francisco. He often joked about his first experience in California. When he came ashore he had just twenty-five cents left. He went to the address of a friend, who had preceded him to San Francisco, only to find him moved. Walking into a nearby store he asked for a cigar, for which the clerk accepted his twenty-five cents in a condescending manner, the price being "two bits," of which he had never heard. On inquiring about his friend, the clerk said he had never heard of him. He was therefore without friends or money, but he had a smoke and, incidentally, it may be said that this was characteristic, because he loved his cigar and always had one close at hand. The day of his arrival was not over before he had employment and inside of a month he had established his own business on Commercial Street, which was then built out over the water and known as Long Wharf.

In 1853 Mr. Haas bought an interest in the firm of Lortzendorf & Company, wholesale jewelry manufacturers, whose place of business was on Jackson Street near Montgomery. His association in the wholesale business caused him to travel through the interior and he made regular trips through the northern and southern mines along the mother lode. These trips took him by steamer to Sacramento and Stockton. Realizing the possibilities of a location in Stockton, Mr. Haas arranged in June, 1858, for the purchase by his firm of the jewelry business of J. & C. Ling, which was established in 1850. Old newspaper clippings of these times speak of the first location of this store as being on "Levee Street, opposite the Bridge," which is today Weber Avenue between Main and El Dorado Streets. In September, 1853, the store was moved to a one-story wooden building on El Dorado Street. The fire of February 21, 1855, swept out this store, and the rest of the block, but the business was re-established in the same location.

The business district of Stockton began to shift from El Dorado Street, and in November, 1875, Charles Haas established a second store on Main Street, with his son, Charles J., in charge, under the firm name of Charles Haas & Son. Three years later the El Dorado Street business was given up and the two stores combined at 204 Main Street, one door west of their present location. This firm name held for twenty-five years, or until the business was incorporated in 1902, with Charles Haas and his four sons as partners, and the firm became Charles Haas & Sons, as it is today. On May 3, 1903, a second fire occurred and the entire building was demolished. Though suffering a considerable loss, the firm saved the contents of the vaults, among them the many watches left for repair. Since 1850 over 100,000 chronometers had passed through the repair department and a systematic record had been kept of them.

Charles Haas was active in the management of the business until his demise, being widely recognized as an expert in his field, a genuine artist as well as an able business man. In 1868, while on a trip to the East, he selected the town clock which was formerly on the old courthouse and is now on the Eureka Engine House. This clock was paid for by popular subscription and the original list of subscribers, now in possession of Robert M. Haas, is an interesting one, and may be considered as the "Blue Book" of its day.

Throughout the long period of his residence in Stockton Mr. Haas never failed to take an active and helpful part in the work of public progress. He was one of the founders and charter members of the Stockton Savings and Loan Society, and served continuously as a director of that institution until his death. In 1872 he was chosen City Treasurer of Stockton, in which capacity he served one term. He was a charter member of the Turnverein Societies in both Poughkeepsie and San Francisco, and was one of the founders of the local society. In 1876 he was instrumental in the building of the society hall, and as one of the oldest members of this society it was his custom to lead the celebration on each New Year's Eve. For more than half a century, with but one exception, he brought in the punch bowl at the stroke of twelve.

On June 20, 1854, Mr. Haas was married in San Francisco to Miss Elizabeth Kuhn, a native of Germany. They became the parents of three sons, Charles J., Herman O., and Robert M. Charles J. Haas was married in Stockton in 1875 to Miss Hattie M. Baldwin, of that city. Herman O. Haas is a resident of San Francisco. Robert M. Haas was married in 1887 to Miss Mary Fann, a native of Missouri, and they have a son, R. Raymond Haas, who is now treasurer of Charles Haas & Sons. Robert M. Haas is now president and manager of the firm of Charles Haas & Sons. In 1874 he became his father's business associate, and he has since been actively identified with the establishment and its various enterprises.

In 1866 Charles Haas suffered the loss of his wife, who died in Stockton on May 30, of that year. On June 15, 1869, he was again married, in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to Miss Charlotte Merk, a native of that state. One son was born to them, Edward F. Haas, a civil engineer, residing in San Francisco; he was married in Stockton, on October 18, 1906, to Miss Mabel Thompson, of that city, and they have two children—Edward Thompson and Alice Charlotte.

In every relation of life Charles Haas was true to high and honorable principles. His integrity in business affairs, his loyalty in matters of citizenship, his fidelity to the ties of friendship, and his devotion to home and family, were characteristics which won for him the high and enduring regard of all with whom he was associated.

JOSEPH HARTMAN.—Prominent among the most enterprising, experienced, progressive and successful vineyardists of San Joaquin County may well be numbered Joseph Hartman, whose fine "show place" is situated one and one-half miles west of Acampo. He was born in Württemberg, Germany, on November 25, 1864, the son of William Hartman, a stonemason by trade, who had married Miss Caroline Haug. They were intelligent, progressive folks, who encouraged the lad to study and permitted him to go to school until he was seventeen years old. The oldest of a family of six children, he was the first to take up a trade; and he learned the art of the old-time blacksmith. His father lost his life when he was forty years of age, while his mother has lived to be eighty-two.

At the end of his three years of thorough apprenticeship, Joseph Hartman came out to America, with his mother and his brothers and sisters, and settled in Nemaha County, Kans.; and there he bought eighty acres of land, which he farmed for three years. His mother and the rest of the family remained there for another three years, and Joseph went on to North Dakota, whither he was later followed by the other members of the family, four of whom took up grain land homesteads in Dickey County, N. D. The nearest town was a distance of five miles. They pluckily persevered and improved these ranches, and, having sold out in the fall of 1905, they came out to California and settled near Acampo, and there his mother is living with him today, hale and hearty.

Mr. Hartman purchased forty acres of young vineyard and planted the same to Mission, Tokay and Zinfandel grapes; and since the ranch already had a good dwelling-house upon it, he was able the easier to make a good start. He has developed water from a ten-inch well, has a good pump, driven by an electric motor, and gets an abundant stream for irrigation. Mr. Hartman has made his vineyard one of the most desirable hereabouts; and while attending to business, he has also taken a live and patriotic interest in the political issues of the day.

In Nemaha County, Kans., on April 3, 1888, Mr. Hartman was married to Miss Caroline Relinger, a native of that county, and the daughter of Martin Relinger. Mrs. Hartman is a gifted woman, and an ideal mother to her six children. The oldest child, John, died at the age of eighteen; Gertrude has become Mrs. Strother, of Acampo; William is with his father; Pauline is now Mrs. Ed. McComb, of Lodi, and Theodore and August still reside at home.

EDWARD L. GNEKOW.—A naturally capable plumber whose years of practical, invaluable experience now placed at the service of all of his patrons, have given him a leading position in Stockton among the best craftsmen in his line anywhere in California, is Edward L. Gnekow, whose fine plumbing and electrical outfitting establishment at 647 East Main Street, is widely and well known to the citizens of San Joaquin County. He was born at Stockton, on September 15, 1862, the son of Rudolph and Christiana (Bollinger) Gnekow.

He attended the local schools, after which he was apprenticed to learn the baker's trade. He did not like his first choice, so he took up the plumbing trade instead. He entered the service of Robert Rowe in 1880, remaining until 1883; and then for the next two years he was with Fred Ruhl, and after that, for a couple of years, with the Stockton City Laundry. On September 1, 1886, he formed a partnership in plumbing with George F. Schuler, the firm becoming known as Gnekow & Schuler; and this partnership was continued during three years until May, 1889.

From that date, Mr. Gnekow has continued business for himself; and he not only is the oldest living master plumbing contractor in the four lines of plumbing, sheet metal work, heating and electrical contracting in Stockton, but he is favored with the largest trade in those lines, given to anyone in the city. He has done plumbing, electrical and contract work in nearly all of the school buildings erected in Stockton during the past ten years; among these are the fine Lincoln, Jackson, Washington, North Fair Oaks and New High schools; and he has also for years done much of the same kind of work in many of the best residences in Stockton, and in such notable structures as the Home Apartments, the Taft Hotel, the Bronx Hotel, the Hotel Sutter, the Sanguinetti Block, the Cassinelli three-story block, at Lafayette and El Dorado streets, the new buildings at the San Joaquin Agricultural Park, the Japanese Hotel, on South El Dorado Street, and the Y. M. C. A. Building and the New York Hotel. In addition, he was called upon to do much of the expert work for the heating plant of the Pittsburg School, and also the Manteca and the Angels Camp Schools, the new theater in Pittsburg, and the electrical work for the Merced Theater. In 1893 he did the plumbing and sheet-metal work on the Masonic Temple at Redding, in Shasta County, the heating, plumbing and sheet-metal work in the Bank of Lodi, the Catholic Church at Lodi, and three business blocks for J. Schmidt at Tracy.

In 1893, when natural gas was struck in Stockton, and the Citizens Gas Company was formed, Mr. Gnekow sold the first cast-iron gas-range to consumers offered by anyone in Stockton—the "Success and Perfect Range," of which his sales were large.

At Stockton, on March 13, 1888, Mr. Gnekow was married to Miss Marion Tinkham, a native of Stockton; and their union was blessed with the birth of one son, Lester E., who is a partner with his father and looks after the electrical department of the ever-expanding establishment. In September of 1883 Mr. Gnekow joined Stockton Lodge, No. 11, I. O. O. F., and Parker Encampment, No. 3, in which he progressed through all the chairs. He was the youngest noble grand in the lodge to hold that office, and the youngest chief patriarch of the Encampment. He was also the youngest district deputy of this district, which includes Stockton, Linden, Farmington and Tracy; and he was the last and youngest male district deputy to install the Rebekah Lodge. His work there was considered about as perfect as mortals may make it, and he took great pride in his fraternal associations and duties. He had passed through all the chairs, becoming district deputy at the age of twenty-six years.

HULL J. CLANCY.—Among the younger generation of successful orchardists in the Christian Colony district is Hull J. Clancy, who has won for himself a prominent place in the affairs of his locality. He was born in Acampo, Cal., on July 2, 1898, a son of John H. and Fanny (Towne) Clancy, the former a native of New York State and the latter of California. John H. Clancy became a representative farmer of the San Joaquin Valley, and as foreman of the great Langford ranch aided materially in the development and advancement of the county in general. Six sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. John H. Clancy, as follows: Roy, a resident of Stockton; Cecil and Ellmore, whose sketch appears also in this work; Maurice; Dewey; and Hull, of this sketch.

As a boy, Hull J. Clancy attended the Houston grammar school and later the Lodi high school; and upon leaving high school he assisted his father in farming until the time of his marriage, after which he engaged in farming on his own account. Mr. Clancy's marriage occurred in Oakland, Cal., on July 27, 1919, and united him with Miss Blossom Killgore, a native of Fresno County, and a daughter of J. N. and Anna M. Killgore. Her father, J. N. Killgore, came to California many years ago and became agent for the great Chow-Chilla Development Company of Merced County. Mrs. Clancy was educated in the Lodi grammar and high schools and the University of California. They are the parents of one son, John H. Mr. Clancy operates an eighty-acre orchard, thirty acres in peaches and fifty acres in prunes, located at the first cross-road north of the Mokelumne bridge on the Victor-Christian Colony road. This orchard is highly improved, being irrigated by a six-inch pump driven by a twenty-five horse-power direct-drive Sterling motor. Politically, Mr. Clancy is a Republican. Mr. Clancy has always been a very hard worker and has applied himself very closely to the task of improving the land on which he is located; and he is now enjoying the reward of his years of labor in the fortunate leasehold of one of the finest properties in the county.

RAYMOND L. GERARD.—A representative California rancher and a native son of the state, Raymond L. Gerard resides on his fine farming estate two miles west of Lodi, San Joaquin County. He is a progressive, enterprising and thoroughly up-to-date man of affairs, especially in his chosen line of accomplishment, and for the success he has won through his own hard labor and conscientious industry he quite deserves the respect and esteem which his fellow-citizens accord him. He was born in Stockton on January 26, 1892, a son of James Stevens and Annie C. (Penny) Gerard, natives of California and Massachusetts, respectively. The Gerards are of English descent. Grandfather John H. Gerard located on what is known as the Gerard acres in 1856, and became an extensive landowner in the Woodbridge section of San Joaquin County. His only son, the father of our subject, removed to San Francisco when Raymond L. was a small child, and most of his active life was spent in the employ of transportation companies around the Bay. Raymond L. is next to the youngest of a family of six children. The mother passed away many years ago, and the father now makes his home with his sons and daughter, who reside on portions of the old homestead.

Raymond L. Gerard began his education in the Mission school in San Francisco. When thirteen years of age he began work in the San Francisco Exchange, at the same time continuing his studies at night school; thus he finished the grammar grades. After this he attended the Humboldt evening high school held at Mission High. After three years in the Stock Exchange, he quit to enter the San Francisco Business College, where he was duly graduated. He then entered the Van der Naillen School of Civil Engineering in Oakland, and still later attended the Polytechnic College of Engineering at Oakland, and on finishing his course in civil engineering he engaged in general surveying throughout northern California for the following three years.

The marriage of Mr. Gerard occurred at Oakland on April 7, 1914, and united him with Miss Edna L. Bassett, a native of Oakland, Cal., the daughter of William H. and Nellie Nevada (Midgley) Bassett, the former a native of California and the latter of Nevada. Her father was a lumberman in the vicinity of Oakland and San Francisco, but is now engaged in farming near Raymond, Cal. Mrs. Gerard is one of three children: Eleanor; Edna L., Mrs. Gerard; and Wallace. Mrs. Gerard received her education in the Oakland grammar and high schools. After his marriage, Mr. Gerard worked as bookkeeper and salesman for the A. P. Parker Company, manufacturing agents of San Francisco, for three years; then, in the winter of 1917, he removed to Lodi, where his portion of his Grandmother Gerard's estate was located, being eighty acres of the old Gerard homestead. There is an orchard of twenty acres in young cherry trees, and the balance of sixty acres is in vineyard. The ranch is irrigated with a five-inch pump driven by a fifteen-horsepower motor, and Mr. Gerard does his cultivating with a Fordson and a small Holt tractor. Mr. and Mrs. Gerard have had two children: a babe that passed away in infancy, and Phyllis Eleanor, also deceased. In politics both Mr. Gerard and his wife are Republicans, and both are students of Christian Science. Fraternally, Mr. Gerard was made a Mason in Woodbridge No. 131, F. & A. M., in which he has served as junior deacon. He is also a member of Stockton Chapter No.

Raymond L. Gerard

28, R. A. M.; Stockton Council, R. & S. M.; and Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; and with his wife is a member of O. E. S. No. 118, Woodbridge. He is also a member of the California Almond Growers Association.

EDWIN DARWIN BAINBRIDGE.—Almost a half century has passed since Edwin Darwin Bainbridge became a resident of California, his arrival in the state dating from December 12, 1874. He was born in Grant County, Wis., February 24, 1859, a son of James A. and Mary Ellen (Herold) Bainbridge, natives of Kentucky and Missouri, respectively. The father, Dr. James A. Bainbridge, was born in Kentucky, December 22, 1832, and at the age of twenty-five years, in 1857, was married to Miss Mary Ellen Herold, born in Missouri in 1838. In 1860 the family removed to Missouri, where Dr. Bainbridge followed his profession at Paulingsville. This worthy couple were the parents of ten children, seven of whom are now living. One of the sons, Dr. C. E. Bainbridge, a prominent physician and surgeon in Sacramento, died in 1910. The Bainbridges lived on a farm in Randolph County, Mo., until 1874, when they removed to California and settled near Stockton at what is now Manteca. The mother passed away at the family home near Ripon in 1885 at the age of forty-seven years. Dr. Bainbridge in 1875 acquired large land holdings near Ripon, owning 1,280 acres of rich grain land; and he practiced his profession and farmed until his death in April, 1914. He was a Democrat and fraternally was a Master Mason.

Edwin Darwin Bainbridge is the eldest of the large family and received his education in the public schools of Missouri and after coming to California was associated with his father in ranching. In 1882 he began to farm independently and rented the William Campbell ranch near Ripon for two years, then in 1884 purchased 618 acres, known as the Putt Visser ranch, paying $50 per acre and leased the adjoining 938 acres, which he farmed to grain. His agricultural activities were not without losses and discouragements. In 1890 Mr. Bainbridge went to Madera County, where he farmed four sections of land to grain for the next three years and at the same time farmed 2000 acres near Ripon and met with good success. Giving up his lease in Madera County, in 1893, he continued on the Visser ranch, then rented the Gardenheier ranch of 1100 acres, near Valley Home, from the pioneer D. A. Guernsey, and farmed there for thirteen years. In 1899 he gave up his holdings near Ripon, but in October, 1912, Mr. Bainbridge returned to the Ripon district, where he owned 120 acres, which he had purchased in 1904 for $25 per acre. He now resides there. By 1908 Mr. Bainbridge had twelve acres under irrigation which was seeded to alfalfa; later he sold off two forty-acre ranches and retains forty acres of the original home place, which he is planting to orchard and vineyard.

The marriage of Mr. Bainbridge united him with Miss Addie A. Aldrich, a native daughter of Massachusetts, a daughter of A. D. Aldrich, now deceased. The Aldrich family came to California in 1877 and settled near Farmington. Mr. and Mrs. Bainbridge are the parents of four children; James A., is married and has one son and resides in Stockton; Edith Doris, Mrs. Warren Hagman, resides in Ripon, the mother of a son; Helen E., deceased; and Allyn D., is a rancher at home. Mr. Bainbridge was a director in the South San Joaquin irrigation district for two years; for three years served as a trustee of the Ripon school; was a director in the California Alfalfa Growers, Inc., which office he resigned in 1921; is a charter member of the California Milk Producers Association of Central California and also of the Almond Growers Association. He is a Democrat in politics and fraternally is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Ripon. As a public-spirited citizen, a friend of education and promoter of general progress he has long enjoyed the thorough confidence of his fellow citizens.

ELLMORE S. CLANCY.—The horticultural interests of San Joaquin County are indebted to Ellmore S. Clancy for his active co-operation and progressive spirit in irrigation development and general advancement of the locality where he resides. He was born at Acampo, Cal., on December 31, 1891, and is one of the three Clancy brothers who have demonstrated what intelligence and hard work will accomplish along horticultural lines. He is a son of John H. and Fanny (Towne) Clancy. The father was a representative and active farmer for many years in San Joaquin County; and later he conducted a merchandise business in Acampo. Ellmore worked as a clerk for nine years in stores at Acampo and in its environs. His education was received in the grammar and high schools of Lodi, and his knowledge of horticulture began on his father's farm.

The marriage of Mr. Clancy occurred on February 3, 1914, in Lodi, Cal., and united him with Miss Elvena Sanguinetti, a daughter of Stefano and Mary Sanguinetti, both living on a ranch one mile north-east of Acampo. Mrs. Clancy attended the Elliott grammar school and is one of a family of seven children. The sketch of her brother James Sanguinetti appears in this work. Mr. Clancy owns a thirty-acre ranch, which is planted to almonds, and which he has brought to a high state of cultivation and productiveness. His equipment for irrigating this tract of land consists of a four-inch pump operated by a motor. Diligence and determination have characterized Mr. Clancy's operations, and have enabled him to advance steadily toward the goal of prosperity.

EUGENE S. McCOMB.—The son of one of San Joaquin County's pioneer settlers, Eugene S. McComb was born near Woodbridge, September 15, 1865. His parents were John and Elizabeth (Lane) McComb, the former of Scotch descent, while the mother was a native of Tennessee; both are now deceased. John McComb crossed the plains in 1861, arriving in San Joaquin with a steer and a cow yoked together, drawing his prairie schooner. He settled near New Hope and followed farming, being foreman of the DeVrier ranch for many years. Later he engaged in lumbering in the redwoods in Humboldt County, and there he passed away about twenty years ago. These worthy pioneer parents had five children: Eugene S., of this sketch; Jerome B.; William; Mrs. Mattie George; and Alden McComb, deceased, who was formerly chief of police at San Mateo.

Eugene S. McComb attended school at Arcata, Humboldt County, and as early as nine years of age began to work in a sawmill there. At the age of sixteen he returned to San Joaquin County and worked as a rancher for a time, and then went to San Francisco and learned his trade of bricklayer, which he has followed ever since in various places in central California. In 1906 he came to Stockton and worked for the pioneer brick contractors, Eli Confer, Ed Hanke, and George Summerville. He was foreman on the following buildings in Stockton: Flint & Bigelow Block, Knutzen Block, T & D Theater, Congregational Church, McCoy Block, and the addition to the California-Moline Plow Works. In Lodi he worked on many of the buildings erected in the early days, and in later years on the Corey Block and the Post Office Building. He worked on the Hotel Modesto, in Modesto, and on many buildings in San Francisco before the fire. For four years during the war he was in the employ of the Stockton Fire & Enamel Brick Company, and with the Hoffman Brick Company:

Mr. McComb's marriage united him with Miss Mary E. Troy, a native of Ireland, and they are the parents of five children: Frances P., Mrs. Marie Dundero, Mrs. Elizabeth Ivy, Raymond, (deceased), and Delmar.

THOMAS F. GLEASON.—In the death, on March 14, 1922, of Thomas F. Gleason, Stockton lost one of its prominent business men and highly respected citizens. His career was a busy and useful one, and while promoting the material welfare of the community he also gave active and liberal support to those measures which tended to advance its intellectual and moral status. He was familiarly known as Tom Gleason by his friends. His life was filled with good deeds and kindly thoughts, and all who knew him entertained for him the highest regard, by reason of his upright, honorable career. A native son of the Golden West, he was born in San Francisco in 1876, a son of Michael Gleason, a prominent business man and banker of the bay city. He was the brother of Mrs. John Geary, and Mrs. Cecil Doty, of Los Angeles; Miss Mary Gleason, James V. Gleason, and William H. Gleason, of San Francisco; M. James Gleason, of Palo Alto; and Robert Gleason, of San Jose. His preliminary education began in the public schools of San Francisco, from which he entered the California College of Pharmacy, being duly graduated from this institution. In 1902 he located in Stockton, where he took charge of the Central Drug Store for three years, and then worked for the Eagle Drug Company for eleven years. In 1909, Mr. Gleason made an extended tour of the Orient. In 1916 he became the proprietor of the Patterson Pharmacy, located at 441 East Main Street, where he was successfully carrying on business at the time of his demise.

Mr. Gleason's marriage occurred on March 27, 1910, uniting him with Miss Edna Capurro, a native of Stockton and a descendant of a pioneer family. Mrs. Gleason has been associated with her husband for many years in his drug business, and in the spring of the year 1922 took the examination and passed as a registered pharmacist. She is ably fitted to carry on the business left by her husband. Mr. Gleason was prominent fraternally, being an active member of No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and No. 7, N. S. G. W., and of the Foresters of America, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Yosemite Club, all of Stockton. He was a man of fine characteristics, generous and enterprising, and skilled in his profession; and his true worth and kindly life endeared him to all.

LEWIS VILLIBORGH.—A naturally gifted Italian dairy-raucher who has made a success of his enterprises in California and is now one of San Joaquin County's most progressive citizens, is Lewis Villiborghi, who was born in Novara, Piedmont, Italy, on July 10, 1872, the son of Sylvester and Mary (Parcialia) Villiborghi. His father was a stone-mason and farmer, and also worked in log camps in Piedmont; and as the veteran of two wars—in 1848 and in 1858—he was among the most interesting characters in the community where he lived. Mr. and Mrs. Villiborghi had thirteen children, and Lewis was the fifth born in the family.

Lewis Villiborghi attended school long enough to learn to read, write and calculate; although, as early as his seventh year, he made his own way in the world, working for some years for wages in the Alps in the summer, and attending school in the winter. His father died in Italy at the age of sixty-nine; and his mother, who was well thought of by all who knew her, passed away at the age of forty years.

In 1894 our subject came to San Francisco and from there inland to Sonoma, where he stayed for four years, chopping wood and doing general farm work there and at Forestville and Greenville. Then he came to Stockton and took a job with a threshing crew in the summer-time and the following winter worked on the river-boat plying between Stockton and San Francisco. He then went to Jackson, Amador County, and leased a ranch of 100 acres between Jackson and Ione, devoting twenty acres to a vegetable garden which he cultivated and operated for two and one-half years. He next went to Alpine County and worked for a season, helping to construct the Alpine Dam; and on his return to San Francisco he worked for two years as a cook in a restaurant.

He was married in the Bay City, on July 3, 1904, to Miss Rosa Steiner, a native of Canton Schwyz, Switzerland, and the daughter of John and Anna Maria (Steiner) Steiner. The former, a farmer, died when she was five years old, and her mother passed away the year before. This worthy couple had fifteen children, and could not afford higher educational advantages for them than those of the grammar school. When Miss Steiner was twenty-four years old, she came to the United States, and at Lancaster, Pa., worked as a nurse for nine months. This added to her experience and enabled her to come to San Francisco, where she rendered excellent service in the hospital until she was married.

After their marriage Mr. Villiborghi went to Ione, Cal., and worked for wages as a farm hand for one and one-half years; and he then bought a ten-acre ranch in Jackson Valley, where he raised vegetables and also had a dairy. He sold out, and then rented a ranch on shares, and there for about five and one-half years conducted a good-sized dairy. He then moved, with his stock, some sixty-three head, to Galt, and operated the Harvey ranch for two years. Coming next to his present location, he took 240 acres of the McCaulay ranch, about five miles to the northwest of Woodbridge, where he has from twenty-five to thirty cows milking all the time. On this ranch are twenty-five acres of alfalfa, and forty acres of grapes—one-half Tokay and one-half Zinfandel; while the balance of the ranch is devoted to pasture.

Mr. and Mrs. Villiborghi have a family of four attractive children: Rosa attending Galt Union high school, class of 1923, and Marie, Virginia and Sylvester; and they take great delight in the pleasures of their domestic circle. Mr. Villiborghy is a Republican.

JOHN WILLIAM MARTIN LUND.—A very progressive and successful rancher, whose life-story is always interesting, is John William Martin Lund, who lives in the lower division of Union Island, about twenty-five miles to the southwest of Stockton. He is the only son of Martin J. and Mary (Moran) Lund, of Delta fame, Martin J. Lund being widely known as the "Father of Delta."

Mr. Lund was born at Tracy on January 9, 1892, and as a lad went to the local schools, where he acquired the nickname of "Billy" Lund, which still clings to him today. As soon as he was old enough to do work, Billy helped his father, the association between the father and son increasing in pleasant intimacy each year; and together they have carried on an extensive delta farm business, paving the way for his own more recent successes on the Lund Rancho in the Lower Reclamation of Union Island. His practical and thorough knowledge of Delta farming has thus been gained by hard work; nor does he begrudge the effort and sacrifice made. All that he has accomplished seems natural enough, when one reflects upon the career of his parents, whose life-story is given elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Lund was married in San Francisco, October 23, 1916, to Miss Anna Charlotte Van Horn, a native of New Orleans, who came with her parents to San Jose and was educated in the San Jose public schools and the San Jose state normal. Their union has been blessed with the birth of two children, Martin Stanley and John William, both born at San Francisco. Mr. Lund is a member of Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E.

CECIL B. CLANCY.—San Joaquin County may well be proud of the invaluable contribution made to its permanent growth and real progress by such a citizen as Cecil B. Clancy, among the most prominent and successful orchardists of the San Joaquin Valley. He is a native son of California, born at Acampo on December 6, 1889, a son of John H. and Fanny (Towne) Clancy. Grandfather Daniel Clancy came to California in an early day and settled in Contra Costa County, when John H. was a lad of twelve years; and some thirty-four years ago the father settled in Acampo, being engaged as foreman of the Langford ranch, and was instrumental in the development of this great property.

Cecil B. Clancy received his education in the Houston school, and at the age of sixteen began farming on his own account, having received valuable training in farming from his father. Today Mr. Clancy owns 120 acres on the corner of the Victor road and the Lockeford-Acampo road in the heart of the Christian Colony, about 105 acres being planted to peaches and fifteen acres to prunes. He has installed two pumping plants with six-inch pumps and twenty-horsepower electric motor, which enable him to care for his orchard in the most up-to-date manner. During the fall of 1921, Mr. Clancy remodeled his ranch house, and it is now one of the finest in the locality.

At Lodi, Cal., on November 18, 1915, Mr. Clancy was united in marriage with Miss Marion Ryan, a native of California, born in San Diego, a daughter of Richard E. and Hattie (Morse) Ryan. When she was only one year old, Mrs. Clancy removed with her parents to northern California, where her father engaged in farming pursuits. Mrs. Clancy began her education in the Live Oak district school; later entered the Stockton high school; and after her graduation, entered the University of California, from which she graduated, majoring in history.

Mr. Clancy uses the most improved methods in the care of his orchard, all of his cultivating, plowing, and harrowing being done with a tractor; and his property is an example of what can be accomplished by the most up-to-date methods of irrigation and cultivation. He is very prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons, No. 256 of Lodi, Royal Arch Masons and Commandery of Stockton, and a Shriner, a member of Ben Ali Temple of Sacramento; he is also a prominent Native Son, of the Lodi Parlor, and a member of the Stockton Elks. Politically, he is a Republican.

MILO MILETUS CHURCH.—A well and favorably known resident of the San Joaquin Valley since March 18, 1860, Milo Miletus Church was born in the town of Jerico, Chittenden County, Vt., on September 30, 1838. He was a son of Ezra Church, a wheelwright and farmer in Jerico, who married Azeneth Chopin, a native of Vermont, who came of an old New England family. Grandfather Church was a native of England who came to this country and settled in Jerico, Vt., where he raised his family.

Milo Miletus Church was the next to the youngest of eight children born to his parents and spent his boyhood on the Vermont farm, receiving a good education in the public school. In February, 1860, he started for California, sailing from New York City on the "North Star" to Aspinwall and crossing the Isthmus on one of the early trains to Panama City, whence he took the steamer "Orizoba" to San Francisco, where he arrived on March 18, 1860. He made his way to Stockton, and after working on a ranch for a time he began teaming to the mines. He purchased more stock, so that he had one eight-horse team and two freight wagons hauling between Stockton and Sonora and Columbia. He continued teaming for a time and then engaged in the butcher business at Farmington, San Joaquin County. Afterwards he followed farming and stockraising for five years, and then purchased a ranch of 160 acres and leased 640 more, and began raising wheat and barley. In September, 1899, he sold the ranch and located in Stockton, purchasing the residence at 1325 South San Joaquin Street, where he now lives retired. Mr. Church served as road overseer at Farmington for several years.

In 1875, at Stockton, Mr. Church was married to Mrs. Sivilla (Funk) Campbell, born near Des Moines, Iowa, who in 1850, when a small girl, came with her parents across the plains to California. She was a daughter of Peter Funk, a pioneer farmer of Farmington. She passed away in Stockton, March 20, 1920, aged seventy-nine years. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Church was blessed with four children: Ida L., Mrs. Hewitt, of Farmington; Ezra; Eva, Mrs. McCown; and Esther, Mrs. Dickey, all three of Stockton. By her marriage to John A. Campbell of Ohio, who died in Farmington, Mrs. Church had seven children: John F., ex-county assessor of Stanislaus County, now a realtor of Modesto; Thomas Eugene, living in Stockton; Albert G., of Farmington; William L., in Stockton; Nellie, who died in Farmington; Birdina, Mrs. Workings, who died in Stockton; and Charles H., principal of schools at Lompoc.

Mr. Church remembers many incidents of the early days when he followed teaming to the mines and when there was plenty of hard work and money was also plentiful. He has been a member of the Knights of Pythias. In politics, he is a Republican.

EDWARD FRANCIS CALLAGHAN.—A native son, and the son of a prominent old-time Stocktonian, is Edward Francis Callaghan, who is maintaining the family traditions as head of the San Joaquin Live Stock Company.

He was born June 4, 1886, at Livermore, Alameda County, a son of John Callaghan, a native of Ireland, who as a young man made his way to Australia, where he was engaged as a sub-contractor on railroad construction, and who afterwards came to San Francisco, in 1862. Soon after his arrival, he located at Carroll Hollow, where he homesteaded land and engaged in sheep-raising, becoming a large landowner and one of the most successful stockmen in his district. John Callaghan was married in San Francisco, in 1877, to Miss Margaret Moy, also a native of Ireland. In 1878 he established a family residence in Livermore, from which place he directed his large farm and stock interests until he passed away. His widow survived him until 1910, leaving five children: John J., an attorney in Livermore; Henry J., a wireless electrician, first class, who has served in the United States Navy for ten years; Margaret, the wife of C. G. Owens, a prominent stockman of Livermore; Edward F., of whom we write; and Susan, the wife of Emmett Moran, a prominent rancher of Stockton.

Edward F. Callaghan attended the Livermore schools, and as a youth started in with his father, riding the range and gaining a full knowledge of the stock business in all of its aspects. The John Callaghan ranch comprised about 6,000 acres at Carroll Hollow. They also owned 320 acres of grainland and forty acres of vineyard. The main ranch, however, was devoted to raising sheep and cattle, and it was there that Edward Callaghan gained the knowledge of the stock business that has enabled him to win success. His father, who was a director of the Farmers' Union at Livermore, passed away in 1904. After his father's death, Mr. Callaghan, with an older brother, John J. Callaghan, continued the stock business on the old home ranch for several years. During this time Mr. Callaghan purchased a part of the old ranch, and as he prospered added to it by subsequent purchases until he had 3,000 acres devoted to stock-raising. On dissolving partnership with his brother, he became associated with C. G. Owens in raising sheep, a business which they built up with splendid success. In 1917 he sold his interest to Mr. Flynn. Soon after this he accepted a position with the Union Land and Cattle Company as superintendent of the sheep department. The company have large holdings on the Lone grant, comprising 33,000 acres. At the same time Mr. Callaghan was also extensively engaged in sheep-raising on his 3,000-acre ranch at Carroll Hollow, near Tracy. His years of experience in this line of agriculture, coupled with his native ability, have made him one of the best judges of stock in the valley.

After two years with the Union Land and Cattle Company, Mr. Callaghan resigned his position to engage in the livestock commission business, with offices in the Yosemite Building, Stockton. The position of sheep-buyer for the Stockton Live Stock Company was offered him, however, and he closed his commission business and accepted it, continuing with them until the spring of 1922, when he resigned to establish his own business, known as the San Joaquin Live Stock Company, engaged in buying stock. His specialty is the buying and selling of sheep, and at the same time he is also engaged in sheep-raising.

Mr. Callaghan was married in Livermore to Miss Ella Brennan, a native of Nevada, but reared and educated in Stockton and in San Francisco, where she attended the State Normal School. Their union has been blessed with a daughter, Edna Gertrude.

CHARLES G. BIRD.—The president and general manager of the Simpson-Gray Lumber Company, and general manager of the Stockton Lumber Company, Charles G. Bird is one of those energetic business men who have in a few years brought Stockton to the front rank in the world of commerce. Although Mr. Bird is a man of more than the ordinary social inclination, he is so persistently busy with his affairs that it would seem that a capacity for business is his distinguishing characteristic. By hard work and good judgment he has forced himself in a few years from the bottom of the ladder to one of its highest rounds. He is preeminently a lumber man. As early as 1894 he commenced work with the Zenith Mill and Lumber Company of East Oakland, starting as a "planer man" and rounding out four years of work as an outside man for the company. In 1898 he became bookkeeper and cashier. On July 15, 1899, he became connected with the Pacific Coast Lumber & Mill Company of Oakland, which was the largest concern of its kind on San Francisco Bay at that time. He continued with the company for thirteen years as its secretary and treasurer, and still holds that important position. The president and general manager, A. Kendall, is likewise vice-president of the Simpson-Gray Lumber Company of this city.

On October 1, 1912, Mr. Bird came to Stockton and took over the pioneer firm of Simpson and Gray. He has ever since been its highly successful president and general manager. In October, 1922, he took over the management of the Stockton Lumber Company, which next to the Simpson-Gray Lumber Company is probably the oldest retail lumber concern on the Pacific Coast, and in December of 1922 consolidated these two companies, thus giving him control of the two largest retail lumber companies in the county.

Mr. Bird has, despite his private business activities, found time for service in many organizations. During the years of 1914-1916 he was president of the Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers' Association of Stockton. He is a director of the Y. M. C. A., of the Boy Scouts, the Camp Fire Girls, Chamber of Commerce and the M. M. & E. Association. During the year 1919-1920 he was president of the Rotary Club, in the activities of which he has always taken a keen interest. He was vicegerent snark of the Concatinated Order of Hoo-Hoo, a lumberman's fraternal organization, for Sacramento and Sacramento Valley district, during the years 1917-1918. He also holds membership in the various branches of Masonry, including the Shrine. As a member of the Stockton Municipal Camp Committee, he declared that a few years hence Stockton is going to have the finest outdoor camp of any municipality in California.

Since coming to Stockton, Mr. Bird has held up his end in all public activities, and whatever enlists his allegiance secures a worker who knows only success. Although still a young man, his range of business experience and his knowledge of men are extensive; and his advice is often sought in problems of the business community. Only once was Mr. Bird ever induced to dip outside of business, and that was when he served as constable of Oakland Township for one year. He tells of his experiences as an officer with some merriment, being inclined to extract humor from incidents which some might regard in a serious light.

Mr. Bird is a man who stands very firmly by his convictions and who is not disposed to withhold his position on any question of a public nature. His friends value him highly, and as "Charlie" he is the life of many an innocent frolic by the Rotarians. Likewise, he takes a keen interest in moral betterment for the community, his position in the Y. M. C. A. and in other organizations indicating his willingness to bear his share of the work. Above all, Mr. Bird delights in his home life, and his fondness for the sturdy American virtues is very strong. As a young man he succeeded to the conduct of the great business of the Simpson & Gray Lumber Company, the oldest in its line in the state, and his success indicates that with keen business ability may be combined high social and civic qualities, all of which go to round out the really successful man.

GEORGE R. CLEMENTS.—An enterprising, successful merchant who is also a progressive rancher, is George R. Clements, a native of the town of Clements, which bears the family name. He was born on April 28, 1881, the son of Thomas and Jennie (Sprott) Clements, pioneers who are represented on another page in this history.

George Clements attended the Clements grammar school, and later went to Polytechnic Business College at Oakland and San Francisco; while his brother, John H., attended the Stockton high school, and his sister, Miss Margaret, went to the San Jose State Normal. Another sister, Minnie J., is now Mrs. Brown of Clements, attended the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge, and also a girls' seminary at San Francisco. George Clements assisted on the home farm until he and George Chrisman opened up the Clements general merchandise store. This store was established in 1907, under the firm name of Chrisman & Clements. They handle groceries, provisions, hardware, dry goods, notions, feed and grain—probably carrying one of the largest stocks in San Joaquin County, outside of Stockton.

At Clements in May, 1903, Mr. Clements was married to Miss Prudence Whipple, a native of San Francisco, and the daughter of Charles and Esther D. (Marrow) Whipple, the former a native of New York, and the latter of Illinois. They were pioneers of California of 1851 and her father was engaged in the livery business in San Francisco. He died at the age of sixty-seven years. Four daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Clements. Margaret and Esther are attending the Lodi high school; Patricia and Gertrude are at home. Mr. Clements is a member of the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America, at Clements, and of the Native Sons at Lodi. He has been past grand of the Odd Fellows. Mrs. Clements belongs to the Rebekahs, of Clements.

ANDREW J. BONA.—Thirty-one years of the life of Andrew J. Bona have been spent in Stockton, where by close application to business and well-directed energy he has gained success, being now the assistant cashier of the Bank of Italy in Stockton and accounted one of the substantial citizens of this section. He was born at Amador City, Cal., December 29, 1889. His father, a California pioneer, passed away in 1891; and during the same year Andrew J., then two years old, was brought by his mother to Stockton. Here he received his education at St. Mary's College; later, in 1907, graduating from the Western School of Commerce. Following his graduation, he entered the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company as bookkeeper, where he remained for one year. In April, 1910, he entered the San Joaquin Valley Bank as a messenger boy. He became bookkeeper, and then teller; and he is now assistant cashier and has full charge of the foreign-collection department of the Bank of Italy in Stockton. Fraternally, he is a member of the Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.; the Stockton Elks, No. 218; the Knights of Columbus; and the Stockton Italian Club. Mr. Bona is a busy man, but finds time during the vacation period of each year to spend some time in fishing and hunting, which are his favorite sports.

CHARLES H. BUCK.—An exceptionally progressive and successful vineyardist, the owner of the fine ranch a little east of Youngstown on the Acampo-Lockeford road, Charles H. Buck was born at Viroqua, in Vernon County, Wis., on December 4, 1858, the son of Ingalls K. and Sarah E. (Councilman) Buck. His father was born near Seneca Falls, in Cayuga County, N. Y. He went out to Wisconsin in the early frontier days, and there established himself as a hardware merchant and tinsmith. When ten years old, Charles Buck removed with his father to Hardin County, Iowa; and there, under the helpful direction of his father, he learned the tinsmith's trade. He had one brother and one sister: Frank Herbert, residing at Merced; and Lillian B., Mrs. H. A. Fairbanks, of Acampo.

Charles H. Buck attended the common schools of his neighborhood, and he also had academy training in Iowa. He accompanied his father to Vacaville on February 26, 1884, where Mr. Buck acquired twenty acres of land and engaged in fruit culture, growing peaches, apricots, plums and grapes; but in 1889 he sold out and came to San Joaquin County. That same year he purchased eighty acres on the Acampo-Lockeford road, in the Christian Colony. Later he sold this place to his brother-in-law, H. A. Fairbanks, who still resides there. He then purchased a half-interest in the eighty-acre ranch, where Charles H. Buck has lived since 1907. Ingalls Buck died aged eighty-one, while Mrs. Buck attained the age of eighty-two, both passing away at the home of the daughter, Mrs. H. A. Fairbanks. Charles Buck's partner is Joe Friedberger. On their eighty-acre ranch they have seven acres in alfalfa and eleven acres in peaches, while the balance is in vineyard. They have two large pumping plants, with motors of fifteen horsepower. Mr. Buck is a man of business affairs, and has been president of the Acampo Fruit Growers. He served as clerk, for three terms, of the Brunswick district school board.

At Acampo, on September 20, 1891, Mr. Buck was married to Miss Samantha C. Eddlemon, a native of Lodi and the daughter of George W. and Ruth Eddlemon, who had six children: Adolph, Ambus, Daniel, Luvina, now Mrs. J. W. Wakefield, of Acampo, Ruth, and Samantha (Mrs. Buck). Mrs. Buck attended the grammar schools of Lodi. Her father and mother lived to be eighty and seventy-six years old, respectively, passing away within a few days of each other in 1919—on June 2 and June 9. Mr. and Mrs. Buck are the parents of three children: George Ingalls, residing in Lodi; C. Herbert, of Youngstown; and Edith, now Mrs. Frank Miller, also of Youngstown. Mr. Buck is a Mason, a member of Lodge No. 256, at Lodi. In politics he is a Republican.

JOHN N. BALLANTYNE.—A pioneer establishment of San Joaquin County that has made a steady and satisfactory growth during the past thirty-eight years, is the Frank H. Buck Company of Lodi; and the man most responsible for the increased growth of its business during the past three years is John N. Ballantyne, the industrious manager of the San Joaquin County plants. He was born in Brooklyn, Iowa, and when eight years of age was taken by his parents to Des Moines. He was educated in the public schools, and at the Capital City Commercial College of that city, where he was duly graduated in 1902. His first position was with the Remington Typewriter Company, and later he was employed by the Charles Hewett Company, wholesale grocerymen of Des Moines. In 1905 he came to California, whither his father and a brother-in-law had migrated a few months previously, and located at Acampo, on a fruit ranch which his father had purchased. After three years with them, he sold his interest and purchased thirty acres of the Nelson orchard, located near Youngstown, and on this place he makes his home. He has improved the place with all modern equipment, including a pumping plant, fruit sheds, etc. Of the thirty acres, thirteen are in grapes of the Tokay and Zinfandel varieties, and fifteen in orchard. A six-acre apricot orchard produced in 1920 a gross income of $4500. Mr. Ballantyne owns another thirty-acre tract, in the same vicinity, twenty acres in vineyard and ten acres in orchard. The net profit from the 1920 crop on this place more than covered the original cost of the ranch, and the 1921 crop did almost as well. With a partner, P. J. McLaughlin, he owns a twenty-five-acre ranch near Youngstown, twenty acres in vineyard and the balance in orchard.

In his management of the Frank H. Buck Company, Mr. Ballantyne has oversight of the plants at Lodi, Youngstown, and Victor. The company packs and ships peaches, pears, apricots, table and wine grapes, and many varieties of plums, and during the season handles the output of about 1,500 acres. This company was among the first to enter the fruit packing and shipping industry, that has made California famous and has been such an important factor in the development and prosperity of the state.

The marriage of Mr. Ballantyne united him with Miss Anna Larson, a native of Iowa. His energies are expended toward the building up of his business, and at the same time he never loses sight of the development and prosperity of the city and county with which he has become so actively associated.

CHRISTOPHER N. ADAMS.—Prominent among the enterprising, influential and progressive residents of the Elliott district are Christopher N. Adams and his family, extensive ranchers living about two and one-half miles west of Elliott, near which town he was born on July 27, 1876. His father, Henry Adams, came to California in 1869 and settled near Elliott. He was a native of the north of Ireland, having been born at Snow Hill, near Fermanagh, Ulster County; and Mrs. Adams, who was Susy Peck before her marriage, came with her parents at the same time that Judge Terry of Stockton arrived. Her father was from Texas, and she was a native of the Lone Star State. The first year of his residence here, Henry Adams chopped wood for a living, and he then took up sheep-shearing, in which he became an expert. In the spring and fall he would shear sheep, and in the winter he would chop wood, while in the summer-time he worked on the threshing machine. Soon, however, he purchased eighty acres of land near the Elliott schoolhouse; and when he traded that off he received 240 acres on Dry Creek, along the road now known as the Adams Road. He added to his farm until he had acquired 1,080 acres before his death, 440 of which was on Dry Creek, while the balance was plain land.

Christopher Adams attended the Elliott district school, and later went to the Stockton Business College. He was the eldest of a family of eight children, the next younger being Bessie, a most attractive child, who was killed at the age of five through being run over by a wagon. The third-born is William A., who lives at Lodi; then comes Mary Estella, who is Mrs. Hatton Lockeford; and after her Eliza J., who is in Stockton; John H., of Crockett, Cal.; Walter C.; and Robert P., who is with the California State Department of Architecture. Walter and Robert were educated at Ann Arbor, Mich.; and John attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons at San Francisco.

Christopher Adams was reared on the home place and remained with his father until the latter's death in 1909, just prior to which his father deeded him some forty acres of the estate. According to the wish of his father (who died so soon after an operation that he could not make a will), his brother, the uncle of our subject, received eighty acres of the property. Afterwards, Christopher Adams bought out his uncle's interest. He also bought a forty-acre tract from one of his brothers, and bought out, as well, his youngest brother, Robert. The eldest daughter had been left 238 acres, and this he also purchased. At present he owns 240 acres, on which his home is located, and has also acquired some 312 acres of land one and a half miles above Elliott on the Galt-Elliott road. He leases out his Elliott ranch. On his home ranch he is at present running a sanitary dairy and stock-farm. He raises all his young stock, and devotes all of the 240 acres to farming, using the land mostly for pasturing of cattle and the making of hay. His father built the home he now lives in. He had just passed his sixty-third year when he died, having lost his devoted wife when she was thirty-eight years old.

At the home of the bride, two miles south of Bel-lota, Mr. Adams was married on September 15, 1906, to Miss Mary E. Dalton, the daughter of Thomas and Celia (Longhurst) Dalton, a charming and gifted lady who was born in Angle, South Wales, Great Britain. She came to California with her parents when she was ten years old, and they settled at Peters, east of Stockton. She had already attended the grammar schools in South Wales, and when she came to continue her studies at Peters the teacher, Mr. Anderson, complimented her on her proficiency and declared that she was so far ahead of her natural grade that one could see the efficiency and superiority of the Welsh schools. Mrs. Adams has one sister and one brother living in California today: Mrs. Eliza M. Fairbanks, and Thomas G. Dalton, who is in business in Stockton. Her father was a sea captain in the British Navy, and was in the Coast-Guard service. He contracted influenza in Wales and was not expected to live, and on recovering came out to California for his health. Mrs. Adams, the mother of our subject, had a sister living at Peters, and so the family came to California and settled there. Later, Henry Adams settled near Lodi, and Mrs. Christopher Adams' father moved to Lockeford, where he operated a grain farm of 640 acres for four years. The family then moved to a ranch two miles south of Bellota, and it was here that Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Adams were married. Henry Adams also ran a ranch near Elliott for five years. Mrs. Dalton passed away at the age of about seventy-seven years. The father resides at Peters and is seventy-nine years old.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Adams: Celia Estella, and Christopher Norman. In national politics Mr. Adams is a Democrat. He has served for many years on the Telegraph district school board; and he is at present, and has been for the last three years, a member of the Galt union high school board, of which for the past two years he has been chairman. He has been a member of Lockeford Lodge I. O. O. F., since 1902, has passed through the chairs, and has also been a district deputy of the order.

JAMES L. CARROLL.—Four years ago James L. Carroll came to Lodi from Stockton, purchased the veterinary hospital and stable on the corner of Cherokee and Lockeford roads, and constructed stock yards, known as Carroll's Live Stock Yards, where he has developed a live-stock business that covers the central part of California. A native son, he was born in Oakland on August 22, 1883, a son of James Henry and Johanna (Connell) Carroll, natives of New York and County Cork, Ireland, respectively. James Henry Carroll came to California in an early day and successfully engaged in the theatrical and advertising business.

James L. Carroll received his education at the McNally school in Oakland, and at the age of fourteen started to fight his own battles with the work-a-day world. He learned the tent and awning maker's trade under Ames & Harris of San Francisco, and worked for them many years, until he established his own business in Stockton, where he maintained two places of business, one on Main Street and the other on Market Street. He continued in this line of work until 1918, when he sold his business, removed to Lodi, and began dealing in live stock, which is proving a profitable venture. He deals in horses, mules and cattle, which he also ships. He also has a number of work horses and mules which he rents to farmers for the grape industry. The community sales are held at his barns, where stock, implements, etc., are sold at auction. He has the largest barns for livestock in the county.

The marriage of Mr. Carroll occurred in Modesto on December 14, 1920, and united him with Miss Grace Ross, a native of Toledo, Ore., and a daughter of J. H. Ross, who was sheriff of Lincoln County, Ore., for many years. Her father is deceased, but her mother still lives in Oregon. Fraternally, Mr. Carroll is a charter member of Stockton Lodge, L. O. O. M., and is also a life member of the Stockton Aerie, No. 8, Eagles. While in Stockton he was deputy coroner under Frank Warren for one term.

MRS. CLARA A. BARTON.—An admirable example of California womanhood, and a worthy representative of a San Joaquin County pioneer family long influential in the communities in which they lived, is Mrs. Clara A. Barton, who has long been successfully interested in viticulture in San Joaquin County and is now the owner of a fine twenty-acre vineyard two miles southeast of Acampo, devoted to Tokay and Zinfandel grapes. Born in San Joaquin County, not a great distance from her present home, she is a daughter of William D. and Mary A. (Fuqua) Smithson. Her father, William D. Smithson, was born in Kentucky, and later was a pioneer in Illinois. While still a young man, he came to California and spent the first seven years of his residence in the mines of Placerville and Diamond Springs; and in 1860 he settled in San Joaquin County. On February 25, 1862, on the old J. K. Moore place northeast of Acampo, he was married to Miss Mary A. Fuqua, born in Ralls County, Mo. Mr. and Mrs. Smithson were the parents of seven children, as follows: William Alfred, who died in infancy; Nathan Hayden, a rancher near Smithson Station; Clara A., of this sketch; Minnie J., now Mrs. Curtis, of Stockton; Lucy Lee, who passed away in 1895; John Clay, with the Holt Manufacturing Company at Stockton; and Melvin B., on the home place. Mr. Smithson passed away at the age of sixty-six, and the mother died in April, 1920, at the age of seventy-four.

As a girl, Clara A. Smithson attended the Telegraph district school, and made her home with her parents until her marriage to Samuel Barton, in Stockton, on October 27, 1891. Mr. Barton was born in the County of Perth, Ontario, Canada, on September 6, 1860, of Scotch-Irish parents, and received his education in St. Katherine's College in his native country. Previous to his removal to California in 1884, he taught school in Canada. Settling in San Joaquin County, he rented a ranch near Acampo and farmed to gain for a number of years. Later he purchased forty acres on the Cherokee road, two miles southeast of Acampo, and immediately set about to improve it. Twenty acres were set to vineyard and a number of acres were devoted to alfalfa; and a comfortable ranch house and other farm buildings were erected. Mr. Barton passed away on March 3, 1904. They were the parents of two children, of whom one died in infancy. The other, Ila Ruth, was married to David F. Graffigna and had one daughter, Lucile Ruth. Mrs. Graffigna passed away on January 6, 1919, and her daughter, Lucile Ruth, makes her home with her grandmother, Mrs. Barton. Mrs. Barton takes an active interest in all that concerns the welfare of the community. A firm believer in the future greatness of San Joaquin County, she has herself done her full share toward its development. She has lived a useful and self-sacrificing life, and her influence has ever been on the side of good.

W. O. BARNHART.—A practical orchardist and poultryman of San Joaquin County, who has been a resident of California since 1873, is W. O. Barnhart, residing on his five-acre orchard home on Walnut Avenue, three-quarters of a mile west of Lodi. He was born at Williamsport, Pa., July 22, 1860. His parents were George W. and Sabina C. (Orville) Barnhart, farmers in Pennsylvania, who moved to Rochelle, Ill., and there resided until he was eight years old. Then the family removed to Marshalltown, Iowa, and bought a quarter-section of land, which they farmed. W. O. Barnhart is the youngest of a family of four children, the others being Thomas M., who lives at Lodi; Sarah E., Mrs. Keefer, of Lodi; and Lizza Ann, Mrs. Evans, of Oakland. In 1873 the family left their Iowa home for California, and settled in Sacramento County on a grant of land north-east of the capital city; and there the son spent the days of his boyhood and youth and acquired his education in the public schools.

When Mr. Barnhart started to make his own way in the world, he found employment with the Southern Pacific Company at Sacramento, and later with the same company at the Oakland Mole, which engaged his attention for four years. In 1884 he went to Sprecklesville, Maui, Hawaiian Islands, and worked as an engineer in the sugar plantation mills, remaining there for four years. Then he went to Honolulu and became a locomotive engineer on the O. R. & L. Railroad for another four years. From 1893 to 1900 he served in the Honolulu fire department. In 1900 he formed an express company, known as the Peoples Express Company, and became manager of the company; and in 1905 organized the Barnhart Ice Company, and headed this company, the two companies commanding his full attention until 1919, when he returned to California and settled near Lodi.

While residing in Honolulu, Mr. Barnhart was married, on October 29, 1892, to Miss Florence May Giles, a native of Fonthill, Canada, and a daughter of Harold and Elizabeth Giles, who settled in Honolulu when their daughter Florence May was one year old. Her father was a furniture merchant at Wailuku, Maui, and there were five children in the family, as follows: Florence May, Mrs. Barnhart; and Henry E., Mary E., Harold, and Arthur. Both her parents are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Barnhart are the parents of two sons: George H. W., consulting engineer for the American factories in Honolulu; and Orville Arthur, a senior in the Lodi high school. Mr. Barnhart was a charter member of the Aloha Lodge, Knights of Pythias, which he joined in 1888 and in which he holds an honorary degree. He was also an active member of the Honolulu Chamber of Commerce, and the Oahu Country Club, and the "Ad Club" of Honolulu. When the family located in Lodi, Mr. Barnhart purchased a twenty-two acre tract in the Victor section of San Joaquin County, just north of the Mokelumne River bridge, but in a short time traded it for his present five-acre orchard of walnuts, plums, cherries, and peaches, with a cover crop of alfalfa between the trees. Mr. Barnhart is quite extensively engaged as a poultryman, having in the neighborhood of 600 chickens, and is planning to enlarge his plant until he has 2,000. He enjoys the confidence of the business community, and is public-spirited in all matters pertaining to community growth.

SOLOMON WAGNER.—A veteran of the Civil War who appreciates and has a great liking for his adopted state is Solomon Wagner who was born in Grant County, Wisconsin, on August 20, 1838. His father, Jacob Wagner, a native of Germany, came to Virginia where he married Mary Sparks, after which they removed to and became early settlers of Wisconsin, where he became a well-to-do farmer. He was murdered in 1843, when Solomon was five years of age, leaving a widow and eight children. Two years later Mrs. Wagner sold the farm and removed to Hampton, Iowa, where she reared and educated the children to the best of her ability and there she resided until her death.

Solomon, the fifth of the family, worked on farms until sixteen years of age when he proceeded to Prairie du Chien, Wis., and there learned the carriage maker's trade. Later he began rafting on the Wisconsin and Black rivers and down the Mississippi as far as St. Louis. Solomon was a stout and hearty boy and it was natural he was selected to do the snubbing of the rafts which required quickness as well as great strength.

In 1857 he went to southwest Missouri where he was employed in the lead mines. Many opportunities in that new country arose but like hundreds of others could not see them. For example, he could have bought the township of Joplin, Mo., for sixty-five cents an acre. In 1859 he went to Jackson, Ark., where he married Miss Maria Ann Sullivan, a native of that state. When the Civil War broke out they had a child two months old. Solomon was forced to give up his guns and ammunition and had to muster with the natives once a week. One evening he said to his wife he would not continue to muster under a rebel flag. He yoked his two small oxen to a wagon and loaded some supplies and with his wife and baby started at nine o'clock so by morning he was away from that locality, and he drove on north making as good time as possible until he arrived 400 miles north at Springfield, Mo., where he was safe under the Stars and Stripes. He came on to Carthage, Mo., and went to work in a wagon shop until March 23, 1862, he enlisted in Company K, 6th Kansas Cavalry, but later he was a member of Company L. They were on scout duty, chasing bushwhackers in southwest Missouri. He was in the battles of Newtonia, Cold Creek, Prairie Grove and Ft. Smith. He spent several months at Ft. Gibson in charge of a company of Cherokee and Choctaw Indians as acting captain. He returned to his command at Ft. Smith, remaining there until Price's last raid into southwest Missouri. He was honorably discharged at DuVal's Bluff April 17, 1865.

In the fall of 1865 he moved back to Wisconsin where he engaged in farming until the spring of 1868 and then removed to Franklin County, Iowa, where he purchased raw land at $8.00 an acre, which he improved and farmed for four years and then removed to Kansas and homesteaded 160 acres in Republic County and went through the early hardships of that country, being devastated by the grasshoppers and when his crops yielded large returns prices were so low there was no profit. He has hauled wheat forty miles and sold it for forty cents a bushel, corn was ten cents a bushel and they used it for fuel. Selling out he removed to Oronogo, Mo., and there engaged in the livery business and also ran a lumber yard. In 1893 he came to Stockton and engaged in the grocery business in Fair Oaks for sixteen years and also built three different residences. His wife died in 1908 and he sold the store and houses, and retired. They had eight children: Mrs. Mary C. King, deceased; Mrs. Mamie Rankin of Los Angeles; Mrs. Sarah Josephine Geer lives in Missouri; Mrs. Mattie M. Miller of Joplin, Mo.; Nial is in Baxter Springs, Kans.; Bertie died at three and one-half years; Jessie served in the World War, and is now in the bakery business on South Center Street, Stockton; while Ivan is a grocer on East Oak Street.

Mr. Wagner has been a Mason since 1865 and is now a member of Morning Star Lodge, F. & A. M., Stockton, as well as the O. E. S. He is a member of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R., having served as junior vice-commander. He has always been a staunch Republican.

JOHN BECHTHOLD.—An enterprising and successful vineyardist who thoroughly understands what he is about, is John Bechthold, who was born in Russia on October 13, 1871, the son of Henry and Charlotte Bechthold, the former a farmer who came to America when John Bechthold was four years old, and settled near Menno, Hutchinson County, S. D., where he proved up on three quarter sections of government land—preemption, homestead and tree claim. This farm was sixteen miles from Menno, and there the father built a home, and as it was decidedly out on the frontier, his children had small chance for an education, though they received the best possible home training and comforts. Mr. Bechthold was one of twelve children: Henry, George (now deceased), Caroline, Lottie, Elizabeth, John, David (also deceased), Abraham, Mary, Katherine, Louisa and Christian, a half-brother.

Mr. Bechthold stayed with his parents until twenty-one years of age, and then worked out on farms for wages, for a year. On February 7, 1893, near Menno, he was married to Elizabeth Baumbach, who was born near Krom, Russia, in the vicinity of Mr. Bechthold's birthplace. Her parents were George and Charlotte (Delck) Baumbach, and her father was a farmer. She was brought to America when she was one and one-half years old, and grew up in South Dakota, three and one-half miles from the Bechtholds, in Hutchinson Co. Her father also took up a homestead and preemption claim. There were eight children in his family. Conrad and Elizabeth were born in Russia; and Lena, George, Jack, Lydia, Katherine and David were born in the United States.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Bechthold rented a quarter-section and later a half-section of grain land for farming; and they lived and farmed in South Dakota for about twelve years. During this time, Mr. Bechthold also bought eighty acres of land. During the second year of his residence in California, he sold these eighty acres in South Dakota. In 1904, he came to California and settled in San Joaquin County, near the junction of the traction line, one mile east of the junction station; and he bought ten acres of vineyard, where he built a home and lived for thirteen years. In 1917, he sold this and bought eighty acres of open farm land, where he now has a small acreage in alfalfa, and a small dairy. This farm is about five miles north and one mile east of Lodi; and there he has set out some forty-five acres to vineyard, making a specialty of Tokay, Zinfandel and Cornichon grapes. He has already sunk two wells, and will soon sink a third, and he has four inch pumps, with gas power, for irrigation. All the farm buildings, as well as his home, are the result of his own efforts. He has nine living children, all at home: George, Henry, Eli, Bertha, Otto, Esther, Bernice, Alvin and John, Jr.

HARRY T. BAILEY.—Descended, on both his father's and his mother's side, from an honored ancestry prominent in Revolutionary days, and the son of one of Stockton's earliest settlers, Harry T. Bailey was born at Stockton, December 10, 1875. His parents were Andrew J. and Sarah J. (Allen) Bailey, the former a native of Vermont and the latter of Connecticut. Both the Bailey and Allen families were prominent in colonial days, and were well-known for the aid they rendered during the American Revolution, the father being a direct descendant of Joseph Bailey and the mother a descendant of Ethan Allen. Both parents came to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama in 1852, and later were married here. For many years they were residents of Stockton, and there Mrs. Bailey died in 1908. She was prominent in the circles of Daughters of the American Revolution, and through her, as well as through his father, Harry T. Bailey is eligible to membership in the Sons of the Revolution. Coming to Stockton as one of its pioneer settlers, Andrew J. Bailey followed farming on a large scale and also mined in the mother-lode country, passing away in 1909 at the age of ninety-one. This pioneer couple were the parents of four children: Mrs. Lottie M. Walter, of Oakland; Ed. J., of Oakland; Phoebe, deceased at eighteen years of age; and Harry T., of this sketch.

Harry T. Bailey was educated in the schools of Stockton, Los Angeles and Pleasanton, and took a business course in Heald's Business College at San Francisco. At the age of eighteen he started in to earn his own living, and was assistant postmaster at Pleasanton and also employed as a drug clerk there. For two years, in 1896 and 1897, he was bookkeeper for the Abramosky Grocery Company at Jackson, Amador County, and then came back to Pleasanton, where for two more years he did clerical work. From there he went to San Francisco, where he was chief accountant with the Empire Laundry Company, and then with the Metropolitan Laundry Company, for four years. During the reconstruction period of San Francisco, after the disastrous fire, he was with the H. Rosenkranz Hardware Company as a salesman, and later was transportation manager of the Crown Columbia Paper Company of the bay metropolis. In 1909, he was appointed auditor of the Bay Cities Telephone Company of San Francisco, now the Pacific Telegraph & Telephone Company, remaining with them until he received a similar appointment with J. H. Adams of Los Angeles.

Coming to Lodi in 1912, Mr. Bailey engaged in the dairy business and in raising cattle, sheep and hogs on the Henry Beckman ranch. In 1920 he discontinued these lines in order to develop the ranch into vineyard and orchard property, planting 120 acres to Tokay grapes, thirty acres to wine grapes, seven acres to cherries, and ten acres to almonds and plums. He had become associated with the Superior Manufacturing Company in 1919, as its secretary, and this responsible post he resigned on December 9, 1922, in order to give closer attention to his fruit ranch and his other interests, among which is that of special representative of the New York Life Insurance Company; he resigned particularly in order to accept his present important position as field manager for the Woodbridge Fruit Company, under Freeman B. Mills. He is also director in the Beckman, Welch & Thompson Company of Lodi.

Mr. Bailey's marriage, which occurred in 1911 at Lodi, united him with Miss Eva M. Beckman, daughter of the late Henry Beckman, one of San Joaquin County's honored pioneers; and they are the parents of a son, Howard Lewis Bailey. Prominent in government activities during the World War, Mr. Bailey was a member of the Liberty Loan committee for Lodi, which covered eight square miles of territory. He is a member of the Lodi Rotary Club; the Moquelunne Club; Lodi Parlor, N. S. G. W.; the Elks Lodge, No. 218, of Stockton; and Woodbridge Lodge, No. 131, F. & A. M.

JAMES A. ANDERSON.—A brief review of the success of James A. Anderson, one of the early settlers and developers of the San Joaquin Valley, who passed to his reward in December of 1905, is interesting in that it shows what may be accomplished by fair dealing, close application and unremitting industry. He was a native of Missouri, born in Livingston County on January 4, 1849, a son of James and Margaret (Scott) Anderson, farmers of that county, where he remained until 1874, when he removed to California. He located in Sacramento and entered the employ of the Williamson Company, proprietors of the Capital Nursery, and during the nine years that he worked for them, he gained a thorough knowledge of the business. During the year of 1883, he removed to Clements, San Joaquin County, and conducted a nursery business until 1887, when he moved to Lodi. There he leased a portion of the Stoddard place, northeast of Lodi, on the river; here he set out an orchard of peaches, plums, cherries and apricots, and many of these trees are still standing and producing crops each season. His nursery was on a part of the George E. Lawrence ranch adjoining, and a sales yard was maintained in Lodi. Mr. Anderson was a pioneer in the nursery business in San Joaquin County, as well as the first manager of the first packing-house in Lodi. When the Earl Fruit Company opened their packing-house in Lodi, he became their manager; this was in 1898. They occupied a part of the old freight depot as a packing-house. Mr. Anderson's duties were numerous and responsible, for he not only managed the packing-house, but was also outside man, buying fruit, covering the territory on a bicycle. After four years of service with the Earl Fruit Company, he established his own business in Lodi, as an independent packer and shipper, first packing his own fruit, and later packing and shipping for other growers. Twenty years ago the fruit industry was in its infancy and few cars were filled and shipped from Lodi; frequently a half-loaded car was sent on to Sacramento to be filled for shipment east. He erected a packing-house on East Oak Street and represented Sgobel & Day of New York; this plant was destroyed by fire in 1921, and on the same site a modern $20,000 packing plant was erected, constructed of hollow tile and with a cement cellar, one of the most complete packing plants in the valley.

Mr. Anderson's marriage united him with Miss Mary L. Hummer, a native of Illinois; and they are the parents of five children—four daughters: Alta; Hattie S.; Ora B., now Mrs. Charles L. Villinger; and Mary L., the wife of W. A. Spooner; and one son, James G. Since Mr. Anderson's death in December of 1905, the business has been carried on by his daughter, Miss Alta Anderson, and his son, James G. Anderson, and has grown from a small beginning to great proportions.

ELLSWORTH ARCHER.—A well-informed man on the fruit packing and shipping industry of the San Joaquin Valley, Ellsworth Archer is the efficient field superintendent of the Pacific Fruit Exchange at Lodi. Nineteen years of his life were spent on a farm in Antrim County, Mich., where he was born at Eastport on April 14, 1877. He was reared on the Michigan farm and attended the public schools of his native state. Upon leaving home he went to Chicago, where he spent ten years as coachman in many of the millionaire families, and for three years was coachman for C. H. McCormick. In September, 1905, he removed to California and settled in Lodi, purchasing a ranch of forty acres in the Christian Colony district. This tract of land was in old almond trees; he grubbed out twenty acres of them and planted it to peach and young almond trees, now in full bearing and very productive. He spent ten years in the development of his home place, living on it until 1915, when he removed to Lodi. In 1921 he traded his place for a 180-acre ranch located north of Woodbridge, known as the Washington ranch. Ninety acres of this is devoted to growing grapes, and seventy-five acres is in Bartlett pears. The ranch is improved with a fine residence, and good tenant houses and farm buildings.

Mr. Archer has been closely identified with the development and growth of the Christian Colony, having planted and taken full charge of many orchards there; he still has some under his care belonging to non-residents of the state. During the year of 1915 he became associated with the Pacific Fruit Exchange as their field superintendent; and on account of his thorough knowledge, through years of active experience, he is considered an authority on packing and shipping.

The marriage of Mr. Archer at Atwood, Mich., united him with Miss Dora Paukett, a native of Ohio, and they are the parents of four children: Helen, a graduate of Lodi high school, and now Mrs. Earl Botts of Lodi; Eva, in Lodi high school, class of 1924; and Nathan and Norton. Mr. Archer and his family are members of the Christian Church, Lodi, and take an active part in furthering its work and supporting its benevolences. He is an elder and a member of the board of trustees, as well as treasurer of the church. For five years he was superintendent of the Bible class; and he was a member of the Building Committee that has just completed the new $80,000 church, which the congregation enjoy greatly. Mrs. Archer is also active in church work. She is a talented musician, as are all the children; and the family have an orchestra that favor the church with excellent music. Mr. Archer is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. He has never regretted casting his lot in California, particularly in San Joaquin County, which he considers the most favored spot in the whole world.

AARON RUSSELL BECKWITH.—A worthy representative of one of the most interesting of California pioneer families is Aaron Russell Beckwith, a native of Porterville, Tulare County, where he was born on March 26, 1888, the son of C. J. and Lena (Jefford) Beckwith, the former an extensive grain-farmer. When our subject was five years of age, his parents removed to Woodland, Cal., and there engaged in agricultural pursuits. They had nine children, and six are living today. The father came from Ohio in 1862, and the mother's family also hailed from the Buckeye State.

Aaron Beckwith attended the grammar school at Woodland, and when only fourteen years of age entered the service of the Southern Pacific Railroad. He accepted various jobs at first, and then was placed in the maintenance of way department. For nine years he remained with the Southern Pacific, working on the Stockton division, and most of the time having his headquarters at Tracy. On August 23, 1909, he was married at Sacramento to Miss Violet A. Noble, a native of Galt, Cal., the daughter of George W. and Elizabeth Noble, and a member of a family who came to Sacramento County many years ago. Mrs. Noble is still living at Galt. A son, Mrs. Beckwith's brother, made his home at Tracy until 1915, when he moved to the present ranch, known as the Noble Ranch, located on Dry Creek, about four miles from Galt. This ranch consists of 246 acres, and is the property of Mrs. Noble; and here Mr. Beckwith is conducting a dairy. He has twenty acres of alfalfa, and the rest of the land is in pasture.

Mr. and Mrs. Beckwith have one son and one daughter, Chester Russell and Grace Elizabeth. Mr. Beckwith still retains his membership in the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen. When Acampo and its wonderful environment shall have been fully developed, the influence of the life and work of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Russell Beckwith will be felt and always duly recognized. Mr. Beckwith's uncle, Byron, started the irrigation ditch in the Woodbridge district, and also opened the first drug-store at Lodi, which he later sold to Graham. He afterwards moved to Colusa, where he died.

HENRY BECHTHOLD.—A native of the Isle of Krem in the Black Sea, Henry Bechthold has nevertheless been an American, to all intents and purposes, during his life, for he was but sixteen years old when brought by his parents to the United States. He was born on September 5, 1860, a son of Henry and Lottie (Baumbach) Bechthold, also natives of southern Russia, where they were farmers. In 1876, when but sixteen years old, Henry Bechthold made the journey with his parents from Russia to Hutchinson County, S. D., where his father took up a homestead and timber claim. Henry is one of a family of eleven children, namely: Henry, George, Colena, Lottie, Elizabeth, Marian, Katherine, Abraham, John, Deph (deceased), and Louisa. The father died at the age of fifty-six, and the mother at the age of forty.

Henry Bechthold had no educational privileges, but his years of wide experience and observation have served to make him a well-informed man. He remained at home with his parents until his marriage on June 25, 1880, which united him with Miss Wilhelmina Klauss, also a native of southern Russia, a daughter of Lewis and Wilhelmina (Haus) Klauss.

Her father, Lewis Klauss, brought his family to America and homesteaded a tract of land in Hutchinson County, S. D. After their marriage, the young people remained on a farm until 1903, when they sold out and came to California. They settled in Lodi, and Mr. Bechthold purchased fifteen acres just north of Lodi on the Cherokee Lane, the Mokelumne River bounding his land on the south; later he added twenty-six acres, making in all forty-one acres. Two years ago he sold two acres of bottom land; and on the remaining thirty-nine acres he erected a house, where he has since resided with his family. He first planted five acres to vineyard and ten acres to peaches, but later pulled out the peach trees and planted the ten acres also to vineyard; and his fifteen-acre vineyard is now the finest in the Lodi section. His land is irrigated by water pumped directly from the Mokelumne River. Mr. Bechthold has recently built a gasoline and oil service station, costing about $2,000, on one corner of his ranch; and he is engaged in running this business, while his sons lease the home place. Mr. and Mrs. Bechthold are the parents of twelve children: Adolph, Lottie (now Mrs. Fritz, of Fresno), Malvina (Mrs. M. Gatzert, of Lodi), Lida (Mrs. J. D. Christner, of Lodi), Fred, Robert, Christ, Henry Jr., William, Emily, Edwin and Benjamin. The last three still reside at home. Mr. Bechthold is a Republican. He and his family are members of the Baptist Church of Lodi.

GUY ADAMS.—A hard-working rancher, whose intelligent foresight, industry and thrift have been crowned with success, is Guy Adams of Lodi. He was born about six miles from Riverside, Cal., on July 14, 1888, a son of C. F. and Laura (Jones) Adams. C. F. Adams was a blacksmith by trade and dealt in irrigation pumps; he was also an expert well-borer. He left Monroe, Iowa, and came to California about 1885. There are three children in the family: Guy; Ralph, residing at Acampo; and Florence.

Guy Adams obtained his education in the district schools near Riverside and Corona, and after finishing the grammar school attended the Corona high school. At the age of eighteen he started out for himself, going to Seattle, Wash., and while there took a business course. He then found employment with the electric railway of Seattle, which occupied him for one and one-half years. Returning to California and to Acampo in 1912, he spent eighteen months in the fruit sheds, after which he leased and worked a number of ranches in the Acampo district.

Mr. Adams' marriage in Acampo, on July 29, 1914, united him with Miss Elizabeth McKindley, a daughter of Josiah and Emma A. (Mattice) McKindley. Mr. McKindley is an old and honored pioneer, who came to California in 1853 with his parents. When twenty years of age, he hauled provisions and lumber, besides doing a general freighting business from Volcano and other points to the mines in the early days. Later he became an extensive farmer, at times cultivating as many as 4,000 acres at once. In 1901 he purchased 196 acres southeast of Acampo, a grain-farm in a very run-down condition, which he immediately began to improve, building a fine house and barn and setting the land out to vineyard and orchards. From time to time he sold off portions as he developed them, until he reduced it to about 116 acres, the finest portion of the ranch. Of this ranch, forty acres are in peaches, four in apricots, six in cherries, twelve in prunes, and thirty in a vineyard, the remainder being in beautiful grounds or vacant land. The property was sold to a syndicate in 1923, and Mr. McKindley erected a modern home on Cherokee Lane, near the Houston School, in 1922-1923.

In 1915, Guy Adams located on his father-in-law's ranch and managed it until it was sold. In 1919, he purchased eighty acres east of Acampo, and is developing a fine orchard property. Ten acres have been cleared and planted to cherries; the balance is devoted to alfalfa and to the raising of hogs. This ranch is run by Mr. Adams' father and brother. Politically, Mr. Adams supports the candidate best fitted to serve the community, regardless of party affiliations; fraternally, he is a Mason, a member of Woodbridge Lodge, No. 131, and a past master of the order; and a member and Past Grand of the Jefferson Lodge of Odd Fellows, at Woodbridge. He and his wife are members of the Order of the Eastern Star, of which Mrs. Adams is past worthy matron; and she is also identified with the Rebekah Lodge.

JOHN E. GAYOU.—A worthy pioneer citizen of San Joaquin County now living retired in Stockton, where he is recognized as an honored and highly respected upbuilder, is John E. Gayou, who was born on June 19, 1860, in the adobe house at the corner of American and Washington streets which was erected by his father about 1850. He is one of a family of five children born to John and Mary (Euhart) Gayou, both natives of France and both now deceased. John E. and a sister, Mrs. Martin, are the two surviving children of this pioneer couple. John Gayou, the father, came around the Horn to California in 1850 and located in Stockton, where he engaged in driving pack mules, laden with supplies, to the southern mines. Soon after his arrival in Stockton, he purchased from Captain Weber the lot at the corner of American and Washington streets, 100 feet square, where the family home was established and where his son John E. resides.

John E. Gayou obtained his education in the Center, Lafayette, and Jefferson schools, and at the age of fourteen started to work on a threshing machine. He still improved his spare moments in reading and studying, however, so that he is accounted a well-educated man; he speaks French and Spanish fluently. He learned the trade of lather and plasterer, and followed the trade of lather in Stockton, San Francisco, and other parts of the state until 1893, when he was appointed a member of the police force of Stockton. He relates many thrilling experiences he has had during his twenty-eight years of service on the police force.

The marriage of Mr. Gayou united him with Miss Catherine Murphy, a native of Stockton, Cal., and five children were born to them, two of whom are now living: William A. and Emma, the wife of B. F. Spry, born at Oakdale, where his father was an old settler and a farmer. B. F. Spry conducted a grocery store at Pittsburg, Cal., for four years, but is now a resident of Stockton. Mrs. Gayou is now deceased. Mr. Gayou belongs to the Stockton Parlor, No. 7, N. S. G. W. He has erected three houses on the home place bought by his father more than seventy years ago, which he rents to good advantage.

CHARLES R. DUSTIN.—A very successful rancher who follows vineyarding according to the most-approved, scientific and practical methods, is Charles R. Dustin, who was born in Utah on April 12, 1851, while his parents, Fornatus and Rosaline (Call) Dustin, were on their way from Illinois to California. He is the third child and son of a family of eight children. His father, who was a native of the Prairie State, first settled in San Bernardino County, Cal., where he farmed until 1858. On his way to California he saw a place in Utah which he thought would make a great immigrant supply station and in 1858 he went back to the locality and established a station there. The great massacre of 1859, however, turned the tide of immigration to another route, and so the station was not the success he had believed it would be. In 1859, therefore, he abandoned the enterprise, and returned to California. In 1861 he settled in Stockton and engaged in teaming, part of the time to Stockton, and part to Sacramento; and so it happened that our subject went to the schools of both cities. In 1867 Mr. Dustin settled on the place now occupied by Charles R. Dustin, buying from the United States Government a squatter's title to 160 acres; but afterwards he lost his title to the railroad company, they having won in the courts in a claim to the land. He then paid for the land a second time, giving the railroad company $12.50 an acre. After that, he cleared up the land, and hauled wood to the market, and our subject recalls that he has seen as many as 4,000 cords of wood taken from each quarter-section.

Charles Dustin remained on the home ranch as long as his father lived, and then continued there with his mother. The title to the land, however, was not perfected until after his father's death, and then it was put in his mother's name. Afterwards she gave him one-half of the quarter section, or eighty acres, which he now owns. It was a joy to him that his mother lived to be nearly eighty years of age.

In 1880 Mr. Dustin was married on the old home ranch to Miss Eliza Driscoll, who was born in Iowa and was only two years old when she came across the plains with her parents, John and Sarah Ann (Allen) Driscoll. Her father, John Driscoll, was a farmer, and Mrs. Dustin was reared and educated in the vicinity of her father's farm house in San Joaquin County, Cal. The mother died when Mrs. Dustin was sixteen years old. The father continued to live on his 400-acre farm on Cherokee Lane until his death at an age of seventy-one. Her parents had eight children: George, a rancher near Wallace, in Calaveras County; Allen, who died unmarried; El Dorado, born in Eldorado County and residing in Shasta County, single; William, residing in San Francisco, married and the father of eight children; Eliza, wife of the subject of this sketch; Mary, now the wife of M. A. Sparks of Galt, Cal., where he has served as deputy assessor for many years; Rachel T., the widow of S. H. Holman, residing in San Joaquin County, near the Calaveras County line; and John L., a plumber in Stockton. Of Mr. Dustin's brothers and sisters, Andrew and Oscar, elder brothers, are deceased, as is also Nora, a younger sister. Calista, Mrs. Wilkinson, is a widow and lives at Lodi. Fanny, the widow of Dave Thompson, lived in Utah and died on March 13, 1923. May and Arthur, the next in order of birth, and Lilly, the youngest, are also deceased, Arthur having died on April 5, 1923. Thus only two are left living: Calista and our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Dustin have had four children. Ora and Mabel are the two eldest, and the youngest is Rena. Elmer, the third-born, met death by a sad accident four years ago. Mr. Dustin, who is a Republican, served on the school board of the Houston district for one term. He is a member of the Masonic Lodge of Lodi. He has forty acres of vineyard set to Zinfandel and Tokay grapes, and the balance of his fine ranch is devoted to the growing of grain. Such leaders in agricultural industry as the Dustins are the foundation of a commonwealth; and San Joaquin County is well satisfied that Mr. and Mrs. Dustin cast their lot here.

AHREN F. GOETJEN.—A progressive and useful citizen, who well deserves the prominence he has attained, is Ahren F. Goetjen, member of the board of directors of the Banta-Carbona Irrigation District, residing three miles south of Tracy, and now engaged with the Union Oil Company. He was born at San Francisco on September 18, 1871, and when only six years of age lost his father. He received a good common-school education in the Lincoln district school in San Francisco, and in 1882 came to San Joaquin County, and spent about fourteen years in the home of the late John Mohr, of Bethany, working on his ranch.

In 1896 he was married to Miss Elvira Meyer, who had come to Tracy, from San Francisco, in 1894; and their union was blessed with four children. Olga was the eldest; she died nine years old; Adolph H. is now in the Government service in Honolulu; Metta was married in September, 1922, to Samuel Peterman of Banta, who ranches on Mr. Goetjen's farm; Fred, Jr., is the youngest.

Mr. Goetjen farmed for twelve years on the McLaughlin Grant; his house with all contents burned in 1916, on the McLaughlin tract, and he also suffered flood, but he saved enough to buy 160 acres of choice land south of Tracy, known as the C. Brandeman home-place, concluding the purchase in 1916. Having risen from the ordinary ranks of men through his own efforts, Mr. Goetjen has stood for progress and has long been one of the strongest and most active advocates of increased irrigation, and he is now one of the board of directors of the newly-organized Banta-Carbona district. He is a Republican in politics and is serving as a trustee of the Valley School district. He is a charter member of the Native Sons of the Golden West, at Tracy, and as a member of the Knights of Pythias, he is both a past officer and a past district deputy, now serving as trustee.

JULES DONEUX.—A well-known citizen of San Joaquin County may be found in Jules Doneux, who has lived in the county for the past fifteen years. He has been a prosperous business man and agriculturist, and his career is most creditable from every point of view. He was born in Faribault, Minn., June 10, 1882, a son of Pierre and Rosalie (Joachim) Doneux. The father was a general farmer in Minnesota, where he conducted an eighty-acre ranch in the vicinity of Faribault. There were six children in the family: Mary, Rosie, Adele, Josephine, Joseph and Jules. The father passed away in 1921, his wife in 1912.

Jules Doneux received his education in the grammar schools of Faribault and remained in that locality until he had passed his twenty-fourth birthday, when he came to California, coming directly to San Joaquin County. He was one of the founders of the cream of tartar factory at Woodbridge that manufactured cream of tartar from grape tartar, and he later became manager of the plant, where he remained for seven years; this plant put out the greater portion of grape cream of tartar manufactured in the United States. Afterwards he engaged in ranching, becoming the foreman of the 180-acre ranch belonging to Mr. Chapdelain, located on the Kelly road west of Lodi. He has found in agriculture a more profitable source of income, and through his untiring efforts has become a most capable and efficient foreman.

The marriage of Mr. Doneux occurred on September 30, 1907, in Faribault, uniting him with Miss Mary Bowe, also a native of Minnesota, where her father was a farmer. Mrs. Doneux is one of a family of seven children born to her parents, and she received her education in the Faribault schools. Mr. and Mrs. Doneux are the parents of three children: Cletus, Roland, and Leona. In politics, Mr. Doneux is a Democrat. He is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus.

JOHN A. FEELEY.—A native son of California, born in Stockton fourty-four years ago, is John A. Feeley, whose entire life has been spent within the confines of San Joaquin County, where he has engaged in farming, building contracting, and carpentry. His birth occurred at the Beaver Street home of his parents, James William and Bridget (Norton) Feeley, April 1, 1879. Both parents were born in Roscommon, Ireland. James W. Feeley was eighteen months old when his parents came to America. They settled in Ohio, where he grew to young manhood. At eighteen years of age he joined a group of thirty young men, to seek his fortune in California; his brother John F. Feeley had already made a stake in the mines at Nevada City. The party of thirty young men came West via the Nicaragua route, by steamer to San Francisco, and after a long, perilous journey, arrived in Nevada City. Nine years were spent in the mines. From there he went to the Almaden Mine, in Santa Clara County, where he worked as a carpenter. At San Jose, Cal., on June 28, 1874, he was married to Miss Bridget Norton, who came to California in 1852, and was reared in San Francisco; the year following they removed to Stockton, where James W. Feeley became a building contractor with J. A. McDougall. He was thus occupied until 1882, when he bought a ranch of 350 acres near Burwood, on the Stanislaus River. This he operated for fourteen years, and then sold out and removed to a ranch near Farmington, which he farmed until 1906, when he removed to Stockton and built a home at 1705 North California Street. Four children were born to this pioneer couple: Joseph and Mary, both deceased; James Patrick, who resides in Oakland; and John A., of this sketch. James W. Feeley was a member of the California National Guard, and of the Board of Exempt Firemen, having served as assistant foreman of Eureka No. 2. In politics he was a Democrat. Mrs. Feeley passed away on February 17, 1919, aged eighty years. Mr. Feeley lived until March 7, 1922, when he passed away at the family home in Stockton.

From 1891 to 1894, John A. Feeley attended St. Mary's College in Oakland. He then became a partner with his father in building operations and thoroughly learned the carpenter's trade. For five years he worked at contracting in Stockton with his father, and then for three years was in partnership with his brother, James P. Feeley. Mr. Feeley is a member of Carpenter's Union Local No. 266, and for eight years has served as secretary of this branch; in 1920 he attended the national convention held at Indianapolis, taking his father for a visit to old friends and acquaintances in Ohio.

JOSEPH J. RASPO.—A prominent young citizen of Banta, Joseph Raspo is the proprietor of the widely-known general merchandise store, and a progressive man of affairs to whom the town is agreeably indebted. He was born in Saluzzo, Piedmonte, Italy, on February 28, 1885, the son of Filippo and Mary (Toulie) Raspo, whom he accompanied from Havre, France, arriving eventually at New York in November, 1888, and coming on to Santa Cruz, where his father followed the life of a rancher, until he passed away there on February 18, 1902. As a lad our subject attended the public school in Santa Cruz until he was thirteen years old, when he was compelled to get out and maintain himself at the same time that he helped support his widowed mother. Mrs. Raspo then sold the small ranch and moved to Santa Cruz, where she is now a resident.

Joseph went into the lumber camp of the F. A. Hein Company, in the mountains, where he worked for wages until a serious accident occurred to him. Recovering, he drove a bakery wagon, building up a fine route and profitable business, later entering the employ of the Wells Fargo Co., with which corporation he continued for a couple of years at Santa Cruz; then he entered the employ of the E. I. Dupont Powder Company, joining their staff as a mechanic.

In 1911, Mr. Raspo removed to Banta, where he entered the employ of G. Bricchetto, who maintained a general merchandise store there; and six years later he acquired a one-third interest in the concern and its trade, and in November, 1918, he became sole proprietor, purchasing the business from the Bricchetto heirs. The April previous to his removal to Banta he had married Miss Mollie Bricchetto, the second daughter of the late G. Bricchetto, and a gifted young lady who was born and reared at Banta, and who is a graduate of St. Agnes Sisters College. Three children have blessed their union, Frank J., Marie Louisa and Geraldine. The family now reside in a pretentious residence at Banta, for Mr. Raspo believes in endeavoring to have everything that may make life worth while. The family are Roman Catholics, and Mr. Raspo also belongs to the Santa Cruz Lodge of the Eagles. In matters of political import, he is a Republican, having been made a citizen of the United States in 1911.

When the pioneer, G. Bricchetto, founded the business so enviably identified with his name since the seventies, he established himself in a small way as a purveyor of fruits and vegetables, thereafter erecting a Class A fire-proof structure, in Banta. The floor-space has since then been increased several fold. Here, besides the stock of merchandise may also have been found, from the time of their introduction here, the U. S. Post Office, and long distance telephone.

EDWARD PRESZLER.—California is noted throughout the world for its splendid orchards and vineyards; and conducting important business enterprises along these lines are many men of activity and energy, who in this department of labor have gained desirable success. Of this class is Edward Preszler, a prosperous vineyardist residing in the vicinity of Victor. He was born in Hutchinson County, S. D., on January 7, 1891, his parents being George and Margareta (Schneidt) Preszler, both natives of southern Russia, born near Odessa. The former came to America with an older sister when he was seven years old, his parents having died when he was three years old. The mother came with her parents from Russia when she was three years old. They were reared in Hutchinson County, S. D., and there they were married. Geo. Preszler, when a boy of fourteen years, went to work for his brother-in-law, and for six years worked for him steadily. At the end of that time he had saved $1100. His wife received $500 from her parents, and with their combined capital they purchased 240 acres and began grain and stock raising, adding to their original farm until they had 320 acres. In 1901 they came to California with their family, arriving in Lodi in February of that year. He purchased 154 acres, a stubble-field, near what is now Victor; and with the aid of his children he improved it to vineyard. In time the whole ranch was improved. Since 1921 he and his wife have lived retired in Lodi.

Edward Preszler is the eldest in a family of eight children, the others being Emma, Mrs. Kirschenmann of Victor; William, residing at Victor; Henry, on the home place; and Allina, Ida, Martha and Lenhardt. Edward Preszler spent the days of his boyhood in the place of his nativity, residing there until 1901, when he came with his parents to California and attended the Harmony Grove, Alpine and Lockeford schools, in the interim between school terms assisting his father on the home ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Preszler occurred on August 3, 1913, in Lodi, and united him with Miss Ella Heil, a native of Hutchinson County, S. D., and a daughter of Peter and Caroline (Neuhardt) Heil, both natives of Russia. Her father, Peter Heil, came to the United States in 1887, and her mother was only one year old when she was brought by her parents to America. Peter Heil is prominent as a successful vineyardist and independent packer of San Joaquin County, and has also been prosperous as a buyer and seller of vineyard property. They were the parents of eleven children, only seven of whom are now living. Emanuel and Ella were born in South Dakota; and Leodine, Freda, Theodore, Eugene and Regina are all natives of California. Mr. and Mrs. Preszler are the parents of four children, Bertha, Alfred, Irene and Raymond Reuben.

Mr. Preszler continued to aid his father on the home ranch until he was twenty-two years of age when his father assisted him in the purchase of his first ranch, the present place of forty acres on Locust Avenue. A part of the place was set out to vineyard, and Mr. Preszler continued the development. It is now all in a full-bearing vineyard with a small orchard, a good, comfortable residence, and suitable farm buildings. In 1920 he purchased five acres in vineyard just outside the city limits of Lodi; and again in 1921 he purchased a ten-acre vineyard south of Kettleman Lane on the Alpine school road. His entire holdings of fifty-five acres are in full-bearing vineyards. His home place of forty acres was a part of the George Tretheway place, and on this Mr. Preszler has built an irrigation plant with a four-inch pump and ten-horse power motor. Aside from the growing of fruit, Mr. Preszler is also interested in packing and shipping fruit. Seeing the need of a local packing house where he and his friends could handle their own fruit, he purchased a packing plant at Victor and then, interesting nine others, organized and incorporated the Northern California Fruit Company, Inc., of which he was president the first year. He turned the packing plant over to the company, and now they pack and ship their fruit. The members of the company grow about 300 cars of fruit a year. At present Mr. Preszler is vice-president and director of the company. In his political affiliations he is a Republican. He and his family are members of the German Reformed Church in Lodi.

CHARLES MUTHEL.—Numbered among Stockton's early residents, having come here nearly forty years ago, Charles Muthel has taken a prominent part in the reclamation of the Delta district, contributing heavily of his time and energy in bringing this rich soil into productivity. Mr. Muthel is a native of Hamburg, Germany, born June 20, 1865, and remained in his native land until 1883, when he came to America, locating first in San Francisco, where he worked in a winery. In the fall of that year he came to Stockton and went to work as a clerk in China Hall, a crockery store on El Dorado Street owned by Charles Behrens. Next he was employed at the San Joaquin Hotel, and then went to sea for a time, going from San Francisco in a sailing vessel around Cape Horn to Liverpool, and return. Returning to Stockton, he worked on a dredge for the Glasgow-California Land Company in the Delta district, later becoming captain of the dredger, which was working on the lower division of Roberts Island. For twelve years he was engaged in this work, and took an active and important part in reclaiming this valuable land. Next he was in the machine shop of the Shippee Harvester Works at Stockton, but returned to reclamation work in charge of the dredger for Richard Smith, and also in district No. 17 on Roberts Island. For the next seven years he was engineer for the San Joaquin Brick Company, and then bought and ran the Columbia Hotel on North San Joaquin Street, opposite the county jail, one of Stockton's landmarks, the lumber for the building having been brought around the Horn in early days. Subsequently Mr. Muthel owned a bicycle shop in the Masonic Temple Building on North El Dorado Street, and then bought land at Lodi and planted three vineyards of twenty acres each, which he disposed of at a profit. In partnership with John Grant he again engaged in dredger work on the island, and they bought 350 acres of land which they named the Grant tract, and this they reclaimed and sold.

Mr. Muthel's marriage united him with Miss Clara Brandt, the daughter of Frederick and Margaret Brandt. The father was a pioneer settler of California, coming here in 1857 from Minnesota. Mr. Muthel has long been a member of the Stockton Lodge of Odd Fellows and also of Fidelity Lodge. He is now retired from active business life, and has recently returned from a seven-months tour of Europe, during which he visited his mother and many old friends in his native city and attended the Passion Play at Oberammergau, returning to California by way of the Panama Canal.

JOHN A. PORTERFIELD.—A progressive rancher and public-spirited citizen of Lodi, John A. Porterfield contributed toward the more rapid and scientific development of California agriculture. He was born on June 11, 1861, in the lumber woods of Elk County, Pa., where his father successfully engaged in lumbering. When John A. Porterfield was four years old, his father took his family down the river upon a raft to Allegheny County, in the same state, where he built a sawmill; and still later he removed to Indiana County, Pa.

John A. Porterfield attended both the district school and the normal school at Indiana, and then taught school for ten years in Pennsylvania, Illinois and Kansas, and served one term as county superintendent in Meade County, Kan. He took up 320 acres of government land in the county, and continued to acquire more land until he owned 960 acres. He engaged in stockraising and made a specialty of blooded Galloway cattle. Selling off 800 acres of his ranch, he located in Fowler, Meade County. There he took an active part in civic affairs, becoming both a trustee of the township and a school trustee.

In 1909, Mr. Porterfield located at Lodi, after a visit to California a couple of years before. He bought a ranch of eight acres on North Church Street, from D. F. Owens, and there he makes his home. He has a variety of fruit trees, and also a vineyard. He has bought, improved and sold a number of vineyards since he came to Lodi, realizing in each case a fair profit.

Mr. Porterfield was married in 1895 at Meade, Kan., to Miss Anna Bowen, of Meade County, Kan., and their union has been blessed with six children, all of whom were born in Kansas. Bernice is a graduate of the Chico Normal School, and is a teacher in the Tracy public schools; Waldo is with the Stewart Fruit Company of Lodi; Eva is training in the Children's Hospital, San Francisco, for the profession of nursing; Kenneth and Crawford are seniors in Lodi High School; and Vernon is in the eighth grade of the grammar school. Mr. Porterfield and his wife are members of the First Congregational Church of Lodi, and contribute to its benevolences.

J. W. PRITCHARD.—A very successful vineyardist and orchardist of San Joaquin County, who has done much in the way of practical accomplishment, is J. W. Pritchard, who resides about one mile east of Acampo. He was born in Elliott, San Joaquin County, on April 1, 1867, the son of John and Sophie (File) Pritchard, the former a native of Wales, of Scotch-Welsh descent, and the latter of German extraction. About 1853 his father came to California from Ohio. He survived until his eightieth year, dying in 1917, while Mrs. Pritchard, who was beloved by a wide circle, departed this life at the early age of forty. The worthy couple had five children, of whom J. W. Pritchard was the third-born. The two eldest in the family were Jacob M. Pritchard, now of Oakland, and Jane; and the two youngest were Maggie, since deceased, and Nettie Pritchard. Mr. Pritchard homesteaded and preempted land, acquiring in all about 360 acres in Elliott Township, all of which was timber land. He cut fire-wood and hauled it to Stockton, although he received only three dollars per load. He had to use six horses to haul the wagon load; so that the trading, with badly cut-up roads, was not particularly profitable. He removed with his family to Galt when J. W. Pritchard was nine years old, and there the lad began his serious schooling. There Mr. Pritchard engaged in freighting, running a six to eight horse team to the mountain mining settlements of Ione and Jackson.

When fourteen years old J. W. Pritchard started to make his own way in the world; and he began by doing odd jobs on the farms. On August 19, 1895, he was married, near Acampo, to Miss Ida Fuqua, who had first seen the light on the old Fuqua rancho two and one-half miles east of Acampo. She was the daughter of John C. and Virginia F. (Stafford) Fuqua. Her father was born in Ralls County, Mo., in 1837, and when sixteen years old came to California with his parents, traveling across the great plains with the old-time ox team. He mined for six years at the Diamond Springs mines, with moderate success, and in 1859 removed to San Joaquin County, where he took up farming. In 1861 he purchased a ranch two and one-half miles east of Acampo station, consisting of 160 acres of sandy loam, which he put under cultivation. On the ranch were many white oak and live-oak trees, and he added to these by planting a fine family orchard. His crop at that time was wheat. In 1878 J. C. Fuqua built a fine farm home, at an expense of about $2,500—a considerable amount for those days—and he also erected, at a cost of nearly $600, a water-storage tank with a capacity of about 1,500 gallons. Virginia F. (Stafford) Fuqua was also a native of Ralls County, Mo.

Mrs. Pritchard lived only seven years after her marriage, dying in 1902, the mother of four children. Everett Fay lives on the old home place; Eva is with her father; Henry is at Lodi; while Winifred is training to be a nurse at the Merritt Hospital in Oakland. In August, 1907, Mr. Pritchard was married for a second time at the old Fuqua ranch, taking for his wife Mrs. Flora L. Thomas, a daughter of Josiah McKindley, whose life-story is elsewhere sketched in this volume. She was born in Volcano, and was the widow of Herbert Thomas, and the mother of four children: Ruth, the eldest; Joseph and Richard, who were twins; and Bessie. Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard own a ranch of thirty-two acres, which is a part of the old Fuqua ranch; and they have set out twenty acres of the wheat-land to grapes, leaving ten acres open, and there their son resides. Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard make their home on Mrs. Pritchard's ranch of thirty acres, just to the south of the Houston schoolhouse, on the Cherokee Lane road; and they devote these thirty acres to the growing of grapes, peaches and cherries. Both ranches are under excellent irrigation. This home, formerly known as the Northrop home, is one of the old landmarks of the section, and is at least fifty years old. They have one child, George Burton.

A Democrat of the stand-pat type, Mr. Pritchard has been content to do his civic duty by the ordinary acts of a private citizen, and so has never dabbled in politics. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World, of Lodi.

JAMES WILMER DICK.—Prominent among the nursery dealers in San Joaquin County is James Wilmer Dick, of Lodi, who was born at Lone Tree, Johnson County, Iowa, on August 13, 1873, the son of Peter and Margaret (Constant) Dick, substantial farmer-folk from Ohio. A thorough patriot, Peter Dick enlisted in the Union Army in 1861 as a member of the 27th Volunteer Ohio Infantry, and had the honor of serving his country under the generalship of U. S. Grant. Nine children were born to this worthy couple, and our subject was the fourth in order of birth. Orville M., lives at Watsonville; Leona R., has become Mrs. Frank Dickinson, and resides in Oregon; Clare E. is Mrs. Chas. E. Jackson, and is one of the society matrons of San Diego; James Wilmer is the subject of our instructive review; Clarence L., is in San Diego; Z. B. Dick, died in 1918; J. H. Dick, died in 1922; M. C. Dick, lives at Acampo; and L. M. Dick lives at Lodi.

M. C. Dick was born at Jackson, Amador County. After leaving school he took up mechanical pursuits and for fourteen years was one of the dependable employees of the Holt Manufacturing Company. During the World War he was sent back to Peoria by his company, where he instructed the soldiers sent there to learn the operation and repair of the caterpillar tractor, and also helping to demonstrate its value to the government officials. He is married and has a daughter, Maxine. He is a member of the Los Angeles Elks.

L. M. Dick, also a native Californian and a competent mechanic, is now a painting contractor in Lodi. He married Miss Hilda May, born at Angels Camp, a daughter of August May, who for the past thirty-six years has been the head carpenter for the Utica Mining Company in Calaveras County. She is a graduate from the Bret Harte High School at Angels Camp and also attended the Western Normal at Stockton. They have two children, Richard and Madeline. Mr. Dick belongs to the Alameda Elks.

When James Wilmer Dick was about five years old, his parents removed to Emporia, Kan., and there his father worked for the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad for three years. In 1882, however, he migrated to California, bringing his family. They settled at Jackson, in Amador County, and there Mr. Dick engaged in agricultural pursuits on a small grain ranch. James Wilmer went to the grammar school at Jackson, and when seventeen years of age started out for himself. He became a wheat farmer, and worked on various ranches. About the same time, the family moved to the vicinity of Lodi, and there his father died, in 1901. The mother survived him until 1920.

For three years James Wilmer Dick raised water-melons at Acampo. Then he tried wheat farming in the Acampo locality and was so occupied for four years. After that he took up orcharding, also in the Acampo section, which he continued for a number of seasons. Next he followed railroading, and was for a number of years with the Northwestern Pacific Railroad, at Eureka, in Humboldt County. In 1915, he became salesman and district distributor for Messrs. Wilder and Ferguson, nurserymen of Acampo, and he was with them until the dissolution of the firm, at the death of Mr. Wilder. Since 1921, Mr. Dick has been an individual dealer and nursery agent, supplying the northern portion of San Joaquin County with nursery stock. Wherever he has operated, he has established an enviable reputation for reliability and affability.

James W. Dick

At Sacramento, on March 19, 1915, Mr. Dick was married to Miss Naomi Hansen, the daughter of Jens and Martha Hansen, an accomplished lady born at Angels Camp, Calaveras County. Her father was well-known at that place for many years as an engineer at the mines. He came to California from Copenhagen, Denmark, in early days. She attended the district school at Angels Camp, and will always have the pleasure of looking back upon happy days at the Bret Harte high school there. In 1922 she took a course in business at the College of Commerce in Stockton, and was graduated with honors. A great cloud came over her life in the accidental death of her father at the mines. Her mother is still living in Modesto, honored by her seven children: Samuel; Hubert, who served six years in the army, in Mexico and in France; Naomi, Mrs. Dick; Hazel; Winifred; Alice; and Alberta. Hazel, Alice and Alberta are trained nurses. Mr. Dick is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias. A grown son, Norman A. Dick, is an electrician, residing in Humboldt County.

DAVID WILEY MILLER.—A successful land owner and substantial horticulturist, in the enjoyment of a handsome competence, David Wiley Miller has resided in San Joaquin County for the past twenty-seven years and enjoys the esteem of all who know him. His valuable ranch of 130 acres, known as the "Calaveras River Orchards," is located two miles north of Linden on the old Waterloo road, fifteen miles east of Stockton. When Mr. Miller located in the county in 1896 there were no commercial orchards in the Linden section. Now there are over 3,000 acres devoted to the raising of Walnuts, almonds, peaches, plums, prunes, and apricots. In 1904 Mr. Miller began to raise English walnuts, and each year more acreage is being planted with these trees. Two and a half miles from Mr. Miller's ranch a walnut orchard of 540 acres is being developed.

David Wiley Miller was born in Northampton, Mass., December 14, 1850, the youngest child of David and Martha (Graves) Miller, both natives of Massachusetts. David Wiley received a good education in the schools of his native state, and at twenty-five years of age left home for California, traveling via Panama. He worked on the construction of the road to Mount Hamilton; then entered the employ of the San Jose Argus, a daily published in that city, where he remained for a short time; and then went into the office of the San Jose Herald as business manager, which occupied him for the next seven years. Indoor employment proved detrimental to his health, and consequently he resigned his position with the Herald and became a deputy county assessor under L. A. Spitzer, where he remained for fourteen years. This position afforded Mr. Miller a splendid opportunity to become conversant with horticulture in the Santa Clara Valley. He purchased five acres near Cupertino, which he developed to orchard and later sold to good advantage. He then reinvested in San Jose and Saratoga property, each time selling at a good profit. When he located in San Joaquin County, in 1896, he purchased the old Cogswell place of 175 acres, in partnership with Joseph H. Hunt, of Hunt Bros., canners. He cleared the land of the heavy timber and set out an orchard, and as the years went by he set more and more acres to fruit. Mr. Miller sold his interest in this ranch to the Hunt brothers in 1910, when he located on his present home place, which he had purchased and improved. This is the pioneer orchard in the Linden section, named "Calaveras River Orchard." He also owns 400 acres of land north of Linden.

Mr. Miller's marriage occurred in San Jose in 1892, when he was married to Miss Jennie G. Pound, a native of Iowa. She and her mother, Frances (Bates) Pound, were prominent educators in San Jose, where they conducted Mrs. Pound's Private School on William Street for many years. Mrs. Miller is a graduate of San Jose State Normal, class of 1887. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miller. Raymond W. is a graduate of the San Jose State Normal School, and saw service during the World War; he is married and has one daughter, Ruth Genevieve. He has an eighty-acre orchard at Linden. Margaret Frances, also a graduate of San Jose Normal, is a teacher at Linden; and David William is a student in Linden Union High School.

Three years ago a local group of men met and organized a Linden Walnut Growers' Association, now affiliated with the California Walnut Growers' Association, Mr. Miller serving as vice-president of the local organization. Mr. Miller was a prime mover in securing electricity and telephone service for Linden, and is a director in the local telephone company. He has been active in the good-roads movement, a director of the Farm Bureau, president of the Linden High School, and president of the building committee for the new church at Linden. Mr. Miller was elected a member of the assembly of the State Legislature for the 19th district in 1918. In the session of 1919 he stood for the enforcement of the 18th Amendment, and was a member of the committee on education, public morals, and constitutional amendments. Mrs. Miller is a member of the W. C. T. U. and the Linden Methodist Episcopal Church, and is prominent in social and civic affairs. Mr. Miller is an active Rotarian, a member of the Rotary Club, Stockton. In politics he is a Democrat.

THEODORE HENKE.—A successful grain farmer, highly esteemed as one of the pioneers who contributed much, at the expense of years of toil and much personal sacrifice, toward making the prosperous and attractive San Joaquin County of today, is Theodore Henke, whose ranch interests are near Vernalis. He was born in Pomerania, near Berlin, Germany, on June 11, 1864, and spent his early years on his father's farm, enjoying some of the superior educational advantages for which his native land has so long been famous. In October, 1882 he came to America, and located on a farm at La Crosse, Wis., where he spent about three years prior to his coming to California. He remained in San Francisco until 1887, working at the carpenter's trade; and having taken up that handiwork, he made himself one of the most painstaking and accomplished of journeymen, always giving satisfaction by his honest labor. He had received, in blood and home-training, a priceless legacy from his parents, his father being Charles Henke, a native of Berlin, Germany, who passed away in that city on February 8, 1906, while his mother, who is still living in Pomerania, at the age of ninety-two, was Wilhelmine Basko before her marriage. Our subject was preceded to San Francisco by his brother, August, who came out to California in 1884.

In 1889, Mr. Henke took up grain farming near Vernalis, and he has owned his ranch since 1905. In 1889, too, he was married to Miss Eliza Gerlach, who was born in New York City, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. and Mary (Kruse) Gerlach, both of whom are now deceased, who were sturdy pioneers in Stockton and on the West Side of San Joaquin County. Three children have sprung from this fortunate union. Herman was born on September 14, 1895, and gave great promise to his many friends; but he was killed in an accident near Vernalis during the harvest season of 1916. Then came Olga, and after her Theodore, Jr. Besides his fine tract of 466 acres of grain-land, Mr. Henke owns valuable residence property in Tracy, evidence of his prosperity, the fruit of long industry and unimpeachable integrity. He was admitted to citizenship at Stockton in 1887.

FRENZ W. HUCK.—One of the well known and respected citizens of San Joaquin County is Frenz W. Huck, whose life history furnishes a good example of what may be accomplished through determined purpose and well directed effort. His earliest recollections are of farm life and since seventeen years of age he has been prominently identified with farming interests, conducting his father's ranch near Tracy at that early age. A native son of California, he was born on his father's ranch near Tracy, June 20, 1872, the only son of Frenz and Margaretta (Warch) Huck, both pioneers of this county, who settled in the New Jerusalem district about 1868. The father, a native of Germany, was a butcher by trade until coming to California, when he went into the mines in Tuolumne County; later he settled on a ranch of 640 acres in San Joaquin County, eight miles southwest of Tracy on the Vernalis Road. The mother came to California alone and located at San Francisco where she met and married Mr. Huck in 1862, and they were the parents of the following children: Mrs. Eva Schmidt, Mrs. Caroline Jepsen, and Mrs. Margaretta Schmidt, Frenz W. of this sketch, and Mrs. William H. Pope, whose sketch is also found in this work. The father passed away at Tracy April 9, 1904, the mother surviving him until December, 1906.

Frenz W. Huck was reared and received his schooling in the New Jerusalem school district and at seventeen he was bearing the brunt of the management of his father's extensive grain ranch, and three years later was farming the ranch on shares. In those early days in the development of San Joaquin County, he sold grain as cheap as fifty cents per sack, but in spite of the ups and downs, he has been successful and upon the foundation of unflinching industry he has builded his present prosperity.

The marriage of Mr. Huck united him with Miss Anna Maria Thoming, born in San Joaquin County, a daughter of George and Lena (Mashoff) Thoming, both natives of Germany, as well as pioneers of the New Jerusalem district of San Joaquin County, having settled there in 1866. Mr. and Mrs. Huck are the parents of three children: Frances attends the West Side Union high school, Lester and Lao are students in the grammar school. For the past twelve years

Mr. Huck has served as school trustee of the New Jerusalem school district and fraternally is a member of Sumner Lodge I. O. O. F. No. 177, of Tracy; also a member of the Tracy Parlor N. S. G. W., while Mrs. Huck is a member of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, and they are members of the Lutheran Church at Tracy.

RAYMOND ARTHUR NORTHROP.—Fifty-eight years have passed since the family to which Raymond Arthur Northrop belongs became identified with the progress and development of San Joaquin County. A native son of California, he was born at Acampo, November 13, 1898, a son of Charles W. and Ruth (Eddlemon) Northrop, both natives of California. Grandfather Horace Eddlemon was born in Arkansas and came across the plains in pioneer days, locating on a ranch a mile east of the present site of Lodi. Later on he moved to what is now called Christian Colony, where he farmed until he retired. There he and his wife passed away, their demise occurring only a month apart. Grandfather Horace D. Northrop was a native of Vermont, who was left an orphan early in life and worked and earned his living wherever and however he could. When he became of age, he went to Boston and was there engaged in the oyster business for several years. In the year 1850 he started for California, but stopped with a brother in Iowa, who persuaded him to remain there and he purchased a farm in Jackson County. He married Miss Roxana Wilson, a native of New Hampshire, who passed away in 1856; then, in 1862, he married Mrs. Lydia C. Wilson, whose maiden name was Cram, and in 1864 they crossed the plains to California, being accompanied by several other California-bound families. In October, 1864, they settled in San Joaquin County, where he purchased 160 acres of choice farming land; and there their four children were born and reared, Charles W. Northrop, the father of our subject, being the youngest. There were but two children in the family of Charles W. Northrop and his wife. Merle served in Company D, 363rd Infantry, 91st Division, and was sent overseas, taking part in three different battles with that celebrated division. After eleven months service overseas he returned home, and is now ranching on Sargent road. Raymond A. was educated in Houston district school, and assisted his mother on the home farm until his marriage.

On April 18, 1920, Mr. Northrop was married to Miss Donna B. Posey, a daughter of John M. Posey, a pioneer of the county. Mrs. Northrop was born on the Posey ranch west of Lodi, and was educated in the Turner district school and the Lodi high school. Mr. Northrop is in partnership with John M. Posey in running a forty-acre vineyard, twenty acres of which is in full bearing and twenty acres in young vineyard; he is also a partner in a twenty-three acre Tokay vineyard three miles east of Lodi. Three years ago Mr. Northrop built one of the most modern residences in the Lafayette Hall district, on his home ranch, which is under the Woodbridge irrigation system. One child has come to bless their home, and she bears the name of June Noreen. Mr. and Mrs. Northrop are active members in the Congregational Church at Lodi, and he is a well-known and representative citizen of his locality.

JOHN JONS.—An experienced wheat and grain rancher who was also a pioneer in alfalfa culture is John Jons, a native of Upper Holstein, Germany, where he was born on October 25, 1860. He enjoyed a bright boyhood in the comfortable home of his parents, who provided for him an excellent common school training; but when he was eighteen years of age, he decided to come to America. He reached New York aboard the steamer Lessing, and after a brief stay in the metropolis, pushed on to Iowa, where he spent three and one-half years near Ogden, in Boone County, engaged in hard farm labor.

In 1882, he migrated still further to the West, and on reaching California, pitched his tent in San Joaquin City, then a center in San Joaquin County, and near by he found employment on the San Joaquin ranch owned by L. B. Holt. He also put in a few months in Stanislaus County. He went in for extensive growing of wheat and grain in the San Joaquin City district, and he was the very first rancher to take up the raising of alfalfa on the Kasson Irrigated Farms, some three and one-half miles south on the River Road from Banta. This was in 1912; and now Mr. Jons owns a splendid tract of forty-five acres, productive of fine alfalfa, where he is also conducting a first-class up-to-date dairy. Combining the thoroughness of Old World methods with the more modern appliances and devices of the American farmer, and taking into account in particular the conditions peculiar to California, Mr. Jons has met with success.

On September 26, 1888, Mr. Jons was made a citizen of the United States, and five years later, on April 6, he was married to Miss Hannah Haccius, a native of Germany, who had come out to Stockton in 1881, following her brothers, Hans, now a resident of San Jose, and Christian Haccius. Three children have been born to this union: Frederick is a rancher and lives at home; Hannah has become the wife of Ed. S. Thornberg, and they have one child and reside at Tracy; Frieda is Mrs. William B. McBride; and her husband, who is now ranching near Vernalis, enlisted in the U. S. Army Aviation service. In national political affairs Mr. Jons is a Republican, but in local matters he co-operates in every way, regardless of partisanship, for the benefit of the community.

WESLEY PALMER BODEN.—Business enterprise found a stalwart exponent in Wesley Palmer Boden, whose progressive spirit and determination have been manifest in all that he has undertaken, and who by reason of his individual effort has made a marked success in life. He was born in Nodaway County, Mo., on October 29, 1855, a son of Wilkison and Harriett (Jones) Boden, and is the eldest of three children, the others being Henry, residing in Oakland, Cal., and Ludy, deceased. Grandfather Boden was a pioneer of Missouri, who removed from Virginia in an early day. The father, Wilkison Boden, was a native of Virginia, born June 12, 1834. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in the 31st Missouri Volunteers as a sharpshooter, and in consequence was placed in the most dangerous positions at the front. After going through the Battle of Shiloh, April 7, 1862, he was stricken with brain fever, brought about by exposure, and passed away on April 20, 1862, at Pittsburg Landing. The mother lived to be about seventy years old.

The opportunities for an education in Missouri were extremely meager, and Wesley Boden was denied that privilege, but being alert to every advantage of his surroundings, and using his innate intelligence, he has succeeded in acquiring a valuable fund of information. When he was eighteen years of age, he removed to Kansas, and later he went to Nebraska. In both states he worked as a broncho-buster being engaged by cattlemen, and eighteen years were spent as a cowboy.

The marriage of Mr. Boden occurred at North Loup, Valley County, Nebr., on October 10, 1880, and united him with Miss Annie Post, a native of Baraboo, Sauk County, Wis., and a daughter of Ashable and Betsie (Pettis) Post. Her father, Ashable Post, was born in Ohio, and removed to Wisconsin about the time of the outbreak of the Civil War. They were the parents of three children: Alvira, now Mrs. Jacobs, of Lodi; Frank, who passed away in Oroville; and Mrs. Boden. Her mother passed away before the family left Wisconsin. Removing to California, the young married couple first settled on a stock ranch near Alum Rock Park, Santa Clara County, where they spent four years; then, in company with Mr. Boden's brother, they went to Pine Ridge, in the hills northeast of Gilroy, purchased 1,840 acres of range land, and spent five years in the cattle business. Mr. Boden then removed to Haywards and continued in the cattle business for the next two years. Then he sold out and removed to Santa Cruz, and resided there for one year. They then returned to San Jose and rented an orchard west of Berryessa, on Penetencia Creek; and besides his farming operations here, he was engaged in steam wood-sawing. Upon receiving an offer from Mr. Randol, a member of the San Jose State Normal School faculty, to care for his ranch four miles west of Lodi, Mr. Boden removed to San Joaquin County, and was occupied for ten years in the management of this ranch. He purchased ten acres in vineyard within what are now the city limits of Lodi, which he later subdivided into city lots, retaining about three lots for himself and family, on which he built a residence. Mr. and Mrs. Boden are the parents of one daughter, Mabel, now Mrs. Amos Dunton, residing on the Cherokee road about three miles north of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Dunton are the parents of three children, Pearl, Wesley, and Marjorie. Fraternally, Mr. Boden is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

SATURNINO CELAYETA.—A man of enterprise and energy, who has won for himself a place among the substantial citizens of San Joaquin County, is Saturnino Celayeta, now living retired from the active duties of a business life. He was born in the Pyrenees Mountains of Northern Spain, February 14, 1865, his parents being farmer folk of that region; and there he grew to young manhood and received a common-school education. In 1887, at the age of twenty-two years, he came to California, and for four years was in the employ of Miller & Lux on the Los Banos Ranch, in charge of their cattle. During this time, Mr. Celayeta got his first start in the sheep business, which was the nucleus of his large and extensive bands of sheep, ranging in the San Joaquin Valley from the mountains on the east to the western boundary of the county and the Mojave Desert, and from Red Bluff on the north to Kern County on the south. For twenty-two years Mr. Celayeta was engaged in the sheep business, owning as many as 10,000 head, and buying and selling large numbers of them. Perhaps his largest deal was the purchase of 8,880 wethers from the Conn & Wood ranch at Red Bluff. Mr. Celayeta had charge of large bands of sheep owned by other parties, and for a number of years was associated with T. C. Evans as a partner in the sheep business, as well as in the liquor business and in ranching on Roberts Island, on the Royal ranch. About eight years ago Mr. Celayeta disposed of his sheep, and since that time has been retired. He has been enterprising, ambitious and industrious, from his earliest years of active life, and his successful career has rewarded him accordingly.

On July 6, 1903, Mr. Celayeta was united in marriage with Miss Frances Arriola, also a native of Spain, and they are the parents of five children: Elena, N. Augustine, Alfonso W., John (who died aged four years), and Marie Eva, all born, reared and educated in Stockton. In 1906, Mr. and Mrs. Celayeta visited the scenes of their boyhood and girlhood in Spain, renewing old acquaintances there. He has always been an advocate of public progress, and throughout the community in which he has so long resided he enjoys the high esteem and confidence of his neighbors and friends.

HIRAM LINDSEY.—Prominent among the agencies which have helped to make motoring an enjoyable experience in San Joaquin County, is the well-conducted garage owned by Hiram Lindsey, of 825 East Weber Avenue, Stockton, and now recognized as one of the best headquarters for the motorist in Northern California. Mr. Lindsey was born at Coulterville, in Mariposa County, on March 28, 1871, the son of James Lindsey, an honored pioneer, now deceased. In 1851 James Lindsey crossed the great plains with his father, John Lindsey, being at that time eighteen years of age; and his father took up mining, first in Mariposa County, and then in Nevada. Later, like so many other pioneers, he carried freight to the mines. He was supervisor of Mariposa County for many years, and being a practical mountain rancher, with ideals and a vision, he helped to develop the county's resources.

Hiram Lindsey went to school at Coulterville, and he worked, as a boy, upon a ranch. When eighteen years old, he entered the quartz mines, and in time had charge of air-compression work. He came to Stockton in 1909 and was with the Sampson Iron Works, installing their pumping plants; and later he was with the Sterling Iron Works. Nine years ago, he entered the automobile field, and in February, 1919, he was able to establish himself in business. He maintains a modern garage and repair shop, with Ford authorized service. He is an expert mechanic, and is also assisted by expert workmen. The service rendered is strictly first-class, and commands a steady and lucrative patronage.

Mr. Lindsey married Miss Mary A. Smith, a native of Tuolumne County, and a member of a well-known pioneer family, the ceremony taking place on December 25, 1897, near Groveland, Tuolumne County. Two children have sprung from this union, Ernest H. and Vera Isabel. Mr. Lindsey is a past noble grand in the Coulterville Lodge, No. 104, I. O. O. F., and was demitted to Truth Lodge, No. 55, at Stockton; and he also belongs to the Loyal Order of Moose.

FRED SPROTT.—Five miles west of Lodi on the Kelly Road is located the fine ranch property of Fred Sprott, consisting of 110 acres, forty-five acres of which is in vineyard and the balance grain land. He has been successful as a farmer; and as a friend and loyal supporter of education and progress he has made his influence felt in his locality. He was born at Hillsboro, Iowa, January 20, 1872, a son of Samuel and Sarah (Streight) Sprott, natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia, respectively. The father removed from Pennsylvania to Hillsboro, Van Buren County, Iowa, where he purchased 220 acres and engaged in farming. There were eight children in the family: Samuel, Jr., deceased; Mrs. Ida Bryson, deceased; Fred, the subject of this review; John, Frank, Mrs. Kate Kendall, and Walter, all of Hillsboro, Iowa; and Lynn, deceased. The father lived to be sixty-eight years old, and the mother was seventy-eight when she passed away.

Fred Sprott received his education in the public school of Hillsboro, and at the age of sixteen began to earn his own living, working on farms in the neighborhood of his home. In 1894 he made his way to California, and worked in the mines and on farms in Amador County. In 1897 he went to Walla Walla, Wash., and remained there, with the exception of trips back to Iowa, until he joined the U. S. Army, in which he enlisted in February, 1898. His first service was with Troop A of the 4th Cavalry, and he trained at Walla Walla, Wash. At the end of three years he was honorably discharged as corporal. He immediately re-enlisted and joined Troop F, 8th U. S. Cavalry and served in Cuba for about three years. At the end of that enlistment he was mustered out at Santiago, in the celebrated Morro Castle, as sergeant. Then he re-enlisted in Troop H, 13th U. S. Cavalry, and served in the Philippines under General Pershing for nearly three years, returning to Fort Meyer, Va., where he was stationed until he was mustered out in 1907, after nine years of service, having almost seventeen years to his credit on account of foreign service. Each time he enlisted as a private and promotion followed promotion until he was sergeant. After his final discharge in 1907, he resolved to take up the life of a civilian. Going to New Mexico, he rode the range near Roswell, for six months, and then came to San Joaquin County, where he followed farming.

On September 6, 1916, at Stockton, Mr. Sprott was married to Miss Clara Bell Harshner, who was born near Lodi, a daughter of Andrew M. and Mary Ann (Garber) Harshner, natives of Ohio, prominent pioneers and farmers in San Joaquin County. The father crossed the plains with a band of horses in the early '60s, and became a successful farmer and stockraiser near Lodi. The mother came via Panama. Both lived useful and enviable lives until they passed away. Clara B. (Harshner) Sprott is the second oldest of four living children. She received her early education in the Turner public school, and also studied music in Woodbridge College. Reared in an atmosphere of culture and refinement, she presides gracefully over their home. Mr. and Mrs. Sprott own and reside on a portion of the Harshner homestead, which consists of 110 acres, forty-five acres of which is in vineyard. In 1916 they built a comfortable, modern residence, and the ranch is also improved with good farm buildings and is well irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne Ditch. In 1921 Mr. and Mrs. Sprott made a trip East, visiting throughout the South and in Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, and Iowa, then returning back home, pleased with their trip, but delighted to get back to the land of gold and sunshine. In politics Mr. Sprott is a Democrat. His active and well spent life has won for him the confidence and esteem of the community.

FRANK E. LOWE.—A well-known and representative farmer of San Joaquin County is Frank E. Lowe, who is engaged in general agricultural pursuits and the raising of grapes. He was born in Dane County, Wis., on July 15, 1873, and is the ninth child in a family of twelve of Amos and Mary (Barrows) Lowe, both parents being of English descent. The father, Amos Lowe, was a farmer. In 1886 he brought his family to California and settled in San Luis Obispo County, seven miles east of Atascadero. Coming to California for his health, Amos Lowe soon found that he had located in too high an altitude; so he removed to Arroyo Grande on the coast, and there engaged in farming. For many years he was justice of the peace of his township.

The education of Frank E. Lowe was obtained in the grammar and high schools of San Luis Obispo, and he assisted his father on his ranch until he was twenty-one years old. He then went to Hanford, Cal., where he worked for wages. Next he rented a vineyard of forty acres, where he remained for one year, and then returned to the coast and took charge of his father's sixty-acre ranch in the rich valley of the Arroyo Grande, where crops are always assured on account of the dense ocean fogs.

Mr. Lowe was married to Miss Rose Hodges at Arroyo Grande, in August, 1899. She was born near Arroyo Grande, and is the daughter of Thomas E. and Sarah (Wineinger) Hodges. Her father was one of the first settlers on the E. W. Steele tract in San Luis Obispo County, and was a successful rancher of the Arroyo Grande section. The Steele tract was originally an old Spanish grant. Mrs. Lowe was educated in the Arroyo Grande grammar and high school, and supplemented this with an attendance at Stanford University, after which she taught school in San Luis Obispo County until her marriage to Mr. Lowe. After his marriage, Mr. Lowe purchased nineteen acres near Arroyo Grande and engaged in a general truck-farming business. Later he sold this property and bought nineteen and a half acres of his wife's father's ranch, devoted to walnuts and apricots. He farmed this ranch for ten years and still owns it. In November, 1912, he moved to San Joaquin County, where he purchased sixty acres in vineyard and alfalfa on the Sargent-Lafayette road, five miles west of Lodi; this he farmed for four years and then sold it. While residing on this place, Mrs. Lowe passed away. Mr. Lowe next bought a thirty-acre ranch on Kettleman Lane, one mile south of Lodi, twenty acres of which is in grapes and the balance in alfalfa and cherry trees; the ranch is piped throughout for irrigating, and there is a four-inch pump with a seven-and-a-half-horsepower motor on the place. Mr. and Mrs. Lowe were the parents of three children: Alfrida A. attending the University of California at Berkeley, where she is training to be a teacher; Velma F., attending the University of Southern California; and Alvin F., at home. In politics, Mr. Lowe is a Republican; and fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Lodge of Lodi. Recently Mr. Lowe purchased fifty and one-half acres on the Kelly road near Woodbridge, twenty acres of which is in bearing vineyard and eighteen acres in young vineyard at this time, the balance being unimproved land.

PETER FRANCIS McENERNEY.—A prominent stockman whose extensive, successful operations evidence the man of progressive ideals and aggressive methods, is Peter Francis McEnerney, living at Dry Creek and Traction Line, about four miles northwest of Elliott. He is a Native Son, having been born at Franklin, in Sacramento County, on August 11, 1875, the son of Patrick and Bridget McEnerney, esteemed pioneers. His father was a native of Ireland, and came to California in the sixties. He farmed to grain extensively in Sacramento County. There were eleven children in the family, all still living: William D.; Peter Francis, of this review; and Sarah, Mary, Joseph, Thomas, John Leo, Bernard, Paul, Susan and Gertrude. Patrick McEnerney owned about 1,800 acres of grain land, and in addition leased much more along the river.

Peter McEnerney attended the Arno district school, and helped with the work on the farm. About 1910, he bought 160 acres on Dry Creek, at a point where the traction line crosses the creek; and he also has forty acres beyond the arroyo. In addition, he has leased about 1,400 acres of range land, and runs from 100 to 200 head of cattle on his ranch. Of late years he has been raising thoroughbred shorthorn cattle. He has twenty-five head of registered, pedigree stock, and intends to use the shorthorn cattle on the range. He is breeding to shorthorn, with the idea of improving the range cattle for beef. He owns an additional quarter-section across Dry Creek from his home ranch, and he also manages some fifty-eight acres of the old home ranch of his father. He has improved his ranch with a modern farm house and farm buildings, and has made it a choice property. He is a member of the Grange.

At Denver, Colo., on April 18, 1918, Mr. McEnerney was married to Miss Lela Myers, a native of Smith Center, Kans., and the daughter of William and Hattie Myers; and three children have blessed their union: Patricia Frances, Clare Delbert, and Hattie Elizabeth. Mrs. McEnerney was reared and educated at her birthplace, and grew up in the home of a pioneer who came to Kansas in early preemption days. Mr. McEnerney is an active member of Galt Parlor, No. 243, the Native Sons of the Golden West, and has passed through all the chairs.

THEODOR LORENZEN.—The youngest of the Lorenzen brothers, Theodor Lorenzen is the only surviving member of a family of seven children. The firm of Lorenzen Brothers, well-known and prominent grain growers and stockraisers of San Joaquin County, was composed of four brothers, all born in Schleswig. Peter Lorenzen died at Tracy, California, January 29, 1890, aged forty-five years; Hans Christian Lorenzen born January 26, 1848, died at Tracy, Cal., December 30, 1919. Henry Lorenzen, born July 14, 1851, died at Tracy, Cal., August 11, 1912. Theodor Lorenzen was born November 28, 1855.

They were sons of Peter and Catharine (Sass) Lorenzen, both natives of Schleswig, and all were reared in their native country. The two older brothers, Peter and Hans Christian, were the first to come to America, in 1873. They worked for a few months in Iowa, but having heard of Central California, resolved to cast their fortunes in the Golden State, and therefore came on to San Joaquin County, in November, 1873, where they rented land, and operated on a large scale, becoming unusually prosperous grain growers. They made their first land purchase in 1890.

Henry Lorenzen came to America in 1882, landing in New York City where he remained until 1883. He then came out to San Joaquin County, Cal., where he joined his two older brothers and entered heartily into their farming operations. He was an excellent business head and worked hard and gave his best efforts to their operations. Theodor Lorenzen grew up in Schleswig until twenty-four, then joined his three brothers in San Joaquin County, in April, 1880.

All the Lorenzen brothers were over six feet in height, and some of them six feet four inches, while Peter was fully six feet six inches tall, and they were all muscular and powerful. They worked together in close cooperation with great industry and energy, and accumulated about 2,500 acres of excellent land—and the necessary work-stock and implements and a good reserve in money besides. Men of fine presence and genial ways, they won the highest respect and confidence of their neighbors and fellow men.

Theodor Lorenzen has made his home continuously in San Joaquin County with the exception of the years between 1895 and 1908, when he was occupied in general farming in Benton County, Iowa. During 1890 he made a visit to his parents' home in Germany, where he remained for a year and a half, and again in 1911 he visited his old home. His parents are since deceased, and he is now the only surviving member of his family. All of the Lorenzen brothers were Democrats, giving earnest support to the principles of the party. Henry Lorenzen was a member of Sumner Lodge No. 177, I. O. O. F., at Tracy, and likewise a member of the Tracy Encampment, No. 49. All the brothers were well known business men, wide-awake and progressive, readily recognizing and improving opportunities and so conducting their business affairs as to win most gratifying and substantial success. Our subject is now living retired and makes his home on the River ranch near Banta.

ERNEST SCHOMBUCHER.—Like many others of his native land, to Ernest Schombucher, the energetic proprietor of the Tracy Bakery Company, America beckoned as the land of opportunity, as his immigration here at the age of sixteen testifies. He was born in Germany on April 27, 1889, and in the fall of 1905 landed in New York. His stay in New York was of short duration; going to Philadelphia he entered a large bakery, where he worked as an apprentice and thoroughly learned the trade, receiving $2.50 per week for his labor. His habits of thrift and economy, inherited from his forebears, enabled him to accumulate enough money to pay his way to the Pacific Coast. Settling in Vallejo, he became acquainted with Paul Richter, who became his partner in 1914.

Removing to Napa, Cal., Mr. Schombucher was united in marriage to Miss Carrie Fleishmann, a daughter of John Fleishmann, who came west with her parents in 1904, locating in Napa, where her father engaged in ranching. Mrs. Schombucher was born, reared and educated in Baltimore. Her parents are still residents of Napa, where they own a fine ranch. In 1914, on coming to Tracy, the present partnership was formed and a small shop was purchased, which had changed hands several times on account of not being successful; but which has taken on new life since the present firm has owned it. During the eight years they have been in business, the patronage has been steadily growing, and in 1918 an entirely new equipment was installed. Mr. Schombucher owns the property on which this modern plant stands, and also owns a fine residence on Eighth Street. He is a recent member of the Sumner Lodge of Odd Fellows, and also belongs to the Foresters of America, is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and stands fourth in seniority in the Tracy Fire Department. Mrs. Schombucher has been a most able helpmate to her husband and is equally as enthusiastic over the West Side section as is Mr. Schombucher.

THADDEUS E. WILLIAMSON.—Among the younger generation of useful and progressive citizens of Stockton, Thaddeus E. Williamson figures prominently in the building up of the city as a building contractor. He is a native son of Stockton, having been born March 19, 1894, and he began his education in the Lafayette grammar school, then entered the Stockton high school, graduating with the class of 1912. Finishing his schooling he learned the cabinetmaker's trade and entered the employ of Totten & Brandt's Planing Mill; later he worked in the same capacity for the Union Planing Mill. He then entered the employ of L. G. Bergren & Sons, large contractors of San Francisco, and here it was that he gained valuable practical experience in the building line. While in the employ of this company he worked on the Ventura School for Girls, the Norwalk State Hospital, the machinery building at the Mare Island Navy Yard and other state buildings. Five years ago he entered the building contracting business for himself and from the beginning specialized in fine residences and apartment houses. He is his own architect and he has built up a reputation for designing and erecting artistic and attractive residences, and apartment houses, and most of his work comes without solicitation. Since entering business for himself he has erected within five years over sixty fine residences, bungalows and apartment houses. In Stockton he has planned and erected the Camicia flats, C. E. Curnow residence, the apartment house for Arthur Branch, the Claude Gill, T. J. Gill, E. M. Journey, the Anthony, Nick Pulich, L. Hatheway, Scott, and Prouse residences; flat for Fred Salbach, residences for L. J. Hulbert, A. McCloud, Joe Chelly, Walter Joy, George Green, and John Steel, besides two residences for his mother. At Sonora he erected two residences for Ed. Burden, the Melvin Howland residence in Lodi and the Edgar Lynch residence in Linden. He has recently completed the George Clark residence, Taylor Milk Company's Building on North Union Street, a double house for Donald Dickey; residences for Miss A. Salbach, William Wollaston and a great many others. Mr. Williamson has also done some artistic work in remodeling store fronts and interior finish, among them the Jones Grill on East Weber Avenue and the Ruddick Hat Store on Main Street.

The marriage of Mr. Williamson in 1914 united him with Jewel Hicks, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of three children, James E., Nadine B. and Eugene F. Fraternally Mr. Williamson is a member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., the Foresters, and Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.

Thaddeus Williamson.

ALBERT F. RODGERS.—Among the active representatives of the viticultural industry in San Joaquin County, is Albert F. Rodgers. About three miles northeast of Lodi he has a vineyard of twenty-seven acres, where he resides when not looking after his rental property in Pacific Grove, Cal. He was born at Jenny Lind, Calaveras County, Cal., on August 23, 1859, the youngest of a family of four children of Joseph A. and Mary Ann (Milliken) Rodgers. Joseph A. Rodgers was a native of Holland who came to the United States and settled in Maine; then, in 1852, he came around the Horn to California, and two years later the mother came. The father mined at Rich Gulch, east of Jenny Lind, for some time, and then opened a hotel, called the Fremont House, in Jenny Lind; meantime he preempted a quarter-section of land adjacent to the town. Their family consisted of four children: Joseph, who died in Boston, Mass.; Amanda, deceased; Anna, deceased; and Albert F., of this review.

Albert F. Rodgers received his education in the district schools of Calaveras County, and remained on his father's ranch until his parents passed away; then the ranch was sold, in 1909. After leaving the ranch, Mr. Rodgers worked on the Calaveras River dredges for the next four years, and then at Folsom for a short time, after which he decided to go back to farming. Removing to the vicinity of Lodi, he purchased his present ranch of twenty-seven acres located near Dougherty Station on the traction line, all in vineyard, with the exception of a few acres surrounding the house and outbuildings. Modern equipment is found upon the place, and everything about the ranch is attractive in appearance. Mr. Rodgers divides his time between his ranch property in San Joaquin County and his residence and other property in Pacific Grove, Cal.

Mr. Rodgers' first marriage occurred at Elliott, Cal., in the fall of 1884, and united him with Miss Lilly Dustin, a native of San Joaquin County, Cal., born on the old Dustin ranch, a daughter of Fornatus and Rosaline (Call) Dustin. Fornatus Dustin first settled in San Bernardino County, Cal., and farmed there until 1858; then he went to Utah for a short time, but in 1859 returned to California. In 1861 he settled in Stockton, where he engaged in teaming for six years, and in 1867 settled on the place now occupied by Charles R. Dustin, his son, and a brother of Mrs. Rodgers, buying a squatter's title to 160 acres; but afterwards he lost his title to the railroad company, the said company having won in the courts on a claim to the land. Then he paid for the land a second time, giving the railroad company $12.50 an acre. Mrs. Rodgers passed away in 1886. Mr. Rodgers' second marriage occurred on October 14, 1889, and united him with Miss Sarah Jordan, a native of Williamson County, Ill. Mrs. Rodgers came to California in 1887 with her aunt and uncle, who lived at Elliott. Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers are the parents of four children: Bethel met a tragic death by drowning when four years old; Emile married Miss Velma Athearn, a native of Clements, Cal., and they have two children, William and James; Leslie married Miss Irma Smith, a native of Ripon, Cal.; and Ross died in infancy. Fraternally, Mr. Rodgers is affiliated with the Odd Fellows, No. 259, of Lodi; and the Woodmen of the World, at Lodi. While residing in Calaveras County, he was for years a member of the school board.

ANDRO RUSTAN.—Through industry and great native ability as a mechanic, Andro Rustan has won an enviable place in the country of his adoption.

He was born in far-off Dalmatia, then a part of Austria, August 15, 1863, being the eldest child of a family of six children, consisting of two sons and four daughters. His parents were John and Louisa (Buskovich) Rustan. They were in comfortable circumstances, the father being a farmer who owned about 160 acres of land and in addition was a blacksmith, carpenter and builder, and an all around mechanic. Schools were few and far between in his native country when young Andro Rustan grew up, but he was reared in the Catholic faith and learned to work while a mere lad, assisting on his father's farm and especially in his father's shop, where he learned blacksmithing and carpenter work.

Arriving at military age he was pressed into the Austrian army, serving two years, and in 1881 went through the war with the Balkan States as a corporal in the 37th Regiment, being wounded in action near Crevochia. He had heard much of free America and Golden California, and on February 3, 1887, he went to Havre, France, where he embarked for New York; and he landed at Castle Garden on March 12, 1887, arriving in San Francisco about a week or ten days later. He did not stop long in San Francisco, however, but soon made his way to Stockton, where he went to work with a bridge gang as a carpenter for the Southern Pacific Railway Company. Being apt with tools and having natural ability as a builder, he rose very rapidly and after two years was made foreman of a bridge gang, and for the next three years he built depots, warehouses, tanks and bridges for said company at different places in the San Joaquin Valley. Seeing the great advantages of an education, he attended night schools after coming to Stockton, and by diligent application he soon had gained the rudiments of an English common school education, so as to be able to read, write and figure. He remained in the employ of the Southern Pacific Company for a period of five years. He had made up his mind to visit his native land after five years, but at that time his father died in Dalmatia, and he thereupon determined to have his mother, brother and three sisters join him in California, so he sent them money for their passage, and bought out the stock, machinery, horses, mules and complete equipment of an Island farmer and rented 2,600 acres on Union Island, in San Joaquin County, and was soon among the large grain farmers of the Valley and helped his family to get started in California. Only one of the family, a sister, remains in Dalmatia, and she there keeps up and farms the old Rustan home place of 160 acres and also a 160-acre farm which Mr. Rustan bought from an uncle, and which he still owns. As a farmer on Union Island Mr. Rustan was very successful. In 1901 Mr. Rustan was married to Mary Deranjia, born in Dalmatia, who was 17 years old when she came to America.

In 1906 he rented another large piece of land of 1,200 acres near Banta, California, and farmed there until 1914, when he came to this place. Here he lives upon and farms the 1,400-acre ranch belonging to Mrs. Anna Fabian, and at the same time operates his own mountain and foothill grazing ranch of 1,200 acres, 14 miles distant, which he runs to horses, cattle and mules. He maintains a blacksmith shop and a machine shop on his ranch, shoes his own horses, repairs his farm machinery, autos and tractors. He is also an excellent horseman and can handle 18 horses with ease. Patriotic and public-spirited, he was naturalized in 1891, and has ever since taken an active interest in the common welfare. In politics he is a Progressive Republican and a warm personal friend of Senator Hiram W. Johnson.

Mr. and Mrs. Rustan have three children: Louise is a graduate of the Stockton High School and Heald's Business College; Annie Pauline is in the Tracy High School; John A. is also in the Tracy High School. Mr. and Mrs. Rustan and family are members of the Catholic Church, while Mr. Rustan is active in the Farm Bureau of Tracy, Summer Lodge of Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias.

PETER P. SCHMIDT.—A steadily progressing, successful man of affairs, influential both in and out of San Joaquin County, is Peter P. Schmidt, now a resident of Santa Cruz, who came here in 1881 from Rio Vista, Solano County, and was employed in Mr. Landgraff's shop at Tracy. About two years later, he left this place and located on the Sacramento road, in a blacksmith shop at the Five-Mile House above Stockton, where he was occupied until 1887. He then returned to Tracy and acquired the shop at the corner of Seventh and Central streets, where for twenty years he plied his trade. Mr. Schmidt worked very hard, saving what money he could, and put his savings into real estate. He bought some property in Tracy; and in 1909 rented his shop, and the following year erected the Hotel Francis, at the corner of East Seventh and Central avenues. Where once stood the old blacksmith shop, there are now eight stores and the Masonic Temple. Today this is among the best income properties in the city.

Mr. Schmidt was born in Holstein, Germany, on January 31, 1858, in the village of Skjarback, and grew up in the home of his parents. At the age of fifteen he left home. Boarding a west-bound steamship, he reached New York in seventeen days, and then came on by rail to San Francisco. He married Miss Eva Huck, the eldest and gifted daughter of the pioneers, F. W. and Margareta Huck; and eight children blessed their union. Margaret is the wife of Ray Colomberd, and resides at San Jose. Jesse served in the United States army, and is at present manager of the P. P. Schmidt ranch near Tracy. Frank is married and resides at Manteca. Eva is the widow of Mr. Ahrendes, and the mother of two children. Christina is Mrs. George King, and resides at Tracy. Elsie, Batilda and Julia are the youngest.

Mr. Schmidt was made a citizen of the United States at Fairfield, Solano County, in 1880. He now owns forty-eight acres of choice irrigated land two miles east of Tracy, and also owns property at Santa Cruz, where his family have resided since September, 1921. He also has desirable residence property in Tracy, although himself residing at Santa Cruz. He served as a director of Division No. 5, West Side Irrigation District, until he resigned on removing to Santa Cruz.

ERNEST CHRISTOPHER HARDER.—An example of what may be accomplished through the development of natural executive ability is afforded by Ernest Christopher Harder, foreman of the A. B. Humphrey rancho of 800 acres near Escalon, a portion of what was once the historic Johnny Jones ranch, one of the largest and most celebrated grain tracts in the San Joaquin Valley. Johnny Jones owned about 32,000 acres, about 12,000 of which lay to the south of the Tuolumne River; while some 8,000 acres were in the home ranch near Escalon; 8,000 acres in Tulare County, between Porterville and Visalia, on the Tule River; and the balance on the West Side, near Grayson, in Stanislaus County. The Humphrey ranch has 225 acres planted to vines and trees, and eighty acres of grain land, while the balance is in alfalfa.

Mr. Harder was born in Holstein, then a part of Germany, on May 28, 1864, a son of Jacob and Abie (Spreckles) Harder, and is the youngest of nine children. He was brought up and confirmed in the Lutheran Church, and early went to work in his father's dairy, on a ranch of about twenty-five acres. When sixteen years of age, he left home and native country and sailed for America. His father had died six years before; and when he said good-bye to his sainted mother, on a morning in June, 1880, he did so never to see her again, although she lived to be eighty-six years old. He sailed from Hamburg on one of the Hamburg-American line of steamers; and after a voyage of nine days across the Atlantic, stopping only at Havre, France, landed about the middle of June at Castle Garden, one of 1,100 passengers dropped there. He did not tarry in the American metropolis, but hurried on to his destination, Grand Island, Nebr., where he had two elder brothers, John and Jim. He worked there on a farm for three years, and then, in July, 1883, came on to Stockton and put up at the United States Hotel at the corner of Center and Market streets. There he was told that a farmer at Escalon, J. W. Jones, popularly called "Johnny" Jones, was in need of a man; so he proceeded to the Jones place, and there for the next seven years worked steadily.

On March 22, 1891, Mr. Harder was married to Miss Ada Cole, daughter of Lum Cole, of Stanislaus County, a California pioneer who came out in 1849, traveling from Missouri with ox teams. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Harder rented a farm in Merced County, where they stayed until 1895. Mr. Harder then went to the Sargent tract on the Island, west of Lodi, and put in 320 acres in Sycamore Slough. He was completely drowned out, and had to start all over again. Coming back to Escalon, he went to work for Dave Jones, on his Stanislaus River farm in San Joaquin County. He worked for him until 1906, when he entered the service of A. B. Humphrey on the present Humphrey rancho near Escalon; and there he has been ever since. He became foreman for Mr. Humphrey in 1908, and is still holding that responsible position, Mrs. Harder having charge of the cooking for the ranch household.

Three children have been granted Mr. and Mrs. Harder. Adaline is the wife of J. M. Strickland, a pear grower in Eldorado County. Rudolph J. served overseas in France for twenty-one months, with the 91st Division, and was eventually honorably discharged. He was married, before he went to war,

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest C. Harder to Miss Blendina Higgins of Escalon. He is now working under his father on the Humphrey ranch. Cecil Frazier is still in school.

WILLIAM W. LAMB.—A successful Delta farmer, the owner and proprietor of 350 acres on Lower Union Island, is William W. Lamb, who has brought his ranch to a high state of cultivation. Born in San Joaquin County, near Mohr's Landing, January 20, 1872, he is the eldest son of L. D. and Ella (McCraney) Lamb, natives of Missouri and Nevada, respectively. The father, L. D. Lamb, crossed the plains to California with ox-teams and settled in San Joaquin County at an early day, while the mother came to California at eleven years of age and grew up and married in San Joaquin County. Two sons were born to them: William W., of this sketch, and Frank M. The family home was first located near Banta, where they remained until 1879, when they removed to Union Island. The father became a well-known farmer and stockman, as well as a public-spirited citizen. He passed away when in his sixty-sixth year. The mother now makes her home at 741 North Hunter Street, Stockton.

William Lamb attended the Banta school, and early in life received practical lessons in agriculture. In 1908, in partnership with his brother, he began farming near Clifton Court, where they raised large quantities of barley, the partnership continuing until 1919. Mr. Lamb continues to raise barley on an extensive scale, and during the past eight years has also been a successful grower of pink beans.

Mr. Lamb was married in Portland, Ore., to Miss Minnie Snoderly, a native of Oregon, a daughter of George S. Snoderly, who was a mining engineer. Both her parents are now deceased. Two daughters have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Lamb: Georgia is a student in the Stockton high school, and Ella is in grammar school. In 1919 a residence was purchased at 503 West Acacia Street, Stockton, where the family make their home.

JAMES SANGUINETTI.—A business man of Lodi who thoroughly understands the problems of his field is James Sanguinetti, the wide-awake employe of the Union Oil Company at Lodi, Cal. He was born in the town of Elliott, Sacramento County, on November 11, 1888, a son of Steve and Mary (Silva) Sanguinetti, both born and reared in Italy. His father came to the United States at the age of eighteen years, and upon his arrival in California located in the farming district of Elliott. Later he sold his property, and now resides on his vineyard near the Huston school. There are seven children in the family: Gus A., residing at Lodi; Fred J., on the home ranch; James, of this sketch; Tillie, now Mrs. Herbert Merz, of Stockton; Lena, a trained nurse residing in Stockton; Addie, Mrs. Thomas Mulcahy, of San Francisco; and Alvena, Mrs. E. Clancy, of Acampo.

James Sanguinetti attended the Elliott grammar school, and at the age of fifteen began to work on his father's ranch, where he remained for ten years. Then he entered the oil business, first as a truck driver for the Union Oil Company and afterwards as truck driver for the Shell Oil Company. His advancement to the position of manager for this latter company came after six months' time, and during the five years of his efficient management, the business increased steadily. In the fall of 1922, Mr. Sanguinetti again became an employe of the Union Oil Company.

The marriage of Mr. Sanguinetti in 1914, united him with Miss Hazel Dutschke, a native of California; and they are the parents of two children, James M. and Mary E. He is chaplain of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, No. 848, and a member of the Knights of Columbus.

ORVILLE PHILLIPS.—A native of Michigan, Orville Phillips was born at Fowlerville, Livingston County, on October 16, 1880, a son of George H. and Margaret (Daily) Phillips. George H. the father was born in New York in 1842 and accompanied his parents to Michigan in the late '40s, transportation being by ox teams, and there they became farmers; his mother was also a native of New York, born in 1840, and was taken by her parents to Michigan in the '50s. His father passed away in 1916, while his mother now resides in Tucson, Arizona.

Orville Phillips received a good public school education and assisted his father with the farm work until he was nineteen years old, when he left home to work on the Michigan Grand Trunk railroad and followed railroading until he came to California in 1901. In 1912 he settled in Tracy and entered the employ of the Southern Pacific railroad, remaining with them until he decided to establish his own business, and in consequence of this determination the Tracy Auto Electric Co. was formed. In May, 1922, Mr. Phillips disposed of his interest in the Tracy Auto Electric Company and accepted a position with the Shell Oil Company at Corral Station, it being a pumping plant on the valley pipe line of the Shell Oil Company near Tracy.

Mr. Phillips' marriage united him with Miss Lillie Eaton, a daughter of Orrison and Josephine (Hoffman) Eaton, both pioneers of San Joaquin County. They are the parents of two children, Orris A. and Fred O. Fraternally, Mr. Phillips is a Mason and also a member of the Eastern Star of Tracy.

DR. ARTHUR T. SEYMOUR.—A prominent representative of the Osteopathic profession, Dr. Arthur T. Seymour was born at Chicago, Ill., on January 10, 1877. His parents moved to New York City when he was a baby, remaining there until he was ten years old, when they went to Iowa, residing at Red Oak and later at Des Moines. At the age of fifteen he returned to New York City and after a short period of attendance at school he entered business, holding positions in various concerns until November, 1894, when he entered the offices of The Musical Courier Company, where he was employed as bookkeeper and cashier for over ten years. In 1902 he enrolled with the New York University School of Commerce Accounts and Finance and pursued the study of expert accounting until 1905, then entered the employ of The Audit Company, of New York, as staff accountant.

In the fall of 1906, he resigned his position with The Audit Company and in the spring of 1907 entered Still College of Osteopathy, Des Moines, Iowa. In September of the same year he came to Los Angeles, Cal., and entering the Los Angeles College of Osteopathy, graduated with the degree of D. O. on January 27, 1910. Coming to Stockton, he located at 311 Elks Building, where he is still engaged in practice. In the fall of 1919, he took post-graduate work at the College of Osteopathic Physicians and Surgeons, Los Angeles, where he was an interne in the eye, ear, nose and throat clinic, and since his return to Stockton he has devoted particular attention to this line of his work, in addition to general osteopathic practice.

On August 4, 1912, Dr. Seymour was united in marriage with Mabel Alice Ambrose, born in Lockeford, Cal., the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Ambrose, pioneers of that place. Mr. Seymour is a Mason and is a member of the Ad Club of Stockton, also of the national, state and local osteopathic associations.

CHARLES A. SLACK, JR.—An enterprising and representative young rancher, who is the proprietor of the Ofcee Stock Farm, located five miles west of Tracy on the Lincoln Highway, is found in Charles A. Slack, Jr., whose practical and scientific knowledge of agriculture is being put to good use. He was born at Tracy, Cal., on November 17, 1894, the eldest son of Charles A. and Elda (Wacksmuth) Slack, who have, since 1904, resided in San Francisco, although well and favorably known in San Joaquin County. Charles A. Slack, Sr., was born in Iowa on November 5, 1861, and came west in 1883, when he settled in Tracy; at the age of seventeen he accompanied Chief Hood into Texas and for seven and one-half years was connected with the construction work of the Southern Pacific Railroad; when he located in Tracy he became road master for the same company, Fresno-Merced division, his entire service covering a period of about twenty years. He married Miss Elda Wachsmuth, a daughter of the late Ed. Wachsmuth, a pioneer and founder of Tracy. She was born in Franklin, Pa., on May 5, 1868. They were the parents of five children: Olive married Rudolph Mohr, Jr. They have three children and reside in San Francisco. Fern is deceased; Charles A., Jr.; Elda married L. G. McAbee and they reside in San Juan; Ed is a student in the San Francisco Polytechnic high school.

The education of Charles A. Slack, Jr., began in the Willow district school, where he remained for four years, and in 1904 he accompanied his parents to San Francisco, and there successfully passed through the grades of the Crocker grammar school; later he was graduated from the Lick high school of that city. During 1914-16 he attended the Agricultural College, University of California, at Davis, Cal. In January of 1917, he removed to Tracy and found employment on the ranch of his uncle, A. Grunauer, near Tracy, and the following July became a partner of his father on the home ranch, on which he raises pedigreed Poland China hogs and registered shorthorn cattle and Hampshire sheep. This ranch consists of 480 acres under an irrigation system; father and son also own two other ranches, 126 acres north of Tracy and adjoining the city, and 260 acres on Old River, a fine grain farm.

On October 13, 1920, Mr. Slack was married to Miss Mary Troth, a native of Tracy, the daughter of Daniel Sherman and Louisa A. (Moran) Troth of San Joaquin County. Her father was born in Indiana in 1862 and came to California in 1892, when he located in Tracy, while her mother, Louisa

A. (Moran) Troth, was born at Ellis, San Joaquin County, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Moran, venerable pioneers of this state, who now reside in Oakland, aged ninety and eighty-three, respectively. Grandmother Troth is still living, and makes her residence in Centralia, Wash. Mrs. Slack is a graduate of the Fremont high school of Oakland, class of '16. Fraternally Mr. Slack is a member of the Masonic order of Tracy, and his political affiliations are those of the Republican party.

H. H. DRAIS.—A well-known couple who well deserve both their substantial prosperity and their popularity, are Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Drais, representatives of old pioneer families. Mr. Drais is a farmer and orchardist, operating extensively near Farmington, and is a son of the late well-to-do and honored pioneer Edward M. Drais, who figured in the early history of Farmington, and whose life-story is given elsewhere in this volume.

Henry Horace Drais was born on March 5, 1877, and attended the public school at Farmington. At an early age he began to help with the farm work on his father's great rancho at Rock Creek, which comprised some 2,500 acres on the San Joaquin-Stanislaus county line, and which at that time was devoted to grain and cattle. The lessons in industry and business management afforded him in his youth have served him well in after years. He has prospered, and is now the owner of 450 choice acres on Littlejohn Creek, near Farmington, which he has improved, and on which he is at present planting twenty acres of the Tilton variety of apricots. He purposes to engage more and more in horticulture, since his land lies in a locality of late shown to be especially adaptable to cherries and apricots. As a grower of wheat and barley, he has few equals and no superiors in this section of the country. Mr. Drais is an untiring worker, and devotes his best efforts to his farming operations, being therein ably assisted by his only son, Leland Stanford Drais, who at present is residing upon the farm at Farmington, while Mr. and Mrs. Drais are temporarily domiciled in Stockton, without, however, having given up their rural home.

Mr. Drais was married at Farmington on February 24, 1900, to Miss Annie Alders, a daughter of the late well-known and highly respected pioneer, Charles M. Alders, of Farmington. Mr. and Mrs. Drais are the parents of one child, Leland Stanford, already referred to, who is taking a live interest in horticultural pursuits. During the late war he enlisted at Mather Field, Cal., in the Aviation Corps. He served until the close of the war, and was honorably discharged, being specially commended for the high grade of service and character. He was recently married to Miss Mildred Mobley, of San Francisco, and as assistant to his father, is operating the ranch.

Mr. and Mrs. Drais take an active interest in all matters pertaining to the general welfare. Mr. Drais is prominently connected with the Native Sons of the Golden West, and with Truth Lodge, No. 296, I. O. O. F., of Farmington; while Mrs. Drais is a Pythian Sister, and a worthy member of the Native Daughters of the Golden West. Still in the prime of life, with an excellent ranch and home as the result of their own industry, Mr. and Mrs. Drais are maintaining the good name and the old-time hospitality of their honored ancestors.

Henry H. Davis.

JAMES WILSON STUCKENBRUCK.—A resident of the most favored section of the San Joaquin Valley is James Wilson Stuckenbruck, the successful vineyardist recently chosen County Supervisor from the Fourth District. He was born in Tipton, Iowa, on December 14, 1857, the son of Frederick and Jane Stuckenbruck; and he was the third child in a family of five. His father was a farmer on a small ranch. James received an education in the common schools.

At the age of thirteen he learned the blacksmith's trade at Tipton, Iowa, and later he went to Coon Rapids, Iowa, following his trade there. From 1892 to 1897 he served as the postmaster at Coon Rapids, and while there he was also for twelve years on the school board; he was for about fifteen years a resident of that place.

At Bayard, Iowa, on October 16, 1882, he was married to Miss Anna Goodrich, a native of Michigan and the daughter of Charles and Mary Goodrich. His wife's father was a blacksmith by trade, and he moved to Iowa when Mrs. Stuckenbruck was a little child, and there the family resided for many years. Mr. Stuckenbruck was employed for three and one-half years, from 1902 on, in the government service at Fort Bayard, acting as an instructor in mechanics on the Indian reservation. His health gave way, and in 1905 he and his wife came to California and settled at Santa Ana, in Orange County, and after a year and a half there, he went to Lodi, and in 1908 served in the Legislature, until 1912. From 1914 to 1915 he was member of the State Senate. In 1915 he was admitted to the bar of California, and practiced law at Lodi until 1917; and in 1918 he was elected Supervisor from the Fourth district, and he has served as such since, to the satisfaction of everyone concerned.

Mr. Stuckenbruck has made his home on his twelve-acre ranch, about three miles east of Acampo. He has one son, Ellory, a rancher, who resides with him. Mr. Stuckenbruck is vice-president of the Farmers Insurance Company of San Joaquin County, a Mason of Lodi Lodge, and a member of the Knights of Pythias of Lodi.

ED. SPIEKERMAN.—In studying the record of the life of Ed. Spiekerman, for many years a prosperous merchant in his native state of Iowa, one cannot but be convinced that there is no such word as failure to the man who is determined to succeed. He was born, reared and married in Iowa, his wife being, before her marriage, Miss Nettie McCartney. They had removed to Fergus Falls, Minn., where Mr. Spiekerman engaged in the dry goods business until 1908, when, on account of failing health, he removed with his family to California and settled in Lodi. Two years later, in 1910, he established his business of concrete pipe manufacture; at first making concrete pressure pipe for irrigating purposes. His business has steadily increased until in 1920 he made and laid 200,000 feet of concrete pipe, and up to June 1, 1921, has laid over a half-million feet. His manufacturing plant is located at No. 412 South Sacramento street, Lodi, with a branch factory in Stockton. The pipe which he manufactures is known as Amaroc pipe, the highest standard pipe on the market. The machine with which he constructs the pipe is known as the K. T. and with the mixer and tools was installed at a cost of $10,000. This machine makes pipe four times as strong as the old hand method and straight, true and water-tight, under a test pressure of one hundred pounds, and every foot of pipe is guaranteed water-tight. Each carload of material is tested and graded and includes three grades of sand and three sizes of rocks. The plant has a capacity of from 1,500 to 1,800 feet daily, or 400,000 feet of pipe yearly. Mr. Spiekerman has installed irrigation systems on most of the ranches in San Joaquin County, but more particularly in the Lodi, Stockton, Delta and Manteca districts. His honest and intelligent work has been a real factor in the development and prosperity of the northern part of San Joaquin County. Recently he has added the manufacture of sewer pipe and made and furnished the city of Stockton with 25,000 feet, the first big contract of the kind in the county. Before the pipe was laid it was thoroughly tested in every particular and was found to be 100 per cent. perfect; he also manufactures concrete ornaments, such as fences, posts, vases, etc., for beautifying residence property. He is a member of the California Association of Concrete Pipe Manufacturers, whose chief engineer is F. W. Stanley, formerly senior engineer of the U. S. government.

Mr. and Mrs. Spiekerman are the parents of one son, Fred, who is the efficient manager of his father's business. He was born on March 1, 1898, while his parents were residing in Fergus Falls, Minn., and was brought to Lodi when he was ten years old. After finishing the grammar and high schools of Lodi he entered the University of California and was graduated in 1918 with the degree in pharmacy, and after his graduation he became associated with his father.

Mr. Spiekerman is a great lover of horses and at the present time has two in training at the Stockton agricultural park, which are showing great possibilities as racing horses, and he anticipates entering them in the fall racing events.

JOHN COX WHITE.—Among the notable California forty-niners resident in San Joaquin County who have joined the silent majority of that adventurous host and found homes in yet fairer golden lands than those to which they struggled amid countless hardships in 1849 is the late John Cox White. Mr. White was a real pioneer in San Joaquin County, sojourning there from the first year of his advent in the Golden State until his death. On May 19, 1891, the county and that section of the state was called upon to mourn the taking off of a true and worthy man, one who had been true to his own ideals and convictions and who by his large life work conferred benefit upon hundreds of his fellow-citizens who of necessity shared in what he accomplished toward the material progress and upbuilding of his community. He was born in Ohio, September 2, 1822, being a son of John C. White, who came to Ohio from New Jersey. Reared in his native state until about 1846, being then a young man of twenty-four years, he moved with his parents to Illinois, locating near Knoxville. He was living there when the gold fever struck the country, and in 1849 he crossed the plains to this state, being five months on the way from Illinois. In the same year he took up his location in San Joaquin County, and for a short time engaged in freighting from Stockton to the mines. He was then in the cattle business with a partner, William Dunlap, under the name of White & Dunlap, until the death of the latter in August, 1854, after which, on his own account, he combined the industries of agriculture and cattle-raising until his death. In the course of a few years he became one of the extensive cattle ranchers of this section of the state, operating a large tract of land, his home ranch, of 1,400 acres, on the Davis Road, about nine miles from Stockton, and also owned other large land properties in San Joaquin County, among them being 1,400 acres farming land on the Telegraph Road, adjoining the Kellerman ranch; he also owned 2,000 acres near where the town of Manteca now stands, now known as the Pillsbury tract. The Pillsbury tract he sold for eighteen dollars per acre and it is now worth $175 and more per acre. He also owned a ranch of 510 acres on the Linden Road which was subdivided in 1904 and sold for $125 per acre, now worth $500 per acre. The old White residence built of brick fifty years ago still stands at the corner of Commerce and Poplar streets, Stockton. Mr. White was a very successful business man, noted for his able management of affairs, and had a reputation wherever known as a strictly reliable man. He was one of the organizers and for many years a director in the San Joaquin Valley Bank at Stockton, and took great interest in the welfare of this institution. Though often solicited to hold local offices, he always refused, for he devoted himself exclusively to the direction of his large business, and therein discharged his most important obligations to himself and the world in general. But he could always be found lending his influence for the best welfare and progress of his county. In politics he was a Democrat. From the year 1867 until his death he was a resident of the city of Stockton, directing his affairs from that place. Previous to that he had lived many years on his estate on the Davis Road nine miles from Stockton. He was one of the original members of the San Joaquin Society of California Pioneers.

Mr. White was married, October 2, 1853, to Miss America Elizabeth Smith, who survived him sixteen years, passing away in 1907, an honored pioneer woman. She was born in Platte County, Mo., May 19, 1838, being a daughter of John Payton Smith, born in Tennessee, and Elizabeth C. (Crittenden) Smith, born in South Carolina. At the age of three years Mrs. White was left an orphan, and she was thenceforth reared in the family of her brother, James C. Smith, also a late resident of San Joaquin County. In 1852, with this brother and his family, she came across the plains direct to San Joaquin County, where in the following year she was married to Mr. White. Of this marriage were born ten children, five on the home ranch in the county and five in the Stockton home: J. Frank, deceased; Jennie W., Mrs. W. R. Fisher, deceased; Charles B., deceased; Lewis B., deceased; Arthur C., residing in Los Angeles; Lizette W., Mrs. J. D. Maxey, residing in Stockton; Morgan M., deceased; Harry D., residing in Stockton; Anna W., Mrs. Ozro O. Farnsworth, of Stockton; and Kate W., Mrs. Frank A. McPherson, residing in Sonora. Harry D.

White, clerk of the justice court of Stockton, was born in Stockton August 7, 1877, and received his education in the Stockton public schools. At eighteen years of age he began to clerk in Samuel's Cigar Store, remaining there for six years; in 1907 he formed a partnership with Benjamin Jacobs under the firm name of White & Jacobs, dealers in cigars and tobacco. In 1914 he sold his interest in the business to accept his present position of clerk in the justice court. He married Miss Della Gambetta, also born in Stockton, daughter of John Gambetta, an early settler of Stockton, who was the founder of the Gambetta addition to Stockton. Mr. White owns a twenty-acre vineyard and an almond orchard, a part of his father's old ranch, four miles from Stockton on the Linden Road, which he planted to vineyard in 1905, and in 1914 every third vine was pulled up and planted to almonds, both of which yield a nice income. Fraternally he is a member of Delta Lodge No. 471, F. & A. M., and the local lodge of Sciots and Stockton Aerie No. 83, F. O. Eagles.

MICHAEL HANDLIN.—An old settler of San Joaquin County who has continuously resided in the Lodi section of the county for the past fifty-two years is Michael Handlin. His birth occurred in County Kildare, Ireland, in 1844 and he is the second oldest in a family of five children born to Dan and Nancy (Burns) Handlin, both natives of Ireland. The children are as follows: Peter, Michael, the subject of this sketch, Dan, Thomas and Sarah. The father was a farmer by occupation and lived to be eighty years old, while the mother passed away at sixty-five years.

At sixteen years of age, Michael Handlin started out in life for himself, working at odd jobs on farms in the neighborhood of his home and thus ten years were consumed. In 1870 he embarked for the United States and came directly to California, where he settled at Lodi, then Mokelumne Station. At first he rented a 240-acre ranch east of Lodi on the Lockeford Road and farmed to grain for about seven years, when he purchased the place and it has since been known as the Handlin ranch. Mr. Handlin rented out some of his ranch which was used for raising watermelons, but a large part of it was used for raising grain. Portions of this ranch have been sold from time to time until Mr. Handlin now owns seventy acres, twenty-five acres of which is in vineyard and the balance used for grain and alfalfa. The ranch is irrigated by a five-inch pump driven by an electric motor, thus furnishing ample water for the proper care and cultivation of the entire seventy acres.

The marriage of Mr. Handlin which occurred in 1889 in San Francisco, united him with Miss Kate Kelly, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, and a daughter of Joseph Kelly, a farmer of that country. Mrs. Handlin left Ireland alone and came to California to visit her sisters and here she became acquainted with Mr. Handlin. Mrs. Handlin passed away in 1913 leaving two daughters: Anna, Mrs. Kels, who resides in Lodi, and Mary. In 1914 Mr. Handlin took up his abode at 12 North Stockton Avenue, with his daughter Mary, who presides over the home, devotedly ministering to his comfort. Mr. Handlin is a Democrat in politics.

WEST SIDE IRRIGATION DISTRICT.—

With nearly 12,000 acres of fertile land under irrigation, producing abundantly rich crops, the irrigators and backers of the great West Side Irrigation District, in the Tracy country, have cause for general rejoicing. This magnificent system cost in the neighborhood of $545,000, and its operation under most favorable conditions stands out as a glowing tribute to the men who labored so loyally carrying the big project forward along progressive lines. All the preliminary organization details from a legal standpoint were worked out by Neumiller & Ditz, of Stockton, and the bond issues and contracts by Crittenden & Hench, who handled all matters in an able manner, and did much to push forward the sale of the irrigation bonds at the right time.

The West Side Irrigation District is the first one of its kind in the West, and it unique in that the water supply is not governed by seasonable conditions in the mountains, and, consequently, the district is not limited to seasons of operation. There is a big acreage of alfalfa, where formerly some ninety per cent. of the land was in barley and wheat. Many of the farmers have planted a variety of products, including fruit trees of various kinds, corn, potatoes, beans, sugar beets, and garden truck, all securing splendid results.

Water is pumped from the head of the intake canal from Old River, which cost in the neighborhood of $32,000, including the right of way, bridge over the road, and all other costs. This runs from Bethany Ferry to a point just north of the Southern Pacific Railroad, where the huge pumping plant is located. The water is pumped from this point through two pipe lines to two big main canals, one at an elevation of fifty-five feet and the other at an elevation of 110 feet. The water is then carried through these canals and laterals to the highest point of each 160 acres in the district. The intake canal is one and one-eighth miles long, the excavation being from 85 to 100 feet wide and from twelve to twenty-eight feet deep. A notable feature of this big project is the fact that the pumps can be operated separately or all together and all started or stopped by one operator at a switchboard.

The pumps provide enough water in fifty-two days to cover each acre of land in the district one foot deep, and the total horsepower of the plant is about 2,000. There are some sixty-two headgates, consisting of concrete inlets and outlets, with corrugated iron pipes through embankments, the gates being operated by screw lift devices. In the construction work ten railroad crossings were built under the tracks, together with concrete inlets and outlets. The flumes consist of two concrete and two wooden ones. Sixty-eight combined drop structures, road crossings and check gates, made of corrugated iron pipe of special construction, were necessary to complete the details.

Twenty-two reinforced concrete county highway crossings and siphons and sixty-six wooden take-out gates were installed on this project. A complete telephone system of three wires with underground road crossings, equipped with drop signals and telephone instruments every mile and a half, was installed. Power for the great project is furnished by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company.

Substantial houses have been built for the engineer and employeecs of the plant.

Among the well-known early day boosters who worked energetically with other leading interests for the formation of the project are such well-known leaders as A. Grunauer, C. A. Slack, A. R. Arnold, Linne Brothers, J. D. Van Ormer, L. Kroner, Lewis Parker, S. A. Shearer, Fred P. Von Sosten, Peter P. Schmidt, the Heinbockel brothers, Henry A. Frerichs, George J. Luhrsen, Mrs. Anna Von Sosten, D. J. Looney, Neil and Tom Looney, Neil Fabian, W. G. Lang and others. The first meeting was held on November 9, 1915, and Samuel A. Shearer was chosen chairman or president, W. G. Hunter of Stockton as engineer, who resigned, and was succeeded by the present engineer, Mr. W. D. Harrington, in November, 1918. At present Henry Frerichs is president; Mrs. Bertha M. McGee, treasurer; and George L. Parker, assessor. Neumiller & Ditz were chosen as attorneys; later Crittenden & Hench became attorneys for the project. Mr. Ditz was the first secretary, but upon his resignation, William Von Sosten was chosen to fill that office; in 1917 John C. Chrisman was chosen secretary. The people of Tracy and this section of Central California are proud of this big irrigation achievement, as it has proven early day statements made by men who had faith in the solidity of the enterprise.

JESSE W. WAKEFIELD.—An experienced vineyardist and orchardist who has come to assist in the development of California realty is Jesse W. Wakefield, who lives one mile and three-quarters east of Acampo. He was born in Brownfield, Oxford County, Me., on March 16, 1865, the son of Edwin and Sarah (Palmer) Wakefield. His father came out to California and Truckee in 1849, and the following year lost his hand in the sawmills in that place. As soon as he was able to travel again, after his accident, he returned to Maine, married, and there reared a family of nine children. Calvin P., the eldest, is now in Stockton; Edwin is in Modesto; Alice has become Mrs. Woods, and lives in Maine; Oren L. died in 1919; Laura became Mrs. Seevey, and is deceased; Angies also has died; Jesse W. is the subject of our review; Fred is the next youngest; and A. P. Wakefield lives at Stony Ford, in Glenn County, California.

Edwin Wakefield bought a farm on the Saco River in Maine and lived there until his death at the age of eighty-five years, while Mrs. Wakefield, who passed away in 1918, attained her eighty-sixth year. Jesse attended school at Eaton, New Hampshire, and in 1882 he left home to come to California, and here he went to work on the Cressy Ranch in Merced County, near Livingston. This place contained about ten thousand acres, and he remained there for four and one-half years, after which he came to San Joaquin County, and worked out for two years. He next leased 480 acres of land from Mrs. Gage, lying north of Lockeford, and known as the Faulkner ranch; and this place he farmed for sixteen and one-half years. In 1907 he sold his stock and purchased the place where he now resides. This was then open land; but he has developed fourteen acres of it to peaches, five acres to plums, five acres to cherries, ten acres to Tokay grapes, and six acres to walnuts and alfalfa. He has built a home on the ranch, and has also developed two fine wells, with one pump of six inches, and another of five, all operated by a motor of twenty-five horse-power.

At Stockton, on October 9, 1890, Mr. Wakefield was married to Miss Luvina Eddlemon, the daughter of George and Ruth Eddlemon, a native of Arkansas, who came across the plains with her parents when she was six months old. They settled at Lodi, and both died in 1919 on their ranch near Lodi. Mrs. Wakefield went to school at Lodi, and grew up in that vicinity. Two children have blessed their union. Delma May is Mrs. James M. Prentice, and Orin Edwin is at home. Mr. Wakefield is a Republican, and a member of the Woodbridge Lodge of Odd Fellows; and both he and his good wife are members of the Rebekahs.

For the last five years, Mr. Wakefield has been a real estate operator in Lodi and the vicinity of Acampo. As illustrative of the advance in land prices, he states that he was the first man hereabouts to sell a vineyard for $1,000 an acre, and yet this same ranch sold for $3,000 an acre in the spring of 1922. He not only sells other folks' land, but he buys land for himself, and owns fourteen acres of Tokay grapes north of Youngstown on the Traction line.

E. P. TRYON.—A prominent business man of San Joaquin County, who is extensively engaged in the raising of sheep and the marketing of wool, is E. P. Tryon, residing at 234 East Cleveland Street, Stockton. He was born near Sacramento, Cal., November 8, 1871, a son of Horatio and Abigail (Cone) Tryon, both natives of Ohio. In 1863 this family migrated west across the plains with ox teams, arriving in Sacramento in the fall of that year; later the father located at the Old Union House, which is still owned by the Tryon estate and operated by a brother of our subject. In 1882 Horatio Tryon retired from his farming pursuits and removed to Middletown, Lake County, where he passed away in 1885, aged seventy-one years. He was survived by his widow and five children. The mother of our subject resides in Santa Rosa at the venerable age of ninety-five, and retains her faculties, being interested in every-day affairs.

E. P. Tryon began his education in the public schools and his earliest recollections are those of farm life and sheep raising. In 1901 he purchased 1,000 head of choice Merino sheep and the following year he moved them to San Joaquin County, making his camp in Corral Hollow, west of Tracy. Year by year he has successfully carried on sheep raising, herding his flocks in the Delta and on the West Side section of Contra Costa, San Joaquin and Stanislaus counties. He owns 8,000 acres of choice range land near Patterson, as well as a desirable farm and range in Calaveras County, about seventy-five miles east of Stockton; the latter place is used for resting his flocks when on their annual migration to and from the High Sierras and his West Side range.

The marriage of Mr. Tryon united him with Miss Mabel Alley, daughter of Mrs. Marie Alley of Stockton, who came to California from Chicago, Ill., in 1911. Her father, Curtiss Alley, a prominent insurance man, passed away in Stockton in 1921, aged sixty-nine. Fraternaly, Mr. Tryon is a member of the B. P. O. Elks, No. 218, of Stockton.

HENRY CHARLES SCHMIDT.—An enterprising rancher who has naturally attained to very substantial success, is Henry Charles Schmidt, the proprietor of a choice Delta farm of nearly ninety-nine acres, on Upper Roberts Island. He was born at Elmshorn, Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, on December 29, 1862, the son of Claus and Elsbeth (Wickhorst) Schmidt, the former a member of the German National Guards, in which he served from 1848 to 1852, and was so wounded that he was eventually pensioned by the government.

Henry C. Schmidt, the sixth oldest of their ten children, was twenty-three years old when he started for America on the S. S. India, taking twenty days to cross the Atlantic, half of that time in such a storm that the vessel almost foundered. Finally, however, they reached New York on March 28, 1886, and soon afterward our subject greeted his brother Adolph, and other friends, in Nebraska City, Neb., to which state they had preceded him, and there he worked at farming for three years. On the third day of March, in 1889, he arrived in California, and here he has been, with the exception of the time spent in visiting his native land. He went direct to the Kidd Ranch, on Union Island, and worked there for a month, and then he was employed by the Glasgow Land Company, and three months later took a job on the St. Catherine Ranch, where he found steady employment for a year and a quarter. He then went to the West Side and farmed at Tracy and Vernalis, and during the plowing season he returned to Roberts Island, where by hard work he made a start. In 1899, he bought what is now a well-developed ranch, but was then a virtual swamp, about half covered with tule and willows. He had to go through years upon years of clearing and grubbing and gradual developing, but he finally won success by hard work and thrift. He has not only prospered with his own lands, but has been able to cultivate adjacent lands as well.

On June 27, 1897, Mr. Schmidt was married to Miss Anna Engel, a daughter of Fred and Margaret (Jurgensen) Engel, pioneers of Roberts Island, a gifted lady who was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, on July 11, 1878, and in April, 1889, was brought to Stockton by her parents. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt. Henry first saw the light on Roberts Island on May 17, 1898, and after graduating from school, became a rancher. Fred was born on June 24, 1899, finished his schooling and associated himself in ranching with his brother, Henry. Elsie; Alvina; Henrietta died in infancy; Freda died June 1, 1917, from the effects of accidental burning, at the age of thirteen. Otto and Marie are in school. About four years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt completed a lovely home on their ranch, which is still the center of many enjoyable social affairs. In 1895, Mr. Schmidt made a trip back to Germany, taking four months for the journey and visit. He is a strong advocate of irrigation, and has developed a model and economical system of his own. He is serving his ninth year as trustee of the Fairchild school district. In 1896 he was naturalized at Stockton, and has since been a Republican. He is a director of Levee District No. 544, and is now serving his second term. Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt belong to the Lutheran Church.

OTTO E. SANDMAN.—Among Stockton's native sons of whom the city is justly proud is Otto E. Sandman, prominent in military circles for many years and district manager for Cyrus Peirce & Company, bond and investment brokers of New York, Chicago and San Francisco. He was born on May 4, 1890, a son of Peter N. and Minnie (Amon) Sandman, the former a native of Denmark and the latter born in Illinois. Otto completed his course in the Stockton high school in 1908 and then he entered the University of California at Berkeley, graduating in 1912 with the degree of B. S., he having devoted his attention to the study of electrical and hydraulic engineering. While attending the university Mr. Sandman was captain of the University Cadets; was a member of the baseball and football teams; and also served as president of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. After he finished college he returned to Stockton and entered the engineering department of the Western States Gas and Electric Co., as superintendent of designing and construction work, continuing in that department until 1919, when he was placed in charge of the bond department and remained in that department until severing his connection with the concern.

The military record of Mr. Sandman is interesting. In 1912 he assisted in organizing Battery C, First California Field Artillery, N. G. C. When the trouble started on the Mexican border in the summer of 1916, Battery C was called for duty and he went as first lieutenant of the battery when they were stationed at Nogales, Arizona. In June, 1917, following the entrance of the United States into the World War, Mr. Sandman with Battery C, was sent to the Presidio at San Francisco for duty. Battery C became a unit of the 143rd Field Artillery, U. S. A. He was later sent to Fort Sill, Okla., where he attended the School of Fire, and in August, 1917, was commissioned captain of field artillery. Returning to California he was stationed at Camp Kearney as adjutant to Brigadier-General Lyon, commanding the 65th Artillery Brigade of the 40th Division. In April, 1918, Mr. Sandman was detailed to special duty in the air service, and was soon sent overseas in command of the 135th Aero Squadron and stationed at Toul, France, with the second army, A. E. F., until the armistice was signed. This squadron had the distinction of being the first Liberty motored squadron to cross the German lines. He then was returned to the United States and was discharged at Camp Kearney in June, 1919, having served two years. Returning to Stockton he resumed his position with the Western States Gas & Electric Company, and remained there until forming his present connections with Cyrus Peirce & Company.

The marriage of Otto Sandman in December, 1917, united him with Miss Mildred King, daughter of Harry E. and Hattie A. King, born in Stockton and a representative of one of the pioneer families of the state, for her grandfather was Edward I. Keep, founder of the Globe Iron Works and pioneer resident of Stockton, where he established his home and headquarters. Mr. and Mrs. Sandman have two sons, George King and Edward Eldridge. Mr. Sandman is a member of the Anteros Club; the Yosemite Club, Stockton Golf and Country Club, Mokelumne Club; belongs to San Joaquin lodge of Masons; the Scottish Rite Consistory; and to Ben Ali Temple,

A. A. O. N. M. S., in Sacramento, and in his daily life exemplifies the teachings of this ancient order. He assisted in organizing the Karl Ross Post of the American Legion at Stockton, served two terms on its executive committee; also for a similar period as a member of the state executive committee of the American Legion. He was elected a member of the board of freeholders for drafting the new city charter and also a member of the grand jury of San Joaquin County. Mr. Sandman is an alert, enterprising and progressive business man who has won success through his own industry and ability and is a champion of all movements that have for their aim the upbuilding of his native city.

CLAUDE R. VAN KEUREN.—For many years Claude R. Van Keuren has been recognized throughout Central California territory as one of the widely experienced engineers of the West. He was born in McKean County, Pa., on October 7, 1886, the son of Herbert G. and Mary (Harrington) Van Keuren, his father a native of New York state, whose ancestors had settled there in 1628; his mother, a native of Ireland, came to America at the age of four years. Herbert G. Van Keuren was a student of medicine in the Academy in Buffalo, N. Y., but after fitting himself for that profession, he decided, about 1871, to enter the oil industry at Bradford fields in Northern Pennsylvania and has followed that line every since. His first experience was as an oil worker at Bradford fields; then he was transferred to Weldwood fields, then to McDonald, where he has become superintendent of the Willet & Paul Oil Company with outstanding success. A brother of our subject, Thomas H. Van Keuren, is at present general superintendent of the Ohio Oil Company of the state of Kentucky, located at Bowling Green, where he resides with his family.

The education of Claude R. Van Keuren was obtained in the public schools of McDonald, Pa., where he continued until he was sixteen years of age; leaving school to enter the employ of an oil company as a roustabout; he spent about six years in the West Virginia fields, as well as the fields in Ohio and Pennsylvania, and in 1908 decided to come West. Arriving in California, Mr. Van Keuren made his way to the Coalinga field in Fresno County and found work with the California Ltd. doing odd jobs, which occupied him for one year, when he returned East and worked for the South Pennsylvania Oil Company in Ohio and Pennsylvania. In 1910 he returned to the Golden State, thoroughly satisfied to settle down and make this state his permanent home, and in 1911 removed to Tulare County and was employed by the Standard Oil Company as an oiler in the pump station on the main line north to the Richmond refineries. Gradually working up, he became an engineer at Kimberlin, Kern County, and early in 1914 was advanced to the position of chief engineer, where he spent four years to the entire satisfaction both of himself and his employers. In May, 1918, he was placed in charge of the Tracy plant as chief engineer and he successfully carried this responsibility, both for the interests of the company and for his own advancement.

The marriage of Mr. Van Keuren united him with Miss Nellie Oliver, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Oliver, residents of McDonald, Pa., and

Mr. and Mrs. Van Keuren made an extended trip to their old homes in Pennsylvania by automobile. Leaving Tracy July 17, 1922, they visited in Pennsylvania, and incidentally visited the oil fields in Wyoming, Montana, Texas, Arkansas, New Mexico, Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, West Virginia, Indiana and other states. Arriving in Tracy September 18, 1922, Mr. Van Keuren was assigned to the Vernalis station on the pipe line pumping plant of the Standard Oil Company's main pump-line from Bakersfield to Point Richmond, where he resumed his position as chief engineer, entering upon his new station September 26, 1922. Mr. Van Keuren is identified with the Safety Engineers Society of California and is a member of the Scottish Rite of the Masonic order in Bakersfield, and of the Grand Fraternity of Philadelphia, Pa.

WILLIAM J. THOMAYER.—A native son of California who for more than thirty-eight years of an active life has participated in the changes through which this great state has passed, is William J. Thomayer, superintendent of the office and shipping of the Pacific Fruit Exchange of the Lodi section. His parents, Matthew and Catherine Thomayer, were both natives of Germany, who came to America in the early '50s and to California via Panama and located in San Joaquin County near Lathrop, where William J. first saw the light of day on April 2, 1863. His father was a miner by occupation. Both parents passed away when William J. was a child of three years and he was reared in the family of Dr. Stephenson, formerly of Woodbridge.

William J. received his schooling in Visalia, Tulare County, Cal., and his first experience in the packing and shipping of fruit was in 1883 with the Woodhead Porter Brothers and Company of Los Angeles, commission merchants and shippers; he then entered the employ of the late E. T. Earl, who was one of the pioneers in that line in California. For nine years he was thus employed, operating in Riverside County in the winter and northern California in the summer. He next took a trip to Salt Lake City, where he engaged in the tea and coffee business for one year, after which he returned to California, where he re-entered the fruit packing industry, engaging with the Porter Brothers' Company at Fillmore, Cal. Upon coming to Lodi in 1899, Mr. Thomayer was first associated with the Producers' Fruit Company, then the Valley Fruit Company and then with the Frank H. Buck Company. For the past few years he has had charge of the office and shipping of the Pacific Fruit Exchange. When he became associated with the fruit industry, thirty-eight years ago, there was only one packing house in Lodi, and now there are many of them. By his long association with this industry, Mr. Thomayer has become one of the best-informed men on fruit packing and shipping in the valley and his reputation for square dealing has proven a great asset to him and his employers. He is also a vineyardist with many years' experience.

Mr. Thomayer's marriage united him with Miss Carrie Baylis Edgerly of Kansas and they have one daughter, Mrs. A. D. Campbell. Mr. Thomayer is a member of the Lodi Parlor of the N. S. G. W., No. 18, and of Lodi Lodge of Masons, and has passed through all the chairs. For four years he was inspector for Masonic district No. 26.

MRS. SUSAN M. GANN.—On the roll of honored pioneer women of San Joaquin County appears the name of Mrs. Susan M. Gann, who has been a resident of the county for sixty-two years and for the past twelve years has made her home at 2173 East Market Street, Stockton. Her birth occurred in St. Augustine County, Texas, on March 29, 1847, the daughter of Erasmus Hennington and Julia Ann (Fry) Elkins. Erasmus Elkins was born in Tennessee in 1822, but while still a young child was taken by his parents to Alabama, where he was reared and educated. From Alabama he removed to St. Augustine County, Texas, where in 1842 he was married to Miss Julia Fry, a native of Texas and a descendant of an early Colonial family of Quaker stock who had settled in Pennsylvania in early days. Mrs. Elkins passed away April 20, 1847, leaving two children, Susan M. and Charles W. One year later, Erasmus Elkins started West for California with ox teams, leaving his two children with their grandparents. Mr. Elkins stopped in San Jose for a short time, then came to Stockton and engaged in freighting to Sonora, which he followed until 1859, when he returned to Texas for his two children. They made the trip via Panama, landing in San Francisco through the Golden Gate, and the family arrived in Stockton in 1860. In 1858, Mr. Elkins had married Miss Nancy Gann, a daughter of John Gann and a niece of Nick Gann, both prominent in the early history of Stockton. In 1870 Mr. Elkins left San Joaquin County and removed to Santa Cruz, where he farmed for a couple of years; then moved to Lompoc, Cal., where he passed away at the age of eighty-six, his wife living until she was ninety-six years old. Two children were born of the latter union; Iris Benson residing in Sacramento, and Mrs. Lucy A. Amon, who died in Stockton, January 1, 1923.

On August 24, 1862, at Stockton, Susan M. Elkins was married to William T. Gann, born in Jackson County, Mo., in 1840, where he was reared to young manhood on his father's farm. In 1859 he crossed the plains with ox teams, the party being captained by his uncle, Thomas Gann. The party was composed of the families of Thomas Gann, M. H. Harles, Mr. Miller, Mr. Russell, Mrs. Nancy Clark, and John Gann and they all settled near Farmington, Cal. William T. Gann's sister Rosana was the wife of Ed. M. Drais and died here. The young married people began their life on a farm near Stockton, where they lived until 1870, when they moved to Calaveras County, where they bought land near Felix and for over forty years made this their home, engaging in stock raising and general farming. Mr. and Mrs. Gann reared nine children: Mary C. now Mrs. Terance McArdle, resides in Stockton and they have two children; Annie E. is assisting her mother in presiding over the home; Lewis M is married and has three children and they reside in Stockton; William B. has charge of the home ranch in Calaveras County; Lucy B. is now the wife of Bert Carthy and they have two children and reside at Melones, Cal.; Charles A. is the partner of his brother on the ranch near Felix; J. Henry is married and has one son and they reside in Hanford; Maude E. is the wife of Steven Simone; they have one son and reside at Kerman; and Susan E. is the wife of Virgil Berry, and they reside in Stockton.

Twelve years ago Mr. and Mrs. Gann returned to Stockton to spend the balance of their days and in

Mrs S. M. Gann

January, 1912, Mr. Gann passed away at the age of seventy-one years. Mrs. Gann retains a life interest in the ranch in Calaveras County where so many useful years of her life were spent and owns the residence located at 2173 East Market Street, Stockton. Mrs. Gann recalls the journey from San Francisco to Stockton in 1860 when they traveled on the river boat Clara Crow and the city of Stockton was then a mere village. She enjoys splendid health and is interested in the affairs of the day, and in the evening of life is surrounded by loving children and grandchildren who administer to her comfort and happiness in every way.

JOHN C. KELLER.—An aggressive business man of Lodi, whose parents were pioneers of California, is John C. Keller, a member of the firm of Keller & Robinson, stationers and booksellers, located at 27 South School Street. A native son of California, he was born on his father's ranch west of Lodi on October 6, 1888, a son of John and Doretta (Brack) Keller. His father was a native of Ohio, who came to California across the plains about 1863 and here settled on a ranch six miles from Lodi and engaged in farming pursuits until his death in 1909. He was a member of the Woodbridge lodge of Masons. His mother, a daughter of Jacob Brack, a San Joaquin County pioneer, makes her home in Lodi.

John C. Keller was educated in the public and high schools of Lodi. In 1914 he formed a partnership with Charles R. Guggolz and conducted the New Washington Market for six years; then he sold his interest in the business to his partner in the summer of 1920 and then for about eighteen months was engaged in the real estate business in Lodi. In September, 1922, with a partner, H. E. Robinson, he opened a stationery and book store on South School Street, a most central location, where they are meeting with deserved success.

The marriage of Mr. Keller united him with Jessie R. Todd, a native of Illinois, and they are the parents of one child, Jane. In national politics he is a Democrat and ably supports the principles of that party. His fraternal relations are with Stockton lodge No. 218, Elks; the Lodi Fraternal Order of Eagles; Lodi lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star, in which he is past patron; he is a member of Lodi Parlor, N. S. G. W. In his local activities he is serving as chairman of the board of trustees of the Lodi grammar school, and during his term they completed two new schools. He takes pride in advancing measures for the development and progress of Lodi and the immediate vicinity.

EDWARD P. FOLTZ.—The legal fraternity of Stockton and San Joaquin County is ably represented in Edward P. Foltz, who has taken a leading part in the public affairs of the city and county for more than twenty-five years. Mr. Foltz is a native son, born in Linden, San Joaquin County, December 8, 1870, the son of Samuel J. and Emma (Bigelow) Foltz, the former a native of Virginia, while the mother was born in Wisconsin. The father, who is still living at the age of eighty-four, is one of the county's worthy pioneers, having come to California in the early days of 1854, following the trade of a blacksmith up to the time of his retirement from active business. He now resides in Stockton, the mother being deceased. He can recall with interest many of the happenings of that early period, when land sold for $2.50 per acre and the present day development was not thought of.

Edward P. Foltz attended the Linden district school and then taught school there for a year. Entering the University of California, he graduated from that institution with the Ph. B. degree in 1894 and then taught school at Linden for a year. He then began his professional course at Hastings Law School at San Francisco, a department of the University of California, graduating in 1897 with the degree of LL.B., and in the same year he was admitted to the bar. Not long after this he opened up his office in Stockton for the practice of law and since that time he has been closely identified with the legal, political and public life of the community. He served for a term as referee in bankruptcy, and for four years was chairman of the Republican County Central Committee. His exceptional ability as a lawyer being recognized, Mr. Foltz was elected district attorney of San Joaquin County in January, 1911, being re-elected and occupying this responsible post until January, 1919. During his official career, with the assistance of able deputies, he established a record that would be difficult to duplicate. At present he is a member of the firm of Foltz, Rendon & Wallace, with offices in the Wilhoit Building.

During the World War, Mr. Foltz took an active and prominent part in all the war work, and was chairman of the San Joaquin branch of the State Council of Defense, and even after the armistice he continued to serve as chairman of the county readjustment committee, handling the many post-war problems that came up. In fraternal circles Mr. Foltz is popular in the ranks of the Elks and the Woodmen of the World, and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the San Joaquin County Bar Association.

WALTER HANSEL.—A representative of an old pioneer family, Walter Hansel, under the firm name of Hansel & Ortman, has established a large business as a distributor of automobiles at 211 Hunter Street, Stockton. Mr. Hansel is a native son of California, born at Stockton, February 7, 1878, the son of Joseph and Emma (Dressman) Hansel, the former a native of New York and the latter of Berlin, Germany. Both parents have passed away. His father came to California around Cape Horn and settled in Stockton in the early '50s and operated a wagon and carriage shop on North Hunter Street, being a pioneer in that business in Stockton. He was active in local affairs and was a member of the old volunteer fire department. They were the parents of seven children; three are living: Walter; Emma E. is Mrs. E. E. Aldrich; Bertha is Mrs. E. L. Ferguson. Four children have passed away: Joseph, Henry, Mrs. Anne Stroupe and Dr. C. E. Hansel.

Walter was educated in the public schools of Stockton and then for three years worked in the blacksmith shop of L. Salbach. In 1898 he entered the employ of A. H. Wright, who conducted a bicycle store and had the first automobile agency in Stockton, selling the Oldsmobile, National and Stanley. In 1901 Mr. Hansel opened a bicycle shop with a twenty-foot front on South San Joaquin Street; at this time Charles Merrill became his partner in the business and the firm was known as Merrill & Hansel; later L. Salbach was taken into the firm and it was known as Merrill, Hansel & Salbach. In 1908 the partnership of Hansel & Ortman was formed, taking over the interests of Merrill and Salbach, and in time they erected the first reinforced concrete building in Stockton, becoming agents for the Reo and Cadillac motor cars. In 1914 the new garage was erected at 211 North Hunter Street, which they still occupy. When they started in business in 1908 it was valued at $6,000 and is now worth half a million dollars. In 1918, before the line was cut up among so many dealers, they were the largest buyers of Goodyear tires in the United States. They employ seventy-five people, doing the largest business of any firm of its kind in the northern part of California, and are distributors for the Cadillac and Oldsmobile in the counties of San Joaquin, Tuolumne, Calaveras and Amador.

The marriage of Mr. Hansel united him with Miss Nellie Curtis, a native of Kansas, and they are the parents of one child, Walter, Jr. Fraternaly, Mr. Hansel is a member of Stockton lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E.; Charity lodge I. O. O. F.; Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.; and Independent Order of Foresters. In 1920 he built a beautiful residence on the corner of Stockton and Acacia streets, where he resides with his family.

JAMES S. TRIOLO.—In a life of well-directed business activity, resulting in success, James S. Triolo has become well known as a produce shipper of San Joaquin County. A native of Illinois, he was born in Chicago, October 12, 1883, and at the early age of fourteen began working in the produce business in Chicago, packing for the firm of Porter Bros. Company on South Water street. His father was a large importer of Palermo, Sicily, and when James was seventeen years old he went to that city and worked for his father for three years, packing and shipping lemons and oranges. In 1902 he came to California, accompanied by his father and a brother, and for three years was associated with them in the Ontario district of Southern California, packing and shipping oranges and lemons. At the end of three years he removed to San Francisco and engaged in the commission business until 1912, when he settled in Stockton and established his own business. He represents White Bros. & Crum of Salt Lake City; Dawson Bros. Company of Denver, Colo. He buys wine grapes for Descalzie Company of Pittsburgh, also for L. Gallucci Company, a large Eastern firm, and for Shafton & Company of Chicago, buying all kinds of produce direct from the grower and paying cash for same and shipping over 1,000 carloads yearly from Stockton and vicinity. He maintains offices in Sacramento, Walnut Grove and Turlock. He is an ardent booster for San Joaquin County, which he considers the richest and most productive county in the world, and which he believes to be only at the threshold of its productivity and prosperity.

The marriage of Mr. Triolo united him with Miss Ada Crowley, a native of Wisconsin, whose father is a prominent lumberman of that state, and they are the parents of two children: James S., Jr., and Beatrice E. Mr. Triolo is a member of Westgate Lodge No. 335, F. & A. M., of Los Angeles, Pyramid No. 3, Sciots, of Sacramento, and the Sacramento Lodge of Elks. He is eminently public-spirited in all matters that affect the general welfare, and is held in the highest esteem.

NOAH HOVARD.—For eighteen years Noah Hovard has been a resident of San Joaquin County, and his time and energies have been devoted to farming interests, more especially to the culture of grapes. By close application to his business and well directed energy he has gained success so that he is now living retired from active business cares, residing at 821 Central Avenue, Lodi. He was born in Gloucestershire, England, July 3, 1862, a son of Thomas and Ann Hovard, also natives of England. Thomas Hovard was a farmer by occupation. There were six children in the family: Sarah, John, Percival, Andrew, Noah, the subject of this sketch, and Maria. After a grammar school education, at the age of sixteen Noah Hovard was employed at the butcher's trade in England, working until 1882 when he came to the United States and first settled at Gilman, Ill., where he worked on farms for a year and a half. Then he removed to Jefferson County, Neb., and again took up farming working for wages until 1885 when he homesteaded a quarter section in Hayes County, which he farmed for ten years, then was obliged to relinquish his claim on account of the continued crop failures; he then returned to Jefferson County, Neb., and for another ten years farmed leased properties.

On October 3, 1889, occurred the first marriage of Mr. Hovard, which united him with Miss Olive McAdow, a native of Nodaway County, Mo., a daughter of Dr. J. S. and Malinda (Brown) McAdow, both parents natives of Kentucky, where her father was a practicing physician and surgeon. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hovard; Herbert entered the World War with the first contingent that was drafted from Stockton and with the Ninety-first Division was sent to Camp Lewis; then he was transferred to Company E, Fifty-ninth Infantry, Fourth Division, and on October 15, 1918, was killed in action in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. He was a member of the Masonic lodge. Alice, Mrs. Jack Ross, resides in Stockton; John Hovard, who makes his home with his parents at Lodi, participated in the World War as a member of Company A, 364th Infantry, Ninety-first Division, took part in the various engagements with his command after he arrived in France, and when the armistice was signed returned to the United States and was honorably discharged; Grace, Mrs. John Hagel, lives in Sacramento County.

In 1904 the family left Nebraska for California and upon their arrival in the Golden State settled near Lodi where Mr. Hovard purchased a twenty-acre ranch three-fourths of a mile south of the Alpine district school; this ranch was set to a vineyard which was two years old at the time of purchase. Here Mrs. Hovard passed away in 1916, and in March, 1920, Mr. Hovard sold his ranch and moved to Lodi. The second marriage of Mr. Hovard occurred on May 30, 1917, in Stockton, and united him with Mrs. Dollie (Mason) Keen, a native of Illinois. Mrs. Hovard removed from Illinois to Utah and then to California, arriving here about the time that her husband did. Mr. Hovard is a Democrat in politics and for eight years was clerk of the school board of the Alpine district. Fraternaly he is a member of the Knights and Ladies of Security, which he joined twenty-three years ago.

JAMES E. NELSON, M. D.—Since becoming a resident of Lodi in 1905, Dr. James E. Nelson has witnessed the phenomenal growth of this section of San Joaquin County with a great deal of interest, and his influence as a physician and as a business man has had much to do with the actual development of the community. He came here when Lodi had a population of only 1,300 and began the practice of medicine, continuing at his chosen calling until he now is recognized as one of the leading physicians of Lodi and San Joaquin County. A native of Pennsylvania, he was born on a farm near Volant, Lawrence County, May 23, 1879. His education was received, first in Volant, and then at a school in Rogers, Ohio. In 1901 he was graduated from Westminster College at New Wilmington, Pa., with the degree of B. S., and four years later he received his M. D. degree from the medical department of the University of Missouri at Columbia. During the month of September, 1905, he arrived in California, located in Lodi in the Bank of Lodi building on West Pine Street, and began the practice of his profession. With the passing of the years success has crowned his efforts and he now enjoys a large practice. He is a member of the County and State Medical societies and of the American Medical Association.

The marriage of Dr. Nelson united him with Miss Grace Belle Mudd, a native of Missouri. They are parents of two children, Margaret B. and William Raoul. Dr. Nelson is a Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, holding membership in Ben Ali Temple in Sacramento. In civic affairs Dr. Nelson was instrumental in organizing the Rotary Club in Lodi and served as its president the first year. He is also a member of the board of trustees of the Lodi Union High School and of the Lodi board of health and a member of San Joaquin board of health of the local health district of which he was one of the organizers. To show his faith in this community he has invested in country real estate and owns an eighty-acre vineyard east of Lodi. While a student in college he was active in athletics and was an expert golf player. Dr. Nelson enjoys fishing above all other outdoor sports and each summer he and Mrs. Nelson seek some favored spot in the mountains where trout abound and they have visited nearly every part of the state where trout fishing is to be found. Dr. Nelson is one of the real "boosters" for this favored section of the San Joaquin Valley and in his adopted city he is always found ready and willing to lend his aid in its development.

PAUL STURLA.—As a successful orchardist Paul Sturla has demonstrated the desirability and productivity of the Lodi district; from a small beginning he has become a prosperous and well-to-do citizen. A native of Genoa, Italy, he was born on May 18, 1846, and was only fourteen years of age when he landed in New Orleans, where he had a brother, Joseph; but on landing found his brother had just died. The following year he came to California via Panama. He followed various kinds of employment for a while, then worked on the construction of the Central Pacific until he was made section foreman at Oreana, Nev., continuing there eleven months, then at Sunol for a year, when he was sent to Altamont, where he remained eleven years. He then came to Lodi and was section foreman for the same company for seven years. Meanwhile, he purchased a tract of land containing twenty-two acres, in the southwest part of town, now in the city limits, and engaged in farming, clearing the land and planting it to orchard and vines. From time to time he purchased more land until he now owns forty-eight acres set to all kinds of fruits and thirty-five acres of Tokay and Zinfandel grapes. The fruit trees were all planted by Mr. Sturla, besides there are many shade and ornamental trees; also a vegetable garden and a few acres in alfalfa. He sold three acres to the city of Lodi on which now stands the Needham school building, a new and modern structure. Mr. Sturla has recently cut off six blocks from his ranch and has subdivided the Sturla school district extending from Lodi Street on the north to Sturla Street on the south and from Quimby Street on the west to Church Street on the east. Each block averages twelve lots 50x140 feet. The lots are sold with the understanding that a certain type of residence shall be built thereon; there are now fourteen fine residences on the property.

The marriage of Mr. Sturla united him with Miss Louisa Mandragola, a native of Genoa, Italy, who came to California with her parents, John and Theresa Mandragola. Mr. and Mrs. Sturla are the parents of five children: Tillie is Mrs. L. Sanguinetti of Lodi and has two children, Melvin and Alben; Mamie is the wife of Frank Smith of Lodi and they have one son, Gerald; Fred is married and has one son, Alfred. He is with the Buick automobile agency in Stockton. Joseph is married and has two daughters, La Verle and Maxine; Eva resides at home with her parents. Mrs. Sturla has indeed been a helpmate to her husband, assisting him capably in fulfilling his ambitions.

JOSEPH M. CAMPODONICO.—A prominent business man of Stockton who is also a native Californian is Joseph M. Campodonico, a successful druggist and an influential banker. He was born in San Francisco, Cal., on October 21, 1876; his father, a vegetable farmer in the Visitacion Valley south of San Francisco; there our subject was reared and educated, finishing his education in the schools of San Francisco and St. Ignatius College and graduated from the University of California in pharmacy with the class of 1896. While attending the university he became a prominent athlete and was a member of the university baseball team and the handball team; later he became a member of the San Francisco Olympic Club and was active in athletics, taking part in cross country races, etc. As a boy he was apprenticed to learn the drug business with G. L. Carroll, a druggist of San Francisco, and after his graduation from the university he opened the Central Pharmacy on North Beach, conducting same successfully until the fire of 1906, when he was burned out. He then entered the Bank of Italy as a clerk and while there heard of an opening in the drug business in Stockton, and on November 23, 1906, formed a partnership with P. H. Denton, and purchased the Stockton Drug Company, where they built up a large and lucrative business. Mr. Campodonico has great faith in the future of Stockton and owns valuable business property in the city.

At one time Mr. Campodonico was associated with others in the ownership of a large tract of land in the San Joaquin Delta district and successfully farmed the same. He is a large stockholder in the Bank of Italy and a member of the advisory board of the Stockton branch. Mr. Campodonico was elected a member of the board of freeholders to draft the new charter for the city of Stockton. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the State and National Pharmaceutical Associations, the Stockton Golf and Country Club, the Stockton Italian Club, the Elks No. 218, and Stanford Parlor N. S. G. W., No. 76, of San Francisco.

FRED J. MCKAIN.—Coming to Stockton with his parents when but four years of age, Fred J. McKain has spent practically his entire life in this city, and he is well known in business circles as assistant manager of the Simpson-Gray Lumber Company, a position he is most capably filling. He was born at Rising Sun, Ind., June 17, 1871, of the union of James and Maria Rebecca (James) McKain, who were also natives of the Hoosier State, and both are now deceased. In 1851 the father came to California via Panama, locating at Stockton, where for a time he followed the plasterer's trade and then returned to the East, but in 1874 he again took up his residence in Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. McKain became the parents of six children, four of whom grew up. Edward was a banker in Merced for twenty-five years, then became a merchant in Berkeley, where he died at the age of fifty-five years; Kate, Mrs. W. R. Stone, resides in Stockton; Reuben died in Stockton, still a young man, and Fred J. is our subject.

Fred McKain attended school in Stockton till the age of eighteen years, when he started out in the world on his own account. He entered the Government mail service as letter carrier, filling that position for two years, and was general delivery clerk for one year. On resigning that position he became connected with the Stockton Ice & Fuel Company, with which he remained for six months, and on October 2, 1892, entered the employ of the Stockton Lumber Company, conducted by Joseph Fife, and for ten years was with that concern, during which period he gained a thorough knowledge of the lumber business. He next joined the Scott-Van Arsdale Lumber Company, which was later purchased by the McCloud Lumber Company, and his identification with those two firms covered five years. On the expiration of that period, in association with W. F. Barnickol, F. L. Balkwill, Walter Vincent and R. A. Bacheiler, he organized the Sterling Iron Works, but sold his interest in that undertaking in 1910 and became a clerk in the county treasurer's office under W. C. Neumiller, where he continued until January, 1913, when he was made assistant manager of the Simpson-Gray Lumber Company. He brought to the office broad experience, a comprehensive knowledge of the lumber industry and marked capability and is doing all in his power to promote the success of the enterprise. He has great faith in the future of his city and has made judicious investments in real estate.

Mr. McKain was married in Stockton to Miss Susie Plummer, who was born in Woodbridge, San Joaquin County. She acquired her education in the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge and is a member of one of the pioneer families of this part of the state. Mr. McKain is prominent in club and fraternal circles, belonging to the Rotary Club and to the Hoo-Hoos, the latter organization being composed of lumbermen. He is a Mason in high standing and is a member of San Joaquin lodge, No. 19, F. & A. M., of which he is a past master; is a member of Stockton chapter, No. 82, R. A. M.; Stockton Commandery, No. 8, K. T., of which he is past commander; is also a Scottish Rite Mason and belongs to Ahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Oakland. He also belongs to Stockton lodge, No. 11, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand, and to Stockton lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E.

SALMA SEAVER STROBRIDGE.—In any community there is no project of greater importance to the prosperity of its citizens than the establishment and continuance of a well-managed bank. Such institutions require for the management men of modern education, practical training and wide experience. These qualifications form a part of the endowment of Salma Seaver Strobridge, whose efficiency as cashier of the Lockeford branch of the Union Safe Deposit Bank of Stockton has been of distinct aid to the citizens of Lockeford. He was born at Goodland, Newton County, Ind., on May 26, 1882, a son of Alanson S. and Marietta (Morgan) Strobridge. The father, Alanson S. Strobridge, was a native of Vermont, and was the nephew of the late J. H. Strobridge, the great railroad builder, who drove the last utility spike on the Central Pacific at Corinne, near Ogden, Utah, in 1869, permanently linking the East and West. A. S. Strobridge came to California via the Isthmus in 1868; later he returned to Indiana and became the foreman of a large stock farm, where he remained eleven years. He then returned to California and settled at Fillmore, where he engaged in farming, more particularly fruit raising. There he remained until his removal to Bakersfield in 1899. At Bakersfield he engaged in the cattle business until 1904, when he removed to Wasco, Kern County, where he lived until a short time before he died. He then went to Berkeley, and there died in 1907. The mother passed away at Fillmore at the age of forty-five years. Two sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Strobridge, our subject and N. R. Strobridge, who resides in Oakland.

Salma S. Strobridge began his education in the Fillmore grammar school and completed it with a course in the Stockton Business College, graduating in 1902. After leaving school his first position was with Bruml Bros. as delivery and warehouse boy at Lockeford, at which he worked for three years; he later became head clerk and cashier and remained with them until 1913, when he organized the Lockeford Mercantile Company and served as secretary-treasurer of this company until it was dissolved in 1917. Mr. Strobridge then took a pleasure trip throughout the East, visiting many of the largest cities. Returning to Lockeford he became foreman for J. W. Montgomery's warehouse and in February of 1919 succeeded J. J. Priestly as cashier of the Lockeford branch of the Union Safe Deposit Bank of Stockton.

This bank was burglarized in 1914, but the job was a failure owing to the fact that the explosion failed to blow the door of the vault open sufficiently to allow a man to enter. However, one of the burglars succeeded in reaching in with his arm far enough to secure two $20 rolls of silver dollars. On another shelf ten inches below was a bag containing $1,500 in gold which he was unable to secure. No one was ever captured for this job. On the night of January 19, 1921, this bank was again burglarized. This time it was a huge success, the vault being blown entirely open. The burglars gained access and not only availed themselves of about $2,000 in cash, but also jimmed twenty-one safe deposit boxes, securing from them about $8,000 in Liberty bonds. No one was ever captured for this job. The last robbery suffered by this bank was a daylight holdup by a lone unmasked bandit on December 29th of the same year. The bandit entered the bank shortly before 11 o'clock and, leveling a six-shooter at Mr. Strobridge, ordered him into the vault and locked him in; then after helping himself to the cash on the counter departed. He was observed by other men on the street who secured his automobile number and notified the sheriff. The bandit was located at Paradise Cut, between Stockton and Tracy, and in a battle which ensued was killed by Deputy Sheriff Jess Wheatly, who was also badly wounded. Mr. Strobridge had anticipated being held up, and had provided himself with a flashlight and a means of removing the screws from the combination. These he kept inside the vault, and as a result of this forethought he extricated himself from his uncomfortable position in a few minutes and emerged from the vault unhurt.

On November 20, 1907 Mr. Strobridge was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Hurd Stacks, born near Lockeford, the daughter of Thomas J. and Mary J. (Hickey) Stacks, the former now deceased. There is one son in the Strobridge family, Gerald S. Strobridge. Mr. Strobridge is a Republican and in November, 1922, was elected a member of the County Central Committee for his district of San Joaquin County. He has been a member and clerk of the Lockeford school since 1918 and takes an active interest in educational matters. Fraternally he is a member and past chancellor of Vesper Lodge No. 94, K. of P. of Lockeford; and belongs to the D. O. K. K. at Stockton, and Court Mokelumne No. 136, F. of A., at Lodi.

Mr. Strobridge is public spirited and enters heartily into all movements for the betterment of conditions in general in the county.

MRS. LUCY (LOVE) VOMBURG.—One who enters actively into fraternal and social life in San Joaquin County, being in thorough harmony with the growth and progress of Lodi and environs, is Mrs. Lucy (Love) Vomburg, who was born and reared in Kentucky, and comes from a very distinguished family. She is a daughter of Colonel S. P. and Jane (McConnell) Love, the former born in Lincoln County, Ky., May 10, 1826. In 1846, in Garrard County, Ky., S. P. Love enlisted as a private, Captain Donovan commanding, and served in the Mexican War. He also served in the frontier trouble in Missouri, and later he was discharged at Buena Vista. In 1849 he moved to Muhlenberg County and married Miss Jane McConnell. In August of 1861, S. P. Love was commissioned lieutenant-colonel in the 11th Kentucky Infantry, under Colonel P. B. Hawkins. In May of 1863, Colonel Hawkins resigned and S. P. Love then became colonel of the regiment. He was engaged in the Battle of Shiloh and was in full pursuit of General Bragg's army; he took part in the siege of Knoxville, Tenn., and served under General Burnside in eastern Tennessee; he was also with Sherman's army from Ringgold to Atlanta, and was discharged on December 16, 1864. In 1897 he was called upon to help compile the history of the 11th Kentucky Infantry for the "History of the Union Regiments of Kentucky," and was of great assistance to the historian. He was the father of eleven children, namely: Mrs. Dan Mosley, John G. Love, Mrs. Edward L. Yonts, Mrs. Annie R. White, Mrs. H. F. Young, Mrs. George Gossett, Mrs. J. W. Vomburg, Mrs. Henry Nunan, Mrs. George A. Hillebert, Mrs. Henry Bruce Barkis, deceased, who was the first wife of Henry Bruce Barkis, whose biography appears elsewhere in this work; and Lucien T., deceased in 1896. Colonel Love passed away at Greenville, Ky., on March 26, 1903, and was buried with full military honors.

Lucy Love grew up in Kentucky and was well educated. In that state, also, she married Mr. J. W. Vomburg, late of Russellville, Logan County, Ky., where he was the proprietor of a meat market. Mr. Vomburg died, leaving his widow and three children: Joseph L., of Detroit, Mich; Harry L., of Los Angeles; and Nannie B., now a sophomore in the Lodi high school. Soon after her husband's death in Kentucky, Mrs. Lucy (Love) Vomburg, accompanied by her daughter, Nannie B., came out to Lodi, where she has since been housekeeper for Mr. Henry Bruce Barkis, her brother-in-law, whose first wife was Miss Fanny Love, an older sister. A favorite daughter of Kentucky, she was heartily welcomed to California, where she has become a leader in fraternal and social circles. She is a prominent member of Flora lodge of Rebekahs, No. 162, of Lodi; the Woman's Relief Corps; of Irena Dutton Tent, No. 37, Daughters of Civil War Veterans, and the Woman's Club of Lodi. She has won a host of friends who deeply appreciate her sterling worth and public-spirited efforts. As chairman of the refreshment committee of the W. R. C., she has gained the love and respect of all.

CHARLES H. NICEWONGER.—The career of Charles H. Nicewonger has been one of steady progress until he now holds the important and responsible position of manager of the San Joaquin Wharf & Warehouse Company. A native of Stockton, Cal., he was born on his father's ranch on French Camp road, four miles from Stockton, June 15, 1874. His father, Hays Nicewonger, was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., and came to California in the early '70s, where he secured work on the George H. Castle ranch east of Stockton; later purchasing property, he farmed for himself on the French Camp road and there he continuously resided until his death. He was a Civil War veteran, having served as a member of the Signal Corps from Pennsylvania, enlisting when nineteen years of age. He was a member of the G. A. R. post of Stockton. His brother, Levi Nicewonger, was supervisor of San Joaquin County from the Second district and was prominent in the politics of the city and county. Hays Nicewonger married Miss Cynthia Castle, a daughter of George H. Castle, a '49er of California who came across the plains with ox teams and farmed east of Stockton for many years. He served as sheriff of the county prior to Tom Cunningham. Mr. Nicewonger died in 1916, being survived by his widow. They were the parents of three children: Charles H., our subject; Cary H., of Palo Alto; and Mrs. Hattie H. Schneider, of Berkeley.

Charles H. was educated in the Castle school, the Fremont grammar and the Stockton high school, where he was graduated in 1894, after which he spent two years at Stanford University. Returning to Stockton he obtained employment as a clerk in a retail coal office; then was bookkeeper for Fred Ruhl Company; then with the River Express Company. For eight years he was with the California Navigation & Improvement Company as freight clerk, purser and bookkeeper; then for three years was bookkeeper with the Dickinson Guernsey Co., and then with Melone & Perry in the same capacity from 1908 until 1918. During 1918 he became the manager of the Delta Warehouse Co., operating two large warehouses, the first with a capacity of 35,000 tons and the second of 15,000 tons, storing grain and beans principally. In 1922 Mr. Nicewonger resigned and accepted a position with the San Joaquin Wharf & Warehouse Company, and on August 15, 1922, he moved the company's business to 12-14 West Weber Avenue, Mr. Nicewonger being secretary and treasurer of the company. His knowledge and experience are factors that have entered into the success of the business, which has made a steady growth since he assumed the managership.

Mr. Nicewonger's marriage united him with Miss Helen Crane, born in Ypsilanti, Mich.; and they are the parents of one son, Charles Robert. Fraternally, Mr. Nicewonger is a member of Charity Lodge, No. 6, I. O. O. F., having passed through all the chairs; and is past district deputy. He also belongs to Morning Star Lodge of Masons, No. 68, and the Ancient Egyptian Order of Sciots of Stockton.

CHARLES A. MURDOCH.—A native son of California and the son of a pioneer of the gold days, Charles A. Murdoch is the successful assistant foreman of construction for the Harris Manufacturing Company. He was born in Clements, San Joaquin County, on February 7, 1882, a son of William C. and Martha (Dimmock) Murdoch, both parents natives of Nova Scotia, Canada. His father came to California on one of the first trains to cross the continent after the completion of the railroad, and arrived in Stockton when it was a struggling city. His father worked on grain ranches throughout the valley, and with W. C. Miller followed sheep raising, driving sheep from Fresno to Carson City, Nev.; later he homesteaded a piece of land near Clements, and then purchased the old Gillies place consisting of 160 acres; later he bought the Bragg place of 160 acres adjoining and has farmed the whole acreage to grain; now in his seventy-seventh year he lives retired on the old home place at Clements, twenty-two miles east of Stockton, and still raises cattle, his specialty being shorthorn Durhams. He was a trustee of the Washington school in the early days and takes a lively interest in the affairs of the county in general. His family consists of five living children: Mrs. Alberta Pearson; Mrs. L. M. Sain; Mrs. Louise Brandt; Charles A., our subject; and Winfield C., all born in San Joaquin County and still living here. The mother passed away July 5, 1920, at the family home in Clements, aged sixty-eight years.

Charles A. acquired his education in the Washington school and was graduated from grammar school in 1897. After leaving school he learned the carpenter's trade and worked on the construction of dredges used in gold mining, for the Yuba Construction Company, helping to build the dredges at Jenny Lind and Folsom City. He also operated gold dredgers on the Mokelumne River for this same company; he then engaged in contracting and built many of the houses and blocks in Clements during the time he was contracting. During August of 1918, he entered the employ of the Harris Manufacturing Company of Stockton and now occupies the position of assistant foreman of construction.

Mr. Murdoch's marriage in 1903 united him with Miss Bertha Holman, a native daughter of California, born in Clements, San Joaquin County; her grandfather Holman was a California pioneer. Mr. and Mrs. Murdoch are the parents of two children: Annabelle F. and Marcella E. Mr. Murdoch is a member of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. He is vitally interested in the welfare of his native county and state and gives his hearty support to every excellent measure likely to help upbuild the community in which he lives and prospers.

BERNARD CASSIDY.—For many years Bernard Cassidy has been in the public service of the county, first as deputy sheriff under Cunningham, Sibley and Reicks, and afterwards, for the past few years, as bailiff of the sheriff's office under Sheriff Reicks. In all he has served thirty-eight years as a peace officer, being now the oldest in years of service in California. Mr. Cassidy was born in Fermanagh, Ireland, in 1851, a son of Peter and Katherine (Fee) Cassidy. Peter Cassidy came to the United States in 1862 and was engaged in mining in Pennsylvania; later he moved to Rice County, Minn., where he farmed a quarter section of land of his own. Bernard Cassidy received his education in Ireland and in 1866 joined his father in Rice County, Minn., where he remained until 1875 when he removed to Stockton. Peter Cassidy died on his farm in Minnesota in 1898 aged ninety-eight years.

In July, 1872, Mr. Cassidy was married at Shieldsville, Minn., to Miss Mary Devereaux, born in County Wexford, Ireland, a daughter of Patrick and Margaret (Hoar) Devereaux. Mrs. Cassidy was educated in her native land and accompanied her parents to the United States where they settled in Rice County, Minn. She was the youngest of a family of four children, the others being Andrew, Robert and John. Mr. and Mrs. Cassidy were the parents of ten children: Katherine married J. Orie Spencer, foreman of Hedges Buck Co., Stockton; William is in the insurance business in Stockton; Minnie and Ann preside over Mr. Cassidy's home; Benjamin is a member of the police department of Stockton; Julia, deceased; John, proprietor of the Stockton Bowling Alley; Irene, the wife of Albert Cannon, a partner of John Cassidy and they reside in Stockton; Joseph is deceased and the youngest child died in infancy. There are six grandchildren. Mrs. Spencer has two sons—Alvin and Robert. William Cassidy was first married to Miss Olive McKnight and they have two children—Andrew and Olive. Mrs. Cassidy died fourteen years ago and William then married Miss Era Bruce. Benjamin Cassidy married Miss Elpha McClellan and they have two children—Bernard and Frank. After taking up his residence in Stockton, Mr. Cassidy engaged in bridge building for several years, then became deputy sheriff and then bailiff in the sheriff's office. Mr. Cassidy was bereaved of his faithful wife August 21, 1922, a woman much loved and esteemed and mourned by her family and many friends. In politics Mr. Cassidy is a Republican and he is a member of the Foresters and the Y. M. I.

FRANK F. PARKER.—A prominent stockman who is also a native son of Stanislaus County, is Frank F. Parker, engaged in stockraising on 1,300 acres of range and farming land located seventeen miles east of Stockton on the Copperopolis railroad, who raises only the choicest of beef cattle and supplies the leading markets in the state. His birth occurred on Rock Creek, about five miles east of Farmington, June 25, 1858. His father was Captain John Parker, a native of New Bedford, Mass., who came to California in 1849, where he mined and farmed until the time of his death in 1868. Captain Parker was master of the ship "Vermont," and during the years spent at sea had touched every notable port in the world. He sailed to California via Cape Horn in 1849 and spent four years in the mines; then, in 1853, he went to Australia, where he was married to Miss Clara Bevan, a native of County Cork, Ireland, who had accompanied her people to that country in 1851. Mrs. Parker accompanied her husband on his voyages, and on their trip in 1854 their eldest son was born and they gave him the name of John Vermont; his birth occurred on December 20, 1854, as the ship rounded Cape Horn. After a stormy voyage they arrived in the port of San Francisco and went direct to Stockton; then Captain Parker went to the mines at Sonora and Jamestown, where he spent a short time, and then settled at Telegraph City, Calaveras County, where he took up Government land near Rock Creek, but continued mining. In 1864 he came to San Joaquin County and began sheep raising; and here he died. After his death, Mrs. Parker purchased land near Peters, and the Parker home was established at the old Uncle George Tavern, seventeen miles east of Stockton, where our subject now lives. Additions have been made to the building until it is now modern in every way. Mrs. Parker died in 1895, leaving an estate consisting of 400 acres, which is included in Mr. Parker's ranch.

Frank Parker was reared to farm life, and while still a young lad herded sheep and rode the range. He recalls distinctly the twenty-mule teams used by the freighters to the mines, and John Wilson and L. Kenyon, who drove bull teams, won his particular admiration. When thirteen years old he started shearing sheep, and each season thereafter for twenty-five years he followed this occupation, going from the ranges of California to Nevada.

In 1890, at Stockton, Mr. Parker was united in marriage with Miss Emily Jenkins, born at Jenny Lind, Cal., a daughter of Hon. Robert R. Jenkins, prominent political leader in central California in the eighties. They are the parents of two children: Uretta is the wife of John Dentoni, residing in Stockton; Julia Vera is the wife of Emilio Sanguinetti, and they have two children, Parker and Uretta. From 1900 to 1906 Mr. Parker owned and conducted the Lockeford Hotel at Lockeford, and then increased his land holdings by purchasing 740 acres surrounding the old Parker homestead. He now owns 1,300 acres of range and farming land in one body, where he engages exclusively in raising high-grade cattle for market. Since he was twenty-one years old, Mr. Parker has been a member of the I. O. O. F., and he is also identified with the Knights of Pythias lodge at Lockeford.

JAMES O. LOCKWOOD.—A prominent and successful viticulturist of the Lodi district is James O. Lockwood, whose characteristics of thrift and industry have served as stepping-stones to his present prosperity. A native of Ohio, he was born near Olathe, Wayne County, on December 5, 1853, but was taken by his parents to Hardin County, Iowa, when but a small child and there he grew to manhood on a farm. In the spring of 1878 he went to Jewell County, Kans., and took up a homestead of 160 acres, which he farmed for fourteen years; he then returned to Iowa and farmed the home place until 1904, when he removed to California and the following year located in Lodi. He purchased ten acres of four-year-old Tokay vines, for which he paid $335 per acre, located near Acampo. Within one year he sold this place at an advance of $165 per acre; he then bought twelve and a half acres planted to four-year-old Tokay grapes located in the Mills tract, two miles west of Lodi, which has proven a wise investment, as the average yield is ten tons to the acre; he also owns an eight-acre vineyard, two and a half miles to the southeast of Lodi.

Mr. Lockwood has been twice married, his second wife being Miss Sarah Malcom before her marriage, a native of Michigan. Fraternaly, Mr. Lockwood is a member of the Lodi Lodge No. 267, I. O. O. F. Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood are active members of the Christian Church of Lodi, and he is a deacon in that church. He is widely and favorably known throughout the community as a man of dependability and his efforts are used for the upbuilding of his locality.

EDWARD KURTZ.—A worthy citizen of Lodi who has witnessed many changes during the twenty years of his residence in the San Joaquin Valley is Edward Kurtz, the capable and efficient buyer of the American Fruit Growers, Inc. A native of South Dakota, he was born in Tyndall on July 9, 1884, a son of Henry and Helena (Unruh) Kurtz, both parents being natives of Germany. His father was a pioneer of South Dakota and passed through many hardships and privations of the early days of that unsettled prairie country. He was actively connected with the development and upbuilding of the city of Tripp and was engaged in various enterprises while residing there, at one time owning twelve sections of land. Desiring a milder climate, in 1901 he removed with his family to Woodbridge and purchased ten acres planted to almonds and grapes; he added more land to his holdings until he owned 140 acres, which he improved to vines and trees. A harness-maker by trade, he opened a shop in Lodi in 1906, which he successfully conducted for a number of years. He passed away on January 4, 1918, his wife surviving him in Lodi. They were the parents of eleven children, all of whom are living, ten of them residents of California.

Edward was seventeen years of age when his parents settled in Woodbridge and for a time remained with his father on the home place, then concluded that it was time that he started for himself. He has owned, developed and sold a number of vineyards; he bought forty acres of the Anderson ranch north of Lodi and sold it at a good profit, and some of his places have increased in value 400 per cent. He now owns a vineyard of twenty acres west of Lodi. His intimate connection with the agricultural and viticultural interests of the San Joaquin Valley has enabled him to gain an expert knowledge of soil conditions and methods of cultivation.

Mr. Kurtz's marriage united him with Miss Marie Konig, a native of Germany, and they are members of the German Lutheran Church of Lodi. He works for the best interests of the commonwealth and is an enthusiastic and ardent supporter of all measures for the advancement of his locality.

JOSEPH P. GILBEAU.—Identified with San Joaquin County for more than thirty-five years, Joseph P. Gilbeau has done much toward the building up of Lodi, where he is a leader in business circles, being proprietor of a furniture and hardware store and owner of the Gilbeau block, a fine addition to the business district. A Canadian by birth, Mr. Gilbeau was born at Montreal, Canada, January 8, 1878, the son of Joe and Eliza (Leland) Gilbeau, both natives of Canada. The family came to Stockton in 1886, and here the father opened a blacksmith shop at Park and Aurora streets, later having a shop on Center near Lafayette, and he carried on this business for many years. Wisely investing his money in Stockton real estate, he has built a number of houses, and for some time he has been retired from active work in his line, giving his time to looking after his property interests. With his wife he resides on South San Joaquin Street, Stockton, now numbered among the early residents there, and some time ago they celebrated their golden wedding with all their children in attendance on this happy occasion.

Five girls and five boys were born to Mr. and Mrs. Gilbeau, and all of them are living, Joseph P. being the eldest of their sons. He was educated in St. Mary's College, Stockton, and when his school days were over he was employed by L. U. Shippee, the well-known horseman, to care for his trotting horses on his stock farm near Stockton, and later he had charge of the horses for the State Bakery. Coming to Lodi in 1910, Mr. Gilbeau bought the Rinfret Livery Stable, which he conducted successfully for five years, at that time reselling it to the original owner, and in 1915 he opened his furniture and hardware store at 108 North Sacramento Street. Thrifty and provident, Mr. Gilbeau began in his early days to save his money, investing it in ranch property. His first purchase was a ranch of twenty acres near Victor, planted to a vineyard, which he sold in order to buy a place of forty acres at Manteca. Disposing of this, he invested in another forty-acre Tokay vineyard near the Ray school, which he later traded for a business lot 90x125 feet at the corner of Sacramento and Elm streets, Lodi. Here he erected a modern two-story brick business block, 90x60 feet, in 1920, which adds much to the appearance of the business district of Lodi, the block being so planned that a third story can be added at any time. He later bought a business corner at the corner of School and Elm; this he sold to invest in a valuable site on the opposite corner.

Mr. Gilbeau's marriage, which occurred at Lodi in 1912, united him with Miss Amelia Kirby, a native of North Dakota. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gilbeau: Clarence, Francis, Gladys and Joseph J. For some time a member of the Lodi Eagles, Mr. Gilbeau is also prominent in the Knights of Columbus.

RICHARD JAMES HEENEY.—A native son and lifelong resident of San Joaquin Co. is Richard James Heenev, prosperous and enterprising agriculturist on Upper Roberts Island, where he owns 140 acres. His undertakings have been successful, and he is esteemed for his cooperation with all movements for the good and advancement of his community. He was born at Stockton at the Heenev home at Market and American streets, March 21, 1874, a son of Richard and Julia (Nolan) Heenev, both natives of Ireland. The father was born in County Louth, Ireland, December 26, 1828, and remained in his native land until he was twenty-one years old, when he left for America, arriving in Boston, Mass. in 1849. The news of the discovery of gold in California had already reached the Atlantic shores and he lost no time in starting for the West via Panama, and after arriving in San Francisco he proceeded to Stockton and engaged in freighting to the mines. He was a man of the strictest temperance, using neither liquor nor tobacco, and a man of noble characteristics. He erected the Russ House on Weber and Center streets and conducted the same with his partner, George Lockhead. The mother came from Ireland in 1865 and they were the parents of seven children, of whom Richard J. is the only survivor; Mary Ella, Lulu Annie, William Francis, John Albert, W. Henry, and George E. Patrick all being deceased. The mother passed away February 25, 1893, the father surviving until June 24, 1894. Rick Heenev, as he is familiarly called by his many friends, was next to the youngest of their children. His childhood was spent in Stockton and he was educated in the public schools. He then entered Stockton Business College, being graduated in 1893, after which he took up farming. In December, 1893, in partnership with his brother William Francis, Mr. Heenev located on his present ranch on Roberts Island, which they farmed together till 1900, when his brother passed away. Mr. Heenev has continued alone and has met with fine success. Aside from his ranching enterprise Mr. Heenev is also the owner of desirable business property in Stockton on the site of the old home place where he was born, near what is now the Record building.

Mr. Heenev's marriage occurred in Stockton November 19, 1902, which united him with Miss Birdena R. Rolerson who was born on Roberts Island and is the daughter of Benjamin F. and Faustina M. (Tober) Rolerson, natives of Waldo, Maine. Mr. Rolerson volunteered his services to the cause of the Civil War and enlisted November 27, 1861, under Capt. Ira B. Gardner in Company I, 14th Maine Volunteer Infantry, serving until January 13, 1865, when he was mustered out and honorably discharged. He returned to his old home, and in time married Miss Tober. Mr. Rolerson came to California in 1876 and was joined by his wife in 1879. He located first at Farmington in ranching until 1880, when he purchased land on Roberts Island, and helped to reclaim the lands and improved his ranch of 355 acres until it was one of the finest in the Delta country. He sold the ranch in 1909 and was preparing to make their residence in Stockton when he died in that city August 2, 1909, aged sixty-six years. His widow survives him, residing in Stockton, aged seventy-eight years. Mr. Rolerson was a prominent man and took an active part in public matters. He was school trustee, levee trustee, and deputy county assessor.

R. J. Heaney

Mrs. R. J. Heaney

He was a 32-degree Scottish Rite Mason as well as an Odd Fellow and an Elk, and was a popular member of Rawlins Post, G. A. R., of which he served as Commander. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Rolerson resulted in the birth of five children, Mrs. Lois Ammons of Stockton; Almer died in 1892 in a railroad accident; Mrs. Edith Banta of Stockton; Mrs. Flora Smith of Geyserville, and Mrs. Birdena Heeney, the youngest of the family. Like her husband, she is much interested in civic improvements in general. She has been president and secretary of the Roberts Island Rural Telephone Company for the past eleven years, having accepted the place a year after the company was started; thus under her management the line has been built up to excellent service to the patrons. The lines were rebuilt in 1922. Mr. Heeney is a member of the board of trustees of Garden school district, being clerk of the board, and he is also a trustee of Reclamation District No. 544. In 1919 Mr. Heeney made a trip to Ireland and many interesting places in Europe, returning to California after a three months' trip, in January, 1920, pleased with the tour, but glad to be back in California. Fraternally he is a member of the Elks of Stockton and politically is a Democrat.

HERBERT Q. WILLIS, M. D.—San Joaquin County has been especially fortunate in the medical men of note attracted to its territory, prominent among whom is Dr. Herbert Q. Willis, the well-known physician and surgeon, for the past fifteen years a resident of Stockton. He was born in Smyrna, Del., on January 26, 1868, and was reared at Denton, Caroline County, Md., where he attended both the grammar and the high school. He taught school for two years in Eastern Kansas, and graduated from the Ensworth Medical College at St. Joseph, Mo., with the class of '94, when he received the M. D. degree. He practiced his profession in both Missouri and Kansas, and in 1901 he came out to California. Here he entered the wholesale drug firm of Kirk & Geary at Sacramento, acting as traveling salesman for them, and then he took a post-graduate course of nine months at the Polyclinic in Chicago, and in 1918 entered upon the practice of medicine and surgery at Stockton. He belongs to the American Medical Association, the State Medical Society and the County Medical Society, and has already attained an enviable place of esteem among his able colleagues.

At Highland, Kans., in 1894, Dr. Willis was married to Miss Flora Shirley, a gifted daughter of Highland, and a lady now popular in Stocktonian social circles; and they have one son, James S. Willis. Dr. Willis belongs to the San Joaquin Blue Lodge of Masons, and to the Chapter Council, Sciois, and it is needless to say that he is most welcome in these fraternal orders. Stockton may well be congratulated that Dr. Willis pitched his tent where his services are sure to be appreciated as they are likely to be needed.

LEON C. SCHWARTZ.—Among the successful and esteemed citizens of Stockton is Leon C. Schwartz, the genial and popular assistant cashier of the Commercial and Savings Bank of Stockton. During the ten years that he has resided in Stockton he has witnessed the phenomenal development of this part of the state, and there is considerable satisfaction in the reflection that he has done his share in promoting this progress and transformation. He was born in Jackson, Cal., September 12, 1894, a son of Theodore and Ella (Gilbert) Schwartz, both natives of California, the father being of French descent. The preliminary education of Mr. Schwartz was obtained in the public schools of Jackson, supplemented by a business course at St. Mary's College in Oakland and further augmented by a course in stenography at Heald's Business College in Stockton. In 1912 he entered the employ of the Commercial and Savings Bank as a stenographer and messenger, and during his years of service has been in every department of the bank. He was promoted from time to time until he now occupies the position of assistant cashier and with the exception of the president, E. F. Harris, is the oldest employe of this institution. His life has been an industrious and useful one, and he has the satisfaction of knowing that he has done the best he could, which has made him both prominent and influential in business circles. He is a member of the Stockton branch of the American Institute of Bankers, the Stockton B. P. O. Elks No. 218, and the Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W., No. 7, and the Anteros Club.

ALLEN C. SHAW.—Associated for many years with the automobile industry, Allen C. Shaw brings a wide experience in this line to his present position as manager for F. D. Naylor, authorized agent for Ford and Lincoln cars at Stockton, their business being located at 317 North El Dorado Street. Mr. Shaw was born in Lincoln County, Mo., August 11, 1885, and his boyhood days were spent on the farm, and he attended the country schools. At the age of fourteen he entered the high school at Columbia, Boone County, and also took a course at the Preparatory Engineering School there. On February 28, 1906, he arrived in California and for a year ran a hoisting engine at the Penn Mining Company in Calaveras County. Coming to Stockton in 1907, he spent a year as master mechanic for the California Traction Company and then engaged in the automobile business, operating the second garage built in Lodi. In 1910-1911 he was assistant manager for the J. L. Whitmore auto agency at Stockton and in 1912-1913 he was connected with the sales department of Hansel & Ortman, then becoming Pacific Coast representative of the Stromberg Carburetor Company of Chicago, with headquarters at San Francisco. Following this Mr. Shaw was connected with the engineering department of the Standard Oil Company at San Francisco until August, 1920, when he became associated with F. D. Naylor in Stockton as manager.

Mr. Shaw's marriage on September 5, 1906, united him with Miss Ethel Lamb, who was born in San Joaquin County, and they are the parents of one daughter, Ellen.

FRED B. STOWELL.—Construction work engaged the attention of Fred B. Stowell for a number of years and he was associated with some of the largest development projects both in this state and in Nevada. He was born in San Benito County, Cal., June 2, 1878, and attended the country schools of that county, and later at Hollister. When he was seventeen he went to San Francisco and took up the trade of machinist and blacksmith, and was employed by the Union Iron Works and the San Francisco Construction Company. Later he became a steam shovel engineer and was engaged all over the state in large construction work, and also in Nevada, where for two years, from 1903 to 1905, he was connected with the Truckee-Carson project. He was also with the Bucyrus Steam Shovel Company in Nevada, and in 1906 he took up his work with the Utah Construction Company and helped in the construction of the Western Pacific Railroad when that company was building its line through the state. He was with the Southern Pacific Railroad in building the Applegate Tunnel and worked on the Los Angeles aqueduct in the Mojave Desert at Lone Pine, and later assisted in the construction of the reservoir at Oakdale. Altogether he operated for two and a half years under ground. In 1916 Mr. Stowell came to Stockton and for four years was engaged in the grocery business; he is now the head of an automobile business at Miner and Hunter streets, buying and selling used cars.

At Oakland in 1903, Mr. Stowell was married to Miss Mary Garbarino, a native daughter of California, and they have one daughter, Bernice May, who has shown unusual aptitude in her studies. She has already completed a two years' commercial course in the Stockton high school and will graduate from that school in June, 1923, having taken the four years' academic course in three years. Mr. Stowell is the owner of valuable mining claims in the Mother lode, where he was engaged as a hoisting engineer for some time.

HUGH J. TYE.—A distinguished representative of the California Bar is Hugh J. Tye, the senior member of the well-known law firm of Messrs. Tye & Edwards, having offices in the Savings & Loan Bank Building at Stockton. He was born in that city on August 26, 1880, the son of Hugh Tye, who was also born in Stockton, while his father, Hugh Tye, the grandfather of our subject, was born in Connecticut and came out to California and Stockton in 1852. Hugh attended St. Mary's College at Stockton, having first gone to the Washington and the Yorks private schools, and at the age of fourteen he was a messenger boy in the Stockton postoffice, under Postmaster Eli Thrift. He later entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and after that was a member of the Stockton police force. While doing police duty he studied law under Judge Webster; in 1911 he was admitted to the bar in California.

Mr. Tye was elected police judge of Stockton in 1914, and served for four years; but he was then defeated in his candidacy for the office of district attorney. He thereupon formed a partnership with Lawrence Edwards, under the firm name of Tye & Edwards, and together they have built up a large and lucrative practice. This law firm is now located in the Commercial and Savings Bank Building.

On May 8, 1903, at Stockton, Mr. Tye was married to Miss Elizabeth T. Freeman, a native of Stockton whose family came from New York to San Joaquin County in early days; and they have three children: Lucile, attending the Dominican College at San Rafael; Gordon, attending St. Mary's College at Stockton; and the youngest is Hugh J., representing the fourth generation with the given name of Hugh. Mr. Tye has been active in the fraternal order of the Eagles, being past president of the Stockton Lodge, and he belongs to Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., the Yosemite Club, and the Stockton Golf and Country Club.

WILLIAM PHELPS.—A prominent Delta rancher and grain farmer, William Phelps has witnessed the wonderful growth and improvement in the Tracy district of San Joaquin County and has given substantial assistance to the various movements and measures which have contributed to its welfare and progress. He was born at Livermore, May 8, 1868, a son of Harrison and Lavina Phelps, who settled in San Joaquin County in 1881. The father passed away in 1888, and subsequently the mother married Julius Englander, a pioneer of the county and at present foreman on the Bixley holdings on Roberts Island, where they reside. Harrison Phelps was employed on the Kidd ranch on Union Island and there William Phelps attended school and grew to young manhood, becoming a favorite with the farm hands. On this ranch were bred and raised some of the finest race and harness horses of California and many of them became world renowned. In 1891, Mr. Phelps engaged in ranching on his own account on the Williams tract, and the first year the land yielded a harvest of twenty-five sacks of barley to the acre, for which he received sixty cents per sack at the San Francisco wharf; then he found employment on the Bixley ranch and not until 1905 did he try ranching again on his own hook.

The marriage of Mr. Phelps occurred at Stockton and united him with Miss Anna Silva, a sister of Mrs. J. J. Ratto, and a daughter of Manuel and Teresa Silva of San Miguel, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Phelps are the parents of five children: Hazel, Lloyd, William, Jr., Richard, and John. Since 1919 Mr. Phelps has farmed extensively to grain on the B. M. Bixley ranch, nine miles north of Tracy on the Elk Ridge Road; he also owns desirable real estate in the Rosedale addition to Tracy. He is a Democrat in politics, and gives hearty encouragement to all enterprises for promotion of the general welfare.

ASHER D. HICKOK.—Going back in memory fifty years, Asher D. Hickok can vividly recall those days spent in riding the range, when not even the most optimistic could foresee the wonderful transformation in the development of the Golden State now enjoyed by the present generation. Mr. Hickok was born in 1855 at Rochester, N. Y., and after a boyhood spent at Troy, in that state, he came to California in 1872 on an emigrant train, landing in Marysville. He secured work in the Coast Range in Colusa County with Skillings & Corey, large stock raisers, and he rode the range for them, sometimes driving cattle to Nevada, continuing with them until 1875, when he went to San Francisco and entered the employ of John Morton in the transfer and express business.

In 1879 Mr. Hickok returned to the sheep business in Colusa County. In 1894 he purchased a mountain ranch of 897 acres on Stony Creek in Indian Valley. He started in with a capital of $600 and a collie dog, engaging in dairying and raising cattle and hogs, and this he developed into one of the finest stock ranches in Northern California, paying for it in thirteen years. He had 175 acres in alfalfa, and this he irrigated with water from Stony Creek. The place was stocked with registered Jerseys and Durham cows, and he sold thousands of pounds of butter. Some of the corn he raised made eighty bushels to the acre and one stalk which reached the height of eighteen feet was taken to Willows and placed on exhibition. In 1912 Mr. Hickok disposed of his ranch and came to Lodi, where he purchased a thirteen-acre vineyard, which he developed into a fine property, disposing of it in 1916, and since that time he has lived retired from active business.

In 1879 Mr. Hickok was married to Miss Ella L. Leyde, who was born in Minnesota, and four sons have been born to them: Frank W., William R., Ralph A. and Clyde E. Having gone to work at the age of seven, Mr. Hickok has realized the great benefit a more extended period of schooling would have been, so that he has always been a supporter of all progressive movements in educational affairs, serving for a number of years as trustee of the Stony Ford school district in Colusa County. With his wife he attends the Christian Church at Lodi, in which he is a deacon, and a generous supporter of all its benevolences. A Republican in national politics, Mr. Hickok was elected one of the city trustees of Lodi in April, 1920, and is a member of the committee on streets. He has proved a most efficient public official and with the other members of the board of trustees is enjoying the full confidence of the people of Lodi, who appreciate the fine business administration being given this thriving city.

DR. JOHN M. GARDNER.—Well-known in the San Joaquin Valley as a specialist of the eye, ear, nose and throat diseases, Dr. John M. Gardner is a native of Virginia, born at Hillsville, Carroll County, on June 16, 1874. He was educated in the grammar and high schools of that city; later entered the State Normal at Marion, Va., and after graduating he taught school for a number of years and then took a business course at Nashville, Tenn., and entered the employ of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, and from 1898 to 1905 was in their auditing department at Roanoke, Va. Leaving the employ of the railroad company he entered the University College of Medicine at Richmond, Va., in 1905, and spent three years, completing his course in 1909 at the University of Nashville and received the M. D. degree. For two years he engaged in the general practice of his profession in Oklahoma and in October, 1910, came to California and engaged in the United States Indian service for one year, and early in 1912 located at Lodi, where he began to build up a general practice.

Deciding to specialize in his profession, Dr. Gardner went East and took a post graduate course in the Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat College and was graduated in 1918. Coming back to California, he enlisted in the Medical Corps of the U. S. Army and was attached to Ambulance Company No. 263, 16th Sanitary Train, 16th Division, at Camp Kearney, and remained there until he was honorably discharged in 1919. To further perfect himself in his specialty he went to New York and during 1918 and 1919, did special work in the New York Post Graduate Medical School and Hospital, also in the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary, returning to Lodi in October, 1919, where he took up his specialized work and is the only specialist in his line in Lodi. In 1922 he returned to the same institutions in the East and did further special work.

Dr. Gardner's marriage united him with Miss Harriet T. Brown, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., who is a very successful dentist. She is a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of San Francisco, receiving her degree of D. D. S. in 1909. She is a member of the State and County Dental associations. They are the parents of one daughter, Eleanor Virginia, born in Lodi. Fraternally Dr. Gardner is a member of Lodi Lodge of Masons No. 256; of the Lodi Knights of Pythias No. 41; also of the Red Men; and a member of the State and County Medical, and the American Medical Associations.

EDWARD ALDERS.—It took Edward Alders eighteen years to reach his present prominent and influential position as a fruit grower in the Farmington district of San Joaquin County. He has had a somewhat varied career, but since 1904, when he took up horticulture, he has never faltered and success has crowned his efforts. He is the owner of a fine, highly cultivated and productive forty-seven-acre ranch near Farmington, twenty-seven acres of which is in vineyard and fourteen acres in an orchard of plums and peaches. He was born in Stockton, Cal., April 24, 1877, the eldest son of Charles Milton and Annie (Gately) Alders. Charles Milton Alders was born near Lancaster, N. Y., and at the age of twelve years came to California all alone, via Panama. Charles Milton Alders was reared in Stockton and there was married to Miss Annie Gately. He was engaged in the butcher business until he opened the Halfway House on the French Camp road a few miles from Stockton, which he conducted until 1884, when the family removed to Farmington. Mr. and Mrs. Alders reared seven children, all of whom are living. Charles Milton Alders was a man of true worth. For twelve years he was the proprietor of the Central Hotel in Farmington. At his death in 1908 the property was left to his wife, who continued to operate the hotel until 1911, when the business was turned over to her son Edward, the subject of this sketch, who successfully handled the business until 1919.

Edward Alders received a good education at the Farmington school, which he later supplemented with a business course at the Santa Cruz Business College. From an early age he began a career extending over thirteen years as market hunter, shooting ducks and geese, which he shipped to the San Francisco market. Most of his hunting for the first nine years was done on the Miller & Lux ranch east of Lugomar, which is now the Gustine Gun Club. The next four years he hunted on the Stevenson ranch near Hills Ferry on the Merced River. Alders Levee which is now a part of the Gustine Gun Club's premises, was named after our subject because of the fact that he had maintained his camp there for many years. With the savings from his hunting he was able, in 1904, to buy his present land in the White district near Farmington, located on the Bellota Road, and was one of the first ranchers to plant a vineyard in this section. More recently he has improved this ranch with a concrete-piped irrigation system, getting his water from a deep well equipped with a six-inch pump. His property has steadily advanced in value and productiveness, and the quality of his Tragedy plums has won for him prizes at the county fair.

On March 31, 1909, at Stockton, Mr. Alders was married to Miss Berde M. Dodge, a native of Stockton, a daughter of Charles M. and Ada (Heward) Dodge. Grandfather Heward was a native of England who came to America in 1852. Charles M. Dodge, a native of Vermont, came to California in the early eighties, and for twelve years conducted Dodge's Bazaar in Stockton. Mrs. Alders graduated from the Stockton high school in 1907, then attended the Western Normal School, and afterwards followed the profession of teaching in the public schools of Sierra County until her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Alders are the parents of three children: Charles Averel, Arlen Edward, and Ada Anna.

Fraternally Mr. Alders is identified with the Knights of Pythias at Newman and the N. S. G. W. at Stockton. Mrs. Alders maintains an active interest in educational matters and is serving as trustee of her home school district.

MRS. MARY THOMAN AGIEN.—Among the pioneer women of San Joaquin County, Mrs. Mary Thoman Agien is well and favorably known. She is a good business manager, and since her husband's death has most creditably borne the obligations and duties laid upon her by that event; she owns the family residence in Stockton where they have resided since 1910, as well as desirable store rental property located at 1146 East Main Street and other valuable real estate in that city; also property in San Bruno, Half Moon Bay and San Francisco. She has lived in California since 1880, when she accompanied her parents from Kansas to San Joaquin County. She was born near St. Joseph, Mo., in Kansas, a daughter of R. R. and Julia (Summers-Titman) Wilcox, natives of Rhode Island and Indiana respectively. The father passed away in 1899 at Ripon, the mother surviving him until 1914 when she passed away at Lathrop. Mrs. Agien was reared in San Joaquin County and attended the Old Crow school, walking from the home place near Ripon to school every day, a distance of a mile and a half.

In 1889 occurred her first marriage, which united her with Daniel Thoman, a native of Switzerland, who came to California in 1886. He was a carpenter by trade and for a number of years worked with P. A. Buell, building contractor, being entrusted with finishing work in which he was an expert; later he entered the contracting business on his own account, which he followed for fourteen years in Stockton and throughout the county. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Thoman became the parents of two sons: Lloyd D. was born at Lathrop in 1891 and is a graduate of the public schools; he married Miss Nellie Morris and they have two children, Floyd D. and Nellie; they reside in Lodi, where he is proprietor of the Lodi Hardware Company. The other son, Elmer, was born at Lathrop in 1894, also a graduate of the public schools of the county; for eighteen months he served as a yocman on the U. S. S. Virginia and during that time made five trips across the Atlantic. He is single and resides at the family home in Stockton. Mr. Thoman passed away on April 15, 1915, his untimely death being a severe loss to his family and the community where he had resided for so many years. He was a member of the Foresters and the Knights of Pythias in Stockton. In 1918, Mrs. Thoman was united in marriage with J. Agien, a prominent business man of San Francisco, who has since made his home in Stockton. Mrs. Agien is a past noble grand of the woman's auxiliary of the Foresters of America, San Francisco Chapter, and is otherwise well known and highly esteemed in Stockton, where she has resided since 1910.

FELIX C. MINDACH.—The city of Stockton is indeed fortunate in the number of parks within her borders and much of the beauty of these lovely spots scattered throughout the city is due to the superintendent of city parks, Felix C. Mindach, for there is no one in this locality better versed in horticulture and floriculture than he. Since coming to California he has made a special study of all flowers, ornamental trees, shrubs and plants grown here and he is considered an authority in this field.

Mr. Mindach was born at Forst, Brandenburg, Germany, March 29, 1862. He was educated in the schools of his home town and at the age of ten years started to learn the science of horticulture and floriculture, meantime continuing his attendance at the local schools until he completed the course at the age of fourteen years. He then apprenticed at the floricultural establishment in which he had already become greatly interested. So rapidly did he advance that after two years' service with the large nursery company which specialized in plants, flowers, ornamental trees and fruit stock, he was advanced to instructor, and in this position he instructed others in learning the rudiments of the business, most of them very much older than himself. After four years with this company, he traveled throughout Germany and became landscape gardener on a number of large private estates.

In 1886 Mr. Mindach crossed the ocean to New York; securing employment on a farm, he attended school during the first winter in order to master the English language. Later he located in Rochester, N. Y., and for a season was a landscape gardener on a large private estate there. In 1888 he arrived in California, and here he established himself in the nursery business, conducting one at Red Bluff and one near Corning, purchasing a small tract of land at the latter place. Selling out his nursery business he entered the employ of the Maywood Colony at Corning and became superintendent for W. N. Woodson, the manager of this colony. Later Mr. Mindach came to San Joaquin County in 1902 and bought a twenty-acre ranch at Summer Home, near Manteca; there he established a nursery and soon after, in 1905, he moved to Stockton and bought two lots at 721 North East Street, where he erected the residence where he has since lived.

Soon after locating in Stockton, Mr. Mindach became engaged in laying out and improving the city parks. He first laid out Constitution Square and completed the laying out and improvement of Weber Park, and also laid out Washington Park and Lafayette Park, this work being done by the day. In 1910 he accepted the appointment as superintendent of Stockton city parks, a position he has held ever since, and since then he has laid out the following new parks—Liberty, Union and Columbus. The city of Stockton is unusually rich in parks, the acquisition of which has covered a number of years, and under Mr. Mindach's expert care they are beauty spots, indeed, giving enjoyment to thousands of residents and visitors alike and they are an index to Stockton's progressive and aggressive growth. In the sequence of their establishment they are as follows: Fremont, Independence, Eden, Weber, Lafayette, Constitution, Washington, Liberty, Union and Columbus. Some years ago the city acquired Victory Park, an area of twenty-seven acres, that is now being improved as fast as can be done with the means at the city's disposal. Lately the city acquired Oak Park, of thirty acres, also being improved. At Union Park Mr. Mindach devotes about one-fourth of the area to a nursery for raising ornamental trees and shrubbery for planting the new parks and needed replacement in the old parks, which makes a considerable saving to the city.

Mr. Mindach's marriage in San Francisco united him with Miss Kate Rable, like himself a native of Germany, and they have been blessed by the birth of two children, Richard and Elsie. Mr. Mindach's special talents as a landscape gardener have made him a valued acquisition to Stockton, and the family have made many friends here.

GABRIEL J. VISCHI, M. D.—A worthy representative of the medical profession in California, Dr. Gabriel J. Vischi, the rising young physician and surgeon, of 38 South Sutter Street, Stockton, is also a cultured linguist, speaking English, Spanish and Italian fluently. He was born in San Francisco on June 19, 1892, the son of Joseph and Valentine (Valente) Vischi, the former a native of Italy, and the latter a Californian. His father came out to the Golden State in 1876, a jeweler by trade, and he opened the first Italian jewelry store in San Francisco, in which city Mrs. Vischi was born. He and his estimable wife make their home with Dr. Vischi. Her father was Joseph Valente, and he was an early settler in the Bay City. He was a mining engineer, operated in Indian Gulch, in Calaveras County, and came to be identified with the pioneer doings in a section of California made immortal by both Mark Twain and Bret Harte.

Gabriel Vischi attended the grammar schools of San Francisco and then was graduated from the Polytechnic high school of that city, after which he entered the University of California, which conferred upon him, in 1912, the Ph. C. degree. Four years later he was graduated, after a thorough course in medicine, from the San Francisco College of Physicians and Surgeons, when he received the M. D. degree; and then, for a year, he was an interne at the San Francisco County Hospital. When the United States shared the responsibilities of the World War, he entered the service, in October, 1917, as Orthopedic Surgeon, and was commissioned first lieutenant of the Medical Corps. He was stationed at the base hospital at Camp Lewis, and later at Camp Kearney, and then he was detached and sent to the hospital at Fort McKinley, five miles from Manila, in the Philippine Islands, where he remained from July to September, 1918. He was then ordered to Siberia with Field Hospital No. 4 Company, and the Ambulance Company No. 4, and in far-off Siberia he saw active service from September, 1918, to June 4, 1919, advancing rapidly and becoming one of the leading surgeons. Had not the armistice been signed when it was, he would have been duly commissioned a major. Arriving back in San Francisco on July 17, 1919, he was honorably discharged on August 4.

Dr. Vischi then located at Stockton, greatly enriched through his experience as a physician and surgeon of responsibility in the Army; and he has ever since been active in the practice of his profession, enjoying the entire confidence, as well as the highest esteem, of a wide circle of friends. He is a member of American Medical Association as well as the state and county medical societies. He belongs to the Karl Ross Post of the American Legion, and to the Veterans of Foreign Wars Association; and he is also a member of the Stockton Red Men, the Eagles, the Druids, and the Yeomen. Miss Ethel Vischi, his older sister, is an artist of exceptional natural talent and enjoys the distinction of having studied at the Johns Hopkins Art Institute and the Best Art School. She excels in china painting, illustrating, photographic work, modeling, and in both oil and water-color painting. Miss Ada Vischi, his younger sister, also makes her home with Dr. Vischi and is secretary for George F. McNoble, attorney-at-law.

HAROLD A. WALKER.—Not everyone filling a position of responsibility enjoys the confidence accorded Harold A. Walker, foreman for the Pacific Gas & Electric Company at Stockton, who is in charge of the sub-station and the operation of high-tension lines, and has the good-will of both employer and employee. He was born at San Jose on April 26, 1886, the son of Pitt M. Walker, a native of Alameda County, Cal., and the grandson of Jared Tuttle Walker, a native of Michigan, who crossed the great plains in 1850, and was one of the pioneer miners in the Mother Lode district, trying his luck throughout San Joaquin County on his way to the Southern mines. In 1860 he located near Irvington, in Alameda County, and soon made a reputation as a raiser of fine horses. He owned the Nutwood Stock Farm at Irvington, and also engaged in a warehouse business there. He was one of the Vigilance Committee of Alameda County which warred upon the cattle and horse thieves infesting that district, and he also belonged to the Old Mission Peak Lodge of Masons, of Irvington, one of the first lodges of Masons to be formed in the state.

Harold A. Walker first attended school in the country districts of Calaveras Valley, and then he continued his studies at the well-equipped San Jose high school. He took up by himself the study of electrical engineering, and entered the employ of the Standard Electrical Company of San Francisco. Later this company was merged with the Bay Counties Electric Company under the name of the California Gas & Electric Company, and it is now known as the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. He at first commenced work with the traveling maintenance crew, with headquarters at San Jose, and he was then advanced to the operating end, and connected with the sub-station and steam plants. For the next eight years he was load despatcher in the Oakland office in charge of operations in the power plants, sub-station and transmission service, a position corresponding, in a general way, to that of train despatcher on the steam railroad. In 1917 he was called to Stockton to take charge of new business, estimating line extensions, etc., and later, as a mark of the confidence of the company in his ability and fidelity, he was advanced to his present position. He has made good, and proven the correctness of his judgment in seeking this field as his life vocation. Naturally, he is a member of the National Electric Light Association of America.

At Oakland, Cal., in the year 1912, Mr. Walker was married to Miss Edna J. Lange of Napa, and their home has been blessed with two children: Dorothy and Madeline.

LLOYD R. WOODHULL.—An experienced, popular and important representative of the famous Sperry Flour Company is Lloyd R. Woodhull, in charge of their grain buying at Stockton. He was born at London, Ontario, Canada, on July 2, 1891, and was for a while in the employ of a wholesale firm manufacturing clothing at London. In October, 1910, he arrived at Stockton, and once landed here, he became bookkeeper for the River Express Company, serving that concern from December, 1910, until May 15, 1911, when he entered the employ of the Sperry Flour Company as timekeeper. He worked his way up from the bottom, acting as shipping clerk, billing clerk, and bookkeeper; and then, under the leadership of George R. McLeod, he became buyer for the company. When Mr. McLeod resigned as head of the buying department, he was appointed in his place, in the spring of 1922—a post of much responsibility, indeed one of the best at the disposal of the widely-known flour firm.

In 1915 at Stockton, Mr. Woodhull married Miss Alice Ridenour, a native of Stockton, whose parents came to that city many years ago as pioneers and so deserve the lasting gratitude of all coming after and profiting by their sacrifices and self-denials. In April, 1918, he entered the World War as a private in Company K, 364th Infantry, 91st Division, known as the Wild West Division, with which he was sent overseas, and served with it in all of its many and fierce engagements until the end of the war. The 91st Division stands out conspicuously in the annals of the American divisions as a fighting organization. Complete in every detail, it traveled further from its home base than any other division and it did as much actual fighting as any other national army division, and much more than many. The officers were all from California, Washington and Oregon, and the enlisted men were gathered from all the far Western states and from Alaska. A green fir tree was adopted as the shoulder insignia to be worn by the members. The division began intensive training as soon as it was formed, and on June 19, 1918, it received its orders and set out for overseas. The last units of the division arrived in France on July 26, 1918, and left their training area on September 6, 1918; and from September 11 to 14 it constituted a part of the reserve of the St. Mihiel offensive. From there it moved to the northwest of Verdun, where it took an active part in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. On September 26 it advanced from west of Avecourt to north of Gesnes, and continued in the offensive until October 6, when the greater part of the troops retreated to the Nattancourt area. On October 19, the division went under the command of the King of the Belgians; and from October 31 to November 4 took part in the Lys-Scheldt offensive west of the Escault (Scheldt) River, in the vicinity of Audenarde. Later, the 91st Division, of which our subject was luckily such an honored member, took part in the ceremony which marked the joyous return of the King and Queen of Belgium to the city of Brussels; and after that it was moved to the Le Mans area; and during March and April of 1919, the division embarked for the United States. Nineteen men of this division were awarded the distinguished service cross, but the majority of those who also did meritorious things received no special reward for their faithful performance of arduous duty.

CHAUNCEY A. LEASE.—It has been fortunate for the State of California to attract to her confines such men as Chauncey A. Lease, roofing contractor, now residing at Stockton. He was born in Bremer County, Iowa, on March 10, 1856, the son of Chauncey A. and Jeanette (Nutting) Lease, natives of Vermont and New York, respectively, but pioneers of Illinois and Iowa. In 1869, when thirteen years old, Chauncey A. accompanied his parents to Missouri, and well does he remember the journey overland in an open vehicle when for days there was continuous snow; he was in company with a cousin and a brother, the parents and smaller children being in a covered wagon. The family settled near Centralia, Boone County, and there the lad grew to manhood on the home farm and during the winter months attended the district school. When he was twenty-one he left home to go West, having a span of horses and his sole capital was twenty-five dollars in his pocket.

He stopped in Mitchell County, Kans., where he homesteaded 160 acres of land and took up a timber claim of like amount; this he proved up on and made his home for eleven years. While living on his land he helped to build houses made out of the native stone that was quarried on the land and was of such consistency that it could be cut with a saw into any size of block desired. After it had stood for a time it gradually hardened and then was plastered in the inside and made very good stone houses for the settlers. He gave the land for the first school house in his district in Mitchell County, and here church and Sunday school services were held. When Mr. Lease sold out in 1888 it was to come further West and he arrived in California November 29, locating in Santa Cruz.

Once in the Golden State he was not long in finding employment and soon began general contracting and cement work with his brother, George E. Lease, as a partner, and this business arrangement continued until 1913. In 1898, with twenty-five others, Mr. Lease bought a schooner and equipped for a mining expedition to Alaska, where he remained eight months. The brothers did contract work in various parts of the state during the intervening years; one contract was completed in Marin County on the ranch owned by Mr. Hotalling, which took a little over a year; then they did the stone and cement work on the first two buildings of the State Polytechnic school at San Luis Obispo in 1902. They made a specialty of roofing work and that with their general contracting kept them unusually busy. The work was given personal attention and evidences of the stability of the buildings erected are to be seen today in Santa Cruz and elsewhere, and it is to his credit that he built the first concrete house in Santa Cruz.

Mr. Lease located in Stanislaus County after twenty-five years residence in Santa Cruz, and bought an alfalfa and dairy ranch of seventeen acres located near Modesto. His ability as a builder soon became known and he accepted a position as superintendent of concrete construction work for T. K. Beard and in this position did some very important work in the state. In 1915 he moved to Stockton, still retaining his ranch near Modesto, which he sold in 1918. After taking up his residence in this city, he gave his entire attention to roofing contracts and during the passing of the years has roofed more than 2,500 buildings throughout the San Joaquin Valley. He put on the first white rock roof in the city and was the originator of the crushed glass roof. Three fourths of the homes in Tuxedo Park and Yosemite Terrace have been roofed by Mr. Lease, besides apartment houses, garage buildings, buildings at the county fair grounds; he also roofed school buildings at Lodi; bank and other buildings at Tracy; school at Manteca; and did work for the Diamond Match Company in Butte County. In his roofing work he uses hot asphaltum or roofing cement to cement the various layers of wool felt or asbestos paper used, then the entire surface is given a coating of the hot preparation and then the desired color of crushed brick, rock or glass is sprinkled over and in twenty-four hours it is dry.

The marriage of Chauncey A. Lease was celebrated in Kansas on February 1, 1879, when he was united with Miss Phoebe Catherine Johnson, who was born in Ohio, at Barnesville, Belmont County. She is a daughter of Pius and Sarah E. (Jarvis) Johnson, both born in Ohio of pioneer forefathers. Their union has been blessed by the birth of five children. The eldest son and child, H. Fred Lease, died in Missouri, aged one year. Bessie Belle is the widow of William R. Hedgepeth, the well-known optometrist of Santa Cruz, by whom she had one daughter, Doris Elizabeth. Rupert I. is the head of the grocery department of C. D. Hinkle of Santa Cruz, and the father of two children, Elsworth, deceased, and a daughter, Helen. He is also one of the enterprising men of Santa Cruz, having been engaged in buying, improving and selling property there. Jesse E. is a millman by trade and followed it in Stockton prior to the war, when he worked in the shipyards at Oakland and Bay Point. He is now engaged in a mill and wrecking company with W. E. French in Stockton; he had a daughter Vivian, now deceased. The youngest child is Chauncey A., Jr., who is a graduate of the Stockton high school, class of '18; also a graduate from the Agricultural School of the University of California at Davis, class of '22, and is taking charge of the vineyard. Mr. and Mrs. Lease take an active interest in the various circles in the Central Methodist Episcopal Church at Stockton and in national politics they support the platform of the Republican party. In all his work Mr. Lease has had the active cooperation of his devoted wife. Mr. and Mrs. Lease have always been strong advocates of temperance. To show his confidence in the future of San Joaquin County, Mr. Lease has invested in ranch property and is the owner of a twenty-acre vineyard near Escalon, and with a partner owns twenty acres two and one-half miles from Farmington, devoted to prunes and cherries; and he is preparing to plant seven and one-half acres to the Clarkadota fig in the near future. San Joaquin County may well be proud of the invaluable contribution made to its permanent growth and real progress by such citizens as Mr. Lease and his family.

CHARLES W. THOMAS.—Well known in San Joaquin County, not only for his successful participation in building operations, but also as a prominent Mason, is Charles W. Thomas, who is now the manager of the Sciots Club of Stockton. His birthplace is Clifton Hill, Mo., where he was born August 4, 1868, a son of Wayne and Martha (McDavitt) Thomas, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Missouri. Wayne Thomas was a grower of large quantities of tobacco in the South until 1874, when he arrived in California, settling at once in San Joaquin County, where he rented land which he farmed to grain. The ranch was known as the Brick ranch and is located near Bellota; later he purchased twenty-five acres near Linden, where, with his son, Charles W., our subject, he planted an orchard of peaches, apricots and prunes and at the same time followed his trade of carpenter in the district. Wayne Thomas joined the Masonic order while residing in the East and upon taking up his residence in San Joaquin County he was demitted to the Linden Lodge. He was married three times. There were no children by the first wife and one daughter by the second wife, Mrs. Malinda Rose; there were five children by the third wife: Mrs. Lazetti Matlock; Mrs. Lulu Ilgenfritz; William B.; John J.; and Charles W. Wayne Thomas was a Mason for fifty years and he passed away in 1912; his wife is also deceased. Charles W. was educated in the Linden school and learned the carpenter's trade with his father and followed his trade in Linden and Stockton; he built the Linden Hotel and was proprietor for ten years. Three years ago he located in Stockton and was employed on the construction of the Masonic Temple.

The marriage of Mr. Thomas united him with Miss Clara Bernasconi, a native of Calaveras County, Cal., and three children have been born to them: Martha J.; Viola Lulu; and Charles Clifton. Mr. Thomas has been a Mason for thirty years; he is past master of the Valley Lodge No. 135, of Linden; a 30th degree Mason Scottish Rite, and in January, 1922, he was appointed manager of the Sciots Club in Stockton. Mr. Thomas is energetic, progressive and practical, and is therefore meeting with well deserved success.

ANDERSON ALLEN.—A successful and enterprising rancher of San Joaquin County, residing about nineteen miles southeast of Stockton on the French Camp Road, is Anderson Allen, who owns his home ranch and is associated with his son in farming another. He has been a resident of California for the past forty-seven years and for the past fifteen years has been actively engaged in farming pursuits in San Joaquin County. He was born in Adams County, twenty miles south of Quincy, Ill., August 24, 1848. His father, Hiram Allen, was of Scotch parentage, born in Tennessee, where his ancestors were prominent in the early history of that state. He married Miss Kisiah Perrick, of Scotch descent, who was born in Kentucky. After marriage the young couple settled in Illinois, and in 1857 they removed to central Kansas, where he homesteaded 160 acres and resided there many years; then the family removed to Council Grove, Kans., and the father passed away in 1886 at this place, the mother surviving him until 1913. They were the parents of three sons and three daughters. Anderson Allen received his education in the schools of Kansas, and in 1875 came to California and located at Visalia. For the following three years he worked at various places in the state, farming and then in the lumber camps of the Santa Cruz Mountains. In 1878 he located near Tracy, San Joaquin County, where he engaged in grain farming for three years with Mr. Geddes. In 1881 he removed to Byron, Cal., where he purchased 160 acres, and he farmed to grain and raised stock on this land for twenty-five years.

On April 28, 1886, Mr. Allen was married to Miss Anna von Glahn, a native Californian born in San Joaquin County, a daughter of Christopher and Catherine (Boschen) von Glahn, both natives of Germany. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Allen: Alma V., Mrs. James Carter, resides at Manteca; William P. is deceased; and Arthur B. resides at home. Mr. Allen was especially interested in educational development and served as school trustee of the Excelsior district and was instrumental in organizing the Brentwood Union high school in 1905. In 1907 Mr. Allen sold his land at Byron and removed to San Joaquin County. Locating near Escalon, he purchased land and developed it, later selling it at a fair profit; thus he bought, developed and sold three different ranches. Aably assisted by their son, Mr. and Mrs. Allen are now busily engaged in improving land which Mrs. Allen inherited from her father's estate, and in making of it a model home ranch. Mr. Allen has made a close study of irrigation and is a staunch advocate of it, having demonstrated by years of experience the increased productivity of irrigated lands. Mrs. Allen attended the Western Normal School at Stockton from 1881 to 1883 and taught in the public schools of the county for four years before her marriage. She takes a prominent part in the social affairs of the community.

JAMES H. AUSTIN.—Counted among the substantial citizens of the Summer Home district of San Joaquin County, James H. Austin was born at Irondale, Mo., April 7, 1860, a son of Rufus H. Austin, a native of Ohio. An uncle, Horace Austin, as a mere lad, served in the Seminole War in 1835; then in the war with Mexico he was captain in the U. S. Regulars, and in the Civil War served as captain in the 108th Illinois Volunteer Regiment from 1861 to 1865.

In 1878 James H. Austin was graduated from the Waterman, Ill. high school; two years later he entered the college at Dubuque, Iowa, in the department of civil engineering, having earned his tuition as clerk in the employ of the C. B. & Q. R. R. He spent three years there, then became identified with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in the operating department at San Francisco in 1882, where he worked for five years; then he was transferred to Santa Barbara, where he became station agent for the same company, this being the opening of the road; here he remained until 1894. He then became assistant to William Hood, chief engineer for the Southern Pacific, and for the following ten years was very active in this work. After the coast line from Santa Margarita to Santa Barbara was completed in 1901, Mr. Austin was sent to Ogden, Utah, where he was put in full charge of the east end of the thirty-mile trestle across Salt Lake out of Ogden, which was completed in May, 1902. From Ogden, Utah, he went to Sparks, Nev., and while here he decided to leave the service of the railroad. In 1900 he had purchased twenty acres of the Peter Clapp homestead in San Joaquin County at twenty-five dollars per acre, and desiring to locate on it and improve it, he gave up engineering work; later he purchased ten more acres, which he set to an orchard of almonds, peaches and apricots and a fine vineyard, all in full bearing now and highly productive.

Mr. Austin was married in December, 1904, to Miss Mabel Temple, a native of Scotland, who had resided in California since 1896, and they have one son, Neil T. Mrs. Austin is secretary of the Farm Bureau of the Summer Home local and is prominent in Eastern Star circles. Mr. Austin is a prominent Mason, being past master of the Santa Barbara and Manteca lodges, and the initial master of the Manteca lodge; he is past high priest of the Royal Arch Chapter, a member of the Commandery, both of Santa Barbara, and for the past twenty years has been a member of the Islam Temple of San Francisco. In politics he is a staunch Republican.

L. F. GRIMSLEY.—An enterprising representative of an early pioneer family is L. F. Grimsley, whose activities for the progress and prosperity of his native city and county are well known. He was born on a ranch twelve miles east of Stockton, Cal., on October 3, 1877, a son of Louis E. and Minnie (Klinger) Grimsley. His father is a native of Illinois who migrated to California in an early day and located in Stockton and engaged in farming pursuits; later he entered the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company, where he has been for many years, and at the present time is foreman of the plumbing department. His maternal grandfather, George Klinger, a native of Germany, was also a California pioneer who located in Sacramento in 1852; he was a saddle and harness maker by trade; when he later located in Stockton he was associated with ex-sheriff Tom Cunningham in a harness shop. Later he bought a ranch east of Stockton and followed farming and it was on this ranch that the mother of our subject was born. Both parents are living and reside in Stockton.

L. F. Grimsley received his education in the Linden district school; later he was employed by the Holt Manufacturing Company in the sales and shipping department and was in their employ for seventeen years, thirteen years of which he traveled as a salesman. In 1913 he became the agent for the C. L. Best Traction Company's tractor and at the present time is distributor for eight counties in California. The C. L. Best Traction Company was established in San Leandro thirty years ago; they first manufactured a steam tractor and about ten years ago started the manufacture of the popular C. L. Best gas tractor. The California Packing corporation are using the Best tractor in the developing of a 3800 acre apricot and peach orchard in Merced County, the largest of its kind in the world; Libby, McNeil & Libby also use them on their large ranch in San Joaquin County; the East Side Investment Co. have four of these tractors on their 20,000 acre ranch in Merced County; the California Delta Farms Company of Stockton also use one, and the Merced Irrigation District are using three sixty horsepower tractors on their irrigation project and about five hundred C. L. Best track-layer tractors are at present in use in subject's territory.

Mr. Grimsley has always taken an active part in civic affairs. During the World War he was active in all Liberty Loan drives; at the present time he is a director in the Chamber of Commerce and has been a member of that body for many years. He is a member of the Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W.; the Elks and the Yosemite Club. Mr. Grimsley has been very successful in his business ventures, and makes friends wherever he goes and is always ready to give of his time and energy to any good cause, and Stockton is proud to count him among her citizens.

L. F. Grimsley

FRANK HUTCHINSON.—A well known and worthy representative of farming interests in the Ripon district of San Joaquin County is found in Frank Hutchinson, now content to live a more quiet life, after many years of activity. He was born at Schenectady, N. Y., January 9, 1856, a son of William and Hester (Van Patten) Hutchinson, who were of Scotch and Holland Dutch parentage and parents of three children, all living. The mother died about 1861. When a lad of ten years he accompanied his father to California via Panama. His parent was a machinist by trade and upon arriving in San Francisco, entered the shops of the Union Iron Works; some years later he went to Sacramento as a foreman in the railroad shops. While on a visit to relatives and friends in the home town of Schenectady, in May, 1886, he passed away. Frank Hutchinson remained in California and at the age of fourteen went to work on the John Frederick ranch near Ripon, where he remained for eighteen months; then went to live with Warren Howell on the ranch northwest of Ripon, what is now known as the Norton and Anger vineyard, and by the time he was sixteen years old, he had plowed and sowed a section of land, as well as setting out the locust trees seen in the front of the house. Forty-one years ago, Mr. Hutchinson began his farming pursuits near Ripon, where he has since resided.

On September 1, 1881, Mr. Hutchinson was married to Miss Mary Ellen Nutt, a daughter of Elias and Lucinda (Beatley) Frederick-Nutt, being the eldest of six children born to Mr. and Mrs. Nutt. Elias Nutt crossed the plains to California in 1861 and settled four miles southwest of Ripon one year later, where he farmed extensively to grain. He died at the age of seventy-four years, in 1884. He was a man of unquestioned honesty and uprightness of purpose and could always be depended upon to do his share in the development of the locality in which he lived.

Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson are the parents of three children; Clarence Ed. married Miss Alice Swagerty and is a rancher in the Calla district; Laura Inez is Mrs. Redwood W. Fisher; and William Arthur married Miss Lucinda May Nicewonger and they have four children and reside on the Nutt homestead four miles west of Ripon. From 1887 to 1888, Mr. Hutchinson was in the general merchandise business at Ripon with E. C. Dickenson as a partner; then he returned to his farming pursuits, which have since engaged his attention, and has been identified with all movements for the benefit of his locality. From the very first he has been active in the organization and development of the South San Joaquin irrigation district. For twenty years he has served as trustee of the San Joaquin school district and in 1911 he was elected constable of Dent township and served for ten consecutive years, resigning in 1921. As president of the board of trustees of the Union high school at Ripon he accomplished an outstanding work in handling the building affairs of the district and his foresight and judgment were, in no small measure, responsible for the fine, modern school building. For a number of years, Mr. Hutchinson has been in the real estate and insurance business and in this connection has been instrumental in bringing new settlers to the Ripon district, thus becoming an important factor in the advancement of the community. Since the organization of the Farmers' Mutual Protective Fire Insurance Company, Mr. Hutchinson has been the local agent. In politics Mr. Hutchinson is a Republican and fraternally is a member of Mt. Horeb Lodge No. 58, I. O. O. F. at Ripon, is a past district deputy and has served as a delegate to the grand lodge and he also belongs to Modesto Encampment No. 48. Mr. Hutchinson owns a fifty-acre dairy and orchard farm in which he takes especial pride, keeping it in fine condition. Mr. and Mrs. Hutchinson have during the long years of their residence here won the favorable regard, good will and trust of all with whom they have come in contact, and in business circles Mr. Hutchinson sustains an unassailable reputation, because he has ever been straightforward, prompt and just in all his dealings. On October 3, 1922, Mr. Hutchinson received the appointment from the board of supervisors as a member of the board of directors of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District, to succeed A. J. Nourse, who resigned. This is an added honor to this pioneer who has ever had the best interests of the community at heart.

G. E. LAWRENCE.—Near the present site of Lodi, on April 14, 1861, occurred the birth of G. E. Lawrence. His parents were Ezekiel and Mary (Hutchins) Lawrence, both natives of Ontario, Canada. His father crossed the plains, arriving in Sacramento in the spring of 1850. He went immediately to the mines, where he spent a number of years engaged in mining, in the merchandise business, and in working at his trade as a carpenter. He came to the Lodi district in the year 1857 and settled on government land, perfecting his title to a homestead and a pre-emption right. He began immediately to clear and improve the land, and engaged in grain farming. He also planted one of the first orchards and vineyards in this vicinity. In 1869, in conjunction with two adjacent landholders he petitioned the Central Pacific Railroad Company to establish the station which afterwards became the site of the city of Lodi. The first schoolhouse in Salem school district was erected on his land in the year 1859, he donating the carpenter work. He and another pioneer, John Hutchins, established the first irrigating plant in this vicinity, diverting the water from the Mokelumne River by means of a fifteen inch centrifugal pump driven by steam power. There were three children in his family: William H., deceased; George E., and Nettie M. Lawrence.

George E. Lawrence, after finishing the district schools, entered St. Mary's College, from which institution he graduated in 1882 with the degree of B. S. He then took up the study of the law, and was elected justice of the peace of Elkhorn Township, in which office he served one term. He then entered the law offices of David S. Tiry and J. C. Campbell, in the city of Stockton, and was admitted to practice in 1887. He followed the practice of his profession for a number of years, up to the death of his brother, after which he returned to Lodi and took charge of his family's interests. He planted the first almond orchard of commercial size in the county, and was a pioneer in the Tokay grape industry, which has added so much to the wealth and prosperity of the county.

When Lodi was incorporated, in 1906, Mr. Lawrence was elected a member of the board of trustees and became the first mayor of the city, which position he held for two terms. During his tenure of office many matters of great importance to the future development of Lodi were undertaken and brought to a successful termination. All privately owned public utilities were purchased and the present municipal water and light plants were installed. During his administration, also, the present sewage system was completed.

Fraternally, Mr. Lawrence holds membership in the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, and the Stockton Lodge of Elks, and is a charter member of San Joaquin Parlor No. 18, Native Sons of the Golden West. Mr. Lawrence was married in 1900 to Miss Emelia Jones, daughter of Dr. William Jones, one of the pioneer physicians of San Francisco.

ROBERT H. ALLEN.—A representative of the best along educational lines is the principal of the Jefferson school in Stockton, Robert H. Allen, who has served in this capacity for the past five years in a most capable manner. He was born in McPherson County, Kansas, August 8, 1884, a son of Dolphus William and Evelyn (Davis) Allen, natives of North Carolina and New York, respectively. Dolphus William Allen is a son of Joseph H. and Eliza (Apple) Allen, who moved from Litchfield, Ill., to Missouri and then to Kansas. On January 3, 1883, Dolphus William Allen was married to Evelyn Davis a daughter of Orson Davis, who settled in Case County, Kansas, in 1877, where he remained for four years, then removed to McPherson County, that state. In 1887 Dolphus William Allen left Kansas and settled in Lamar, Colo., where he carried the mail from Lamar, forty miles west across the plains to connect with western mail, and he also engaged in farming until the fall of 1888, when he removed to Stockton, Cal., where he drove one of the first mule cars and later followed the painting and decorating trade until 1916. He then leased a ranch fourteen miles from Stockton; later he moved to a ranch twenty-three miles from Stockton, where he farmed. He now owns a ranch on the Lower Sacramento Road, about seven miles from Stockton. Three children were born to this couple: Robert H., our subject; Dora, Mrs. Herbert Cash, of Stockton, who has two children, Dorence and Lyman; and Irene, now Mrs. Peterquin, of Stockton, who has two children, Lillian and Albert. Mrs. Allen is a member of the degree of Pocahontas of Stockton.

Robert H. Allen began his education in the Stockton grammar schools and finished with the normal course at the Western School of Commerce. At twelve years of age he learned the candymaker's trade, which he followed for two years, then assisted his father in interior decorating for some time; following this he engaged as a contract lather in Lodi until he was twenty-three years of age, when he took up educational work. His first position as school teacher was at Capay, Yolo County, sixteen miles from Woodland; then he taught three years at Georgetown, in El Dorado County, and the following year at Los Alamos, Santa Barbara County. Returning to Stockton he taught for eight years in the grade schools of the city and for six months was the vice-principal of the Jackson school and then principal of the Hazelton school for two years; since 1917 he has efficiently handled the principalship of the Jefferson school, the largest grade school in Stockton. While residing in Capay Mr. Allen conducted a grocery store; he now owns a grocery store at 1136 North East street, Stockton.

The marriage of Mr. Allen occurred in Sacramento County, June 10, 1909, which united him with Miss Erma Giovannetti, born at Tancred, Cal., a daughter of Biaggio and Rose Giovannetti, natives of the province of Lucca, Italy, who came to California many years ago, where he farmed. These children were born to them: Joseph, Clara, Erma, Mrs. Allen, Amelio, Romeo, Julia, Rose; one child is deceased. Mr. Allen is a Republican in politics and fraternally is a member and at six different times has been noble grand of the I. O. O. F., and now belongs to Charity Lodge No. 6, and is a member also of the Encampment of Stockton; he is a member of the Morning Star Lodge No. 68, of Masons in Stockton and of the Pyramid No. 5 Sciots. From 1901 to 1906 he was a member of and the last eighteen months served as first sergeant of Company A, 6th Infantry, N. G. C., and at the same time his father was a member of the same company.

THOMAS ROOKE STRIBLEY.—A well-known and popular business man who has made Stockton his home for the past thirty years is Mr. Thomas Rooke Stribley, whose business is the repairing of motor boats, his shop being located on Weber Point. He is a native of England and was born in New Quay, Cornwall, August 20, 1866. His advantages for an education were very meager and when only thirteen years of age he started to make his own way in the world and for four years he drove a baker's wagon. He then served an apprenticeship for four years in blacksmithing, and at the end of this period he was a competent workman. In order to gain practical experience in his line he worked in different blacksmith shops all over England and became proficient as a shipsmith and was able to construct machinery of all kinds and specialized in wagon making. In 1892 he came from England to Stockton and from there to Georgetown, El Dorado County, working at his trade and in the mines for a year; returning to Stockton he was employed with different firms at his trade; then he went to work for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, remaining with them for one year; twenty-six years ago he bought a shop at Center and Channel streets and has been in business for himself ever since. When he started in business there was only one gasoline motor boat on the river while now there are hundreds. He is the inventor of the Stribley hand truck used on the barges and in the warehouses for handling freight.

The marriage of Mr. Stribley united him with Miss Lucy Carpenter, a native daughter of California, born in Georgetown, and they are the parents of four children: Earl, Kenneth, Edna, and Charles, all natives of Stockton. Mr. Stribley built a home in the Fair Oaks district of Stockton and he now owns three houses in that section. Fraternally he is a member of Truth Lodge and Parker Encampment of Odd Fellows, being a past grand in the subordinate lodge, and treasurer of the Encampment for several years and has served ten years as clerk of the board of trustees of Fair Oaks school district. In his political views he is a Republican.

Mr. Stribley served as a member of the Board of Freeholders to draft the new city charter for Stockton, to which he gave much time and his best effort. He has assisted materially in the rebuilding of his locality and is a booster for all measures that are for the advancement of the community.

LARRY P. MAPLE.—The name of Larry P. Maple is inseparably interwoven with the history of frontier life and the suppression of the Indians, first in Arizona and later in Wyoming, where he earned an excellent record as a soldier and Indian fighter. He was considered the second-best rifle shot in his regiment. He was born at Irondale, in Jefferson County, Ohio, on February 3, 1853, a son of Ezekiel and Mary (Mapel) Maple, natives of Ohio and New Jersey respectively. Ezekiel Maple was a stockman and farmer, and engaged extensively in buying and selling stock, which he shipped East to the Pennsylvania mountains. They were the parents of nine children: Sarah, Benjamin, William and James are deceased; Kaziah resides in Iowa; George and Mary are deceased; Larry P. is the subject of this review; and Oscar resides in Washington. The father passed away at the age of eighty-nine, and the mother at eighty-five years of age.

Larry P. Maple began his education in the grammar school of his native town and continued it at an academy near there. When he was fifteen years old, he learned the horse-shoeing trade, at which he worked for three years in Ohio and at Pughtown, Va. When he was still a mere youth he entered the 3rd United States Cavalry, the noted regiment founded by Ethan Allen in Revolutionary days. He trained at St. Louis and entered the company at Fort Yuma, Ariz., and was active in the suppression of the Apache Indians in 1869. In 1870 the 5th United States Cavalry relieved them and the 3rd United States Cavalry was transferred to Fort D. A. Russell, Wyoming, to suppress the uprising of the Sioux and Cheyenne Indians. Here Mr. Maple was in many encounters with the Indians. In one bush-whacking engagement he was wounded in one arm, but was not incapacitated for long. His service in Wyoming covered three years; then he was discharged. He helped to build Fort Robinson, ninety-eight miles northeast of Fort Laramie; and served for one season with Major North (known as "White Beaver" by the Indians) in a company known as the Pawnee Scouts.

For a number of years Mr. Maple engaged in buffalo hunting in the Northwest, selling the hides for from $1 to $5 apiece. He then returned to civilization, settling in Otoe County, Neb., where he bought a half-section of land and farmed for ten years. He then sold it and, removing to Nebraska City, became the exclusive agent for the Standard Oil Company's retail trade there, remaining for seven years. Then he removed to Puget Sound, Wash., and entered the transportation department of the Puget Sound Interurban Electric Railroad, remaining in that capacity until 1913, when he removed to Lodi and purchased a ten-acre vineyard of eight-year-old vines about a mile and three-quarters east of Lodi. Here he built a house and has further developed the property with an irrigation system, consisting of a four-inch pump driven by a ten-horsepower motor.

The marriage of Mr. Maple occurred in Nebraska City on November 19, 1879, and united him with Miss Harriet Shuster, a native of Van Buren County, Iowa, a daughter of Samuel and Sarah (Hayden) Shuster, natives of Ohio and Kentucky, respectively, who were the parents of seven children: Ella, Harriet (Mrs. Maple), Louisa, Jacob, John, James and Myrtle, all residents of Nebraska City with the exception of Mrs. Maple. Mrs. Maple was reared and educated in Otoe County, Neb., for her parents had removed there when she was a small child. Her father lived to be eighty-three, and her mother is still living at the age of eighty-six. Grandfather Hayden lived to be 101½ years old. Mr. and Mrs. Maple have one daughter, Iva, now Mrs. Horace C. Mann, of Stockton, and the mother of one child, Lorraine. Mr. Maple is a Democrat in politics. He is a Mason and Knight of Pythias of Nebraska City, and both he and Mrs. Maple are members of the Eastern Star of Nebraska City. Mrs. Maple is a student of Christian Science.

Mr. Maple comes from a long line of fighters. His great-grandfather was a soldier in the Revolutionary War; his grandfather Maple was a commander of a company in the War of 1812; he had four brothers in the Civil War, two of whom lost their lives in the terrible struggle; and he had three brothers-in-law in the Civil War. His interest in his city and county is that of a public-spirited citizen, and his co-operation can always be counted upon to further any movement for the general good.

EDWARD MELLMANN.—There are few men who can more justly claim the proud American title of self-made man than Edward Mellmann, who at the early age of fourteen years started out for himself in life, with no special advantages to fit him for its cares and responsibilities. He was industrious and resolute, however, and these qualities enabled him to overcome the difficulties and obstacles in his path and work his way steadily upward to affluence. He was born in Hamburg, Germany, on June 27, 1858, the only child of Edward and Lena (Aubert) Mellmann. The father was an expert blacksmith and passed away when only thirty-seven years old, the mother preceding him by a few years; so that the son was early left an orphan.

Edward Mellmann attended public school in Hamburg, and when only fourteen years old started out to make his own way. He was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith trade, which apprenticeship covered a period of five years; then he entered the Altinaw horseshoeing school, where he remained for six months. At the end of this time he enlisted in the German army, serving three years. Then he spent another six months in a horseshoeing school; and after finishing school he was employed by the German government, shoeing horses in the army, which he followed for two years. For the next five years he worked in various machine shops and on farms; and then went to Copenhagen, where he worked at his trade for two years. Returning to his native city of Hamburg, he was married in August, 1888, and remained there working at his trade until 1898, when he and his wife came to the United States, and directly to Lodi, Cal. Mr. Mellmann purchased a five-acre tract of land on South School Street and erected a blacksmith shop. There he followed his trade until 1920, when he tore down the shop and built his residence. He has set the place to vineyard and installed two two-and-a-half-inch pumps with two motors, one of five horsepower and the other four horsepower. Mrs. Mellman is the owner of 133 acres on Prince Rupert Isle, Canada, which came to her from her brother's estate. Mr. and Mrs. Mellmann are the parents of six children. Edward, Jr., was killed near his home by a Southern Pacific train when only sixteen years old. Caroline, now Mrs. Collins, has been married twice, and resides in Oakland; she has four children; one by her first husband, namely, Miss Bernice Aubert, now fourteen years of age, a pupil in the Lodi High School, who lives with her maternal grandparents at Lodi; and three by her second union, namely, Belle Collins, Philip Collins, and Rita Collins. Esther is Mrs. Judibaugh, of Ventura. Lena is Mrs. Schmidt, of Berkeley, and has one son, Edward. Dora is Mrs. Richmond, of Oakland. Fred Mellmann, the only living son, resides at home with his parents.

In national politics, Mr. Mellmann is a Republican. Fraternally, he is a member and Past President of the Herman Sons Lodge, and has been a delegate to the state convention; and is also a member of the Foresters of America.

GEORGE L. MEISSNER.—One of the leading and influential citizens of Lodi, who has demonstrated his ability and resourcefulness in other cities, is George L. Meissner, president of the Valley Lumber Co., rated among the leading lumber companies of the San Joaquin Valley. A native of Wisconsin, he was born at Madison on July 15, 1867, and remained there until he was four years of age, when his parents removed to Iowa, where he was reared. His education began in the public schools of Iowa and was supplemented with a course at the Iowa State College at Ames; he then went to Lincoln, Nebr., and for the following twenty years was identified with the banking interests of that state; he owned the controlling interest in a bank at Liberty, Neb., for six years; then removed to Crete, Neb. and purchased the First National Bank and became its president, and was closely identified with the social, educational and commercial affairs of the state during his residence there. Under the strain of his varied interests his health was impaired and in the fall of 1910 he came to California to recuperate and finally settled in Lodi. He purchased the Smith & Bryant Lumber Company, one of the pioneer lumber companies of this district, incorporated it under the name of the "Valley Lumber Company of Lodi" and became the president. The business of the company has steadily grown and is in a very prosperous condition, owing to the efficient management of its president. Mr. Meissner is president of the City Improvement Company; is a charter member of the Rotary Club; is past president of the Lodi Business Men's Association, similar in organization and purpose to the Chamber of Commerce; and for six years he was a member of the grammar school board of Lodi and is still actively interested in educational matters.

Mr. Meissner's marriage united him with Miss Minerva De Pue, a native of Ohio, and they are the parents of two daughters, Ruth, a graduate of Stanford University; and Alice. Mrs. Meissner passed away in March of 1921. She was president of the Woman's Club of Lodi and an active member of the Congregational Church and of the Eastern Star. Mr. Meissner is affiliated fraternally with the Lodi Odd Fellows No. 259; the Blue Lodge of Masons in Lodi; the Royal Arch and Knights Templar of Stockton, and Ben Ali Temple of Sacramento. He is a member of the Congregational Church of Lodi. Mr. Meissner is a natural leader and his influence and support count in all affairs that have for their ultimate goal the upbuilding of the community with which he is vitally and honorably associated.

JESSE F. SHEPHERD.—An energetic, progressive contractor of exceptionally wide experience and enjoying an enviable reputation for dependability is Jesse F. Shepherd, of the well-known firm of Shepherd & Riley, of 303 Yosemite Building, Stockton. He was born in Mexico, Mo., the day after Christmas, in 1878, and there reared and educated until he was eighteen years of age. Then he went to Kansas City, learned the carpenter trade, and became superintendent of construction for Messrs. Hollinger & Mitchell, one of the largest contracting firms in Kansas City; and while there, he profited by the experience obtained in assisting to erect a number of notable buildings. The great fire following the earthquake that overwhelmed San Francisco drew Mr. Shepherd, as the necessity for help drew so many thousands of other skilled artisans, westward to the Pacific Coast, and at San Francisco he became superintendent of construction for one of the large contracting firms, and erected a number of structures requiring experience and natural ability to progress successfully to the end. Among these difficult or extensive enterprises was the construction of Recreation Base Ball Park, for the San Francisco team of the Pacific Coast League; and on that job Mr. Shepherd made a record which will probably never again be equaled. He laid out one and one-half million feet of lumber in six weeks' time; the work was carried along daily during all the twenty-four hours, and Mr. Shepherd had all his meals brought to him, and slept only a few hours each night until the contract was finished. Later he became the superintendent for Grant Phee, the contractor in San Francisco, and erected a number of buildings.

In 1909, Mr. Shepherd was called to Stockton to superintend the building of the Hotel Stockton, by Frank H. Martin, who had the contract; but before coming to Stockton, he was sent to Prescott, Ariz., to superintend the construction of twenty-eight buildings for the U. S. Government. Having successfully completed the hotel which made Stockton more famous, Mr. Shepherd joined F. H. Martin in forming the firm of Martin & Shepherd; and not long after that Mr. Martin was killed in an automobile accident. In 1911, Mr. Shepherd undertook contracting for himself in a small way, putting up in Stockton some neat cottages and then selling them; and later he branched out in larger work. He erected the Del Monte Hotel, a residence for G. E. Bartholomew costing $18,000, the Kitts Garage, on North El Dorado Street, the brick warehouse for the Wagner Leather Company, and a number of modern garage buildings, as well as the theater at Lodi, another at Merced costing $55,000, and various other houses. During war-time, when business was slack, he went to the Island district and erected 800 corn cribs, some of them for the Rindge Land & Navigation Company. He also went to Yolo County, on the Sacramento River, on Liberty Island, and built $40,000 worth of camps.

In 1919 Mr. Shepherd formed a partnership with E. F. Riley, and under the firm name of Shepherd & Riley they did much work in this section. They built the theater in Pittsburg, Contra Costa County, costing $60,000, and a warehouse for the California Packing Corporation, costing $40,000, a warehouse for the Sperry Flour Company, put up at an equal outlay, and a $55,000 warehouse for the Stockton Canning & Packing Company. They were also the builders of the Fair Oaks school, and of schools at Salida and at Atlanta, in Stanislaus County. Among the recent work completed and under construction by Shepherd & Riley may be mentioned the McKinley school in Stockton, $145,000; the Oakdale grammar school, $52,000, and commercial buildings in the city of Stockton aggregating $100,000. They have under construction at the present time the high school auditorium in Stockton, $90,000; a $78,000 addition to the El Dorado school; addition to the gymnasium and high school manual training shop, $35,000; and the new Roosevelt school, $129,000. Shortly after coming to Stockton, Mr. Shepherd was the superintendent of construction on a number of bridges built by the county, and the successful completion of the work to the entire satisfaction of the authorities proved one of the best of references. In April, 1923, the partnership was dissolved, Mr. Shepherd continuing at the old location.

Mr. Shepherd, who is a member of Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., Stockton, was married on April 15, 1904, at Kansas City, Mo., to Martha Trafas of Olathe, Kansas. They have one son, J. Corbin Shepherd.

EDWIN HAMILTON CARY.—Well-known in the city of Stockton as a dealer in musical instruments, band supplies and musical merchandise, Edwin Hamilton Cary has contributed much towards the development of the business and social conditions, and ever since he took up his residence here in 1882, has given Stockton all that is highest and best in music, being the pioneer in the field of endeavor. A native of Oregon, he was born at Portland, March 25, 1851, a son of Luther and Rebecca (Harbart) Cary. Luther Cary was born in New London County, Connecticut, July 24, 1817, and accompanied his parents to South Warren, Bradford County, Pa., and in 1837 he taught school there. The next year he moved to Peoria County, Ill., where he married and farmed. In 1850 he located in Oregon, having crossed the plains with ox-teams. He settled above Vancouver and conducted a ferry, but in 1852 he settled in Marion County and farmed and taught school. Circumstances necessitated his taking the lecture platform and he lectured on astronomy, qualifying himself by close study for several years. He lectured all over Oregon and California with occasional trips East, and filled engagements in Washington, Montana, Idaho, Nebraska, Kansas, British Columbia and elsewhere. In 1863 he came to San Jose, Cal., where he lived for ten years. Many of the leading citizens of San Jose, among them J. J. Owen, editor of the Mercury, Dr. Clark and others, urged him to seek a position in connection with the Lick Observatory, when that institution was projected, as a desirable field for a man of his attainments. But his travels precluded his accepting any local position.

He married Louisa Humphrey on January 1, 1839, and they had five children. His second marriage, September 25, 1848, united him with Rebecca Harbart, born July 14, 1831, and they had eight children, four living: Edwin H., of this sketch; George W. A. in Sacramento; Charles A. and Mrs. Frank Parker, in Oregon.

He engaged in raising Angora goats on Mt. Hamilton and in 1875, in company with his son, Edwin H., moved their flocks to Calaveras County, purchasing a range of 1800 acres on Bear Mountain. Later he drove his goats to Oregon, where he sold them and retired from the business to take the lecture platform. He died April 2, 1890, near Seattle, Wash. The mother of our subject passed away January 7, 1894.

The genealogy of the Cary family, so far as known by our subject, is traced back to Benjamin Cary, who was born in Massachusetts, and later moved to Windham County, Conn., where he reared a family. Although there is known to have been a book printed regarding the Cary family, which perhaps connects them with the poets, Phoebe and Alice Cary, who were both born near Cincinnati, Ohio, daughters of Robert Cary, it is not available at this time. Benjamin Cary had a son he named Luther Cary (this name seems to run all through the Cary families) who was born on Nov. 11, 1768, in Windham County, Conn., and he had five brothers who served in the War of the Revolution; one named Oliver, went to Pennsylvania; another went to Vermont, and one of his sons, in 1812, went to Sacketts Harbor and from him are descended the Carys on the Pacific Coast. Luther Cary married Rispah Allen on Nov. 11, 1792. She was born at Groton, New London County, Conn., February 18, 1772. One of their sons was named Luther, father of Edwin H. In an academy at Portland, Edwin H. secured his schooling and in 1874 went to San Jose with his father, who had extensive interests in Santa Clara County, and in 1875 went to Calaveras County, where they engaged in raising Angora goats. After the father sold his herd, the son continued in that business independently, later selling his ranch and driving the band north to Shasta County, where he disposed of it. Returning to Calaveras County, he engaged in mining at Angels Camp and while there organized and conducted a band, also taught music. His services were much in demand in Calaveras and Tuolumne counties, Cary's Band and Orchestra still being a pleasant remembrance to many of the old settlers of those mining districts.

In 1882 Mr. Cary settled in Stockton, where he followed the carpenter's trade and aided in building for L. G. Thompson the first harvesters made in the city. While at Angels Camp he secured an agency for the sale of pianos in San Joaquin County from the Kohler & Chase Company of San Francisco, and after coming to Stockton he took up the sale of pianos as a side line, making his home at that time on East Channel St. In 1888, he decided to devote his entire attention to that business and opened his present store at No. 547 East Market Street, putting in a good line of musical instruments and becoming the pioneer in that line in the city. He carries a complete line of band instruments and supplies and general musical merchandise. His creative ability led to the invention of the Cary snare drum, which has met with a large sale and is regarded as one of the best on the market. At the Panama-Pacific Exposition, held at San Francisco in 1915, his drum was awarded a gold medal. In association with his sons, Edwin Liberty and Francis R., Mr. Cary managed and conducted the Sixth Regiment Band in Stockton, while his son E. L. became its director. Many enjoyable concerts were given in the Plaza and the organization reached a high standard, being regarded as the best band ever established in the city.

On September 16, 1871, Mr. Cary married Miss Caroline A. McLeran at Albany, Ore., and her demise occurred at Stockton, December 28, 1920. She was a native of Wisconsin and crossed the plains to Oregon with her parents in 1865. While residing on their mountain ranch in Calaveras County Mr. and Mrs. Cary became the parents of two sons: Edwin L. and Francis R., the former a resident of Stockton and the latter of San Francisco. When they were seven years of age their father began their musical education and they are now talented artists, having been members of the orchestras of the leading playhouses of San Francisco, Sacramento and Stockton. Edwin L. Cary, a cornetist of more than ordinary ability and a talented musician, is a teacher of wind and string instruments. When the Boston Opera Company produced the opera "Robin Hood" at the old Avon Theatre he was cornetist in their orchestra, being at that time twelve years of age, and the manager of the company was so favorably impressed with his playing that he sought to induce him to become a permanent member of the organization, but on account of his age his parents did not favor the idea of traveling. Edwin L. married Gladys Fine Osborn, November 25, 1903, and they have two children: Ellen Lorraine and Earl Lauren. The other son, Frank R. Cary, is a violinist in the orchestra of the Casino Theatre of San Francisco, and is also an expert performer on the trombone, being a teacher of both instruments. He is the father of two girls, Alice M. and Elizabeth. Both sons inherited their father's musical ability and the family is an exceptionally talented one.

Mr. Cary's life has been an active and upright one, filled with varied experiences and characterized by the successful accomplishment of valuable results. For many years he has been closely identified with Stockton's development and upbuilding and his record is a matter of pride to its citizens.

DANIEL GILLIES.—Among the early settlers of Clements and an early California miner, dating back to 1854, was the late Daniel Gillies, who was born in County Tyrone, Ireland, and came to America with his mother in 1830, when he was five years of age, in a sailing vessel around Cape Horn. He was engaged in mining near Coloma, Eldorado County. He was married in San Francisco in June, 1859, to Miss Elizabeth McKinny, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., who came to California that year with her brother, via Panama.

Mr. Gillies had charge of the flume for conducting the water to the hydraulic mines. In 1861 he moved to Lancha Plana, Amador County, where he superintended the water supply for mining. In 1862 he located in San Joaquin County and purchased the old Poland House ranch, which consisted of a quarter-section of farm land about one mile east of what is now Clements. The old Poland House was a roadside hotel, conducted to accommodate travelers journeying to and from the mines. The first postoffice was also there in early days and was called Poland House postoffice. Daniel Gillies gave up the hotel business, but farmed the land, mostly as a grain farmer, for nearly forty years, until his death in 1900. His wife had died previously. They had six children, three of whom are living: Cecilia for the last thirty-five years has been in the employ of the Government as deputy postmaster and now as postmaster at Clements, and also conducts a branch of the San Joaquin County Free Library; Charles B. Gillies lives at Folsom, and Sallie E. makes her home at Clements.

NEWLEN J. MILLER.—Among the real builders of a community are those who erect substantial and permanent buildings and one who has won for himself a prominent place in the city of Lodi is Newlen J. Miller, who has operated in many parts of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He was born in Christian County, Mo., on August 15, 1873, a son of a farmer, and his life was spent on the home farm until he was twenty-one years of age. His schooling was somewhat meager, but when the opportunity came to learn mining engineering under his uncle, George W. Miller, the famous mining engineer of Denver, Colo., he grasped the opportunity and joined his uncle in Cripple Creek, Colo., where he remained for two years. His uncle is one of the best known and foremost mining engineers of the country; in 1910 he wrote and published a book on the subject of mining and our subject drew the plans for the maps illustrating the work.

Mr. Miller later became the mining engineer for the Amdson Zinc Manufacturing Company of Joplin, Mo.; he also erected mills at the mines and made a thorough study of zinc mining and became an expert on the subject. He then removed to Denver, Colo., and engaged in brick contracting and erected many of the finest business blocks in the city; he also built several buildings in Colorado Springs; he then removed to San Francisco in 1904 and took up the plasterer's trade and at the time of the great earthquake and fire in 1906 was most active in the rebuilding of the city, constructing many business blocks and fine residences around the Bay. The following year, 1907, we find him in Reno, Nev., where he remained for a time working at his trade; then to Fresno, Cal., for a time; he then engaged in magnesite mining at Ingomar during the years of 1916 and 1917, after which, for a short time, he engaged in placer mining at Mokelumne Hill in Placer County. During the month of January, 1919, he settled in Lodi where he has followed contracting in brick and plastering; among the outstanding contracts being the brick block for Mr. Guggolz, the tile residence for Dan W. Bird, the V. Kyle residence at Thornton, Dr. Bollinger's residence at Lodi, the Ed Spiekerman residence, the Strange residence on his ranch, the German Baptist Church, an addition to the Lafayette school building; he also plastered a $250,000 school building in San Jose and a number of churches, the Sanguinetti Hotel, the Women's Club Building, the Ferdun residence and many others in Lodi.

The marriage of Mr. Miller united him with Miss Mertice Thrasher, a native of Massachusetts, a direct descendant on her father's side of Gov. Bradford of Massachusetts, while on the mother's side she is descended from Lady Huntington of England. She is a graduate of Smith College at Northampton, Mass., and for ten years after her graduation taught in the high schools of Massachusetts. They are the parents of two children, Carol and Reinette. Fraternally Mr. Miller is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the D. O. K. K. His skilled workmanship has brought him a fine patronage, and he is a loyal supporter of every measure that is constructive.

MARTIN TROY.—For more than half a century Martin Troy has been a resident of San Joaquin County, as he was a lad of only seven years when he accompanied his parents here. He was born in Ireland on November 11, 1864, the son of Peter and Margaret (Ryan) Troy, both natives of that country, where they were married. They were the parents of five children: Thomas, Martin, Mrs. Julia Effinger, Mrs. Eugene S. McComb, and Frank. The family came to Lodi in 1871, and here the father farmed for the remainder of his life; the eldest son, Thomas, is now farming the old home place.

Martin Troy received his education in the schools of the Lodi district and when only twelve years of age he started to work on ranches in the vicinity of his home, and since that time he has continued to engage in orchard and vineyard work, being well known through his long residence here. Mr. Troy's marriage united him with Miss Mary Carroll, who was born at Santa Clara, Cal. Five children have been born to them: Mrs. Margaret Nichol of San Francisco; Frank, also of San Francisco; William; Emmet; and Martin, who gave his life for his country, falling while in action on the battlefields of France in one of the last battles of the World War.

JOHN J. CAMPODONICO.—After many years of intelligent study, John J. Campodonico has perfected a tractor that combines simplicity, economy and efficiency in the highest degree consistent with durability. He is the inventor and designer of the Campeo Tractor and a company has been incorporated entitled Campeo Tractor, Inc., a corporation formed to manufacture this tractor on a five acre site on McKinley Avenue, extending 700 feet along the Western Pacific Railroad.

John J. Campodonico is a native son of Stockton, born June 25, 1886, the youngest son of the late pioneer, John J. Campodonico, whose sketch will be found elsewhere in this volume. He received his education in the Brothers Academy, Stockton, and since 1907 has been associated with his brother and mother in farming operations. He has also devoted much time and thought to his inventions, the Campeo Tractor and the air compressing shock absorber for the automobile being the most outstanding; though there are also a number of minor inventions to his credit.

The Campeo Tractor takes its place in the tractor industry as the culmination of years of experience and experiment. Each unit, each feature, has been a special study in itself, and has been tested time and again since 1912 under the hardest working conditions. The Campeo Tractor contains all these features and units in a perfect working combination. The president of the company, John J. Campodonico, both farmer and practical engineer, a man who has constantly used tractors of many makes, early foresaw the great future of the industry, but unlike others he did not rush a model into the market. Instead, the requirements of severe service encountered were carefully studied, as well as the arrangement of power and the economy of motion. After many years of study, devoting entire attention to a tractor that should combine simplicity, economy and efficiency in the highest degree consistent with durability, the Campeo Tractor was designed and completed. New and special features of the Campeo are: An automatic two-speed forward and one reverse transmission. A separate train of drive gears to each wheel. A powerful clutch on the main drive shaft to transmit full engine power to either wheel for short turning. A track-laying wheel provided with a double row of shoes, giving a powerful traction surface on the ground, and in addition, all working parts run in oil, safe from dirt, grit and wear.

Since the introduction of the tractor in agriculture, the demand for power and more power has constantly increased. The Campeo Tractor meets this demand twofold—not by generation of more energy, but by the proper application and control of the power. It is in the application of the power itself that the Campeo stands supreme, not only in the ease by which the power is controlled, but also in the economy in wear and tear on parts. The two-speed transmission with reverse permits of changing from low to direct or direct to low without releasing the power of the engine or stopping the tractor. Other tractors, that are equipped with a standard type transmission, when shifting from low to direct or direct to low practically start with a dead load. This naturally causes a burning of clutches. The Campeo is designed to avoid stopping when changing from low to direct and from direct to low. This action is automatic and instantaneous and the momentum of the load is not lost. This is an absolutely exclusive feature of the Campeo, and the saving in power, time and fuel is readily seen. The gears of the Campeo Tractor are always in mesh, which eliminates the possibility of the breaking of gear teeth. This feature not only saves time and money, but eliminates breakdowns in the rush of the season's work. In order to properly control the power at its command, the Campeo has two independently operated clutches on the main drive shaft in one unit without adjustments or toggles of any kind. It is placed between the transmission and the gear trains, one clutch for each set of gears. This arrangement permits a small, powerful clutch to transmit the total engine power to either tractor wheel in making a turn or to both wheels when driving ahead or in reverse. All the moving parts are tightly enclosed, making it impossible for dust to get at them, and thus eliminating much of the wear and consequent grief that have always afflicted tractor users since the first machines began to replace horses. The tractor members are undoubtedly the most important unit in a tractor, and the method used to apply the power delivered to the wheels decides its value to the world of agriculture. Campeo wheels are provided with track-laying shoes. Each wheel has a staggered double tread which presents large traction surface to the ground. An extension of the wheel surface can also be made to increase the traction on soft or muddy soil. Since the action of the wheel, rim, links and shoes is a rolling one, and the oscillating movement of the links in the hook connection is limited, the wear on these points is negligible. The advantage of this new feature in tractor wheel construction is a powerful traction in difficult soils, and a minimum of wear and tear with comparatively no upkeep.

No other piece of automotive machinery has to withstand the extremely hard working conditions which the tractor must meet. It must work through all seasons, under every climatic condition, in every kind of soil, in dust, mud, sand, uphill and down, pulling constantly its full rated load with no let-up. It must be built so that it can absolutely be depended upon by the owner; for when he needs his tractor it must be ready, and it must be able to give him a full measure of service each day throughout the season. It must be the most dependable piece of machinery on the farm. The Campo Tractor lives up to this standard of performance.

Mr. Campodonico divides his time between Stockton and San Francisco in the construction of his inventions and new improvements, all of which are practical labor-saving devices.

DAVID WOLF.—In his business career David Wolf has manifested unflagging industry, marked enterprise and keen discernment, and as the secretary-treasurer of the Peters-Wolf-Dohrmann Company, one of the leading insurance companies of Stockton, has made for himself a place among the prosperous residents of that city. He was born in Germany on October 20, 1863, and received his education in the fine schools of his native country. He was sixteen years old when he left home to come to the new world and the land of greater opportunities; he first worked in Montana in the mines, then went to British Columbia where he did the same kind of work. In his younger days he had the privilege of studying music in his native land and became a proficient performer on the violin.

In 1892 he came West and located in San Francisco where he spent two years as a musician in the theaters of that city; then he settled in Stockton, where during the next five years he was a musician at the Yosemite, Avon and Stockton theaters. In 1899 he entered the employ of Charles Weber to take charge of the Capt. Charles M. Weber estate, which was, at that time, considerably involved, and Mr. Wolf succeeded in straightening out the indebtedness and putting the estate in fine condition. Since the death of Charles Weber in 1912, he has had charge of the remainder of the property for his heirs. In 1913 Mr. Wolf entered the insurance business and in 1914 was made secretary-treasurer of the Peters-Wolf-Dohrmann Company, doing a general insurance business, including fire, grain, automobile, marine, life and accident. Fraternally, Mr. Wolf is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias. He has passed through all the chairs of Charter Oak Lodge No. 20 of Stockton; is treasurer of Uniform Rank K. of P., and secretary of the insurance section of the order; he was the first presiding officer of the local D. O. K. K.

The marriage of Mr. Wolf united him with Miss Ada Reynolds, a native of Pennsylvania. She is senior of the Grand Lodge of Pythian Sisters of California and is in line for the chief, which office she will occupy in 1923. They are the parents of three daughters: Ida, Mrs. William Peterson of Marysville; Florence, Mrs. Doyle Fetterman of Crows Landing, and Fanny M., at home. Mr. Wolf was president of the local Musicians' Union for ten years and is now a life member of same. He is also a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Maccabees. Throughout his whole life whatever his hand finds to do, whether in his profession or in his official duties, or in any other sphere, he does with all his might and with a deep sense of conscientious obligation.

JOHN C. PERRY.—Finding the beautiful city of Stockton an ideal home place, as well as a thriving business center, John C. Perry located here in 1917, well satisfied to make it his permanent residence, after an interesting experience of many years, during which he saw much of the world while serving in the U. S. Army and traveling throughout the West, working as a plastering contractor. Mr. Perry was born in Elizabethton, Carter County, Tenn., December 14, 1878. His father, George M. Perry, was born in Elizabethton on the Wautonga River, in Tennessee, and when nineteen years of age entered the Confederate army, serving through the Civil War. Grandfather Joseph A. Perry, of an old Scotch family, was a prominent merchant in Wautonga and was active in civic affairs, serving as justice of the peace for about fifty years; he was descended from Commodore Perry. George M. Perry was a contractor and builder and married Kathleen Hilton, a daughter of John Hilton, of Scotch-Irish and English descent, a pioneer of Tennessee who served in the Union Army during the Civil War. John C. Perry was one of a family of nine boys and four girls, and soon after finishing his schooling, enlisted in the U. S. Army in June, 1899, in Company G, Twelfth U. S. Infantry, for the Spanish-American War, and he spent three years, retiring as a sergeant, and twenty-seven months of this time was spent in the Philippines, serving in that hard-fought campaign. He participated in the taking of the railroad north of Manila as far as Tarlac, after which his company with two other companies was sent to the north end of Luzon Island, where they continued the campaign for seven months against the Filipinos, after which he rejoined his regiment in Manila and they returned to San Francisco on the Transport Thomas, and he was mustered out at the Presidio.

After his discharge from the army, Mr. Perry learned the plasterer's trade with Reed Bros., in Ogden, Utah, and then went on to Wyoming for a time, later settling at Nampa, Idaho, where he worked as a plastering contractor until 1910. The next seven years he spent in traveling, working all over the West at his trade, in Oklahoma, Texas, Washington, Oregon, Los Angeles, Yreka and Roseville, Cal., making a number of trips to the Golden State. He was in Stockton during the summer of 1916, and in May, 1917, he returned to make this his permanent location. He soon established himself here as a plastering contractor, the superior quality of his work bringing him all the business he could handle and for months his crew was never idle.

Mr. Perry's brother, Frank R. Perry, is the junior member of the firm of Perry Bros., and two other brothers are working for him in Stockton, having learned their trade under him. Mr. Perry did the plastering contracting work in twenty-five houses for the Sterling Building Company, the fine residences of Bruce P. Martin and Robert Melville, the addition to the Hotel Lodi at Lodi, the Union high school at Hughson, nearly all the work for the Davis-Heller-Pearce Company, Stockton, including five garages, the Dodge Bros.' garage—one of the finest garages in the state, most of the work for O. H. Chain, the well-known contractor, including the Hobbs-Parsons Produce House, the Silva Flats on North San Joaquin Street, addition to the St. Joseph's Home, the Jefferson school, the two-story brick block for Dr. Craviotto, the F. E. Murphy residence, Tuxedo Park, the Steed Bros. & Laton garage, Bake Rite Bakery, the new Chamber of Commerce building, new Victory school, high school auditorium, Jefferson school addition, El Dorado school addition and new Roosevelt school, also residences in various parts of the county, First National Bank, Los Banos, and a large apartment house in Sacramento.

J. C. Perry

While living at Nampa, Idaho, Mr. Perry was married November 27, 1902, to Miss Effie E. Randall, who was born in Carthage, Mo. Her father, Orville P. Randall, was born in Elmira, N. Y., but removed to Illinois where he enlisted in an Illinois regiment of Volunteer Infantry and served in the Civil War. After the war he removed to Missouri where he married Mrs. Violetta (Reed) Ritchie, a native of Kentucky, whose mother, Susan Morse, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, was a granddaughter of Stephen Morse, the inventor of telegraphy. Their ancestry is also traced back to Commodore Perry. Orville P. Randall was a carpenter and builder and removed with his family to Boise City, Idaho, later going to Nampa, the same state, and afterwards to Grant's Pass, Ore., where he died. His widow survived him several years, spending her last days in Los Angeles. This worthy couple were the parents of three children, of whom Mrs. Perry is the second born. The union of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Perry has been blessed with four children: Ardroe, Olga, Gordon and Beatrice. Mr. Perry is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and in politics inclines to the principles of the Democratic party. Besides his residence in Bungalow Park he is the owner of two acres of choice land near the Stockton Golf and Country Club, a fine building site, where he expects to erect an attractive country home.

SAMUEL BITTNER.—The life history of Samuel Bittner furnishes a splendid example of what may be accomplished through determined purpose, laudable ambition and well-directed efforts. He was born near Lehr, McIntosh County, N. D., on March 1, 1892. He is the third son in a family of six children of John and Margaret (Meyer) Bittner. John Bittner migrated from his home near Odessa, Russia, to North Dakota, where he became a large farmer and land owner. His first wife died there and he was married a second time. In 1903 he came to Lodi and purchased 150 acres, which he improved to orchard and vineyard. He died in 1921.

Samuel Bittner began his education in the schools of North Dakota, and after his family came to California, in 1903, he attended the Alpine school near Lodi. He helped in the hard work of the farm, and remained with his parents until he was twenty-one years old. He then returned to Lehr, N. D., where he worked for wages for a time, later renting 320 acres of grain land, which he farmed for six years. He then sold his equipment and returned to San Joaquin County, where he purchased fifteen acres in vineyard near the Alpine school. At the death of his father, he received eighteen acres as his portion of the estate, making a total of thirty-three acres; he also leases thirty acres in vineyard from his brother and sister. His vineyard is irrigated by a six-inch pump driven by a fifteen horsepower motor.

On December 12, 1916, in Lehr, N. D., Mr. Bittner was united in marriage with Miss Caroline Meyer, a daughter of Henry and Eva (Fry) Meyer, and a native of Russia, who came to North Dakota when she was four years old, and there received her education. They are the parents of two sons, Raymond, deceased, and Le Roy. Mr. Bittner and family are active members of the Evangelical Church of Victor, and were liberal contributors when funds were raised for a new building. He is a Republican in politics.

JACOB J. KNOLL.—A well-known citizen and vinyardist of San Joaquin County is Jacob J. Knoll, who has worked his way upward from a humble financial position to one of independence, and is the owner of a ten-acre vineyard one and a half miles southeast of Victor. He was born in South Russia near the city of Odessa, December 24, 1890, a son of Jacob and Christina (Werner) Knoll, both natives of Russia, who came to the United States when their son Jacob was a boy of six years. They settled in Wells County, N. D., and there the father homesteaded a large tract of land; later on he sold his North Dakota property and removed to San Joaquin County, Cal., and purchased vineyard land, which he brought to a high state of cultivation, so that he is among the most wealthy of the vinyardists in the vicinity of Victor today.

The education of Jacob Knoll was obtained in the public schools of his vicinity; but from a lad he assisted his father on the home farm, where he was obliged to work early and late. He remained at home until he was nineteen years old, and then went to Canada in 1909 and homesteaded a quarter-section of land lying along the Saskatchewan River in Saskatchewan, near the town of Moose Jaw. There he raised grain, remaining until 1919, when he sold out and came to California. Here he purchased ten acres on the crossroads, about two miles southeast of Victor, the vicinity of his father's vineyard.

At Moose Jaw, Canada, on January 7, 1912, occurred the marriage of Mr. Knoll and Miss Christina Wahl, also a native of South Russia, and the daughter of Adam and Magdalena (Settler) Wahl, both natives of South Russia. Adam Wahl came to America with his family in 1897, and settling in Wells County, N. D., near Sheridan, homesteaded a tract of land. Later he sold out and went to Canada, and taking up a claim near Woodrow, farmed to grain for ten years. Again selling out, he came to California and is the owner of a seventeen-and-one-half-acre vineyard south of Lockeford on the Jack Tone road. There are five children in the family, of whom Mrs. Knoll is the eldest, the others being Katherine, who is Mrs. Young of Tracy; Jacob, Adam, and Ida. Mr. and Mrs. Knoll are the parents of four children: Martha, Irene, Anna and Alice. Mr. Knoll's vineyard consists of two acres of Tokay grapes and four acres of wine grapes in full bearing, and the balance is in young vines, with ample space for buildings.

A. E. ANDERSON.—An esteemed citizen whose good fortune in attaining to a comfortable retirement is a real satisfaction to his many friends, is A. E. Anderson, the proprietor of a store and hall, and also a small Delta farm embracing three and one-half acres at Anderson's Corner, on Tracy Road, in the Middle Division of Roberts Island. He was born in Vestelge, Smoland, Sweden, on February 6, 1852, the son of Andrew Peter Anderson, a farmer, who had married Johanna Rebecca Anderson, and they had eight children.

Our subject attended the public school and received a good education in his boyhood and youth. Then he went to work on his father's farm and continued there until he had saved enough money to come to America. He joined his uncle John, and they arrived at New York in the fall of 1866, from which city they went direct to Lockridge, Jefferson County, Iowa. There the young man found work on a farm, and then he spent the following years in Biggsville, Ill., where he worked for three years. After that he returned to Iowa and took up ranching there. In 1867, his parents and family moved to Iowa from Sweden.

In 1880, A. E. Anderson went to Nye County, Nev., and located near Belmont, where he spent about four years as a farmer. Four years later, he came to Tyson, in San Joaquin County, and established a roadhouse and store, which he conducted successfully for twenty-two years. In 1911, he bought land on Roberts Island, and soon after moved his family there. He has built up a good business at his new place, and holds the esteem and respect of the community. He is a Republican in politics.

In 1886, Mr. Anderson was married at Stockton to Mrs. Willa Anna (Smith) Parley, who had crossed the great plains when a baby with her parents in 1852, and four children have been born to them. Ada is the wife of Ray Freeman of Lodi, and they have two children, J. E. and Sybil. The second is Eva; May is the wife of Charles Guggolz of Lodi, and the youngest is Elsie.

J. N. ASHER.—An enterprising merchant and successful business man of Stockton, J. N. Asher is half-owner of the Center Street Feed & Barley Mill, a substantial and prosperous business, and his progressiveness and thorough capability in this industry have advanced him to an influential place among the business men of the city. He was born in Rolla, Mo., August 25, 1865, his parents being farmer folk in that locality, and he was reared on the home place and attended the district school of that section. In 1890, accompanied by his wife and three children, Mr. Asher left Missouri for the West and located in Stockton the same year. He had married Miss Lulu E. Beets, a native of Tennessee, born of Scotch parents, and they are the parents of eleven children: Corie F., Mary E. and Margaret L., born in Missouri, while Leslie, Charles N. (deceased), Le Roy, Mary (deceased), Emmet, Maxine, Claude and Esther were all born in San Joaquin County.

Mr. Asher began farming on Littlejohn Creek near Farmington and was so occupied for seven years; then he removed to Stockton and purchased property on West Washington street and began work at the Crown Mills, remaining there for eight years, gaining a knowledge of the mill business that has been indispensable during the succeeding years; he then assumed charge of the barley mill for the Sperry Milling Company, where he spent twelve years. In 1916 he entered the mill business on his own account and bought a half-interest in the Center Street mill and his advancement has been gained through a recognition and improvement of opportunity. Mr. Asher has full charge of the plant, and oversees the scientific process of preparing poultry foods, etc. Thirteen years ago, Mr. Asher built his residence located at 93 Moss avenue, which has been the center of many delightful social affairs. Mr. Asher is a Democrat in politics and fraternally is a member of Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., in Stockton.

JOHN R. LUBECK.—A man who has had much to do with the building up of the city of Tracy is John R. Lubeck, for a number of years chief engineer of the pumping plant of the West Side Irrigation District, with headquarters near Bethany, Cal. He was born in Smoland, Sweden, on June 24, 1868, and received a good elementary education in the schools of his native land. His father, Adolph F. Lubeck, was a prominent and well-known manufacturer of Fredericksfors, Sweden, where he owned and operated huge smelters in that district. Serious financial reverses, suffered by his father in 1874, made it imperative that John R. find work; this was the beginning of his self support and his first position was as an apprentice to the machinist trade, which occupied him for four years. He was nineteen when he went to sea on the S. S. Romio; in 1889 he was transferred to an English ship and sailed the seven seas, stopping at various ports of interest, and also being privileged to visit the interior of the different countries. When he was twenty-two years old, he received a second chief engineer's license with an unlimited license on merchant vessels. In 1890 Mr. Lubeck stopped off at New York and went to Hartford, Conn., where he remained for seven years as engineer for the transportation corps for the Hartford and New Haven Transportation Company; in 1898 he became an employee of the Standard Oil Company, serving as chief engineer on different oil tankers on the Atlantic seaboard; then in 1902 he became chief engineer on Walter Jennings' private yacht, "Tuscarora," making a world cruise covering a period of three years. Upon his return to the United States he took a cruise on the yacht "Clapsico" of the West Indies, which was both interesting and instructive. Desiring to come to California, he brought the Standard Oil Tanker "Maverick," with Borer No. 91, in tow all the way (13842 miles) from New York City to San Francisco, Cal., through the Straits of Magellan, eighty-two days on the trip, landing at San Francisco January 2, 1907. Coming to Tracy he secured a position as chief engineer at the Standard Oil pumping station near Tracy, remaining in that position until 1917, when he enlisted for service in the U. S. Navy and served throughout the duration of the war as a lieutenant. After his discharge from the Navy, Mr. Lubeck returned to Tracy where his services were required by the West Side Irrigation District, which had just been completed and where he was put in charge of the pumping plant and by new and economical methods, many of which have been adopted by the district, the plant at Bethany has been of great benefit to the farmers of that section.

Mr. Lubeck's marriage united him with Miss Elizabeth Widerquist, a native of Sweden who was reared in Brooklyn, N. Y., and who came West in 1907, and they are the parents of two children: John R., Jr., and Florence. Mr. Lubeck is a member of the American Legion, a past officer of the Odd Fellows Lodge in Tracy, and a member of the Masonic Lodge of Richmond, Cal., No. 347. He is a heavy stockholder in the manufacture of the Lambert Solid Tires and has done much in the way of introducing them in Central California. He has never had occasion to regret his determination to come to the West and, utilizing the opportunities here offered, has made a name and place for himself.

JOHN J. CAMPODONICO, SR.—A pioneer in the fruit packing and shipping industry of San Joaquin County, who also made a marked success of horticulture, was John J. Campodonico, who passed away on April 4, 1899, aged fifty-four years, honored and beloved by his friends and business associates. He was born in the Province of Genoa, Italy, and was twenty-five years old when he arrived in San Francisco. From there he came to Stockton by river boat, and his first business venture was in market gardening in the Morado section, near Stockton. Later he became a successful orchardist and farmer, in time packing and shipping his own fruit, with V. Solari as a business partner. He left a large estate, which has since been divided.

Mr. Campodonico's marriage occurred in 1875, in Stockton, and united him with Miss Maria J. Lagorio, who was born in Italy and was fifteen years old when she arrived in Stockton with her brother, D. Lagorio, a retired merchant residing in Stockton at the present time. Seven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Campodonico: Frank, a rancher; Angelo; John J., Jr.; Victor; Flora, now Mrs. Forgacci; Emile, deceased; and Mrs. Anna E. Riba. Mrs. Campodonico resides at the old home at 705 East North Street, Stockton. Mr. Campodonico was a naturalized citizen and a staunch Republican in politics.

FRANK F. ATHEARN.—A very progressive and successful ranch owner is Frank F. Athearn, who has some 460 choice acres about one-half mile north and one-half mile east of Clements, in which town he was born on July 5, 1873, the son of Lucien and E. N. (Putnam) Athearn, both representatives of well-known pioneer families. The father, Lucien Athearn, was a native of Indiana, and came across the wide plains to the West in very early days, while the maternal grandfather came around the Horn. Lucien Athearn went inland to the mines, and then settled near the present location of Clements. He acquired about two sections of land on the river, and in time became an extensive grain rancher. He leased out some of his river-bottom land, and there Chinamen grew hops. His father was Prince A. Athearn, and when the first schoolhouse in this section was built, in part on his land, it was named in honor of him the Athearn school. Four children made up the family of Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Athearn: Clements, Frank F., and W. P. Athearn, and Walter, deceased. Lucien Athearn attained his seventy-seventh year, and his devoted wife was seventy years of age when she died.

When Frank Athearn was seventeen years of age he left home and began to make his own way. Since then he has traveled through Nevada and California, working in mines and doing prospecting. In 1905 he came back to Clements and started ranching. He has 140 acres of the old home place, and also 320 acres about three miles to the south of Clements. He raises hogs and poultry and ships eggs to the market, having about 400 chickens, twenty-five head of sheep and twenty lambs, 100 head of hogs, and eighty head of old and young cattle. In his agricultural enterprises Mr. Athearn has a partner, Barre E. Gersbacher, living with him. He takes a live interest in the political questions of the day, and endeavors to do his duty as a citizen.

CAPT. EDWARD SCOTT.—One of the pioneers of Stockton who became prominent in business, military, Masonic and social circles during the early growth of the city, was the late Edward Scott, a native of England, born at Wetherbends, Cumberlandshire, May 11, 1831, of Scotch parents. In 1841, when he was ten years of age, he accompanied his parents on their removal to New York City, and in the excellent schools of that great metropolis he received a good education, and was attending college when he heard of the discovery of gold in California. Like thousands of others, his ambition was stirred by the excitement connected with the discovery, and he decided to cast in his lot with the Pacific Coast. Leaving his books, he took passage in a sailing vessel coming around Cape Horn to San Francisco, and after a long voyage landed safely early in 1850. As was natural, he rushed to the mines, and for some years he followed mining at Angels Camp and at Douglas Flat. Not finding mining as remunerative as he expected, he gave it up and came to Stockton in 1857. He became associated with the Globe Iron Works, and as manager guided the business successfully for some years. On severing his connection with the company he became a partner of John Caine, under the firm name of John Caine & Company, hardware and implement dealers, a business firm that grew to large proportions and was widely known for its fairness in all of its dealings. Mr. Scott took an active part in the company's growth and development, giving his undivided time to its interests, and in a large measure to his ability and personality, as well as to his straightforwardness and honesty of purpose, the success of the business was due.

At Santa Cruz occurred the marriage of Capt. Edward Scott, uniting him with Miss Permelia Jenkins, a native of the state of Alabama, who had emigrated to Santa Cruz with her parents in an early day. She was a daughter of William and Anna (Oliver) Jenkins, natives of Wales and Alabama, respectively. Miss Jenkins was a woman of pleasing personality, cultured, refined and well-educated. She spent several years in educational work, and it was while teaching in San Joaquin County that she met and married Captain Scott. The family residence at 221 East Rose Street was built by Mr. Scott and was one of the first houses erected in that portion of the city. All too soon he was bereaved of his faithful wife. In 1877 she passed on, leaving him a son and two charming daughters. Mrs. Mabel Donaldson, who resides in Alameda, has two children: Dean, a talented violinist; and a lovely daughter, Mrs. E. F. Russell. The only son, Edward, died in 1890; and the youngest daughter is Mrs. Maude Dean, of Groveland, Cal. Mr. Scott continued actively in business until his passing, September 25, 1891, a man widely mourned and highly esteemed.

Captain Scott was a veteran of the Civil War, enlisting for service. He was commissioned 1st lieutenant in Company H of the 1st California Cavalry, and rose to the rank of captain; after the war he was always prominent in local military circles, being a member of Rawlins Post No. 29, G. A. R. Captain Scott was a Knight Templar Mason and was prominent in Masonic work. He was a member and vestryman of the Episcopal Church. Politically, he was an uncompromising Republican and very influential in the party hustings, but would never accept offices, though solicited to do so. California owes a debt of gratitude to such men as Capt. Edward Scott, who by their pioneering brought about the present day civilization of the Golden State.

WILLIAM HENRY ADAMS.—A pioneer who has both witnessed and participated in the development of the Golden State, observing the great economic changes, is William Henry Adams, who resides about one mile due north of Acampo. He was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, on December 29, 1867, the son of William and Rebecca (Elliott) Adams, farmer folk there. His father died when he was very young, but his mother lived to be eighty-five years of age. There were six children in the family. Robert lives at Lodi; Mrs. Fannie Pritchard resides in New York; Jennie died at the age of sixteen years; Mrs. Maggie Parker lives at Oakland, Cal.; Rebecca lives in Lodi; and William Henry is an orchardist and vinyardist near Acampo.

William Henry Adams attended the common schools—as often as he was able; but educational opportunities in Ireland then were limited. When seventeen years old, he came to the United States, arriving in San Joaquin County in 1884, where he has been ever since. He took out his citizenship papers in Stockton, and worked a year for his uncle, Henry Adams, on the Dry Creek road. He then worked for William Hickey in the Elliott district for two years, and after that for W. R. Strong in the Christian Colony, where he was engaged in the nursery line for nine years. After this he came to the Ogden ranch.

On November 16, 1898, Mr. Adams married Miss Florence L. Ogden, a native of Williamsburg, Iowa County, Iowa, and the daughter of Henry T. and Augusta (Smith) Ogden, natives of Ohio and Iowa, respectively. Her father was a farmer, and lived to be seventy-eight years old, while the mother attained her sixty-first year. There were five children in the Ogden family: Addison, Elmer, Vernon, Florence (Mrs Adams), and Leon. When Florence was nine years old her parents came to California and lived for a short time in Oakdale, Stanislaus County. Then they moved to Snelling, in Merced County, where her father bought a half-section of grain land; and she was sent to the Snelling schools. In 1894, her father traded his grain land for seventy acres of land on the Cherokee road, one mile north of Acampo, and this he set out to almonds and a vineyard. Mr. Adams bought ten acres from one of his brothers-in-law, and for the last six years he has also rented and operated the seventy acres, living on it at the same time. In April, 1920, his father-in-law died, and the estate was sold to W. C. Petsinger, who now lives in the old home. Then Mr. Adams repurchased seventeen and one-fourth acres of the old Ogden estate adjoining his ten acres, making the present holdings of his ranch twenty-seven and one-fourth acres. He remodeled the home he now lives in, and in November, 1921, moved into it. He has an electric motor of ten-horsepower and a four-inch pump, and is able to command an abundant supply of good water. He has six children: Violet, at home; Elliott, a student at Reno, Nev.; Norma, a student in the State Teachers' College, San Jose; and Leon, Raymond and Harold, pupils in the Houston grammar school.

Mr. Adams has twenty acres of almonds, and is a member of the California Almond Growers' Exchange. He also has seven acres of Tokay grapes, and is a director of the Acampo Fruit Growers' Association. He is a stockholder in the Coast Tire & Rubber Company, and also in the Samson Tire Company of San Diego. Mr. Adams is a Republican in matters of national political import. Fraternally, he is a member of Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, F. & A. M. He has always been a hard-working man. When he came to California, for example, he worked from sunrise to sunset driving a six-mule team, and received only seventy-five cents for his labor. Recalling his own hard experiences, he tries to do the right thing by those who work for him.

FREDERICK KUCKUK.—An experienced, enterprising and unusually successful rancher is Frederick Kuckuk, who is farming Delta land about thirteen miles southwest of Stockton, on Upper Roberts Island on Middle River. He was born in the principality of Lippe-Detmold, on October 25, 1857, a son of Frederick and Augusta (Peiper) Kuckuk, and was reared on a farm, enjoying the best of educational advantages as the son of well-to-do and affectionate parents. On November 18, 1884, he was married to Miss Lena Elbracht, a native of the nearby Westphalian Bielefeld, and the daughter of G. Henry and M. Elizabeth (Meyer zu Hadelager) Elbracht, sturdy farmer-folks. In 1886, Mr. and Mrs. Kuckuk came out to America and spent six months at Cairo, Ill., but they came out to California, and in the spring of 1887, arrived at Williams & Bixler ranch on Union Island.

Mr. Kuckuk commenced ranching on the lower reclamation of Union Island, establishing himself there with a partner, Will Schmidt, now the banker at Tracy; and in 1888 he plunged the first plow to disturb the soil of the newly-reclaimed lower division, and from the start met with fair success. The following year, the prospects were bright for a very good crop; but a break in the Grant Line levee caused a fatal loss. He then tried farming on the middle division, but gave it up to move to Roberts Island, at the same time that he rented a large farm in Napa Valley and farmed in both places until 1896.

In 1917, Mr. Kuckuk moved to his present home, where he has had almost phenomenal success in the operation of 300 acres devoted to the stock business—the raising of hogs, sheep and cattle, alfalfa and grain, and also some of the finest bronze turkeys ever seen in this section. He makes a specialty of the Poland-China hogs, crossing with pure-bred Berkshire, which mature for market in six months time upon his delta ranch; and he has established an enviable reputation for himself as an agriculturist. He enjoys the esteem of all who know him, and the devotion of a wide circle of friends. He has seen many remarkable changes in the Delta region, and has personally undergone many hardships due to farming in such a district.

In Judge Smith's Court at Stockton, Mr. Kuckuk was made a citizen, and since then he has marched with the Republicans, as has also his wife. He has two children: Frederick, Jr., is now a prosperous rancher at Paradise, West Side, San Joaquin County; and Louise, who was the first white girl born on Union Island, is now the wife of H. Z. Bardin, whose life-story is elsewhere related in this volume.

CAESAR GAIA.—A very interesting man of affairs who owes his development and success largely to his own, self-made efforts, is Caesar Gaia, a member of the well-known grocery firm of Gaia & Delucchi, of Stockton. He was born on a farm near Torino, Italy, on August 16, 1892, the son of a vineyardist; and he worked in the vineyards of his district and on the home farm until he was seventeen years of age, and then he set out alone for California, following his brother, Frank Gaia, who had come to California some time previously, and who passed away in 1914.

Caesar Gaia found his first employment on the Miller & Lux ranch at Gilroy, where he remained nine months, and after a short stay in Oakland and San Francisco, he arrived at Stockton on May 1, 1914. Here he formed a partnership with Ferdinand S. Del Monte, and for some thirty months conducted the Campa Restaurant. He then formed a partnership with Louis Delucchi and bought the Ravioli Factory of E. Fontana at 320 East Market Street, and founded the firm of Gaia & Delucchi, which has so grown and prospered that it is now one of the leading grocery establishments in Stockton. As their business expanded, they took over the next store and added a full line of staple groceries and imported goods. They also made ravioli on a large scale, and they manufactured the famous Italian salami, and met with such encouragement that they now wholesale these two products. When they started, they employed two assistants; now they keep twelve persons busy. They also maintain two delivery trucks, and they ship ravioli, Italian salami and other specialties to Lodi, Modesto and the mountain towns. Mr. Gaia, with his family, made a trip to Italy in the spring of 1922, remaining away on this visit to the scenes of his childhood some nine months.

Mr. Gaia was married to Miss Rose Marengo in 1915, the gifted lady being a daughter of Peter L. Marengo, a prominent capitalist of Stockton; and they have one son, Caesar, Jr. Mr. Gaia is a charter member of the Stockton Italian Club, and a member of the Eagles, the Red Men and the Druids.

MINARD WALLACE.—A substantial citizen of San Joaquin County whose memory will long be honored is the late Minard Wallace, who was born in Hants County, Nova Scotia, on February 8, 1856, the son of Michael and Margaret Wallace. The father was a progressive and favorably known farmer. In 1876 Minard Wallace came to California on the transcontinental immigrant train and settled at Lockeford, where he was employed in various ways. On December 19, 1878, in Lockeford, he married Miss Alice Mary Blois, the daughter of Oliver and Tryphen (Parker) Blois, who was born within three miles of Mr. Wallace's birthplace. Her father was also a farmer, and she attended the excellent district schools in Nova Scotia. She came to California in 1878 with her brother, who with a sister was already living in California, and she made her home with them until her marriage to Mr. Wallace. After their marriage they resided at Lockeford for five years and then located on a ranch in the vicinity of the present home, where Mr. Wallace began stock-raising and farming. He prospered, leasing range until he began purchasing land. Mr. Wallace improved the home-ranch with a fine house, built fences, and put up farm buildings; and together with his two sons he acquired additional land, until they jointly owned 800 acres; then they engaged in a general farming and stock business. Mr. Wallace laid aside the cares of this world on April 5, 1920, leaving an enviable record for integrity and industry, and a family of four to inherit his good name and his fortune. Maude has become Mrs. Lane, of Oakland; Walter is at home; Harriet is Mrs. Holmes, of Martinez; and Oliver is also at home.

The two sons, Walter and Oliver, have assisted in carrying on the stock business. While Oliver was away in the World War, the elder son ran the ranch; and as it was very hard to get help, he did three men's work. He produced much grain, but on account of the high prices of labor, he only broke even, despite the favoring high prices of the grain market. Oliver, the younger son, entered the United States service on September 21, 1917, and was sent to Camp Lewis, as a member of Company L, 363rd Infantry, 91st Division. In June, 1918, he went to New York and was sent overseas, where he participated with his famous division in all of the drives for which they were noted, in the Argonne and on the Belgian front. On his return to San Francisco he was discharged at the Presidio in April, 1919, as sergeant, and took up ranching again with his brother. He was married at Lockeford, on July 14, 1920, to Miss Alvine Ostermann, the daughter of Theodore and Lena Ostermann, a native of San Joaquin County; and their union has been blessed with the birth of twin sisters, June and Jean. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Wallace live on the old Wallace Rancho, with his mother and brother. The two brothers are Republicans.

JOHN RANDOLPH LOUITT.—A native son who takes much pride in the progress made by his home county is John Randolph Louttit, who was born in Stockton, November 9, 1874, the son of James A. and Ada A. (Cory) Louttit. His father became one of the most prominent attorneys in the state and served as a member of Congress, and his interesting biography appears on another page in this work.

The second oldest of a family of six children, John Randolph Louttit, was reared in Stockton, where he was educated in the grammar and high schools, being graduated from the high school there in 1893. After his graduation he spent one year at Hastings Law School in San Francisco. He gave up the study of law to accept the position as assistant postmaster at Stockton under the late T. A. Nelson. After filling the position with credit and ability for three years Mr. Louttit resigned to engage in the hay and grain business in San Francisco under the firm name of Howell, Louttit and Company. Here he continued until he sold his interest to join his younger brother, J. A. Louttit, Jr., who was mining in Alaska. Mr. Louttit made the trip to Council, ninety miles inland from Nome, in 1908, and entered heartily into mining. The Louttit brothers acquired large interests on Melsing Creek, out of Council, and here they followed placer mining. Mr. Louttit remained in the northland until 1915, when he returned to Stockton. Unfortunately, his brother died in 1916. Mr. Louttit, having entered the employ of the Union Ice Company and not wishing to return to Alaska, sold their mining properties. In 1917 he resigned his position with the Union Ice Company and accepted the position of cashier with the Yolland Ice Company, continuing with them until March, 1921, when, being elected secretary of the City Fuel and Ice Company at Lodi, he resigned his place as cashier and immediately removed to Lodi. He has since given all of his time to advancing the business of the City Fuel and Ice Company, for which his years of experience well qualify him.

Mr. Louttit is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks; Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.; and Lodi Rotary Club, and while in Alaska he was a member of Camp Council No. 11, Arctic Brotherhood.

GEORGE W. LUCAS.—A progressive land owner of San Joaquin County, who has done much to further the development of the resources of the state, is George W. Lucas, a native of Amador County, where he was born at Puts Bar, near Comanche, on May 15, 1862. His father, Ralph Lucas, came to California from Missouri in 1849, and mined on the Feather River. Later he settled down near Lancha Plana, where he acquired a small ranch, married Miss Rebecca Potter, and brought up a family of ten children: John L., still living at Amador; Andy, deceased; George, of this review; Ralph, of Clements; Robert, deceased; Sarah, of San Francisco; Ellen, now Mrs. Smallfield; James, living at Stockton; and William and Nels, both deceased.

George W. Lucas had the usual educational advantages enjoyed by the boys of his day and also took up the study of bookkeeping. He remained at home until he was past twenty-one, helping to support the large family, and then, for three years, worked for wages in the service of a Mr. Van Zandt. He next worked in the sawmills, in the mountains, for about one year, and after that worked for four years in Butte County, helping to handle lumber at the mills, at a flume that carried eighty thousand feet of sawn lumber each day down to Chico. He then came to Clements, and in partnership with his brother, Ralph, pursued farming four miles northeast of Clements, on the river. They operated a part of the Kissell place, and at one time farmed about 600 acres of land. This partnership was continued for a number of years.

In 1897 George W. Lucas married Miss Jennie V. Howard, a native of San Joaquin County, where she was born on the old Howard ranch, and the daughter of Daniel and Clara L. (Flanders) Howard, well-known pioneers. She attended the Washington school and was a society favorite when she met Mr. Lucas. Twelve years ago he bought 326 acres on the Mokelumne River, about six miles to the northeast of Clements, and put in nine acres of bottom land to alfalfa. He also has a family orchard, forty head of cattle, and twelve head of horses. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Lucas: Harvey Howard and Una Doris. Three years ago his home burned to the ground, and then he erected a fine new home, of one and one-half stories, on the site where the former residence stood. Mr. Lucas is a Democrat. He is a member of the board of trustees of the Washington district school, and for four years has been the director of the board. He belongs to the Odd Fellows of Clements, and has passed through all the chairs there; and he has also gone through all the chairs of the Clements Lodge of the Modern Woodmen of America. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lucas are members of the Rebekahs at Clements and have passed through all the chairs.

ANTONE LOUIS LOPES.—An enterprising, successful dairyman whose progress has set the pace for other agriculturists in the same field, is Antone Louis Lopes, the proprietor of a first-class dairy herd of some 200 head of high-grade Holstein cattle, on a dairy farm with new modern and model barns situated about six miles southwest of Stockton, near Brandt's Ferry Bridge, on Upper Roberts Island. He has a senior and junior registered pure-bred sire from the Holstein herd of Morris & Son, at Woodland, and that speaks for itself.

Like many others who have made a success of dairying in California, Antone L. Lopes hails from the Azores, having been born on the Island of St. George, on December 15, 1881, the son of Daniel and Mary C. (Azevedo) Lopes, also natives of the Azores. The parents came out to America fourteen years ago, and now they are living in comfortable retirement at the home of our subject, where their daughter, Amelia, also resides, ardent admirers of California and her free and helpful institutions. Manuel Lopes, a brother, and Mrs. Adelaide Cotraia, of Benicia, a sister of Antone, are successful dairy ranchers of Solano County. A brother, Joseph, and a sister, Mrs. Serafina Machado, are extensive and successful dairy ranchers at Gridley, and partners of our subject. Another sister, the eldest, is Mrs. Mary Silva of San Jose.

After having passed the age of twenty-one, on July 1, 1903, Antone Lopes left home to cross the Atlantic Ocean. Arriving in New Bedford, Mass., he immediately crossed the American continent to California and at Vallejo went to work on a dairy ranch for his brother, Manuel Lopes, and his uncle, Tony Dos Rios, who were partners, to earn money to pay $400 for three acres adjoining his father's farm. This he paid out of his wages in eighteen months and this property he still owns. With commendable courage he continued working steadily at thirty dollars per month, sixteen hours a day (two shifts) and no holidays until he decided to go into business on his own account.

He chose as a partner his brother, Manuel Lopes, of Benicia, and together they established a dairy, in 1906; but four years later, he sold his interest to his uncle, Tony Dos Rios, and removed to Butte County, and for eleven years he carried on dairying near Gridley, where he still has interests. At Gridley, he took up the study of English and went to night school, and the good fruits of this bit of enterprise, denoting in itself a promising ambition, were shown when he applied for United States citizenship and mastered the necessary examination.

December, 1921, Mr. Lopes came down to this county, having secured the lease on his present property known as the Laurence & Stephens rancho, and having much to offer, he was given a five-year lease, with very favorable terms. This farm is beautifully located, and consists of 240 acres, well irrigated, an ample supply of water being lifted from the San Joaquin River to canals, from which it is distributed by gravity, the flow covering the alfalfa fields so that the green feed is to be had the entire year around.

Since establishing himself in business here, Mr. Lopes, on account of his record for honesty and integrity of purpose was not only offered the lease of his old ranch he left at Gridley, but they begged him to take it again, so with his brother Joseph as a partner, they moved a dairy herd they had on one of the Stanford ranches at Vina to the Gridley ranch and now they are conducting a first class sanitary dairy there, having 300 head of dairy cattle. His dairy herds on both ranches are high grade Holsteins, as he has always had pure-bred sires at the head of his herd and is considered an authority on dairy cattle. Since April, 1922, Mr. Lopes has constructed his model farms, thoroughly scientific and sanitary in every respect, and there he carries on such a lively enterprise that he employs regularly at least six men. His products are shipped direct to the San Francisco market, where they find a ready sale at good prices, through the San Francisco Milk Producers, of which he is a member. So arranged is the outfitting of this model dairy that it is truly one of the show-places of San Joaquin County.

RALPH EMMETT MILLS.—Well-known in connection with agricultural interests, Ralph Emmett Mills makes his home at Lafayette Hall, four and a half miles west of Lodi on the Sargent road, where he owns twenty acres, one-half of which is in vineyard and the other half in alfalfa. During his residence on this property he has wrought a great transformation in its appearance, making it one of the highly cultivated tracts in this portion of the county. He was born on the old Mills ranch south of Woodbridge, April 23, 1880, a son of George A. and Mary (Bucher) Mills. The father was a native of Illinois. The grandparents, Freeman and Minerva (Grace) Mills, natives of Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, respectively, crossed the plains to California in the early pioneer days. He engaged in mining in Sierra County and was then in business in Colusa County. In 1857 he located at Woodbridge, on eighty acres of land, and later added another eighty acres, which was thickly covered with timber. He became an extensive grain farmer in that section and was also very prominent in local politics and fraternal circles. When Ralph Emmett Mills was two years old, his parents removed to San Luis Obispo County and located on a 320-acre grain ranch near Paso Robles, which the father farmed to grain for twelve years; then he moved back to the old home place at Woodbridge, where he spent his remaining years. There were six children in the family: Ralph Emmett, of this sketch; Estella, Mrs. Knight, of Los Angeles; Claude, of Acampo; Ethel, Mrs. McCann, of Stockton; Glennie, Mrs. Nelson, of Stockton; and Roy, of Lodi. The father lived to be sixty-five years old; the mother passing away at the age of fifty-two.

Ralph Emmett Mills received his education in the public schools of San Luis Obispo County and was trained to the work of the farm from early childhood. Returning to Woodbridge when sixteen years old, he remained home until nineteen years of age, and then began making his own way in the world, at first working on ranches in different parts of San Joaquin County. He then rented the Don Ray ranch of 320 acres at Acampo; this was a grain farm, and during the five years that Mr. Mills leased it he set out eighty acres to vineyard, receiving forty-five acres of the vineyard for developing it. At the end of his lease he sold his portion and moved to Woodbridge, where he resided for a few years. Then he purchased sixty acres five miles west from Woodbridge. Twenty acres of this place was in vineyard, and Mr. Mills planted thirty acres more. Within two years' time he sold it, and then purchased his present place of twenty acres, one-half of which is in vineyard and the other half in alfalfa.

The marriage of Mr. Mills occurred on December 27, 1903, uniting him with Miss Inez Mayberry, born in San Joaquin County, a daughter of Wiley W. and Joanna (Hunting) Mayberry, natives of Pennsylvania and Iowa, respectively. Her parents came across the plains to California with their respective parents while they were yet young people. Subsequent to their marriage, they settled in north San Joaquin County in the Telegraph school district. Her parents are living retired in Lodi. Mrs. Mills is one of five children: Rena, Mrs. Henley, of Lodi; Maude, Mrs. Elda Brown, of Lockeford; Edith, Mrs. George Harrison; Inez, Mrs. Mills; and Donald. Mrs. Mills received her education in the Telegraph district school. Mr. and Mrs. Mills are the parents of two children: Mervin and Emmett. While Mr. Mills' ranch is under the Stockton-Mokelumne irrigation district, he also has his own pumping plant, which consists of a six-inch pump driven by a fifteen-horsepower motor, which furnishes ample water for irrigation. In politics he is a Republican; and fraternally he is a member of Lodi Camp of Modern Woodmen of America.

WALTER R. MORAN.—Among the recent accessions to the viticultural section of San Joaquin County is Walter R. Moran, the owner of a fifteen-acre vineyard on the Alpine school road. He is a native of Crawford, Nebraska, and the son of Dennis and Sadie (Losee) Moran, the former a native of Ireland, and the latter of Indiana. Dennis Moran was only about one year old when his parents came to America and settled at Fitchburg, Mass., where he was reared and received his education. He was only eighteen years old when he started on his varied career as cowboy and stockman, and finally as a successful vineyardist of the San Joaquin Valley, where he resides today.

When Walter R. Moran was nine years old, his parents removed to Bellefourche, S. D., where they engaged in the stock business; later the family moved to British Columbia, and he followed ranching there. From early boyhood Walter Moran could ride a horse, and when he was twenty years old, he naturally took to the range, first going to Montana, where he stayed one year, and then to British Columbia, where for three years he rode the range for the Western Canadian Ranch Company, 150 miles north of the Canadian line. Next we find him back in Montana, at Billings, where he worked for four years for the Western Sugar Company. In September of 1917, he enlisted at Billings, Mont., and was sent to Fort George Wright, Wash., in the Quartermaster's Corps. After remaining there for a short time, he was sent to Camp Lewis in the 344th Baking Company, and on June 25, 1918, was sent to France as a baker at Ish-Sur-Til. He was later returned to the United States, and on July 1, 1919, was discharged at Fort Russell, Wyo., and immediately returned to his parents' home in Lodi, Cal. After his return he purchased fifteen acres south of Kettleman Lane on the Alpine school road, which is devoted to the raising of grapes; he also has twenty-five acres rented, that belongs to his father. Both of these places are well irrigated.

The marriage of Mr. Moran occurred at Oakland, Cal., on January 22, 1921, and united him with Miss Winifred Whitman, a native of Florin, Cal., and a daughter of Albert and Effie Whitman. Years ago Albert Whitman came from Massachusetts to North Dakota, and from there to California. He is now residing in Oakland. Winifred Whitman received her education in the grammar and high schools of San Jose. She has one brother, Neil. In politics Mr. Moran is a Democrat. Fraternally, he was made a Mason in Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., and with his wife is a member of Lodi Chapter No. 150, Lodi. He is also a member of American Legion Post No. 22, Lodi. Mr. Moran is intensely interested in good roads, thinking them essential to the building up of the county. He is an advocate of all measures for the advancement of his community and labors for its improvement and progress.

CLARENCE A. REASONER.—An experienced garage operator of Clements, where he now conducts the Service Garage, is Clarence A. Reasoner, who was born at Clements on November 9, 1888, the son of Charles and Ada (Megerle) Reasoner. His father came to California about forty years ago; but his mother was born in Clements, the daughter of Philip L. Megerle, who was born in Richland County, Ohio, in October, 1840. He came to California across the plains in 1853, and made a difficult journey, requiring six and one-half months. He settled in San Joaquin County, and resided there until his death. In 1875 he purchased the farm today called the Old Megerle Rancho, a quarter-section of fine grain land lying near Lockeford. The ranch was well equipped in his time with a fine home, barns, shed, and all necessary tools. In 1867, on October 8, at Woodbridge, he married Miss Theodocia Boyce, a member of another pioneer family. They had five children, one of whom is Mr. Reasoner's mother. Charles Reasoner died in 1920. Mrs. Reasoner remarried and is now the wife of Joseph Steely, of Lockeford, partner of Clarence A. Reasoner.

Clarence Reasoner attended the Athearn school at Clements. He has been working for himself ever since he was ten years old. In 1921 he and Joseph Steely established themselves as proprietors of the Service Garage in Clements. They own their own building, and also deal in plumbing and electrical supplies. They carry farming machinery, and undertake to do general garage repairing. They have an enviable reputation for efficiency and willingness to accommodate, and the community has not been slow to respond in profitable patronage.

On December 14, 1917, Mr. Reasoner enlisted in the United States service for the World War, and was sent to Camp Lewis, where he became a member of Company G, 362nd Infantry, 91st Division. He sailed for France in June, 1918, and partook in all the drives until he was wounded in October, in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. Sailing from New York, he went to France by way of Liverpool and Southampton, England, and eventually reached Havre; and in France his regiment trained at Boncourt before going to the trenches. Upon being wounded, he was sent to Base Hospital No. 61, and there he remained until he recovered and returned to the United States. On March 11, 1919, at the Presidio, in San Francisco, he left the service as a corporal with his coveted documents attesting honorable standing and faithful service; and then he returned to Clements. He belongs to the Clements Lodge, No. 355, I. O. O. F., and is a past grand in that lodge. He is also a member of the Rebekah Lodge at Clements.

DAVID BAUMBACH.—A well-known citizen and prosperous vineyardist residing about one mile north of Victor, is David Baumbach, who was born at Olivet, in Hutchinson County, S. D., on May 9, 1894, a son of George and Charlotte (Delk) Baumbach, both natives of southern Russia who came to South Dakota from the Crimea, filed a timber claim and located a homestead.

David Baumbach acquired his early education in the schools of South Dakota, and resided there until he was thirteen years old, when he came with his father to California. He is the youngest of a family of eight children: K. G., of Lodi; Elizabeth, now Mrs. John Bechthold, of north San Joaquin County; Helena, Mrs. Reimche, residing on Kettleman Lane, near Lodi; George D., residing at Orland; Lydia, Mrs. Seibel, of Lodi; Jacob, residing on Dry Creek, east of Galt; Katie, Mrs. Werner, of north San Joaquin County; and David, of whom we write. The father passed away in 1920, but the mother died when David was a boy of ten years, in 1904. After arriving in California, David had the privilege of attending the Salem school in Lodi for three years, and then for a time attended the Emerson school. His father had purchased twenty acres of land; and when sixteen years old, David began taking care of it. When twenty-one he started out for himself. He became possessed of ten acres and later added ten acres more, so that now he has twenty acres in a fine vineyard about one mile north of Victor, on which he has erected a fine bungalow. He has an irrigating well and a pump that throws 750 gallons per minute, driven by an electric motor.

On January 5, 1916, at Lodi, occurred the marriage of Mr. Baumbach, which united him with Miss Marie Young, a native of Marion County, Kan., born near Ramona, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Scheideman) Young. John Young resided in Kansas for thirty years previous to coming to California and the parents now reside on a ranch on Kettleman Lane, near Lodi, and are prosperous and well-known. Mrs. Baumbach is one of eleven children: Daniel D., of Lodi; Marie, Mrs. Baumbach; Rachel, Mrs. Schaefer, of Victor; Lydia, Mrs. Wagemann, of Lodi; Lizzie, Mrs. Lewis Baumbach, of Acampo; Esther, Mrs. Seibel, of Lodi; and Leah, Emanuel, Hilda, Ruben, and Eva, at home. Mr. and Mrs. Baumbach are the parents of one daughter, Charlotte Elizabeth.

In 1917 Mr. Baumbach went to Montana to take up a homestead in Valley County; but in about six months' time he entered the service of his country, on October 2, 1917, and was sent to Camp Lewis in Company 33 of the 166th Depot Brigade and was there one month. He was then sent to Camp Mills, N. Y., where he was transferred to Company L, 163rd Infantry, of the 41st Division. He was sent overseas during December of 1917 and spent Christmas on the ocean; landing in Liverpool Christmas eve, he was sent to Camp Morn Hill at Winchester, then to Southampton and across the channel to France. His company spent three months in guard duty at Bordeaux, and then Mr. Baumbach was transferred to Company G of the 127th Infantry and trained for one month preparatory to going to the Vosges sector, where he was stationed at St. Marie in Alsace, in the defensive sector. He went into action in the Chateau-Thierry and Aisne-Marne drive and was wounded in the leg. After spending three weeks in the hospital he was able to rejoin his company and was in the Argonne offensive. He was again wounded on October 3, 1918, by a piece of shrapnel that tore a hole through his left wrist. He was sent to the hospital, where he remained six months. He spent thirteen months overseas, returning to the United States during January of 1919, and was discharged May 1, 1919, at the Presidio at San Francisco and returned to his home in Victor. His wife had made her home with her parents in Lodi while her husband was overseas. On his return, they moved onto their ranch, and since then he has given all of his attention to viticulture. Mr. Baumbach is a member of Lodi Post No. 22, American Legion, and of the Wounded Veterans of the World War. He received from the government the Foreign Service or Victory medal.

DILLARD S. FAGAN.—Decidedly popular among the officers in charge of one department or another of the well-organized and well-maintained Holt Manufacturing Company of Stockton, is Dillard S. Fagan, the storekeeper, a native of Stanislaus County, where he was born on a farm on June 27, 1881, the son of Frank and Emma (Petty) Fagan, the former, now deceased, a native of Illinois, the latter, who is still living, of Tuolumne County, Cal. Mr. Fagan came to California in the late fifties, and with his brother John located on a farm near Linden, in San Joaquin County. They farmed there for a few years, and then they took up a large tract of Government land some twelve miles east of Oakdale, in Stanislaus County. Later, the brothers divided the property, and Frank Fagan farmed the same to grain up to his death on February 24, 1891. His widow, now a resident of San Francisco, was born in Sonora, the daughter of Isaac and Virginia (Gooch) Petty, the father a California pioneer who settled in Tuolumne County in 1849, and later was a prominent farmer near Knights Ferry, in Stanislaus County. The children of this worthy couple still living include Dillard S. Fagan, the subject of our interesting review; Cora A., the wife of W. E. Morrow, of Santa Rosa; and Theil and Louise H., residents of San Francisco.

Dillard, the only surviving son of the family, attended the district schools in Stanislaus County, enjoying the grammar school and high school as well as the courses at Oakdale, and in 1899, when a young man of eighteen, came to Stockton and secured employment in the storekeeper department of the Holt Manufacturing Company. His duties as floor man included looking after the extra parts of the harvester machines and other general duties; and by strict attention to business, when work was expected of him, he justified his advancement to the position of storekeeper in charge of the department, in 1907. Since then, he has administered his important trust so well that he is still filling this post, to the satisfaction of everybody concerned. He has seen, indeed, twenty-three years of continuous service there, and is one of the oldest employees of the company; and as his is one of the most important departments in the famous concern, it will be realized that his work there is fully appreciated. Here are to be found some 50,000 different extra parts of harvester and caterpillar tractors—some of the parts of the harvesters built in the 'ighties being still kept in stock and supplied to owners who bought harvesters of the company thirty-five years ago; but it is not alone that Mr. Fagan's efficiency makes it really possible to find these, when wanted,—it is the more important fact that, long ago, he made the interests of the Holt Manufacturing Company pre-eminently his own, and gave them his first, best and last service. Fidelity of that sort seldom goes unrewarded—and never by the Holt Manufacturing Company.

When Mr. Fagan married, at Stockton, in the year 1908, he took for his wife Miss Bertha Briggs, a native of Modesto; and theirs has truly been an ideal wedded life. Mrs. Fagan shares her husband's social life and popularity in the circles of the Stockton Lodge No. 11 of Odd Fellows, Stockton Lodge No. 218, of the B. P. O. Elks, Stockton Parlor No. 7 of the Native Sons of the Golden West, and the Golf and Country Club.

JOSEPH A. SILVER.—A leading cement contractor of Stockton, known throughout San Joaquin County for the high grade of his work, Joseph A. Silver is a native son, born at Santa Barbara on March 17, 1883, his parents Frank and Carmelita (Lopez) Silver, being well-known pioneer settlers. It was necessary for him to go to work at the early age of twelve and while working on the Potter Hotel, Santa Barbara, he became interested in the steam-fitter's trade, which he learned under Henshaw & Buckley, San Francisco, and helped put in the Key Route power plant. However, he quit the trade and took up cement work with Sorensen Bros., of West Oakland, and has been in that business ever since. Notwithstanding his youth he was made foreman for this concern after two years, and he was the youngest member of Cement Workers Union No. 19, of Oakland, at this time. He was next with Lindgren & Hicks of Berkeley, and while with them was foreman on the construction of the following buildings: St. Mark's Hotel, Bruner Building, Bekins Van & Storage Company building, Melrose school, Fourth Avenue power plant and as foreman for Dazell & Brown worked on the construction of the Stanford Museum for eighteen months. He also worked on the Humboldt Bank Building and Balboa Building, San Francisco, and started the work on the Fairmount Hotel there. From there he went to Reno, Nev., as foreman of construction for the buildings of the University of Nevada.

In 1908 Mr. Silver started in business for himself at Newman, Cal., and laid miles of sidewalks there, the first to be put down in the town. The following five years were spent with Trehwitt & Shields of Fresno as foreman on all the large buildings erected by that company, among them the Godschalk Building, Matti Winery, Delano school and many others at Fresno, and a large school building at Richmond, Cal. Los Angeles was his next location and there he was foreman for the Richards-Neustadt Construction Company on the Eagle Rock School and the Occidental College buildings. Finishing these large contracts, he was for a year and a half at Visalia as foreman for M. Nelson, completing a number of jobs in that locality. While in Fresno he made a trip to the Imperial Valley to look for a location, but gave it up, Coming to Stockton in 1916, Mr. Silver started in business for himself and since then he has been kept extremely busy, handling the cement contracting on the following: mattress factory on East Weber Avenue, the big garage at Oak and El Dorado streets, U. S. Garage on San Joaquin Street, all of the cement work on the Stockton Mineral Baths, the finest piece of cement work ever done in the county, Oranges Bros. Garage, The Georges Company building on South Aurora Street, Tucker's garages on American Avenue and Weber Avenue, large walnut warehouse on Jack Tone Road, Superior Manufacturing Building at Lodi, Hobbs-Parsons Produce House, three warehouses for the Stockton Box Factory, concrete oil tank for the Stockton Brick Company, Gall & Sons building, Tucker's Garage, Zerwicks Apartments, Parisian Dyeworks, Dawson Storage Company building, ninety bungalows in Tuxedo Park, eighteen bungalows in Yosemite Terrace, the Test, Powell, Bacheller, and Dr. Haight residences, the cement work on the Dickenson residence, and a number of large dairy barns in the county. His equipment is the latest and most modern obtainable.

Mr. Silver was married at Oakland on September 26, 1911, to Miss Florence H. Hastings, the daughter of Greene and Sarah (Reavis) Hastings. Her father was a '49er, but returned East again. Conscientious and thorough in every detail of his work, Mr. Silver's early training, combined with his own initiative and industry, has given him a reputation for high class work throughout the county, second to none. In fraternal life he is a member of Fruitvale Aerie No. 1375, of the Eagles, and the Builders Exchange, as well as the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers Association.

JOHN T. HALL.—A successful general contractor of Stockton, well known for his association with public development work, is John T. Hall, a native of Missouri, born in Stone County, April 4, 1868. In 1890 he made his first trip to Stockton, remaining for one year, and on his return East, located in Denver, Colo., and for eleven years was in the transportation department of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad. In 1904 he returned to Stockton and took charge of the planting of 300 acres of vineyard at Farmington, the property of the Raymond Granite Company of Madera, Cal., and for the following three years had charge of the property. Next he took a trip to Canada, looking over the country and its possibilities, but the lure of California proved too strong and he came back to Stockton and opened a hospital at 711 North Hunter Street. After disposing of this he was for three years superintendent of the Juvenile Home for Boys and Girls.

Mr. Hall then entered the general contracting business, building bridges for the city and county and doing extensive sewer work, building the sewers in Lakeside Terrace and Stockton Acres, two of the new subdivisions in the northwest part of Stockton. He is now engaged in general contract work. Mr. Hall's first wife died within a year after their marriage; his second marriage united him with Miss Elizabeth Miller, a graduate nurse, who had charge of the East Side Sanitarium at Stockton for about six years. They have one daughter, Ruth, who had the honor of being the first child to buy Liberty Bonds during the late war, and was a blue ribbon prize winner when one year old at the Better Babies Show at Stockton.

Mr. Hall was made a Mason at Salida, Colo., and he also belongs to the Sons of Veterans and the Loyal Order of Moose. He made a most creditable run for councilman in 1914, receiving 1207 votes, and is very popular in Stockton.

CORWIN DOUGLASS WHITE.—A highly esteemed resident of San Joaquin County, whose life-story is as instructive as it is absorbingly interesting, is Corwin Douglass White, who was born near Alma, Gratiot County, Mich., on October 25, 1858, the son of Amos and Sarah Elizabeth (Rosetter) White, natives respectively of New York and Pennsylvania. They had nine children, but only two are living today—Charles, who is in Nebraska, and Corwin Douglass.

Corwin Douglass White was educated in the public schools of Michigan, and when seventeen years of age went to work for himself, and learned the carpenter's trade. In 1884 he came out to California, and settled in Stockton. He was engaged as a stationary engineer for the Williams & Moore soap factory for four years, and then he embarked in various kinds of work for several years; trying his hand in the bakery trade, and traveling for two years for the Stockton Paint Company. After that he came to Lodi and resumed carpentering, working first as a journeyman and then engaging in building as a contractor and investor. He bought lots, and built and sold no less than twelve different homes, among the most attractive in Lodi. Then he purchased eighty acres of land two and one-half miles east of Clements, a grain ranch, formerly the Isaac Miller place, where he conducts a small dairy.

At San Francisco, on March 26, 1902, Mr. White was married to Miss Effie Posey, a native of Hillsboro, Texas, and the daughter of G. Jack Posey, who had married Miss Isabelle Staton. Her father was born in San Joaquin County, his parents having crossed the plains from Ohio in pioneer days. They were farmers near Thornton, where the father was reared and educated. There he married Miss Staton, who was born on Staton Island, this county. Her parents were pioneers of California and the first settlers on Staton Island. Isabelle Staton was a teacher up till the time of her marriage to Mr. Posey. They then removed to Hillsboro, Texas, where their three children were born. The wife and mother passed away in 1884, and the baby boy, Jack, died a month later. Mr. Posey then brought his two remaining children, Clara and Effie, back with him to Lodi, where he followed farming until his death. Clara is now Mrs. S. A. Gillingham, and Effie is Mrs. White, of whom we write. When Effie Posey was three years old her father returned to California. He retired and made his home in Stockton, and there she was sent to grammar school, afterward attending the high school. Mr. Posey's health failed, and the family moved to San Andreas, in Calaveras County. Here she finished her high school course, and then fitted herself for teaching, completing her course at the Summer Normal School held at the University of California in Berkeley. The last fifteen years she has been teaching for the most part in San Joaquin County, although she taught a year at Calveritas and two years at Burson, in Calaveras County. She taught at Live Oak, Mt. Carmel, and Alpine, and was principal of Athearn school at Clements; she is now principal of the Lockeford school, where she is giving entire satisfaction. To her experience is added real enthusiasm for her work, in which she is most conscientious and painstaking. She is a member of the County Teachers' Association, and the California Teachers' Association.

Three children have been granted Mr. and Mrs. White: Emily Evelyn, now in Lodi high school, George Henry, and Howard Corwin. Mrs. White is an active member of the Lodi Women's Improvement Club. Mr. White is a member and past master of Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M.; a member and past grand of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., of Stockton; a member and past chief patriarch of Parker Encampment; and a member of Ridgely Canton, Stockton. Mrs. White is a member of Lodi Chapter, Eastern Star, and also a member of the Rebekah Lodge at Lodi, of which she is a past noble grand. Both husband and wife are Republicans; and both are members of the Christian Science Church in Lodi, in which they have served as readers.

EDWARD VAN VRANKEN.—Equipped with a fine legal training, and fortified with the virile experience of an artillery officer three years on our borders and overseas in the World War, Edward Van Vranken, district attorney of San Joaquin County, needs little introduction to Northern Californians. He was born on July 11, 1876, in Marysville, Yuba County, Cal., the son of Eber and Maggie (Schmidler) Van Vranken, the former having been born in the state of New York, while the mother was born in Luxembourg, and grew up in Wisconsin, where she came with her parents as a child. Mr. and Mrs. Van Vranken were married in California. The father was a gold miner at first, coming to California in 1852, but later he became a successful farmer and stockman.

Edward attended the Brothers' School in Oakland and later the public grammar schools, graduating from the Washington Grammar school near Clements, San Joaquin County in June, 1894, having come to San Joaquin County with his parents when he was ten. In 1895 he left San Joaquin Business College after a year's tuition and entered Hon. Frank H. Smith's law office in Stockton as a student. He was admitted to the bar January 15, 1906, and a year later he entered active practice, for twelve months with O. B. Parkinson, and then alone until 1909, when he entered a partnership with John E. Budd, which terminated in January, 1911, when he was appointed deputy district attorney of San Joaquin County.

On March 22, 1909, Mr. Van Vranken was appointed prosecuting attorney of the city of Stockton, completing the term of M. J. Henry, who resigned. As a young man our subject had served as a deputy in the county clerk's office and in 1908 and again in 1910 he was named secretary of the Republican County Central Committee. Nearly three years of strenuous life were devoted to war service, from June 18, 1916, to May 13, 1919. As captain of Battery C, 1st California Field Artillery, he served during the Mexican trouble, being stationed at Nogales, Ariz., on the border, in summer and fall. On July 3, 1917, his battery was ordered to the Presidio, San Francisco, for World War service, and was merged into the 143d Field Artillery, U. S. A. In the summer of 1917 he was commissioned major of the second battalion, 143d Field Artillery. While the second battalion was being trained at Arcadia, near Los Angeles, he was camp commander, also having a detachment of infantry under him. In October, 1917, he went to Camp Kearney. In July, 1918, with a detachment of field artillery officers he proceeded to Camp Mills, N. Y., and embarked on a transport August 5, reaching France, via Liverpool, Southampton and Havre on August 16. He remained some weeks in Mencon, near Vannes, France, in the Officers' Training School, then at De Sogge, near Bordeaux, where he rejoined his outfit. In November, 1918, he was transferred to the 323d Field Artillery, 32d Division, and with the Army of Occupation proceeded to Coblenz on the Rhine. He was in command of the second battalion, and later of the first battalion. He was on duty in Germany until May, 1919, reaching New York on May 13. He obtained honorable discharge at the Presidio at San Francisco, June 21, 1919.

On July 8, 1919, Mr. Van Vranken was named district attorney by the board of supervisors to fill the unexpired term of Charles Light, who had died in office. One of the cases which he tried as district attorney, which attracted much attention, was that of nineteen men indicted by the Grand Jury for criminal utterances against the Government. Four of these were tried, Mr. Van Vranken personally handling the first case, C. F. Bentley, who was convicted. The other three were tried by the deputy district attorney J. Le Roy Johnson and were also convicted.

Mr. Van Vranken is past president of Stockton parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West, Past Noble Grand of Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., and a member of the Elks, Moose, American Legion and the Anteros Club. His marriage united him with Miss Colette Lanmeister, who was born in Stockton and comes of a family of pioneers.

JOHN S. HARNEY.—Among the pioneer settlers of San Joaquin County is the late John S. Harney, who for close to half a century was identified with the upbuilding of the county. He was born on a Switzerland farm on November 10, 1842, where he remained until a young man, coming to the United States in 1865. He spent two years in Ohio and in Chicago, coming to Stockton in 1867, and there established himself in business as a carriagemaker, in which he was most proficient, continuing in this line for five years.

In 1872 Mr. Harney bought a ranch of 160 acres three and a half miles southeast of Lodi, at what is now Ampere Station, Harney's Lane, for which he paid $7,800 cash. Later Mr. Harney purchased another 160 acres from John Pope for $10,000. Mr. Harney many years ago divided up the first ranch he purchased, giving each of his children twenty acres, and retaining twenty acres for his home place. In 1902 they each planted ten acres to vineyard, and in 1920 the eldest daughter sold her twenty acres for $42,000 cash, showing the advance of property valuations in the Lodi district; another daughter received $14,000 in 1920 from her ten-acre vineyard.

Mr. Harney was married in 1869 to Miss Marie C. Miller, a native of Prussia, and they became the parents of seven children: Mrs. Mattie M. Stein, wife of John F. Stein, deceased, of Lodi, who for many years has been prominent in the Native Daughters of the Golden West and grand president of the order; Johanna, the wife of O. H. Wells of Lodi; Lena, Mrs. Harry Menkin, deceased; Lucy, the wife of Frank Lieginger of Stockton; Henry, residing on the home ranch; Marie, the wife of John Fagg, residing at Stockton; Miss Minnie Harney, living in Lodi with her mother, who is now eighty-two years of age. Mr. Harney passed away on August 22, 1910, esteemed and honored for his long and useful life in the community which he had done much to upbuild.

EDDIE L. HIBBS.—An enterprising, experienced and very successful vineyardist, with some original, progressive views on modern scientific methods of husbandry, is Eddie L. Hibbs, living on Cherokee Road, not far from the Houston School, where he has one of the trim ranches so representative of the industry of San Joaquin County farmers. He was born near Havana, Mason County, Ill., on September 22, 1876, and is proud of the fact that he saw the light just about the time when the elated American nation, having finished with the wonderful Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, was stepping forward on its second century in the paths of advanced civilization. His father was George Hibbs, and his mother, before her marriage, was Miss Mary E. Jackson; and on both sides his parents' families were early Illinois settlers. His father passed away in 1918, but his mother is still alive, making her home with the children, at the age of sixty-eight, hale and hearty. They had two children: Ida, Mrs. Closson, residing at Lodi, Calif., and our subject.

In 1878, Mr. and Mrs. George Hibbs removed to the vicinity of Lincoln, Neb., in Lancaster County, and leased farms on which they raised grain for the next eight years; but in 1886 Mr. Hibbs ventured into Cheyenne County, where he homesteaded one quarter section of land, afterward in the new Deuel County. In 1890, he proved up the land, and then moved back to Lancaster County, where he farmed until 1897. Thus it happened that Eddie Hibbs went to the district schools of both Lancaster and Deuel counties. When twenty-one years of age he began for himself and in 1897 he removed to York County, Neb., and farmed there for five years.

In York County, Neb., on November 29, 1899, Eddie L. Hibbs was married to Miss Florence Egelhoff, a native of Indiana, where she was born near Lafayette, in Tippecanoe County. Her parents were William and Laura Egelhoff; the former a native of Ohio, and the latter a native of Indiana. Mrs. Hibbs was the third oldest of six children and was educated in the York County graded schools, and remained at home with her parents until her marriage.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Hibbs removed to Dawson County, and there they bought a fine ranch of 160 acres of farm land, on which they raised wheat and corn; but in 1906 they sold out and came further west to California. At first, they settled near Lodi, buying ten acres of vineyard southeast of town; but after one and a half years in California, they sold out and, in 1907, went to Dawson County, Neb. There they remained until 1915, when they came back to California, leaving a quarter-section which they had greatly improved. Once again in California, they bought ten acres in the vicinity of Acampo, on the Southern Pacific Railroad, near the Winery Road, between Cherokee Lane and the State Highway. This tract he operated for three years, and then traded it for a ranch in Yolo County, near Madison, where he had ninety-one acres of alfalfa and grain ranch. He lived there only three months, however, when he came back to Acampo; and then he bought eleven and one-half acres on the Cherokee Road, southeast of the Acampo Road, the place he has now. He has his own fine irrigation plant capable of supplying a three-inch stream. In 1921, Mr. Hibbs bought an orchard of three acres in Woodbridge, which he has devoted to the raising of cherries and berries.

Four children have made up the family of Mr. and Mrs. Hibbs. Alma married W. J. Pope of Lodi, who saw service in the late World War; he was in the 4th Division of Engineers, went to France, and braved all the dangers and hardships in the engagements participated in by his division. Leslie is a student in the Lodi high school, and lives at home. George and Bernice are pupils in the Houston grammar school. In politics, Mr. Hibbs is an independent thinker and votes regardless of partisan demands.

JAMES EDWARD JOHNSTON.—An enterprising general contractor of wide-experience who has specialized on road construction and the building of highways, is James Edward Johnston, who was born at Tidaholm, Sweden, on July 8, 1880, the son of a building contractor with whom he learned the carpenter's trade, becoming very proficient. He also earned bricklaying, plastering and stonecutting. At the age of eighteen he set up for himself in business, and constructed a number of buildings for the Swedish government. On June 1, 1906, he arrived in New York City, and pushed westward to Chicago, where he worked for three months at bricklaying. Then he went to San Francisco, where he worked at brick-laying for nine months, returning to Chicago for half a year, and reached Turlock, Cal. in the spring of 1907, where he started contracting in a small way. He erected the State Bank Building, and laid sidewalks for the city of Turlock. He next removed to Tracy and found so much to do there that he remained for twelve years. He executed the brick work and plastering in the Schmidt Block, built the Tracy grammar school, put up the West Side Bank Building, the City Hall and other building and street work, curbs and gutters for the city, built two schools in Fresno, did the concrete work on the Patterson high school and also for the Los Banos grammar school and the Gustine high school. He finished the brick work on the Chowchilla school, and erected a number of small business blocks in Stockton, and did the grading, excavation and concrete work on forty miles of the West Side Irrigation district. He moved 200,000 yards of dirt in the Tranquility district, and installed the cement lining in ditches in the Nagley Work district, eight miles of street work in the North Crest and the Fisher additions, as well as the Sweitzer Addition, all in Stockton, and laid nine miles of macadam road for the county. He recently secured the contract for $80,000 worth of street work in Sonora. He is a member of the General Contractors' Association of San Francisco, which confines its activities to the problems of road construction.

At San Francisco Mr. Johnston was married to Miss Mildred Hitchcock, a native of Nebraska; and their union has been blessed with four children, Walter, Florence, James and Frederick. Mr. Johnston now makes his home in Stockton, and has offices in Stockton Savings & Loan Bank Building. He belongs to Mount Osso Lodge, No. 460, F. and A. M., at Tracy, and he has progressed through all the branches, including Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Oakland, and belongs to the Sciots of Stockton.

REES HARRY.—A well-known Odd Fellow of many years' standing, who very faithfully did his duty in regard to the great question of temperance, was the late Rees Harry, who was born in Montgomery County, Pa., on January 27, 1822, and died at Stockton on September 30, 1884. Although he thus passed away many years ago, he is still affectionately remembered by the old-time residents of Stockton, where he made his home for sixteen years.

He was a descendant of good old Revolutionary stock, his grandfather having figured prominently in the conflict between the mother country and the Colonies, a fact in which he took considerable pride. He was educated in the public schools of his native state. He learned the trade of millwright and carpenter; and so it happened that when he arrived in Stockton in 1868, he readily found employment with the Pioneer Sash & Door Mill Co. Later, he took up building and contracting in Stockton, and followed that for a number of years with marked success. He was one of the pioneer builders of Stockton, and contributed to its material expansion.

He was twice married, and had two children born of the first union—a daughter, later Mrs. Cecilia Humphreys, and a son, Joseph M. Harry, of Stockton. His second marriage took place in Philadelphia, in 1861, when he was united to Miss Sarah Condry; and of their four sons, two are still living—Dr. Charles R. Harry, the prominent physician of Stockton, and Sydney C. Harry. For thirty years or more Rees Harry was a well-known Odd Fellow, and as an honored and influential member of the Episcopal Church in excellent standing, he worked hard to bring about saner views in regard to temperance reform. The second Mrs. Harry, before her marriage, was a teacher; and of the fifteen years in which she taught school in San Joaquin County, eleven were spent in the schools of Stockton. Californians love to honor such pioneer patriots, and there is no doubt of the position which will always be accorded Mr. and Mrs. Rees Harry, whenever the annals of San Joaquin County are written and re-written.

ELMER A. HUMPHREY.—A wide-awake citizen of Lodi is found in Elmer A. Humphrey, the district manager for the Earl Fruit Company, pioneers of the fruit shipping industry of California. He was born in Winters, Yolo County, Cal., on September 6, 1877, a son of Elijah A. and Kate (Still) Humphrey. His father, a native of Virginia, came to California in 1859, crossing the plains in an ox-team train, a saddle and harness maker by trade, and conducted a shop at old Liberty in the northern part of San Joaquin County. He was offered one hundred sixty acres of land in exchange for the best saddle he had in his shop, by the late Senator Langford, but refused to make the trade, thinking the land was not worth the price of the saddle; the 160 acres of land located in the northern part of the San Joaquin Valley is worth $100,000 at the present time. His father was a charter member of Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, F. & A. M., one of the oldest lodges in the state, and was one of its first officers. His mother crossed the plains with her parents with an ox-team train in 1852, a native of Missouri, riding a horse all the way. She is the daughter of Joe Still, who first crossed the plains in 1849 to California, and returning, brought his family back with him in 1852 and was captain of the train on the second trip. Captain Still farmed on Dry Creek near Liberty. Kate Still taught school in the Liberty district at the age of fifteen, and received her pay from the state. She married Elijah A. Humphrey when she was seventeen years old and they were the parents of nine children, all of whom are living. E. A. Humphrey removed from Liberty to Yolo County about 1870, and located at Winters, where he was in the saddle and harness business. He established a reputation for quality in the making of harness. The father passed away in 1890; the mother is residing in Winters at the age of eighty-one years.

Elmer A., seventh of the nine children, attended school at Winters, Yolo County, but was not privileged to go very long before he was obliged to go to work, starting at the age of twelve years, when his father died, to make his own way. He has known much hard work through all the years, but his determination to succeed was never lost sight of and his present success is the merited reward for his years of earnest toil. He owns 135 acres in full bearing fruit and vines in the Acampo district; and has recently purchased 320 acres in Kern County, which is being set to orchard and vineyard. Mr. Humphrey became manager of the Earl Fruit Company in 1902 and during the fruit season 250 cars were shipped from San Joaquin County and there were three companies in the fruit industry; in 1920, 8,000 carloads were shipped from the county and there are now forty-two companies in the fruit shipping industry; in 1902, when Mr. Humphrey became manager of the company, thirty carloads of fruit were shipped from San Joaquin County by his company, and in 1920 the Earl Fruit Company shipped 1,200 carloads. It has been largely through Mr. Humphrey's efficient management and business ability that the business has grown to such proportions, and the company has shown in a substantial way its appreciation of his worth. In 1922, with others, he was one of the founders of the Citizens National Bank and is one of its directors. He is a member of the Lodi Business Men's Association.

The marriage of Mr. Humphrey, in San Francisco, united him with Miss Marjorie Taggart of Arizona, and they are the parents of one son, Earl A. Mr. Humphrey's influence in San Joaquin County is felt far and wide and he has contributed in no small manner to the well being and upbuilding of the county.

GEORGE P. HENERY.—A native son, full of the genuine spirit of Americanism, and a capable and efficient employe, is George P. Henery, the secretary and treasurer of the Clark & Henery Construction Company of Stockton. He was born in Napa, Cal., on November 22, 1875, the son of William and Almira (Porter) Henery, both natives of Ohio. William Henery located in Napa in 1874 and the following year he removed to Stockton and became the chief engineer on a river steamer for the California Navigation & Improvement Company, his period of service covering some twenty-five years. The parents are both residing in Oakland, where Mr. Henery has retired.

George P. Henery attended the public schools of Stockton and was graduated from the Stockton High School with the class of '95. He then took a trip to Panama and for the next five years was engaged in the coffee and chocolate industry. Returning then to Stockton, Mr. Henery became purser in the employ of the California Navigation and Improvement Company on steamers running between Stockton and San Francisco, remaining with that company until 1906. He then accepted a position as bookkeeper for the Clark & Henery Construction Company and has steadily and capably worked himself up until he is now the secretary and treasurer of the large concern which does business all over the western coast.

The marriage of George P. Henery united him with Miss Hazel Moore, a native daughter of Stockton and daughter of John Moore, well-known in political circles in San Joaquin County. Mr. and Mrs. Henery have two children, Susan and Billy. Mr. Henery is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218 B. P. O. Elks; San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M., and of the Yosemite Club. He is a man of strong and forceful character, enterprising and public spirited, and enjoys the respect and esteem of all with whom he comes in contact in business and social circles.

KLEIN BROTHERS.—Enterprising and energetic, Sol D. and Jack Klein, who constitute the firm of Klein Bros. of Stockton, have made a name for themselves through their successful operations as dealers in beans and grain. Sol D. Klein was born in New York on July 28, 1897, and Jack Klein, who is a native of San Francisco, was born there on June 28, 1901. The former came to San Francisco when four years of age with his parents, who both passed away when the boys were still children. They were reared in a children's home, and thus they deserve especial credit for the success they have made, since it has come about entirely through their own efforts.

Sol D. Klein worked for five years with the Guggenheim Company, dried fruit packers of San Francisco, continuing with them until 1917, when he came to Stockton and opened a commission and brokerage office on West Weber Avenue having as a partner his brother, George Klein, who not long after entered the U. S. service, when America cast in her lot with the Allies. His brother, Jack Klein, took his place in the firm in September, 1917, but the first two years their profits were very small. In 1919 they concluded several big deals and in 1922 they met with wonderful success as the following news item in a local paper will show: "The Klein brothers, with offices on the water front, have done exceptionally well this year in buying and selling beans this season and some of their friends figure their gains around $50,000. These young men went into business early, staked a lot of big renters on Delta lands and contracted with many growers for their crops at about four cents a pound. Several contracts at that figure were for lots of 10,000 to 15,000 bags of beans and the stocks bought at four cents were sold at a good profit. The Klein brothers are the principal buyers in the local market and sellers seek their offers before going around the produce section. Showing the magnitude of the business carried on by these young men who have crowded to the front this season, last week they shipped one lot of pink beans amounting to 35,000 bags." They are the biggest dealers in all varieties of beans raised in this district on the Stockton waterfront. In 1922 their bean exhibit at the State Fair at Sacramento won for them the first premium on pink beans and red kidney beans, and the second prize for Mexican red and Los Angeles white beans. The firm is a member of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce and Stockton Chamber of Commerce.

Sol D. Klein, who served in the U. S. Navy during the war, is a member of Karl Ross Post, American Legion, and of Stockton Lodge of Odd Fellows, and both brothers are members of the B'nai B'rith.

JOHN WILKES PAYNE.—A native of Illinois, John Wilkes Payne was born at Belleville, St. Clair County, June 7, 1845. His father, Charles H. Payne, was born in Hartford, Conn., and came to Portage County, Ohio, with his parents when a boy of four years. His grandfather, Wilkes Payne, was born at East Windsor, Conn., June 29, 1792; he married Phebe Jarome, a daughter of William and Phebe Jarome of Bristol, Conn. In 1814 Mr. Payne moved to Ohio; he died in 1883, and his wife died in 1851.

Charles H. Payne was educated in Ohio. He learned the carpenter's trade, and after he came out to Illinois he followed his trade there. He married Sarah Pulliam, who was born in North Carolina of an old Quaker family of English descent. They emigrated from North Carolina to Illinois to get away from slavery territory. In 1852 he brought his wife and one child, John Wilkes, then seven years old, across the plains with ox team and wagon to California. He mined at Coloma, and then at Kelsey; and afterwards he went to Elkhorn, Yolo County, on the Sacramento River, where he farmed for two years. Then he again went to the mines at Dutch Flat and mined until 1859. Coming then to San Joaquin County, he located at Elliott, where he engaged in farming. For a time he again followed prospecting in California and Nevada, but finally retired to Stockton, where he passed away at the age of eighty-eight years and two months. The mother died in El Dorado in 1855. This worthy couple had two children, of whom John Wilkes is the elder. His sister, Mrs. Lena Rogers, resides in Sonora.

John Wilkes Payne, as stated, crossed the plains with his parents to California when seven years of age. He attended the district school and helped his father on the ranch near Elliott until he volunteered his services to his country for the Civil War, enlisting November 15, 1863, in Company E, 7th California Infantry, and serving in Arizona until July, 1866, when he returned to San Francisco via the Gulf of California and then was mustered out of service July 22, 1866.

In 1867 Mr. Payne was married at Elliott to Miss Bettie Misenheimer, born in Sangamon County, Illinois. Her father came to California with his family across the plains in 1854, and became a farmer at Elliott. After his marriage, Mr. Payne followed farming until 1869, and then moved to Stockton and there followed the building business until 1888, when he entered the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company as a machinist. As early as 1874 he had worked at building harvesters for Madison Williamson, and later for Dave Young and for Baker & Hamilton, and so had become adept in that line of work. From 1888 until 1920 he worked steadily and faithfully for the Holt Manufacturing Company, and then retired on a pension. With his second wife he now resides at their comfortable home on the corner of East Hazelton and Union streets, enjoying a well-earned competency. The union of Mr. Payne and his first wife was blessed with nine children: Jessie, now Mrs. Zugg, of Pacific Grove; Lucy, Mrs. Newmark, Tulsa, Okla.; Cecile, living in Stockton; John, in Ukiah; Walter, in the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company; Sadie, Mrs. Shilling, of Oakland; Fred, a marine engineer with the Pacific Steamship Company; Harry, living in Los Angeles; and May, in Stockton.

John Wilkes Payne

Mr. Payne's first wife died in 1912, and he married a second time in November, 1915, when he was united with Mrs. Lucy (Elam) Miller, born in Livingston County, Mo., a daughter of William and Lucy Elam. The latter died when Lucy was a baby, leaving her the youngest of five motherless children. In 1861 Mr. Elam brought his children to California, crossing the plains in an ox-team train by the Greenhorn route. Arriving in California after a six months' trip, he located on a farm at Linden, San Joaquin County. Later he removed to Fresno County, where he died.

Lucy Elam attended the local schools until her first marriage, to F. M. Miller, who was born in Missouri, and came to California. He was a wagonmaker, but after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Miller removed to Dinuba, and became pioneer farmers there. Mr. Miller passed away in 1911 at Berkeley. Of their marriage were born ten children: John W., who lives at Santa Cruz; Mrs. Hattie Kenner, living in Los Angeles; Mrs. Maude Thorp, of Dinuba; Charles, of Tulare County; Frank, living in San Francisco; Arthur, in Oakland; Clara, now Mrs. Regnald, of Walnut Creek; Mrs. Lucy Rogers, of Dinuba; Mrs. Josie Gard, of Hanford; and Elmer, of Dinuba.

Mr. Payne is a past commander of Rawlius Post, G. A. R., Department of Nevada and California. Mrs. Payne is an active member of the Woman's Relief Corps. Both are strong Republicans.

GEORGE A. GIBSON.—Among the public spirited business men of San Joaquin County, a prominent position is accorded George A. Gibson, who was born on his father's ranch near Eureka, Humboldt County, Cal., on July 15, 1883, a son of George H. and Rosa (Greenlaw) Gibson, the father a native of Hull, England, and the mother of St. Stephen, New Brunswick. In the early '50s the father went to Alaska and engaged in mining. These were trying times to the pioneers; for in addition to the hardships endured through extreme cold and scarcity of food and clothing, they were attacked by hostile tribes of Indians. In the early '60s he located in Humboldt County, Cal., and bought 160 acres of land near Eureka, where he engaged in farming until his death. He was a prominent member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church.

The public schools of Humboldt County afforded George A. Gibson his education and his father's ranch gave him employment when not in school. He remained at home with his parents until he was nineteen years of age, when he came to San Francisco and took a year's course in Heald's Business College, where he was graduated in 1904. Returning home, he became bookkeeper for the Northern Redwood Lumber Company at Korbell, Humboldt County; later he entered the employ of G. M. Cormick & Co., wholesale and retail grocers, in Eureka, as bookkeeper and remained there for three years, when he became head bookkeeper in the mercantile department of the Eel River Mercantile Company at Scotia, Humboldt County.

In April of 1913 he settled in San Joaquin County and bought fifty acres from the Graham estate, located in the Live Oak district. Twenty-seven acres of this ranch was planted to grapes, ten acres to alfalfa, three acres to a mixed orchard; the balance is bare land. Mr. Gibson set about improving the property, putting four acres in alfalfa and six acres in prunes and plums, and when he sold it in January of 1922 he realized a fine profit for his hard work. Since then he has purchased a place of forty acres, which he is developing. Besides attending to the improvement and development of his ranch property, he took an extension course in dairy husbandry and alfalfa culture in the University of California; he has also taken a course in commercial law under Judge Gerald Beatty Wallace of Stockton; and recently completed a course in public accounting and auditing in the extension course offered by the University of California.

When the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau decided to employ an executive secretary for their association, Mr. Gibson was selected as the man best fitted for that particular kind of work, and on February 1, 1922, he resigned his position as cashier of the Western States Gas & Electric Company of Stockton, where he had been for the past four years, and entered upon his new work. Mr. Gibson served as the first director from the Live Oak Center when the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau was first organized.

The marriage of Mr. Gibson in Eureka united him with Miss Winifred M. Young, a native of Humboldt County, Cal., and they are the parents of two children, Margaret E. and Howard H.

HERBERT JUSTIN MANN.—An eminently conscientious and efficient public accountant who has done much, through his painstaking labors and successful work, to elevate still further the dignity of that profession in California, is Herbert Justin Mann, of 222 Yosemite Building, Stockton, in which city he was born, on September 4, 1890. His father, Jacob Mann, a native of Germany, when sixteen, made his way to Australia, then came out to California in the early sixties, when he was a boy of eighteen, and for almost twenty-five years he was with the Simpson & Gray Lumber Company. He died in 1907, an honored member of the Druids. He had married, in Stockton, Miss Bertha Echenberger, a native of Canton Berne, Switzerland, who came with her parents to Philadelphia when about seven years old, and there attended school. Later she accompanied her mother and sister to Stockton. She died in April, 1921, the mother of four sons, all born in Stockton, and all still living—William J., Robert E., Walter C., and Herbert J.

Herbert J. Mann attended the grammar schools and Stockton high school, and from the latter institution he was graduated with the class of '08. His first employment was in the shipping department of the Houser-Haynes Harvester Company, and after a while he was in the accounting department of the same company. When the Holt Company absorbed the concern, Mr. Mann remained with them for eight months, and in 1913 he entered the employ of the Frank A. Guernsey Grain Company, where, at the end of two years, he became one of the partners and was made secretary and treasurer. On June 25, 1921, he severed his connection with that important house and struck out for himself, and since then he has built up a large patronage. He not only does auditing and installation of accounting systems, but, as the result of his seven years with the Guernsey Company, when he made many friends among the farmer-folk, he has successfully opened up a new branch, in taking charge of the account books of ranchers. He belongs to the Chamber of Commerce.

At Stockton, in 1914, Mr. Mann was married to Miss Ruth Page, a native of Lodi; and their union has been blessed with three children: Justin Page, Susan Ruth, and Margery Beryl. Mr. Mann is a charter member of the Stockton Scots, and he belongs to Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.; Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E.; San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., and to the local council R. & S. M.

GEORGE B. McCUEN.—A retired house painter who has worked hard and lived frugally and thereby gained independence, is George B. McCuen, residing at 929 East Channel Street, Stockton. He was born in New York, August 14, 1864, being a son of Lewis McCuen, who was born in Canada, September 29, 1838, and later came to New York, where he farmed in St. Lawrence County. There, some time before the Civil War, he was married to Miss Harriet N. Poor and three children were born to them: George B. of this sketch; Minnie died in Stockton; Theron R., an employe of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, resides at Lone, Cal. Lewis McCuen served in Company A, 60th Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War and when his son, George B., was a boy of eight years he removed from their St. Lawrence County farm to Potsdam, N. Y. Lewis McCuen brought his family from New York to California in 1888, coming direct to Stockton, where he has since made his home and where he is a prominent member of the G. A. R. Mrs. McCuen passed away at the family home in March, 1907, aged sixty-seven years.

George B. McCuen attended the public school of Norwood, N. Y., where the family resided, until he was nineteen years old, when he left for California, arriving in Stockton, June 19, 1884, and took up the trade of house painting, having done journeyman's work; also engaged as a painting contractor. At Stockton, on June 20, 1888, he was married to Miss May L. Tinkham, the daughter of Wallace and Angela S. (Marsh) Tinkham, pioneers of Stockton, Mrs. McCuen being a cousin of George H. Tinkham, the historian. She is a native daughter, born in Stockton and here she grew up and received her education. Her father, Wallace Tinkham, was born at North Pomfret, Vt., August 9, 1828, and settled in Stockton in the early '60s and was a pioneer painting contractor here. He was married at Woodstock, Vt., May 17, 1860, to Miss Angela S. Marsh, also a native of Vermont. He came out to California the first time via Panama in the late '50s, then went back to Vermont and married and brought his wife out to Stockton. He had learned the painter's trade in Vermont, before coming to California. After coming to California he was engaged in the butcher business with his brother, Henry Tinkham, and later engaged in the house painting business. Two children were born to this pioneer couple: Arthur M., born in Stockton, September 15, 1861, and died February 23, 1879, being killed in the explosion of a steam boiler at the head of the channel; Mrs. McCuen was their only daughter. Both parents are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. McCuen are the parents of one daughter, Alice Pearl, now the wife of Grat E. Cannon. For sixteen years Mr. McCuen was associated with his father-in-law, Wallace Tinkham, in house painting contracting. He joined the Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., Stockton, in 1886, and is past grand of that order; he is also a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood, while Mrs. McCuen is a member of Lebanon Lodge of Rebekahs of Stockton and is an attendant at the Presbyterian Church. Both Mr. and Mrs. McCuen are consistent Republicans.

EDWARD H. RILEY.—The thoroughness, industry and business judgment employed by Edward H. Riley in his building operations have been the means of winning for him a prominent place in business circles of Stockton, and he is doing a general contracting business, independently, with offices in the Wilhoit Building and is contributing his full share to the building up of his native city, where he was born on October 27, 1885. His father, Edward H. Riley, a native of Ireland, came to the San Joaquin Valley in early days and engaged in farming and ran a dairy. His mother before her marriage, was Miss Anna Fox, she too being a native of Ireland. Both parents are now deceased.

Edward H., Jr., was educated in the Brothers School in Stockton and after finishing there learned the carpenter's trade with Robert Powell. Arriving in San Francisco early in April, 1906, the disastrous fire afforded him the opportunity of taking an active part in the rebuilding of the stricken city. His first employment was with the Western Pacific Railroad in the construction of their buildings at the San Francisco terminal and across the Bay at the Oakland terminal, at the time this railroad was being built into Oakland and San Francisco. Following this for a period of three years he was with Richard Keating, the concrete contractor, and while in this connection was foreman of construction on the concrete reservoir on the top of Twin Peaks. He was later with two other prominent contractors, H. L. Peterson and W. W. Anderson.

During 1914 he returned to Stockton and was, for a time, with James Mulcahy in the construction of a number of fine buildings. He then started in business for himself and erected many buildings of all kinds among the most outstanding being St. Agnes' Academy; Hansel & Ortman garage; the concrete bridge on Sutter Street across Mormon Slough; St. Joseph's Hospital; St. Gertrude's Catholic Church and Parish House in Fair Oaks; Clark's garage on South Sutter Street; the T. & D. Theatre Building; the Murphy garage on the corner of North El Dorado Street and Miner Avenue; Naylor's Ford garage and sales building on North El Dorado Street; the Williams block and Wilhoit building on South San Joaquin Street; and the Bennett apartments, the first constructed in Stockton. All of these buildings are among the very best and most modern in the city. During 1918, a partnership was formed with Jesse F. Shepherd, under the firm name of Shepherd & Riley, and the following buildings are silent witnesses of their ability and capableness: a theater building in Pittsburg, Contra Costa County, costing $60,000; warehouse in Stockton for the Sperry Flour Company amounting to the same figure; a $56,000 warehouse for the Stockton Packing and Canning Company; $40,000 job for the California Packing Corporation; $25,000 store building for Eaton & Buckley; garage for Root brothers costing about $26,000. They also constructed the Fair Oaks, the McKinley, the El Dorado and the Roosevelt school houses; the high school auditorium and the gymnasium and showers. These buildings are the last word in modern school buildings in this part of the state. They also built a school at Atlanta and one at Salida, Stanislaus County. In April, 1923, the partnership of Riley & Shepherd was dissolved, Mr. Riley continuing the contracting business on an independent basis.

The marriage of Mr. Riley, in 1908, united him with Miss Mary Killian, a native of Stockton and member of a pioneer family of the county. They are the parents of two children, Ethel M. and Hazel L., both born in San Francisco. Fraternally, Mr. Riley is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E.; Knights of Columbus; and Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W. He is a member of the board of directors of the Stockton Builders' Exchange; also of the board of the Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers Association. All in all he has always found time to do his part to aid any worthy project that had for its aim the upbuilding of the city, county and state.

DAVID B. LYMAN.—A distinguished member of the legal fraternity of San Joaquin County who has added much to the prestige of the bar in this part of the state is David B. Lyman, whose ability and activity have won a place of standing for him during his residence here. Mr. Lyman was born in Chicago, Ill., on July 11, 1871, and received his education in the public schools, Racine College at Racine, Wis., St. Paul's School, Concord, N. H., and then entered Yale University, where he was graduated in the class of 1895. His legal training was completed at Northwestern University, Chicago, where he took a two years' course, and in 1897 he was admitted to practice in the state and federal courts of Illinois. Here he continued until 1917, when he came to Stockton and became associated with the legal department of the Holt Manufacturing Company. After the entrance of America in the World War, Mr. Lyman was prominent in war service, working with the War Industries Board and the Fuel Administration at Stockton, and was an associate member of the legal advisory board of the selective service for San Joaquin County, rendering a service that was of great importance at this time. Since the war he has specialized in state and federal law and federal taxation, maintaining offices in the Commercial & Savings Bank Building at Stockton, where he has a large clientele.

Closely identified with the life of the community, Mr. Lyman is a member of the Yosemite Club, the Stockton Golf & Country Club, the Yale Alumni of San Francisco and the Psi Upsilon college fraternity; he belongs to the San Joaquin County Bar Association and the Chicago Bar Association.

RAYMOND T. MCGURK, M. D.—Well and favorably known as a physician and surgeon of distinction, Dr. Raymond T. McGurk was born in Stockton, October 21, 1883, a son of Charles H. and Elizabeth (Thornton) McGurk, the former a native of San Andreas, Calaveras County, and the latter of Sacramento, and both are still living in Stockton. Charles H. McGurk came to Stockton a young man and entered the employ of the Sperry Flour Company, but in 1887 he entered the butcher business in Stockton, and with the exception of one term as chief of police, has been in that business ever since; at present he is the manager of the Maisel Meat Company. Elizabeth (Thornton) McGurk was reared in Calaveras County and taught in the public schools there for several years; of late years she has been active in the affairs of the Calaveras Society of Stockton, whose members are made up of former residents of that county and she is a past president of the society. Mr. and Mrs. McGurk had two children: Mrs. Joseph M. Kidd, and Raymond T.

Raymond T. McGurk received his education in St. Joseph's private school and St. Mary's school in Stockton and was later graduated from the Stockton high school, class of '05, the first class to graduate from the new high school on Vine Street. Desiring to become a physician he entered Cooper Medical College and was graduated with the class of '09, with the degree of M. D., and licensed to practice by the State Board of Examiners that same year. He became an interne at the San Joaquin County Hospital and in 1910 located in Stockton and began to build up a private practice. He served as city health officer during 1911 and 1912, and was for five years a member of the staff of the Stockton Emergency Hospital under Chief Surgeon Dr. Ira B. Ladd and later under Dr. L. R. Johnson. In 1918 Dr. McGurk took a post-graduate course in surgery at Harvard University and visited many of the Eastern clinics. He has been prominent in the San Joaquin County Medical Society, serving as secretary and later as its president and is now a member of the board of directors. Like most successful professional men, Dr. McGurk has a hobby, and that is the raising of registered Scotch Shorthorn beef cattle. With his father, Charles H. McGurk, he owns and operates a ranch of 300 acres at Bellota, San Joaquin County, on which he has a herd of registered Scotch Shorthorn cattle of which he is justly proud.

The marriage of Dr. McGurk united him with Miss Mamie B. Robinson, a native of San Joaquin County, a daughter of I. N. Robinson, a retired farmer of Stockton. Dr. and Mrs. McGurk are the parents of three children: Marjorie Elizabeth; Raymond Thornton, Jr., and Norman Edward. Fraternally Dr. McGurk is a member of the Knights of Columbus and Young Men's Institute.

WARREN T. McNEIL, M. D.—A highly progressive physician and surgeon, who has won for himself a high place among the medical fraternity, not only in San Joaquin County, but in Northern California as well, is Dr. Warren T. McNeil, who was born near Tracy on March 9, 1883. His father, John Alexander McNeil, is a native of Nova Scotia, and his mother, in maidenhood Miss Ellen Lynn, was born at Santa Clara. Warren McNeil attended the grammar school at Tracy, and then went for a year to the San Jose high school, and finally was graduated from the Santa Clara high school, with the class of 1900. He then entered Stanford University in the fall of 1903, and four years later was graduated with the A. B. degree, after which he commenced his studies at the Cooper Medical College, in the fall of 1908, and four years later he received his M. D. degree from that leading institution. He served for a year as interne at the Lane Hospital at San Francisco, and for another year was interne at Mount Zion Hospital, in San Francisco.

In May, 1914, he entered the employ of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company as ship doctor on their trans-Pacific liner Nile, on the twelfth trip across the Pacific; but on arriving in Hong Kong he became ship surgeon on a British transport plying between China and England. He was discharged in England with credit by the British Admiralty in April, 1915, returning home via New York, thereby completing a trip around the world, adding greatly to his practical experience.

In September, 1915, he arrived in Stockton, and with Dr. S. F. Priestley as a partner he practiced medicine until September, 1916, when he entered upon practice for himself. He opened offices in the Commercial and Savings Bank Building, and from the beginning did well. He was commissioned first lieutenant in the medical corps in April, 1918, and began his active service in August, 1918, and was in training camps Kearny, Shelby and Upton; he served for seven months overseas, sailing in November, 1918, with Evacuation Hospital No. 33, on the steamer Sierra. He returned to the United States on the steamship George Washington in July, 1919, in charge of fifty nurses, who had served in the war; and he was discharged at the Presidio, at San Francisco, on August 17, 1919. On returning to Stockton he resumed the practice of medicine, and he is now a member of the medical staff of St. Joseph's Hospital at Stockton, and also of the State and County Medical societies. He belongs to the Anteros Club of Stockton, and is president of the Stanford Alumni Association of the same city. He is a member of Delta Lodge No. 471, F. & A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., Stockton Council No. 10, R. & S. M., and Golden Poppy Chapter No. 355, O. E. S. He is also a member of the Karl Ross Post, American Legion, No. 16, and of Luneta Post No. 52, Veterans of Foreign Wars; is active in the Y. M. C. A. at Stockton, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Tracy.

EMILE S. SANGUINETTI.—One of the best-known sheep men in San Joaquin County is Emile S. Sanguinetti, a native son of the county, born on June 23, 1888. His parents, James and Mary (Lagomarsino) Sanguinetti, were both natives of the Genoa district of Italy; the father came here in the early days and engaged in raising vegetables, later acquiring a ranch of 320 acres at Peters, where he farmed and raised draft horses for many years, and was also interested in viticulture at Lodi, but he is now retired from active ranch life. He and his wife were the parents of eight living children, four sons and four daughters.

Emile S. Sanguinetti attended the Peters, Linden and Farmington schools, but started to work on the ranch at an early age, guiding a plow before he was old enough to harness a horse. He remained on the home place until 1911, when he came to Stockton and entered the employ of the Joe Gianelli Company, driving a delivery wagon. He worked up through the various departments, from salesman to manager of the wholesale department of the company and was one of their most capable men. In July, 1918, while still connected with this firm, in company with his father-in-law, Frank Parker, he bought a band of 800 sheep and in October of that year he resigned his position to give his entire time to sheep raising, in which he has been very successful. His cousin, Louis Sanguinetti, purchased Mr. Parker's interest about this time and the partners now have 1,800 sheep and a rented range of 900 acres near Peters.

Mr. Sanguinetti's marriage united him with Miss Julia Parker, who was born in this county on her father's ranch near Peters. They have two children, Parker and Euretta. In addition to his interests in sheep raising, Mr. Sanguinetti also has valuable real estate holdings in Stockton. In fraternal life he is a member of the Red Men and Eagles.

OTTO BILLIGMEIER.—Classed with the successful viticulturists of San Joaquin County, Otto Billigmeier is the owner of a beautiful and productive vineyard property northwest of Victor. He was born in McIntosh County, N. D., on February 28, 1895, a son of Samuel and Katherine (Hinz) Billigmeier, natives of southern Russia. His father, Samuel Billigmeier, came to the United States from Russia and settled in North Dakota, where he homesteaded a 160-acre farm and there engaged in farming. In April, 1902, he brought his family to California and first located at Lockeford, where they remained for one year; then he moved to Lodi and bought a twenty-acre ranch near Victor, which he set to vines. Mrs. Billigmeier passed away on January 23, 1923. There were ten children in the family: Christina, now Mrs. Christiansen, of Lodi; Matilda, deceased; Paulina, Mrs. Hepper, of Lodi; Tilly, Mrs. Rathjan, of Lodi; Sarah, Mrs. Dewey, of Stockton; Leah, Mrs. Olson, of Stockton; Esril, who served in the World War, and now resides at Livingston; Otto, the subject of this sketch; Robert, of Lodi; and John, living at home.

When a lad of seven years, Otto Billigmeier accompanied his parents to Lockeford. He attended the Lockeford, Alpine and Victor district schools, which afforded him a good education, and with the knowledge gained on his father's ranch he was able, at the age of eighteen, to start out for himself. He worked at odd jobs throughout the county for about four years, and then he and his brother Robert bought a twenty-acre vineyard. On November 2, 1917, Mr. Billigmeier entered the service of his country and was sent to Camp Lewis, where he remained for a short time. He was then sent to Camp Mills, N. Y., and was placed in Battery C, 146th Field Artillery, and was sent overseas on December 24, 1917. Landing in Liverpool, England, he went to Winchester and Southampton, and then across the Channel to Havre, France. His regiment was sent to Bordeaux, where they trained until July, 1918, then sent to the Alsace front, and afterwards to the St. Mihiel salient. Mr. Billigmeier was in the Champagne-Marne, Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel, Meuse, and the Argonne, and also at Montigny, near Stenay. After the Armistice was signed, his regiment was in the Army of Occupation, and remained at Grenzenhausen, in Germany, for about six months, and he was military police interpreter for the regiment. In June, 1919, they set sail for the United States, and Mr. Billigmeier was discharged at the Presidio at San Francisco, July 1, 1919, and received the Victory medal with five bars from his Government, and then returned to his home in Victor.

On February 11, 1920, in Lodi, Cal., Mr. Billigmeier was married to Miss Bertha Schmierer, a daughter of John and Katherine (Motz) Schmierer, who brought their family from North Dakota to Lodi, where the father was a vineyardist. Mrs. Billigmeier was born in McIntosh County, N. D., but received her education in the Alpine and Victor schools, where she and Mr. Billigmeier were schoolmates. Their union has been blessed with two children, Marjorie Lois and Stanley Harold. On his return from the service, Mr. Billigmeier resumed farming, his brother Robert having cared for their place, and soon afterwards they bought a ten-acre place adjoining, but in 1922 they divided the property and dissolved partnership. Otto built a modern bungalow on his ten-acre vineyard, and purchased another ten acres, so he now has twenty acres of vineyard and orchard. Politically, Mr. Billigmeier is a Republican, and fraternally, he is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men of Lodi and the Lodi Post No. 22, American Legion. Mr. and Mrs. Billigmeier are members of the Evangelical Church in Lodi, where Mrs. Billigmeier is the organist and Mr. Billigmeier sings in the choir.

HENRY CHRISTIAN PETERSEN, M. D.—Eminent among those who have contributed to make Stockton one of the most desirable and safest places for comfortable living in the state, Henry Christian Petersen enjoys an enviable reputation as a specialist in obstetrics and pediatrics. He was born near Petaluma, Cal., on August 16, 1875, the son of Henry C. and Mary (Jensen) Petersen, both natives of Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, both now deceased. The father located in Sonoma County in the late '60s and engaged in farming and dairying until about 1880, when he removed to San Joaquin County, where he located on a farm near Tracy and engaged in grain farming; later he bought a ranch at Bethany. The family consisted of six children, four of whom are now living: William P. resides at Bethany, Cal.; Peter C. resides in Oakland, Cal.; Henry Christian is the subject of this sketch; Charles resides at Haywards, Cal.; while Mrs. Walter Jensen and Clara are both deceased.

The preliminary education of Henry C. Petersen was begun in the public school at Tracy and was continued in the Lammersville district and then at Mountain House in San Joaquin County; later he entered the San Jose State Normal School, where he graduated in 1895, and for the five years following was engaged in teaching, his last school being at Lockeford, this county, where he was principal. He then went to Chicago, Ill., to attend the medical department of the University of Illinois, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of M. D. with the class of '05. Returning to Stockton, he began the practice of his profession and was so engaged until 1910, when he went to London, England, for a post-graduate course in the various hospitals of that city, covering a period of one year, and on his return resumed his practice; then in 1916 he took a post-graduate course in the hospitals of New York City. During his years of practice, having made a close study of obstetrics and pediatrics, Dr. Petersen is still further fit himself, in 1921 took a special course in the above branches of medical science in the New York hospitals, and since his return to Stockton has made these branches of medicine his specialty, in which he is meeting with deserved success. He has charge of the children's department of the city clinic in Stockton. For one year Dr. Petersen was health officer of San Joaquin County. He is a member of the American Medical Association, and also of the State and County societies. During the World War Dr. Petersen was one of the chief examiners for the draft board.

The marriage of Dr. Petersen occurred in Stockton in 1906, which united him with Miss Cora Comfort, a native of Palatine, Ill., who came to Stockton with her mother when nine years of age and is a graduate of the Stockton high school and the San Jose Normal, and became a very successful teacher. They are the parents of one son, Henry Charles, who was born in London, England. Fraternally, Dr. Petersen is a member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F.; of the Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Stockton Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar, and Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Oakland, and the Lions Club.

WALTER P. ROTHENBUSH.—A native son of California of more than passing prominence in the affairs of the Native Sons of the Golden West is Walter P. Rothenbush, having been a member of the Stockton lodge for a quarter of a century. He was born in Stockton, Cal., on April 23, 1880, a son of Jacob and Philopena (Zimmer) Rothenbush. The father, Jacob Rothenbush, was born in one of the Rhine provinces, Bavaria, Germany, on November 18, 1838. The Rothenbush family is one of the pioneer families of California and was represented by five brothers who came to the state in early days: Fred, a captain in the Civil War; and Daniel, Christian, Peter, and Jacob. Peter Rothenbush went back to Germany and brought his younger brother, Jacob, back in 1853 via the Isthmus of Panama.

Jacob Rothenbush spent his boyhood days in Sonora, Tuolumne County, where he followed the butcher business and cattle raising. In 1860 he settled in Stockton and entered the employ of Gerlach & Wagner, butchers, and after long years of service he was employed as meat cutter at Stockton State Hospital, and in 1912 retired from active business cares. Being of a thrifty and economical turn of mind, he saved his money and purchased one-half block of land on Oak Street, between Stanislaus and Grant streets, and erected three houses; this was bought from Captain Weber, and a portion of this property is still in the possession of the family. Jacob Rothenbush joined the Stockton Lodge of Odd Fellows, No. 11 fifty-eight years ago; when he had been a member fifty-five years, the lodge presented him with a jeweled pin in token of the long years of service; he was also a charter member of Oak Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He passed away in Galt, Cal., on March 18, 1922, an honored and respected California pioneer. The mother, Philopena (Zimmer) Rothenbush, was born at Bozenbach, a Rhine province, Germany, and came to California with her three sisters when she was sixteen years of age, only one of the sisters now surviving, Mrs. Philip Schmidt. Mrs. Rothenbush passed away at the age of sixty-nine, the mother of three children: Mrs. F. W. Stroud; Fred C., of Galt, Cal.; and Walter P., our subject.

Walter P. Rothenbush was educated in the public schools of Stockton and after finishing learned the machinist's trade. In 1905 he entered the employ of the New Method Laundry, remaining with them until 1911; then for the next six years was in the employ of the Home Laundry; then for a year and a half was with the Sampson Motor Company, during the time of the World War; later with the Exclusive Laundry. Mr. Rothenbush then became the steward of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and has been one of the leading members of this order for many years; he served as third vice-president in 1913, and during the years of 1914-15 was president. Besides being steward, he holds the office of marshal of the lodge; he has also been a delegate to the meetings of the Grand Parlor held in San Diego and Oakland. Mr. Rothenbush is popular in business and social circles, and is a strong believer in the future of Stockton, the metropolis of Central California.

EDWARD NIES.—More than a century ago George Washington said that "Agriculture is the most useful as well as the most honorable occupation to which man can devote his energies," and the truth of this saying stands today as it did then. Farming is the basis of commercial activity and is one of the great departments of labor without which the human race could not maintain an existence. Edward Nies is known in San Joaquin County as an enterprising agriculturist, making his home in Victor, but in partnership with his brother, owns forty acres in vineyard. He is a native of McIntosh County, N. D., born near Lehr on August 8, 1896, and is a son of Henry and Christina Nies, both of whom were natives of southern Russia. About thirty-five years ago, Henry Nies left his home in Russia for America and on arrival settled in North Dakota, where he homesteaded a tract of land and engaged in farming for sixteen years, when he disposed of his land holdings in North Dakota and came to California, where he bought a ranch of eighty acres south of Victor, which he set out to vineyard and farmed for seventeen years and then retired to Lodi, where he resides. There were ten children that grew up in the family: John, of Lehr, N. D.; Barbara was the wife of Henry Frey and resided in Salem, Ore. She and her husband died only four hours apart, leaving six children: Andrew, Ida, William, Allina, Walter and Eldon, who now make their home in San Joaquin County. Katie, Mrs. Adolph Bechtold; Jacob, Christ, Edward, Adolph, Emil, Mrs. Martha Lee, and Albert, all reside in the vicinity of Victor.

Edward Nies came to California with his parents when seven years of age and received his education in the Alpine district school east of Lodi and assisted his father on the home place until he was twenty-one years old. He worked for wages on farms in the neighborhood of his home until he and his brother Adolph purchased the forty-acre vineyard together, which is well improved and highly cultivated, visible evidence of their thrift and industry. This vineyard is about two miles northwest of Lockeford on the Lockeford-Christian Colony highway and is in full bearing; a fine irrigation system has been installed by which they pump water direct from the Mokelumne River. In 1922 Nies brothers sold their ranch and purchased an orchard and vineyard one and one-half miles south of Victor. They also bought a store building in Victor and established a general merchandise business. He is a stockholder in the Victor Fruit Growers, Inc., and during the season buys and ships grapes.

Mr. Nies was married July 20, 1919, at Lodi, to Miss Bertha C. Kammer, also a native of North Dakota, a daughter of Phillip and Christina Kammer, engaged in farming in San Joaquin County. Mrs. Nies received her education in Franklin district, Sacramento County. They have one son, Lloyd Edward. Recently Mr. Nies purchased a new modern bungalow in Victor, where they reside. He and his wife are members of the Evangelical Church of Lodi and politically are Republicans.

CONRAD O. BAUMBACH.—A native of the Island of Krem, Russia, Conrad O. Baumbach has been since 1906 a continuous resident of San Joaquin County, where he has demonstrated what industry and enterprise can accomplish. He was born on June 8, 1866, and is the eldest of a family of eight children of Conrad and Mary (Olenborger) Baumbach, the others being as follows: Lenhard, Karl, Mary, John, Louisa, Lydia and Robert. When eight years old, Conrad accompanied his parents to the United States and the family settled near Yankton, S. D., where the father homesteaded a quarter section and preempted a quarter section and also a quarter section timber claim, which was devoted to the raising of grain. Both parents died when about sixty-four years old. When his father located in the Northwest there were no public schools, and the education of Conrad O. Baumbach was therefore limited; but he was well versed in the best methods of cultivating the land, kinds of soil, and the most profitable crops.

On March 28, 1886, Mr. Baumbach was married to Miss Elizabeth Bechtold, a sister of Abraham Bechtold, also represented in this work, and a daughter of Henry and Lottie (Baumbach) Bechtold. For the first three years of their married life the young couple remained at home with his parents and farmed land Mr. Baumbach had rented; he then removed to Kansas and worked at his trade of stone mason, bricklayer and plasterer at Hillsboro, which occupied him for nine years, when he came to California. He purchased his home place, consisting of nine acres in two-year-old Zinfandel grapes; and then bought a ten-acre vineyard, which he held for eight years and sold at a good profit, and purchased a twenty-acre vineyard south of Kettleman Lane devoted to Tokay and Zinfandel grapes. On his home place, Mr. Baumbach has installed a four-inch pump driven by a four-cylinder Overland automobile engine which his son installed for him, and on his twenty-acre vineyard he has installed a deep-well Byron Jackson turbine pump with a capacity of 700 gallons a minute. Mr. and Mrs. Baumbach became the parents of five children, all of whom are deceased. The first three died in infancy and the fourth child, George, died at the age of two years; Fred, who was a skilled mechanic, was killed in November of 1920 by a traction line car. He was married to Emma Reimche and had a child, Elmer Elton. In politics, Mr. Baumbach is a Republican. He is a member of the Church of God in Lodi.

NICK PULICH.—Since his earliest years devoted to the cultivation of flowers and plants, Nick Pulich is enjoying a well-deserved prosperity as the proprietor of the City Park Nursery at 1438 Oxford Street, Stockton. A native of Dalmatia, then a part of Austria, but now of Jugo-Slavia, Mr. Pulich was born at Ragusa on April 15, 1886. In this district flowers are grown in profusion and from the time he was a young lad he worked in the garden there, so that by the time he came to America, in 1903, although he was only seventeen years old, he had already acquired an extensive experience in nursery work. After arriving here his first work was on a fruit and vineyard ranch on the Copperopolis Road, and then for two years he worked in the gold mines in Calaveras County. For a time he was employed in Stockton and then went to Watsonville, where he was in the fruit business for two years. Returning to Stockton he was for two years a gardener in the city park, and after taking the civil service examination was gardener at the State Hospital for a year.

In 1917, in partnership with C. R. Armstrong, Mr. Pulich started the City Park Nursery in City Park Terrace, and after a year and a half together Mr. Pulich bought his interest and has since been the sole owner. An authority in landscape gardening, Mr. Pulich has developed the grounds of many of Stockton's finest homes—those of Walter Hansel, Carl Ortman, Mrs. Charles Ortman, Eli Blanchard, F. J. Viebrock, E. Allen Test, George P. duBose, A. H. Patterson, R. L. Darter and Bruce Martin. The Griffith ranch on the Lower Sacramento road, and many places in Yosemite Terrace, Tuxedo Park and Northcrest show his artistic skill. Mr. Pulich raises all varieties of ornamental potted plants and has a large business in cut flowers. He experiments with all the new varieties of roses and has propagated forty new ones since 1913. He has 200 bushes of a new rose that is very popular, orders being given for them in advance.

On February 2, 1913, Mr. Pulich was married to Miss Stella Pulich, who was born and reared in the same place as her husband, going to school together when they were children; they have one son, Martin. Loyal to the interests of his adopted land, Mr. Pulich was made a citizen of the United States in 1913.

JAMES B. PRENTICE.—For over half a century James B. Prentice has resided in San Joaquin County and is one of the best known contracting plumbers of the Lodi section of the county. He is a native of Australia, being born in Melbourne, on October 12, 1857, a son of Thomas and Christian Prentice, both natives of Scotland. The father was a steam engineer by trade and removed from his native country to Australia, where he resided until 1861, when he came to California in a sailing vessel with his mother and sister, Mrs. Christina Eichelberger, and engaged in mining two years. While working in the mines the father contracted mountain fever from which he never fully recovered and which caused his death at the age of forty-seven years, and the mother survived him about ten years. James B. and Thomas, Jr., were the only children in the family.

James B. Prentice received his education in the public schools of Stockton, attending the old Vineyard school and Jefferson school, and at the age of seventeen took up the plumbing trade, serving an apprenticeship under Dixon brothers. His first work was in the north wing of the state asylum; he then went to San Francisco, where he entered the employ of Dixon Bros., and remained there for four years; then for two years he worked for Mr. Lane and in 1880 returned to Stockton and established a plumbing business of his own, remaining there for sixteen years. In 1896 he removed to Lodi, where he purchased six and a half acres lying just south of the city limits on South School Street. On this property he built a house and established his plumbing business, where he has resided ever since.

The marriage of Mr. Prentice occurred at Stockton on January 25, 1885, and united him with Miss Martha Post, a daughter of William Post. Her father was a hoisting engineer employed in the mines at Railroad Flat, and here Mrs. Prentice was born, reared and educated; later the family removed to Modesto, and there the father passed away at the age of seventy-five, while the mother preceded him about ten years. Mr. and Mrs. Prentice are the parents of twelve children, six of whom are living: Martha, Mrs. Call of Lodi; Grace, Mrs. Biggs of Fresno; James M. is also a subject of this history; Harry; Harriett is a student in high school; and Kenneth. In politics Mr. Prentice is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the W. O. W. of Lodi. Mr. Prentice was once an active member of the Knights of Pythias and has passed through all the chairs of the order; he was also a charter member of Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., Stockton.

HENRY ELLIS SANDERSON, M. D.—Bearing a family name that was linked with California's earliest days, Dr. Henry Ellis Sanderson has made a name for himself in his chosen profession of medicine, and has the distinction of having been a member of the medical staff of the State Hospital at Stockton for more than twenty-five years. Born at Stockton on June 27, 1858, Dr. Sanderson is the son of George H. and Sarah (Rowe) Sanderson, the father a native of Boston, Mass., while the mother was born in Maine, both being descended from old New England families. George H. Sanderson came to California in 1850, sailing around the Horn, and he became a member of the Territorial Society of the state, arriving here before California's admission to the Union. Locating at Stockton soon after his arrival, he opened a grocery store with H. O. Matthews as a partner, conducting it for a number of years. He was numbered among Stockton's most energetic business men of that period and was engineer of the Volunteer Fire Department, a famous organization of the town's early days.

In 1865 George H. Sanderson took up his residence in San Francisco, where he became one of the leading merchants of that city, establishing a wholesale merchandise business there under the firm name of Weaver, Wooster & Co., and when that firm dissolved he went into partnership with E. M. Root as Root & Sanderson, wholesale grocers, which was very successful. A staunch Republican, he became active in politics and was mayor of San Francisco in 1891-92, passing away there in 1893, prominent in the ranks of the Odd Fellows. Four sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. George H. Sanderson: George Rowe, Edward Hall, William W. and Henry Ellis, twins.

The only surviving member of the family, Henry Ellis Sanderson was educated first in the public schools of San Francisco, graduating from the University of California in the class of 1879. He then entered Cooper Medical College at San Francisco, receiving his M. D. degree there in 1885, after which he went to New York and spent two years as an interne in the Mt. Sinai hospital in New York City. Going abroad for study, he took a post-graduate course in Germany, remaining there for two and a half years and establishing himself in private practice when in 1891 he returned to San Francisco. In January, 1895, he was called to Stockton to fill a vacancy on the staff of the State Hospital here, a post that he has since continuously filled with fidelity and marked ability. A physician of broad and comprehensive training, Dr. Sanderson is accounted one of the substantial men of the community and in his long years of service he has attained a high place in the confidence and regard of those with whom he has been brought in contact in his various relations.

At San Francisco, December 12, 1894, Dr. Sanderson was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Gill, a native daughter of the Golden State, born in Petaluma, whose father and mother were natives of Connecticut and New York City respectively. Two sons were born to Dr. and Mrs. Sanderson: George Henry Sanderson, M. D., graduated from the Medical Department of University of California in the class of 1922, and is now assistant surgeon at University of California Hospital, in San Francisco; Henry Ellis, Jr., a graduate of West Point, is now first lieutenant of Artillery, U. S. A., and is stationed at Fort Benning, Georgia. In fraternal circles Dr. Sanderson is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 248, B. P. O. Elks.

JAMES W. WAGERS.—A realty operator with twenty-five years of successful experience in this field in different parts of the West, James W. Wagers is one of Lodi's most enthusiastic boosters, having chosen this for his permanent home after looking over many other districts in the state. Mr. Wagers spent his early life in Wisconsin, where he was born in Grant County, August 22, 1852, removing to Holt County, Nebr., when he was twenty years old. This part of Nebraska was just being developed and for several years he followed well boring there, later being engaged in the mercantile business for nine years, in Page, Neb., and when he had disposed of this he entered the real estate business at Page. He dealt in farm lands, making many large sales, owning a number of places, and on one ten-acre tract he erected his home, highly improving the property and thus adding to the city's development.

In 1909 Mr. Wagers removed to Eugene, Ore., and for the next four years engaged in the real estate business there, coming in 1913 to Lodi, after traveling over a good part of California seeking a good location. Here he formed a partnership with Dan W. Bird as Dan W. Bird & Company, three years later trading his half interest for an eighty-acre townsite thirteen miles from Eugene, Ore. Going north, Mr. Wagers laid out the town, which he called Veneta, and sold off the lots, and on his return to Lodi he and C. F. Stumpf organized the realty firm of Stumpf & Wagers, continuing as partners until 1919, when Mr. Wagers sold out his interest and formed the firm of J. W. Wagers & Company, taking in his two sons as partners. With many years of experience behind him in other fields, Mr. Wagers has been most successful in his operations here, and has sold over 150 pieces of property, among them the Max Leetzow ranch of 178 acres for $30,000, the Cooper place of twenty acres at $20,000, a thirty-acre ranch south of Lodi for $12,000, now worth $40,000, showing the rapid rise in values in this favored district. He is the owner of a ten-acre vineyard which he has improved, thus greatly increasing its value. He has said that he never expected to find so desirable a place to locate in as Lodi, and so expects to make this his home permanently.

While a resident of Nebraska Mr. Wagers was united in marriage with Miss Alta Mills, a native of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and six children have been born to them, four of whom are living: Ernest I. and Gerald J. own a cattle ranch in Siskiyou County; Lonel is associated with his father in business; Mary is Mrs. Siegalkoff of Lodi.

LEMUEL P. NEWCOMB.—A very interesting chapter in the history of pioneering in San Joaquin County is revived in the story of Lemuel P. Newcomb, the vineyardist, and his worthy family, enviably identified with the planting of some of the first vineyards, and long active in laying broad and deep some of the foundations of the California commonwealth. He was born near Huntington, W. Va., on December 2, 1869, the son of George and Louisa (Flowers) Newcomb. His mother was descended from old settlers in West Virginia, while his father, who was one of four children, was from Tennessee. He was a farmer, and died in Oklahoma in 1896, survived by his devoted wife, who is still living in Montana at the age of seventy-three. Lemuel was one of a family of eleven children, he being the eldest. The others were named: Luella, Ambrose, Mary, Lena, Isaac, Flossy, John, James, Dela and Andy.

Lemuel P. Newcomb lived with his parents in West Virginia until, at the age of eighteen, he struck out for himself. Then he went to Illinois and spent six months in Ashley, and six months at Mount Pulaski. After that he removed to Kansas and leased a farm in Republic County, which he operated for a year. Leaving there, he took a westward trip to the State of Washington, but after a short time came south to California. This was in 1890, when he settled in the Acampo district and worked for wages for a short time, first for Mrs. Foster and then for Mrs. Northrop.

He next rented the Thorn grain ranch of 160 acres and farmed it for a year, and then tried his hand on Roberts Island, where he cultivated some sixty acres for nine years. For eight years he farmed the Williams place. After that, he went back to Washington, and at Montesano worked in a logging camp for two and one-half years, when he returned to the Acampo section. In 1907 he bought fifty acres, known as the Mowry Ranch, but soon after returned it to the estate and received back his money. This was afterwards divided among the heirs. Mrs. Newcomb received eight and one-third acres. Mr. Newcomb received the same, for the amount he had paid down on the ranch, and then he bought another eight and one-third acres, making his entire holding twenty-five acres. He had been married at Acampo, on August 17, 1892, to Miss Etta Mowry, born at Lockeford, and the daughter of George and Molly (Smith) Mowry. Her father was a merchant and farmer, the son of Lazarus and Electa (Morgan) Mowry. She was one of four girls, the eldest of whom, Mina, is now deceased. Ollie was the next; then came Mrs. Newcomb; and the youngest was Ada, also deceased. Lazarus Mowry, the grandfather, came to California on March 18, 1873, and bought fifty acres on the Mokelumne River, where the Southern Pacific Railroad crosses, the land lying on the north side of the river at this point. It was a dense undergrowth, and Mr. Mowry cleared it and planted the first vineyard north of the river in the vicinity of Acampo, in the early eighties. Mrs. Mowry died in 1906, at the age of seventy-eight, an event of more local interest because many of the Mowry family are laid away in the family plot in Lodi cemetery. Lazarus Mowry was born in Ohio, on January 27, 1825, and died at Lodi on October 8, 1908. The name, of German origin, was originally Mourrer, and was changed with the passage of years and the migration of its bearers. Lazarus enlisted in the Civil War as Lazarus Mower, and the change to Mowry was doubtless made in the hope that that form would be easier to pronounce.

Etta L. Newcomb

Lazarus Mowry married Miss Mary Louis, on August 20, 1846, and she died two years later, on June 4. When he married for the second time, he chose for his wife Miss Electa Vida Morgan, of Virginia, the ceremony taking place on December 31, 1848. She was a direct descendant of General Daniel Morgan, who fought in the Revolutionary War and defeated Tarleton at Cowpens, on January 17, 1781. Miss Morgan came to Ohio with her parents, and later, in the fall of 1855, accompanied them to Iowa, and several years afterward moved to Illinois. Lazarus Mowry enlisted in Company C, 118th Illinois Volunteers, but after three months of service came home and then moved to Missouri, where he remained until the spring of 1873, when he came to California.

Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lazarus Mowry. Following are their names and the dates of their birth: Lewis C. (now deceased), February 24, 1850; George M. (the father of Mrs. Newcomb), December 21, 1851, also now deceased; Milton J., of Stockton, November 18, 1854; John B., Portland Ore., October 6, 1858; David, and William M. (both deceased), April 16, 1860, and November 2, 1862, respectively; Ulysses G., Arizona, May 15, 1866; and Wesley A. (also deceased), June 6, 1868.

Mr. Newcomb has a trim vineyard of five acres on the present twenty-five which is half of the old Mowry homestead, and an orchard of three acres, the balance being open land. The ranch is equipped with a first-class pumping plant. Four children have made up his family. Irma is Mrs. L. A. Kalk, of Lodi. She is the mother of one child, Gwenelda; George P. is with the Standard Oil Company, and has two sons, George, Jr. and Wilbur; Irwin is at home; Alfred married Mary L. A. Garcia, and resides at Woodbridge. They have one child, Goldy Fern. Mr. Newcomb is a member of the Lodi Lodge, Modern Woodmen of America. He and his wife are Democrats, and are intensely interested in forwarding, in every way possible, the best interests of the community.

HERBERT M. SCHAUR.—Among the more important building supply organizations of the West Side section of San Joaquin County is the Tracy Lumber Company, of which Herbert M. Schaur is the general manager; he is also a stockholder in the parent company, known as the Santa Fe Lumber Company with headquarters in San Francisco, owners of the following branches: Tracy Lumber Company at Tracy, Brentwood Lumber Company, at Brentwood, Cal., Patterson Lumber Company, at Patterson, Cal., and the Newman Lumber Company, located at Newman, Stanislaus County, Cal. A native of Baltimore, Md., Mr. Schaur was born on August 26, 1883, a son of Charles E. and Florence E. (Arminger) Schaur. His paternal ancestors were of German birth, while his maternal ancestors were of Scotch origin. In 1895, his father passed away and the responsibility of the support of the family rested on the shoulders of our subject, then a lad of about twelve years. His first job was as stock clerk for a large dry goods house and within two years he was advanced to the position of clerk in the office; however, the opportunity came to enter an attorney's office with a chance to study law and he also availed himself of a course in a night school; he then obtained a position as a traveling salesman for a wholesale provision house of Baltimore, covering the territory of Maryland, West Virginia, Virginia and North Carolina, continuing until 1905, with the exception of two years that were spent in Pittsburgh, Pa. Removing to California, he located in Los Angeles, where he remained three years. Then he went into the large lumber camps of Mendocino County; gradually working his way up from the bottom he became the superintendent of two mills which he conducted with the utmost success. Some nine years ago he became associated with the Santa Fe Lumber Company and in 1917 was sent to Tracy to assume the general oversight of their branch yard.

The Tracy Lumber Company has aided in the growth and upbuilding of Tracy and other towns nearby, and the merchants and business men have found its management ever ready to cooperate with them in achieving results; its officials and employees have all been boosters in aid of irrigation movements, which have shown so forcibly how valuable water is in crop production, and they are strong for the upbuilding of this section of Central California. They are distributors for the famed Simplex silo and the Papec ensilage cutter.

The marriage of Mr. Schaur occurred on June 4, 1907, and united him with Miss Carrie N. Beattie, a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. W. G. Beattie of Tracy, prominent in professional and social circles. They are the parents of two children, Margaret N. and Herbert M. Jr. Mr. Schaur is past president of the Chamber of Commerce and is now a director and has accomplished much as a member of the executive committee. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally is a Mason and Odd Fellow, and past patron of the Eastern Star Lodge of Tracy. He is the owner of desirable real estate in the Rosedale subdivision of Tracy.

CLIFTON C. WILLIAMS.—The house of Williams & Co., Stockton, leading employment agency was founded more than a quarter of a century ago by David D. Williams, the father of the subject of this review, Clifton C. Williams, the genial owner and proprietor of the business, for which he was thoroughly trained, and he fills his father's position in an able and intelligent manner, following out the founder's principles of steadfast reliability.

A native son, he was born in Biggs, Butte County, Cal., October 20, 1887, a son of David D. and Lulu E. (Brown) Williams. The former was a native of Sonora, Tuolumne County and the latter a native of Hollister, San Benito County. His father was reared and educated in Tuolumne County and when he grew to manhood he removed to Biggs and was engaged in farming pursuits. In 1894 he removed to Stockton and opened an employment agency and was a pioneer in that line, and followed same to the time of his death, which occurred at Stockton, April 23, 1902. He started in a small way by furnishing farmers with help on the ranches and the business grew to great proportions and he became well known for his reliability throughout the San Joaquin Valley. At one time he sent between three and four thousand men to Blue Lake, Lake County, to work on the project of the Standard Electric Company. In order to transport this large body of men, he established a stage line from Stockton to the Blue Lakes, running three stages; this he kept up until the work was completed; later he branched out and conducted a real estate and insurance business as well as the employment agency. His acquaintance among the farmers of the valley was very extensive, and he was an honored member of Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., in Stockton. Mrs. Williams, whose maiden name was Brown, is the daughter of a large land owner and stockraiser of San Benito County, and the owner of Brown's Valley, which was named after him. Mr. and Mrs. Williams were the parents of two children, Birdie, now Mrs. T. Gillis, and Clifton C. of this sketch.

Clifton was a small child when his parents removed to Stockton, where he was reared and educated in the public schools. During the year of 1907 he took full charge of the business his father had so successfully carried on and he is making good. A specialty is made of supplying help to the farm on short notice, and many ranches are in constant touch with this old-time and reliable agency, because of the highly satisfactory service rendered and good class of help furnished. Williams & Company constantly endeavor to keep their calls filled promptly, studying labor problems and conditions for the benefit of their hundreds of patrons, and it is this prompt attention to business that has won for them an enviable record during the past twenty-five years. Help is furnished for factories, industrial plants and besides this, expert and professional help, such as engineers for traction engines and harvester outfits. In the month of April, 1921, Mr. Williams removed to No. 6 West Market Street, where it is now located and meeting well merited success. Clifton C. Williams established quite a reputation because of his splendid work before the legislature during the session of 1921, where in a clear and comprehensive manner he demonstrated to that important body the real necessity of private employment agencies, when properly conducted by people who know the business. He showed in figures and statistics the great value of the independent agencies to the farmer and rancher, and to employers of labor in all lines of endeavor, and his good work had much to do with the defeat of legislation aimed to injure the private employment agencies of California. Fraternally, Mr. Williams is a member of the Elks and Loyal Order of Moose.

JOHN H. SOLKMORE.—An influential citizen of Lodi, who is now serving his locality as justice of the peace, is John Solkmore, a native son born in Tehama County on September 26, 1881, a son of John W. and Margaret (Evers) Solkmore. His father was a native of South Carolina and his mother of Louisiana. The former was a Civil War veteran and Grandfather Solkmore served in the Mexican War. John W. Solkmore was an early settler of California, crossing the plains with ox teams in 1867, settling in Colusa County; Margaret Evers came to California during the same year via the Isthmus route; and they were married in California. Mr. Solkmore farmed in Colusa and Tehama counties and in 1884 located in Woodbridge, San Joaquin County. In the late '90s he removed to Texas and spent three years there, then returned to the San Joaquin Valley. He passed away about seventeen years ago, his wife surviving him until 1919.

John H. received his education in the Woodbridge grammar schools and was graduated from the Lodi high school with the class of 1902. For seven years he taught school in Clements and on Union Island, and later was principal of the Woodbridge and Hous-ton schools. During these years he studied law in the office of Judge Steele and was admitted to the bar in 1908. He was elected justice of the peace in 1914 for a four-year term and was reelected in 1918 and 1922 each time without opposition and now is serving his third term. In politics he is a Democrat and his influence is cast on the side of all worthy projects that are for the general good of his locality.

WILLIAM HENRY GRAHAM.—Business enterprise has found a stalwart supporter in William Henry Graham, whose progressive spirit and determination have been manifest in all that he has undertaken and who by reason of his individual effort, intelligently directed, has gained a prominent position in the business circles of Lodi. He was born in Iroquois County, Ill. on December 29, 1886, a son of James M. and Martha C. (McCray) Graham, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Illinois, both of Scotch ancestry. His parents came to California, settling in Whittier in 1897, when our subject was eleven years of age. He was employed at various occupations, setting pins in a bowling alley, selling ice cream and many other odd jobs. When he was twelve years old he accompanied his father on a trip through California and Oregon, with a team and wagon, the trip consuming four months.

When he was seventeen years old he entered the employ of Kiler & Cushing at Whittier with the intention of learning the manufacture of concrete piping and during a part of the time he was privileged to attend school. Then he went to the Imperial Valley and for four years was employed by the San Diego Cement Pipe Company. During the nine years of his employment while learning his trade he had not accumulated any money and when he arrived in Lodi on August 14, 1912, he possessed a capital of $2.60, but his determination to succeed was never lost sight of and as he knew how to make cement pipe, he established a business in that line. He had a considerable struggle to make good, and was advised by interested friends not to start such a business, as there was not enough call for his product, but his thorough understanding of his chosen occupation enabled him to continue and his business has steadily grown until he is considered among the most prominent business men of Lodi. His plant is modern in every way and is located on S. Main Street, fully equipped with the most up-to-date machinery for the manufacture of cement pipe, including a machine for the manufacture of Blystone building tile, which is used in the construction of residences and buildings. This is a new invention and the tile is giving general satisfaction. His first contract for the laying of concrete pipe was on the ranch of Warren Fowler, riding out to his ranch on a bicycle to solicit the order. He has made and laid many miles of pipe in the Lodi district wherever pipe is used for irrigating purposes in the orchards and vineyards. He laid over two miles of pipe on the C. C. Woodworth ranch, over three miles on the Peter Joens ranch, one of the largest Tokay vineyards in the county, and Ing Bros. who have the largest in the county. In the immediate vicinity of Lodi, among others he has laid pipe on the ranches of J. T. Langford, John B. Cory and W. H. Lorenz. He laid two miles of pipe on the Hunt Bros. ranch at Linden and was the successful winner of the contract for the $17,000 storm sewer for the city of Lodi; he also manufactured $14,000 worth of pipe for the Stockton sewer system. In 1923 he finished a contract to lay four miles of pipe at Davis, Cal., for the

A. H. Parkman

University of California. His work is guaranteed and his products are thoroughly tested and entire satisfaction is given before a contract is considered completed, thus enabling him to secure the best class of business of the county.

Mr. Graham is the father of three girls, Myrtle Evelyn, Mildred May and Elenore Juanita, who reside with their father at 339 East Oak Street. Fraternally he is a member of the Stockton Elks, No. 218, the Eagles, Knights of Pythias, Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. and A. M., the Lodi Business Men's Club and the Mokelumne Club.

JAMES L. PICKERING.—An interior and exterior decorator whose artistic talents have been used to embellish and beautify many homes and public buildings throughout the country, James L. Pickering has established a statewide reputation for the excellency of his work since locating at Lodi, sixteen years ago. Ohio is Mr. Pickering's native state and he was born near Columbus, April 10, 1871. He learned the painter's trade when a young man, spending a number of years in New York, St. Louis and Kansas City. He did a great deal of work for the Eastern Packing Company, now Swift & Company, and was foreman of a crew of men who painted the branch houses of this company throughout the East. He was employed on some of the buildings of Columbia University and Grant's Tomb, in New York, and on removing to St. Louis he worked on the Union Station, the National Bank of Commerce, both notable structures, and on many of the millionaires' homes of that city, being foreman for Marks & Jones, interior decorators, one of the leading firms in their line. In 1901 he was engaged as foreman for a large force of painters engaged in decorating the buildings for the World's Fair, being employed there until 1904. He had general supervision over this work, and the artistic blending of the delicate pastel colorings used in the decorations of these buildings will ever be remembered by those who were privileged to see them. Just before beginning this contract, he had taken a large force of men to Eureka Springs Ark., where he had charge of the decorations of a large hotel.

In 1904 Mr. Pickering came to California and became foreman for A. H. Recht at Stockton, remaining there until the spring of 1906, when he came to Lodi and formed a partnership with S. E. Lossing. At the end of a year he bought out his partner and has been in business for himself ever since. He established his paint and paper store at 122 North Sacramento Street, Lodi, in 1907, where he has since maintained the leading establishment of its kind here. In the past twelve years he has done at least sixty per cent of the best residences and public and business buildings, among which we note the following: Residences of Miss Ann Brack, Dr. J. E. Nelson, and A. C. Boehner; Hotel Lodi, Lodi Theater, Van Buskirk Building, M. Newfield Store, Friedberger and Blodgett Block, Catholic Church, Congregational Church, all of the schoolhouses erected in recent years, except the Union high school, the Mokelumne Club and the Farmers & Merchants Bank Building. His work on homes around Lodi include residences for the following: Ed Pope, J. V. Bare, J. B. Cory, C. C. Woodworth, Mrs. R. C. Bridge, T. H. Beckman, the Misses Anderson, C. M. Ferdun, Fairbank & Dement ranch, and the Norton and Angiers residences at Manteca. In Stockton he did the residences of J. D. Peters, Dr. C. L. Six and Harry T. Fee, and one job in particular which is worthy of special comment is the $40,000 residence of Carl S. Ortman in Yosemite Terrace, Stockton. This was the finest and most expensive piece of decorating ever done in San Joaquin County, and won for Mr. Pickering wide newspaper publicity, attracting artists in this line from all over the country, and the workmanship and artistic color scheme were declared to rank with the best in the state. Mr. Pickering has recently erected a fine home for himself at Church and West Lodi streets, formerly the site of the Lodi high school. He personally canvassed all the residents of Church Street and succeeded in securing seventy-five per cent of the landowners to petition for the new street paving and electric light posts for a mile along this thoroughfare. This movement had been tried before and failed, but due to Mr. Pickering's perseverance, these improvements are now an accomplished fact. In 1922, on property adjacent to his home, he erected a four flat apartment house, thoroughly modern.

In 1903 Mr. Pickering was married to Miss Emily E. Roth, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, and they are the parents of one son, Robert. Mr. Pickering organized the painters' union of Lodi, having their wages increased and their hours reduced from ten to eight hours a day. He is a member of the Master Painters Association of California, having served on the executive board, and in 1913 entertained a body of delegates at the banquet at the Mokelumne Club, of which he is a popular member. He also belongs to the Woodmen of the World and was formerly assistant chief of the Lodi Fire Department. Mrs. Pickering is a member of the Lodi Woman's Club.

MARTIN SCHNEIDER.—A successful business career is that of Martin Schneider, an early settler of Stockton and the founder of the firm of M. Schneider and Sons, furniture and show case manufacturers, located at 248 North Aurora Street. He was born in the town of Leidringen, Wurtemberg, Germany, on December 25, 1856, was educated in schools of his native town and learned the trade of cabinetmaker and woodcarver with his father, John Schneider; later he went to Switzerland as a journeyman worker and remained there for three years, mostly in Zurich. He returned to his home to conscribe to the military service in the German army, but was rejected on account of physical disability, which left him free to go where he liked. In May, 1878, he left Germany for America; on arriving in New York City he spent three days there and five days in Philadelphia and crossed the plains by emigrant train and landed in Stockton during the same year. During the summer months he worked as a carpenter building ranch houses and buildings and in the winter time returned to Stockton and secured employment with the furniture factory of Fickett & Robbins; in 1880 he started to work for himself manufacturing furniture, show cases, and office fixtures to order. His present factory at the corner of Miner and Aurora streets was erected thirty-five years ago and was then considered away out in the country, and was the first building in that section. In the early days he did interior house finishing and many of the fine old residences in Stockton still standing were done by him. He has installed store fixtures in the Wagner meat market; the Ruhl-Goodell hardware store, the Tully & Kramm clothing store and the Samuel Aaron clothing company; he designed and installed the woodwork design in the lobby of Hotel Stockton; he also designed and built the furniture for some of the millionaires' homes in San Francisco.

The marriage of Mr. Schneider occurred in Stockton, June 8, 1879, and united him with Miss Anna Wille, also a native of Wurtemberg, Germany. Mr. and Mrs. Schneider are the parents of ten children, of whom eight are now living: one child died in infancy and Emma G., the wife of Sherwood Norton, also passed away. The living children are as follows: John F., Louis C., Martin Otto, Hilda M., Anna K., who is now Mrs. Eugene Goodrum, Elsie, the wife of Myron Page, Mrs. Marie Paxton, and George J. who served in the World War in an infantry regiment and was stationed at Camp Kearney. For seven terms Mr. Schneider was president of the old Turnverein and also served as trustee of the same organization; he is a member of the Knights of Pythias; at present he is the district deputy of the Sons of Herman. He takes great pleasure in the reading and study of the Bible and it is indeed interesting to converse with him on Biblical subjects.

JACOB G. HANDEL.—Although a native of Russia, where he was born January 20, 1872, Jacob G. Handel has been a resident of the United States since his second year, having come to this country with his parents in 1874. They were pioneers of Hutchinson County, S. D., helping to settle the country there, and Jacob was reared on those bare prairies, thirty miles from Yankton, where human habitations were few and far between. As a boy he helped his father on the home farm, starting when very young to work in the harvest fields, and later he engaged in farming on his own account on 160 acres near Menno, S. D.

In 1899 Mr. Handel came to California and located at Lodi. He had saved some of his earnings and seeing the possibilities of the business future of this city he bought eleven acres in the north end of town on Sacramento Street, west of the railroad, this tract then being in alfalfa and orchard. This district has now become quite an industrial center and Mr. Handel has sold lots to the Superior Manufacturing Company, the Producers Fruit Company and the California Almond Growers Association, and they have erected their warehouses and manufacturing plants on the property. A number of residences have also been built there, including the fine new home of Mr. Handel, and he still has twenty-one lots left that are steadily increasing in value.

An active factor in the upbuilding and real estate development of Lodi, Mr. Handel is the owner of the modern two-story business block occupied by the Lodi Hardware Company, which he built in partnership with J. G. Hieb, and in company with J. G. and John W. Heib, he built and owns the White Front Store building, a modern, two-story brick block on Elm Avenue, which has since been sold. He is also the owner of a ten-acre vineyard in full bearing, five miles southeast of Lodi, from which he received $3,300 in 1920, and has a fourteen-acre alfalfa ranch two and a half miles east of Lodi, a valuable property. For eight years Mr. Handel conducted a hardware business in Lodi, but he disposed of it some time ago and now his time is fully occupied in looking after his varied interests in town and country. In 1923 he bought 100 acres near Livingston, Merced County, which he is improving.

Mr. Handel's marriage united him with Miss Magdalena Hieb, a native of South Dakota, and they are the parents of seven children: Lea is Mrs. Walter Thompson, and the mother of two children; Leonhart, Wilhelmina, Mrs. Bolding, Theodore, Reinholdt, Lillie, and Benjamin. A successful self-made man, Mr. Handel ranks high among the upbuilders of Lodi, where for more than twenty years he has been identified with the community. He is a stockholder in the Superior Manufacturing Company, and active in the Salem Reformed Church, where he was superintendent of the Sunday school and a former member of the church choir.

CARL HENNING NELSON.—A successful and prominent building contractor of Stockton, whose operations have extended over a period of thirteen years, Carl Henning Nelson is a native of Sweden, born near Stockholm on May 12, 1879, and there he was reared and educated, learning the carpenter trade. At the age of nineteen years he came to the United States and locating at Republic, the copper district of Michigan, engaged in construction work and bridge building for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad. During 1901 he removed to Alaska, where he followed mining for two years, after which he returned to the states and located at Salt Lake City, Utah, where he was occupied in construction work on a number of large buildings, including theaters, office buildings and hotels, covering a period of seven years; he also worked on the union depot of the Oregon Short Line Railroad and along the Union Pacific Railroad doing construction work. He then spent one year traveling throughout England, Norway and Sweden, visiting his old home city. Returning to California, he met and married Miss Esther P. Nelson, a resident of Los Angeles, but a native of Sweden, who came to California at the age of seventeen years, and they are the parents of two children, Vivian, and Carl H., Jr.

In the spring of 1909 Mr. Nelson located in Stockton and formed a partnership with G. A. Sleeth, under the firm name of Sleeth and Nelson, building contractors. For ten years this partnership was continued with great success, fifty houses being erected the first year in business. Among the business blocks and residences erected are the following: a store building for Walter J. Hammond on South California Street, a store, residence and hotel at the corner of Center and Washington streets, five buildings for L. Mollenhauer at the corner of Sonora and Stanislaus streets, a flat building for A. De Paoli at American and Park streets, a fine residence for E. Elwing on North Street and for P. A. Bryant on the Sonora Road, a store, residence and flats for Hans Axel on Sonora and East streets. They also built some fine homes, warehouses and barns in the Delta district, a residence for M. Borden on Victoria Island, a residence for Martin Lund on Union Island, besides residences in Woodbridge, Lodi and Los Banos. Mr. Nelson is a member of the Elks, and president of the Swedish Fraternal order of Stockton.

HENRY PERRIN.—The story of the progress and success of Henry Perrin, a prosperous viticulturist living in Lodi, San Joaquin County, Cal., who has continuously resided in that district for the past twenty years, is interesting and shows what may be accomplished by close application to business, industry and well directed intelligence. He was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, on March 12, 1864, and was there reared and educated. When he reached the age of thirteen years, the spirit of adventure had so taken a hold on him that he went to that wild, unsettled country of North Dakota, where there were few white men and many Indians. He took up a squatter's right to a piece of land and was compelled to file his claim to the land twice, as the first time he was not of age. Upon receiving his title to the land, he set about improving it, planting it to grain and from time to time adding to his holding till he had acquired 440 acres of fine prairie land; and when he disposed of it, his ranch was among the best improved in the state. Mr. Perrin's first visit to California was in 1902; he traveled all over the state looking for a location that suited him and the last place he visited was Lodi, which proved to be the place he was looking for. He returned to Idaho where he had resided for two years, and with his family settled in Lodi. Later his brother Jules came to Lodi and they entered into partnership for the purpose of manufacturing cement blocks for building purposes, under the firm name of Perrin Bros., continuing the business until 1919 when our subject sold his interest to his brother and retired from active business cares. The Perrin Bros. manufactured the Miracle concrete building blocks, which have become so useful for building purposes; the many buildings and residences throughout the city and county testify to the durability and stableness of the cement building block. Following are some of the buildings erected by them, the building of the Lodi Canning Company, the Tokay City garage, Buchanan's sanitarium, the Ford garage, Lodi Hardware Company's block; they also erected the hotel at Ione, a garage at Sonora, a store building at Groveland, a store building at Tracy, a garage at Madera, several blocks in Stockton and a business block in Galt, the Forest Lake school house, a garage at Clements, and a residence on the Curry ranch.

For the past sixteen years, Mr. Perrin has devoted his time and attention to the growing of grapes in the Lodi district and he has bought and sold a number of fine vineyards. At the present time his holdings consist of two vineyards, one of forty acres on the Walnut Grove Road and the other thirty acres on the Brack tract, a twenty-acre vineyard located near Youngstown, for which he paid $900 per acre and has refused $2000 per acre; and thirty acres on the Terminus Road.

The marriage of Mr. Perrin on April 19, 1891, in Dunseith, N. D., united him with Miss Mary Cota, a native of Massachusetts; and they are the parents of twelve children: Dena is the wife of A. Gilbeau, Louis married Miss Mary Bround, Joseph H. married Miss Philomine Soucie, Lillian is Mrs. Fred Round, Mae is the wife of Henry Pleau, Lloyd married Miss Lillian Waters. The others are: Anna, Josephine, Walter, Laura, Elton, and Lucretia. Louis, Lloyd and Joseph, and Mr. Pleau, son-in-law, have charge of the vineyards. Fraternal he is a member of the Eagles, Modern Woodmen of America and the Royal Neighbors. Mr. Perrin's success has come entirely through his own efforts and he has ever maintained a keen interest in everything that pertains to the general welfare.

JOHN H. OWEN.—For nearly ten years John H. Owen has been humane officer of San Joaquin County and in that period has settled satisfactorily many cases involving cruelty to children and to animals. Broad-minded, with varied experience in many lines, he has made an ideal official. The Owen family came here from Tennessee, our subject having been born in Meigs County, October 15, 1862. He is the son of James R. Owen, a native of Kentucky, and Catherine (Hunt) Owen, a native of Tennessee. When six years old, in 1869, young John came with his parents to San Joaquin County on one of the first of the transcontinental steam trains. James R. Owen farmed grain in Farmington and Waterloo districts, locating Farmington way in 1872 and remaining there until his death in 1907. He was a member of the Linden Lodge of Masons. The surviving children of Mr. and Mrs. James R. Owen include Henry T., of Bakersfield; John H., of this sketch; William S. civil engineer with the San Joaquin Highway Commission; Walter J., deputy sheriff of San Joaquin County; Mrs. Partelia J. Blair and Mrs. Myra E. Bryson, both of Stockton.

John H. Owen attended the public schools of the Wheatland district and Stockton Business College. For three years, then, he farmed grain on rented land. After this he was engaged in merchandising, taking into partnership B. F. Long in Farmington. The firm prospered for six years as Long & Owen, when the partnership was dissolved. Mr. Owen resumed ranching until 1905. He bought 560 acres at the southern end of San Joaquin, near the Stanislaus County border, which he sowed to grain but later sold the tract. Then he leased the Leach ranch in Stanislaus County, raising grain for six years. Back to San Joaquin he moved, in 1900, purchasing 411 acres near Escalon; he farmed to grain until 1905.

Anxious to bring to his children the advantages of Stockton's schools, Mr. and Mrs. Owen brought the family there, leasing his ranch. He followed the realty business for some time, and then the butcher's. Meanwhile in 1907 the mounting costs of irrigation prompted him to subdivide his 411 acres into 30 acre tracts, which he readily disposed of to settlers at $60 an acre. Little did he dream that most of this land would change hands in 1920 at $550 an acre. In 1912 Mr. Owen was persuaded to become County Humane Officer by the Humane Committee of San Joaquin County and he has faithfully filled that exacting position. Besides his public work he has been interested as member in Oakdale Lodge of Masons, Farmington Lodge of Odd Fellows and Stockton Camp, Woodmen of the World.

Mrs. Owen was Miss Sarah E. Griffin, born near Farmington. Her father was Mitchell Griffin, a California Forty-niner, who crossed the continent with ox teams over the poorly marked trails and became a large rancher and landowner. Her mother also crossed the prairies and mountains as a girl, in '49, with her parents, behind ox teams. Three children compose the family of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Owen: Alvin George, with the Associated Creamery Company of Modesto; Elizabeth, now Mrs. Chester W. Conklin, of Stockton, and Arthur L. Owen, a member of Stockton's Police Department.

SAMUEL C. BEANE.—An experienced, progressive railroad man who is far more than a routine operator, is Samuel C. Beane, popular district freight and passenger agent of the Southern Pacific Railroad at Stockton. A native son and proud of his association with the Golden State, he was born in Tulare County, Cal., on February 26, 1869, the son of Samuel and Diana (Davies) Beane, the former a native of New Hampshire and the latter of Ohio. Mr. Beane came to California by way of Panama in 1862, and he died in 1875. The mother crossed the plains to California in 1862, and she passed away in Sacramento in August, 1921.

Samuel C. Beane attended the public schools of Plymouth, in Amador County, and then he started to work in the quartz mill at the age of sixteen, having previously begun the study of telegraphy. He worked at odd jobs around the post office at Plymouth, while a boy, and at seventeen left home to go to Sacramento, where he worked for Weinstock & Lubin, receiving at first six dollars per week. Later, he was given a post with Messrs. Scott & Gilbert, the manufacturing chemists, at ten dollars per week.

Hearing that the Southern Pacific Railroad Company were paying operators sixty dollars per month, he entered the employ of that company on May 15, 1889, as night operator at Chico, and ever since that date he has been in the service of that great concern. He next became relief agent and operator at Chico, Woodland, Red Bluff, Reno, Ventura, San Jose and other cities, and for ten years he was associated with the freight department at San Jose, where he rose to the position of assistant chief clerk, and he was one year in the general offices of the company in San Francisco as rate clerk.

In August, 1902, he was transferred to Stockton as chief clerk, where he continued for a period of nine years. Then he was traveling and freight agent out of the district freight agent's office at Oakland, but made his residence in Stockton, and after four years he became commercial agent over the district between Florin and Tracy. On March 1, 1920, he was appointed district freight and passenger agent of the district from Florin on the north to Newman and Merced on the south and from Antioch on the west to the Southern Mines on the east. On May 15, 1921, he had been for thirty-two years in the continuous service of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

When on June 5th, 1894, Mr. Beane was married at Sutter Creek, he chose for his life-companion, Miss Lillie Frances Higgins, a native of Pennsylvania; and they have had two children, one of whom is married. Ruth A. has become the wife of J. E. Duffy, and they have one son, J. E., Jr.; Chester Beane is a clerk in the Commercial and Savings Bank of Stockton. Mr. Beane belongs to Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., and to Stockton Lodge No. 218 B. P. O. E., and also to Stockton Lodge No. 319 of the Loyal Order of Moose and to Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W. He is a charter member of the Stockton Rotary Club, and has been secretary of that influential organization since its formation in August, 1913.

HARMON E. PRICE, M. D.—Among the leading physicians and surgeons of Stockton is Dr. Harmon E. Price, who won distinction during the World War for his valuable services overseas. He was born at Mount Carmel, Ill., on October 8, 1879, and began his education in the public schools of his native city; later he attended the Seminary at Friendsville, Ill.; then entered the Eclectic Medical College in Cincinnati, O., from which he was graduated with the Class of '05 with the degree of M. D.; he then took a post-graduate course in the Cincinnati Hospital for one year, thus putting into practice the training received in school. Removing to Maroa, Ill., he practiced for a short time, then removed to Clinton, the county seat of De Witt County, Ill., remaining there until 1916, when he removed to California and located at Tracy, San Joaquin County. Desiring a larger city in which to pursue his chosen profession, after eight months' practice in Tracy, he removed to Stockton in 1917. In the summer of 1918, he entered the service of his country; going to the Presidio at San Francisco, he took a course in surgery at the Military Surgeon's Hospital. While there he was commissioned a lieutenant in the U. S. Army, and on June 21, 1918, was stationed at Camp Lewis Base Hospital; in September he was assigned to Base Hospital No. 95, but was sent overseas with Camp Hospital No. 3, stationed at Neufchateau, France, and later advanced to section headquarters on the front lines, where he was under fire until the signing of the armistice. During January 1919, he was stationed at Perigueux, France in connection with Base Hospital No. 95, where he remained until March of that year, when he was assigned to the A. E. F. University as regimental surgeon and sanitary inspector. On July 3, 1919 he received his honorable discharge at Camp Dix, New Jersey. He now has a captain's commission in the reserve corps of the medical section, and has recently been assigned to the 262nd Regiment of the 91st Division, regimental surgeon of the reserve corps.

Dr. Price has won considerable distinction as the author of articles on surgery and medicine, read before a number of medical societies. In 1908 he read a paper before the Illinois State Medical Association during its convention in Chicago; an article on surgery, written by Dr. Price, appeared recently in the Military Surgeon, a monthly publication, published by the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, which has been widely read, and considered most timely and far-reaching by the medical fraternity.

The marriage of Dr. Price united him with Miss Dollie Marie Hurt, a native of Illinois; and they are the parents of one son, Harmon Ellsworth, Jr. Before coming to California Dr. Price was an active member of the Illinois Medical Association and also of the De Witt County Illinois Medical Society; he now is a member of the San Joaquin County and State Medical Societies. He joined the Destiny Blue Lodge of Masons No. 197 in Tacoma, Wash., but now belongs to the Morning Star Lodge of Stockton, Cal. He is a 32nd degree Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of Aahmes Temple A. A. O. N. M. S. of Oakland, the Sciots of Stockton, and the Stockton Golf and Country Club.

EDWIN H. HESS.—One of the interesting men of affairs of Stockton is Edwin H. Hess, who has grown up with the city and has been closely identified with its development all his years. As manager of the Stockton Dyeing and Cleaning Works, a pioneer plant enjoying a prestige of nearly fifty years under one ownership, Mr. Hess is one of the widely known dyeing and cleaning specialists of the West. The erection of the handsome new home for this plant in 1918 and 1919 adds another achievement to the credit of the Hess family, whose name has been interwoven with that of the city of Stockton since 1874.

Edwin H. Hess was born at Stockton, April 13, 1890, the son of Oswald H. and Martha (Wolf) Hess, both natives of Germany and now deceased. Oswald H. Hess was born in Beerfelden, Hesse, and came to the United States when a young man, in 1867, via Panama. Arriving in California, he herded cattle and sheep in El Dorado County, and in 1874 he came to Stockton. For a time previous to this he had worked for his brother in San Jose in a cleaning and dyeing works, and on coming to Stockton he started in business in a small way at 515 East Main Street, occupying a little building, the lumber for which was brought around the Horn. As his business grew, in 1890 he erected a brick block on the same site, which is still standing, and he occupied the ground floor for his dye works. In 1908 Mr. Hess took a trip to Europe and on his return he moved his business to 520 East Lindsay Street. In 1909 he took in as partners his son Edwin H. Hess and his son-in-law, J. C. Billetter. This partnership continued until the father's death, July 1, 1918, when Edwin H. became the sole owner of the business. Mr. and Mrs. Oswald Hess were the parents of two children, Mrs. J. C. Billetter and Edwin H. Hess. One of Stockton's substantial citizens, Oswald H. Hess was one of the founders of the old Turnverein and a member of Truth Lodge of the Odd Fellows.

Edwin H. Hess was educated in the public and high schools of Stockton and in 1908 took an extended trip to Europe with his parents. On his return he became associated in his father's business and since 1918 has been its owner and proprietor. The new structure occupied by the company occupies ground space 50x100 feet at 338 North California Street, on ground owned by the family for many years. It was designed under the personal direction of the present owner and is the most modern establishment of its kind in Central California, featuring many novel ideas for the proper care of clothes. In Mr. Hess' office and the display room, the walls are of ivory enamel and mahogany panel effects, the floor being of inlaid tile with marble base, everything denoting quiet elegance of taste. In the rear are the operating departments, the heavy pressing being done by the most modern machinery, while all delicate fabrics are pressed by hand. In the curtain cleaning department there is a patent Troy stretcher, no pins or hooks being used. Another room is devoted to cleansing blankets, each individual blanket being washed separately.

In the dry-cleaning room, after coming from the extractor the clothes are placed in the Troy dry room tumbler, where hot air sucked over steam-heated coils by a suction fan passes through the clothes as they are revolving in wire baskets, removing all odor of gasoline, also all lint. The gasoline is pumped from underground tanks, thus eliminating all fire hazard, and as it becomes cloudy it is pumped into another tank and distilled before being used again, which insures perfect cleanliness for all garments. The dyeing department is in the rear of the building and all the latest methods of operation are featured here. The patronage of this establishment extends into all sections of the country surrounding Stockton, some families having dealt with this firm for two generations.

Mr. Hess was married to Miss Bertha Jeannelle on September 11, 1910. She is a native of Indiana and came to California in 1907. One daughter, Jeannelle, has been born to them. Mr. Hess is a member of the Stockton Elks, the Native Sons of the Golden West, and takes an active part in the affairs of the Rotary Club and the Chamber of Commerce.

JOHN J. PIMM.—One of the prosperous and enterprising citizens of Lodi is found in John J. Pimm, who located in Lodi fifteen years ago and established a general blacksmithing and wagon-making business, in which he has met with success. He was born in that great milk and butter district of Orange County, N. Y., on August 14, 1847. His father was a member of a prominent English family, and coming to America settled in New York state in an early day and was a pioneer carriage maker and blacksmith. At the age of fourteen our subject started to learn his trade of woodworker under his father, later taking up blacksmithing. Having an ardent admiration for good horses and being thrown in contact with them in his business, he became the owner of many fine driving and trotting horses. In time he became expert in the breaking of colts and the matching of driving teams. After the death of his father, he continued the business at Montgomery, N. Y. and succeeded in building up a fine and lucrative business. During the year of 1883 he removed to Morris, Minn., and engaged in the manufacture of buggies and wagons. He still retained his love for fine horses and owned many of them, among them being "Maud K," a pacer with a record of 2.16; he also received many premiums at county fairs for his horses. In 1900 he removed to California, settling first at Corning, and there he established a blacksmithing business, which occupied him for several years, when he removed to Lodi, establishing his business in 1907 making butcher and ice wagons. As the automobile came into general use, Mr. Pimm has added auto repairing and it has become his chief line of work. He is proud of the steady and prosperous growth of his business and now employs seven men continuously on repair work.

Mr. Pimm's marriage united him with Miss Lottie Oakley, a native of New York State, a daughter of that pioneer George Oakley, who was a merchant in New York state before coming to California in 1849, via Panama, bringing with him a stock of goods from his store, consisting of stoves, hardware and other commodities which he disposed of in San Francisco, where he died. Mr. Pimm became affiliated with the Congregational Church while a resident of Minnesota and for seven years served as superintendent of the Sunday school and for nine years was a deacon of the church; for the past eleven years he has been a deacon in the Lodi Congregational Church. Fraternally he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workman. His support has always been on the side of right and justice and has unflinchingly supported measures for the upbuilding of the community, socially, morally and religiously.

THOMAS E. FISHER.—The descendant on both the paternal and maternal sides of pioneers of the Golden State, Thomas E. Fisher, the assistant chief of the Stockton Fire Department, has spent his whole life in the vicinity of his birthplace. He was born at Stockton on February 17, 1879, the son of J. H. and Mary J. (Towell) Fisher. Mrs. Fisher, who is still living, was also born in San Joaquin County, her father, Thomas Towell, being a pioneer settler of this district. J. H. Fisher, who was a native Missourian, was an early settler of Stockton. He was the first building contractor there and also engaged in house moving, being prominent in local affairs until his death, which occurred in 1903.

Thomas E. Fisher was educated at St. Mary's College at Stockton and then engaged with his father in contracting and house moving, and after the latter's death he took over the business and continued it until his appointment as assistant fire chief. He was also one of the owners of the Traveler's Garage, but disposed of his interests in this concern in October, 1919. Mr. Fisher joined the Stockton Fire Department September 16, 1903, as a call man, and on June 1, 1912, he was appointed assistant chief of the department, taking the place of Martin D. Murphy, the present chief. Growing up with the service, having been a member of the department for nearly twenty years, Mr. Fisher is one of its most loyal and efficient members and is filling his responsible position to the satisfaction of the whole community.

Mr. Fisher's marriage united him with Miss Minnie Earhart, also a native of San Joaquin County and the daughter of pioneer residents. Mr. Fisher is the owner of a good residence in Stockton, where they make their home. He takes an active part in the local fraternal life and is a member of the Eagles, Moose, Native Sons of the Golden West, Young Men's Institute and the Knights of Columbus.

ALFRED W. ARCHER.—The inventive genius of the Sterling Iron Works of Stockton, Alfred W. Archer is its chief engineer, and his determination to succeed in his chosen profession has brought him the merited reward. A native of the Golden State, he was born on Sherman Island, San Joaquin County, on September 16, 1877. His schooling consisted of a few years' attendance in the Salem School of Lodi; then he took up the study of mechanical engineering at home, and was fortunate to secure employment with the Holt Manufacturing Company in their machine shop, where the opportunities were of the best to make advancement along inventive and mechanical lines, his service covering a period of three years. Following his profession, he then traveled extensively throughout the world; was employed, for a time, by the Fresno Agricultural Works, of Fresno, Cal. and the Samson Iron Works of Stockton; then he worked for the British South Africa Charter Company in Rhodesia, South Africa; then he spent two years in various countries of Europe. At the end of this time, he returned to California and became the master mechanic for the largest lumber company on the coast, the Weed Lumber Company, located at Weed, Siskiyou County, Cal. About fourteen years ago he became associated with the Sterling Iron Works of Stockton and has designed all the patents and products of this company, among them being the famous Sterling turbine pump, which has since become extensively used not only in California but throughout the entire West. It took the skill and ability of a genius to design and put on the market this intricate piece of machinery and to Mr. Archer belongs the credit. William F. Barnicol is the efficient manager of this company. Twelve different styles of pumps are manufactured, all of which are thoroughly tested before leaving the plant, which is equipped with a testing laboratory, under the direct supervision of Mr. Archer. This company has installed many pumping plants on ranches throughout the valley and commercial plants as well and there are hundreds of them in use.

The marriage of Mr. Archer united him with Miss Alice L. Stevens, a native of Red Bluff, Cal. and they are the parents of two children, Elwood and Bettie Ann, both natives of Stockton, Cal. Fraternally Mr. Archer is a member of Stockton Lodge of Elks. He has never relaxed his diligence in the study of his chosen profession, always keeping abreast of the times on things mechanical, and by his industry and untiring energy he is acknowledged, by his business associates and residents throughout the state, to be among the best-informed and most practical engineers of Northern California.

GRAT E. CANNON.—An accountant of exceptional ability, Grat E. Cannon has done meritorious work in the county auditor's office and is now in the accounting department of the Samson Tractor Company. He was born on the Pixley ranch near Lodi, Cal. on August 5, 1885. His father, George V. Cannon, was a native of Tennessee, who came direct to Lodi, Cal., and was foreman of the Pixley ranch; later he was in charge of the narrow gauge railroad which was built from Lodi to Valley Springs. He passed away when Grat was a boy of fifteen years, and from that time on, our subject was obliged to earn his own living. As a matter of interest, it may be mentioned that Uncle Joe Cannon of Illinois is his great uncle. Removing to Stockton he worked as an accountant for a number of companies, among them being the Matteson-Williamson Company, the Stockton Lumber Co., the Milk Producers Company, John Brenner Furniture Company, and W. P. Fuller Co. Some thirteen years ago he entered the county recorder's office as a deputy, remaining in that position five years; following which he became a deputy in the county auditor's office; and on February 9, 1920, entered the employ of the Samson Tractor Co. Mr. Cannon is a member of the San Joaquin County Accountants Association, and is a Republican.

Mr. Cannon's especial hobby is commercial illustrating and designing. He possesses a marked gift along these lines, and during his spare time devotes himself to this work; he engrosses all the county school diplomas, the memorials for the American Legion, the honor roll of the Anteros Club members, working with pen and ink and water colors. Fraternally he is a member of Charity Lodge, I. O. O. F., the Elks and the Moose. His marriage united him with Miss Pearl McCuen, a native of Stockton; her father, a sketch of whom appears elsewhere in this work, was an employee of the Sperry Flour Company for some time and later was engaged as a painting contractor in Stockton.

ELI J. BLANCHARD.—A leading business man of Stockton who has forged his way to prosperity and success is Eli J. Blanchard, who conducts a wall-paper and paint store at 616 East Main Street; he is also a leader in interior and exterior decorating. He was born in Montreal, Canada, on June 19, 1860. In 1883 he left his native home and located in Arizona and for three years followed various occupations until 1886 when he went to San Francisco and there learned the trade of painter. He located in Stockton in 1891 and for four years worked for Matteson & Williamson Mfg. Company; then in 1895 started in business for himself as a painting contractor. One of his first large contracts was the painting of the old pavilion, formerly one of the landmarks of Stockton. His business grew steadily as the city grew, until now he is among the leaders in his line; he keeps from ten to thirty-five men busy all the time. Among his more recent work of interior and exterior decorating are the Wilhoit Building, the Hotel Bronx, Hotel Sutter, Hotel Philson, Hotel McAllister, two school houses, etc. He has made a specialty of fine residences and has been the contractor for a large number of them. In the spring of 1909, he opened a paint and wallpaper store, which is well stocked with a full line of up-to-date paints and wallpaper. When Mr. Blanchard arrived in Stockton he had very little capital and what he has accomplished during these years has been due to business-like methods and the quality of his work.

Mr. Blanchard's marriage united him with Miss Harriet A. Binnington, a native Californian, and they are the parents of four children; Thomas T. is the manager of his father's store; Amy is a trained nurse; Mrs. C. C. Marsh; and Leah, attending the University of California at Berkeley. Fraternally he is a member of the Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F., the Elks, and is active in the Rotary Club.

JUDGE WARREN H. ATHERTON.—One of the youngest men in the state of California to be appointed city justice, Judge Warren H. Atherton has already attained a position of prominence among the members of the Stockton bar, his signal rise in the legal profession coming as a due recognition of his ability and the thoroughness of his training, gained through his application and persevering study. Judge Atherton is a native son of California, born at San Francisco, December 28, 1891, gaining his education in the public schools there. In 1908 he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad, as a clerk in the office at Port Costa, Contra Costa County. With a decided bent toward the legal profession, he had already made up his mind to enter the practice of law, and so began by studying at night, pursuing this course until October 20, 1911, when he came to Stockton and entered the law office of H. R. McNoble. Here he studied diligently so that he was admitted to the bar on January 8, 1913, becoming Mr. McNoble's partner the following year.

On October 13, 1917, Mr. Atherton patriotically gave up his law practice to enlist in the service of his country, entering Company D, 363rd Infantry, as a private. He became first sergeant, and was commissioned first lieutenant while in an American training camp, and transferred to the ordnance. Soon after arriving in France he was advanced to the rank of captain, and saw service in the tank corps, having charge of the distribution of caterpillar tractors in France, and in command of one of the ordnance parks there. After nearly two years in the service, he received his honorable discharge on September 3, 1919, returning to Stockton, where, on October 1, he formed a law partnership with M. P. Shaughnessy, as Shaughnessy & Atherton. On December 15, 1920, he was named Justice of Stockton, and this post he has filled most efficiently, being exceptionally well qualified for its duties. Judge Atherton has made a special study of bond issues and is considered an authority on this important subject, as related to municipal financing. He was selected by the city to conduct its bond proceedings in recent issues, among them the issue of $1,275,000 for the Stockton school district, the $1,760,000 issue for the Stockton Municipal Auditorium and City Hall, and the $1,500,000 issue for the Calaveras Dam project.

On July 7, 1917, Mr. Atherton was married to Miss Anne M. Holt, daughter of the late Benjamin Holt, the inventor of the famous caterpillar tractor, and whose genius and worth gave him a place of highest honor among Stockton's noted citizens. Judge Atherton took a prominent part in the organization of the local post of the American Legion and is very popular in its ranks, being a member of the executive committee during the year 1920.

WILLIAM F. BARNICOL.—Stockton owes much of its present industrial prosperity to the efforts of those who control its large manufacturing enterprises, among them William F. Barnicol, founder and president of the Sterling Iron Works, one of the leading productive industries of this part of the state. He was born at Belleville, Ill., and after completing his public school course learned the trade of a machinist, being employed by the Lentz Wire Nail Company at Belleville, where he gained a thorough knowledge, and in 1889 he came to the Pacific Coast, taking charge of the A. S. Halliday Wire Nail Works at San Francisco, Cal. He continued to fill that position until 1903, when he came to Stockton and was placed at the head of the machine shop of the Shippee Harvester Works, where he remained for a year, and then entered the Stockton Iron Works, with which he was identified until he founded the Sterling Works, being associated with four others in the enterprise. Their first place of business was a small shop 50 by 100 feet in dimensions, at 326 South California Street, and for a year they devoted their attention to repair work. Later they engaged in building gas engines and since 1914 have manufactured the famous Sterling pump, which was invented and perfected by the partners in the firm. It ranges in size from one to ten inches and is used extensively in agricultural districts and in industrial plants. Under the capable management of Mr. Barnicol, the president of the company, the business has expanded from year to year and in 1920 they manufactured and sold 600 pumps, their sales for the year amounting to $270,000. The other officers are R. N. Bachelder, vice-president, and W. W. Wilson, secretary and treasurer. They make twelve different styles of pumps and all are thoroughly tested before they leave the plant, which is equipped with a testing laboratory, in charge of an expert engineer. Complete pumping plants have been installed by the company on many ranches in the valley. The California Packing Company has four of their pumps in use, while the California Vineyards have eleven.

Mr. Barnicol is a member of the San Joaquin Lodge of Masons and he is also identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Charity Lodge, No. 6. He is bending his efforts to administrative direction and executive control and has so directed the efforts of those in his employ that maximum results are obtained at a minimum expenditure of time, labor and material. In his business career he has ever closely adhered to the rules which govern unabating industry and unswerving integrity and his influence is one of broadening activity and strength in the field in which he is operating.

HARRY T. FEE.—A far-seeing business man of winning personality who has repeatedly demonstrated that he has marked ability along more than one line, is Harry T. Fee, who conducts an insurance business in the Commercial & Savings Bank Building in Stockton. Mr. Fee is also a poet of no mean ability, and the people of Stockton and vicinity need no introduction to him, for his poems have been published from week to week in the Stockton Record. In reading his poems one feels that Mr. Fee has caught the very spirit of the hills, the woods, the streams, the forests and embodied for others some of his joy in them. A native son of California, he was born in Stockton on March 25, 1871, a son of Patrick and Mary (Daly) Fee. His father was a native of Ireland, and his mother was born on the Island of St. Helena in the room where Napoleon died. His father was brought to America by his parents when only one year old. He was married in Hamilton, Ontario and later he migrated to California, across the plains in an ox-team train, in the early 50's; he opened one of the first livery stables in Stockton and conducted it for many years; he was a prominent figure in the politics of the state and county, serving as the first harbor master in Stockton; he was also a member of the city council for two terms; a member of the Volunteer Fire Department and later an Exempt Fireman. At one time he was president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. There were two children in the family, Harry T. and Mrs. Frank Weaver, of Stockton. Both parents have passed away.

Harry T. was educated in the Stockton public schools; then entered the Santa Clara University and was graduated from that institution in 1891, degree B. S.; he then became deputy county auditor and recorder under Otto Von Detten, where he remained for eight years; and was chief deputy county assessor under Cyrus Moering, where he remained for four years. In 1910 he engaged in the insurance business along general lines, but specializes in accident and health insurance.

Mr. Fee's marriage occurred in Stockton and united him with Miss Etta Ortman, born on her father's ranch near Stockton, a descendant of a prominent pioneer family. Fraternally, Mr. Fee is a member of Stockton Lodge 218, B. P. O. E., and Stockton Parlor, No. 7, N. S. G. W., and the Lions. Mr. Fee has recently published his first book of poems entitled "The Land of Out O' Doors," full of the freshness and beauty of the open. His poems have also appeared in the Sunset Magazine, the Pacific Monthly and other coast publications.

HARRY BOTTINI.—A native son of San Joaquin County who has devoted his efforts very successfully to agricultural pursuits since arriving at manhood's years is Harry Bottini. He is the owner of the twenty-one-acre home place near where he was born August 9, 1893, in Morado precinct, a son of Giovanni and Dominica Bottini, both natives of Genoa, Italy. Giovanni Bottini was a young man of twenty-eight years when he came to this country and after arriving in California he worked at hydraulic mining at La Grange, then removed to San Joaquin County where he bought twenty acres some seven miles northeast of Stockton in the Morado district. This ranch he developed to an orchard of walnuts and peaches with about six acres in vineyard. There were seven children in the family: Bert, deceased; Filda, Mrs. Solari, resides in Stockton; Antonio, deceased; Harry, the subject of this sketch; Linda, Mrs. Armondo Costa, deceased; Edith, Mrs. Secondo Costa, resides in Stockton; and Irene, Mrs. Augusto Lagomarsino, who has a daughter, Esther. The father passed away in 1918 at the age of sixty-three and the mother in 1911 at forty-eight years of age. Harry Bottini received his education at the Greenwood district school in the vicinity of the home place and since he was sixteen years old helped his father run the home ranch. After the death of his father he bought the interests of the rest of the family, so that he is now the owner of the home place of twenty-one acres of vineyard and orchard. His sister Irene and her husband make their home with him on the ranch. Harry Bottini has many warm personal friends and has established a reputation as an excellent agriculturist, and has become a valued citizen of the county. He is a Republican in his political views.

WILLIAM H. FAUST.—Since 1912 William H. Faust has been affiliated with the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, as manager of the Lodi office, and through his capable management the business has grown to satisfactory proportions. He was born in Dubuque, Iowa, on September 27, 1874, and was educated in the public schools of his native city. His first business experience was in the real estate and insurance business; later he was the passenger agent at Dubuque for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad for one year; he then removed to St. Joseph, Mo., and for one year was the cost accountant for the American Sash & Door Company. In 1905 he journeyed to the Pacific Coast and entered the employ of the Diamond Match Company, at Chico, where he worked for four and a half years; then in 1911 he entered upon his duties with the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, at Sacramento. His ability as a manager was soon recognized and in 1912 he assumed the oversight of the office in Lodi. Not only has Mr. Faust put the office on a paying basis, but he has systematized the work so that the patrons get better service, and the service has been extended from 800 in 1912 to 2200.

Upon taking up his residence in Lodi, Mr. Faust became an active worker in the affairs of the community; at one time being a member of the board of health. During the Exposition at San Francisco, in 1915, he served as chairman of publicity and exhibits for the local Chamber of Commerce and designed and prepared the Lodi exhibit, receiving a personal letter from C. C. Moore, the president of the Exposition, complimenting him upon his attractive and comprehensive exhibit. He was a director in the Lodi Business Men's Association at one time and is the man who started the movement for the erection of the Lodi Hotel and the Lodi theater and worked untiringly for the success of the enterprise. In 1922 he served as president of the Lodi Business Men's Association, which has a membership of 200. At the present time he is serving as clerk of the grammar school board and is one of the three trustees; he is also secretary of the Lodi fire department. During the World War he was captain of a team in all war drives. He is a member of the Elks and of the Lodi Rotary Club.

The marriage of Mr. Faust, in May, 1904, united him with Miss Cynthia F. Becker, a native of Dubuque, Iowa, and they are the parents of one son, William H., Jr., born in Chico, Cal. Mr. Faust is wide-awake to all measures for the advancement of his locality and with his wife is active in educational affairs and the associated charities of Lodi. Mrs. Faust is a member of the Lodi Woman's Club.

JUDGE DANA P. EICKE.—The life story of the present mayor of Stockton, Judge Dana P. Eicke, presents an interesting and varied record, which has run the gamut of farm boy, miner, prison guard, railroad policeman, detective, lawyer, judge and mayor. He was born in Placer County, December 9, 1879, and when still in his 'teens went to work as a miner, working in the gold, copper and borax mines of Canada and Mexico. When he was twenty-four, he returned to California and was appointed prison guard at Folsom by Governor Pardee, where he passed through some exciting experiences. He went through the famous riot and attempted jail break of 1904, when convicts seized a captain and several guards and used them as shields against bullets in their attempt to break away. Judge Eicke aided in preventing this wholesale delivery that had been carefully planned, ten men being shot during this break in eight minutes. In 1908 Governor Gillette appointed him to the state railroad police and he was one of the posse that captured the China Mail robbers near Suisun; he was then chosen by the Southern Pacific to gather evidence for its legal department in criminal cases.

With a decided inclination toward the legal profession, and through his association with C. M. Gill, a prominent attorney of Stockton, Judge Eicke took up the study of the law, burning the midnight oil in Mr. Gill's office to such good purpose that he was admitted to the bar in February, 1914, practicing in the Superior, Supreme and U. S. Courts. In 1918 he was elected judge of the police court of Stockton and while on the bench he attracted nation-wide attention through his method of dealing with automobile speeders, articles having appeared in many of the Eastern papers.

The following is quoted from a Buffalo, N. Y. paper:

"Solomon in all his wisdom could not have devised a brighter scheme for punishing speeders than that of the genial police court justice of Stockton, Cal., Dana P. Eicke. Speeders no longer come into Judge Eicke's court smirking, 'What's the fine, Judge?' The Judge doesn't fine speeders any more. Instead he locks up the speeders' machines. Judge Eicke launched this unique campaign against speeders some time ago and since that time he has locked up a number of cars. He started out with a motorcycle and a tin Lizzie and followed up with big machines. His first victim was a young Stanford University law student. 'You're learning the ways of the law, young man,' said the Judge, 'and it isn't costing you a cent. But you will have to walk for a week. The bailiff is hereby ordered to lock up your car in the fire engine house for seven days.' One day a taxicab driver appeared before His Honor. 'You are sentenced to thirty days in jail,' said he sternly. 'However, I will grant you your liberty on condition that you turn over your machine to the bailiff for that same period.' 'Your honor, I will pay a fine, but the taxicab is not mine,' said the driver. 'Very well, then,' said the Judge. 'You shall surrender your license to the bailiff and you shall not so much as step inside of an automobile for thirty days. If you are seen in a machine within that time, you will go to jail. This court does not fine speeders any more.'

The novelty of Judge Eicke's plan struck the humor of the people and it was the talk of the town, and, incidentally, speeding decreased 100% while he was on the bench. Before his election to the judgeship, Judge Eicke was appointed prosecuting attorney for the State Board of Pharmacy by Governor Johnson. During the World War he was appointed by the Government as appeal agent for San Joaquin County, and he received an honorable discharge from President Wilson for the faithful performance of his duties and also honorable mention from Governor Stephens. He was also one of the four-minute speakers and did much effective work in this capacity. Judge Eicke has always been prominent in Republican politics and at the November election in 1920 he was elected Mayor of Stockton, and this high office he had filled with distinction.

Judge Eicke was married in 1910 to Miss Florence Taylor, a native daughter of Amador County, and a descendant of a pioneer family, her father having crossed the plains in 1849, Judge Eicke's father having come to California around the Horn the same year. Three children have been born to them, Jane, Willis and Caroline. Judge Eicke is very prominent in fraternal life and is a member of all branches of Masonry, including the Shrine; also of the Eagles, Elks, Moose, Red Men, Mooseheart Legion, Ad Club of Stockton and the State Automobile Association. Mrs. Eicke is a member of the First Christian Church, the Christian Women's Board of Missions, and of the Eastern Star.

JOHN V. BARE.—Among the successful growers, packers and shippers of fruit of Lodi, is John V. Bare, who from a small beginning has achieved his present outstanding success. He was born in Visalia, Tulare County, Cal., on February 14, 1881, a son of John and Clara (Parker) Bare. His father, a native of Indiana, crossed the plains with an ox team in 1849, and settled in Tulare County where he engaged in farming. Mrs. Bare is a native of California, a daughter of John Parker, a seafaring man who came into Monterey Bay as cabin boy on a sailing vessel in 1837 and spent the winter there; he made other voyages to California in 1847 and 1849.

John V. Bare was educated in the public schools of Visalia and when a young man took up professional baseball as a livelihood; he was second baseman on the Visalia team and was in the Northwestern League, playing in Spokane, Wash., and Butte, Mont. In 1904 he came to Lodi to play on the local team, playing in California in the winter and the Northwest in the summer. In 1907 he became district manager for the Producers Fruit Company of Lodi and served in that capacity for seven years, when he entered business for himself as a packer and shipper. His idea was to give the consumer the best fruit, packed in the most attractive boxes and labeled, and he was among the first to pack fruit in that manner. He started business on a borrowed capital of $500, and his business has grown until it has reached large proportions. Later he bought crops in the field and packed and shipped them. He then bought eighty acres near Galt but later traded it and bought his home place of 320 acres, located about two miles west of Woodbridge, which he has brought to a high state of productivity and it is considered one of the finest places in the northern part of San Joaquin County. In 1920 he added 130 acres to his holdings which is also a full bearing vineyard, thus making a total of 450 acres. He packs and ships all of his fruit under the "Bare Brand" which is well known throughout the eastern markets.

The marriage of Mr. Bare united him with Miss Jettora Watkins, a native of Sacramento, Cal., and they are the parents of one daughter, Bonnie. Fraternally, Mr. Bare is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. Progressive and enterprising, Mr. Bare at all times is willing to give of his time and means, as far as he is able, to all worthy objects that have for their aim the upbuilding of the county and state in which he takes so much pride and where his ambition has been realized.

LOUIS F. BARZELLOTTI.—The capable and efficient engineer of Lodi, Louis Barzellotti was born in Florence, Italy, on April 1, 1857, and was educated in his native country. Finishing his preliminary education he entered the University of Pisa and was graduated with the degree of M. A.; he received his C. E. degree from the University of Rome; then took a post graduate course in mineralogy and geology from the Institute of Florence. During the year of 1891 he concluded to cast his lot in the land of greater opportunities and upon arrival in California practiced his profession of mining engineer in Sierra County for three years; he was also consulted by horticulturists throughout California on olive and grape culture; for the next ten years he was consulting engineer for the Corvage-Tesla Coal Mining Company. He then was engaged in railroad construction work in the Mojave desert and in 1912 located in Lodi when that thriving city was just starting on its era of expansion.

Since his arrival in Lodi, Mr. Barzellotti has taken an active part in its development. He built a new stone sewer system and twelve miles of paving; he planned and built the municipal swimming baths in the city park, the first municipal baths constructed in the state. He is secretary of the City Planning committee which has had charge of all recent improvements. He takes a great interest in his work and has advocated the annexation of more territory to the city. In 1915 he took an active part in the campaign for bond issue for city improvement which was passed unanimously and Mr. Barzellotti has witnessed many substantial developments in the municipality. He specializes on scientific irrigation, the development of which has been the greatest factor in the progress of central California; he has frequently been called upon to lecture on this interesting subject and is considered an expert on municipal engineering and irrigation topics; he has written extensively on these subjects for a number of periodicals. Mr. Barzellotti is engineer of reclamation district No. 548, located in the Delta district and containing 13,000 acres, this tract of land being originally from five to six feet below tide-water; he was also irrigation engineer on the development of two large ranches on Rough and Ready and Roberts Islands. Mr. Barzellotti is serving as vice-president of the San Joaquin County Association of Civil Engineers. Fraternally, he is identified with the Lodi Lodge, No. 256, F. & A. M., and Scottish Rite Lodge of Perfection, No. 1, San Francisco.

The marriage of Mr. Barzellotti united him with Miss Amelia Louise Wetman, a native of San Francisco. The state of California and the locality which he has selected for his permanent home owe much to men of the caliber of Mr. Barzellotti.

JACK BARRON.—A well-known, hustling realty dealer whose operations have had considerable significance for others as well as for himself, is Jack Barron, of 411-12 Commercial & Savings Bank Building, Stockton, a native of San Francisco, where he was born on March 1, 1881. As early as his thirteenth year, he started to work on a ranch at Riverbank, and when more experienced, he continued farm labor on ranches in the Delta district. Later, he was in the employ of the Stockton Glass Works as a fireman.

In 1916 he started in the real estate business by buying cheap lots in Stockton, which were then considered not worth bothering with, but in the selling of which he was successful, realizing some profit. He next associated himself with Kenneth T. Howe, the real estate dealer; and how they came to start together is very interesting. Mr. Howe had a horse which he wished to sell, and Jack said that nothing could be easier,—and at a good price, too. Jack made the sale, and Mr. Howe said that a man who could get that price for a horse, could also sell real estate. So Jack started in, and in the Mineral Baths Tract made a record for sales, taking first prize among other salesmen. He later became the exclusive agent for Mosswood Park, which was owned by Mrs. Mary B. Percival, selling off many lots there and he is still agent for the property.

Early in 1920 Mr. Barron became associated with P. H. Stitt in the sale of lots and houses in Tuxedo Park; and one of his first big deals there was in closing the sale of a $17,000 residence; and since that time he has sold real estate all over Stockton. He also buys lots and builds cottages and bungalows which he sells at a good profit and in this venture has met with very satisfactory results. Mr. Barron employs six and seven salesmen in his business, and along with his other transactions he buys and ships grapes, deals in farming and grape lands, and does a general real estate, loan and insurance business. He is a good judge of values, a wide-awake student of changing market conditions, and first, last and all the time, dependable. Mr. Barron's signs 10x30 feet in size bearing "Barron's Real Estate Exchange," are to be found on all roads and principal highways leading out of Stockton. Mr. Barron belongs to the San Joaquin County Realty Board; and as a Master Mason, he is a member of the San Joaquin Blue Lodge.

JOHN VINCENT CRAVIOTTO, M. D.—A distinguished member of the medical fraternity in California is John Vincent Craviotto, the physician and surgeon, whose fine suite of offices are located on North Sutter Street, Stockton. He was born near Genoa, Italy, on August 1, 1879, and when five years of age, he was brought to California by his parents, who settled at San Francisco. He attended the local schools, and later went to St. Ignatius College; and in 1899 he was graduated from the University of California with the Ph.G. degree. Five years later, he was graduated from the Cooper Medical College, affiliated with Stanford University; and then he received the coveted M. D. degree. He was an intern in the City and County Hospital and also the French Hospital at San Francisco for a year, and in October, 1905, he removed to Stockton and began to practice medicine.

From the beginning of his professional experience, Dr. Craviotto has not only been in great demand as one of the leaders in the Italian Colony of San Joaquin County, but he has steadily taken high rank as one of the ablest of physicians and surgeons, often called in consultation and for serious cases requiring the specialist. He is physician for the Concordia Grove of Druids, the Cavalotti Lodge of Foresters, and the Italian Garden Society. He is a member of the American Medical Association, and the State and County Societies, and he has a fellowship in the American College of Surgeons. He is president of the Stockton Italian Club, and belongs to Lodge No. 218 of the Elks, to the Young Men's Institute, to the Druids, and the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Foresters of America. And he is a member of the advisory board of the Bank of Italy at Stockton and of the Security Building & Loan Association and for the past twelve years he has been a member of the State Lunacy Commission.

In San Francisco, in 1904, Dr. Craviotto was married to Miss Lydia Spadina, a native of San Francisco; and they have six children, all born at Stockton: Concessa, Irene, Angela, John Vincent, Jr., Vincent Angelo, and Yollanda.

FRANK E. COLLINS.—Lifelong identification with the fruit business has enabled Frank E. Collins to make a marked success in this line, which year by year is assuming vaster proportions in the state of California, distributing thousands of dollars in every fruit-growing community each season and making possible the development of additional tracts of land. A member of an honored pioneer family, Mr. Collins was born at Vacaville, Solano County, July 2, 1868, the son of James R. Collins, who crossed the plains in an ox-team train in 1849, spending some time in the mines. In 1853 he located on a ranch near Vacaville, and there he made his home for sixty-four years, being the pioneer fruit man of that district. At one time he had seventy-five acres in vineyard and later a large orchard of plums, pears, peaches and apricots.

Frank E. Collins was reared on the home ranch near Vacaville, and after his school days were over he started in the fruit business with his father. At the age of eighteen he entered the employ of the Earl Fruit Company, starting in at the bottom to learn every detail of the work. He later became a buyer for the company, spending the winters in the citrus fruit district in Orange County, and the summers handling the deciduous fruits in the San Jose district. Later he was local agent for the company at San Jose and in 1903 he planted an orchard of 160 acres near Merced to figs and peaches. In 1904 after sixteen years with the Earl Fruit Company, Mr. Collins became associated with the Pioneer Fruit Company, spending one season in Placer County and later operating at San Jose, Napa and Red Bluff, being with this company altogether twelve years. The year 1917 was spent with the Pacific Fruit & Produce Company at Portland, Ore., and on returning to California in 1918, Mr. Collins located at Lodi and formed a partnership with W. T. Owens, as Owens & Collins. Their business has thrived from the start, and in 1920 they shipped 150 cars of fruit and grapes. In addition to handling on consignment, they have a lease on a fine 100-acre Tokay vineyard. Their table grapes are packed under the Royal Arch brand, which has a fine reputation in the Eastern markets, having topped the New York market on numerous occasions.

January 12, 1901, at San Francisco, Cal., Mr. Collins was united in marriage with Miss Harriet Rutherford, a native daughter, born in Wyandotte, Butte county, whose parents, James M. and Geraldine (Enslow) Rutherford, were natives of Kentucky and Ohio. Her father came to California in 1852, but her grandfather Thos. Enslow crossed the plains to California in 1849, to Butte County; they were pioneer settlers there. Mrs. Collins is past president of Ivy Parlor, N. D. G. W. A woman of great capability Mrs. Collins has contributed much to her husband's success, having had many years of experience with their business as forelady in the packing house. She superintended the packing of a car of apricots at Hanford which was the first car to go East from the San Joaquin Valley in the spring of 1921, and which brought the highest price in the Eastern markets, due to its careful packing and the superior quality of the fruit. Mr. and Mrs. Collins have one son, Leon Collins, who is foreman for the Owens & Collins Company, so that all the family have a vital interest in its success.

JOHN BRICHETTO.—Prominent among the experienced and highly progressive financiers of California to whom San Joaquin County in particular owes much for its up-to-date development along the broadest and most permanent lines, is John Brichetto, the well-known farmer and banker of Stockton, who was born at Banta, Cal., on February 5, 1881, the son of G. and Luigia (Canale) Brichetto, the former of whom is now deceased, and both of whom were natives of Italy. The father came to San Joaquin County in 1867, here mined, and then worked at tunnel construction for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Then, for a while, he settled in the San Joaquin Gardens on the river, and later located at Banta, where he raised and sold vegetables. In 1872, he opened a general store at Banta, which he conducted for many years. He was a large farmer and landowner in the Banta district at the time of his death, in 1916, and owned 9,000 acres of land on the West Side. Several children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Brichetto, and among them were Irene, Minnie, Joseph C., Mrs. Mollie Raspo, and John, who was educated in the public schools of the locality, and at Santa Clara College. When through with his studies, he was associated with his father in the store at Banta, and after that he formed a partnership with his brother, Joseph C., under the name of Brichetto Bros., and they are now known as large grain farmers on the West Side, farming about 3,000 acres. Mr. Brichetto is president of the Board of Directors of the Banta-Carolina Irrigation district, recently formed, which will care for the irrigation of some 20,000 acres in the Tracy and Banta districts.

In addition to his activity in agricultural circles, Mr. Brichetto is also prominent in banking circles. He is a member, for example, of the Advisory Board of the Stockton Branch of the Bank of Italy, and previously he was a director in the San Joaquin Valley National Bank of Stockton. He was also a director in the Bank of Tracy. He was once postmaster at Banta, and he is at present manager of the G. Brichetto estate.

In the year 1916, at San Francisco, Cal., Mr. Brichetto was married to Miss Nancy Kneass, a native of San Francisco and the daughter of E. D. Kneass of San Jose, Cal., a gifted lady, sharing the responsibilities and the rewards of her husband's strenuous life. Mr. Brichetto belongs to Lodge No. 218 of the Stockton Elks, and the Olympic Club of San Francisco.

O. H. CHAIN.—Foremost among the successful building contractors of Stockton is O. H. Chain, who has done his full share in the building up of the city, with its miles of well-kept streets lined with attractive homes. Born on October 18, 1884, Mr. Chain was reared on the home farm near Huron, Atchison County, Kans., until he was eighteen years old, when he struck out for himself, going to the mines at Silver City, Idaho, where he worked for a time, and then on to Spokane, Wash., where he was employed in the Union Iron Works. After traveling through the Canadian Northwest, seeing much new country and gaining much experience, he returned to Spokane and then came on to Portland, Ore., where he took up his present line of work, starting as a carpenter's helper.

In 1905 Mr. Chain located at San Francisco, following the trade of carpenter there until 1909, helping to rebuild the city after the fire of 1906, and then spent a few months both at Goldfield, Nev., and Prescott, Ariz., in the building business. Coming back to California in 1908, Mr. Chain settled in Stockton in 1910, and having found an ideal home and business place, he has remained here ever since. He was first employed as foreman on county bridge construction work, and then was associated with the planing mill of Totten & Brant in stair-building work.

Starting in business for himself in 1911, Mr. Chain began building and selling residences, and his thorough workmanship and dependable construction won him success from the start. He has erected over 100 homes in Stockton, among them the E. Allen Test residence on North Hunter Street, and the home of Mrs. Frank E. Murphy in Tuxedo Park, as well as many other fine residences in various parts of the city. He has also built the following: the Hobbs-Parsons Produce House; warehouse for the Wagner Leather Company; a brick building for the Union Planing Mill; three galvanized iron buildings for the Stockton Box Company; a two-story brick garage building for Dr. J. V. Craviotto; a two story flat and laundry building on El Dorado Street; a four-flat building for Mrs. Silva on San Joaquin near Vine Street; an addition to the Dameron Hospital; the Japanese school building on Washington Street; building for the Geiger Iron Works; garage for John Yardley on North San Joaquin Street; brick garage for Everybody's Investment Company, on Aurora Street; business block of five brick stores for C. A. Slack in Tracy; factory for the Superior Manufacturing Company in Lodi; building for Standard Oil Company at main plant, Stockton; garage for E. B. Stowe on East Weber Avenue; apartments for Mrs. Amelia Anderson, East Main Street; four flats for himself at 930 North Commerce Street; residence for Neil I. Ross in Yosemite Terrace; Victory Grammar School; Parisian Cleaning & Dyeing Works.

In 1909, at San Francisco, Mr. Chain was married to Miss Louise F. Petry of that city, and they are the parents of a son, Hubert Victor. Progressive and public spirited, Mr. Chain can always be counted on to contribute to every worthy undertaking for the city's upbuilding. He is a member of the Merchants, Manufacturers & Employers Association, the Chamber of Commerce, and a director of the Builders Exchange.

ANDREW G. ERICKSON.—Among the attractive and enterprising business firms of Stockton is the Gold Medal Creamery located at 31 South California Street, owned and operated by Andrew G. Erickson. He was born on a farm in McPherson County, Kan., on February 20, 1890, was taken by his parents to Victoria, Texas, where the father, also named Andrew Erickson, passed away. The family remained there until our subject was eleven years of age, then the mother and nine children came to California in 1901, settling in Stockton.

The education of Andrew G. Erickson was obtained in the public schools of Stockton, his business training starting when he was employed by the San Joaquin Creamery and the Stockton Creamery, where he learned butter making; he then took a course along the same line of work at the University of California farm at Davis, Cal.; then for five years he was in charge of butter-making for the Oakdale Creamery in Oakdale, Stanislaus County. In 1918, in company with his brother, Arthur L., the Gold Medal Creamery was purchased, which was at that time a very small business, 200 pounds of butter was made daily in the window of the factory, now 1,500 pounds is the daily output of this factory, a remarkable growth in four years. In May, 1921, Mr. Erickson purchased the interest of his brother, who is now the proprietor of the Paramount Creamery at Turlock, Cal. Mr. Erickson's store space has been doubled and modern machinery installed. His Gold Medal brand of butter has become very popular, three-fourths of the leading hotels and restaurants in the city using it. He buys cream from the leading dairies in the county, and it is pasteurized, made into butter, and sold throughout the city. Mr. Erickson has made a scientific study along the line of butter-making and other milk products and is considered one of the best informed men in the county on the subject, and is at the present time one of the largest butter makers in the city.

The marriage of Mr. Erickson united him with Miss Bessie Lenfesty, a native of Calaveras County, Cal., and they are the parents of three daughters, Ernestine, Phyllis and Charlotte. Fraternally he is a member of Truth Lodge of Odd Fellows.

WESLEY DANIELS.—A building contractor who not only thoroughly understands his business but is especially well posted as to local conditions, is Wesley Daniels, the senior member of the firm of Messrs. Daniels & Green of Stockton. He was born near Hamilton, Ont., on January 23, 1860, and learning the trade of a carpenter and millwright, he followed millwrighting in Canada, and also at Davenport, Iowa, and Peoria, Ill. In 1889 he came out to the Pacific Coast, and at Los Angeles he worked for a couple of years as carpenter. In 1891, he reached Stockton, and he has been here ever since.

For five years, Mr. Daniels worked for Thomas D. Lewis, and in 1908 he formed a partnership with H. P. Green, as Daniels & Green, and commenced building by contract. From the beginning, the firm was very successful; and having once established their reputation for superior, dependable work, they have seldom or never been idle. They have erected many of the notable edifices in San Joaquin County, including the office building of the California Navigation and Improvement Company, and the remodeled Washington and Jackson schools. They built the North, Weber and Hazeltine schools, the Hotel Lincoln and the Taft Hotel, and a two-story brick block for the City Development Company at the corner of Main and American avenues. They remodeled the interior of the Commercial & Savings Bank, and also the City Bank, and built the annex to the Smith & Lang Block, as well as the Botto & Brassesco Block and the Marshall Building. They put up the Oneto and Campodónico Building, and the Flannigan Block, and are also to be credited with the fine St. Agnes Convent, the Stockton Dry Goods Company Block, the Pacific States Telephone and Telegraph Building, the Meyers Meat Market Block; a house for F. J. Viebrock.

While in Canada, Mr. Daniels was married to Miss Jessie Kern, a native of that great Northern country; and their particularly fortunate union has been greatly blessed with the birth of four children: Myrtle, Fred, Wesley J., and Margaret.

P. A. BUELL.—Born on a farm near Cleveland, Ohio, Park Arbington Buell, generally known as P. A. Buell, was the son of Sidney Buell and Amelia W. (Ballou) Buell. After his father's death, his mother brought her little family to California, and built a home at Santa Rosa.

P. A. Buell remained at home until he was grown, receiving his education in the public schools. He came to Stockton in the early '80s and entered the employ of the White & Thomas Planing Mill Company, remaining with them until he went into business for himself. He organized the P. A. Buell Planing Mill & Lumber Company, with office at Center and Sonora streets. The mills covered an area of 50,000 square feet, and the yards occupied over ten acres on the south bank of Mormon channel.

After establishing himself in Stockton, Mr. Buell married Miss Ada Moore, the daughter of H. H. Moore, a well-known pioneer resident and business man of the city. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Buell: Leon Moore, Henry H. and Amy. The eldest son died at the age of eight years. Henry H. is a graduate of Stanford University, and an electrical engineer by profession. He married Miss Rheda Ridenour, and they have two sons, Warren Henry, and Robert Allen. Amy graduated from Miss Head's school in Berkeley, and received her degree from Mills College. She is the wife of John Stewart Greaves and they have one daughter, Nancy Jane.

P. A. Buell was a staunch Republican in politics, and fraternally a Knight Templar Mason and a member of Charity Lodge, I. O. O. F. He was prominently identified with many affairs which were beneficial to the public good. He was the organizer and president of the Commercial Association which was instrumental in having the San Francisco and San Joaquin Valley Railroad built from Stockton; was identified with the building of the Sierra Railroad; was a director of the Jackson, Sutter & Amador Railway Company, whose line was then in course of construction. He also visited Washington in the interest of the waterways of California. His last prominent work was the organization of the San Joaquin Valley Association, embracing the twelve counties forming the low lands and slopes of that fertile valley. He was also the president of the Bown Mining Company of Tuolumne.

Mr. Buell continually and unselfishly devoted a large proportion of his time and best effort aiding and encouraging any worthy enterprise which he felt would redound to the advantage of his community. In his sudden and premature death on April 4th, 1900, Stockton lost a stalwart supporter of every civic movement for the welfare of his adopted city.

NICK COPELLO.—Well known in both the mercantile and the financial circles of Stockton is Nick Copello, a native son who was born at San Andreas, in Calaveras County, on June 26, 1876. His father, Joseph Copello, a native of Italy, came out to California in the early '50s, followed mining in Calaveras and Amador counties, and in 1894 took up his residence in Stockton, where he conducted the Roma Hotel on Center Street. He died in 1895. The mother died in 1906. Of the children born to Joseph Copello and his wife, who was Benidetti Sanguinetti before marriage, the following are living: Nicholas, Mrs. May Bona, Mrs. Cora Tartaul, Mrs. Fred Rossi, and Mrs. Lyda Mazza, all of Stockton.

Nicholas, or Nick, as he is popularly known, was reared and educated in Amador City, and he worked as a boy in the quartz mill. Coming to Stockton in 1894, however, with his father, he was associated with him in the management of the hotel, and later he conducted a restaurant for himself. In 1900 he bought one-third of a block at the corner of Aurora and Washington streets, and engaged in the grocery business, and he is at present still interested in that line of trade at that place. He owns valuable real estate in Stockton, including some California Street property, and also land in Calaveras County. And he is a director in the Commercial & Savings Bank of Stockton. He is truly a self-made man, who has attained a large measure of success, mostly through his own efforts, so that the story of his life may well be an inspiration to other American youths.

At Stockton, in January, 1909, Mr. Copello was married to Miss Mamie Quirollo, a native of Calaveras County; and their happy union has been blessed with the birth of one daughter, Lenora. Mr. Copello is a popular member of the Stockton Elks, Lodge No. 218, the Red Men, the Eagles, and the U. P. E. C. A large-hearted, optimistic American, he is interested in the success of his fellow Americans as well as in his own advancement and prosperity; and everyone who has any dealings with him, commercial, financial or social, knows that he is thoroughly dependable, and that whatever he once has promised to do, that he will perform.

EMIL FIMBEL.—Among the thriving industries of San Joaquin County is the Pickle Manufacturing Company, of which Emil Fimbel is the senior partner, not only the pioneer establishment in this line, but the only one of its kind in the county. Possessed of sturdy ability and enterprise, his success has been steadily increased as a result of each year's operations. He was born in Alsace-Lorraine, February 10, 1854, in the town of Mülhausen, where his father, Jacob Fimbel, owned and operated a bakery.

Emil Fimbel received a good education in the excellent schools of his native town, and while young learned the trade of iron turner in a machine shop where he was employed until 1873, when he went to Paris. The following year, 1874, he came to the United States, locating at Pittsburgh, Pa., and there followed his trade for two years. He then removed to Canton, Ohio, where he worked for two years for the Leibold & Teitsold Safe Manufacturing Company; then he went to Philadelphia, where he worked in the shipyards at Chester, Pa., and while there worked on three ships as follows: the Center, the City of New York and the City of San Francisco. He then went to Dubuque, Iowa, and later to Kansas, where he intended to take a homestead, but was not pleased with the conditions in western Kansas. He then went on to Buena Vista, Colo., prospecting, working in the mines and sharpening tools for the miners. In 1888 he located in Bakersfield, Cal., and two years later he came to Stockton, where he found employment with the Shippee Harvester Company, the Stockton Iron Works and the State Hospital. Then he started his own business on Bridge Street, buying and selling vegetables. Some ten years ago he started to make pickles in a small shop on East Channel Street and this business has steadily increased.

The marriage of Mr. Fimbel, in Stockton, in 1897, united him with Mrs. Mary Merz, a native of Bavaria, Germany, who came to California in 1885. She has two sons by her former marriage: Hans G. served in the United States army overseas and now is a farmer on Linden Road, San Joaquin County; William F. Merz is a partner in the firm of Fimbel & Merz. Mr. and Mrs. Fimbel are the parents of one son, Emil Fimbel, Jr., also a partner in the business.

The firm of Fimbel & Merz contract with the farmers to buy their cucumbers and manufacture them into dill, sweet, sour, mustard and mixed pickles; they also manufacture sauerkraut. They conduct a large wholesale business, as it is the only industry of its kind in the county and they enjoy a steadily increasing patronage. Mr. Fimbel is the owner of an eighty-acre ranch in Calaveras County, a portion of which is devoted to vineyard and farming land and on which is also a limestone quarry; the rock makes a perfectly white lime of excellent quality. Mr. Fimbel formerly belonged to the Odd Fellows Lodge and Encampment, and is now identified with the Foresters of America, Sons of Herman, of which he is a past president, and the I. D. E. S. Mrs. Fimbel is a member of the Druids.

LEONIDA OLIVIERI, M. D.—Born in the ancient city of Genoa, Italy, December 14, 1866, Dr. Leonida Olivieri is a descendant of an eminent and noble Italian family. Both his father and his grandfather were physicians, and famous men of their time. He was graduated from the University of Physicians and Surgeons in Genoa, Italy, after which he took a post-graduate course at the Medical College of Paris. About thirty years ago he sailed for America, and for a while he located in Chicago, and in that city, in 1893, he was attached to the medical department of the World's Fair Exposition, where the instrument of his invention for the safe and rapid operation in tracheotomy received the first prize.

A few years later Dr. Olivieri came out to California for his health; and having been favorably impressed with the Golden State from the start, he has been here ever since, always busy with the successful practice of his profession. His exceptional scientific training and equipment, and his linguistic attainments, and the other fruits of his profound study and wide travel have contributed to enable him to render the greatest service to important circles in Stockton and the rest of San Joaquin County. During all these years he also contributed to the beauty of Stockton by erecting fine buildings and improving the country around by converting several large pieces of almost sterile land into valuable and highly productive ranches, and no greater evidence could be desired of his faith in the future of this region, to which he has always been so loyal. Cultured and philanthropic by nature, he has won the esteem and the sincere affection of his numerous friends here and elsewhere. In honor of distinguished services rendered by Dr. Olivieri to his native land, he was honored by King Humbert, who bestowed upon him the rank of Chevalier officer with the Cross of the Crown of Italy.

GEORGE B. GARIBOTTI.—Leaving his native land when a youth of eighteen years, George B. Garibotti sought the broader opportunities for advancement offered in the United States and he has won a notable measure of success which now enables him to live retired from the active cares of business, his attention being concentrated upon his duties as secretary and manager of the Italian Club of Stockton. A native of Italy, he was born in the farming district near Genoa, September 10, 1868, and his parents accorded him the best educational opportunities obtainable at that period. In 1886, in company with five friends, he sailed for the United States, arriving in San Francisco, Cal., April 3, of that year. He secured employment in a restaurant of that city and later opened a small restaurant of his own on Broadway, calling it the Flora de Italia, by which name it has since been known, and it is now one of the most popular Italian cafes in San Francisco. In 1888 he sold his interest in the undertaking and came to Stockton, becoming owner of a restaurant at Hunter and Market streets. In 1900 he revisited his old home in Italy and on his return to Stockton established the Delmonico restaurant on North California Street. This he successfully conducted for about eight years and then sold, entering the wholesale liquor business in partnership with William Armanno, at 201 South California Street, as Garibotti & Company. Later Mr. Garibotti withdrew from the firm and turned his attention to the buying and selling of real estate, in which connection his efforts were also rewarded with a substantial measure of success, but he is now living retired, although he is serving on the advisory board of the Stockton branch of the Bank of Italy.

Mr. Garibotti has been married twice. His first wife, Miss Mary Sanguinetti, a native of Italy, passed away in 1916, leaving three children: Velora, Merwin and Bernice. His second union was with Miss Theresa Francisconi, who was also born in Italy. Mr. Garibotti is a charter member of the Ancient Order of Druids, which was organized in Stockton a quarter of a century ago, and for the past fifteen years he has served as its treasurer. He was one of the founders of the Stockton Italian Club, which was organized in 1918 and is now in a very flourishing condition, having 148 members. They maintain attractive clubrooms at the corner of Main and Sutter streets and the present officers of the club are: Dr. John V. Craviotto, president; A. J. Ferrogiano, vice-president and treasurer; and George B. Garibotti, secretary and manager. Mr. Garibotti is also connected with the Foresters. He was made an American citizen in 1895 and although he still retains a deep love for his native country he maintains a still stronger attachment for the land of his adoption. He stands for all that is truly American in citizenship, upholding the interests of city, state and nation, and his cooperation can at all times be counted upon to further any movement for the general good.

ROBERT L. DARTER.—A man who has intelligently directed his efforts toward the goal of his ambitions and thereby attained success is Robert L. Darter, who was born in Scott County, Va., August 5, 1874. The only education he received was in the district schools and when he reached the age of sixteen he ran away from home and worked in the mountains of Kentucky for $6 per month; later he went to Indianapolis, Ind. In 1892 he came to California and worked at Tipton for three years; then he returned to Indianapolis but was not content, so in 1906 he again came to California and landed in Stockton with $1.20 in his pocket. His first employment was with the California Fruit Cannery Association, where he worked for twelve and one-half cents an hour and within six months he became foreman; later he was employed by the California Traction Company and by frugal living he was able to save $700 with which he bought thirty acres of raw land in the "black land" section of Colledgeville. Within seven months he brought it to such a state of development that he disposed of it at a nice profit, and with this start he settled in Stockton and entered the real estate business, dealing exclusively in the "black lands." He realized the great possibilities of that district, which had been neglected, and while he met discouragement on every side when he started his developments in that district, he was confident of success and he never relinquished his determination to do what he first had in mind, and he has demonstrated his faith in the district by what he has accomplished within the past eleven years. He has sold thousands of acres to J. W. Squier, J. F. Goodwin and other capitalists. When he first started his developments land sold for $60 per acre, which now sells for $160 per acre. To demonstrate the possibilities of the "black land" for raising of alfalfa and deciduous fruits, he took five acres, leveled the land and planted it to alfalfa and was rewarded with a fine yield. He further demonstrated with fruit and vegetables, which grow in profusion on this land. Many expert and experienced prune growers from the Santa Clara Valley have inspected the land and are loud in their praise of its producing qualities. Mr. Darter subdivided 240 acres into twenty-acre tracts, which have all been sold and settled upon. He personally owns six ranches aggregating more than 1100 acres, and has installed pumping plants on four of his ranches, and on the other two a concrete pipe system. Water is being taken from wells, none of them more than one hundred feet deep. Much credit is due Mr. Darter for the success he has won, which has been accomplished by a life of industry and integrity.

EARLE R. HAWLEY.—Realizing the excellent opportunities afforded for the improvement of the general postal service, Earle R. Hawley, the efficient and capable postmaster of Stockton, Cal., has established a closer contact to the public in order to humanize the operations of the postoffice, this being in full accord with the ideas of the Postmaster-General. For a considerable length of time before entering the army, Mr. Hawley was a member of the staff of the Stockton postoffice, both as clerk and carrier and learned the details of the business from the ground up. In the army he made a record as an executive and a leader, as well as an organizer. A native son of California, he was born in Stockton on October 4, 1887, a son of James W. and Carrie (Yost) Hawley, the former a native of Maine and the latter of Pennsylvania; his father sailed around the Horn from Boston, Mass., in 1852, to California and located in Stockton; he engaged in teaming to the Southern mines in early days; later he engaged in ranching in Stanislaus County. There were three sons in the family: Marvin L. is a rancher in the Farmington district; Earle R., of this review; and Walter, residing in Stockton.

Earle R. began his education in the grammar schools of Stockton and was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1907; he then entered the University of California and pursued a course in mining engineering; in 1909 he entered the Stockton postoffice as a clerk and carrier. He was appointed postmaster of Stockton on June 4, 1920, by President Wilson, and on July 7, 1920 he entered upon his duties.

Mr. Hawley was one of the organizers of Battery C, 1st California Field Artillery, which was organized in Stockton December 14, 1912. Mr. Hawley and one other man are the only original members of Battery C who were with that unit at the close of the World War. When the Mexican trouble broke out in the spring of 1916, Mr. Hawley was first sergeant of Battery C and was stationed at Nogales, Ariz.; after the trouble was over he was discharged from active service and the day war was declared with Germany, he enlisted for service and became first sergeant of Battery C; on October 30, 1917 he was commissioned second lieutenant and assigned to Battery F of the 143rd Field Artillery; he was promoted the next day, October 31, 1917, to the rank of first lieutenant and took command of Battery F on January 4, 1918, attached to the 40th Division and trained at Camp Kearney; he went overseas with the 40th Division during August of 1918 as first lieutenant of Battery F; he was appointed captain while in training camp at De Souge, France, on October 13, 1918, and assigned to Battery C, his old battery. The armistice was signed before the 40th Division saw active service in France and Mr. Hawley returned to California with the first contingent of that division during January of 1919, and was discharged at the Presidio in San Francisco January 26, 1919. He immediately returned to Stockton and assumed his duties in the postoffice, and the next year was appointed postmaster.

Mr. Hawley's marriage united him with Miss Olive Shannon, a native of California, and they are the parents of two sons, Volney Richard and Robert Carroll. He is a member of Karl Ross Post of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Fraternaly he belongs to the Red Men, and is a prominent member of the Chamber of Commerce.

PETER H. DENTONI.—Stockton has always been fortunate in its first-class drug stores, among which today that of the Stockton Drug Company deserves mention as in the front rank, its convenient situation, at the corner of Main and Sutter streets, having naturally made it the headquarters for thousands seeking only the best service. The junior partner, Peter H. Dentoni, was born near Genoa, Italy, on August 25, 1879, and when only five years of age accompanied his parents across the seas to America, in 1884, and then came immediately to Stockton. His father, Giovanni Dentoni, followed ranching in San Joaquin County, and so it happened that our subject attended the Stockton public schools and started his business career, delivering packages at the salary of $2 per week. He opened the store at 6:30 a. m., and worked fourteen hours a day.

Growing up, and having chosen the profession of pharmacist, he was graduated from the San Francisco College of Pharmacy in 1900, and after that first worked for Messrs. Kohler & Ghiglieri, who conducted a small drug store on the spot where he is now in business for himself. He then became an assistant to John D. Gray, who conducted the Model Drug Company at 44 East Main Street, in which concern, after a while, he bought a half interest. Selling out, in 1907, he formed a partnership with Joe M. Campodonico, and they bought the Stockton Drug Company. Two years later the partners also bought the Eagle Drug Company, which then had the site now occupied by the Sacramento-San Joaquin Bank Building, and to make way for the bank block they removed to 317 East Main Street. This business they sold, in 1917, to give their entire attention to their rapidly-growing enterprise in their present location. Mr. Dentoni is a member of the State Pharmaceutical Association and the National Retail Drug-gists' Association. He is a large stockholder in the Bank of Italy and for a number of years was part owner of the St. Catherine ranch in the Delta district, where he was associated with some of the leading farmers of the county in the growing of grain, beans and potatoes. He is a charter member of both the Stockton Italian Club and the Eagles, and he is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, Elks; the Red Men, the Woodmen of the World, and the Fraternal Brotherhood.

OLIVER H. HUNT.—A leading orchardist of the Linden section of San Joaquin County is Oliver H. Hunt, whose highly cultivated and productive French prune orchard, two miles northeast of Linden, is indicative of the thoroughness and system with which Mr. Hunt conducts his horticultural activities. He is a native of California, having been born on the Hunt farm near Jenny Lind, July 1, 1871, the second in a family of seven children born to Daniel and Sythronia (Tyler) Hunt, natives of Maine and Missouri, respectively. Daniel Hunt crossed the plains with ox teams in 1856 and settled in Calaveras County, where he engaged in mining; later he freighted from Stockton to the mines until 1869, then began farming near Jenny Lind and also conducted a butcher business. The old Hunt homestead near Jenny Lind is now owned and farmed by the youngest son, A. D. Hunt. Daniel Hunt was a prominent Mason in his locality and he passed away in May, 1898, aged seventy-one years, his wife surviving him until February 7, 1920, passing away at Milton.

Oliver H. spent the days of his boyhood and youth on his father's farm, being early inured to its duties, and his elementary education was received in the Chaparral and Douglas schools in the vicinity of his home, which was supplemented by a course in the Stockton Business College. At the age of seventeen he became associated with his father on the home ranch, and when he was twenty-one years old he assumed full charge of the home ranch, which he conducted with marked success for the next seven years; meantime he bought 160 acres adjoining, which he farmed in conjunction with the home place.

Near Jenny Lind, October 20, 1897, Mr. Hunt was married to Miss Grace Lenora Lisenbee, born near Dixon, Cal., a daughter of Charles and Eliza J. (Denton) Lisenbee, natives of Kentucky and Missouri, respectively, the former of Scotch descent. Charles Lisenbee came to California in 1872 and first settled near Dixon, Solano County, then in 1880 removed to Jenny Lind, where he farmed and where Mrs. Hunt was reared and educated. He passed away November 24, 1908, survived by his wife until June 12, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Hunt have one daughter, Olive Lenora. In 1907, Mr. Hunt disposed of his ranch near Jenny Lind and removed to Linden, where he purchased sixty acres. Here he has developed a fine French prune and peach orchard; he has a complete prune dipping plant and a fine drying yard, where prunes and peaches are dried for market; he also sells large quantities of peaches to canneries. In 1913 he installed an electric pumping plant on his ranch with over 100 inches capacity. Mr. Hunt is a charter member of the California Prune & Apricot Growers, and also belongs to the California Peach & Fig Growers Association. He has always taken much interest in the affairs of his part of the county, and has served four terms as trustee of the Linden grammar school. He is a member of Valley Lodge No. 135, F. & A. M., at Linden and of Stockton Lodge No. 5, Sciots, and with his wife and daughter belongs to Linden Chapter, O. E. S. He is a member and has been secretary of the Linden Lodge of I. O. O. F. for the past ten years, and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the N. S. G. W. in Stockton. In 1920 Mr. and Mrs. Hunt took into their family Miss Selma Lisenbee, the orphaned daughter of her brother, James Lisenbee, whom they are rearing as their own. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hunt are held in high esteem, and the kindly social qualities with which they are endowed win for them the friendship and good will of all.

CLARENCE L. DICKINSON.—A man who needs little personal introduction to the people of Central California, the heart of which is the Stockton country, is Clarence L. Dickinson, more familiarly known as "Dick," who for years on the harbor front and along commission row has been a familiar figure, and whose popularity and success are deserved. He was born in Lockeford, San Joaquin County, Cal., on March 31, 1883, a son of Everett C. and Helen (Yaple) Dickinson, the former a native of Wisconsin, the latter of Ripon, Cal.

Clarence enjoyed the advantages of the grammar school in Ripon and was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1903. He was president of his class and president of the student body, and is a member of the Gamma Eta Kappa fraternity. His first business experience was in the office of the Enterprise Planing Mill and later with the San Joaquin Lumber Company of Stockton. In 1906 he became a partner in the firm of Dickinson-Nelson Company, but in July, 1919, he sold his interest in the firm and started in business for himself as an independent broker, and began specializing in the buying, selling and handling of hay and grain, in the grain department of his business representing the George W. McNear Company of San Francisco. For some twelve years previous to establishing his own business, Mr. Dickinson had been connected with leading interests on commission row, and few of the younger merchants had wider or more valuable acquaintance among the growers of the entire country about Stockton than this able young operator. Making a specialty of handling hay, grain, and other products of the Delta and farming sections direct from the points of production to the points of consumption, and thereby realizing better profits for the growers, Mr. Dickinson established a system of his own which set a new standard in modern marketing. Being familiar through years of experience with differential freight rates, Mr. Dickinson has full knowledge of transportation, and this is used to splendid advantage when serving growers through shipments of their products. He has made a careful study of conditions of supply and demand as regards the agricultural and grain products in this part of California, and he specializes in carload lot shipments from all distributing centers to points of consumption.

In 1905 Mr. Dickinson made a visit to the vineyard district of San Bernardino County and seeing vineyards thriving in sandy soil, he became convinced that the rich soil of San Joaquin Valley would be well adapted to the growing of grapes. In company with A. B. Lamasley and Robert Ingles he purchased 160 acres of land between Ripon and Escalon and planted a vineyard. The land, which was purchased for forty-seven dollars an acre, was planted in 1918 and later was sold at a handsome profit; the same property is now held at $1,000 an acre.

Mr. Dickinson is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and was at one time a member of the board of directors, helping organize its traffic bureau. He is past president of the Anteros Club and a member of the Yosemite Club and the Golf and Country Club of Stockton; also of the Elks No. 218, and Masons. He is a loyal booster for the future of Stockton, because he believes it to be the best city in the West, and enjoys high standing in commission, business, civic and social circles.

GEORGE H. DIETZ.—A druggist whose exceptionally fine scientific training and wide, valuable experience have enabled him to render a great service to the community in which he lives and thrives is George H. Dietz, of 19 South San Joaquin Street, Stockton, the same city in which he was born on October 9, 1881, in the same house and room in which his mother was born. This house, at 205 East Lindsay Street, is still standing. Henry Dietz, the father of our subject, was a native of Germany, and he married Miss Edith Fredericks, a native of Stockton. Both are now deceased, having lived useful lives and left behind the best of records as citizens, neighbors, and friends. Three of their children have survived. George H. is the subject of our review. Florence has become the wife of Ed L. Wright; and Linda S. is well known as a music teacher in Stockton.

Henry Dietz came to America when a young man and, having crossed the great plains, passed the greater part of his days in Virginia City, where he conducted a bakery. He was there during the days of the Comstock gold mine excitement, and was a personal friend of the Mackays, the Fairs and the Huntingtons, and was himself a familiar figure in the pioneer days of Nevada. Grandfather Henry Fredericks was also a native of Germany, and crossed the plains to California in pioneer days; he became one of the early settlers of Stockton, and was there a landowner, and teamed to the Southern mines in early days. He also went to the mines in Nevada. One sixteen-horse team he sent out from Stockton loaded with freight for Nevada was never heard from. Later, Mr. Fredericks located in Virginia City and followed draying. He passed away in Stockton.

George H. Dietz pursued the usual courses in the Stockton schools, and when about thirteen started to earn his living. He entered the employ of the Holden Drug Company, one of the pioneer drug companies of California, established in Stockton far back in 1849, commencing work for a wage of only two dollars a week, and working twelve hours a day, seven days in the week. In 1906 he started in business for himself in a small way, in a store on Market Street, and later he moved to his present store at 19 South San Joaquin Street. As the inventor of the Dietz "Euca-Menth" cough drop he has become especially well known. He put them on the market in 1918, and started to make them in five-pound lots, putting them up in paper bags. Today he has a factory devoted to the manufacture of the same, and he makes 500 pounds a day, the sale having been extended all over the world. He also makes the "Keep Kool Kamfor Cream," which has proven very popular. He has the best prescription trade in Stockton, being endorsed by eighteen of the leading doctors of this city. This record of success is all the more interesting because Mr. Dietz is a self-made man, who has risen to his present position unaided and through his own industrious, honest efforts.

On March 7, 1915, at Stockton, Mr. Dietz was married to Miss Lillian A. Blanchard, a native of Stockton, and their union has been blessed with the birth of three children. George Robert is the eldest, and then there are twin sisters, Janis Lillian and June Edith. Mr. Dietz has been a member of Stockton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., since 1904.

EUGENE N. FESSIER.—A prominent and influential citizen of Stockton is Eugene N. Fessier, who was born at Wallace in Calaveras County, California, on January 22, 1880, the son of Nicholas Fessier, a native of Alsace, and an extensive, successful farmer. He had married Virginia Dennis, of Paris, and had himself come to be a basketmaker in the French capital. In 1875 he migrated to the United States, and having reached California, he took up land in Calaveras County. It thus happened that Eugene Fessier attended the schools of both Comanche and Wallace; and growing up, at the age of eighteen followed mining in the Utica mine at Angels Camp, where he worked under W. J. Loring. In 1901, however, he located at Stockton, and there worked for the contractors, Messrs. Lewis & Barling, having already learned his trade as a contractor and carpenter under his father. Later he struck out for himself and for twelve years followed building on a large scale in Stockton. He erected over 300 cottages and some fourteen business blocks, and he also did a lot of building in Chinatown, at that time conspicuous for its many small shacks. He erected many modern brick blocks and hotels, and thus added greatly to the appearance of the city, and among them were the College Inn and the Astor Hotel. He built, besides, about fifty residences for Messrs. Dietrich & Leistner in their new subdivision; and during the war he went to El Dorado County and mined materials needed for war munitions by the Government. While there, as an accidental reward for his patriotic endeavor, he became interested in two gold mines, in company with C. M. Jackson, and the partners still have the mining property.

In 1919, Mr. Fessier returned to Stockton and took up the handling of real estate, also operating as a mining broker, opening offices at 43 South San Joaquin Street. For two years he was with the Holt Manufacturing Company and for some time he resided on West Street and helped to open up that tract of land, and he was instrumental in having the bridge erected across the canal on Stanislaus Street. He now makes his home at 1531 South California Street. About eight years ago Mr. Fessier revived the South Stockton Improvement Club and he has been president of the same ever since; and it was through the efforts of this excellent organization that the district was annexed to the city. Great improvements have been made in that district through the club: paving, for example, costing $650,000, has been put in. The club was organized in 1920 with 360 members, and in 1921 it had 1,385 members, and this number will soon be increased to 2,000. The club led the fight for a city park and children's playground to be laid out at the Stockton Mineral Baths. Mr. Fessier is also a member of the Water Consumers' League, which is trying to get the city to buy the water system from the Pacific Gas & Electric Company and then build a new municipal system. The South Stockton Improvement Club was instrumental in having a concrete bridge built across the canal on Center Street. The club is affiliated with the Fair Oaks and East End Improvement clubs. Mr. Fessier's standing in the community may be judged by the fact that he is one of thirty men appointed by the City Commission to frame a new building ordinance for Stockton; and he is chairman of the fire protection committee of that commission. It was through the efforts of the South Stockton Improvement Club that the successful Fourth of July celebration was held in Stockton in 1921, when the club had the assistance of the Knights of Pythias, the Progressive Business Men's Club and the Moose, Mr. Fessier being chairman of the finance committee.

In Calaveras County, on September 3, 1901, Mr. Fessier was married to Miss Edna A. Matatall, the daughter of J. C. Matatall, a native of Nova Scotia. Mr. Fessier belongs to Stockton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., to the Eagles, to the Charter Oak lodge, Knights of Pythias, and to the Loyal Order of Moose, as well as to the Rebekahs and to the Pythian Sisterhood, and in addition he is a member of Lodge No. 106, Woodmen of the World.

JOHN KIRK BALDWIN.—A native son of California, whose father and mother were '49ers, is John Kirk Baldwin, a retired stockman and grain farmer residing on his fine ranch located on Baldwin's Lane four and half miles east of Stockton, where he has lived and labored for a quarter of a century. He was born at Knights Landing on the Sacramento River, July 3, 1859, his parents being John and Louisa (Kirk) Baldwin, both natives of Missouri, and pioneers of '49, represented on another page in this work. John Kirk was the second eldest of their eight children, five of whom grew to maturity. He was about one year old when his parents located in San Joaquin County. He received a good education in the Douglas district school of the county and as soon as his school days were over, he assumed his share of the ranch work, and the practical experience of those first years of training has since been invaluable to him. Besides assisting his parents, when he was sixteen years old, Mr. Baldwin started out and farmed for himself. He rented a section of railroad land near Bellota, in 1875, where he raised grain and later also engaged in stockraising. Meeting with success he leased 160 acres of land adjoining so he operated 800 acres, continuing here from 1875 until 1905, when he gave up his lease, though the railroad company begged him to remain. Meanwhile he had purchased 160 acres in Calaveras County, which he kept for twenty years and then sold it at a profit. He had also purchased ten acres of the old Cochrane place seven miles west of Stockton, which he owned for fourteen years and sold at a profit. In 1903 he had purchased twenty acres of raw land and in 1905 he quit grain raising on a large scale to locate on this ranch in order to improve it to alfalfa and engage in dairying. In 1922 Mr. Baldwin sold the stock to give all of his time to raising hay and poultry.

In San Jose on November 28, 1911, Mr. Baldwin was married to Miss Myrtie L. Berry, a native of Strafford, N. H., of English descent, a daughter of Hiram D. and Letitia (Smith) Berry, born in New Hampshire. Her father was an operator in a shoe manufacturing establishment. Mrs. Baldwin before her marriage was a school teacher and Grandfather Jacob Smith was an old time school master and teacher of penmanship. Mrs. Baldwin's mother passed on when she was but eleven months old. Her brother, Adelbert C. Berry, who lives on a ranch on the Durham Ferry Road near Lathrop, came to California, on his way to the Klondike, in 1898. His sister Myrtie joined him in Stockton on May 13, 1906, where she met Mr. Baldwin. She has been a member of the Concord, N. H., Lodge of Rebekahs since 1897. Mr. Baldwin's business career has been marked with sterling success and in a county where he has so long made his home he has gained for himself an honorable name.

JOHN H. FAGG.—A man who has demonstrated his executive ability in many positions is John H. Fagg, the district manager of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company of Stockton, whose jurisdiction includes all of San Joaquin County and parts of adjoining counties, extending from Jackson to Tracy, Byron, Brentwood and the Delta section and as far north as Galt. He was born in St. Paul, Minn., December 31, 1883, and he was three years old when his parents arrived in California. He was educated in the public schools of Sacramento and Placer counties; later he took an engineering course in the Polytechnic school of San Francisco. His electrical career started in 1905 when he began working for the Central California Electric Company at Auburn, Cal. Starting at the bottom he worked his way up step by step to his present important position. After a short time he was transferred to Alta, Placer County, and became foreman; later was sent to Sacramento as division foreman and later construction foreman at Sacramento. In 1906 the company's name was changed to the California Gas & Electric Company; then in 1909 it was merged with the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. In 1914 he came to Stockton and was put in charge of the operation and maintenance department; later he became assistant manager of the San Joaquin district, in charge of the electrical department. On December 1, 1920, upon the resignation of J. W. Hall, Mr. Fagg assumed charge of all the activities of the big corporation in the San Joaquin district. Always courteous and affable, Mr. Fagg makes friends wherever he is.

Mr. Fagg's marriage occurred in 1914 and united him with Miss Marie C. Harney, a native of Lodi, Cal., her parents being pioneers of the Golden State. They are the parents of two sons, James B. and John H. He is a charter member of the Lions Club of Stockton and of Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. and A. M.

JOHN FERGUSON.—A very interesting pioneer of San Joaquin County who was highly esteemed by his generation and whose memory will always be honored by all who know of his good works, is the late John Ferguson, who was a native of Belfast, Ireland, and came out to America in 1833 as a young man, settling in Pennsylvania. He was a tailor by trade and established a tailoring business at Mauch Chunk, Pa., from which place he set out in 1851 for California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, leaving his family back in Pennsylvania. He proceeded to the Southern mines and mined on Woods Creek, and became interested in placer mining at Chinese Camp and Jimtown for three years. Returning East to his family, he came back to Stockton in 1865 and then established a tailoring business, which he conducted until the time of his death in 1896, at eighty-two years of age, well known among the pioneers and gold miners of the early days of California. He had numerous friends and was highly respected.

Mr. Ferguson's first marriage occurred in Belfast, Ireland, and he and his wife came to Pennsylvania with their children in 1833. He had learned his trade, that of a tailor, in Belfast, and was a very thorough workman. He was a leading tailor in Stockton, and many of the leading business and professional men were his customers. Mrs. Eliza Ferguson died in Pennsylvania and left three children: William Ferguson was born in Belfast, Ireland, and was married in Canada to Mary Martha Wainwright, born in England. He came to California in 1878, later removing to the state of Washington, where he died in 1918. Six of his children are still surviving. John died at Orangeville, Canada, where for many years he was engaged in the tailoring business. He also left a large family. Elizabeth became Mrs. William Carson of Buffalo, N. Y., and she is still living. She had three children. John Ferguson married his second wife in Stockton, but no children were born to their union.

JAMES J. HOOPER.—For nearly thirty years connected with the transportation field of Stockton, James J. Hooper has seen this thriving city grow from a population of 14,000 to its present size, contributing his full share to the activity that has made this progress possible. Mr. Hooper is a native son of California, born at Sierra City, Sierra County, March 9, 1870, the son of Edward and Elizabeth (Jenkins) Hooper, natives of England and both now deceased. Edward Hooper came from his native land to California via the Isthmus of Panama in the early '60s, and for a number of years mined in Sierra County.

In 1875, when James J. was five years old, the family returned to England, settling at St. Austell, Cornwall, and here he was reared and educated, in that beautiful corner of Old England. At the age of sixteen he started to work in the electric light plant at St. Austell, serving four years as an apprentice and thoroughly learning the business. In the fall of 1890 he returned to the United States and for a time worked in the mines of Amador County. Coming to San Joaquin he secured employment on a fruit ranch on Rough and Ready Island, owned by Matteson and Williamson, and in July, 1892, he entered the employ of the Stockton Electric Company, the transportation system just then being changed from horse-drawn cars to electricity. He has been with the company ever since, and has seen the evolution from a few small horse cars to a modern transportation system that has had a great part in the development of Stockton and the outlying suburban district. Mr. Hooper started in as a helper in the electrical shop, later becoming its superintendent, and in 1904 he became the superintendent of the transportation department. In 1915, when the Central California Traction Line and the Stockton Electric Railroad were consolidated he became superintendent of the new concern, a position he is especially well qualified, both by training and experience, to fill.

In 1890, Mr. Hooper was married to Miss Mary G. Perry, a native of England, and they have three children: Edna H.; Edward J. married Lorina Tucker and they have a son, Vernon; Winifred is the wife of Joseph Clark and they have two daughters, Elizabeth and Virginia. The family are Presbyterians in their religious faith. In fraternal circles Mr. Hooper is a member of the Odd Fellows, having joined Truth Lodge in 1893. He has been a member of the Rotary Club since 1915.

HUMPHREYS & MATTHEWS.—What remarkable advancements have been made in the art of advertising in America is well illustrated in the accomplishments of Messrs. Humphreys & Matthews, whose headquarters are in the Mail Building on South Sutter Street, Stockton. The firm consists of Charles W. Humphreys and David S. Matthews, and together they do a general advertising business, preparing copy for local advertisements in booklets, circulars, etc., and placing advertising in Eastern publications and in papers in the Hawaiian Islands. They also do a general fire insurance business.

David S. Matthews, the junior member of this thoroughly wide-awake firm, was born at Stockton on July 13, 1883, and in that city attended the public schools, graduating from the high school in 1903. In that same year, he entered the newspaper field, starting with the Stockton Mail; and for several years he was with the Stockton Record, first in the news room, and later as advertising manager. He also spent one year in Nevada in newspaper work. Then he was advertising manager of the Sacramento-San Joaquin Bank at Stockton, and in each of these positions he made his mark as a man thoroughly understanding the field of advertising.

In March, 1919, with Charles W. Humphreys as a partner, Mr. Matthews started the advertising firm of Humphreys & Matthews, with offices in the Yosemite Building. In 1920 these offices were transferred to the Mail Building. Mr. Matthews was president of the Pacific Coast Advertising Clubs Association in 1919, and it is not surprising to find that the firm he so ably represents is looked to by many of the leading houses of San Joaquin County and even other parts of California needing advertising for the most helpful advice and the most effective service generally.

Mr. Matthews is a member of the Anteros Club, the Stockton Golf and Country Club, the Stockton Rotary Club, and the Stockton Advertising Club; he is a Scottish Rite Mason, a Shriner, and an Elk.

At Modesto, in 1920, Mr. Matthews married Mrs. Lila Mae Ford, and they are the proud parents of two children: Verna Mae Ford Matthews and Ellen Adele Matthews.

Charles W. Humphreys was born in Russell County, Va., on May 17, 1883, and came to California when he was seventeen years of age. He settled at Stockton, and there finished his education at the Stockton Business College. Then he became book-keeper for M. P. Henderson & Son, and he was with the California Moline Plow Company, with the Ruhl-Goodell Company, and then with Messrs. Hansel & Ortman. Later, he was fortunate in adding to his experience that of a public accountant. As has already been stated, he finally formed the partnership with David S. Matthews which has proven not only such a success for themselves, but so advantageous to the public at large, to whom they give the most approved service. His practical experience as an accountant made his connection as a member of the firm of inestimable value. Mr. Humphreys has complete charge of the financial end of the business. In March, 1919, Mr. Humphreys contributed his own extensive experience and knowledge of advertising to the new business venture; he also is a member of the Stockton Advertising Club.

At Stockton, in 1904, occurred the marriage of Mr. Humphreys to May A. Woodbridge, a native of California, and they have two children, Ward Cook Humphreys and Miss Katherine Humphreys. Mr. Humphreys belongs to Lodge No. 218 of the Elks, and is a Scottish Rite Mason; belongs to the Sciots, and Charity Lodge No. 6 of Odd Fellows, in which he is a past noble grand.

MRS. SOPHIA BOLLIGER.—An esteemed resident of San Joaquin County since 1861, Mrs. Sophia Bolliger, widow of the late Samuel Bolliger, has borne her full share of the duties and responsibilities that were the lot of successful Californians from the early days to the present. Her home is on an excellent farm in the vicinity to which she came as a bride in 1861, located eight miles east of Stockton on the Copperopolis Road. Its present fine appearance, however, is in marked contrast to the appearance which it presented when it came into her possession. Great changes, too, have occurred throughout the county during her residence here, and she has seen its wild lands reclaimed for farming purposes, while towns and villages have sprung up and all the comforts of an advanced civilization have been introduced. With the onward march of progress she has kept apace, as is evidenced by her fine ranch. She was born in Lichtenberg, Bavaria, Germany, in 1839 and in that country she was reared and educated. In young womanhood she came to America and while residing in New York City in 1859 she met her future husband, Samuel Bolliger, and in 1861 the young people were married, following the return of Mr. Bolliger from a visit to his home in Switzerland.

Samuel Bolliger was born in Kettinger, Canton Aargau, in 1820, and was reared to manhood years in his birthplace. In 1837, at the age of seventeen years, he first set foot on American soil, visiting the larger places of interest. The breaking out of the Mexican war was followed by his enlistment in the U. S. Army, and at the close of hostilities he came with the troops overland to California and received his honorable discharge. He arrived in Stockton in 1848, early in the mining history of the state, and he may be classed among the first who mined for the yellow metal in Tuolumne and Calaveras counties. He also followed teaming and freighting and in the early fifties purchased a ranch on the Copperopolis Road, ten miles from Stockton, which he improved and cultivated for twenty years. In the meantime, in 1861, he had made a visit to his old home in Switzerland, and upon his return to the United States he was married in New York City to Miss Sophia Huebsch, whence he returned with his bride via the Isthmus of Panama to this ranch. When he disposed of this property in 1874 it was his intention to make another visit to his boyhood home, but instead, after remaining in Stockton for a short time, he purchased a ranch eight miles from this city, also on the Copperopolis Road, upon which he spent the remainder of his life.

Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Bolliger: John M. married Cora Winters and they reside in Stockton and have two children—Leland W. and Mrs. Francis Dees; Sophia M. is the wife of Albert

Samuel Bolliger

E. Mapes, a successful rancher near the old home, and they have three sons—Clarence Wells, Carol Bolliger and Albert Eugene; Nanette is a registered trained nurse and resides in Sacramento; Elizabeth M. married David Young, a prominent stock and grain farmer of Bellota and Farmington; Rudolph A. passed away at the age of twenty-three years; Lydia B. is the wife of J. Malcolm Young, a prominent farmer operating the Bolliger farm as well as his own ranch at Farmington, and their three sons are named Malcolm S., Francis B. and Lester E.; Esther A. married Charles Osborn, a successful rancher residing near Waterloo and they have two children—La Verne and Charles; Wilhelmina, the youngest born, passed away at the age of four years.

Mr. Bolliger was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labors, for his life was cut short by his demise March 6, 1883. One of the early frontiersmen, a Mexican war veteran, and an Argonaut and pioneer of 1848, he had given of his best years and efforts to develop the great commonwealth in which he had such great faith and pride. Since the death of this estimable pioneer his widow continues to reside on the homestead, surrounded by her children who shower on her their love and devotion. She is still active in the management of her business, is well read and keeps abreast of the times and takes a keen interest in civic and social affairs. She is an active member of the Woman's Auxiliary of the California Pioneer Society, of which she is now a senior member.

RONALD B. HALEY.—For the past thirty-five years Ronald B. Haley has been identified with industrial interests of Stockton, and as president of the Peerless Milling Company he is controlling one of the largest productive industries of the city. A native of Canada, he was born on Prince Edward Island, March 7, 1867, and in December, 1886, when nineteen years of age, he arrived in Stockton. Entering the employ of the Crown Flouring Mill Company, he continued with that firm for twenty-four years, gaining a comprehensive knowledge of the business, and during the last year of that period was connected with the feed department. In May, 1911, he became a partner of Frank A. Guernsey, who was then operating the Peerless Milling Company's plant, which had been built originally for a blending mill in which the farmers could blend their grain. The venture did not prove a success and Mr. Guernsey converted it into a feed mill, later withdrawing from the firm, and subsequently Mr. Haley had several business associates, his present partner being Ralph C. Jeanelle, who acts as secretary of the company, while he is filling the office of president. Under his capable management the business has enjoyed an extremely rapid growth, the present output being 700 tons of feed monthly, while it originally amounted to but one ton per day. They cater to both the wholesale and retail trades, the former being taken care of by traveling salesmen, whose territory extends within a radius of 250 miles from Stockton. In their retail operations they deal direct with the farmers and owing to the superior quality of their output and their reliability in all commercial transactions the business has grown to one of large proportions. They manufacture the Laymore, Growmore and Raisemore brands of poultry feed, the last named being prepared especially for baby chicks, while their stock foods are known as the Morepork and Moremilk, the former being for hogs and the latter for cows.

Mr. Haley was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Sutter, a native of Wisconsin, and a distant relative of General Sutter. Mr. Haley has never been unmindful of the duties of citizenship and has served as a member of the police and fire commission under Mayor George Hudson, rendering valuable service to his city in that connection. He is a member of the Young Men's Institute and is also identified with the Stockton Golf and Country Club, the Elks, and the Foresters of America. His business career has been marked by continuous advancement and a large industrial enterprise stands as a monument to his progressive spirit and administrative powers.

LAWRENCE F. JENSEN.—A popular merchant who has been unusually successful and has thereby evidenced the possession of exceptional talent for the conducting of one of the most important lines of commercial endeavor, is Lawrence F. Jensen, the experienced and wide-awake grocer of 16-18 West Elm Street, Lodi. He was born in Schleswig-Holstein on October 12, 1877, and when fifteen years of age came to America. He reached Stockton a poor boy, but he obtained work in the grocery store of Thomas F. Kuntzen on East Weber Avenue, where he was offered at first four dollars per month and his board. By strict economy, he saved $150, and then he entered business for himself, taking in C. A. Ziemer as a partner. Later, this partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Jensen went to Oakland, where he remained for two years.

In 1908, Mr. Jensen located in Lodi, and here he established a small store on West Pine Street, with a capital of only $250, and a horse and wagon, and he sold Schillings' goods in the country districts. As his business grew, he moved to his present location, and ever since coming here, he has been very successful. He has built up the largest cash business in Lodi, and his crockery department occupies a store by itself, and contains one of the largest and most complete stocks in the county. Plans are also being made to increase the capacity of the establishment by an addition of fifty feet.

At Lodi, in 1899, Mr. Jensen married Miss Emma Gimbel, who was born three miles east of Lodi, on the ranch of her father, Henry Gimbel, a well-known early settler of San Joaquin County, and an extensive grain-grower. The family attend the German Lutheran Church, and Mr. Jensen is a member of the Knights of Pythias of Lodi. He has always contributed to forward any good movement designed to benefit the community, and during the war he was active in Liberty Loan work, being first, last and all the time an American citizen not only living in, but living for, America.

ADOLPH JOHNSON.—An active factor in the upbuilding of the city of Stockton and its environs, particularly as a subdivision specialist, and having an intimate knowledge of the real estate and investment fields of Central California. Adolph Johnson is well qualified to rank as a leader in investment circles. His thorough training in the dairy business has also made him an authority in this field, especially in the selection of dairy herds, his reputation having been gained through his practical experience. Maintaining an office at 44 South San Joaquin Street, Mr. Johnson does a general real estate, investment and insurance business, paying particular attention to the subdivision of suburban home property.

A native of Iowa, Mr. Johnson was born at Emmetsburg, Iowa, June 27, 1881, and was reared on the home farm there, attending the country schools. Coming to California in 1901, he located at Fresno, where he worked for Mr. Simon Easthouse, whom he had known in the East, and who had large dairy and stock interests in Fresno County; for three years he remained here, becoming familiar with all the details of the dairy business. Ambitious to progress in the world, however, Mr. Johnson saved his money and in 1904 came to Stockton where he took a course in the Stockton Business College. Later he secured a teacher's certificate and for eight years taught school in San Joaquin County, and during this period spent in the rural districts he became interested in farming and land buying.

In 1917 Mr. Johnson entered the real estate business in Stockton and since that time he has met with unqualified success, selling many attractive home sites, improved and unimproved properties, and other fine holdings. Among his profitable transactions have been a number of dairy farms which he has built up and sold at splendid advances. One, a thirty-acre farm east of Stockton on the Linden Road, he improved and sold for $13,000. On a tract of sixty-five acres of bare land on the Calaveras River he planted twenty acres of alfalfa, installed a fine pumping plant, built a $9,000 dairy barn, stocked it with forty-five Holstein cows and sold it for $40,000 in April, 1920. This is one of the best-equipped dairy farms in the county, and has since been sold for $52,000. Mr. Johnson is a member of the Milk Producers' Association of Central California, and is considered one of the best judges of dairy cows in this part of the state, and his expert knowledge is eagerly sought by farmers who plan to establish dairies; in fact, Mr. Johnson has bought a number of dairy herds for prospective dairy farmers, who knew they could place full confidence in his judgment.

Mr. Johnson has been very active in the subdivision of city and suburban property as follows: In 1917 he put on the market City Park Terrace, surrounding Victory Park, Stockton. This consisted of 100 acres, costing $75,000, which he divided into 600 lots, all of the property being sold on easy terms and many homes have been erected there. Bungalow Park, a tract of twenty acres north of the Grunsky school, is built up with 120 homes. Lakeside Terrace property also met with quick response, sixty-eight lots being sold in less than sixty days. He has also put the following suburban property on the market: City Farms, on Cherokee Lane, forty acres divided into quarter-acre lots and sold to working men; sixty acres on the traction line on Cherokee Lane; a subdivision east of Stockton on the Linden Road divided into five and ten-acre farms; Sunny Slope Farms, 100 acres on the traction line subdivided into small farms; twenty acres on the Linden Road, called the Johnson Garden Farms. Thus Mr. Johnson has been active in attracting to this section hundreds of new settlers and adding to Stockton's reputation as a city of homes. Recognized as one of Stockton's most progressive citizens, he was one of the committee that engineered the bond issue for the building of the new city hall and municipal auditorium.

Mr. Johnson was united in marriage at Stockton

May 22, 1907, to Miss Cleva Bacon, a daughter of Bedford Bacon, who for more than forty years has been a resident of San Joaquin County. Two children have come to bless their home: Robert Bacon and Alice May. Mr. Johnson is a member of the Masons and the Stockton Ad Club.

LEVI M. TOAL.—Among the enterprising and public-spirited citizens of San Joaquin County is Levi M. Toal, who is serving as justice of the peace of O'Neal township since 1902 and who is also connected with agricultural interests, being accounted one of the active and successful business men of Stockton. He was born in Kansas in November, 1872 and was a small child of two years when he accompanied his parents to California. His father, David Toal, was born in Scotland in 1831, and in 1844 came to America and settled in the forests of Northern Wisconsin, where he remained until the early '50s when he removed to Kansas and homesteaded a tract of land near Fort Scott. David Toal served the Government at Fort Scott for two years as a blacksmith and for his services he received no remuneration. He married Miss Jane Pitman, a native of Ohio, and they were the parents of six children, three of whom now survive, Levi M., Jennie J., and Cora.

David Toal brought his family to California in search of a milder climate and located at Stockton in 1874, where he was employed with John Rock at Main and Market Streets in a blacksmith shop; later on he was employed in the Phil Davis boat yard, following his trade until 1886, when he removed to Stanislaus County and there became foreman for Dr. Tynan, owner of the Empire ranch, where he continued for two years. He then returned to San Joaquin County and farmed the Delta ranch, raising large quantities of grain for several years; in 1892 he put the first plow into the soil on newly reclaimed land in the Capt. Moss tract and the Boggs tract adjoining Stockton. Meantime, he had purchased twenty acres of land on South American Street, Stockton, where he built a residence and where his family resided while he carried on his grain farming. David Toal reached the advanced age of nearly ninety years, passing away at the family home in Stockton in December, 1920, his wife having preceded him in 1918.

Levi M. Toal was reared and educated in Stockton and from an early age was associated with his father in ranch work. In 1902 he was elected justice of the peace of O'Neal township when there were 405 registered votes and in 1922 there were 5,868, an indication of the growth and development of this locality. In connection with his official duties, Mr. Toal was in the contract business for nine years, during which time he did much of the paving of the streets of Stockton. The twenty-acre ranch purchased by his father many years ago is fast becoming very valuable as a choice residential section of South Stockton. This locality has made a remarkable growth and Mr. Toal has had much to do with its advancement. Where farming and stock raising was once carried on, now stand school buildings and residences. He is a member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., is a past grand and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge many times. Elected in 1902, he is now serving his sixth term as justice of the peace and has made a fine record.

ALBERT G. MYRAN.—Stockton has greatly benefited through the activities of its real estate operators and among those who figure conspicuously in this connection is Albert G. Myran, who is well known in business circles of the city as sales manager for the Adolph Johnson Realty Company. He was born at Ada, Minn., March 29, 1878. His father was Hon. O. H. Myran, ex-member of the state senate in Minnesota. A native of Nummedal, Norway, he migrated to northern Illinois but soon afterwards moved to Ada, Minn., where he became one of the most prominent and influential men in the Red River Valley. He was a successful agricultural implement dealer and hardware merchant, a man widely and favorably known. A very prominent Republican he was known as the Mark Hanna of the Red River Valley during the McKinley administration. He took a leading part in making Knut Nelson governor of Minnesota and later United States senator. He married Miss Maria Haugen and they are now both deceased. They had three children, of whom Albert G. is the eldest. After completing his public school course, Albert Myran graduated from Carleton College, Northfield, Minn. He enlisted for service in the Spanish-American War, joining Company B, Twelfth Minnesota Infantry, serving until he received his discharge, then entered the law department of the University of Minnesota. During his college career he served for three consecutive terms as chief clerk of the Minnesota senate but did not complete his university course, owing to his appointment as administrator of his father's estate, the father having passed away at Los Angeles, Cal., in 1905. Mr. Myran, Sr., had acquired a large amount of property, which the son sold to good advantage, and this led to his connection with the real estate business, which he has found both a congenial and profitable field for the development of his talents. He followed that business in Los Angeles for several years, afterward going to Oakland to accept a position with the Realty Syndicate Company.

In August, 1917, shortly after the United States entered the World War, Mr. Myran enlisted as a private and his previous military experience won him promotion to a clerkship at headquarters. After serving in that capacity for several months he was commissioned a lieutenant and placed in charge of the adjustment branch, personnel division, under Major-General Duval. On being furloughed to the Reserves he came to Stockton, arriving here in January, 1919. He entered the employ of the Adolph Johnson Realty Company and his efficient work led to his advancement to the position of sales manager, in which capacity he is now acting. Broad experience and close study have given him a comprehensive knowledge of the business and he has negotiated many important realty transfers, thereby greatly contributing to the success of the company which he represents.

Mr. Myran's life has never been a self-centered one and his well developed powers have been utilized in support of many worthy causes. He is president of the county advisory board, which has charge of the annual campaign to raise funds for the promotion of the Salvation Army's work. The campaign was inaugurated three years ago and has been very successful. He was active in the formation of the Service Club and was instrumental in securing a charter for Karl Ross Post of the American Legion. Shortly after the Service Club became a part of the Legion he was elected commander of the local post, which he has made one of the leading organizations of this character in the state. Through untiring efforts he greatly increased its membership, which has now reached 1,000, and no worthy ex-service man has ever come to him in vain for assistance. He was an active participant in the convention of the American Legion held at San Diego, Cal., in 1920, serving on important committees and participating in many debates. He was recently appointed departmental speaker of the Legion for this district, his appointment coming from the national headquarters at Indianapolis, Ind., and it was his duty to visit the various posts of his section for the purpose of arousing interest and enthusiasm in the measures promulgated by the organization, but not having the necessary time to devote to the position he resigned. He also served as chairman of the general convention committee for the annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, which was held at Stockton, May 9-19, 1921 and it was largely through his efforts that the meeting was such a decided success. He is also a member of the Spanish-American War Veterans' Association, and Lions Club of Stockton; and his fraternal connections are with the Knights of Pythias, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E., and Stockton Lodge, F. & A. M.

Mr. Myran was united in marriage to Miss Roberta Roberts, a native of Nebraska, and they have many sincere friends in Stockton. He is alert, energetic and progressive, and his present success has been won through industry and ability. He is an enthusiastic booster for Stockton, whose future he regards as a most promising one, and his efforts are of a most practical character, the sound judgment of an astute business man being manifest in all of his opinions concerning the best methods of developing and improving his city.

TRUMAN ALVIN STRONG.—A prosperous vineyardist and well-known citizen of San Joaquin County is Truman Alvin Strong who resides on his thirty-acre vineyard, five miles south of Lodi on Cherokee Lane. He was born in Union County, Ohio, on February 23, 1858, a son of Leighton and Lavina (Cahill) Strong, both natives of Ohio, and when our subject was six years old the family removed to Iowa County, Iowa. The father, Leighton Strong, served during the Civil War in the Ohio Volunteer Infantry and died from the effect of his wounds when Truman A. was a lad of six years. Subsequently his mother married again and lived to be seventy-five years old, spending her last days in California. There were three children in the family, Richard, Elpha and Truman A. the subject of this sketch. By her last marriage with Hiram Jones, there was one daughter, Bertha, wife of Edward Wilson of the Waterloo Road.

T. A. Strong received his education in the public schools of Iowa and then worked for wages on farms until he was twenty-two years old, when he decided to cast his lot in the West. On October 13, 1880, he arrived in Sacramento, Cal. and soon left for Stockton where he worked for wages for five years near that city. In 1885 he rented 320 acres of grain land eighteen miles from Stockton near Lone Tree; in 1888 he settled on the J. D. Peters place and there he farmed for twenty-two years. In 1907 he purchased his present ranch of thirty acres about eight and a half miles north of Stockton on Cherokee Lane. This land was a stubble field at the time of purchase and Mr. Strong has improved it with a modern residence and farm buildings and has set out sixteen acres to vineyard, eleven now in full bearing.

The marriage of Mr. Strong occurred at Stockton on November 4, 1885, and united him with Miss Bena Wagner, a native of that city and a daughter of Jacob and Lena Wagner, her father a pioneer butcher of Stockton. Mrs. Strong was educated in the schools of Stockton and is one of ten children. Mr. and Mrs. Strong are the parents of two children: Fred, who resides at Linden, married Nellie Bryson and they have one child, Ethel Jean Strong; and Wesley, who lives at Stockton, married Lorraine Wolfe. In politics Mr. Strong is a Republican. He is a member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., of Stockton, and he and his wife are members of the Rebekahs, Mrs. Strong being past noble grand of the lodge.

DOMENCINO BREGANTE.—A citizen of Stockton who has been identified with the growth and development of the city for several years is Domencino Bregante, a contractor and builder. His birthplace was Genoa, Italy and the date of his birth, April 1, 1888. At fourteen years of age he left his native land for a new world and upon his arrival in Stockton found work in a cannery, then in a fruit store. He then learned the carpenter's trade, which occupied him for a number of years; then he entered the employ of the Union Iron Works in San Francisco where he learned the machinist's trade and remained there for three years. In 1910 he removed to Stockton where he invested in a share in twenty-three acres near the city and engaged in vegetable raising; after this he was in the contracting business for one year. He then removed to Oakland and was employed in general contracting with M. E. Valenti for two and a half years. Again he took up contracting, this time in Oakland and an outstanding piece of work he did while there was the fine residence of John Rossi. He then returned to Stockton where he has since been engaged in building work, erecting many fine homes and flat buildings. The residences of Messrs. Onetto, Penatto, Machino and Roselli are evidences of his fine workmanship. Since the first of January, 1922 he has turned his attention to the erection of business blocks and up to January 1, 1923, his contracting amounted to $100,000. He erected a three-story brick block on Lafayette Street between Hunter and Center streets for Peuma Bros. at a cost of $40,000 and a three-story brick building for Delucci & Luchetti at a cost of $30,000; he also did the work of remodeling for the California Packing Corporation and the Franklin Garage.

While residing in Oakland, Mr. Bregante was united in marriage with Miss Virginia Delucci and they are the parents of three sons, Freddie, Julius and Tilio. Mr. Bregante is one of the founders of the Oakland Owl Club and served as its first president. He is numbered among the thoroughly practical and successful building contractors of the city of Stockton, and commands the uniform confidence and respect of the business community in which he makes his home. He belongs to the Master Builders of Stockton.

ARTHUR THORNTON.—A worthy and prominent citizen of San Joaquin County, who passed to his reward in 1914, was Arthur Thornton, in whose honor the enterprising town of Thornton, Cal., was named. Service for the government brought him to the Pacific Coast during the early fifties, and thus he became interested in California and it was not long before he decided to take up his permanent residence here. After working for various ranchers for a number of years, he purchased property near New Hope, San Joaquin County, in 1863, and for the balance of his life contentedly followed the peaceful and independent life of the agriculturist. He was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, May 19, 1838, a son of William and Mary (Kennedy) Thornton, both natives of Scotland, who came to America in 1852 and settled in Iowa. The mother passed away in Kansas and the father was buried on the plains in 1854.

Arthur Thornton was a lad of fourteen when his parents came to the United States. Although he had received a fair education in the schools of Ayrshire, he also attended school for a couple of years in Iowa, during this time also working on his father's farm as much as his school duties would permit. The spirit of adventure took him to Santa Fe, N. M., about this time, and there he joined the government service as a civilian under Colonel Steptow. The winter of 1854-1855 was spent in Salt Lake City, and in the spring, May 5, 1855, the company took up the march for California. Before reaching their destination, however, they were ordered to Oregon instead, and finally, on July 2, reached Port Lane, on Rogue River, having in the meantime camped two nights in Surprise Valley. Considering their meager equipment, it was quite remarkable that they reached their destination as quickly and as safely as they did, with nothing but a compass to guide them. After resting a week they again took up the march, going first to Cow Creek and from there to Red Bluff, Cal., where they took a steamer for Sacramento, and from there, on a larger steamer, they were taken to Benicia. After receiving his pay, Mr. Thornton entered the employ of the Pacific Steamship Company and went to Panama on the old "Oregon", the return trip being made on the steamer "Golden Gate" to San Francisco. A short experience in the mines proved to him that he could not make a success along that line, and he soon afterward gave it up and removed to Stockton. In May, 1858, he came to New Hope, where he worked as a vaquero until 1861, and afterward followed various lines of employment for two years, when he purchased the ranch at New Hope. There he spent the remainder of his life. During his residence in the town he saw it grow from a mere hamlet, and made every effort to bring about better conditions. In 1877 New Hope was made a post-office, and for thirty years Mr. Thornton served efficiently as postmaster. For eight years he was a director of the State Hospital at Stockton, and for four years was vice-president of the board.

On January 31, 1870, at Woodbridge, Mr. Thornton was married to Miss Emma Greives, a native of Steubenville, Ohio, and their marriage resulted in the birth of six children: Mary Alvernia, Mrs. W. J. Bates; Clara B., Mrs. Lawton of Thornton; Maggie Florence, who died at the age of twenty-three; Georgia M., who died at the age of two and a half years; Jessie C., residing at Thornton; and Alice L., Mrs. William H. Koontz of Thornton. Mrs. Thornton came from old Plymouth, Mass., ancestry, one of a family of thirteen children. She came to California via the Isthmus of Panama in 1868. Three of her brothers served in the Civil War, one dying in a Southern prison; and her other two brothers came to California. Her brother Charles met an accidental death at Lodi; and the other brother, Edward, died at the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, Cal.

Mr. Thornton first acquired a quarter-section of land in the New Hope district, subsequently adding to his holdings until he had 1,000 acres in this section. In 1888 he planted small pine trees in front of his house, and also a border around the field, and today they are mammoth trees. At the time of Mr. Thornton's death, about 1,000 acres made up his estate, fourteen acres of which was set to various kinds of fruit trees and vines, and it is now one of the finest producing ranches in San Joaquin County. Orchards of from fifteen to twenty acres each are devoted to peaches, plums, apricots, almonds and pears, and twenty-five acres is in Zinfandel grapes, with six acres in alfalfa; and the orchards are outlined with a row of walnut trees. When the Western Pacific Railroad was built through his section, Mr. Thornton gave the right-of-way through his ranch free of charge and the station was named Thornton. Some years ago the post office was also changed to the name of Thornton. Fraternally, Mr. Thornton was a charter member of Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and a charter member of the Knights of Pythias Lodge of Lodi. He was a very liberal and kind-hearted man and all of his charities were given in an unostentatious manner. He was a highly esteemed citizen of the community which his energy and optimism had helped to build. He was a friend to education and progress, and his sojourn in San Joaquin County, and especially in his home district, tended to the widening of its prosperity and the developing of its opportunities. He loved truth and justice, and represented a high type of our American manhood.

MRS. CLARA B. LAWTON.—An honored resident of Thornton, San Joaquin County, where she was born and reared, is Mrs. Clara B. Lawton, a daughter of that old and honored pioneer, Arthur Thornton, for whom the town of Thornton was named, and whose sketch also appears in this history. Clara B. Thornton attended the grammar school in the New Hope school district of the county, then was a student at the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge, and later attended Mills College in Oakland.

The first marriage of Clara B. Thornton occurred at Fairfield, Solano County, Cal., in November, 1889, and united her with Alec Thompson, a native of Virginia, who came to California in an early day and engaged in farming. He first settled at Santa Cruz, and later removed to Dixon, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson were the parents of two children: Emma Pauline, Mrs. Al T. Longton, of Los Angeles; and Henry Arthur.

Henry Arthur Thompson was born on a ranch west of Lodi, San Joaquin County, March 13, 1892, and received his education in the schools of the county, afterwards graduating from Boone Academy, Berkeley. After reaching young manhood he was employed for four years in the contracting department of the construction of highways at Arbuckle, and later at Santa Rosa. In 1919 he came to Thornton and opened a garage, which he still operates. On February 8, 1916, he married Miss Catherine Quenell, a daughter of Nelson and Mary Quenell. He is the owner of an eleven-acre orchard in the vicinity of Thornton and is a popular citizen and a member of the Knights of Pythias of Stockton.

On June 1, 1896, in San Francisco, Mrs. Thompson was married to Robert C. Lawton, a son of Capt. M. C. and Charlotte Lawton. Mr. Lawton is a civil engineer. Mrs. Lawton is a professional nurse and was with the Southern Pacific Hospital in San Francisco for seven years. During the San Francisco fire she was in private practice, which covered a period of ten years; and she was also nursing at the asylum at Stockton for over two years. She has her interest in the fine orchard property which belonged to her father, called the old Thornton ranch.

MRS. WAKELEY J. BATES.—A prominent and representative citizen of the Thornton district of San Joaquin County is Mrs. Wakeley J. Bates, who was born and reared at Thornton. In maidenhood she was Miss Mary Alvernia Thornton, a daughter of Arthur and Emma (Greives) Thornton, pioneers of San Joaquin County, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work.

Mary Alvernia Thornton began her education in the Thornton grammar school; then after a course at Mills Seminary, Oakland, she attended the San Joaquin College at Woodbridge. On February 7, 1893, at the old Thornton home, occurred her first marriage, which united her with Harry W. Awre, a native of England and a son of Henry and Elizabeth Awre. On June 30, 1906, in Sacramento, occurred her second marriage, which united Mrs. Awre with Wakeley J. Bates, a native of Stockton, Cal. Mr. Bates was reared and educated in Stockton until he was eighteen years old, when he began working in the planing mills. For many years he was with Thomas & Buell in their planing mill, until 1912, when he and his wife removed to Thornton, where they have since continuously resided. Mrs. Bates received twenty acres of land as a gift from her father previous to his death, which is now her home place. Ten acres of this place is a bearing vineyard, and the other ten acres is devoted to wheat-raising. Mr. and Mrs. Bates are the parents of two sons, Richard Thornton and Arthur Thornton, the latter deceased at eleven years of age. In 1919 a fine residence of hollow tile, covered with concrete, was erected on the ranch, which is modern and complete in every detail. Mrs. Bates also owns her interest in the Thornton estate. For many years she was the postmaster of the New Hope postoffice, and she is still a trustee of the New Hope school district. She is also a member of the Thornton Farm Bureau. During the World War, Mrs. Bates was the treasurer of the local chapter of the American Red Cross.

CARL OSCAR JOHNSON.—A native of Sweden, born at Stockholm, December 25, 1865, Carl Oscar Johnson attended the public school in his native city until he was twelve years old. Being obliged to make his own living, he then obtained work in an office, but soon after went into the Swedish navy, where he served three years as an apprentice. Then he entered the Merchant Marine and when twenty-one obtained a mate's certificate. In 1887 he came to New York and thereafter sailed on the Eastern Coast, obtaining a steamship master's certificate in 1893, when he came to the Pacific Coast and followed the coasting trade. In 1898 he went to the Klondyke and spent two years mining and prospecting in Alaska. Returning to San Francisco, he followed coasting until 1905, when he removed to Lodi and located on his present ranch, purchasing ten acres, which he set out to Tokay grapes. Here he has since been carrying on a successful vineyard on a small scale. In politics Mr. Johnson is a Republican. He manifests much interest in the affairs of his county and state, and in all respects has been a good citizen.

STEPHEN E. BRENNAN.—For his entire life, with the exception of five years spent in San Francisco, Stephen E. Brennan has lived in San Joaquin County and has been identified with the best interests of his locality, being an able and successful business man and a citizen of eminent public spirit. Successful in material affairs, he has not neglected the other aspects of life, and with his wife is an especial friend of public education, Mrs. Brennan being particularly active in educational affairs of her district. He was born on his father's farm near Atlanta, Cal., in the Van Allen district of San Joaquin County, November 25, 1876, the youngest son of Patrick and Bridget (Kelly) Brennan, both natives of Ireland. Patrick Brennan was born in 1829, and when twenty-three years old came to America and located at New London, Conn. His California residence dates from 1857, when he located in Stockton, where he remained until 1862, when he bought 320 acres eighteen miles southeast of Stockton, where he farmed until his death on October 10, 1879. He was survived by his widow and nine children, five of whom are living. The mother passed away on May 29, 1912, a woman of capability, and her demise caused much regret among the residents of her locality. Stephen E. Brennan was reared on the homestead near Atlanta and received a good education in the Van Allen district school, and with the exception of five years spent in San Francisco, from 1905 to 1910, he has continuously resided in San Joaquin County, where his citizenship has counted much in the way of progress and advancement. After the death of his mother, the estate was divided, Mr. Brennan receiving his portion of the home place, and the following ten years were spent in the development of this ranch into a model alfalfa and fruit ranch, one of the best in the county.

In 1905, Mr. Brennan was united in marriage with Miss Goldie M. Bacon, the adopted daughter of Benjamin Bacon. Mrs. Brennan was left an orphan when only four years of age and soon after was taken into the Bacon home. Benjamin Bacon was a man of fine character and carried on an extensive grain and stock business near Colledgeville. He was a native of New York and crossed the plains in 1854 to California, where he engaged in the stock business in San Joaquin County; he owned large tracts of land and continued active until 1887, when he retired and moved to French Camp, where he built a fine residence and resided there until his death, about twenty years ago. Mrs. Brennan was born in Modesto, but was reared and educated in San Joaquin County, and at the age of eighteen began teaching school, having graduated from the Stockton Normal School at that age. After her marriage, she continued to teach school, and for eleven years was principal of the Van Allen school and was instrumental in building up that efficient institution. Mrs. Brennan holds a life certificate granted to her in recognition of her capable work along educational lines. Mr. and Mrs. Brennan are the parents of two children: Harold and Marjorie. Mrs. Brennan is an active member of the executive committee of the San Joaquin County Teachers' Association. About two years ago the Community Welfare League of Escalon conceived the idea of community moving pictures and Mr. and Mrs. Brennan were most active in the organization and work, and Mrs. Brennan was selected as a member of a board of twelve directors.

CHARLES O. BECHTOLD.—Prominent among the experienced and successful vineyardists who have done much to help place San Joaquin County in the front rank with respect to agriculture, is undoubtedly Charles O. Bechtold, who was born at Milltown, S. D., on December 12, 1895, the son of George and Louise (Reimche) Bechtold, the former a native of Russia, from which country he came to South Dakota when he was twelve years old, arriving there in the pioneer days when only those with heroic courage and manhood could hope to survive and succeed. He homesteaded 160 acres of government land in South Dakota, but when Charles was six months old removed with his family to North Dakota and settled at Harvey, in Wells County. There he purchased a half section of land and engaged in grain raising. Little by little he added to his original holding, until he came to possess two sections of land. Charles attended the common school at Harvey. When he was thirteen years old, he accompanied his parents to California, and to Woodbridge in 1908, where his father had bought twenty-four acres of vineyard. This vineyard was set out to Black Prince and Tokay grapes, and was well irrigated. George Bechtold died at Woodbridge, highly respected by all who knew him, the father of a family of nine children: Louise, Mrs. Bich; George, of Woodbridge; Charles; Emma, Mrs. Dahl; Martha, Mrs. Northrop, of Lodi; and Bertha, Ruby, Albert and Mabel. The last four are living at home with their mother.

Charles O. Bechtold finished his schooling in Woodbridge, after which he followed farming. On September 19, 1917, he entered the United States service in the World War, as a member of Company L., 363rd Infantry, 91st Division, and for six months trained at Camp Lewis. He was then transferred to the first replacement division of engineers, to be sent to France; but instead they were sent to Washington, D. C., and he there matriculated in the engineering school, at the American University. He was then sent to Camp Humphrey, Va., and was promoted to first sergeant of Company E, 1st Regiment of Replacement Engineers. He remained there for the duration of the war. On February 11, 1919, he was honorably discharged from the service at the Presidio in San Francisco as 1st sergeant, after which he returned to his home in Woodbridge. He is a member of Lodi Post No. 22, American Legion, and his wife belongs to the Auxiliary of the American Legion. After returning from the war he began viticulture, purchasing ten acres of full-bearing vineyard of the Bechtold ranch from his mother, and also leases another vineyard.

At Stockton, on November 22, 1920, Mr. Bechtold was married to Miss Emeline Campodonico, a native of Hornitas, in Mariposa County, and the daughter of E. and Pasquala (Valverde) Campodonico, both born at Hornitas. Her father, who is still living, was a miner, and she attended school at Hornitas, Fresno, Lodi and Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Bechtold have one daughter, Louise Marie.

Chas. O. Bechtold

CHARLES AUGUSTINE GRISWOLD.—Among the residents of the farming community of Lodi, conspicuous for their worth and ability, is Charles Augustine Griswold, a retired vinedyardist and a veteran of the Civil War. Before coming to California twenty years ago, he was actively connected with the progress and development in his native state of Pennsylvania and also in Nebraska. He was born near Montrose, Susquehanna County, Pa., on August 5, 1840, a son of James F. and Lydia (Franklin) Griswold, natives of New York. Grandfather Griswold served in the war of 1812. Lydia Franklin's mother was a Lee, an aunt of Robt. E. Lee, and her grandfather Lee served in the Revolutionary War. She is also a direct descendant of Daniel Franklin, a brother of Benjamin Franklin. Mr. Griswold's parents died in Pennsylvania. He was the seventh child in a family of ten children and had a brother, King E. Griswold, who also served in the Civil War.

Charles A. Griswold received his education in the Elk Lake district school, Susquehanna County, Pa., and he not only helped his father on the home place, but worked on various farms throughout the county. On October 21, 1861, he enlisted in Company E, 9th Pennsylvania Cavalry, his brigade commander being General Kirkpatrick. He served under Generals McClellan and Sherman and was with General Sherman on his famous march through Georgia and to the sea and took part in all the engagements. After being mustered out December 24, 1864, he returned to his native county in January, 1865, and followed his trade of carpenter, extending his territory to Bradford County as well. In 1877 he located in Franklin County, Nebr., and was engaged for many years in building operations. He erected the Franklin Academy, a number of store buildings, a grist mill, a woolen mill and many school houses; he also helped build the court house at Bloomington, Nebr. While residing in Franklin County, he filed on a quarter section of land, which he farmed to grain, cattle and hogs with considerable success. When a railroad was built within a mile of his homestead and Upland, Nebr., sprang into being he established a general store there and for fourteen years served the community as postmaster and justice of the peace.

Removing to California in 1903, Mr. Griswold located in Stockton and engaged in building operations; however, his stay in Stockton only occupied one year and in 1904 he settled in Lodi where he purchased a fifteen-acre vineyard set to four year old vines for which he paid $3,700; his first year's crop was sold for $800 cash. The vineyard is located one mile west of Lodi and is still in his possession, but is now leased. Some time ago he bought an acre and a half on South School Street where he erected a commodious and modern residence, but has sold all but two lots of this tract. Mr. Griswold did some building after settling in Lodi; he erected the Morehead residence on West Elm Street and the O. Poole residence east of Lodi. He has now retired from active carpenter work, but is never so happy as when he has a saw and hammer in his hand.

The marriage of Mr. Griswold occurred in Bradford County, Pa., May 1, 1867, and united him with Miss Martha M. Arnout, a native of Bradford County, Pa., a daughter of Joshua Arnout and Martha C. Chilson Arnout, natives of Orange County, N. Y., who spent their last days in Bradford County, Pa. Mrs. Griswold is the seventh born in a family of nine children and had two brothers, Theo. and George, who served in a New York Regiment in the Civil War; the latter died in service and the former soon after the war. Mr. and Mrs. Griswold are the parents of three daughters: Cora married Oselus Poole, a rancher living east of Lodi and they have six children; Grace is Mrs. S. D. Nelson and they have four children; Mary is Mrs. Charles Waite and they have five children and reside in Sacramento. There are fifteen grandchildren and eighteen great-grandchildren in the family. In politics, Mr. Griswold is a stalwart Republican and has been an ardent supporter of the principles of that party wherever he has resided. At the age of twenty-five he joined the Masonic order in Bradford County, Pa., and is now a member of Lodi Lodge No. 256 F. & A. M. and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star. He joined the G. A. R. in Upland, Neb. and is now a member of the Hartford Post, G. A. R. of Lodi. He is a past commander and now is chaplain. He and his wife are members of the Congregational Church of Lodi, of which he is a deacon. Mrs. Griswold is an active member of the W. R. C. In 1917 they celebrated their golden wedding. In the various relations of life he has manifested those traits of character which ever command respect, and his circle of friends is therefore an extensive one.

JOHN E. BUDD.—In the selection of their life-work, many of the men who owe their educational training to the splendid institutions of California have chosen the profession of law, as offering exceptional advantages to those possessing the mental equipment of keen judgment, logical powers of reasoning, and readiness in repartee. Among those identified with the profession for many years, and who achieved success in managing the affairs of a large clientele, mention belongs to the late John E. Budd, member of a pioneer family of California and son of Hon. Joseph H. Budd, whose family history appears on another page of this volume. John E. Budd was born in the city of Janesville, Wis., October 18, 1853, being the second son of Hon. Joseph H. and Lucinda (Ash) Budd, descendants of ancestors honored in their several walks of life.

Primarily educated in the public schools of his native city, John E. Budd came to California during early manhood and afterward entered the University of California at Berkeley, graduating from that institution in 1874. He took up the study of law in his father's office, and during October, 1876, was admitted to the bar before the Supreme Court at Sacramento. Shortly afterward he became associated in practice with his father at Stockton, where he gained his first practical experience in the profession, continuing so associated for a number of years. During the administration of Grover Cleveland, in 1890, he was appointed receiver of the United States Land Office with headquarters at Stockton, and filled the position with recognized efficiency until resigning upon a change in the administration. After having been associated for a time with his brother, James H. Budd, in a general law practice, during 1895 Mr. Budd formed a partnership with E. R. Thompson, and the firm of Budd & Thompson became well known throughout Central California, both members being recognized as attorneys of ability and thorough acquaintance with the principles of jurisprudence.

Stanch in his allegiance to the Democratic party, Mr. Budd was a prominent figure in local and state politics up to the year 1903, but from that time on he relinquished his association with public affairs in order to devote himself exclusively to the law. For ten years or more he acted as a regent of the State University, and during the entire period he maintained a warm interest in the welfare of his alma mater, whose contribution to the educational uplift of the state he recognized as indispensable and permanent. As a citizen he gave constant support to enterprises furthering the development of Stockton, giving liberally of his time and means to this end.

By his marriage Mr. Budd became identified with a pioneer family of California. Mrs. Budd, whom he married in 1887, was Miss Mary Haste, of Berkeley, a daughter of J. H. Haste, an honored and prominent pioneer of the state and for years a public-spirited citizen of Berkeley, Cal. The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Budd is Henry B. Budd, a prominent civil engineer of Stockton, whose sketch appears in this volume. The two daughters are May, the wife of Francis Irving Hodgkins, and Lucile, Mrs. Robert Roy Stevens, both of Stockton.

PAUL C. FUNK.—An enterprising business man of Stockton who runs an auto wrecking and supply house at 420 South Center Street is Paul C. Funk, whose business is the largest of its kind in the valley; he maintains his wrecking plant at 642 South Center Street. Since the organization of the business in January, 1917, he has sold more than 2,000 used automobiles, and he owns the building, 100x150 feet, on South Center Street. He was born in Germany in 1878 and at three years of age was brought to America, and at nine years of age, his family located in Santa Cruz, Cal., where Mr. Funk received his education in the grammar school. At seventeen years of age he began to work for the Santa Cruz Gas Company and after three years was made superintendent of the plant, remaining in that position until 1909 when he was sent by the same company to Tonopah, Nev., to take charge of their plant there; he then traveled on the road in gas construction work for V. A. Britton, during which time he installed plants in Redding and Willows; then he removed to Fresno and for two years worked for the Pacific Gas & Electric Company and was next sent to San Francisco for the same company in the capacity of assistant superintendent of distribution, remaining there for two years; then he was returned to Fresno as superintendent of manufacture by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, where he remained until he located in Stockton in 1917. E. C. Funk and William Haffner, his brother-in-law, are associated with Paul C. Funk in the business and besides buying and selling automobiles, tractors and trucks are agents for the Ohio 6,000-mile tire made in the Mansfield, Ohio, plant, one of the largest factories in the country.

The marriage of Mr. Funk united him with Miss Frances Marshall, a native of Iowa; and one child, Willa, was born in San Francisco. Mr. Funk is just in the prime of his powers and years, and his usefulness in affairs and his excellence of citizenship give him a broad and bright outlook for the future as his history in the past is a record of successful achievement.

N. B. GOULD, M. D.—During the years which mark the period of Dr. N. B. Gould's professional career he has met with gratifying success, and throughout the time of his residence in Ripon he has won the good will and patronage of many of the leading citizens and families of the place. He is a great student and endeavors to keep abreast of the times in everything relating to discoveries in medical science. He was born at Old Monterey, Cal., May 8, 1880, a son of Maj. George S. and Augusta (Churchill) Gould. Major Gould was born near Augusta, Maine, in 1831, his parents being farmer folk in that state, who removed to Indiana in 1840 and engaged in farming there. When nineteen years of age, George S. Gould joined a party of friends, among whom was his brother James, bound for California to seek their fortunes. The party came via Panama and in due time arrived in Hangtown, where they prospected and mined for nine years; then George S. Gould returned to his home in Indiana. About the time he arrived in Indiana the Civil War broke out and he enlisted as a volunteer in the Sixty-eighth Indiana Infantry and served throughout the entire period of the war, being discharged with the rank of major. During the war he was married to Miss Augusta Churchill, whose English ancestors were early colonizers in Massachusetts. The young people established their home in Sparta, Ind., where Mrs. Gould remained until the close of the war when her husband returned and they removed to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where Major Gould engaged in the merchandise business. Owing to the illness of one of their sons, the family home was broken up and in 1876 they came to California and soon thereafter settled in Watsonville, where Major Gould established a grain and merchandise business; he also acquired a ranch property and range land in Monterey County, whither he later removed with his family. A portion of his estate is located near Parkfield, Cal. Major and Mrs. Gould reared a family of eight children, all of whom survive with the exception of the eldest daughter. For many years he was commander of the G. A. R. post in Monterey County and for years represented the Western Meat Packers as buyer. Major and Mrs. Gould were among the founders of the Baptist Church at Parkfield, where they had resided for forty-two years of their useful lives and this venerable couple lived to celebrate their sixtieth anniversary of their wedding day. In November, 1920, Mrs. Gould passed away at the age of eighty-two, her husband surviving her until May, 1922, reaching the advanced age of ninety-one.

N. B. Gould began his education in the schools of Monterey County and in 1902 was graduated from the State Normal School at San Jose; then for two years he taught school at Gonzales and San Benito earning enough to enable him to enter the Cooper Medical College in San Francisco, and during his four years' course taught in night school in San Francisco to help defray his expenses. In 1908 he was graduated with high honors with the degree of M. D. He then spent four months as interne at the French Hospital, San Francisco, where he completed a year's work within that time. After leaving the hospital, Dr. Gould was employed as chief surgeon for the Alaskan Packers' Association and was located at Chinook, Alaska, where this company operated two large canneries, employing 1,200 men. His eight months' experience with this company was both profitable and enjoyable and one never to be forgotten. Returning to the United States in 1909 he located in Gonzales, where he practiced his profession for three years.

On January 31, 1909, at San Francisco, Dr. Gould was married to Miss Agnes Safely, a daughter of James Safely, a descendant of a prominent Scotch family and a pioneer of Napa County. Mrs. Gould is a graduate of the University of California and of Lane Hospital, San Francisco, as R. T. N., and at the time of her marriage to Dr. Gould was head of the surgical department of Mt. Zion Hospital, San Francisco. Dr. and Mrs. Gould are the parents of two children: Jeanette and Anna. In 1913 Dr. Gould left Gonzales on account of the failing health of one of his children and the family settled in Ripon. He enjoys a large and lucrative general practice and perhaps his most outstanding work is the establishment of the Ripon Hospital, and in his practice he has attained high rank, having a comprehensive knowledge of the great scientific principles which underlie his work. In his fraternal relations, Dr. Gould is identified with the Mt. Horeb Lodge, I. O. O. F., the Masons at Manteca and the B. P. O. E. No. 218, Stockton, and in politics he is a Republican. Dr. Gould devotes a limited portion of his time to his realty interests. He owns property in Monterey County, in Stockton, and two ranches near Ripon, all of which are leased.

WILLIAM R. DUFF.—Associated with the street car service of Stockton for more than thirty years, William R. Duff, now superintendent of the car barns of the Stockton Electric Railway, has aided materially in the expansion and growth of this vital factor of transportation. A native of Illinois, he was born in Henry County, July 4, 1865, a son of James and Elizabeth (Leggett) Duff. The latter passed away when he was a small child and at the age of fourteen he started out for himself, working on farms, and this he continued until 1891, when he was twenty-five years old. On coming to California he settled at Stockton and entered the employ of the Stockton Street Railway Company, later the Stockton Electric Railway, as track section man, and then for four months drove a mule car. At that time there were but two lines in the city—the San Joaquin and the Main and El Dorado. After spending some time in the car shops as a repair man, Mr. Duff then took up his duties at the horse car stables, and when electrification was accomplished he was one of the first to operate the new cars, both as motorman and conductor. Again taking up repair work in the shops, he became night foreman, and his competent service gained him the promotion to the position he now occupies, that of superintendent of the car barns. When Mr. Duff started with the company there were seven mule cars, and now there are twenty-five large electric cars in operation daily, so that he has had a large part in helping modernize Stockton's transportation facilities during his long years of faithful service, and is now the company's oldest employee.

Mr. Duff's marriage which occurred in Illinois on November 12, 1890, united him with Miss Rebecca Tuttle, also a native of Illinois, whose father, John Tuttle, was a '49er, crossing the plains in an ox-team train. He later returned to his Illinois home but made three subsequent trips to visit his daughter in California. Mr. and Mrs. Duff have two sons, both of whom served their country during the World War. William James was at the Goat Island Naval Training Station and is now a pattern maker; he married Hazel Coffelt and they have a daughter, Lois Vivian. Walter Vernon is a fireman with the Southern Pacific Railroad. He was also in the U. S. Navy, first on the Independence and later on the Louisville, making a number of trips to France during the war. Mr. Duff is prominent in the ranks of the Odd Fellows, having joined Truth Lodge, No. 55, over twenty-nine years ago.

LOUIS ANDREW FREGGIARO.—A native of sunny Italy who has made good in the Golden State is Louis Andrew Freggiaro, who owns twenty acres of fine land for orchard and vineyard purposes, situated nine miles northeast of Stockton, on the Waterloo Road along the Calaveras River. He was born at Alessandria, in Piedmont, Italy, on October 15, 1880, and his parents were Augusto and Juditha (Biglieri) Freggiaro. His father, a grocer in that country, lived to be sixty-four years of age, and his mother is still alive there, at the age of seventy. Ten children were born to this worthy couple, six sons and four daughters: Giacomo; Virginia; Guisepppe; Clemento; Louis A., our subject; Guiseppina; Valentino; Louisa; Ernesta; and Amadeo.

Louis Andrew attended the excellent grammar school of his home locality, and there received a good training so that when he was seventeen years of age and ambitious to push out into the world, he was ready to do so. As fond as he was of his native country, he saw in distant California another sunny realm, and bidding goodbye to Italy, he sailed for the United States. He was not long in reaching the Pacific Coast, and he had the good fortune immediately to settle in Stockton where, for four years, he worked in gardens. He then went to San Francisco and worked for the Standard Oil Company for nine months, when he engaged in the sale of fruit and vegetables at San Mateo for two years, after which he was a chauffeur there for another two years. Returning to Italy, he married, on September 1, 1906, Miss Katherina Ottone, a native of Italy, and the daughter of Giovanni and Bianca Ottone. Her father was a farmer, and he had one other child besides her, a son Armando. Mrs. Freggiaro was also fortunate in enjoying an excellent grammar school training, and when the happy couple came back to California, she was able to be of much service to her husband.

Mr. Freggiaro worked for six years for the Holden Drug Company on their farm ten miles from Stockton, on the Jack Tone Road; and when he had rounded out that service to the entire satisfaction of his employers, and had established a reputation such as anyone might envy for both executive ability and fidelity, he rented forty acres of the Dodge Ranch, taking a four year lease on it, which he devoted to the culture of cherries, peaches and grapes. He also bought twenty acres in the same vicinity for the growing of alfalfa, and he now has six acres given to cherries, four acres to peaches, two acres where he grows only pears, and six acres mostly of grapes, with a few plum trees.

Three children gladden the home life of Mr. and Mrs. Freggiaro. Aldo is the eldest, Armenia the second, and Lena the youngest of the interesting group. The family attend the Roman Catholic Church, and Mr. Freggiaro is a member of the Giardenieri Lodge of Stockton. He has recently finished a fine new home on his attractive ranch, and there he and his family reside, about one and one-half miles to the northwest of Waterloo.

GEORGE E. ELLIS.—The story of the progress and success of George E. Ellis as a worthy citizen of Stockton, covers a period of nearly half a century, thirty-seven years of which has been spent with the Western States Gas & Electric Company and its predecessors. He was born in the city of Dublin, Ireland, on December 25, 1867, a son of John and Annie (Thompson) Ellis, both natives of Ireland, of English and Welsh parentage. His father immigrated to America and continued his journey via the Isthmus of Panama to California and arrived in Stockton during the year of 1869, expecting to work at his trade of plumber and brass finisher; however, he could not find employment, so entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for a time; later he removed to Merced and became road foreman for the same company; returning to Stockton he entered the employ of the Stockton Gas & Electric Company, and continued in their service for forty-six years, the latter years of his life being foreman of construction. He died in July, 1906, his widow surviving him.

There are nine children in the Ellis family, seven of whom are now living, of whom George E. is the eldest. He came to America with his mother and two sisters to join his father in the fall of 1875, via the Isthmus of Panama, and entering the Stockton schools, remained there until he was seventeen years of age, when he began to work for the old Stockton Gas & Electric Company, his first work being to look after the gas street lights and later the electric lights which replaced them. He gained a thorough knowledge of the business and worked up through the different departments until he is now service foreman for the company, his years of experience and intelligent application to business having made him a valuable employee in his line of work.

Mr. Ellis has been twice married and of the first union there are two children, Leora and Leonora; his second marriage united him with Miss Leora Swenson, a native of Dutch Flat, Cal., a daughter of Samuel Swenson, a pioneer merchant of that town, who also ran a pack train to the mines, later removing to San Francisco, where he was engaged in business, and later still he moved to Auburn; his wife was Priscilla Fulton, a native of New York; both have now passed away. Mrs. Ellis was educated in the schools of San Francisco and Auburn, Cal. They have two children: George E., Jr., is a graduate of Stockton high school and now manager of the Johnson Sporting Goods store, and Lucille L. attending Stockton high school. Fraternally Mr. Ellis is a member of Morning Star Lodge, F. & A. M., Stockton, and Pohono Tribe of Redmen, while Mrs. Ellis is a member of the Eastern Star and the Order of Pocahontas, in which she is a past officer. Mr. Ellis is an enthusiastic member of the Stockton Gun Club, in which he has won several medals; in 1913 he won the Pacific Coast Handicap, receiving a gold medal set with a diamond valued at $250, besides $200; he also won numerous other medals as prizes. His son is also a member of the Gun Club and has won many medals.

FRED B. SIMMS.—A busy man of affairs, whose popularity has been founded in part on his expertness in the field in which he is a leader, and partly on his genial and sympathetic temperament, is Fred B. Simms, the general superintendent of the pump and pipe line system of the Shell Oil Company of California completed in 1915, consisting of eleven plants situated about fifteen miles apart and operated as a means to deliver crude oil from the Coalinga fields of Fresno County to tidewater at Martinez, Cal., a distance of nearly 168 miles, with headquarters at the plant near Tracy. He was born in the city of Riverside, Cal., on September 20, 1885, the son of Albert G. Simms, a native of northern Kentucky, who had emigrated to southern California in 1870, where he married Miss Jennie La Rue, a native of Indiana, who had come West with her parents in the early '70s. Her father had been a pioneer of California in the early '50s, but had returned to Indiana in the '60s. During 1890 his mother, Mrs. Jennie (La Rue) Simms, passed away, and when his father left California in 1901 for New Zealand, Fred B. Simms was left to make his own way.

Barely sixteen years old, he came to San Francisco, and although a stranger he found employment in the Risdon Iron Works as an apprentice machinist, where he labored diligently, and at night attended school in order to better fit himself in his elementary education. Mr. Simms owes much of his success to the splendid opportunity for training afforded him, when in 1902 he entered the U. S. Naval Reserve as apprentice; this position added greatly to his efficiency and awakened his initiative, so that he was able, at the end of his four years' service, to take his place in the mechanical world as a trained worker. As special machinist, he went into the employ of the Southern California Edison Company in the Kern River district and was thus occupied in hydro-electric work until 1907; on the completion of this work he was next employed with the Sierra-San Francisco Power Company, on the Stanislaus River, this period covering one year. With the exception of a short period of a few months spent in Oregon, Washington and British Columbia, Mr. Simms has from 1909 to the present writing been identified with the oil industry of California, filling each position with credit both to the company and to himself. In 1912 Mr. Simms entered the employ of the General Petroleum Company as superintendent in charge of construction of pipe lines and plants, as a means of delivering crude oil from their fields of production at Midway, Kern County, to San Pedro, the refining base, an engineering feat of some moment when one takes into consideration that prior to this time there existed nothing but a trail across the ridge or route where the pipe line was built; this necessitated the survey and construction of a wagon road, for the transporting of supplies, through Bailey's ranch, a right-of-way which a few years later was taken over by the California state highway commission and used in the construction, as a part of the Ridge Route through the mountains to Los Angeles.

In 1914 the construction of the valley pipe lines by Sanderson & Porter, engineers, New York and San Francisco, was started and Mr. Simms was made superintendent of construction in the field. Without doubt this piece of engineering work eclipses all other projects which Mr. Simms had heretofore been allied with in the oil business; on completion this line with installations was acquired by the Shell Oil Company of California, who retained Mr. Simms as its general superintendent. Mr. Simms is to be commended for his undaunted spirit and diligence, for on assuming a new position, he felt that it took a bigger and better man to fill the place and consequently had prepared himself along those lines, studying advanced works in engineering and never feeling entirely satisfied with himself. In September, 1920, Mr. Simms was the recipient of a certificate of membership in the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, representing ten years of actual work in charge of construction along mechanical lines. The opportunities for the study of human nature during the years of association with the oil industry has not been neglected by Mr. Simms, as will be attested to by his popularity among the many employees at the various plants along the line; thus every position he has ever held has been made a stepping-stone toward advancement in his chosen line.

Mr. Simms' marriage united him with Miss Margaret Petersen, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Petersen of Los Angeles, Cal., and they are the parents of three children: Geraldine, Marjorie M., and Shirley Marie. Mrs. Simms has been an active participant in the affairs of the West Side Woman's Improvement Club of Tracy. In civic affairs, Mr. Simms has been a prominent figure, being elected president of the Chamber of Commerce of Tracy in 1920, during which time the membership was doubled. During the war he was at the head of the war work and attending to details in the subscription to Liberty Loans along the pipe line and at the eleven plants, going "over the top" in each case. At the present time, he is senior warden of the Masonic Lodge of Tracy. Mr. Simms holds with just regard and reverence the name of Dorward; in engineering circles this word stands for the name of David Dorward, Sr., for many years the general manager of the Risdon Iron Works, and a friend and adviser of Mr. Simms from the day he entered that plant as a young and inexperienced schoolboy; also David Dorward, Jr., has been, to a decided degree, of much help to Mr. Simms throughout his business career. During the years of 1914-1915 David Dorward, Jr., was chief engineer of construction, under whom Mr. Simms received most excellent training, and whose voice over long distance telephone was usually heard to say at the end of every conversation with Mr. Simms, "Now, Simms, don't let that job touch the ground," meaning of course to keep all things pertaining to the construction and installation moving along; and Simms never let it touch the ground.

EDWARD FRANKLIN BAILEY.—Agriculture and stock raising form the principal occupation of Edward Franklin Bailey, and the wide-awake manner in which he takes advantage of all methods and ideas tending to enhance the value of his property has had much to do with his obtaining the competence which he now enjoys. He was born on the Bailey ranch October 18, 1873, the only son of Charles Kimball and Mary E. (Belknap) Bailey, natives of Massachusetts and Missouri, respectively. Charles Kimball Bailey became prosperous and influential in his locality and his death in 1905 was a real loss to the community. Mrs. Bailey resides on the home place, having the esteem of all who know her.

Edward F. Bailey was reared on his father's ranch and learned valuable lessons in agriculture by practical experience and was always associated with his father in ranching activities. His marriage united him with Miss Grace Cox, a daughter of William Harley and Mary O. (Buchanan) Cox, both natives of Smyth County, Va. William Harley Cox was born April 25, 1845, his parents being James and Louisa (Harley) Cox, natives of Virginia and Arkansas, respectively. After the Civil War, William H. Cox came West with his cousin, William M. Cox, arriving in Lodi, October 15, 1872. His parents came to California in 1882, but only remained seven years when they returned to their home in Virginia. In 1874 the Cox family settled at Linden. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cox, of whom Mrs. Bailey is the fourth. Mr. Cox was deputy county assessor from 1883 until 1888. He has always held a position of honor in local affairs and is prominent in lodge circles; he is now postmaster at Linden.

Mr. and Mrs. Bailey reside on a ranch near Linden, and they are the parents of three children, Raymond, Evelyn and Laura. The youngest sister of our subject, Mamie Ethel Bailey, married Fred Cox, a brother of Mrs. Bailey, and they have a family of six children on a ranch near Linden. For the past fifteen years Mr. Bailey has conducted the old Bailey ranch and stock business and resides on a ranch adjoining, which was originally a portion of the home place. He conducts a contract harvesting business and he is kept busy with his own work and that of other farmers throughout the county.

JOHN GRANT MAINLAND.—A citizen well known as a grower of flowers is John Grant Mainland, who has his nursery and greenhouses on Sargent Road just west of the city limits of Lodi and his entire two acres are devoted to the growing and propagation of flowers, from which he supplies his florist business in Lodi and also supplies different florists in Stockton. His birth occurred in Kirkwall, Orkney Islands, Scotland, on October 24, 1879, and he is a son of William and Isabelle (Grant) Mainland, and the second oldest of five children. The father, William Mainland, was in the dry goods business at Kirkwall until 1888, when he removed his family to Oakland, Cal., where he is a dry goods merchant; the mother passed away at the age of seventy years in Oakland.

Coming to California in 1888, John G. Mainland received his education in the Garfield school at Oakland and at the age of sixteen took up jewelry ornamentation work in San Francisco. He became a very efficient workman and followed his trade with various firms until he established himself in business on Geary Street, San Francisco, where he continued until 1919, when he located in Lodi. His marriage occurred in 1908 at Oakland and united him with Miss Rachel Esther Dunn, a native of Rich Hill, Mo., a daughter of George and Fannie (Willbert) Dunn. Mrs. Mainland comes of Revolutionary stock, her great-great-grandfather, Gen. John Matoon, taking part in that war. His portrait was painted at the same time that Generals Washington and LaFayette were painted by the noted artist Trumbull. George Dunn was a native of Illinois and a carpenter by trade, who moved to Missouri, and there the mother passed away. After the mother's death, the father moved to Lexington, Ky., and in that state, Mrs. Mainland received her education and in 1908 came to Oakland, Cal. When Mr. Mainland removed to Lodi he purchased two acres of land on Sargent Road for nursery purposes and thereon built two greenhouses, and the entire acreage is devoted to nursery stock. Mr. and Mrs. Mainland are the parents of two children, John Grant, Jr., and Isabelle. Mr. Mainland believes in voting for the man best qualified for the duties of the office regardless of strict party lines, and is public spirited in all matters pertaining to community growth and progress.

CHARLES R. GUGGOLZ.—Prominent among the substantial business men of Lodi is undoubtedly Charles R. Guggolz, the proprietor of the New Washington Market, a thoroughly modern headquarters located on South Sacramento Street, and enjoying enviable popularity. A native Californian, proud of his association with the great Golden State, he was born in Madison, Yolo County, on December 15, 1886, a son of Charles G. and Pauline (Roos) Guggolz. The father, a pioneer of 1889, located in Lodi, and with a partner, a Mr. Clark, established the Washington Market for the sale of meat. Later on, he bought out the interest of his partner and continued the market alone. He was very successful, and became well-known in business circles. He was interested, too, in viticulture, with a partner named Bauer, and set out a vineyard of forty acres, which became a good producer. He was also popular in the civic and social circles of his day, being a member of the Odd Fellows, the Maccabees, the Sons of Herman, and the Foresters of America, in all of which he was a past officer. Both he and his good wife, now deceased, are accorded the esteem of posterity.

Charles R. Guggolz, the elder of their two children, was reared in Lodi, where he attended the excellent public schools and received a thorough training. From a lad he assisted his folks, learning the butcher-business, and when he was only sixteen years of age he began putting in all of his time in the Market. In 1914, he purchased the establishment and business of his father, at the same time taking in J. C. Keller, as a partner; and they continued to operate the market together until 1919, when Mr. Guggolz purchased Mr. Keller's interest. Now Mr. Guggolz gives all of his time to the supervision of his business, in every way possible steadily building it up; and owing to recent extensive improvements made by him, he renamed it the New Washington Market. Among other changes for the better, he has recently built an addition to his store, with new fixtures, remodeling, etc., at a cost of over $3,500, and the effect on increased trade is gratifying in the extreme. He carries only the choicest meats, poultry and fish, and his establishment enjoys the largest patronage of any market in the city. He has built a modern, thoroughly sanitary abattoir on his small ranch on the Mokelumne River; while his city plant is equipped with a five-ton ice machine, having various cold-storage rooms affording a capacity of over twenty-five beeves and equipped with modern trackage. The city plant also includes a factory with electric power where he manufactures all kinds of sausage, and cures bacon, hams, and other meat. The public market itself is well-arranged, being furnished with the latest and most modern fixtures; and as it is finished in white enamel, it presents a very sanitary and pleasing appearance. Aside from his retailing, he is also a wholesaler, and supplies other markets in Lodi and in neighboring towns in northern San Joaquin County. The demands of his delivery department keep three autos busy, one of his vehicles being a large truck used to transport the beeves from the abattoir to the retail store.

By his marriage, on April 10, 1912, at Stockton, Mr. Guggolz was united with Miss Mary Anderson, a native of Tyson, in San Joaquin County, and a descendant of a pioneer California family well-known as among those who helped to open the pathways of civilization, and to make it a good deal easier for the Californian of today. Fraternally, Mr. Guggolz is a member of Lodi Parlor, No. 18, Native Sons of the Golden West; the Fraternal Order of Eagles, No. 848; and Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E. His interest in local affairs is reflected in his activity as a member in the Lodi Business Men's Association and the Mokelumne Club. Mr. Guggolz is a man of progressive ideas, and never neglects an opportunity to advance along broad and enduring lines the best interests of the locality, which he selected as his permanent home.

FREDERICK C. GARLICK.—Prominent among the most successful building contractors of San Joaquin County, Frederick C. Garlick, a pioneer of the Fair Oaks section, was born at Kemptville, Ontario, Canada, and when he was a year and a half old, his family removed to "the States," and settled, first at Ogdensburg, N. Y., and later at Springfield, Ill. There he was reared and educated; and there he learned the trade of a carpenter; and in 1879, when a youth of seventeen, he left home and for a short time worked in the mines at Leadville, Colo.

On August 6, 1880, he arrived at Sacramento with just five cents in his pocket; and he secured work at once on the ranch of Frank Slack. Later, he worked at Gardner's woodyard at Sacramento, and then he journeyed south to Los Angeles, reaching there at the time of the great flood. This led to his returning north to San Francisco, from which port he shipped on the whaling ship, Dawn, for a cruise of eight months in the Arctic. On his return to California, he worked for the Continental Oil Company in Sacramento, and coming to Stockton, he worked for a building firm and helped to erect both a building at the State Asylum and the Masonic Temple in Stockton. For three years he was in San Francisco as foreman on the Wharf Building on the Bay front; and then he returned to Stockton and joined the police force as bailiff in the police court; two years later he became a patrolman. Later still, he engaged in house-moving in Stockton for sixteen years, but more recently he has followed building as a contractor, operating particularly in the Fair Oaks district. There he has built over thirty cottages, and he has proven an important factor in the building up of the district. Over thirty years ago, he bought six lots at Ash and Sonora streets, and erected his home; lots 25x115 feet on Sonora Avenue sold for $125 at that time, and they are now valued at $500 per lot. Corner lots, 50x115 feet, are now valued at more than $1750, while lots on Fair Oaks Avenue have trebled in value. Villa Park Addition, Gambeth's Addition, and supplements to these two additions, and Burkett's Acres are included in the Fair Oaks section. This land was a mere grain field when our subject first located there, and the paving he put in on his block was the first in the district. He was also the first to build a concrete sidewalk in Fair Oaks. Now he owns valuable real estate, and has more calls for his houses than he can meet. The Fair Oaks district is growing very rapidly, and is now a part of the city of Stockton, for being higher in its altitude than the city, it has become a very desirable suburb.

At Stockton, August 6, 1889, Mr. Garlick was married to Miss Mary Burke, a native of Cincinnati, and the couple are now the center of a devoted circle of friends.

C. HERBERT BUCK.—An enterprising young vineyardist whose scientific methods and conscientious attention to details are sure to assist him in attaining the success desired by every ambitious rancher, is C. Herbert Buck, of Youngstown, who was born in the old Langford Colony near Acampo, on April 16, 1894, the son of Charles H. and Samantha C. (Eddlemon) Buck. His father was born in Wisconsin in 1858, the son of Ingalls K. and Sarah E. (Councilmon) Buck, the former a native of the Empire State who became a frontiersman in Wisconsin, and as a hardware merchant contributed to the commercial development of that section. Later, the elder Buck removed to Iowa, and then to California. Ingalls Buck purchased valuable land on the Acampo-Lockeford road, in the old Langford Colony, now Christian Colony, and his life-story, as well as that of our subject's father, is given in the narrative of Charles H. Buck, printed on another page of this work. As California pioneers, the Buck family will always enjoy an enviable status.

C. Herbert Buck attended the Houston school, and later enjoyed one of the best possible business courses at the well-known Commercial College in Stockton. There he learned many things, both directly and indirectly, bearing on the interests that were to absorb his attention later. He established a motorcycle business in Lodi, which he conducted for five years, and then began viticulture. He owns forty acres in Youngstown, thirty acres in vineyard and ten acres in orchard, which he has brought to the highest state of cultivation, and of which he is making the same success as he has made of all his previous undertakings. He has one of the finest, best-laid-out and trimmest vineyards, and also a fine orchard where he raises high-grade Muir and Elberta peaches. He has two wells, with four-inch pumps and motors of ten-horsepower for irrigation.

Mr. Buck was married in Modesto, February 17, 1922, to Miss Adeline Hackman, born in Sacramento, the daughter of William Charles and Mary (Weidner) Hackman, natives of Michigan and Illinois, respectively, who located in Sacramento, where Mrs. Buck was reared and educated. Mr. Buck is a Republican in matters of national political import, but on local issues he disregards partisanship and endeavors to support the best men and measures.

JOHN C. KELLEY.—Prominent in community affairs and well known because of his active connection with agricultural interests, John C. Kelley has in his business career manifested the traits of character which lead to success. He is a man of enterprise and energy, strictly fair and just in his dealings with his fellowmen, and has won for himself a place among the substantial citizens of San Joaquin County. As superintendent of the Fred H. Rindge ranch he has shown much executive ability in the management of this vast tract of land. He was born near Dandridge, Jefferson County, Tenn., December 3, 1890, his parents, Wm. J. and Hannah M. (Ketner) Kelley, being farmers in that state.

His education was obtained in public schools and he early began assisting on the farm and when twelve years old was following a plow and doing general farm work during the summers, and after that it was only winter school for him.

Twelve years ago Mr. Kelley left his native state and came west, settling in the Imperial Valley in the fall of 1910, having only a few dollars in his pocket; he secured work on the George A. Long ranch, where he did general farm work, teaming, etc., until September, 1916, when he located in Stockton. Frederick H. Rindge was just starting his farming operations on the Rindge tract in the Delta district of the county and Mr. Kelley secured a position driving a caterpillar tractor. Within one month he was promoted to the position of superintendent of the farming operations, a position he has filled to the entire satisfaction of Mr. Rindge. Last season 8,000 acres were cultivated to barley, 1,000 acres to potatoes and 1,000 acres to corn. Deep plowing has been a factor in the development of this extensive ranch, also the use of heavier, more modern machinery; special plows were built for plowing ten to fourteen inches deep; formerly five and six inches was the depth for plowing. The Rindge ranch was the first to use fertilizer on an extensive scale, which has brought most satisfactory results. Potatoes, by use of fertilizer, yield from thirty to seventy-five sacks to the acre more than formerly; last year the yield of barley on 8,000 acres of the Rindge tract was thirty sacks to the acre. Mr. Kelley has made some suggestions for minor changes in the construction of the Holt tractor, which have been followed by the Holt Manufacturing Company with the result that they have done more satisfactory work in the Delta section; among them the use of five truck wheels instead of four on each side, which gives more general satisfaction. Mr. Kelley has had every opportunity to know the possibilities of the Delta section of San Joaquin County and has been in a position to demonstrate that the heavy soil of this section, if properly cultivated and fertilized, will produce heavier crops than any soil he is familiar with; his words of praise for the productivity of the Delta soil is not without foundation, for he knows what he can do with it under proper conditions. He is one of the most successful agriculturists in the county, and as a public-spirited citizen, he has always deserved and retained the confidence of his fellowmen.

CARL T. LIND.—Activity and energy in business affairs have been the stepping-stones to Mr. Lind's success, and today he is the owner of 316 acres of the finest and most productive soil in central California, the greater portion of which is in vineyard. Carl T. Lind was born in Hartford, Conn., May 18, 1884, a son of Nels A. and Johanna (Douglass) Lind. He is the eldest of a family of eight children, and was a babe in arms when his parents came to California and settled in San Francisco, where the father engaged in the mercantile business for many years. The other members of the family are Minna, Andrew, Fred, William, Harry, Lena and Walter. Both parents are still living in San Francisco.

Carl T. Lind's education was obtained in the public school of San Francisco. When ten years of age he became a cash boy in the store of O'Connor & Moffitt, in San Francisco; and later he was a packer in a wholesale store in the Bay city, where he remained for eight years. In 1906 he settled in Lodi, working as a journeyman carpenter for a few years, and then engaged in general contracting and building in Lodi for twelve years, this proving a successful undertaking.

On August 1, 1904, Mr. Lind was married to Miss Jensiene Hauso, born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, who came to California in 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Lind are the parents of ten children: Carl, Robert, James, Arthur, Marie, Ethel, Albert, Lester, Chester and Merrill. In 1918 Mr. Lind became interested in buying and selling land, and also engaged in farming. His first purchase was ten acres east of the Houston schoolhouse, a part of the Northrop ranch; this ranch was in young vineyard. Mr. Lind later sold this vineyard, and from time to time bought and sold various places throughout the valley. Following are the properties he now owns: 100 acres southeast of Lodi on Harney Lane, part of which is in vineyard and part grain land; 106 acres north of Victor in which he owns a two-thirds interest, all in vineyard; forty acres two miles east of Youngstown, all planted to peaches; and seventy acres on Cherokee Lane, four and a half miles north of Lodi, all set to Tokay grapes; making a total of 316 acres in San Joaquin County. Besides his extensive land interests, Mr. Lind loans money to the farmers throughout the county, and is also engaged in the real estate business in Lodi. He is a Republican in politics. A self-made man, who has fought his own battles in the world, he has practical ideas of affairs. While not a member of any church, Mr. Lind lends his support to every good movement and measure in his community.

MRS. CLORINDA BAVA.—The city of Stockton may well be proud in having, as one of her most progressive citizens, Mrs. Clorinda Bava, a native daughter of exceptional character and worth, who was reared here in the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Benedetto Ratto, whose life-story is given elsewhere in this history, and who are justly regarded as among the sturdy pioneer builders of the great Golden State commonwealth. She attended the Franklin School in her girlhood, and on April 6, 1904, at Stockton, she was married to Santino Bava, a native of Italy, who had come to Stockton in 1892, and has since always followed agricultural pursuits, fortunate in his sterling qualities, which have easily given him a reputation for honesty and uprightness in his dealings with his fellowmen. Two children blessed the union: Benjamin, who was born in February, 1905, is well-advanced as a student, prominent in high school football, and in 1922 he played with the "Varsity "Tarzans;" and Evelyn, born in March, 1908, is a pupil at the Lafayette School. Perhaps because of this active participation in school work by her own children, whose studies she seeks to direct, Mrs. Bava maintains a keen interest in the welfare of other children, and is always a strong advocate of better schools. The family belong to the Roman Catholic Church.

In addition to discharging her home duties, Mrs. Bava, who made easier the declining days of her beloved father, has assisted in looking after the Ratto estate, and her home is now in the residence where the family were reared, from which she radiates the most helpful influence, dispensing an appreciated charity, making bright the lives of those more or less clouded, and seeking really to help those who, for one reason or another, cannot always help themselves. All honor, then, to such a noble woman who, having reached success, has never forgotten that there are still others below on the mountain paths trying just as hard as she did to rise and succeed.

BARRY M. BAINBRIDGE.—An attorney of Stockton of wide influence is Barry M. Bainbridge, who was born at Paulingville, in St. Charles County, Mo., on June 30, 1865, the son of Dr. James A. and Mary Elizabeth (Herold) Bainbridge, the former a native of Wisconsin, the latter of Missouri. Both are now deceased, kindly remembered by many for the usefulness and nobility of their lives. Dr. J. A. Bainbridge was an eclectic physician, and was educated at the Cincinnati Medical College; and he practiced his profession in Wisconsin and Missouri. They arrived at Stockton on December 12, 1874, and took rooms at the old Antelope Hotel, which stood at the corner of Sacramento Street and Weber Avenue. The father bought two separate sections of land near Ripon, one of which is now known as the West Vineyard Colony, and practiced his profession in the San Joaquin Valley, in a territory extending from Sacramento to Merced, and eastward into the mountain counties. For many years, often at much inconvenience and through unwearying labors, he ministered to the sick and unfortunate, and was beloved by the wide circle to whom he was so well known. He was an active man to within a short time of his death, which occurred in May, 1914, at the age of eighty-one. He was a Master Mason.

Ten children were born to this worthy couple, five being boys and five girls, and two of the sons followed in the professional footsteps of their father. Dr. J. C. Bainbridge is a resident of Santa Barbara, while E. D. Bainbridge was the only one of the family to follow farming as a livelihood, and he now resides on his ranch, three miles northeast of Ripon. He undoubtedly derived much guidance from his mother; for while Dr. Bainbridge practiced medicine, the sons managed the home ranch, under the leadership of Mrs. Bainbridge, who had exceptional executive ability.

As a boy, therefore, Barry Bainbridge also worked upon the home farm, helping to fence one of the sections of land, the first section so to be inclosed in the district; and at that time the entire valley was a vast grain field, and houses were few and far between. He attended the public schools of Stockton, and also the Stockton Business College. At the age of eighteen he received a teacher's certificate, and for twenty years in the county taught school, both in country districts and in the City of Stockton, and in the Sacramento as well as the Stockton Business College. During this period of his pedagogical activity, he studied law, and after putting in one year at the University of California, was admitted to the Bar, on June 24, 1907. He served as justice of the peace of Castoria township, and is now an honored member of the San Joaquin County Bar Association, and of the American Bar Association.

Mr. Bainbridge has been twice married, and he had two children by his first wife. Moire L. Bainbridge is a detective in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad, and a daughter is Mrs. Lina A. Dahl, of Watsonville. By his second wife he has one child, James Clark Bainbridge. Mr. Bainbridge joined the Truth Lodge of Odd Fellows, No. 55, at Stockton, and later was demitted to Farmington Lodge, No. 296. He is also a trustee and member of the Loyal Order of Moose at Stockton.

Paul Bambridge

HENRY CHRISTOPHER BECKMAN.—One of the most prominent agriculturalists and business men in Lodi is Henry C. Beckman, a man thoroughly conversant with all departments of that greatest of California industries, agriculture. A native of the state, he has given his best years and most generous efforts to the welfare of his particular lines of business and the advancement of all interests of the public and state. He resides on his fine estate near Lodi, which is also his birthplace. He was born on August 23, 1867, a son of Christopher and Mary (Langhorst) Beckman, both natives of Westphalia, Prussia, Germany. His father, Christopher Beckman, was thrown upon his own resources at an early age and learned the practical lessons of life by experience and actual contact with affairs, so that he deserved the more honor for his success. In 1849, accompanied by a younger brother, Henry, he sailed from Bremen, Germany, and in about fifty-five days landed in Baltimore. After a short time in Pennsylvania they moved to Wisconsin, where he was employed in the pineries and also in steamboating on the Mississippi River. His father, William Beckman, had joined them; and in 1853, with his father and his brother, he crossed the plains with ox-teams and wagons. They were over six months en route, and on their arrival took up their residence in San Joaquin County. He located on the ranch now owned by our subject and farmed until the time of his death. His widow survived him for twenty-one years. They were the parents of three children, but only one son, Henry C. the subject of this sketch, survives. Christopher Beckman became a very prominent citizen of his locality, where he served for several years as trustee of the Henderson school district. In politics he gave his support to the Democratic party, and fraternally he was a member of the Masons at Lodi. He was a respected member of the German Lutheran Church at Stockton. Christopher Beckman died on April 27, 1890, and his wife on April 25, 1911, and both were buried on April 29, twenty-one years apart, in the Woodbridge cemetery.

Henry C. Beckman grew to manhood in his native county and received his education at the Henderson district school and the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge. His fine home place near Lodi, consisting of 400 acres, is the old home place. Here he built a fine residence in 1902, one of the most commodious and pleasant rural homes in the locality. He also owns the Thomas Yolland place, of 400 acres.

On May 20, 1896, at Woodbridge, Mr. Beckman was married to Miss Jessie Spenker, a daughter of Joseph and Anna (Schliemann) Spenker, natives of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and Holstein, Germany, respectively. Joseph Spenker was reared on a farm and came to America in 1854, landing in New York, where he remained three days. He then spent a few years in traveling, settling finally in Illinois. From there he started for California in 1859, crossing the plains with ox-teams and arriving at Murphy's Camp on September 16, 1859. By hard work and economy he became, within a few years, a large landowner and a prominent citizen of San Joaquin County. Mr. and Mrs. Beckman are the parents of three children: Anita, Vera and Joseph C.

Since the organization of the First National Bank of Lodi, Mr. Beckman has been a member of the board of directors, and he is now serving as a vice-president of this institution. Until the World War, Mr. Beckman had supported the principles of the Democratic party, but now he is an ardent believer in and supporter of the Republican party. In 1890 he was made a Mason in Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M. The family are members of the St. Peter's Lutheran Church in Lodi. There is no more loyal citizen of San Joaquin County than this native son, who favors progressive measures and gives active cooperation to many movements for the public good. His name has thus become a synonym for patriotism in citizenship, for straightforward dealing in business, and for reliability in friendship.

AUGUSTO BELLUOMINI.—A progressive, experienced and very successful rancher is Augusto Belluomini, proprietor of the Delta Farm, on Upper Roberts Island, embracing about 173 acres on Middle River, about ten miles southwest of Stockton. He was born in Tuscany, in the province of Lucca, Italy, on January 19, 1882, the son of Carmilindo Belluomini, a native of Italy, who had come out to California in 1874 and settled near Marysville, where he had a brother-in-law, C. Del Porto, a '49er, who had become well-to-do in the farming and stock business. Carmilindo Belluomini remained in California about seven years, during which time he did well on his farm, when he returned to his native land, carrying back with him a fair-sized fortune. He had married Zaira Del Porto, also a native of Italy, in 1872, and had left her and the family in the old country. Three sons were born to them. Angelo came to America at the age of eighteen, became a well-to-do rancher in the Delta section, and died, with an excellent record for usefulness to the community; Augusto is the subject of our story; and Vincente is a Delta rancher. The father passed away in 1899; and his widow lives, retired, in Lucca, aged seventy-four years. In the winter of 1921-22 she enjoyed a visit from her son, Augusto, who made a trip to Italy, being away from California for about four months.

It was in 1892 that Angelo left Italy for California, making direct for the Pacific Coast and settling in Sacramento; and after devoting himself for a few months to farm labor, he went into the Kennedy Mine, at Jackson, in Amador County. When a boy of sixteen years of age Augusto made the voyage to Melbourne, Australia, and there spent nine months, when he returned home, and the next year, in 1900, he followed his brother to the Golden State, and after an adventurous trip, he also went into the Kennedy Mine, where he remained for two years. Coming to Stockton in 1902, he remained a year on a Delta farm.

The next three years were spent in San Francisco, where he joined his brother, Vincente, in the transfer and express business, until the great fire, following the earthquake, swept everything away. He then went to Oakley, Contra Costa County, bought twenty acres of bare land, on which he started a vineyard; and three years later he was able to sell this at a good advantage. In 1910, he moved back to Stockton, and ever since he has been a successful Delta rancher. In 1918 he bought his present rancho, and in addition to cultivating this acreage, he farms extensively on adjacent lands.

In Jackson, in 1902, Mr. Belluomini was married to Miss Childa Bagniski, a daughter of Louis and Esther Bagniski—the latter now a retired resident of Palo Alto,—both natives of Lucca, Italy, who came to California in 1888. Mr. and Mrs. Belluomini have three children: Inez, Eleanor and Ernest. Mr. Belluomini, who was made a citizen at Stockton, is a staunch Republican.

SAMUEL L. KAMPSCHMIDT.—A skillful and energetic automobile mechanic, Samuel L. Kampschmidt is the owner of the Ever Ready Auto Repair Company located at 16 East Miner Avenue, Stockton. His birth occurred at Lenexa, Kan., August 23, 1890, a son of William and Mary (Wilkins) Kampschmidt, both natives of Missouri. William Kampschmidt was a carpenter and farmer by occupation and lived to be sixty-three years of age. The mother of our subject is still living in Kansas. Ten children were born to this worthy couple: Anna; Edward; Ida, deceased; Frank; Albert; Alice, deceased; George; Robert, deceased; Samuel, the subject of this sketch, and Oscar. Samuel L. received his education in the Rosedale and Lenexa grammar schools and while in his early teens began to make his own way. He went to Kansas City, where he worked for four years at anything he could get to do to earn his way, and at the age of seventeen arrived in San Francisco, where he worked one year at his trade of baker, which he had learned in Kansas City; then he found work in a planing mill in the Bay city which occupied him until he was employed by the Santa Fe Railroad Company as fireman, his term of service covering a period of five years. In 1912 he removed to Stockton, where he worked for Aubrey's Bakery; then he became fireman for the Sperry Flour Company. He then received an offer of a job in the Patterson garage on El Dorado Street, which he accepted and in connection with his work took a course in automobile mechanics and within six months was promoted to the position of shop foreman; then he became night foreman for the Hansel & Ortman garage. From there he went to Modesto as manager for George A. Sesnon; then came back to Stockton as the manager of Mr. Sesnon's business in this city; later he purchased his employer's business and conducted it successfully for a year and a half when he sold out and became superintendent for Murphy-Cantrell Company for one year. He then established his own business, now known as Ever Ready Auto Repair Company, specializing in the repair of Chevrolet automobiles, but his business has gradually expanded until he is now equipped to repair all makes of cars. Aside from his business in Stockton Mr. Kampschmidt is interested in prospecting and mining and has two claims in Tuolumne County, in which he owns one-half interest, the Florence placer bar above Groveland, and a quartz claim ten miles above Columbia, both of which he is opening.

In Stockton on June 11, 1911, Mr. Kampschmidt was first married to Miss Myrtle I. Gerard, a native of Stockton and a daughter of William and Amelia Gerard. William Gerard was a native of Nova Scotia who came to California in an early day and followed his trade of carpenter. One child was born of this union, Norman E. Mr. Kampschmidt was married the second time to Miss Cora H. Linley, born in Stockton, a daughter of Albert B. and Lucy (Johnson) Linley, natives of Kentucky and California, respectively. Mr. Kampschmidt is a Republican in politics and a member of the Lutheran Church, while Mrs. Kampschmidt is a member of the Christian Church in Stockton.

ANDREW H. SMITH.—A native son of San Joaquin County who has spent all his years in the locality of his home, establishing himself among the progressive business men of the city of his birth, is Andrew H. Smith, a member of the undertaking firm of Pope & Smith, and deputy coroner. Mr. Smith was born at Stockton on December 13, 1885, the son of Peter J. and Mary (McNamara) Smith, natives of Wisconsin and Iowa, respectively. The father came to California in May, 1877, and is still living, but Mrs. Smith passed away in September, 1910.

After attending St. Mary's College at Stockton, Mr. Smith graduated in 1899 and then decided to take up the business of undertaking and became associated with P. D. Campbell, remaining with him for seven years. He then entered the employ of B. C. Wallace, and for thirteen years was with his establishment. During this time Mr. Wallace was county coroner and Mr. Smith served as his deputy. In 1918 he decided to go into business for himself, and forming a partnership with Oscar C. Pope under the firm name of Pope & Smith, he has already established a fine business, a success that is only natural considering his many years of experience and his special qualifications for this field of work.

On June 15, 1908, Mr. Smith was married to Miss Lillian R. Sorensen, a native daughter, born at Livermore, Alameda County, and they are the parents of one son, Harmon Andrew Smith, and a daughter, Marie Lillian Smith. Mr. Smith is prominent in lodge circles of Stockton, being a member of the Red Men, Stockton Parlor No. 7, Native Sons of the Golden West, the Elks, the Moose, Eagles and the Independent Order of Foresters.

JOSEPH BIANCHI.—A highly successful vineyardist of the Ripon district of San Joaquin County, Joseph Bianchi has done much for the viticultural industry in this section, having now 1,500,000 rooted grapevines of all varieties in his nursery. He was born in the province of Lucca, Italy, February 4, 1875, and was only fourteen years old when he left his Italian home and came to America, a stranger in a strange land and not knowing a word of the English language. At first he located in San Jose, where he spent a few months, then went to the Delta region in Sacramento County, where he worked as a laborer; then he returned to San Jose and worked for the San Jose Brick Company for a short time, when he secured a job at the El Quito olive ranch near Saratoga; then he acquired a share in the San Jose Paste Company and was successfully engaged in this business until 1913, when he disposed of his interest in the company. During May, 1900, Mr. Bianchi made his first trip back to his native country, and one month later, June, 1900, he was married to Miss Agnes Matteucci, born in the village of Marlia, province of Lucca, Italy, a daughter of Yacopo Matteucci, a wealthy Italian rancher who engaged in raising olives and grapes. Returning to America with his bride, Mr. Bianchi established his home on San Salvador street, which he still owns. About 1901 he bought a ranch near Congress Springs, Cal., in partnership with E. Puccinelli, and developed the property, which Mr. Bianchi later sold to his associate.

On September 10, 1918, Mr. Bianchi landed in Ripon and purchased the Swett nursery, consisting of sixty acres, between Manteca and Ripon. This ranch was developed by Frank T. Swett, a pioneer in irrigation farming, who was engaged extensively in raising nursery stock, supplying thousands of young trees to the farmers throughout his district. Mr. Bianchi is fast developing his ranch to vineyard; he already has thirty-five acres in vineyard and what was once an alfalfa field and almond orchard is now dotted with young grapevines. Mr. Bianchi also bought the ranch known as the Campigi ranch near Calla, which is probably the oldest vineyard in San Joaquin County, consisting of twenty acres which was planted by Dr. Latta of Stockton, which is now a highly productive and valuable vineyard.

Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bianchi: Chauncey, a graduate of San Jose high school, was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for five years, and is now the general manager of the home ranch; Rose is the wife of Victor Matteucci, proprietor of the Swiss Italian Restaurant in Stockton, and they have one daughter; they own a ranch of forty acres near Manteca; Rinaldo is a rancher; Angelino died at the age of four years; Louis is a graduate of the Weston grammar school and is now a student in the Stockton high school; Angelino A., Joseph, Jr., and Henry are all in grammar school. Mr. Bianchi made his second trip to Italy in 1905, spending about eight months visiting relatives and friends, then again, in 1912, when he spent six months. While residing in San Jose he was one of the organizers of the English Foresters and is a charter member of the Court of Christopher Columbus; also a charter member of the San Jose Chapter of Druids and a member of the St. Joseph's Order at San Jose, having been a member of the latter organization for the past sixteen years. He is a Republican in politics and a most loyal citizen of his adopted country.

MRS. LILLIAN E. BLANCHARD.—A well-known pioneer of Stockton who has resided in this city from childhood is Mrs. Lillian E. Blanchard, widow of the late Martin Blanchard, a native son of California. She was born at Waterloo, Iowa, a daughter of Uriah and Mary Ellen (Ward) Scott. Uriah Scott was a veteran of the Civil War and late in the sixties he brought his family to California, remaining one year, when he returned to Iowa, and there passed away. The maternal grandfather of our subject, George F. Ward, was a native of Brandon, Vt., who settled in Chicago in 1836, and there was married to Miss Electa J. Watson in 1844. They had eight children, three of whom are living today. George F. Ward served three years in the Civil War in Company C, Twelfth Illinois Cavalry. In 1857 he located in Black Hawk County, Iowa, where he became a prominent citizen, being a member of the board of supervisors of that county; he was also a Mason of forty years' standing. He passed away in 1890 at the age of seventy-three years. In 1874 the mother of our subject with two daughters came to California, and the mother was married the second time to Herman Ward, a stock dealer and agent for the McLaughlin estate. Herman Ward passed away at the age of sixty-eight years, while Mrs. Ward is still living at the age of seventy-six.

On August, 22, 1888, in San Francisco, Lillian E. Scott was united in marriage with Martin Blanchard, a native of Sonoma County, Cal., and a son of Martin and Ruth Blanchard, the former a native of Vermont, who came to California in early pioneer days.

Martin Blanchard was a plastering contractor by trade, and during his active career had the contract for many of the large buildings in Stockton, among them being the high school. Four children were born to them; Floyd Martin is married and has one son, Floyd Barnett; the family reside in Marysville and he is a draftsman; Beulah; Lillian A. is Mrs. George H. Dietz, and they have three children, George Robert, Janis Lillian and June Edith; Mary Edna is Mrs. Averil Thomas and they reside in Stockton. Mr. Blanchard was a member of the Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows lodges of Stockton. He passed away July 28, 1922. Mrs. Blanchard is a member of the Ladies of the G. A. R. in Stockton and is the owner of flats on Magnolia street.

JOSEPH WILLIAM BONNET.—The owner of a forty-acre ranch in the third voting precinct of Ripon, where he conducts a dairy and farm under the South San Joaquin Irrigation District, and where he has resided since 1902, Joseph William Bonnet was born at Boerne, Kendall County, Texas, March 7, 1884. He is the son of the late John Charles Bonnet, who was born on the Alsace-Lorraine border, in Germany, and died in Texas in 1892, being then sixty-five years old. He was the second husband of Joseph Bonnet's mother, and served in the Civil War as first lieutenant. There were five children born to Mr. Bonnet's parents: Lillian Ann, wife of E. A. Schrader, a rancher near Ripon; Joseph William, of this review; Louise, wife of J. L. Kiernan, in the fuel and ice business in Turlock; Kate, wife of E. D. Hughes, a rancher six miles east of Turlock; and Alice, wife of Ray Watson, newspaper man at Fresno. Kate and Alice are twins. The mother's maiden name was Catherine Chambers. She was born in County Mayo, Ireland, and came to America and married Sebastian Farschon, her first husband, in Chicago, where he was a brick mason. Later they went to Texas, where Mr. Farschon died, leaving four children, namely: John W., formerly the blacksmith at Ripon (See his sketch in this work); George P. (deceased in Texas), who was married and left a widow and four children; William Austin, a rancher and ditch-tender near Ripon, where he owns forty acres; and Mary, who became the wife of Charles Moser, of Monterey, Old Mexico, where she died, leaving no children.

Joseph William Bonnet lived in Texas until sixteen years old. He came to California in 1900 and became a helper of his half-brother, John W. Farschon, in his blacksmith shop at Ripon. Two years later the mother and the rest of the family came out to California and they settled on the farm now owned and operated by Mr. Bonnet, which has been the Bonnet home-place ever since 1902.

Mr. Bonnet was married at Stockton, in 1909, to Miss Ethel W. Whitesides, a daughter of John L. and Mollie E. Whitesides, who came from Texas, where Mrs. Bonnet was also born. Her father was born in Kentucky, as was also her mother. Mr. and Mrs. Bonnet have six children: LeRoy S., Thelma M., Mildred A., John Joseph, Vera Amy, and James Alton. Mr. Bonnet has loyally lent his help and influence in furtherance of the general welfare, particularly so in the development of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District. He and his interesting family are highly regarded and mingle with the best families in the Ripon district.

JOHN D. GILGERT.—One of the pioneer families in the Golden State is that which now finds a worthy representative in San Joaquin County in John D. Gilgert, who is also a native son of the county where he has resided all of his life. He was born on the Gilgert homestead near Colledgeville, May 30, 1864. His father, John G. Gilgert, was born in 1826 in Germany and in 1847 came to New York where he followed his trade of wheelwright in Herkimer County until 1852. He came to California via Cape Horn and from San Francisco came to Stockton where he worked in a blacksmith shop until 1860 when he moved to Colledgeville and located on a farm of forty-eight acres, a portion of the Dan Kitchings ranch. The blacksmith shop opposite the Kerrick Tavern, or Eight-Mile House, on the Mariposa Road was conducted by a close friend by the name of John Aust and Mr. Gilgert bought him out and moving the shop to his farm, made wagons, carriages, farm implements and tools; his products and workmanship were known far and wide and at the present time his wagons can be found on many of the neighboring ranches. In 1857 he was married to Miss Sybella Martenstein, a native of Germany, who came to California in 1852. They were the parents of six children of whom John D. is the eldest son. Since he was twenty-five years old J. G. Gilgert had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in 1883 he passed away at the family home. His wife now makes her home with her son John D., our subject, who obtained his education in the public school at Colledgeville and at the age of eight years was set to work doing odd jobs around his father's shop and learned the trade. When he was twenty-three years old he located near Oakdale where he farmed for eight years and on his return to San Joaquin County he farmed the Jack ranch for twelve years.

In 1888 Mr. Gilgert was married to Miss Christina Rapps, a native of Wisconsin, who came to California in 1885. Her sister Adaline married a brother of our subject and they reside in Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Gilgert are the parents of six children: Birdie is a graduate of the Stockton High school, the San Jose State Normal, Los Angeles Bible Institute and is at present doing missionary work at Sells, Ariz., among the Indians; Walter, an engineer, married Miss Mabel Morris and they have three children; Anna is a stenographer for the Western Electric Company at Oakland; Carlton married Miss Chrystal Yandell and has two daughters and is associated with his father in business; George R. married Hazel Ward of Madera County, and is also interested with his father in business; Lillian is a graduate of Stockton High school. About ten years ago Mr. Gilgert purchased the property on the northeast corner of Jack Tone and Mariposa roads and remodeled the buildings on the place and opened the Colledgeville store, handling groceries and meats. He conducts three meat routes in the county, one route covering a distance of seventy miles. For twenty years Mr. Gilgert was a trustee of the Colledgeville school district. He is now deputy county clerk and holds the office of registration clerk. He is a Republican in politics. He joined Oakdale Lodge of Odd Fellows in 1891 and became past grand; about ten years later he transferred his membership to Truth Lodge No. 55 at Stockton and with his wife is a member of Rainbow degree, Lodge of Rebekahs, of which his daughter Lillian is also a member.

FRED E. DANIELS.—A native son of Stockton who has risen to a high degree of success in the building business is Fred E. Daniels, junior member of the building firm of Daniels & Green. Born July 4, 1890, in Stockton, he is the son of Wesley and Jessie (Kern) Daniels, both natives of Canada, who came to California in 1888 and spent two years in Los Angeles, locating in Stockton early in the year 1890. Four children were born to them: Myrtle, Fred E., Wesley, Jr., and Margaret, and a sketch of the parents appears elsewhere in this history.

The second of the family, Fred E. Daniels attended the public schools of Stockton and entered the employ of Roberts & Clark as a boy, working up from the bottom in every department of the mill. Later he was engaged for a year in carpenter work with Bob Melvin, as outside man. Thirteen years ago he became associated with his father in the firm of Daniels & Green, pioneer contractors of Stockton, and has since been busily engaged in promoting the firm's work, with the exception of the time he spent in Moore's Shipyard at Oakland, during the World War. A valued member of the firm, he superintends the outside work and the crews of workmen employed by them, displaying unusual capacity as an executive in this line.

In Oakland on September 9, 1913, Mr. Daniels was married to Miss Lena Albera, who was born in Italy, the daughter of Pasquale Albera, a manufacturer of Oakland, in which city Mrs. Daniels attended school. Mr. and Mrs. Daniels are the parents of one daughter, Marian Clair. Mr. Daniels is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and of Truth Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F. The family reside in their comfortable home at 1029 West Park Street, which Mr. Daniels erected about six years ago. Fond of hunting and fishing, he finds his greatest recreation in these sports in the High Sierras.

ROBERT NELSON FOOTE.—Among the recent additions to the ranks of horticulturists in the Linden section of San Joaquin County is Robert Nelson Foote, a representative of the well-known pioneer family of that name. For the past two years he has devoted his energies to fruit-growing and has made a very important success in this line of work. He is a native son of California, born at Marysville, September 23, 1878, the eldest in a family of four living children of Forrest and Leila (Woodworth) Foote. His mother passed away and subsequently his father was married to Mrs. Laura A. Coburn and they were the parents of four children: Frank, Forrest, Gertrude and Vivian. The sketch of Forrest Foote will be found elsewhere in this volume. Robert Nelson was reared on the farm and received his education in the district school in his locality. Early in life he learned the practical side of farming, which has since been brought into use and has been the means of much of his success in fruit growing. He was in partnership with his father in ranching activities near Lockeford and later at Waterloo until 1914 when he gave up ranching and entered the employ of the Harris Manufacturing Company at Stockton. There he learned mill work, which he followed for six years; then two years ago he purchased ten acres near Linden and has since followed fruit raising with gratifying success.

Fred C. Daniels

In 1912, at Stockton, Mr. Foote was married to Miss Laura Bentz, a native of Shelbyville, Ill., a daughter of John C. Bentz, who since 1909 has resided on a ranch on Cherokee Lane, San Joaquin County. Their daughter, Ellen Marie, is a student in the Linden grammar school. Mr. Foote is a Democrat in politics and fraternally is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men at Stockton. He and his family are members of the Congregational Church. He has demonstrated his business qualifications through the successful control of his agricultural interests, which have made him one of the substantial farmers of the Linden community.

ELIA FRANCIS FOTTRELL.—Among the younger generation of successful and enterprising agriculturists is Elia Francis Fottrell who, with his brother, W. L. Fottrell, is engaged in farming 1,080 acres on the Stanislaus River, five miles southeast of Escalon, to wheat and oats, using the most modern power machinery in their work. He was born at San Francisco, Cal., February 3, 1893, a son of Dr. Michael J. and Mary (Chulovich) Fottrell, natives of Ireland and California, respectively. Michael J. Fottrell came to California from Ireland in young manhood, locating in San Francisco, where he began the study of medicine at the Cooper Medical College, from which he was duly graduated. He has followed his profession for many years, and has become a prominent and successful physician and surgeon of the Bay city, having his offices in the Phelan Building, San Francisco. There are four sons and three daughters in the Fottrell family.

Elia Francis Fottrell received a good education at St. Ignatius College in San Francisco and in 1911 left school and played tennis for a number of years. His first notable playing was in 1907 on the courts of the California Club in San Francisco, where he showed unusual ability; then in 1909 he made a tour through Southern California, playing at Long Beach, Pasadena and other southern cities with great success. In 1910 he won the state championship, and became national champion runner up out of 200 contestants at Newport in 1914, but was defeated by R. N. Williams at the finals. In 1912 Mr. Fottrell defeated the Canadian team for the championship of Canada. During 1913-14 he made a tour of the Orient, his partner being William Johnstone, now ex-national champion, and appeared in the principal cities of Japan and other countries. Returning to America and his home in California he came to the Fottrell ranch near Escalon, which has been in the family for about twenty years, and he soon became so interested in his farming that his tennis playing suffered accordingly. This ranch of 750 acres includes some rich bottom land and also considerable timber land; 160 acres has been planted to alfalfa and large quantities of wheat and oats are produced on the rich bottom lands. He and his brother, W. L. Fottrell, are closely associated in conducting this ranch and are among the most extensive grain farmers in the district adjacent to Escalon. Both are members of the local Farm Bureau, W. L. Fottrell serving as director for two years.

On October 4, 1921, at San Francisco, Mr. Fottrell was united in marriage with Miss Ursula Dietrich, a native of San Luis Obispo County, a daughter of Robert Dietrich of Paso Robles. Mr. Fottrell is a prosperous rancher, for he is energetic, progressive and practical, and is therefore meeting with well deserved success.

JOHN W. GARRISON.—An enterprising business man of Ripon, John W. Garrison is proprietor of the Model Market and is also the constable for Ripon township. He was born near Ripon, Cal., November 16, 1888, the eldest son and second child of a family of eight children born to his parents, John and Eliza (Fredericks) Garrison. The father was born in Ellisville, Ill., February 18, 1853, a son of William Pinckney and Amelia (White) Garrison, both natives of Indiana. Grandfather Garrison was a veteran of the Civil War. At twenty-nine years of age John Garrison left his home in Illinois and came west to California and directly to Ripon, where he worked as a farm laborer. Here he met and was married to Miss Eliza Fredericks, a daughter of John Fredericks, a California pioneer, deceased. The parents now reside on a ranch near Ripon, where they engage in general farming.

John W. Garrison attended the San Joaquin district school near Ripon until he was seventeen years of age, then found work on ranches in the neighborhood of his home. He then determined to learn the meat business and spent one year in a retail shop in Stockton; then returning to Ripon he entered the employ of the Ripon Meat Company, and was also interested in grain farming until 1917; then he conducted a retail route through the south San Joaquin district, and two years ago bought the Model Market at Ripon, which he has improved, and the business has steadily increased in volume. In May, 1922, Mr. Garrison took as his partner A. L. Stewart and the association has already proved of advantage to the company. The company operates two retail meat routes over fifty miles in length, which is a great accommodation to their customers and a valuable asset to the company.

The marriage of Mr. Garrison occurred at Modesto, September 12, 1912, which united him with Miss Anita Bailey, a native of Salida, Cal., a daughter of J. D. Bailey, a retired pioneer rancher now living at Ripon. Mr. and Mrs. Garrison are the parents of two children: Maxine and Violet. In June, 1921, Mr. Garrison was appointed constable for Ripon township and in 1922 succeeded himself to the same office unopposed. He is a Republican in politics and fraternally is a member of Mt. Horeb Lodge, I. O. O. F. and the Ripon Merchants' Association.

CHARLES FREDERICK.—A well-known rancher and prominent citizen of Ripon, Cal., Charles Frederick is a native son of San Joaquin County. He was born on his father's ranch, two miles west of Ripon, April 27, 1875, a son of the late Thomas and Susan J. (Crow) Frederick, pioneers of the county, whose sketch may be found in this volume. The father passed away July 4, 1920, and the mother resides in Ripon, a highly esteemed pioneer. Charles Frederick began his education in the district school in the vicinity of his home and later entered the Ramsay Business College in Stockton, from which he was graduated. The only son in the family, he was early in life taught the practical lessons in farming, which he selected for his life's work.

In 1899, Mr. Frederick was married to Miss Josephine M. Grubbs, born near Woodland, Cal., a daughter of Eli and Catherine Grubbs, California pioneers, now deceased. She is the youngest of five children. Her brother, Oscar, resides in Stockton, and there are three sisters. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick are the parents of two children: Carol M., a student in the University of California, and Dorothy, a student in the Ripon Union high school. In 1905, Mr. Frederick purchased the Hughes place four miles west of Ripon, consisting of 160 acres, which is devoted to grain raising and on which he has a fine, high-grade Holstein dairy herd. In 1910 a comfortable residence was erected, where the family reside. Since 1918, Mr. Frederick has been a director in the Bank of Ripon. Politically he is a Democrat and fraternally is a past noble grand of Mt. Horeb Lodge of Odd Fellows, and Mrs. Frederick is an active member of Phoebe Hearst Parlor, N. D. G. W., at Manteca. Both Mr. and Mrs. Frederick delight in outdoor life and every vacation season the family enjoys an outing in the high Sierras, where Mr. Frederick indulges in hunting and fishing for trout. He stands today as a leader in his line of activity, and belongs to that class of representative American citizens who, while promoting individual success, also contribute in large measure to general progress and upbuilding.

FORREST FOOTE.—For many years Forrest Foote was a prosperous agriculturalist near the town of Waterloo, where he owned a ranch consisting of 200 acres, and also a ranch of 160 acres in the northeastern part of the county of San Joaquin. He is now living retired at his residence, 1324 North Lincoln street, Stockton. He was born in Steuben County, N. Y., March 5, 1852, a son of Dr. Erastus N. Foote and Marie H. (White) Foote. Dr. Foote, who was engaged in the practice of medicine in Steuben County, came out to California in 1852, making the trip via Panama, and for several years he was engaged in both placer and quartz mining in this state. He was a partner in the Foote & Thompson Gold Mining Company, which operated near Mokelumne Hill, and his gold mining enterprises were successful. He subsequently moved to Comanche, in Calaveras County, where he practiced medicine and later continued his profession in Lockeford, San Joaquin County, where he was a widely known and accomplished physician for many years. He died there in his seventy-ninth year. He was a Mason as well as a member of the State Medical Society.

Forrest Foote, the third oldest of the family, was four years old when he accompanied his mother and a sister from New York via Panama to California, where they joined the father in Calaveras County. He received his early education in Calaveras and San Joaquin counties, taking up agricultural pursuits in youth, and until his retirement from the active duties of life, he devoted his chief energies to that occupation, in which he gained pronounced success. He located on his ranch near Waterloo in 1901.

Mr. Foote's first marriage united him with Miss Leila Woodworth, who was born in Nova Scotia, and who became the mother of five children, four of whom are living: Robert N., Myrtle, Ralph M. and Marie. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Foote subsequently was married to Mrs. Laura Coburn (nee Finn) of Plymouth, a daughter of Robert Finn, one of the pioneers of Amador County. Four children were born of this second marriage: Frank, Forrest, Gertrude and Vivian. Mr. Foote is affiliated with Vesper Lodge No. 94, Knights of Pythias, and with Progressive Lodge No. 134, I. O. O. F., both at Lockeford.

MAX PAUL.—An experienced, enterprising business man is found in Max Paul, proprietor of the Valley Machine and Tool Works, located at 6 East Miner Avenue, Stockton. He is a native of Magdeburg, Saxony, Germany, and was born February 8, 1879. At the age of fourteen he was apprenticed as a machinist with Schaefer-Budenberg Company, in his native city. The first year of his apprenticeship was spent as an errand boy, then he entered the tool department; he was then promoted to the mechanical drawing department, where he spent one year. He spent five years in night school learning the theoretical part of the business. He then went to Manchester, England, and entered the employ of the same company, which had a branch business in Manchester; there he learned automobile mechanics, gas engine work, the making of instruments, and electrical work. While in Manchester he was also employed by the British Westinghouse Company. About this time he had determined to seek his fortune in America. Landing in New York City in 1907, he proceeded at once to Foxboro, Mass., and entered the branch factory of the company he first worked for in Manchester, England. This was an instrument factory, making steam gauges, whistles, fog horns, sounding machinery and engine and boiler accessories, and he was with them for two years; next he was in Brooklyn, N. Y., employed at his trade for the Mergenthaler Linotype Company; then he returned to Foxboro, Mass., and did experimental work on clocks, and other electrical works, and worked for two and a half years more; he then removed to Canton, Mass., and was employed by the Electric Goods Manufacturing Company as a designer of clocks. In 1913 he arrived in California and went to the Lick Observatory, Mount Hamilton, and was engaged for a year in building telescopes, cameras and spectographs. Removing to Stockton in 1914 he went to work for J. C. Skinner Automobile Company and was later with the Holt Manufacturing Company and the Sampson Gas Engine Works, having charge of the tool room of the latter. He then opened his own business at 6 East Miner Avenue, doing expert work for automobiles and trucks and other machine work, besides expert tool work such as punches, dies, drill jigs, milling fixtures and mechanical and electrical instruments. His years of experience have enabled him to take his place among the best informed and most enterprising of mechanics in Stockton. A brother, Hugo A. Paul, had charge of the Hall Scott motor shop and helped design and build the first eight-cylinder airship motor; he was a thorough mechanic and had an automobile repair shop; he died in March, 1920.

The marriage of Mr. Paul in Manchester, England, united him with Miss Mary Antony, a native of that place, and they are the parents of two children, Arnold Hugo and Mabel Melita. Mr. Paul has recently designed and built a ditching machine for irrigation work, on which he obtained a patent in February, 1922. He has also made several other useful machines. Three years of his time in the East was spent in experimental work for the Industrial Instrument Company in Foxboro, designing and improving electrical and mechanical instruments. He is a member of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants' Protective Association, and is an unbiased supporter of all that is best for San Joaquin County.

AMOS JONES.—One of the most capable men in the realty field of Central California, Amos Jones was also fortunate in having a wide experience as a civil engineer before entering this progressive business in which he has made such an outstanding success. An Easterner by birth, he was born in Dover, N. J., December 27, 1876, and when a child his parents located in Canon City, Colo. Here he was reared, attending the public schools and graduating from the Canon City high school in 1895. Continuing his studies at the State Agricultural College, he was graduated from there in 1898 as an irrigation engineer, and then became associated with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company. Later he returned to his alma mater as an instructor in civil engineering, and then entered the U. S. Reclamation Survey, spending a year on the Truckee-Carson project in Nevada. On his return to Colorado he became deputy engineer for the state of Colorado, holding this post for one year.

Coming to Stockton in 1904, Mr. Jones embarked in the real estate business under the firm name of Jones & McElwee. Later he entered into partnership with Howard Hammond and F. L. Williams, as Hammond, Jones & Williams, and this firm handled many large land development projects. In 1909 they sold the Weber Tule Ranch to Baldwin & Howell of San Francisco, and in 1912 they formed a corporation and planted a thousand acres of land near Ripon to peaches and almonds, an ambitious undertaking which proved very successful. They put Yosemite Terrace on the market, a tract of 175 acres and one of Stockton's finest residence districts, and they also developed Stockton Acres, and thus were the means of attracting many new settlers to this locality. Their work was always on a large scale and they disposed of more than a million dollars' worth of property in the San Joaquin Valley to new residents, and thus had an important part in building up the county in a conservative, lasting way.

In 1917 Mr. Jones formed a partnership with James Y. Coates and they engaged in a general real estate business, specializing in the handling of large tracts and subdivisions. They have operated in Stanislaus and San Joaquin counties and have already successfully subdivided and disposed of the Elliott ranch of 5,030 acres, and several others. In December, 1920, T. H. Carpenter bought into the company. Since then the firm name has been the Jones-Coates Company, with offices at 507 Yosemite Building. Acting in conjunction with J. Henry Smith of Tracy, this company acquired the Pescadero Colony, formerly known as the McLaughlin Tract of 14,000 acres near Tracy, lying between Tracy and the San Joaquin River. This company has already made provisions for irrigation and good roads for the entire tract, and has subdivided it into twenty-acre farms which it is selling without any cash down payments; interest at six per cent is payable semi-annually in advance and no payment of principal is required for five years, therefore principal payments may extend over a period of ten years in equal annual installments, if desired, making a total of fifteen years' time in which to pay off the purchase price. It is the cream of the state, both in fertility and location.

Mr. Jones' marriage, which occurred at Safford, Ariz., in 1902, united him with Miss Della Gaume, a native of Ohio. Mr. Jones is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and of Charter Oak Lodge No. 20, K. P., having passed through all chairs of the latter and attended the Grand Lodge. While California owes a never-ending debt of gratitude to the early settlers who braved the perils and hardships of its pioneer days, the same meed of credit is due to men who, like Amos Jones, have given years of training and study to these great problems of development and reclamation, and whose initiative and capability have made it possible for hundreds of homes to be carved out of uncultivated tracts, thus adding millions to the wealth of this district, and helping to make California the garden of the world.

HOMER LOUIS GRAY.—For the past twenty years Homer Louis Gray has continuously resided in San Joaquin County, with the exception of a year and a half spent in San Francisco in the manufacture of circular mailing tubes, of which he was the patentee. He was born in South Bend, Ind., March 6, 1869, a son of William A. and Mary (Keasey) Gray, both natives of Indiana. His father was a harness-maker and leather-worker in Indiana, and reared a family of five children: Joseph C., a rancher near Woodbridge; William Ned, in Colorado; Elizabeth, in San Joaquin County; Homer Louis, of this sketch; and Porter S., also a rancher here. The parents died in California in 1922, only two days apart.

On October 22, 1892, at Del Norte, Colo., Homer L. Gray was married to Miss Gertrude A. Verback, a native of Janesville, Wis., a daughter of George A. and Sarah V. (Stafford) Verback, the former also a native of Janesville, while the latter was of English birth. Her father owned a farm of a quarter-section of land at Janesville, where he and his wife reared a family of six children: John A., of Denver, Colo.; Ernest, deceased at the age of seventeen; Martha, Mrs. Mercer, residing at Stockton; Gertrude, Mrs. Gray; George, of Lodi; and Harry, accidentally drowned at the age of twenty-one. When Mrs. Gray was six years old, her parents removed to Nebraska and settled in Seward County, where they lived for four years. Then they removed to Goodland, Kans. The father farmed and conducted a blacksmith shop here for five years, and then the family removed to Mosca, Colo. Since 1903 the family has resided in Stockton. The father passed away at Stockton in 1912, aged sixty-nine; the mother survived until 1917, dying at seventy-five years of age.

Upon arriving in California, in November, 1903, Mr. Gray engaged in ranching near Stockton for three years. He then moved to San Francisco, where he began the manufacture of his patented mailing tube. He continued its manufacture for a year and a half and then sold the Coast right. During this time the family resided in Alameda, but Mr. Gray's factory was in San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Gray are the parents of three children: Phyllis, deceased in 1910; Marion, now Mrs. M. T. Williams, who has one daughter, Helen Lois Gertrude; and Helen Viola, Mrs. N. M. Bush. When Mr. Gray sold his business in San Francisco, he settled in North San Joaquin County, where he bought forty-three acres, a part of the old John Thompson ranch, located on the Woodbridge-Thorn-ton road, five miles northwest of Woodbridge. At the time of purchase, twenty-five acres of the ranch was in vineyard. Since then he has planted the balance to vines, and the whole acreage is now set to a vineyard of Mission, Tokay and Zinfandel grapes. Thirty acres of his vineyard is interset with walnut trees. Fraternally, Mr. Gray is a member of the Woodmen of the World. He and his family are members of the Congregational Church.

JOSEPH TEIXEIRA.—Well known among the popular public officials of San Joaquin County is Joseph Teixeira, the efficient acting city marshal of Tracy. He was born at St. George, in the Azores Islands, April 10, 1886, the son of John and Mary (Machado) Teixeira, pioneer settlers of Santa Clara County. John Teixeira was a tradesman in the employ of the Brick Manufactory at San Jose and Pleasanton; he passed away at San Jose in 1919, and his widow resides with her son near Tracy.

Joseph Teixeira received a good elementary education, first at the district school in Mountain View, and then at the Hamilton school in San Jose; and after that he entered the employ of John Stocks Sons in San Jose, where he learned the plumbing and sheet-metal working trade, remaining in that shop for seven years. For the next five years he was in charge of the installing of Byron Jackson deep-well pumps, representing C. L. Meisterheim, at San Jose, in their work throughout Central California. In 1902 he went to Cherokee, in Butte County, and engaged in hydraulic mining for a large improvement corporation, and was occupied in this venture until 1904.

Six years ago Mr. Teixeira came to Tracy and acquired forty acres of choice land in the Naglee-Burke district, which he developed into a successful dairy and alfalfa ranch, at the same time that he took full charge of the Naglee-Burke Irrigation district pumping plant, which he continued to manage until three years ago; but he sold out his interests, on removing to the ranch south of Tracy, where he formed a partnership with Mr. White, his father-in-law, in buying 160 acres, he keeping 60 acres and Mr. White 100 acres.

In 1919 Mr. Teixeira was appointed deputy city marshal of Tracy, an office he filled to everybody's satisfaction until ten months ago, when he became acting city marshal, and authorized to take entire charge of the peace officer's work. Since then, he has carried out a series of raids on illicit liquor and drug sellers in the environs of the city, and has the hearty support of the county officials for his fearless attacks on any lawbreakers, irrespective of their position and influence. He is also a deputy sheriff of the county.

At Cupertino, in 1909, Mr. Teixeira was married to Miss Mary White, the eldest child of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. White, whose life-story is given elsewhere in this volume, and their fortunate union has been blessed with the birth of four children: Mabel, Edwin, Lucile and Marie. Mr. Teixeira is a Catholic, and a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Druids of San Jose, and also of the S. E. S. of Tracy. He owns considerable real estate and residential property in Tracy, and is a strong advocate of irrigation, serving as a director for the Banta-Carbona district.

WALTER R. WOOCK.—Gifted with mechanical and inventive ability of a high order, Walter R. Woock, president of the Superior Manufacturing Company of Lodi, is one of the youngest executives in the state of California heading a manufacturing enterprise of the scope of this company. Already having accomplished much, he has a still more brilliant future before him. Mr. Woock was born at Los Angeles, January 31, 1892, the eldest son of Julius and Eliza (Nickel) Woock, both natives of Germany. The father has been a resident of the United States for thirty-six years, and in 1904 removed with his family to Lodi, where he purchased an eighty-acre ranch, improved it, adding much to its value, and later sold it for $65,000. The family now reside on a ranch one and a half miles east of Lodi, forty-two acres of which is devoted to Tokay grapes, making a very valuable property. Mr. and Mrs. Julius Woock are the parents of four children: Walter R., of this sketch; and Herbert J., Eric M., and Hattie.

Twelve years of age when his parents took up their residence at Lodi, Walter R. Woock finished his education in the public schools of Lodi and at Heald's Business College at Stockton. He also took a correspondence course in mechanical engineering, supplementing this with much home study along this line, and has a valuable practical experience in the machinery and engineering fields. He was with the Monarch Foundry of Stockton, in the selling and installing departments, and later with the Marine Iron Works of Stockton, where he was engaged in pump building and installing. He afterwards became a part-owner of the latter company, and was identified with the pump department.

In 1914, with his brothers Herbert J. and Eric M. Woock, Mr. Woock established the Superior Manufacturing Company at Lodi. A sketch of the company's organization and development is given below. The company was incorporated August 1, 1919. He is the president of the company, Herbert J. Woock is vice-president, and Eric M. Woock is treasurer. The Superior pumps, manufactured by this company, represent the inventive genius of the three brothers, who hold patents on the following types: twin pump, packless pump, shaftless deep-well pump, and elbow check pump. They have built up one of the most modern pump manufactories in the state, and their enterprise would do credit to men much their seniors. The Superior Manufacturing Company is a member of the Lodi Business Men's Association, the Manufacturers' Association of San Francisco, and the 100 Per Cent Club of San Francisco. Occupying a leading place among the business men of Lodi, Mr. Woock has already contributed much to its commercial growth through the establishment of his thriving plant and the genuine interest he takes in all that adds to the development of the locality.

SUPERIOR MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

—A thriving concern with one of the most up-to-date plants in the state, the Superior Manufacturing Company of Lodi has built up a reputation for its pumps and pumping machinery that has gone far and wide. The plant was first established in 1914 by the three Woock brothers, Walter R., Herbert J. and Eric M., and was incorporated on August 1, 1919. The new, modern factory was completed May 1, 1920, at a cost of $150,000. It is finely appointed, equipped with special machinery to facilitate its economic operation. It comprises the following departments: Pattern department, drafting room, manufacturing department, machine shop, testing department, and show room.

The brothers are endowed with unusual mechanical ability and inventive genius, and the Superior pumps are the result of the new ideas in construction which they have developed, the design having been worked out by constant study and experimentation on their part. Applying the knowledge gained by their years of experience in the design and manufacture of high-grade pumps, they can assure their customers of a superior article, made of the best of materials and correctly finished. The great demand for their products from every locality where they have once been used, and the long list of repeated orders from satisfied customers, are the best references as to their quality and efficiency. One of their leaders is the shaftless deep-well pump, patented by them. Among its marked advantages are the following: No overhead power; no shafting; no pump packing; no priming; no end thrust; no pump bearings; less horse power than any other deep-well pump; can be installed at any angle; impervious to sand and grit, which put many pumps out of commission. They have also patented their twin pump, packless pump, and elbow check pump, all of which have special features; and among other articles manufactured are single centrifugal pumps, combined elbow check valves, flap valves, and large pipe fittings. The sizes of their pumps run from one and a half to twelve inches, designed to discharge from sixty to 4,500 gallons per minute. They also make special pumps to order, and have installed plants on many of the large ranches of San Joaquin County, where they are giving complete satisfaction.

The Superior Manufacturing Company has agencies in Kern, Kings, San Joaquin, Tulare, Madera, Sacramento and Placer counties; and with the growth of their business, they will doubtless maintain branches all over the state and in the adjoining territory. With the reclamation of waste lands through irrigation, these deep-well pumps will play no small part, thus adding to the natural wealth and productivity of every locality in which they are installed. The business of the company is in the hands of the following efficient personnel: Walter R. Woock, president; Herbert J. Woock, vice-president; Eric M. Woock, treasurer; H. T. Bailey, secretary; while the other members of the board of directors are H. C. Beckman, Otto Spenker and Percy S. Webster. The company has just been reincorporated as The Superior Iron Works, and the manufacturing will be continued and gradually increased.

MARCO GIOVANETTI.—An esteemed resident of the Wildwood district of San Joaquin County, Marco Giovanetti has resided in this district for the past eighteen years, making his home on his choice estate thirteen miles southeast of Stockton. Like most successful men he began with small capital, and his own industry and ability are the sources of what he has gained. He was born in Canton Ticino, Switzerland, November 4, 1863, a son of Joseph and Louisa Giovanetti. Joseph Giovanetti, a native of Switzerland, came to California and settled near Stockton in 1870. At thirteen years of age, in 1877, Marco Giovanetti accompanied his mother and brother, Sylvan, to Stockton and the family home was established on the Linden Road where the father had purchased nine acres. The father was a gardener and for seven years raised vegetables for the Stockton markets and during this time Marco, our subject, helped and learned thoroughly the gardening and marketing business. In 1884 the mother passed away survived by her husband and three sons and the vegetable business was carried on until 1887, when the father and his youngest son, Joseph, returned to Switzerland, where the father died in June, 1919. Joseph Giovanetti still resides in Switzerland.

Marco Giovanetti received a good education in the public schools of his native land and after coming to California attended school but three months; however, he has improved his leisure hours by reading and has also been a keen observer, so that he has acquired a good practical education. After his father's return to Switzerland, he continued the market garden business for twenty-two years, making a great success of it. His fruit and vegetable wagons covered the entire city of Stockton and out on the French Camp Road for a distance of twenty-eight miles.

The marriage of Mr. Giovanetti occurred at Stockton June 9, 1886 and united him with Miss Josephine Leoni, a native of Stockton, born October 4, 1867, a daughter of Antone and Pauline (Peri) Leoni, both natives of Canton Ticino, Switzerland. Antone Leoni came to California via Cape Horn in a small sailing vessel in 1850 and after a short time settled at Stockton, where he engaged in the market garden business for twenty-eight years. Of their eight children Mrs. Giovanetti is the second eldest. The mother passed away on January 25, 1895, and the father on January 2, 1910. Mr. and Mrs. Giovanetti are the parents of five children: Louise, Mrs. F. A. Balatti, has three children, Alvin, Leland and Bernice; Marco, Jr., served in the U. S. Navy as second engineer for seven years and during the World War he served on a destroyer in Atlantic waters, and at present he is in the employ of the Western Electric Company in development work in Nevada; Amelia is a registered nurse in the Stockton Hospital; Julia and Alfred are at home. In the spring of 1904 Mr. Giovanetti bought the Ward ranch thirteen miles southeast of Stockton in the Wildwood school district, consisting of 195 acres of choice wheat land and twenty-five acres of sixteen-year-old vineyard, and it is now a very valuable property; he also still retains the nine acres purchased by his father in 1870 on which the first California home was established. Mr. Giovanetti received his U. S. citizenship papers in Stockton in 1890 and since that time has voted the Republican ticket. For the past sixteen years he has served as trustee of the Wildwood school district and for eight years was road superintendent of the district; he is also a member of the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau, and fraternally, a member of the Red Men, of Stockton, of which he was a charter member.

JOSEPH N. ADAMS.—Joseph N. Adams was born at Pattonsville, Scott County, Va., on June 2, 1877, but was reared near Gate City, Va. His father, the Rev. James M. Adams, was not only a Methodist divine in that state, but was presiding elder of Abbington district, and became one of the locally famous men of the South. He was a noted debater, and was called before President U. S. Grant and his cabinet to preach a sermon. James M. Adams was born near Pattonsville, Scott County, Virginia, July 22, 1840. Although a Southern man, he was for the freedom of slaves and he espoused the cause of the Union. He was forced into the Southern Army, but left it and made his way to Kentucky and enlisted in the Union Army, in which he served until the close of the war. After the war he returned to the South, and feeling the call to preach, became a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He was a member of the Masonic Order. He died on July 9, 1878. A monument was erected in his honor, and now stands in the beautiful public square at Pattonville, an imposing and lasting memorial to one of the noblest Americans who contributed, by his industrious life and unselfish efforts, to make that portion of the United States a place worth living in. He was the father of nine children, of whom Joseph N. Adams is next to the youngest.

Joseph N. Adams attended the public schools. At the age of twelve years he worked in the Virginia logging camps for the meager salary of six dollars a month, and later he farmed and ran a hotel. In 1905, he came out to Stockton and worked for three months for the Southern California Traction Company, and for six months for the St. Clair Dry Goods Company, owned by Mr. Shields. When he had been there only three weeks, Mr. Shields made a trip East and put him in full charge of the store. The old employees did not like a new man over them, so he was obliged to discharge a number of the help to restore the necessary spirit of loyalty and cooperation. When Mr. Adams arrived in Stockton his cash capital was $110, but his prosperity today tells a far different and more enviable story.

Some fifteen years ago, he started in the real estate, loan and insurance business, in which he has been phenomenally successful. He is the owner of seven apartment houses in Stockton, three of which he has himself erected, and others of which he has remodeled. He also owns a ranch of 160 acres about nine miles southeast of Stockton, where he raises alfalfa and grain, and maintains a strictly sanitary dairy. He has been very successful in buying and selling real estate in Stockton, was one of the organizers of the Stockton Apartment House Owners' Association, and now acts as vice-president of that excellent organization.

When Mr. Adams married, he took for his wife Miss Myrtle G. Darter, also a native of Virginia, and with her co-operation he has become prominent in many fields, being, for example, one of the influential owners of the Stockton Home Investment Company. He was made a Mason in San Joaquin Lodge No. 9, F. and A. M. He is a member of Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F., of which he is past grand, and also a member of Parker Encampment, and Rainbow Lodge of the Rebekahs, at Stockton, and of the Stockton Kiwanis Club. His wife is a member of the O. E. S. and the Rebekahs. Mr. Adams while living in Virginia had the courage of his convictions and was an avowed Republican, voting and preaching the doctrines of Lincoln and taking part in all activities of the party. Since coming to Stockton, he continues an ardent Republican but does not find it necessary to take the same active stand in politics. He is an advocate of good roads and public improvements and ready at all times to give of his time and means toward any movement that has for its aim the improvement and building up of the city of Stockton, San Joaquin County, and the State of California.

All in all, the life-story of Mr. Adams and his distinguished forbears presents much that may be inspiring to the American youth, and much that should steady and console those who fear, at times, for the future of social organizations long characteristic of our Republican country.

CHARLES M. LONG.—The family name of Long is well-known throughout San Joaquin County, where Charles M. Long has passed his entire life, and where his parents lived for many years. He was born on the old Charles C. Long ranch at Waterloo on November 28, 1860. His father, Charles C. Long, was born October 20, 1835, in Schuylkill County, Pa., his parents being Michael and Barbara Long, both natives of Germany. They came to America in 1828 and settled in Pennsylvania, where Michael Long went to work in the coal mines, and afterward took up a coal claim from the government, but was unable to develop it because of a lack of funds. The mine afterwards became very valuable. He passed away in 1875. Charles C. Long was reared on a farm until eighteen years of age, when he learned the wagon-maker's trade. In 1855 he started for California via the Isthmus, and after forty days landed in San Francisco. He went to Sacramento, and then to Stockton, where he worked at his trade about five months. He then went to the mines in Siskiyou County, remaining eighteen months, and then to Trinity County, where he mined for about two years. In 1859 he returned to Stockton and started a wagon shop, which he ran for one year. Selling out his shop, he then located 160 acres on the Calaveras River, about ten miles from Stockton. After four years he sold the place and located on 220 acres on the Waterloo road. It was then covered with timber and underbrush, but in time became one of the best-improved farms in the county. In the fall of 1859, Mr. Long married Miss Rachel Meyers, a native of New Orleans. They were the parents of nine children, seven of whom are now living: Charles M.; Barbara, now Mrs. Charles Lydecker; Lucy, wife of James Main; and Frank, Henry, Joseph and Rosa. The father passed away at the age of fifty-six, and the mother died during February, 1921, at the age of eighty.

Charles M. Long attended the Greenwood district school and the Stockton Business College, and grew up on his father's farm, remaining at home until he was twenty-nine years old. He then took up the machinist's trade, working for Houser & Haines of Stockton for thirteen years, after which he was for two years with the Sampson Iron Works, in the construction department. When his father died, he located in Lodi and built a house on a three-acre vineyard about one-half mile east of the city, and here his mother resided with him until her death. In 1901, Mr. Long started his business of well-boring, and since then has sunk wells all over the county. Of late years most of the wells bored have been twelve-inch holes, rarely over 200 feet deep.

At Stockton, on March 3, 1889, Mr. Long was married to Miss Letitia Williamson, a native of Stockton, and daughter of Philander and Anna (Ingwood) Williamson. Philander Williamson came from Detroit, Mich., across the plains to California in 1852, his wife following the next year via Panama; and they settled in Stockton. They had a family of four children: Charles, Dean, George, and Letitia, the wife of our subject. The mother passed away at the age of thirty years, and the father at eighty-two years. Mrs. Long attended the old Vineyard school in Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Long are the parents of three children: Rosa Bell, now Mrs. Bert Wakefield, a student of music in New York City; Ethel, now Mrs. Michelson, of Lodi; and Lowell Leland, at home. Mr. Long is a Democrat in national politics. Fraternally, he is a member of the Foresters of America.

C. M. Long,

WALTER W. BEIDLEMAN.—An energetic, hard-working and successful young engineer, who as assistant superintendent of construction of pumps and pipe lines of the Shell Company of California is demonstrating his aptitude and capableness, is Walter W. Beidleman, a native of Oregon, born near La Grande, on March 4, 1886. His parents, Edward Thomas and Helen (Porter) Beidleman, were sturdy pioneers of the West; the father, a native of Illinois, emigrating to Oregon as early as 1850, accompanied by two brothers who, at that time, conducted a freighting business in Union County, Wyoming. Some years later, Edward Thomas Beidleman, the father, was appointed United States superintendent of the Indian reservation in Oregon. In 1892 the parents removed to southern California, where they now reside near Lemon Grove, San Diego County.

Removing to San Diego, Walter W. entered the San Diego high school and in 1900 he went to work for Braun & Company, of Los Angeles, to learn the machinist trade, spending four and one-half years in completing the apprenticeship; then he became assistant engineer of construction with the San Diego electric railway power house and was so occupied until 1906, when, on March 10, he enlisted as a second-class machinist in the U. S. Navy, serving until January 12, 1909, when he received his honorable discharge with the rate of chief machinist, U.S.S. Preble. He immediately enlisted in the Merchant Marine service on board the Texan, a large freighter, as third engineer; soon after was transferred to the Governor with rating of second engineer; and was then promoted to first engineer and on the next trip out to sea, was transferred to the Nebraska, bound for the Hawaiian Islands. After this trip he went aboard the Spokane as first engineer. His last sea service was on board the Ventura, which plied between Seattle and Sidney, Australia, and in 1912 he left the service to take up machinist work on the construction of the oil pipe line from Taft, Kern County, to San Pedro, in the employ of the General Construction Company, becoming station foreman and in charge of construction machinery, being thus occupied until 1914. During the next six months he took an interesting trip to Alaska.

Since early in 1915, with the exception of the time from May 8, 1918, to the time of his discharge, March 16, 1919, Mr. Beidleman has been connected with the Shell Company of California; and in January, 1921, he was appointed to the position of assistant superintendent of construction of the pumps and pipe line under Fred B. Simms, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work; he is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

The marriage of Mr. Beidleman occurred in Juneau, Alaska, on April 10, 1912, and united him with Miss Nina May Bethel, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Bethel, both deceased, who was living with a sister in that city; in 1914 Mrs. Beidleman again made a visit to her sister there. Mr. Beidleman has been the participant of two trips around the world, one on the S.S. Texan and one on the U.S.S. Meade, the latter during the time of the World War in 1918; he also held the post of engineer with the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, on board U.S.S. Liberator in army transportation of the A. E. F., which earned for him his U. S. unlimited marine engineer license, of which he is justly proud. Fraternally, Mr. Beidleman is an active member of the Masonic order.

GUSTAV H. ALTENHOFF.—One of Stockton's successful merchants whose industry and application have enabled him to build up a prosperous business, is Gustav H. Altenhoff, the proprietor of the Central Bazaar at 17 South California Street. He was born in Essen, Germany, May 26, 1869, and from the age of fourteen worked in the coal mines there until he was twenty years old. The prospect of enlarged opportunities caused him to leave his native land in 1889, and in August of that year he arrived in California. The first year of his residence here he worked on a ranch east of Stockton for eight dollars a month, putting in long hours, from 5 o'clock in the morning to 11 o'clock at night. Next, he was employed as a cook at a restaurant at the San Joaquin County Fair Grounds and then was employed by his uncle, T. H. Eicholz, in his general merchandise store in the old Masonic Temple Building on North El Dorado Street.

On February 13, 1891, Mr. Altenhoff started in business for himself in a little store only eight by ten feet, on California and Market Streets, handling tinware and notions. From that small beginning he has advanced in his business to his present commodious store at 19 South California Street. It is one of the largest retail establishments in Stockton, occupying three floors and a basement, dealing in household goods, toys, etc., and has been the firm's home since 1906. He has built up this business by dealing honestly with the people, giving good values and courteous treatment.

Mr. Altenhoff's marriage, which occurred at Tracy, August 23, 1893, united him with Miss Frances Gunder, a native of Silesia, Germany, and they have one son, Henry G., who is married and has a daughter, Lillian Frances. In the summer of 1922, Mr. and Mrs. Altenhoff took a trip back to their native land, which Mr. Altenhoff had not seen for thirty-three years, and among the pleasant events of their journey was a banquet tendered by Mr. Altenhoff to sixty-eight of his boyhood friends. They also attended the Passion Play at Oberammergau, and many places of interest, but were glad to return to their California home. In fraternal life Mr. Altenhoff is a member of the Druids and Fidelity Lodge.

ALBERT G. JOHNSTON.—Prominent among the popular fraternal society men in San Joaquin County is Albert G. Johnston, the efficient secretary of the Loyal Order of Moose, No. 391, whose headquarters are at the Moose Club, 538 East Market Street, Stockton. He was born at Half Moon Bay, in San Mateo County, on March 13, 1870, the son of John and Mary H. (Carter) Johnston, early settlers of California, born in Pittsburgh, Pa., and Buffalo, N. Y., respectively, the father crossing the plains in an ox-team train in 1849. They followed agricultural pursuits and had a family of eight children: Wm. H. is in the lumber business in Cotati; Mrs. Belle M.

O'Connor died in San Jose; John E. is with the Standard Oil Company in San Jose; James G. is with the San Jose Transfer Company; George F. is with the Standard Oil Company at Brentwood; Albert G. is the subject of this article; Frank B. died in San Jose in May, 1921; Elsie M. is Mrs. Charles Caple of Brentwood. It thus happened that while he enjoyed the advantages of a comfortable home, Albert commenced his schooling in attending the local school at Half Moon Bay.

Later, he continued his studies at San Jose, and then, in Fresno, he attended Fresno Commercial College, his father having removed to that city in the late '70s, to establish there a hardware and implement business. From 1883 to 1890 he was with his father in the hardware trade, and in the latter year he and George H. Roundey bought the business and conducted the same under the firm name of Roundey & Johnston. In 1893 he sold his interest in the concern and took up farming in San Benito County, and later he removed to San Francisco, where he was connected with the San Francisco Laundry Association, in which business he remained until 1906. The same year he located in Stockton and built the New Method Laundry; and after running that for seven years he sold it and became associated with the Exclusive Laundry for three years as its foreman.

In June, 1917, he was appointed secretary of the Moose Lodge. He joined that organization five years before, so that he is now an honorary past dictator, and with experience, loyalty and enthusiasm, and a fortunate personality, he has been very successful in the administration of the lodge's affairs. He also belongs to the Stockton Knights of Pythias, the Pohono Red Men at Stockton, and Hesperian Parlor No. 137, N. S. G. W., at San Francisco.

E. GUY WILLIAMS, D. D. S.—Among the rising and successful professional men of the San Joaquin Valley, the name of E. Guy Williams, D. D. S., stands pre-eminent as a successful dentist of Lodi. He was born at Elliott, San Joaquin County, Cal., on December 1, 1879, a son of Ory E. and Emma (Swett) Williams. His father is a native of Oregon and his mother of Vermont. In the early seventies his father settled in San Joaquin County and raised grain for fifteen years in the vicinity of what is now Christian Colony; later he removed to Oakdale; then to Ukiah, Mendocino County, where he was proprietor of the Palace Hotel. He now resides in Colfax, Placer County, Cal., with his wife, where he is a successful merchant. His first experience in farming in San Joaquin County was on the tule lands of the Sargent ranch, and he experienced many trying difficulties before the land was reclaimed. There are three children in the family: E. Guy, the subject of our review; Bernice; and Bertha, the wife of S. L. Price of Oakland, who has four children.

E. Guy Williams attended the Stockton grammar and high schools and afterward Ukiah high school, where he was graduated. After a course at Heald's Business College he decided to take up the study of dentistry and entered the dental department of the University of California and graduated in 1903 with the degree of D. D. S. For two years he practiced his profession in San Francisco, at the end of which time he removed to Lodi and began his practice. Since 1907 he has been the secretary and treasurer of the Lodi Public Library and is the oldest library member on the board at the present time and helped to secure the Carnegie library building for the city. He is a member of the national, state and county dental associations. Mrs. Williams was Mrs. Mabel (Tierney) Gregg, born in New York City, who presides gracefully over his home. By his former marriage he has two daughters, Elizabeth A. and Margaret.

Fraternally Dr. Williams is a member of the Lodi Lodge No. 267 of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand, and is also a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and the Woodmen of the World, and an active member of the Lions Club. He has a large circle of warm friends throughout this part of the state, enjoying the high regard of all with whom he has associated.

MRS. THRESIE M. PLOTZ.—An interesting example of the American woman who is able to hold her own in the development and management of important ranch property, is afforded by Mrs. Thresie M. Plotz, who lives on the Jack Tone Road, about eleven and one-half miles out of Stockton, where she has a dairy farm of seventy-four choice acres. An Austrian by birth, she was born in Landskron, the daughter of Frank and Thresie Plotz, hers being a curious instance of the perpetuation of the same family name, after marriage as before. Her father reached the age of sixty, and her mother rounded out her fifty-third year. There were four children in the family, her three brothers bearing the names of Frank, Peter and Joseph. She attended the excellent schools in her locality in Austria until she was twelve years old, and then she came to the United States with her parents, bringing with her some of those homely and much-prized virtues for which her countrymen for centuries have been noted. Her father was a stonemason, and he settled in Steele County, Minn., where she was able to finish her schooling.

In 1895, Miss Plotz came out to California and Stockton, and in May, 1896, she married John Plotz, who was born in a village neighboring her native place, and called Bomich-Trubau. He came out to Minnesota in 1880, and four years later to California, but returned to Minnesota. In 1886, he came back to the Coast and settled at Stockton. In 1902, the home-place of 160 acres was purchased, eleven and one-half miles out of Stockton; and a portion of this ranch has since been devoted to general dairying, and has been developed and improved under the wise administration of Mrs. Plotz. The ranch has been divided, Mrs. Plotz owning seventy-four acres, which she devotes to dairying and grain raising.

Six children have come to add to the happiness of this estimable lady, herself the center of a wide circle of devoted friends. Mary is Mrs. Raymond Moran, of San Francisco. John, a promising young man of nineteen years, passed to the great Beyond. Emma is Mrs. Chris Battalion, of Stockton. And the others are Frieda, Bertha, and John Plotz, Jr. Mrs. Moran has two children—Marie Ellen and Raymond, and Mrs. Battalion has one, named Norman Francis. Mrs. Plotz is a Republican; and in her civic relations she is public-spirited, and deeply interested in the great questions of the day.

Mr & Mrs John Plotz

REV. PAUL A. ANDERSON.—Among the devoted clergy of San Joaquin County who have done so much, through their unselfish labors and high ideals, is the Rev. Paul A. Anderson, the pastor of St. Bernard's Catholic Church at Tracy. He was born at Lagro, Ind., on February 12, 1879, the son of Philomen A. and Elizabeth Winifred (Dimond) Anderson, both natives of Ohio, but who emigrated to Indiana in the early 50's. His father passed away in the early 80's and the family came to California in 1888. Father Anderson refers to his ancestral record with just pride. His maternal ancestors were of Irish descent, while his paternal ancestors were Scotch and English, and he is of the fourth generation who have been born in America. His mother passed away while residing in Palo Alto in 1918, survived by three children: Paul A., Mrs. Beatrice C. Miller, and Wilfred L. Anderson, and by two sisters, Mary F. and Margaret Dimond, residing at the parsonage in Tracy. His father's uncle, Rev. Peter A. Anderson, O.P., died at Sacramento on November 27, 1850, while attending the sick during a severe epidemic of that year, and it is recorded that he was the first priest to pass away in California after the territory had become a state. The late Dr. Zahm, of Washington, D. C., who for many years was active on the faculty board of Notre Dame University in Indiana, was a cousin of Father Anderson. Dr. Zahm was a close personal friend of the late Theodore Roosevelt and accompanied him on his trip through South America. The late Janarius A. McGahan, who was a prominent writer for the London "Times," and the New York "World," and known as the liberator of Bulgaria, during the Crimean War, was Father Anderson's great uncle on his mother's side.

After arriving in California, the family located at Livermore for a few years, and there Paul attended the public schools and when out of school worked at odd jobs. The Anderson family lived in Livermore from 1888 to 1894, when they moved to San Jose. His schooling was interrupted for five years, during which time he worked in commercial lines, but he felt the call of the Church, so he went back to his studies. On August 1, 1899, he entered the collegiate department of St. Patrick's Seminary at Menlo Park, San Mateo County, and after the usual courses of study, covering a period of ten years, he was ordained to the priesthood on June 22, 1909. He was then sent to St. John's at San Francisco, remaining there for several months, when he took up his work at St. Anthony's in East Oakland as assistant to Rev. Peter C. York, where for four years he labored in the discharge of his duties. Early in 1914, he was sent to St. Mary's at Stockton and assisted there for one and one-half years. In November of 1915 he returned to San Francisco and became the assistant pastor of St. Patrick's, where he remained for five years, and in March, 1920, received his first pastorate, St. Bernard's Church at Tracy. The history of this Church is comparatively short, there having been but three resident pastors preceding Father Anderson, and each for but a short term, except Father Thomas Moran, who built the present church and was its pastor for eight years. During October of 1921 a general renovation of the church and parsonage was started, including new interior decorations.

Father Anderson by his affability, scholarly attainments and kindness has greatly endeared himself not only to the members of his congregation, but to all who know him. Aside from his duties as pastor he has found time to accept and fill the position of director in the local Chamber of Commerce, a place he is filling with ability. The membership of the Church is constantly growing, and now that Father Anderson has put his hand to the helm, will be sure to increase in the healthiest manner.

DWIGHT E. BURGESS.—Not through time, place nor circumstances, but through concentrated effort, energy, perseverance and well applied business principles, Dwight E. Burgess has become the leading painting contractor of his native city of Stockton, where he was born January 13, 1887. He is the only son of Philip Henry and Sarah Emma (Preston) Burgess. The father was a native of Massachusetts and located in Stockton in 1883, an early settler on the south side; he was one of the first letter carriers in Stockton, and later retired from the service. For six years he was a reader in the Christian Science Church and was also a practitioner; he was also a member of Rawlins Post, G. A. R., No. 23. In 1882 he married Miss Sarah Emma Preston, born in the East, but reared in California, and they were the parents of two children, Dwight E. of this review, and Mrs. Lois E. Toal. The father passed away May 10, 1922, at his home in Stockton.

Dwight E. Burgess received his education in the Jackson and Grant schools of Stockton and then learned the trade of carriage painter; later he took up house painting. After completing his training, he worked with various contractors until his experience was sufficient to warrant establishing his own business, which he did about twelve years ago. He is thoroughly competent and up-to-date in his line, his contracts including a great number of the large jobs in Stockton and surrounding towns. Following is a list of the school buildings which show his handiwork: McKinley, Fair Oaks, Burwood school near Escalon; Galt grammar school; August school, Waterloo Road; Isleton, Sacramento County; Woodbridge grammar, Linden grammar, Florin grammar, the Garfield school at Lodi; also the auditorium of the Stockton high school, Victory school; the new addition to the El Dorado school; also the new addition to the Jefferson school, the Grant school, the gymnasium at Ripon school. Mr. Burgess has had the contract for more school buildings than any other contractor in Stockton. Besides having the contract for many fine residences in Stockton and the neighboring country, he has the following buildings to his credit: eight cottages for the Spreckels Sugar Company at Manteca, also office building and club house for the same company; the Marion Hotel, Japanese Hotel, Coffee Club Building, Solari Building, the Waldemar Apartments, Kitt Garage, Fontana Hotel, Tannery buildings, the Parkview Crematory, the Hippodrome Theater, the Atkinson Apartments at Sacramento. He also repainted the exterior of San Joaquin County court house, Japanese Hospital, Manthy and Granich Apartments; also the Bridgeford dairy barns at Patterson. He also had the contract for painting the addition to the Stockton paper mills, and California Packers' Association building. He uses the compressed air system for painting roofs and large buildings, which has given general satisfaction. In 1919 he was awarded the contract by the county board of supervisors to paint the iron work on twenty-nine county bridges, his bid being the lowest of several, thus saving the county several thousand dollars on this contract. He uses a sand blasting process for cleaning the old paint off.

The marriage of Mr. Burgess in the fall of 1914 united him with Miss Ruth M. Morris, a native daughter of California, reared at Galt, the daughter of Charles Morris and wife, early settlers of that community. Mr. Burgess belongs to the Eagles at Stockton, and in this fraternity and in other relations is held in the highest esteem.

GUSTAV AUGUST DANIEL BUSCHKE.—A pioneer of California since 1876, Gustav August Daniel Buschke has been a resident of Tracy since 1878, and has aided in the progress and development of the city and county. He was born in Posen, Germany, on September 4, 1857. Finishing his schooling in 1871, he took up the trade of harnessmaker at Zirke, Germany, where he served his apprenticeship and became master of the trade of harness making. In 1874, his uncle, Daniel Buschke, had settled on a farm near Stockton, California, and our subject had decided to leave his native land and come to America, and on July 3, 1876, he arrived in Stockton. Here he found employment at his trade; then removed to Livermore and worked for two years in the shop owned by Theodore Gorner. In 1878 he settled in Ellis, San Joaquin County, and he was put in charge of the Ellis Harness Shop, which he purchased during the fall of that year. In 1878 there were less than ten buildings in the town of Ellis, there being no school house or church building; late in 1878, the citizens decided to move this village and the buildings were put on wheels and drawn by mules and horses the two miles to the town of Tracy. Mr. Buschke made his first purchase of real estate that same year, a corner lot at Central Avenue and Eighth Street, the purchase price being $100; later he built a small shop and opened a harness-making business, the first of its kind in Tracy. He remained in this location until 1912, when he disposed of the property to J. Schmidt. In the early '80s Mr. Buschke acquired a corner lot on the opposite side of the street, and in 1920 let the contract for a $50,000 office and bank building which is occupied by the Pioneer Bank of Tracy; there are also four stores included. In 1878 and in 1909 Mr. Buschke suffered severe losses by fire, but his spirit of determination and enterprise overruled discouragement and success has come to him to a great degree.

In 1908 his father, G. Buschke, made an extensive visit to his sons and daughters in San Joaquin County, returning to Germany in 1909, where, a few weeks later, he passed away at the age of seventy-eight. His wife, who was Louisa Mietzner, passed away when only forty-one years of age.

The marriage of Mr. Buschke occurred in Oakland, California, and united him with Miss Caroline Service, a native of Indiana, who came to California with her parents in 1871. Her mother is still living on a ranch near Tracy, but her father has passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Buschke are the parents of eight children, six living: G. Arthur D. passed away when seven; Louisa M. is the wife of C. Ward, residing in Los Angeles, and has three children; Emilie C. is the wife of Thomas R. Evans, residing in Los Angeles, and has two children; Esther M. is the wife of Leo J. Schmidt, residing at Burlingame, and they have two children; Jessie I., Mrs. James C. Lane, resides at Whittier and has two children; N. Irene died in infancy; Clinton A. served in the U. S. Army overseas with the First Division, and was with the army of occupation fourteen months at Coblenz, Germany, and upon his return to America marched in parade in New York City and Washington, D. C., with General Pershing; he is now employed with the Union Oil Company at Fullerton, Cal.; and Grace Rosemond is at home. During 1881, Mr. Buschke received his U. S. citizenship papers while residing in Stockton. In politics he is a Republican. He belongs to the Lutheran Church of Tracy. He has been active in promoting enterprises for the good of the community, and his contributions to charities, public buildings and churches have been extensive. For a number of years he has been the sole survivor of the merchants who removed to Tracy from the village of Ellis in 1878.

JOHN R. WIEDERRICH.—A self-made man, trained from his youth to work on a farm. John R. Wiederrich was born in the rural district near the town of Tripp, S. D., April 20, 1897, a son of Jacob and Katherine Wiederrich. His father was a farmer in South Dakota and passed away shortly after the birth of the son. There were nine children in the family, of whom only three are now living: Katie, now Mrs. Schenhenberger, of Lodi; Bertha, Mrs. Handel, on a farm near Victor; and John R.

John R. Wiederrich came with his mother to California when he was five years old and attended the Harmony Grove school. After coming to California, his mother was married again to Mr. Fred Hieb, and resided on a ranch northwest of the Harmony Grove schoolhouse; later she removed to Lodi, and resides there now.

At the age of fourteen, John R. Wiederrich set out for himself, and found employment on the ranches in the county; and in 1918 he made his first purchase of land, which was thirty acres about three miles east of Lodi on the corner of Kettleman Lane and the Alpine road, all in bearing vineyard. Later he purchased seventeen acres near Kettleman Station, on the traction line, which he held for two years and then sold for a good profit. He also holds a five-year lease, with an option of purchase, on a forty-acre tract one mile south of his home place; he has already purchased thirteen and one-half acres of this tract, the sale being consummated very recently. Ten acres of the forty is in orchard and the balance is in vineyard. Mr. Wiederrich improved his home place with a fine farm house and other necessary buildings in 1918. In 1920 he organized the Crown Fruit Company, a co-partnership, his associates being Gottfried Handel and Louis Mettler. They built a packing house at Kettleman Station on the Central California Traction Company's line, and are engaged in business as growers, buyers, packers and shippers of grapes. Mr. Wiederrich has been president and manager of the company since its organization. He is also a stockholder in the Farmers and Merchants Bank in Lodi.

At Lodi, on June 25, 1916, Mr. Wiederrich was united in marriage with Miss Clara Handel, a daughter of Gottfried and Louise Handel, a native of South Dakota. Her father passed away, and her mother later became the wife of Lot Lachenmaier of Lodi. Mrs. Wiederrich also attended the Harmony Grove school, east of Lodi. They are the parents of three children: Belford, Leslie and Viola. Mr. Wiederrich and his family are members of the Zion Reform Church in Lodi, and he is secretary of the board of trustees. In politics he is a Republican.

ALBERT L. BARNES.—California owes much to its experienced and highly-progressive hotel men, among whom one finds Albert L. Barnes, the efficient and popular manager of both the Hotel Stockton and the Hotel Clark of Stockton. He was born at Buffalo, N. Y., on January 15, 1882, and was sent to the public schools of that city and the high school in Painesville, Ohio. Then he took a course at the business college at Pittsburgh, Pa., and after that associated himself with the American Window Glass Company, and then the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company, both in Pittsburgh.

In 1907, he located in Stockton, and soon thereafter entered the hotel business as a clerk, first with the Imperial and then with the Yosemite Hotel. When A. I. Wagner became the proprietor of the Hotel Stockton, in 1910, Mr. Barnes became associated with him as assistant manager; and ten years later, when Mr. Wagner took the management of the Hotel Clark, Mr. Barnes became manager of that hotel. At Mr. Wagner's death, in August, 1921, Mr. Barnes was appointed manager of both hotels, and this responsible position he now fills to everybody's satisfaction.

In 1907, at Oakland, Mr. Barnes married Miss Alma Wagner, a native of Ventura, and since coming to Stockton both Mr. and Mrs. Barnes have taken an active part in the city's civic and club life. He is a charter member of the Stockton Lions Club, belongs to Lodge No. 218 of the Stockton Elks, and to the Masons, being a member of the Stockton Lodge of Perfection, No. 12, S. R., and also the Sciois. He has a membership in the Stockton Golf and Country Club, the Yosemite Club, the Stockton Ad Club, and the Stockton Chamber of Commerce. With a natural aptitude for the important field he has chosen, and plenty of patriotic pride as well as patriotic optimism, Mr. Barnes has set before himself the task of making his hotels among the best in the state, regardless of the size of the city in which they are located.

JOHN C. BRAAS.—A successful Delta farmer, John C. Braas was born in Eckenforde, Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, May 21, 1866, a son of Otto and Magdalena Braas, both natives of the same place. Otto Braas served under the Danish flag in the war of 1864 and under the Prussian flag in 1870-71; he was one of five surviving members of his company who returned from the war of 1870. Early in life John C. left home and became a clerk in a general merchandise store, but in 1886 returned to the home ranch after the death of his father, where he remained for three years; he then left for America, arriving in New York on April 4, 1889, and came directly to California. In 1890 he rented land in the Dangers tract on the river, southwest of Stockton, and after four years of successful farming bought a tract of fifty-four acres on the Burns Cutoff, to which he has added until he now owns 210 acres.

On April 27, 1889, in Stockton, Mr. Braas was married to Miss Louise Beberwitz, a native of Germany, daughter of Magnus and Maria Beberwitz, both now deceased. Mrs. Braas arrived in Stockton in 1889. They are the parents of five children; Freda is the wife of Henry Hansen and they have three children and reside in San Francisco; Alma is the wife of William Buchan and they have one daughter and reside in San Francisco; Clara is the widow of Andrew Bowman and she has one daughter; Otto is a rancher assisting his father at home; and Louise is the wife of Herman Busch, a rancher on the Copperopolis Road. Mr. Braas has served seventeen years as trustee of the Independent school district, and is past president of Fidelity Lodge of the Sons of Herman.

JOSEPH C. BRICHETTO.—One of the largest grain farmers on the West Side, Joseph C. Brichetto is a native of San Joaquin County, born at Banta, California, on February 18, 1894, the youngest son of G. Joseph and Luigia (Canale) Brichetto, the former of whom is now deceased, and both of whom were natives of Italy. The father came to San Joaquin County in 1867, here mined, and then was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in tunnel construction for a time; he then settled in the San Joaquin gardens on the river, and later located in Banta, where he raised and sold vegetables. In 1872 he opened a general merchandise store at Banta, which he conducted for many years. He became a large farmer and landowner in the Banta section, owning, at the time of his death in 1916, 9,000 acres of land on the West Side. Mr. and Mrs. Brichetto were the parents of the following children: John N., Irene, Mrs. Mollie Raspo, Minnie, and Joseph C., our subject.

The education of Joseph C. began at the age of six years when he entered the public school at Banta and continued until 1910, when he was graduated from Heald's Business College at Stockton. The following year he entered his father's store as bookkeeper, remaining in that capacity until 1914, when, in partnership with his brother John N., he took active control of the business, Joseph C. doing the clerical work in the U. S. postoffice, located in their store since its establishment. Continuing in the business until 1917, Mr. Brichetto then sold his interest to J. J. Raspo, his brother-in-law, and became the manager of the vast agricultural interests of the Brichetto estate, consisting of several thousand acres of land on the West Side, which he has developed into one of the show places of Central California. The beautiful and modern Brichetto residence, facing on the Lincoln Highway from Sacramento to San Francisco, is one of the most complete country-seats in the county, and was built by Mrs. Luigia Brichetto in 1919 and 1920.

The marriage of Mr. Brichetto occurred at Stockton on March 30, 1921, and united him with Miss Eva Campodonico, a daughter of Emanuel and Louisa Campodonico, both natives of Italy, now retired residents of Stockton.

R. C. BRIDGE.—On January 1, 1920, R. C. Bridge took over the Chevrolet agency for Stockton, and the business is now located in the new, modern garage built expressly for the company at 815 East Weber Avenue. A native of Wisconsin, Mr. Bridge has been connected with the automobile industry since 1904, an early date in the history of this great business. For seven years he was traveling agent for the Studebaker, traveling west from Chicago, and later he was district manager for the company at Salt Lake City. For three years before coming to Stockton he was Pacific Coast manager for the Willard Battery Company, with headquarters at San Francisco. Since locating at Stockton, Mr. Bridge has firmly established himself among the representative business men there, and is popular in the ranks of the Elks and of the Rotary Club of Stockton. He is also prominent in Masonic circles, belonging to all the branches, including the Shrine and Knights Templar. An enthusiast over the line he is handling, Mr. Bridge contributes the following:

Chevrolet began in July, 1921, to build a better product and every part of the car that had given trouble was re-designed. The total number of changes between July 1, 1921, and July 1, 1922, was sixty-eight, and twenty-six additional changes were made in the 1923 model.

Three men stand out prominently in the Chevrolet resuscitation, though each denies his part. They are Pierre S. du Pont, Colin Campbell and W. S. Knudsen. Mr. du Pont, though not generally known, has been and is the acting head of Chevrolet. Mr. Campbell, vice-president, in charge of sales, began July 1, 1921, one of the most intensive campaigns in the history of merchandising. He traveled over forty-eight states, holding meetings, appointing distributors and agents. In the sixteen months between July 1, 1921, and November 1, 1922, the number of Chevrolet dealers and parts depots increased from 3,200 to 12,080 and sales jumped 250 per cent. When Mr. Knudsen, vice-president in charge of production, was asked about his part in reviving Chevrolet, he said: "The public is quick to recognize a good car now-a-days. All I did was jump in here and say, 'Come on, boys!'"

MILES JOSHUA BROWN.—Visitors to Tracy, shoppers, farmers, ranchers, and others, find at Central Ave. and Seventh St. the splendidly appointed establishment conducted by the Tracy Mercantile Company, doing a general department store business, catering to all lines of patronage and handling merchandise that meets all requirements. The business is handled under the supervision of Miles Joshua Brown, a widely experienced merchant, who was one of the founders of the establishment, giving that personal attention to details that has won success. A native of California, he was born at Turlock on October 3, 1878, a son of Richard and Phoebe Elida (Cowell) Brown. The father, Richard Brown, was born in Illinois and when a young man crossed the plains with ox teams to California, settling at French Camp, San Joaquin County; here he married Miss Cowell, a sister of Joshua Cowell, known as the "father of Manteca," that prosperous center in the South San Joaquin Irrigation District; later, in 1872, they removed to Turlock where they engaged in farming.

Miles Joshua attended the schools of Turlock and when he became old enough began ranching on his own account near Vernalis, San Joaquin County; later on he became a grain dealer and in time built up an extensive grain brokerage business on the West Side, which he has successfully operated for many years. In April, 1916, upon his removal to Tracy, he purchased an interest in the general merchandise business known as the Tracy Mercantile Company. Special departments are devoted to dry goods, clothing, and furnishing goods, shoes and hats, groceries, and cured meats, while the farm and agricultural implement department is well stocked to meet all demands of farmers and ranchers of the Tracy and West Side sections. Light hardware is another specialty of the house. Courteous and attentive clerks who know their business are prompt to serve in this well-conducted store.

Mr. Brown's marriage united him with Miss Pearl Graves, a daughter of Mrs. Eliza Graves, who resides at Vernalis. Her father, the late N. H. Graves, was an honored pioneer of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are the parents of two children, Hazel and Vance. Mr. Brown takes an active interest in the affairs of the Chamber of Commerce and is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West. His real estate holdings in the county are extensive. He is counted among the most successful grain farmers and stockraisers in the section east of Tracy.

GEORGE WOLF.—An early settler of Stockton who is a veteran of the Franco-Prussian War is George Wolf, a successful groceryman, located at No. 147 North Aurora Street, Stockton. He inherited many of the sterling qualities of his forebears, and these, combined with his own initiative and determination, have brought him a large degree of success. A native of Germany, he was born in Bavaria on November 22, 1848. He learned the trade of baker in his native land and was occupied in that line of work when the Franco-Prussian War broke out in 1870; he was recruited to the cavalry, but on account of his being a baker was attached to the bakery department; he was at the siege of Paris and baked bread in the field, under fire, and had many narrow escapes from being shot; however, he went through the entire campaign and accomplished his task under great difficulties. In 1876 he arrived in San Francisco and worked in a bakery, receiving $15 per month for the first three months, working from sixteen to eighteen hours per day; two years later he settled in Stockton and was employed by Jacob Miller in the City Bakery; later he was head baker for the State Bakery conducted by John Inglis. He then entered business for himself at the corner of Weber Avenue and Sutter Street on the site of the present Elks building; after fourteen years in that location he sold out and bought the two-story brick block at the corner of Aurora and Channel streets, his present location, where he has been since 1903; here he conducts a grocery store, and has built up a fine trade. In 1901 Mr. Wolf purchased a piece of property at No. 828 East Miner Avenue, where he built a home; later he moved the house back on the lot and erected a modern residence; this property he now leases.

Mr. Wolf's marriage at Stockton, May 14, 1901, united him with Miss Annie Tecklenburg, a native of San Francisco, Cal., a daughter of the well-known pioneer of San Joaquin County, Herman Tecklenburg, who came to California in 1866. Her father is a native of Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and sailed around the Horn to California in pioneer days and has been occupied with farming pursuits for many years in San Joaquin County. His wife, Margareta Jurgens, also came to California around Cape Horn, making the long journey in 1867. The parents are both still living and in 1920 celebrated their golden wedding. Of their seven children Mrs. Wolf is the oldest. She is possessed of much business ability and is of the greatest assistance to her husband in conducting his mercantile establishment, and Mr. Wolf accords her no small degree of credit for his success. Fraternally, Mr. Wolf belongs to the German Order of Druids, in which he is past arch and trustee; he is also a member of the Sons of Herman, in which he is a trustee. He is also a member of the American Order of Foresters, and the Fidelity Society, while Mrs. Wolf is a member of Ivy Circle of Druids, in which she is past arch druid. They are both members of the German Methodist Church and contribute generously to its benevolences.

Anna Wolf.

ROBERT JOHN CHARLES.—One of the popular residents of the city of Stockton is Robert John Charles, the general secretary of the Y. M. C. A., whose influence on the lives of young boys and men has displayed many elements worthy of emulation. Mr. Charles was born in Flushing Harbor, Falmouth, England, on December 19, 1887, a descendant of a family of English sea captains. At the age of seven years, he was sent to London to be educated and became a student at the Red Coat School. While there he sang in the cathedral choir and in this way earned enough to pay his tuition. His particular delight was in the study of geography, especially of the United States, and in this he stood at the head of his class. After completing his education he came to the United States in 1906, locating at Quincy, Mass., where he became assistant in the boys' work of the Y. M. C. A.; at the end of three years he was called to Montpelier, Vt., to take full charge of the boys' work of the same organization, where he remained for a year and a half until he was called to Tampa, Fla. He remained in Tampa until the United States entered the World War, when he was appointed transportation secretary for the Y. M. C. A., and was the second person to leave Florida for war work with the Y. M. C. A. He was stationed at Newport News, Va., in charge of the placement of secretaries on all troop trains and transports. In November, 1919, Mr. Charles was presented with a diamond ring in token of excellent and efficient service. When the First Division came home from overseas he was sent to New York City and Washington, D. C., in charge of the Y. M. C. A. workers in connection with the demobilization. Going back in his history, in 1913 he was a delegate to the first Y. M. C. A. convention of Workers with Boys, held in Culver, Ind., and the following year went to Oxford, England, as a delegate to the International Convention of Workers with Boys of the Y. M. C. A., taking a prominent part. While in England he visited his old home and while there the war broke out. Mr. Charles immediately volunteered his services in the British army, but was rejected on account of physical disability and also because he had become an American citizen. His wife volunteered for Red Cross service at the same time, but when Mr. Charles was rejected she could not remain, and a month later they returned to Tampa, Fla. Mr. Charles took up the work in Stockton in 1920, and the city is to be congratulated on securing a man of his national reputation for effective and far-reaching work. In the report made by Mr. Charles for the years 1921 and 1922 the following is a short resumé of some of the work accomplished: seven free lectures were given to the public with an attendance of over 2,500 persons; two branch libraries held in the building, one for boys and one for men; 108 visits were made to the sick; twenty men joined local churches and over 300 New Testaments were given to men and boys; 350 men were enrolled in gymnasium classes; 250 men took physical examinations; employment found for forty-two deserving boys; 130 Bible classes were held for boys with a total attendance of over 1,500; forty-five boys made Christian decisions; five boys were sent to Sacramento on a Christian calling conference, four of these have gone to college, one to be a minister, one to be a medical missionary, another a Christian lawyer, one a Christian civil engineer and the other is preparing himself to be a Y. M. C. A. secretary. Ninety-seven boys attended the summer camp; Stockton's first annual Mother's and Son's campaign with 250 mothers and sons at a dinner, reaching over 5,000 homes in Stockton; Father and Son's campaign with over 300 at a dinner; 332 gym classes held for boys with a total attendance of over 15,000, the grand total attendance in the boys' division being 59,118.

On July 3, 1913, Mr. Charles was united in marriage with Miss Anna Josephine Gunn, a native of Cobden, Ill., and a direct descendant of Josiah Bartlett, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. She is a graduate registered nurse from Women's Christian Association Hospital, Jamestown, N. Y. They are the parents of two children, Robert J. Jr. and Albert James. Although having a small child at the time of the flu epidemic while residing at Tampa, Mrs. Charles rendered active service during the influenza period, nursing and caring for the patients until she herself was stricken and had to give up.

Mr. Charles is a 32° Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, being a member of Egypt Temple at Tampa, and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star. Mr. Charles also is a member of the Stockton Rotary Club and of the local Chamber of Commerce. Mr. and Mrs. Charles are active members of the First Baptist Church of Stockton. He is a member of the board of deacons and both take an active part in the work of the church.

ANGELO COSTA.—Another inspiring instance of a poor boy who came into San Joaquin County with the unknown world of struggle all before him, and a boy who has since become a successful, prosperous man, thanks in part to the favoring California environment under which he grew up, is Angelo Costa, the pioneer vineyardist of Lodi, now living in comfort at 605 West Lockeford Street. He was born about twelve miles from the ancient and beautiful maritime city, Genoa, and first saw the light on a farm on January 11, 1856. His father, Antonio Costa, owned a large fruit ranch, and raised olives, chestnuts, lemons, figs, grapes and a variety of fruits; and while Angelo attended the local schools he helped his father on the home ranch, and all the while was learning much of great value to him later. Like a good, patriotic Italian youth, also, he served for thirty-two months in the Italian Army, and so did his duty by his native land before he swung away to adopt another country, with its other life and ways.

He became particularly familiar with fruit and grape-growing while working under his experienced father's guidance, and when he came out to California he was in a position to carry on the same kind of special agricultural pursuits here. He left Italy on a ship sailing direct for San Francisco, and arrived in the Bay City in 1879; and as a young man of twenty-three years of age, he located in Lodi, where he first secured work. He did not begin to get rich from the start, for his wages for the first month or two were only twelve dollars per month, and his board. His first work was in a vegetable garden, and later his pay was raised to twenty dollars per month.

Angelo worked hard and, what was quite as important, saved his money; and at the end of five long, busy years, he bought eight acres of grain land on West Lockeford Street, for which he paid $135 per acre in cash. He set out to improve the place at once, and soon built a two-story house, a barn and other outhouses; and there he has since made his home. He bought some 300 fruit trees, paying twenty-five cents for each of them, and then he planted some apples, pears and cherries; and later he set out alfalfa and wine grapes. He also installed a pumping plant on the property. He later bought land near Elliott on the Mokelumne River, in Section 17 of Elliott township, and from year to year he has bought more land, until he now owns some 455 acres.

His main ranch is improved not only with a fine irrigating system, but he has an orchard of 500 trees of the apple, pear, cherry variety, and fine pasture and grain land. He also has fifty acres of wine grape vineyard, the whole making a finely improved place which has become, as a first-class investment, a good producer. He also owns a ranch of forty acres near Woodbridge. Thirty-one years ago Mr. Costa cast his lot with the Americans by becoming an American citizen, and ever since, in developing his own material interests, he has also patriotically contributed toward the development of the country, thereby proving of service to others working side by side with and coming after him.

At Stockton Mr. Costa was married by the Rev. Father William O'Connor to Miss Tessie Peirano of Italy, and they had four children: Maria, Charles, Katherine and Angelo.

ADOLPH CARIGIET.—For the past twenty years Adolph Carigiet was prominently and successfully associated with the advancement of Stockton along the lines of building operations and his death on July 13, 1922, was a severe loss to his devoted family and the community. He was born August 7, 1871, in Canton Ticino, Switzerland, and in early boyhood learned the cabinet maker's trade, which he followed in his native land until he was eighteen years old. In 1889 he arrived in San Francisco and spent three years in that city following his trade, where he soon made a name for himself as an expert in his line; in 1902 he removed to Stockton and for twenty years was employed by such prominent builders as Messrs. Melvin, Daniels and Green; he also worked for the Union Mill Company for about eight years.

The marriage of Mr. Carigiet to Miss Albina Giannini was solemnized at St. Mary's Church, Stockton, April 29, 1903. Mrs. Carigiet is the daughter of John and Candida (Bertazzi) Giannini, both natives of Canton Ticino, Switzerland. Her father is now deceased and her mother's sketch appears in this history. Mr. and Mrs. Carigiet were blessed with five children: Esther, a graduate of the Stockton high school, class of 1922; Ethel, Alice, Eda and Lois, the latter being deceased. Mr. Carigiet was prominently identified with the construction of most of the modern homes in the Sunnyside Addition to Stockton, which was opened up about ten years ago by Mrs. Candida Giannini and which has become one of Stockton's most favored residential sections. The death of Mr. Carigiet was keenly felt by his devoted family and large circle of friends and the community where he was so well and favorably known.

LOUIS BACIGALUPI.—Stocktonians may well have confidence in the local financial institutions when they are in such good hands as those of Louis Bacigalupi, the popular assistant cashier of the Commercial & Savings Bank of Stockton, a prominent and influential member of the Italian Colony so appreciated here. He was born at Cicagna, near Genoa, Italy, July 30, 1867, the son of Stephen Bacigalupi, who was one of the famous Argonauts of '49, coming via the Isthmus of Panama to San Francisco. He followed mining for a while and then, during 1862-1863, he conducted a well-known coal and wood yard in San Francisco. The next year, however, he returned to Italy, and there he married Miss Maria Dondero who was also born near Genoa. Stephen Bacigalupi engaged in the clothing business in Cicagna and met with well-deserved success, for he attended closely to his business until he retired. He passed away in 1919 at the age of eighty-three, his wife having preceded him many years, passing on when only twenty-nine years of age, leaving a family of three children besides her husband to mourn her loss, Louis being the eldest.

It so happened, therefore, that Louis Bacigalupi completed his education in Italy, making a specialty of a commercial course, and in 1889, doubtless on account of his father's happy experiences here, he crossed the seas to America, and, pushing on west to the Golden State, located at Stockton. He clerked, first, in the store of Joe Gianelli, and later became proprietor of the Eagle Hotel, which he managed for ten years. In 1910, he opened the Taft Clothing Store, on South Center Street, and later he removed the same to its present location at 33 South Hunter Street and even after entering upon his duties at the Commercial and Savings Bank he continued to own the clothing business, which was managed by his son until it was sold in July, 1922. On February 1, 1912, Mr. Bacigalupi entered the employ of the Commercial and Savings Bank as teller, and he was soon advanced to assistant cashier and manager of the foreign department, which position he now holds. He was made an American citizen in 1890, receiving his papers immediately because he had no difficulty in establishing that his father was a naturalized American citizen. Mr. Bacigalupi, being public-spirited, with plenty of loyalty to Stockton and San Joaquin County, and thoroughly progressive in all his ideals and ways, has been able to render a real service, first to his fellow-countrymen coming here, and secondly to American society, of which he has become a part, and political circles, in which he is always active.

In San Francisco in October, 1893, occurred the marriage of Mr. Bacigalupi, which united him with Miss Rose Foppiano, a native of Amador, Cal., a woman of rare capability and personal charm. Her parents, Joseph and Elizabeth (Capalina) Foppiano, were also pioneer settlers of California, coming to the state at the time of the gold excitement, and following mining in Amador County, where Mr. Foppiano passed away; his widow died in San Francisco. The fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Bacigalupi has been blessed with the birth of one son, Howard S., who married Miss Amelia Gneco, and they have a little daughter, Liberty Rose. Mr. Bacigalupi is prominent fraternally. He was made a Mason in Delta Lodge No. 471, F. & A. M., and is also a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., as well as Stockton Council No. 10, R. & S. M. He is a member of Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T., and Ben Ali Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., in Sacramento. He is also a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and the Woodmen of the World, in all of which he is a live wire, and in which he enjoys an enviable popularity.

MORRIS DAVIDSON.—The Engineering and Foundry Company of Stockton, now one of the fast growing and steadily developing industrial enterprises of Central California, was organized in 1915 by Morris Davidson and S. G. Mix, well-known foundry specialists familiar with all methods of casting, business men thoroughly alive to the iron trade. Morris Davidson, the president of this company, was born in Russia on May 15, 1876, and there received his education. At the age of twenty he set out for the new world, arriving in America in 1896, and immediately came to Stockton, California. He tried working on ranches, but after a few months decided to enter industrial life, and opened a small store on Weber Avenue, dealing in furniture, scrap iron and metals; later, as his business grew, he removed to Park Street and a few years ago bought land on North East Street, where he has the largest wholesale iron and metal business in northern California. Mr. Davidson's advancement has been continuous and commendable, and today he is recognized as one of the leaders in his business in the great State of California. The plant of the Engineering and Foundry Company is located in the heart of the industrial district of Stockton, the buildings are modern and the equipment of the highest mechanical order. Doing a general foundry business, this company deals extensively in semi-steel and gray iron castings, the real quality products of the industry. Huge melting furnaces with capacity to produce the largest sizes of castings, or the smallest, meet all requirements of high-class production. The mechanical department is equipped with the most approved machinery and superior workmanship is the motto of this steadily growing establishment. Orders come from many of the larger industrial plants of Stockton and from the cities and towns surrounding, and because of the facilities of the plant, all work is given the quick attention that makes friends and establishes confidence. With the building of new roads in this section of Central California, and the proposed construction of the great Stockton harbor project, which means an expenditure of some $4,000,000, and the establishing of wonderful harbor facilities for the city, the building of more boats and launches, and the increasing of business by the more important institutions of Stockton, the Engineering and Foundry Company finds it necessary to keep thoroughly abreast with the times.

Mr. Davidson is the owner of the Branch Sporting Goods Company of Stockton; secretary and treasurer and holder of a controlling interest in the A. H. Patterson Company, agents for the Hudson and Essex automobiles; president of the Stockton Glass Company; director in the Turlock Oil and Gas Company, and is one of the directors of Everybody's Investment Company. The latter company erected a garage on Aurora Street and has other valuable real estate holdings throughout the city.

Mr. Davidson is married and the father of two children, Marian and Stanley. During the World War Mr. Davidson was active in all the Liberty Loan drives and had charge of the salvage department of the Red Cross for which he devoted an entire building, free of charge, for their use. At the election on May 2, 1922, Mr. Davidson was one of the fifteen freeholders elected to draft a new charter for the city of Stockton. In politics he is a Republican.

R. HAROLD DeVINNY.—One of the great industries that has grown up in San Joaquin County is the fruit packing and shipping business, and as district manager of the Producers' Fruit Company of California, R. Harold DeVinity has a guiding hand in the policies of one of the largest concerns operating in the San Joaquin Valley. He was born at Rochester, N. Y., on June 8, 1880, the son of Dr. C. L. and Hattie (Landon) DeVinity, natives of that state and both now deceased. The family took up their residence at Stockton in 1884, and for twenty-five years Dr. DeVinity was a prominent physician there, serving a number of terms on the San Joaquin County Board of Health. There were two children in the DeVinity family, R. Harold, of this sketch, and Mrs. Florence S. Seawright of Bakersfield, California.

Coming here when a small boy, R. Harold DeVinity was reared at Stockton, attending the public schools there and graduating from the Stockton high school in the class of 1898. For the next eight years he was bookkeeper and cashier for the Stockton "Independent," and in 1906 he came to Lodi, where he purchased a vineyard of twenty acres. Since then he has increased his holdings until he now has sixty acres of highly developed land, equipped with three pumping plants, the whole place being cared for according to the most modern and approved scientific methods. Twelve acres are in cherries, peaches, plums and prunes, while his vineyard, which is twenty-two years old, contains a variety of table grapes, Tokay, Cornichon, Ferrera, Emperor and Morocco, all bringing the highest prices in the Eastern markets. In 1920 the ranch produced 30,000 crates of fruit and grapes.

In 1909 Mr. DeVinity entered the employ of the Earl Fruit Company at Lodi as field manager and his marked ability has given him repeated promotions. He is especially well qualified to fill his present position, having made an exhaustive study of horticulture through reading and study, supplemented with years of practical experience on his own properties. During the selling season of 1920, the Earl Fruit Company sent him on a tour of all the Eastern markets, thus familiarizing him with all the problems of distribution at these points, and he has visited all the fruit sections of California, getting much valuable information in this way.

At Stockton, on June 7, 1905, Mr. DeVinity was married to Miss Frances L. Brown, a native of Canada, and they are the parents of two children: E. Bruce and Harriet Elizabeth.

Mr. DeVinity is a member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., of Stockton, and the Lodi Lodge No. 41, Knights of Pythias, and is a prominent member and a director in the Lodi Lions Club. He is president of the Methodist Men's Club of Lodi, also a trustee of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Lodi, and was the chairman of the building committee when, in 1919, their large and beautiful church edifice was built on the corner of Church and Oak Streets in Lodi. Mrs. DeVinity is an active member of the Methodist Church choir and is a prominent Sunday school worker. This church has the largest organ of any church or theater in Lodi. The chimes in this organ were donated by Mr. and Mrs. DeVinny, in remembrance of Mr. DeVinny's mother, the late Hattie E. DeVinny.

JUDGE E. E. DOUGLASS.—One of the representative citizens of Manteca, San Joaquin County, is E. E. Douglass, justice of the peace of Castoria township since 1918, who has been identified with the varied interests of town and county for a period of eleven years. He was born at Morristown, Vt., on March 30, 1886, the son of Albert and Ellen F. (Baker) Douglass, both natives of the same place. The Douglass family in America dates back to the Scotchman known as Black Douglass, a general in the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War. Frank Douglass, superintendent of the U. S. mails at Boston, Mass., is a cousin of our subject. Douglass Castle still stands in northern Scotland, a monument to the early members of this illustrious family. The father, Albert Douglass, was a farmer by occupation and from 1870 to 1880 rode the range in the Middle West, after which he returned to Vermont, where he married Miss Ellen F. Baker, and there they reared their family. The father passed away in 1915, and is survived by his widow who resides in the old home in Vermont. During 1917 and 1918 she visited her son, our subject, at Manteca.

E. E. Douglass received a good education in the schools of Morristown, Vt., and remained at home until he was twenty-one, when he came to California, arriving at Stockton in March, 1907. He found work on the Woodward ranch near Lathrop and five months later he returned to Stockton, where he took and passed the civil service examination and served as a clerk in the Stockton postoffice for three years. Then he resigned his position and became a salesman for Hodgkins & Stitt, real estate and insurance brokers at Stockton, where he remained until 1911, when, with a partner, he established himself at Manteca on Yosemite Avenue, the firm being known as Woodward & Douglass from 1911 to 1914. In 1911 and 1912 this company put on the Overshiner Addition to Manteca. In 1914 the partnership was dissolved and then Mr. Douglass organized the E. E. Douglass Company and for the following three years was actively engaged in construction work, among his contracts being the Treder Building, Hotel Waldorf, Dr. Goodal's residence, and almost an hundred other structures in Manteca and environs. Mr. Douglass had the opportunity of reading law with Attorney W. H. Wall, and since being elected to the office of justice of the peace in 1918, his knowledge of law has been invaluable to him; during the same year he reopened his real estate office.

The marriage of Mr. Douglass occurred in 1912 and united him with Miss Ada Griffin, a native Californian, born near Corona, a daughter of Mrs. J. J. Rawleigh of Manteca, and they are the parents of three children: Frances, Dorothea and Donald. In 1920, Mr. Douglass was appointed clerk of the board of trustees of the Manteca grammar school and in April, 1921, he was elected for a term of three years; he also was appointed city recorder in 1920, and still serves. He is president of the Masonic Temple Association of Manteca and since 1920 has served as secretary of the Associated Charities. In politics he is a Republican and a member of the county central committee, also a member of the Lions Club of Manteca; he is also a liberal contributor to the Union Church at Manteca and belongs to Tyrian Lodge No. 439, F. and A. M. of Manteca.

PETER HEIL.—Prominent among the most successful vineyardists of San Joaquin County is the independent packer, Peter Heil, who is widely and favorably known for his association with the Peppers Fruit Company of Lodi. He was born in Russia, on April 21, 1865, and was reared on a farm. In 1887, when he had attained his twenty-second year, he came across the ocean to the United States, and made his way to the West, at first as far as South Dakota, where he worked on the great Dakota farms. Later, he rented some land, and for four years farmed for himself. Then he removed to Pierce County, N. D., where he took up a homestead of 160 acres; and having built for himself a home, he proved up on this, and cultivated the land. At the end of eight years, when he had added many improvements in buildings, he sold out and prepared to reinvest the proceeds. He decided, however, to come to California; and so it happened that he came out to Lodi, arriving in December, 1905. He saw the old Green Ranch, and taking a fancy to a part of it, he bought twenty-five acres from J. W. Robinson. This was located near Victor, and he at once began to plant a vineyard of Tokay and Zinfandel grapes. He built a new set of buildings, including a fine residence, and installed two pumping plants—one of seven horsepower for the farm, and the other of two horsepower for the house, but these he has replaced with a ten horsepower motor. He put in cement pipes as a part of a first-class irrigation system, and also erected a packing shed. He has since sold off a part of this ranch, but he still has fifteen acres, and there he makes his home. In 1920, he produced twelve tons of Tokay, and seven tons of Zinfandel grapes per acre.

Mr. Heil has also bought and sold other vineyards with profit. Besides the home-ranch, he owns a Tokay vineyard of fifteen acres located one and a half miles south of Victor, which he bought in 1918 for $600 per acre. He installed a fine pumping plant, with cement pipes, and has made it one of the most productive in the county; in 1920 it yielded some sixteen tons to the acre. That year Mr. Heil received $1,000 in cash per acre. The same year, he purchased another vineyard of ten acres nearby, for which he paid $2,000 per acre; and this he has also improved with a good pumping plant and sold at an advance in price, and bought twenty acres, 3½ miles southwest of Victor. In addition to the above property, Mr. Heil owns a house and two lots in Victor, and five lots in Lodi.

In South Dakota, in the year 1890, Mr. Heil was married to Miss Caroline Newhearth, a native of Russia, who came to the United States with her folks when only one year of age. They have had eleven children, only seven of whom are now living. Emanuel and Ella were born in Dakota; and Leodine, Freda, Theodore, Eugene and Regina were born in California. The family attend the German Reformed Church of Lodi.

JOHN C. CHRISMAN.—A citizen of Tracy whose worth has been recognized in that he was elected secretary of the West Side Irrigation District, is John C. Chrisman. His father, John Chrisman, crossed the plains with an ox team in 1859, from Mt. Carroll, Ill., and settled in French Camp. In 1869 he removed to Tracy, San Joaquin County and here John C. was born on November 5, 1878.

John C. as a lad received his schooling in Tracy, and many were the days spent in the wheat field. In 1900 he was appointed to a clerical position at the County Hospital, where he remained for three years; he then entered the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad in the same capacity and remained with them until 1907, when he removed to Oakland and became clerk of the store department of the Southern Pacific Railroad and occupied that position for the next three years. He then entered the Dixon Business College in Oakland and upon the completion of the course went to Stockton and entered the Stockton Business and Normal College, taking the normal course, from which he was later graduated. He then followed teaching and was principal of the grammar schools at Live Oak, Linden, Ripon and Tracy.

In Stockton on December 29, 1908, occurred the marriage of Mr. Chrisman and Miss Leona A. Patton, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Patton, honored pioneers of San Joaquin County. They are the parents of two children, Robert P. and Greta. The family returned to Tracy in 1915, and two years later Mr. Chrisman was elected to the office of secretary of the West Side Irrigation District, which position has received his undivided attention. Fraternally, he is a past grand of Sumner Lodge of Odd Fellows, and past Patriarch of Tracy Encampment, and at the present time is historian and publicity manager of this organization. Mr. Chrisman has frequently contributed to the newspapers of the county articles on local institutions, which have been well received. Republican in politics, he has always given his time and means to the advancement of the principles of that party. He and his family are associated with the First Presbyterian Church of Tracy, and since the retirement of his father, John Chrisman, from the board of trustees, he has taken his place. His property interests are at Linden in the eastern portion of the county and are growing more valuable each year. During the war Mr. Chrisman was deputy food administrator for the West Side.

FRANK L. CORNWELL.—Prominent among the industries of California that have proven of great benefit to San Joaquin County and so have added greatly to its wealth, prosperity and progress, must be rated that of well-boring, and one of the pioneers in the business is Frank L. Cornwell. He was born in the city of Lodi on December 27, 1889, a son of Thomas A. and Sarah E. (Taylor) Cornwell. His father was a native of Illinois and came to California in an early day and followed farming for a short time; he then removed to Lodi and worked for Knox Thorpe for three years as a well driller; he then went into business for himself and was a pioneer in the business, going through the period from hand tools to machine tools. His mother was born on the old Taylor ranch in San Joaquin County; her father was a farmer who came to California in 1849; he is now deceased. There are four children in the Cornwell family: Charles, John M., Frank L., the subject of this review, and Mrs. Ida Burke. The father passed away in 1919.

Frank L. was educated in the public schools of Lodi; when he was fourteen years old he began clerking in the store of M. Newfield & Sons and remained with them until he was nineteen; he then bought the Irey Transfer Company and changed the name to the City Transfer Company; later he sold this business and became a partner with his father in the well drilling business. When his father passed away he was thoroughly capable of carrying on the business and is now full owner of same. Some of his recent operations in well drilling are as follows: a 767-foot well at Victor; a 787-foot well on the old Trethaway place, five miles east of Lodi; a 515-foot well on the Charles Costa ranch at Clements; also installed a pump with a flow of 1,600 gallons per minute; a 20-inch well for Hunt Bros. at Linden, 990 feet deep with a flow of 1,600 gallons a minute; two wells for the city of Lodi, one of 155 feet and the other 275 feet; a 260-foot well on the W. E. Shipman ranch southeast of Lodi with a flow of 500 gallons a minute; one on the John C. Bewley ranch in Christian Colony with a flow of 1,000 gallons a minute. Mr. Cornwell is thoroughly conversant with the water channels and the depth to drill. West of Cherokee Lane water in any amount is found at a depth of from thirty to seventy feet; while east of Cherokee Lane one would have to drill from ninety to 800 feet for water. Mr. Cornwell is fully equipped for his work with all modern machinery; he owns and operates two Keystone steam drilling machines and one Star gas drill; he employs from ten to fifteen men. Besides his well drilling, he is agent for the G. W. Price turbine and centrifugal pump and installs many of them in connection with his work.

Mr. Cornwell's marriage united him with Miss Florence Ethel Bailey, a native of England, and they are the parents of five children, four of whom are living: Daisy E., Harriet, Louis, and Florence Louise; Frank is deceased.

ORISON EATON.—A resident of Tracy who has come to enjoy a large place in the confidence and esteem of his fellow-townsmen is Orison Eaton, who was born on his father's farm near Warren, Ill., on October 28, 1861, a son of Parley and Susan (Jones) Eaton, the former a native of Ohio, and the latter of New York State. The schooling of Orison Eaton was completed when he reached the age of twelve years, and after that he did the heavy work on his father's farm. Early in 1875 the family removed to Vernon County, Wis., and two years later emigrated to Lynn County, Kans., where they continued to farm and where our subject assumed the burden of the farm work until he started in for himself. The mother died at Lathrop, California, in 1890, and the father in 1900 at Tracy.

On February 3, 1883, at Emporia, Kans., Mr. Eaton was united in marriage with Miss Josephine Huffman. Mrs. Eaton was born near Franklin, Ind., on December 22, 1856, a daughter of William Huffman, a native of Kentucky, and a well-known farmer. He married Miss Mary Smock, a native of Indiana, and removed to Kansas, and there the family resided until 1868. In 1887 Mr. Eaton removed to Lathrop, California, and was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in the roundhouse. During 1888 his family joined him and remained at Lathrop until 1894, when they removed to Tracy, as the roundhouse had been moved from Lathrop to Tracy and Mr. Eaton was still in charge. In 1910 he was offered the position of superintendent of the treating plant, and he has since had charge of this plant and during the past twelve years has not been absent from his post of duty a single day. This plant treats the water used by the powerful locomotives, destroying all injurious qualities.

Mr. and Mrs. Eaton are the parents of three children: Edwin O. is married and resides in Modesto; Fred is married and has two daughters, the family living in Modesto; and Lela is Mrs. O. Phillips; they have two sons and reside in Tracy. In politics Mr. Eaton is a Republican and during the recent war supported the different drives. He owns a fine modern residence at 106 West Eleventh Street, and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

MANUEL R. DIAS.—Among the successful farmers and dairymen of San Joaquin County, Manuel R. Dias may well be counted as one of the most progressive and substantial of citizens. From an humble beginning he has become one of San Joaquin County's foremost dairymen, being a partner in two big dairy farms. He is also one of the four partners in the large store at 34 South Center Street, Stockton, known as the Portuguese-American Grocery Company, which is composed of M. Silva, Manuel R. Dias, Frank Vas and John Mendosa. Mr. Dias lives with his wife and family upon Woods Dairy No. 3, about nine miles west of Stockton, of which he is the manager. He is also a part owner in the Silva, Vas & Company dairy ranch, another extensive dairy farm on Lower Roberts Island. M. Silva & Company is a partnership composed of Manuel Silva, Manuel R. Dias and John Ignacio. M. Silva & Company lease and operate the large dairy farm composed of 720 acres, known as Woods Dairy No. 3. Thereon are kept 330 milch cows and 100 heifers and 12 registered Holstein bulls. The Silva, Vas & Company dairy farm is also located on Lower Roberts Island and occupies the premises known as Woods Dairy No. 1, and comprises 380 acres. The Silva, Vas & Company is composed of Manuel Silva, Manuel R. Dias, Frank Vas, Joe Nunes, and Joe Costa.

Mr. Dias was born on the Isle of Pico, Azores, October 11, 1878, a son of M. R. and Anna de San Jose Dias, both of whom were born in Pico. The father of our subject was a well-to-do merchant and farmer in his native land. Manuel R. Dias left his home for America and arrived in San Francisco, California, March 20, 1906; he went direct to the Delta and began to work as a farm laborer on the Black tract, where he remained for five years; early in 1911 he went into partnership with M. Silva in a small dairy on Lower Roberts Isle and from the beginning their business prospered and they do an extensive dairy business.

Before leaving his native land, Mr. Dias was married to Miss Mary Candeios Freitas, and they are the parents of three children: Mary, Angeline and Manuel. Mr. Dias is past secretary of the I. D. E. S. and has been instrumental in helping many of his countrymen upon their arrival in America. His life has been one of strictest integrity and his own efforts and untiring labor have been amply rewarded and he is esteemed by his business associates.

PETER ARBIOS.—Among the representative and leading stockmen of the San Joaquin Valley the name of Peter Arbios is a familiar one, for he was an early settler at Mendota, Fresno County, where he had extensive land interests as well as owning several thousand head of sheep. He was born at Aysus, Basses-Pyrenees, France, July 18, 1863, and migrated to California when seventeen years of age, joining his parents, John and Genevieve Arbios, who were located near Pleasanton, Cal., where they had a vineyard and fruit orchard; when he was ready to go into business for himself, Peter Arbios located in Fresno County and engaged in sheep raising with his headquarters at Mendota. For many years he was in partnership with his brother-in-law, A. J. Arnaudon, in the sheep business, and after they dissolved partnership he was in partnership with Peter Sahargun for a number of years, and then conducted business on his own account, becoming the owner of large landed interests, besides leasing range land. For fourteen years he was general superintendent of the sheep department of Miller & Lux, traveling from one to another of their many ranches in California, Utah and Nevada. After resigning his position with Miller & Lux he devoted all of his time to the growing and care of his extensive flocks, residing with his family at Mendota, where he built a comfortable and commodious residence, in the full enjoyment and companionship of his wife and children. He ran about 10,000 head of sheep, purchased land for range and also improved one ranch adjoining Mendota to intensive farming, installing a pumping plant for irrigation and growing alfalfa. He was actively engaged in the stock business until his death, September 21, 1915, aged fifty-two years.

After he had been in California for about four years he made a trip back to his old home in France and soon after his arrival in that country he was called on for military duty and although he was an American citizen since his father had taken out citizenship papers before Peter was twenty-one years of age he responded to the call and joined the French colors, doing his duty for three years when he was honorably discharged, and soon after this he returned to California. While in France he met an attractive young lady named Marie Daunet, who when seventeen years of age made her way to Los Angeles and soon after her arrival the acquaintance was renewed and resulted in their marriage, a union that proved a very happy one. She was born in Lurbe, Basses-Pyrenees, France, the daughter of Peter and Baldine (Bordenave) Daunet, who were well-to-do farmers and stockraisers in the Pyrenees, and there the father passed away, an honored man, while his widow survives him, making her home on the old farm, aged seventy-eight years, the mother of four children: Joseph Daunet is farming the old home in France; Mrs. Marie Arbios; Annie is Mrs. Maunet of Alhambra; and Mrs. Josephine Sahargun, who died in California in March, 1922.

The daughter Marie received a good education in the local schools of France. Having a desire to see the great Pacific Coast region she set out for Los Angeles when she was seventeen years of age, and as stated after renewing her acquaintance with Mr. Arbios they were married. She gave of her best efforts to aid her husband in the improving of the great San Joaquin Valley and win for them a fortune and competency. Thus it was a hard blow to her and the children when he was taken away from them, a man still in the prime of life, loved and esteemed by all who knew him and deeply mourned by his family. Their union was blessed with nine children, eight of whom are living. Amy died at the age of twenty-two; Albert is a stockman and resides at Stockton; Peter L. is manager of the Arbios ranches and their flocks, and makes his home at Mendota; he married Augustine Vallon and they have two children, Jane and Yvonne; Edna is the wife of J. L. Reid of Stockton; Sodie is assisting his brother in the care of the ranches and stock; he married Helen Burubeltz of Bakersfield and resides in Stockton; Lucy is the wife of L. F. Hickinbotham of Stockton; Josephine and Zeta assist their mother to preside over the home; Joseph is also a sheep grower. Albert and Sodie served in the World War, were sent overseas where they spent twenty months and on their return to the United States they were duly discharged.

During the years following Mr. Arbios' death his widow removed with the children to Stockton where she built a comfortable residence at 1130 North Edison Street and here surrounded by her children she makes her home, looking after the large interests left by her husband, and in this her children aid her. They accord her every consideration and honor and with their ability and energy aid her in every way. The family still own the ranches left by the father and have three bands of sheep approximating 10,000 head which they range in Fresno, Madera and Mariposa counties. In 1921 Mrs. Arbios, accompanied by her son Joseph, made a trip back to her old home spending six months visiting her old friends and kindred. Her mother, seventy-seven years of age, was still living and it was a very enjoyable reunion to them, but she was delighted to get back to her California home and friends. Mr. Arbios was greatly interested in the cause of education and gave material aid in keeping the public school in his district to a high standard.

NELSON S. DWELLY.—A champion of progress and improvement may be found in Nelson S. Dwelly, whose record as a member of the board of trustees since 1914 and as president of the board since 1916 has been a potent factor in the development of Tracy and her environs. He was born near Waukegan, Ill., on December 27, 1873, and when six years of age was taken by his parents to Topeka, Kans. He is the son of Charles H. and Anna (Condel) Dwelly, his father being a machinist employed in the shops of the Santa Fe Railroad at Topeka. They were the parents of five children, four of whom reside in Kansas. Both parents are deceased.

Nelson S. received his first schooling in the public schools of Topeka, Kans., and then served an apprenticeship, with two of his brothers, in the Santa Fe railroad shops there; after completing his apprenticeship, he chose the air brakes department. In 1891 he was advanced to the position of foreman and remained there until 1900, when he located in Richmond, California, and became connected with the Northern Division of the Santa Fe, remaining there for eight months. In 1901 he accepted a responsible position with the Southern Pacific Railroad at Rocklin, California, working for two years in the general machine shop; he worked in Oakland for seven years, following his trade, and also for a few months at Port Costa. About the time of his removal to Tracy, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company consolidated two departments, and Mr. Dwelly was put in charge of the round house, and for several months supervised forty men. Leaving the employ of the railroad company, for two years he successfully conducted the West Side garage on the Lincoln Highway, and when he disposed of it received a good profit. Mr. Dwelly is the owner of extensive realty holdings in Tracy; he has erected a fine garage building at Eleventh and Windler, which is leased to the Atlas garage.

The marriage of Mr. Dwelly occurred in Topeka, Kans., in 1898, and united him with Miss Julia Boyer, a native of New York, and they are the parents of three children: Elizabeth, Nelson J. and Anna Bell. Fraternaly he is a member of the Masons and Knights of Pythias of Tracy, and politically he is a staunch Republican. His influence and support can be counted upon for all movements intended for advancement of this portion of California and his services as mayor of Tracy have assured him popularity and esteem throughout the county.

HERMAN O. KRUSCHKE.—Those who have watched the career of Herman O. Kruschke have noted the steady progress that he has made through the years of his life, which has brought him deserved success. He was born at Canastota, McCook Co., S. D., on March 26, 1891, a son of Julius H. and Anna (Zofft) Kruschke, both natives of Germany, the father coming to America when about eleven years of age, and the mother when merely a little girl. Both families pioneered in South Dakota. The father, a successful farmer, passed away at Canastota from influenza in 1919, while the mother now resides in Tracy, Cal.

The education of Mr. Kruschke began in the public schools of his native city, and in 1908 he was graduated from high school; then entered the University of South Dakota in the law department, planning to take up corporation law and its attendant branches. During summer vacations, he found employment as a clerk and in the summer of 1910 he was made assistant cashier of the Canastota bank. During the winter of that same year, while attending college, he was taken seriously ill and suffered from ill health many months. Seeking a milder climate in search of health, he came to Porterville, Cal., and so improved in health that he traveled throughout the state, and finally entered a bank at Orange, Cal., where he remained for three years. He then returned to South Dakota and decided to go into business rather than finish his college course, and purchased the First National Bank at Springfield, S. D., becoming the cashier. Later he disposed of this interest, and organized the National Bank at Wentworth, but owing to the delay in granting the charter, he concluded to dispose of his interests. This he did and entered the grain and stock business five miles southeast of the city of Redfield, S. D., which proved a successful venture. In 1917 he disposed of his interests in South Dakota and removed to California, and during the same year came to Tracy, where he entered the Pioneer Bank as assistant cashier, remaining in that position until late in 1919, when he left to go into business for himself. It was with reluctance that the president of this institution released Mr. Kruschke from his staff, as he had become a valuable asset to the bank. He then established a real estate and insurance business, besides loaning money for building purposes, and success has come to him through his upright methods of dealing with his customers.

On September 14, 1914, Mr. Kruschke was married to Miss Hildegard Breihan, a graduate registered nurse, and daughter of Rev. and Mrs. A. F. Breihan of Almond, Wis., and they are the parents of three children: Thelma, Ardell, and Loris. In politics he is a staunch Republican. Both Mr. and Mrs. Kruschke are active members of the Tracy Lutheran Church, and it was through the persistent efforts of Mr. Kruschke that the church was organized. Mr. Kruschke is vice-president of the local Chamber of Commerce; he owns forty acres of rich land now being planted to alfalfa; also owns his residence and several desirable pieces of property in Tracy.

CHARLES L. CREIGHTON.—In 1915, Charles L. Creighton settled in the Summer Home district of San Joaquin County where he acquired sixty acres, a portion of the home place of Peter Clapp, who formerly owned 12,000 acres in this section of the county. From 1885 to 1915 Mr. Creighton successfully farmed in Sonoma County where he had a preemption of 160 acres, which was developed to vineyard and orchard. He is a native of New York, having been born near Fort Covington, July 19, 1860. His father, William A. Creighton, was born in Salem, N. Y., and later removed to Franklin County, where he farmed to hay and grain for New York City markets. Charles L. Creighton received his education in the public schools of his locality, but the hard work on the home farm in his young days has proven of great value in later life, and has been the means of much of his success in his agricultural and horticultural activities.

At twenty-one years of age he left home to paddle his own canoe and four years later he settled at Santa Rosa, where he preempted 160 acres of raw land; this land he developed to a vineyard and orchard and there he remained until 1915 when he located in San Joaquin County. He was married on October 22, 1901, at San Francisco, to Miss Margaret Hadden, a daughter of Samuel and Sarah Hadden, natives of County Armagh, Ireland, who had located in San Francisco in 1901. Mr. and Mrs. Creighton are the parents of one son, William Henry. While residing in Sonoma County Mr. Creighton served as school trustee for the Los Alamos school district and wherever he has been he has supported the farm bureau of his locality. Fraternally, Mr. Creighton is a member of the Odd Fellows, while Mrs. Creighton is a member of the Rebekahs of Manteca, and in religious faith they belong to the Christian Church of Manteca. Politically, Mr. Creighton is a Republican and is a firm believer in the future greatness and prosperity of San Joaquin County. He has taken advantage of the natural resources of the state afforded to the agriculturist and horticulturist and in both branches of his business is meeting with gratifying success.

LYMAN MOORE LEWIS.—On the list of San Joaquin County's successful viticulturists appears the name of Lyman Moore Lewis, who since 1902 has made his home upon his present ranch near Victor. He was born in Albion, Mich., on April 13, 1850, a son of J. R. and Caroline (Herrick) Lewis, natives of Burlington, Vt., and New York, respectively. His father was a sash and door manufacturer and was the first man to start a factory in Jackson, Jackson County, Mich.; and his brother, Dr. Edward Lewis, was the first practicing physician in the county. Thus the family were early settlers in that part of Michigan. His father lived to be fifty-nine years old, and his mother passed away at forty-five.

Lyman Moore Lewis received his education in the public schools of Jackson, Mich., and learned the sash and door manufacturing trade in his father's shop. In 1871 his father sold his shop, and Lyman Lewis continued to work for his successor for six years. On account of impaired health, Mr. Lewis was obliged to leave the factory because of the dust, and in 1884 went to the Dakota territory, settling at Milnor, in Sargent County. Here he farmed for two years on a tract of land he had homesteaded. Soon, however, realizing that he had not been trained for a farmer, he left the farm and bought a machine shop in Aberdeen, S. D., which he fitted up for a sash and door factory, and for the next three years did a thriving business. While there, he exhibited his products at the State Fair, having the center display space of a four-winged building. In this way he became acquainted with many of the prosperous farmers who were anticipating building better homes. For two consecutive years, however, there was a crop failure, and his business was ruined. Meanwhile, his partner had gone to Tacoma, Wash., and reports came back to Mr. Lewis that the city was in the midst of a building boom; so he moved to Tacoma and there engaged in business as a builder and contractor. The next spring he located at Ocosta, on Gray's Harbor, where a railroad was being built. There he built a sash and door factory and did a thriving business—in fact, he practically built the town that year. Mr. Lewis employed eight men in his factory, which was kept constantly busy; so much so, that green lumber had to be used. Anticipating an active summer, he ran a full force all during the winter months, filling every available storage place with finished sash and doors; but a fire entirely destroyed his plant and he sustained a complete loss. Undaunted by this misfortune, he commenced anew, installing new machinery and erecting a larger plant, and was preparing to manufacture shingles as well as sash and doors, when the panic of 1893 checked building operations. Mr. Lewis then turned his thoughts toward agriculture and went to southern Oregon, where he rented a ranch near Ashland. He remained there until 1897, when he went to Dawson during the gold rush, making his way over Chilcoot pass to Lake Bennett, where he built a boat and then came down the Yukon to Dawson. He made a good strike, but lost it again in a worthless pit. In 1899 he returned home, and in October of the same year went back, with his wife, to Alaska. His wife remained at Skagway, while he went on to Dawson. They again returned home, and the next year his daughter Cora went with him, first to Teller City and then to Dawson, where she was stenographer for the steamship company. There she was married by Bishop Row to J. M. Elmer, a mining engineer who afterwards introduced the first dredger on the Yukon. In Alaska, Mr. Lewis had some hard times, bitter experiences, and narrow escapes. After spending five years off and on in Alaska, he returned and went to Kansas City, where he engaged in building operations, building houses on vacant property, and selling as soon as they were built. Six months of that climate sufficed, and Mr. Lewis returned to California in the fall of 1902, where he bought twenty acres of the old Green tract at Victor. This property he has developed from a stubble-field to a full-bearing vineyard, setting every vine and tree and building the house. When he landed in San Joaquin County, he had $400 with which to purchase the twenty acres, which is today worth in the neighborhood of $40,000.

On November 2, 1872, in Jackson, Mich., occurred the marriage of Mr. Lewis, which united him with Miss Lucinda Barrett. She was born in Pennsylvania, the daughter of Samuel J. and Elizabeth (Hall) Barrett, born in England and Scotland, respectively. They came first to Pennsylvania and later removed to Michigan, where Mr. Barrett was a merchant at Kinneyville; and there the parents passed on. Mrs. Lewis is the eldest of their seven children. She received a good education in the public schools, and is a cultured and refined woman, greatly loved and esteemed by all who know her. She finds much comfort in her membership and attendance at the Episcopal Church. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are the parents of three children, two daughters and a son. Cora is now Mrs. J. Moore Elmer, of Seattle; and they have two sons, Andrew Moore and Lewis Gibson. Ella is Mrs. R. G. Huestis of Lodi, and the mother of four children—Stephen D., who is married, has a son, Gerald; Agnes L., attending the University of California, Berkeley; Martha E., Mrs. Geo. Buckley; and Winfield Scott. George J. Lewis, a rancher of Lodi, is married and has two children, Ralph and Dorothy May.

On November 2, 1922, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. The "golden wedding" was held at their home and enjoyed by all. Mr. Lewis is a member of Jackson Lodge No. 4, I. O. O. F., at Jackson, Mich. Politically, he is a protectionist and a strong Republican.

DOMENICO LAGORIO.—A retired merchant and Stockton pioneer is found in Domenico Lagorio, who has lived in Stockton for the past thirty-six years. He was born in Italy, May 15, 1866, a son of Giovanni and Angela (Baronia) Lagorio. At the age of twenty years he left his home for America and came directly to San Francisco and by river boat to Stockton, arriving on October 18, 1886; he entered the employ of D. Prossi as a vegetable gardener, on land where now stands the Stockton high school buildings; for seventeen years he worked as gardener at the Rural Cemetery; then he bought a home and started a small store at 1502 North California street, which he conducted until two years ago, when he sold the business to his son. The marriage of Domenico Lagorio united him with Miss Paulina Battilana and six children have been born to them: Pietro, deceased; Angelino; John A; Margaretti; Pietro; and Eleanor. Twenty years ago, Mr. Lagorio was made a citizen of the United States and has since been a Republican.

John A. Lagorio, the son of our subject, was born September 10, 1894, at Stockton, and received a good education in the Stockton schools. In July, 1918, he entered the U. S. Army, 37th Field Artillery, 13th Division, and in January, 1919, received his honorable discharge. After his return from the service he entered the sales department of the Standard Oil Company, where he remained for two years, then purchased his father's store; he has improved the store with a larger and more complete stock and has built up a fine trade. He married Miss Ann Sanguinetti, a daughter of James Sanguinetti, a pioneer of San Joaquin County. He is a Republican in politics and a member of the N. S. G. W. No. 7 of Stockton.

LOREN H. CAUSEY.—One of the leading excavating and teaming contractors, as well as a dealer in hay, sand, gravel and land dressing, Loren H. Causey has built up a thriving business throughout San Joaquin County, even extending his operations considerably beyond its borders. His integrity of character and strict attention to detail insure for him a constantly increasing business. A native son, he was born in Sacramento County on July 10, 1891, the youngest son of the late Joel H. Causey and his good wife, Mary R. The Causey family located on a ranch near Lathrop about 1896, and there Joel H. engaged in ranching for a few years, then he moved to Stockton, bought property on South Sutter Street, improved a good home and was engaged in teaming for twenty years, until he passed away on February 22, 1918, being survived by his widow and four children: William W., residing at Los Gatos; Elva, the widow of Cleve Graves, has one son and lives in Stockton; Stella is the wife of Ed Berlin of Oakland; and Loren H., of this review. Mrs. Causey resides at the old home on South Sutter Street where she and her husband lived for so many years.

Loren H. Causey received his schooling in the Lathrop and French Camp schools and graduated from Heald's Business College at Stockton, after which he spent two years in a clerical position with the Southern Pacific Company; next he built up a good bakery route in Stockton, then spent two years in the glass works at Stockton expecting to learn the business, but did not continue. During the World War he was in charge of the machine shop for the C. N. I. Company, in Stockton, doing repair work. After the death of his father in 1918 he took charge of his teaming business and has since expanded his operations until he is known all over Northern California. He keeps six men employed the year round and during the busy seasons has as many as twenty-five; he owns twelve head of fine draft horses that he uses in his business and when the job demands it has used as many as 120.

Mr. Causey contracts to do any kind of work where horses can be used, no matter where the job may be located. He has executed some of the largest excavating and filling contracts in Stockton and vicinity, among which we mention the Wagner Leather Company job, Western States Gas and Electric Company, Hobbs-Parsons, one where the Dodge Motor Company is now located. He did the excavating for the wheat bins of the Sperry Flour Company, working three shifts and on account of the men working fourteen feet underground had to take out extra insurance for them. One of the largest fills done in Stockton was for the General Motors

Company when he put in 2,000 loads of dirt to fill two blocks two feet, and here he worked eighty head of horses. At Willows, Glenn County, he harvested 2,000 acres of rice for H. M. Garnett and used 120 head of stock on the job. Besides his contracting work he deals in hay and in all that he undertakes he has met with well merited success.

The marriage of Mr. Causey, March 8, 1916, united him with Miss Maude Keller, a native of Stockton, whose parents, Richard and Minnie Keller, are California pioneers. One son has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Causey, Robert Ray. Mr. Causey is a Democrat in politics and fraternally is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He has erected a fine residence on his property, located at 1938 S. Sutter Street, adjoining the property of his mother.

FRED LANGHORST.—Since 1877 Fred Langhorst has been a resident of San Joaquin County, where he now resides and owns a beautiful and highly productive almond orchard. He was born in Westphalia, Germany, on January 11, 1853, the sixth in a family of eight children born to Christian and Doris Langhorst, the names of the children being as follows: Mary, Conrad, Minnie, William, Marie, Fred, our subject, Sophie and Lena, the last two being twins. The father was a farmer in his native country and passed away there at the age of eighty years; the mother also lived to be about eighty years old.

Fred Langhorst from his youth was trained to the work of the farm, assisting in its development through the summer months, while in the winter seasons he went to school. When he was fifteen years old, his sister, Minnie, was coming to Beardstown, Cass County, Illinois, to be married, and so our subject prevailed on his parents to let him come along. Upon arrival in Illinois, Minnie Langhorst became Mrs. Heitcamp. Fred Langhorst remained in Illinois for six years working for wages, meantime becoming an American citizen. At the end of that time he returned to his German home for a visit of a few months, then returned to Illinois and worked for wages for three more years, then in 1877 came to California and settled at Lodi, where he has since continuously resided. For three years after his arrival in San Joaquin County, he worked for Christ Beckman as a farm hand. In October, 1880, at Lodi, he was married to Miss Flora Blass, a native Californian, born in Tuolumne County near Columbia, and there she was reared and educated. Her father passed away when she was too young to remember him and subsequently her mother, Mrs. Minnie Blass, married John Fox, a miner in the Columbia gold mines. After his marriage, Mr. Langhorst settled five miles southeast of Lodi on the corner of Alpine Road and Harney Lane, and there bought 160 acres of land which he farmed for twenty-one years, and then sold it and moved to Lodi. He then rented a five-acre almond orchard from Ida Hill and later purchased a ten-acre almond orchard on South School street, later on selling five acres of it. He is a Republican in national politics and fraternally a member of the I. O. O. F. and Knights of Pythias and with Mrs. Langhorst is a member of the Rebekahs, Mrs. Langhorst having been recording secretary of the latter for the past five years; she is also recording secretary of the Pythian Sisters lodge of Lodi.

JULIUS WOOCK.—A representative vineyardist residing on a fine estate near Lodi, San Joaquin County, is Julius Woock, who has shown great ability in the management of his affairs, and in the cultivation and development of his ranch; until it is now among the finest in the Lodi vicinity. A native of Germany, he was born at Marienthal, near Bohn, on September 7, 1860. His father, also named Julius Woock, was a farmer in his native land and he died in 1862, leaving his widow with three children: Matilda, now deceased, Amanda and Julius. His mother married again, being united with Gottlieb Riemer, and of that union one daughter is living, Amelia.

Our subject received a good grammar school education and spent three years at the gymnasium, but he has profited by actual experience with conditions wherever he has lived and this he considers the most valuable of educations. When he left home he went to work on one of the big estates in Germany and soon became overseer and while he was there he learned the distilling business, making liquor from potatoes, grain, etc., spending two years in this work. In 1886, he made up his mind that the United States held out more opportunities and he crossed the Atlantic and soon afterwards he located in Kansas, where he worked at the trade of carpenter for a time, then at farming. The following year, 1887, he settled in Southern California and was one of the first settlers at Acton Station in the hills north of Saugus. Here he homesteaded a quarter-section of land, proved up on it and lived there for fourteen years, and raised bees, having 300 stands. He then moved to Elizabeth Lake, where he again followed the work of his choice, farming, and remained there until 1904, when he located in San Joaquin County. At that time he purchased the property on which he now resides, forty acres, about one and one-half miles southeast of Lodi on Kettleman Lane. When Mr. Woock purchased this place it was a stubble field and by his intensive cultivation and development he now has thirty acres in Tokay grapes and six acres in Zinfandels, all full bearing and yielding a handsome income each season, and about four acres in garden, buildings, and alfalfa. The following year, 1905, Mr. Woock built a house on the place and in 1919 replaced that with a fine two-story residence; he has also put in a five-inch pump with a fifteen-horsepower motor for irrigation, by which he irrigates every part of his ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Woock occurred on December 25, 1889, at Acton, Cal., and united him with Miss Elise Nickel, born at Frankfort-on-Oder, Germany. Her father was Rudolph Nickel, a lithographer, who used the old stone lithograph presses; her mother was in maidenhood Augusta Biega, and after the death of her husband, she carried on his business with the aid of a foreman for about ten years, then she came to California to join other members of her family who had come to this state some years before. She died at Acton, Cal., at the age of seventy-one years. She and her husband had seven children: Hedwig, Richard, Elise and Eugene, the last two of Lodi. Olga died at Leavenworth, Kans.; Bruno, at Acton, and the eldest, Marie, died in Europe when a small child. Mr. and Mrs. Julius Woock are the proud parents of four children, Hattie; Walter, married Lydia Bittner and they have one child, Walter Julius Woock; Herbert J., and Eric M. In politics Mr. Woock is a Republican and is a respected member of the Lutheran Church of Lodi. He has ever been interested in the cause of education and while residing in Los Angeles County was a trustee of the school district at both Acton and Elizabeth Lake.

JOSEPH LEAL.—The proprietor of a men's furnishing store in Tracy, Joseph Leal is a native son of the Golden State, born at San Jose, Cal., on September 28, 1896, a son of Jesse and Annie (Spangler) Leal, the former a native of the Isle of Pico, Azores, the latter of San Jose, Cal. The father, Jesse Leal, came to California in 1890 and located at San Jose, where he married Miss Spangler, a daughter of the late James Spangler, who was a prominent pioneer of Saratoga, Cal., and who became a well-to-do rancher. The property which he acquired in 1850 has, since his death, been divided among his heirs. The senior Leal has followed the merchandise business most of his lifetime and has conducted a men's furnishing store at No. 34 North Market street, San Jose, since 1895.

Joseph Leal was reared and educated in the San Jose schools, and later was graduated from St. Joseph's Academy at San Jose. Upon leaving school he entered the Adler Shop on South First street and this position covered a period of five years; then in 1916 he entered the employ of the Koehbler, Holman Tobacco Company as traveling salesman, and was thus employed at the time of his enlistment on June 28, 1917, in the 115th Ammunition Train, Headquarters Company. He was sent overseas, where he served as a first-class private for fourteen months. Returning to the United States, he received his honorable discharge at the Presidio, San Francisco, on May 17, 1919. He then returned to San Jose and entered his father's store, remaining there until February, 1921, when he decided to enter business for himself. Removing to Tracy, he opened up a first-class shop, and as his business has grown, his stock has been increased until he now carries a full and complete line of the very best furnishing goods.

The marriage of Mr. Leal occurred on October 17, 1921, and united him with Miss Cecelia Mendia, a native Californian born at Watsonville, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raphael Mendia, now residing in San Jose. Mr. Leal is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West, the American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars of San Jose.

MRS. SOPHIA HARRINGTON.—A native daughter of California, Mrs. Sophia Harrington was born at Mokelumne Hill, Calaveras County. She was in maidenhood Sophia Buyck, her father being John Francis Buyck, a native of Belgium, who, having been left an orphan when a small boy, made his way to New York City and there made his own livelihood. When he heard of the discovery of gold in California he resolved to come hither, and became one of the argonauts of '49. Coming via Panama to San Francisco, he immediately made his way to the mines in Calaveras County, where he followed mining until 1851. He returned east via Panama and was married that same year to Miss Mary Bruton, a native of the great metropolis, of Scotch-Irish parentage. In 1852 Mr. Buyck brought his bride via the Isthmus to San Francisco. On the way they were wrecked on the "Georgia" and they spent three days in an open boat, when they were picked up, and their boat was the only one ever accounted for.

On his arrival in California, Mr. Buyck again followed mining, being located at Mokelumne Hill, residing there until he died. His widow spent her last days in Stockton. Of their family of eight children four are living. Sophia, who is the fourth in order of birth, was brought up at Mokelumne Hill, receiving a good education in the public schools. About this time her mother removed to Railroad Flat, in the same county, and soon after this, in 1875, Sophia was married to Frederick J. Harrington, who was a native of Brighton, Mass., born Nov. 24, 1847, a son of Joshua and Rosina (Wright) Harrington. He came with his parents to California in 1859, where the elder Harrington owned a big copper mine at Campo Seco, Calaveras County, and there he attended public schools and assisted his father until he volunteered his services for the Civil War. On November 29, 1864, he enlisted in Company E, Seventh California Infantry, serving until he was mustered out in San Francisco, May 28, 1866, after which he resumed mining and in time became owner of the Bonanza Mine at Mokelumne Hill. After disposing of it he continued mining, and unfortunately at a cave-in at the Gwinn Mine in 1900 he was severely injured, being laid up for some years. On recovery he came to Stockton in 1906, being in the employ of Robert Powell, the contractor, as timekeeper until 1918. He was taken ill by paralysis and he passed away July 16, 1918. He was a past commander of Rawlins Post No. 29, G. A. R.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrington had seven children: George F., of Rio Vista; Samuel S., deceased; Charles R.; Mrs. Grace G. Gallagher; Mrs. Mary A. Folsom; Frederick, Jr.; and Leonard McKinley, all of Stockton. Since her husband's death, Mrs. Harrington continues to reside in Stockton, surrounded by her family and many friends. She is a member of Rawlins Relief Corps and attends the Christian church, in both of which she is deservedly popular.

HENRY LINDEMANN, JR.—For the past nine years Henry Lindemann, Jr., has been actively and prominently identified with the section of San Joaquin County known as Bethany, owning extensive holdings in this rich and productive territory. A native of Benton County, Iowa, he was born near Blairstown on April 10, 1878, and when he was four years old his parents removed to Plymouth County, Iowa, locating at Remsen, where Henry received his preliminary education and was graduated from the Remsen high school with the class of '01; he then entered the Highland Park University, Des Moines, for a short business course; then in 1904 he entered the College of LeMars. Finishing his education, he took a position as clerk in a merchandise store in Remsen, Iowa, which covered a period of seven years.

At Remsen, Iowa, in 1906, Mr. Lindemann was married to Miss Bertha A. Ohlendorf, a native of Remsen, Iowa, where she was reared and schooled, graduating from the high school in 1904. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ohlendorf, residents of Remsen. She became identified with the educational profession as a teacher in Plymouth County, Iowa, and taught from the time of her graduation from the high school until she was married. Mr. and Mrs. Lindemann are the parents of five children; Lafe W.; Lyle H.; June K.; Raymond; and Evelyn. Mr. Lindemann's parents, Detlef and Florena (Haupt) Lindemann, both natives of Holstein, Germany, also reside in Remsen, Iowa. Mr. Lindemann was preceded to California in 1907 by an uncle, Henry Lindemann, a wealthy rancher of Alameda County, Cal.

During 1912, Mr. Lindemann purchased a tract of 708 acres near Bethany without having seen it, and the following year removed his family from the East and located upon it, arriving in February of 1913; these lands were formerly owned by Shattuck & Edinger, general engineers and contractors of canals and roads throughout California. The land was not in condition to please the eye of a newcomer, especially one who was unacquainted with the difficulties to be encountered in this arid country before the development of the irrigating systems, but now the splendid system of improvements and developments show the care and attention, as well as energetic ability of Mr. Lindemann. He has installed two powerful Byron-Jackson centrifugal pumps, run by electric power, which force the water to the highest point on his land, distributing it by gravity flow through canals and over the land, which, with the exception of forty acres, has been planted to alfalfa, from which wonderful results are obtained, five cuttings in one season being the maximum of production. In 1919 Mr. Lindemann became a member of the Federation of American Farmers and is a strong advocate of the Marshall plan for irrigating 5,000,000 acres of California arid lands. In politics he is a Democrat. He is enthusiastic over farming, and believes that the Bethany district, with its natural resources, is destined to attract settlers from all parts of the country.

HENRY A. LINNE.—An eminent citizen who has long been a prominent rancher, and who is known far and wide as an enthusiastic advocate of irrigation, is Henry A. Linne, who was born in San Francisco on November 3, 1876, and now resides about two miles east of Tracy on the Lincoln Highway. He came to San Joaquin County in 1885, and located on the Fink ranch near Bethany, having been preceded to this place by his elder brother, Adolph H. Linne. He worked out for two years at Bethany, and it was after that that he removed to the Fink rancho, where he followed farm labor until 1899. The year 1898, the two brothers put up their first crop; and having experienced a dry year, they lost heavily. Year after year they kept going, however, and by intelligent industry and unimpeachable integrity, they won success. They together acquired lands and have extensive holdings which are farmed on a co-partnership basis.

Henry A. Linne has thirty-five acres of well-irrigated alfalfa, and as a member of the Tracy Local, he belongs to the Farm Bureau. He heartily supports every movement likely to hasten the development and progress of the community, and he is a Republican in matters of national political import.

At Stockton, in 1909, Mr. Linne was married to Miss Margaret Austin, the daughter of the well-known pioneer, Daniel Austin, a sturdy farmer who hailed from New York. He settled for awhile, in his first move westward, in Michigan, and then, in 1850, at the time of the continued gold excitement, he accompanied a party bound across the plains to California. He became prominent in the Southern mines, and he owned a freighting business operating out from, and on the return to Copperopolis, in Calaveras County. He married Mary E. Downing, who was born in Illinois, and had come west by way of the Isthmus of Panama in 1860. Their family was reared at Farmington; and two of the three children have survived. Charles W. served as a member of the State Legislature from 1896 up to the time of his death on February 11, 1898; Kate became Mrs. Mills of Stockton; and Margaret, Mrs. H. A. Linne, is a graduate of the Oakdale district school, and also York's Normal School at Stockton. She followed her profession as teacher for nine years, and having married, now has one child, Ruth Irene, a pupil of the grammar school at Tracy. Mr. and Mrs. Linne are members of the Native Sons of the Golden West and the Native Daughters of the Golden West.

FRED F. WALL.—A thoroughly progressive vineyardist who has something to show for his wide-awake enterprise and untiring industry, is Fred F. Wall who lives one mile and a half due east of Acampo. He was born in Hutchinson County, S. D., on May 29, 1878, the son of Fred and Magdalena Wall, the former a native of Russia, who died in that country. Directly after his death, Mrs. Wall left Russia for America; and coming out to South Dakota, she settled in Hutchinson County, where she married Henry Bechtold, an industrious and thrifty farmer who did what he could to help develop that part of the country. He took up three-fourths of a section of government land, and such were the pioneer conditions, and the demands imposed by them, that our subject received little chance for an education.

When Fred was a young man, his stepfather died, and he then went to Wells County, and worked by the month on ranches. After that he rented farm land until 1905, when he came out to California and bought the old Smart place, a vineyard of forty acres, which he soon sold again. Then he purchased a thirty-acre ranch, which he improved for four years and then sold. Then he leased a ranch for a year, and after that bought the forty acres upon which he now lives. Thirty acres are in vineyard, and seven acres in alfalfa. He has twenty-five acres of wine-grapes, and five acres of Tokays. He himself built all the structures improving the place, including a fine dwelling-house and necessary farm-buildings; and he developed water by sinking a good well, so that with a five-inch pump and a motor of fifteen-horse power, and a complete system of concrete pipes, he can command adequate irrigation.

At Fessenden, Wells County, N. D., Mr. Wall was married, on April 4, 1900, to Miss Elizabeth Schmidt, a native of Russia and the daughter of Phillip Schmidt, a farmer, and his good wife, Katherine. Six children blessed this union: Isaac, Ida, Edna, Clara, Lillian and Laura. A second time, Mr. Wall married, on January 26, 1916, at Lodi, choosing for his wife Miss Ella Weishauer, a native of Kansas and the daughter of Herman Weishauer; and one son has been born to them, Edwin Fred. Mr. Wall is a stockholder in the Farmers & Merchants Bank at Lodi, of which he was formerly a director. He is interested in town property in Lodi.

JOSEPH DOUGLAS CONDON.—A California agriculturist who well deserves the enviable repute he enjoys, both as an experienced and enterprising, and altogether successful rancher, and as a broad-minded, progressive citizen, is Joseph Douglas Condon, living in Upper Roberts Island, about thirteen and one-quarter miles southwest of Stockton, where he has seventy acres. He is a retired Delta reclamation engineer, and it is not surprising that he now owns some of the richest farm-lands in this part of the state.

Mr. Condon was born on Cape Hopewell, New Brunswick, on December 28, 1856—the same day, by the way, on which Woodrow Wilson first saw the light—and enjoyed the best of early educational advantages at a private academy. When eighteen years of age he decided to go to sea, and so he entered the employ of Messrs. L. H. De Veber & Company, who operated trans-Atlantic sailing vessels, and entered upon an apprenticeship under the redoubtable Captain Carter. He followed a seaman's life for five years, and in that time went three times around the Cape of Good Hope, sailed the Indian Ocean and the Sea of China, entered the South Atlantic and visited the Isles of the Southern Pacific, Rio de Janeiro, the West Indies and the British Isles, and to the ports of Continental Europe, while also visiting all or most of the important ports on the Atlantic seaboard, in the United States, and along the great Gulf of Mexico.

He made his first trip into the Golden Gate in 1877, first walking the streets of San Francisco on August 7, 1877, sailing in on the Madura, a barque of 1,000 tons burden from Hong Kong, China, and at that time he had no intention of remaining in California; but after another trip to the Pacific and its beautiful tropic isles, which took twenty months, he returned to San Francisco in 1879 and disembarked there, and has been a resident of California ever since. Making his headquarters in San Francisco Mr. Condon entered the employ of the Nelson & Adams Lumber Company and took up sailing on coastwise vessels, making two trips, one to Eureka and one to Puget Sound.

While in Honolulu Mr. Condon had his first engineering experience, that of construction work on the factory and mill of the Heeia Sugar Plantation, and this experience brought a bountiful return, for in 1880 he was able to enter the employ of J. Hackett, owner of the Pacific Dredge Company, during dredging operations at the transit wharf, Oakland, in the Oakland creek and channel. Mr. Condon in 1883 came to Union Isle, and on the 7th of August associated himself with Captain Adams for five years, as engineer in charge of the river dredging and levee building. He thus helped to reclaim thousands of acres of Delta land now farmed by large interests, and for many years past famous for their heavy production. In 1888 he took charge of Dredger No. 3 on the Jersey Isle, and three years later he moved onto Twitchell Isle, reclaiming the lands later owned by ex-Senator Twitchell.

In 1892 Mr. Condon retired from active service and bought a tract of land, his present home-place, in the improvement of which he spent much time and money, bringing it up to its present fine condition. He had been given United States citizenship in Judge Jones' court at Stockton, and ever since entering into civic responsibilities he has discharged his patriotic duties in the most conscientious manner possible.

At Bethany, in 1888, Mr. Condon was married to Miss Lydia Hewson, second child of Edward and Margaret Hewson of Bethany, and their union was blessed with the birth of four children: Marjorie is deceased; John Edward served in the World War and is now a teacher in the public schools of San Joaquin County; Hattie Violet is a gifted art-student and illustrator; and Jessie Lydia is a student in art. With such a gifted family to live for it is sad to relate that Mrs. Condon passed away on December 31, 1913, a real loss both to her intimate circle and to the community at large.

JAMES A. CONDY.—Through the artistic excellence of his work as an interior and exterior decorator James A. Condy has built up an excellent business in this line, confining himself to the highest grade of work. His grandfather, James Condy, a native of Cornwall, England, came to California via Panama in 1867, and locating at Stockton, with his brother, he ran a sash and door mill at the corner of California and Channel streets, the present site of the Stockton Business College block, which Mr. Condy could have purchased at that time for $600. He followed building operations in Stockton for a number of years. In 1869 he was joined by his wife and four children, who made the journey by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and three children were born to them in Stockton. James H. Condy, his son, the father of our subject, was born in Philadelphia and accompanied his mother to California in 1869. He attended the Jefferson school and sold the San Francisco Chronicle on the streets of Stockton; he played the fife in the old fife and drum corps of the Emmett Guards when he was fourteen years old and followed band work for many years, playing in the Stockton and Angels Camp Bands.

For some time Mr. Condy worked for his father in the planing mill in Stockton and then went to Benicia where he was employed with the Baker & Hamilton Company, contractors and builders, and helped in the erection of the Benicia high school. He went to Angels Camp just after the town had been destroyed by fire and helped rebuild it, erecting at least half of the buildings there. In the twenty years he was in this district he put up seventy-four buildings and also engaged in mining. Coming back to Stockton he built thirty houses in the Oak Park section which he sold on the installment plan, and he has now retired from active work in this line. On June 19, 1882, he was married to Miss Lillian Burres, the daughter of Benedict and Harriet Burres; the father crossed the plains in 1858 and for years farmed on the Waterloo Road, while Mrs. Burres made the same journey four years later, in 1862. Mrs. Condy is a member of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Pioneer Society, while Mr. Condy belongs to Angels Camp Lodge No. 33, I. O. O. F. They are the parents of three children: Alva B., Mrs. Hattie Hodges and James A.

The youngest of the family, James A. Condy, was born at Angels Camp, Calaveras County, August 25, 1891. He attended the public school there and when sixteen years old removed to Stockton with his parents, where he worked with his father in building houses in the northern part of Stockton. Later he worked as foreman for Totten & Trewett, building contractors, and then he took up interior and exterior decorating. Skilful and artistic in his work, he accepts only the highest class contracts, and he has decorated all the fine homes built by Carl Nelson and some for Frederickson Bros. He recently completed a three-story building on Lafayette Street, a three-story business block on West Union Street, the Cinderella Dance Hall block and many bungalows throughout the city. For the past two years the firm has been Condry & Haines, paint contractors of Stockton.

Mr. Condry's marriage, which occurred at Stockton on August 29, 1911, united him with Miss Pearl Bodiner, a native of Chicago. One child has been born to them, a daughter, Nancy Loretta.

JUDSON L. CRAIG.—Known for more than seventeen years as an authority on lands, locations and values of property in the great Central California section, Judson L. Craig is today a specialist in the investment fields of his home country. He was born in Watsonville, Santa Cruz County, Cal., on February 13, 1872, a son of Andrew and Mary C. (Pace) Craig, the former a native of Ohio, and the latter of Missouri. The father, Andrew Craig, crossed the plains with his wife in 1863 and was a pioneer attorney of Stockton; later locating in Watsonville he served as superior judge of Santa Cruz County for twelve years. In 1880 he removed to San Francisco and was elected district attorney and there followed his profession until the time of his death in 1903. The mother was a daughter of Judge Jonathan Pace of Chillicothe, Mo., and she died in 1916.

Judson L., the youngest of their six children, began his education in the grammar school of San Francisco and was later graduated from the Polytechnic high school of that city. His first position was with the Claus Spreckels Sugar Company, doing clerical work, which occupied him for five years; he then went into the wholesale coffee business. In 1903 he went to Portland, Oregon, where he remained for about four years, when he located in Stockton and became interested in the development of unimproved and improved lands, later becoming identified with the South San Joaquin Irrigation District. With his partner, John A. Coley, he was one of the founders of the town of Escalon, making the first improvements there, erecting buildings, laying out the townsite and selling lots; he was one of the promoters and organizers of the Tidewater Southern Railway, and has been a member of its board of directors ever since the road was built. Mr. Craig is the owner of the Clarkadota Fig Plantations, which consist of 1,500 acres of land two miles to the southeast of Stockton, the largest fig orchard of this variety in the world. The Clarkadota fig originated in California. It is seedless and differs from any other fig when cooked because it retains its original shape. It has been shipped fresh and in perfect condition to New York. A cannery for processing all the fruit produced on this plantation will be constructed in Stockton in time to handle the fruit in the summer of 1923. This company sells the land on easy terms, plants the figs and cares for same for five, ten or more years, thus enabling professional and business men, who do not have the time to care for an orchard, to own producing land, which brings in a profit to the owner each year. The leading hotels of San Francisco, and the Merritt Hospital of Oakland own producing fig orchards in this tract and serve their figs to their patrons and patients. The soil of the Clarkadota Fig Plantations is practically identical with that on which W. Sam Clark obtained his wonderful results, the soil being exceptionally heavy. The Clarkadota fig tree bears four and a half to five crops a year, averaging about thirty days each, thus requiring pickers to work for thirty days at a stretch, there being an intermission of a few days between each crop. It is obvious that the orchard cannot be irrigated while the pickers are at work, therefore the soil must be sufficiently heavy to retain an abundance of water for thirty days at a time. The soil of the Clarkadota Fig Plantations is particularly favored by nature through a deposit of a large quantity of lime, silicate, phosphate, etc., all of which, particularly the lime, is a tremendous asset in the growing of figs.

The marriage of Mr. Craig united him with Miss Louise A. Williams, a daughter of a pioneer Woodbridge family, and they are the parents of one daughter, Lida L., a graduate of the Stockton high school and now a student at Mills College, Oakland. Mr. Craig is active in the Stockton Chamber of Commerce and fraternally is a member of Morning Star Lodge, F. & A. M., of Stockton, and Stockton Chapter, R. A. M.

ANGELO PALERMO.—Italy has furnished to America many worthy citizens. They have come from sunny Italy without capital, but have readily adapted themselves to changed conditions, surroundings and customs, have taken advantage of existing opportunities, and through consecutive endeavor have gained prosperity. It is to this class that Angelo Palermo belongs. He was born in Naples, Italy, March 15, 1886, a son of Dominico and Maria Palermo and was only five years old when his father died. He is the youngest of a family of three children, Joseph, Katherine and Angelo. His father was dependent upon his labor day by day to support his family, and after his death Angelo was obliged to assume the family burden; consequently there was no opportunity for an education. His mother is still living in Italy.

In 1906, Angelo Palermo made his way to America, and came directly to California. Stopping at Los Banos, he found employment on the Miller & Lux ranch, where he remained for six months. After the earthquake in San Francisco, he went there and worked for a year in clearing away the debris of the disastrous fire; then he went to Angels Camp and found work in the mines, but this work was not to his liking. He then went to Stockton and worked for the next five years on railroad construction work, and then came to Lodi, where he bought a wagon and peddled ice cream about the streets. From 1911 to 1918 he had accumulated enough capital to establish the Northern Valley Creamery on East Oak Street, where he makes ice cream and butter. He also conducts the Palace of Sweets at No. 7 West Elm Street, where he has built up a fine trade. He also owns business property on East Street in Stockton.

In September, 1911, Mr. Palermo was married to Miss Theresa Mangosta, a native of Catanzaro, Italy, a daughter of Michael and Angelina Mangosta. Miss Mangosta came to America and to California the same year Mr. Palermo did, and their acquaintance resulted in their marriage five years later. They are the parents of two children, Dominic and Emil, and are members of the Catholic Church of Lodi. In his business career, Mr. Palermo has made for himself an honorable name and won a competency that now classes him with the substantial residents of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County.

CHARLES EDWARD DOAN.—Among the substantial business men of San Joaquin County, Charles Edward Doan occupies a foremost position as official court reporter of the Superior Court. A native of El Dorado County, Cal., he was born near Alta on June 21, 1865, a son of Lattimer E. Doan, a native of Kalamazoo, Mich., who crossed the plains with his parents in an ox-team train in the early '50s. Grandfather Elisha Doan was a lumberman in Michigan, so Lattimer E. naturally learned the lumber business. He built and owned a toll road out of Placerville to a point in the mountains, then engaged in the lumber business in El Dorado and Nevada counties, building a sawmill at Canon Creek near Alta, and then at Boca. With W. E. Terry and Capt. John Friend as partners Lattimer E. Doan established the Boca Mill & Ice Company and was its president. The mill and ice houses were established and built at the junction of the Big and Little Truckee rivers, where he got out millions of ties and lumber for the Central Pacific Railroad Company, which was then building its line through to the Pacific Coast, and he also manufactured lumber and shipped it by rail for many years to different points in Nevada and California. He was actively engaged in business until his death, though the last three years of his life were spent in Sacramento, his death occurring there in February, 1881.

Lattimer E. Doan had married Mary Elizabeth Logan, who was born in Kentucky and crossed the vast plains with her parents in an ox-team train, locating at Michigan Bar, where Grandfather Logan was a miner and owned the toll bridge. Mrs. Lattimer E. Doan survived her husband many years, passing away in Stockton in November, 1919, aged eighty years. The family comprised six children, four of whom grew up and are living: Hattie A., living in Stockton; L. E., an oil operator in San Francisco; Charles E. of this sketch, and Mary Elizabeth of Stockton.

Charles Edward Doan attended the Sacramento public schools and for a time was in the employ of the Continental Oil Company of that city. In 1881 he and his brother, L. E. Doan, located in Stockton, where the latter became the agent for Schofield & Tevis, and also for the Continental Oil Company, and Charles E. was associated with him in these enterprises. Later the brothers took charge of the Stockton Furniture Company, owned by his mother, Mrs. Mary E. Doan, and her brother, J. V. Logan, then located on the site of the Hotel Sutter on East Main Street, and here they engaged in the manufacture and sale of furniture. L. E. Doan has since become one of the leading oil men of California and with others is now operating the Doan Oil Company at Shreveport, La., with headquarters in that city, Charles E. being one of the stockholders. When a young man Mr. Doan had become very proficient in shorthand and in 1891 he took it up as a profession in Seattle where he became a reporter in the U. S. Land Office and for the U. S. Courts of Washington. Returning to Stockton in 1893 he established the Gas City Business College, which he successfully conducted until September, 1901, when he disposed of it to J. H. Humphreys and T. F. Wolfenbarger. It is now the Stockton College of Commerce. Meanwhile, Mr. Doan had become a court reporter in the Superior Court of San Joaquin County under E. E. Hood, and upon the latter's death in 1901 Mr. Doan was unanimously appointed to take his place as official court reporter, a position he has since held to the entire satisfaction of the court. About seventeen years ago Mr. Doan became interested in viticulture and purchased fifty-two acres of raw land four miles southeast of Lodi, set it to vineyard and now has a full-bearing vineyard of table grapes. With his family he resides in the comfortable home which he erected at Rose and Monroe streets, Stockton.

In Portland, Ore., Mr. Doan was married to Miss Catherine Maurer, a native of Stockton; her father, Peter Maurer, was a pioneer farmer of San Joaquin County. Mr. and Mrs. Doan are the parents of two children: Roland E. is the proprietor of the R. E. Doan Sporting Goods House of Stockton, among the largest and best equipped houses in this line on the Coast. Alma Irma is the wife of E. C. Parks, of San Francisco. Fraternally Mr. Doan is a member of Charity Lodge, No. 6, I. O. O. F., of Stockton. He also belongs to the California Shorthand Reporters' Association and the National Shorthand Reporters' Association.

THOMAS F. DONOVAN.—A leader in the successful development of the resources of San Joaquin County is Thomas F. Donovan, a native son who was born on his father's farm, on Upper Sacramento Road, three miles east of Stockton, on February 21, 1878, the son of Thomas Donovan, deceased, who had married Miss Ellen Fitzgerald, like himself a native of Ireland, and who resided on the old home place until his death, October 1, 1922, aged eighty-five. Mr. Donovan came out to California in the early sixties by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and for about eight years worked on the Wilkins ranch. Then he bought the farm of 120 acres, east of Stockton, which he continued to cultivate until his death, about fifteen years ago. Several children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Donovan; and those now living are, besides our subject, Catherine, who is the wife of Thomas Heffernan, William John, Mame, Nellie, Mrs. A. A. Fitzgerald, Margaret, Mrs. Charles Walsh, and Hannah, Mrs. James Heffernan.

Thomas F. Donovan attended the August grammar school, and at the early age of fourteen drove an eight-horse team on his father's ranch. When twenty years of age, he entered into a partnership with his brother, William J. Donovan, and leased 500 acres of the Wagner ranch on the Lower Sacramento Road, which they farmed to grain for four seasons. Then our subject sold his interest to his brother, and he bought a half-interest in the Blake Transfer Company of Stockton, owned by Mr. Carpenter, and joined the other partner, G. S. Blake, and later Blake sold his interest to O. A. Fitzgerald, and two years later, Mr. Donovan bought out Mr. Fitzgerald and became sole owner. For five years he did a large business, running one of the first motor trucks seen in Stockton.

Later Mr. Donovan again started farming with his brother, operating some 500 acres in the Terminal Tract northwest of Stockton. In the meantime, he sold a half-interest in the Blake Transfer Company to Frank Watrous, and at the end of the year he disposed of the other half to his partner and retired altogether from the transfer enterprise. With his brother he then rented 600 acres of land and farmed the same for a year, and then they farmed about 2,200 acres to grain, on different ranches between Stockton and Farmington. For the past few years Mr. Donovan has been engaged in caterpillar contracting, leveling, plowing and planting of crops. One season he plowed 2,500 acres on the Chowchilla ranch, and the next year he harvested 4,000 acres there. At present he is devoting himself to the development of smaller ranches of 1,000 acres, or thereabouts, in the vicinity of Stockton.

While in the transfer business, he bought the lot on which now stands the Hotel Taft, which he later sold, and he erected a large barn on Madison street for the business. He is one of the veteran local members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and an ex-trustee in the same. In Stockton, January, 1910, he married Miss Ala Martin, born at Fresno. Her father, W. T. Martin, was the first white child born on the Calaveras river, near Waterloo, his parents being early pioneers and farmers. Mr. Martin, after removing to Fresno, was superintendent of the Fresno Irrigating Canal, and is now an orchardist near Selma. Her mother, who was Theo S. Wildermuth, was born in Calaveras County and Mrs. Donovan is the eldest living child of their four children.

JOSEPH DELUCCHI.—A native son of Stockton, who has never lost sight of his determination to become a successful lawyer, is Joseph Delucchi, who is practicing his profession in Stockton with offices located in the Realty Building. He was born in Stockton February 22, 1895, a son of Lorenzo and Lena (Armanino) Delucchi, both natives of Genoa, Italy. Thirty-two years ago Lorenzo Delucchi located in San Joaquin County and was engaged in farming. Twenty years ago William Newman, who owned an eighty-acre ranch near Linden, made the proposition to Lorenzo Delucchi that if he would plant the eighty acres to grapes and care for same, he would give him one-half of the property. Mr. Delucchi planted the ranch to Mission and Black Prince grapes and cared for same and Mr. Newman gave him forty acres as agreed upon. He still owns twenty acres of this ranch, which has been very productive; he also owns valuable real estate in the city of Stockton. Both parents are still living, and they have four children: Joseph, Mrs. Lillian Bianchini, Lawrence and Doris. Joseph, the boy, attended the Fair Oaks school, then entered the Stockton high school, from which he was duly graduated with the class of 1915; he then entered the office of Hugh McNoble, where he began the study of law. In 1917 he joined the 307th Supply Company and was stationed at Madison Barracks, N. Y., until he was sent overseas to France. He drove a motor truck carrying ammunition and supplies to the army and was frequently under fire. He was in the service for twenty-three months, then was returned to the United States and received his discharge as sergeant at the Presidio, San Francisco, October 4, 1919. In November of the same year he resumed his study of the law in Stockton; the following year, September 1, 1920, he was admitted to practice law in the appellate court, Sacramento County. Fraternally he is a member of the Karl Ross Post No. 16, American Legion, the Maccabees and the San Joaquin County Bar Association. He is a believer in the future prosperity of his home city and loses no opportunity to boost for Stockton and San Joaquin County.

ANGELO SERVENTI.—Passing away in the prime of life, the late Angelo Serventi had already established himself in the commercial circles of Stockton as a successful business man. He was born near Genoa, Italy on June 24, 1878, the oldest of five children born to Christopher and Maria (Semenza) Serventi descended from old families in Italy and who were agriculturists in the vicinity of Genoa. His mother died in 1891 and soon afterwards Christopher brought his son Angelo to San Francisco, arriving in 1891; his other children joined him later.

Angelo Serventi received a good education in the schools of his native place until he was thirteen years of age when he accompanied his father to San Francisco, Cal. On his arrival he immediately went to work, finding employment in the establishment of a florist. However desiring to gain knowledge in the English language he attended night school, improving the opportunity so well he was soon able to read and speak the language of his adopted country. He was deeply interested in the florist business, having a natural love for flowers, working diligently and studying the florist's art. In a few short years he mastered its details and he spent sixteen years at the trade in the city.

Meantime, January 26, 1901, in Stockton he was married to Miss Margherita Battilana, who was also born near Genoa, Italy, a daughter of Peter and Angela (Boschetto) Battilana descended from old families in Italy who were farmers. Her mother died in Italy in January, 1897, while her father now makes his home in Stockton. To them were born eight children, seven of whom are living: John Battilana, a grocer; G. Battilana, a realtor; Mrs. Maria Gianelli and Mrs. Paula Lagorio, all of Stockton; Mrs. Flavia Demarchi passed away in Italy, in 1919; Mrs. Antonietta Ferrari lives near Genoa; Mrs. Margherita Serventi, of this review, and Dominic, a business man in Stockton. Margherita Battilana attended private school in her home locality receiving a good education. In June, 1897, she came to Stockton where she had brothers and sisters living.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Serventi resided in San Francisco, until 1905, during which time Mr. Serventi continued at florist work. In 1905 he came to Stockton and soon afterwards engaged in the grocery business in which he was successful, continuing for a period of seven years, when he sold out because his great love for flowers and the florist's art called him back into the business of his delight. He established the California Flower Company, building up a splendid business at 9 North California near Main Street, until he had the leading business of the kind in the city. However he was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labors for he was called by death July 27, 1921, when only forty-three years of age.

Coming to America as a poor boy, he became successful solely through his own efforts and at the time of his death was the owner of valuable property in the south part of the city, including seven houses. Since her husband's death Mrs. Serventi continues to make her home here and looks after the interests left by her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Serventi became the parents of one daughter, Laura, who attends St. Agnes College. Mr. Serventi was a member of the Red Men, the Eagles, Loyal Order of Moose and the Foresters of America.

GEORGE R. McLEOD.—A citizen of outstanding influence and activity, George R. McLeod is one of the best known grain experts in the state of California, his experience extending over a period of twenty years, until recently serving in the capacity of buyer and superintendent in charge of the agricultural department of the Sperry Flour Company of Stockton. Experiments conducted under his supervision as manager of this department of that company have probably done more in developing the grades of wheat in the state than the efforts of any other man.

Mr. McLeod was born in the Montezuma Hills, Solano County, Cal., on a ranch, and at the age of twelve years was driving a team and following a plow on his father's ranch. For twelve years he engaged in farming at home; then became wool buyer for the Koshland Company of San Francisco. At the age of twenty-eight he entered the grain buying field and became associated with the exporting and importing firm of Erlanger & Gallinger, traveling throughout California, Oregon, and a number of trips were made to Australia in the interests of the company. In the fall of 1906, he located in Oakdale, Stanislaus County, and for four years was associated with the Oakdale Milling Company; thence to Stockton with the Frank A. Guernsey Company, and the Dickinson Grain Company, and in 1912 he assumed charge of the new feed plant, the latest unit of the Sperry Flour Company in Stockton, this plant being the largest feed plant west of the Mississippi River. For the past six years he has had charge of the big Sperry Flour ranch near Farmington, and the ranch in the South San Joaquin irrigation district. On these ranches experiments which have resulted in many crop improvements have been carried on. During the years of 1914-15 he was put in charge of the campaign to increase the corn acreage in the state, promoted by the Sperry Flour Company. Not only has Mr. McLeod's ability been shown in his many experiments in soils, cultivation, feeding and cropping, but in the management of big campaigns, he has been most successful. This campaign was to increase the supply of corn, so that California could meet the demand without importing from the East. Most gratifying results were obtained, so that now enough corn is raised in the state to supply the demand and from one to two million of dollars saved yearly and kept at home, which formerly went east to buy the product. In 1918 he was the active manager of a state-wide "grow more wheat" campaign, conducted by the Sperry Flour Company. Thirty-five varieties of wheat were experimented with and from them two varieties were found superior to any grown in the state; they were of an earlier variety, of a better quality and produced more bushels to the acre. These wheat experiments were carried on from year to year until the early maturing wheat now in general use resulted, and today there are about 176,000 acres grown in California. This campaign attracted the attention of all wheat growing districts of the United States and many letters came to the company requesting information, not only from individuals but from universities and colleges.

Early in March of 1922 the announcement was received by the Stockton Chamber of Commerce from Maj. L. T. Grant, director of the twelfth district United States Veterans bureau, to the effect that Mr. McLeod had been appointed managing superintendent of the United States Veterans agricultural training school now being established on Lindley farm, Rough and Ready Island. The appointment by Major Grant was made upon the recommendation of a committee representing the Stockton Chamber of Commerce appointed, at his request, for that purpose. In the selection of Mr. McLeod the committee feels that one of the most practical men with wide experience in San Joaquin County farming problems and a man of real executive and initiative ability has been secured. The duties of Mr. McLeod as superintending manager will be to actively superintend all activities on the 1,170 acre farm and to see that the trainees at the big school are given practical and worth while experience. Mr. McLeod assumed charge March 7, 1923. There are now sixty-eight students who came here who were found adapted to agricultural life and are now located on their own farms.

JOSEPH M. CHIRHART.—Among the leading contractors of San Joaquin County may be found Joseph M. Chirhart, and he is credited with many of the best buildings in the city and county. Born on a farm in St. Joseph County, Ind., October 5, 1874, he attended the district schools and was later sent to Notre Dame College in South Bend, where he remained until eighteen years of age. He then took up the trade of carpenter with Barney Hertzell, a building contractor of South Bend; later a partnership was formed with Louis Hickey, and for one year they did a general contracting business; the partnership was then dissolved and Mr. Chirhart continued alone for three years. He then entered the employ of Herring & Son, contractors, and served as foreman of construction on many of the largest buildings in South Bend, remaining with them until 1906 when he was employed by the Santa Fe Railroad Company to construct and install their block signal system along their line through Kansas, Colorado and New Mexico. The following year he started for California and upon arriving in Stockton was obliged to transfer from the Santa Fe to the Southern Pacific in order to complete his journey to San Francisco on account of the floods in the San Joaquin Valley. His arrival in San Francisco was timely, for that city had been laid waste by the disastrous earthquake and fire of 1906. His first work was on a hotel at the corner of Turk and Taylor streets, next on St. Mark's Hotel in Oakland, for Lundgreen & Hicks, and then he went to Agnew as foreman of carpenter work on the rebuilding of the state hospital, which had been completely wrecked by the earthquake of 1906; two years later he was employed on the new receiving building at the state hospital in Stockton.

About this time a partnership was formed in Stockton with C. J. Nystedt, under the firm name of Chirhart and Nystedt, and among the more outstanding buildings of their construction are the following: the Aetna Apartments, the Embery flats, the watercure building at Clark's Sanitarium, the Bennett flats at Sutter and Poplar streets, the Catholic Church at Lodi, the Science building of the Stockton high school, completion of work on the Jefferson school building, remodeling the Lincoln school, erection of two buildings for the Standard Oil Company, and the concrete work on the City Bank building. During 1916, the partnership was dissolved and Mr. Chirhart continued his contracting business alone. He did the carpenter work on the Georges Building, erected the new Stockton Mineral Baths, a fine piece of concrete work, built the high schools at Hughson, and at Denair, Stanislaus County, and the grammar school at Woodbridge. In the spring of 1922 Mr. Chirhart removed with his family to Lodi, and since then has built the St. Ann's Academy, Lodi; remodeled the Franklin school at Franklin, as well as erecting buildings at Isleton, Sacramento County.

The marriage of Mr. Chirhart united him with Miss Mabel Holeman, born at Wallace, Calaveras County, Cal., and they are the parents of two daughters, Frances Leverage and Vivian Josephine. Mr. Chirhart is a member of the Knights of Columbus at Stockton.

LAWRENCE EDWARDS.—A distinguished attorney who has added lustre to the San Joaquin County Bar, is Lawrence Edwards, junior member of the well-known law-firm of Messrs. Tye & Edwards, at Stockton. He was born at Los Angeles on May 12, 1887, the son of Robert L. and Clarissa (Smith) Edwards and grandson of ex-Governor Edwards of Missouri, early settlers in the San Joaquin Valley. The father served a term as public administrator of San Joaquin County and is now farming near Linden. Lawrence Edwards was reared in Stockton, where he attended the public schools and then entered the Polytechnic high school, San Francisco, from which he was graduated in the class of 1905. After spending one year at St. Mary's College, in Oakland, he took up the study of law in Hastings Law School and graduated with the class of '12, when he received the L. L. B. degree.

The same year he opened a law office in Stockton, and in 1915 he was elected, on the Democratic ticket, assemblyman of the State Legislature, and he was re-elected in 1917. He introduced and put through the bill for the erection of the State Armory, on North California street, Stockton, the only one, by the way, to be built in California in recent years. He also worked for the improvements in the reclamation and irrigation districts, particularly in the Delta section, thus making a very good legislative record; and when the World War called for the assistance of the Americans, he was attached to the 91st Division at Camp Lewis, in the officers' training school, and later was transferred to Camp Taylor, Ky. He received his commission as second lieutenant and was assigned to the 71st Field Artillery, 11th Division, at Camp Knox, Kentucky. Shortly after he had received his commission, the armistice was signed.

Lieutenant Edwards then returned to Stockton; and in 1919 he formed a partnership with Hugh J. Tye, under the firm name of Tye & Edwards. He is a member of the Board of Trustees of the Preston State School, at Ione; belongs to Stockton Parlor No. 7, of the N. S. G. W.; and is a member of the Anteros Club, the Yosemite Club, the Stockton Golf and Country Club, and Karl Ross Post of the American Legion, of which he was first president, serving two terms.

At Stockton, in 1914, Mr. Edwards was married to Miss Margaret L. Reid, a native of Scotland, who was reared in Stockton; and their union has been blessed with one daughter, Joanne L. Edwards. Mr. Edwards is developing two ranches in the Linden section of the county; he recently planted a walnut orchard, and he has had for four years a dairy ranch of eighty acres, with twenty-five cows. He is a member of the San Joaquin County Bar Association and of the Phi Alpha Delta Fraternity.

PETER CALORI.—At present residing at 2006 North El Dorado Street, Stockton, Peter Calori is an old-time resident of San Joaquin County, with whose various interests and affairs he has been closely identified since the year 1881, when as a boy of eighteen he left the parental roof in far-away Italy and cast his lot in California. Agriculture in its different phases has been the chief object of his attention and endeavors since coming here, and his unqualified success as a vegetable gardener near Mossdale has brought him recognition as one of the foremost men of his class in San Joaquin County. He was born in the Province of Genoa, near Chiavari, Italy, October 29, 1863, and is the youngest son of Dominico and Maria Calori, both natives of the same province. In 1866 the father made a trip to Brazil where he remained only four months when he returned to Italy and became an extensive rancher and vineyardist. Both parents are now deceased.

Peter Calori is the youngest of three children and the only one to come to the United States. At the age of eighteen years he went to Havre, France, and there took passage on a vessel bound for America reaching San Francisco in June, 1881, and soon found employment in the vegetable gardens of Marin County, where he worked for three months, when he settled in this county, which has been his home ever since. For five years he worked in vegetable gardens where now stands the splendid group of buildings of the Stockton high school. In 1893, Mr. Calori came to Mossdale and purchased fifty-four acres of raw land covered with tules and willows. He cleared the land and planted orchard and vineyard. Several times his orchard and vineyard was swept away by the floods, until finally the levees were constructed of sufficient strength to control the flood waters and Mr. Calori was able to raise fine crops of fruits and vegetable; on his land, and his products became known all over the county. Nine years ago Mr. Calori erected a fine residence on his ranch, but since retiring from active business life he has lived in Stockton with his family, where he owns a residence on North Eldorado Street. Mr. Calori's energies are not alone confined to ranching operations but as he has prospered he has invested his profits in business and residence property in Stockton being very optimistic for the future greatness of this city.

The marriage of Mr. Calori occurred in Stockton November 29, 1891, and united him with Miss Serafina Rossi, a native of Italy, born near Genoa, a daughter of G. B. and Catherine Rossi who followed agricultural pursuits and are both now deceased. Her maternal grandfather, Nichol Guglierri, made the trip to San Francisco in the early period of the gold excitement and for a few years followed mining in the mother lode country when he returned to Italy and spent the remainder of his days. Serafina Rossi, the fourth of eleven children, arrived in Stockton in 1891; there she met and married Mr. Calori, and their union has been blessed with four children who are all very devoted to their parents. Mary attended Heald's Business College, Edna the Stockton high school, and the two sons are Andrew and August.

Mr. Calori was one of the founders of the Associated Gardeners' Union, an association for marketing fruits and vegetables, and was an active and influential member until his retirement from the busy life of a rancher. He has never had occasion to regret his determination to seek a home in America.

HERMAN C. MEYER.—A history of an institution is but a biography of those who made it. Any story of the Stockton City Laundry is a story of the enterprise and business sagacity of Herman C. Meyer, one of the city's leading men, and his associate, Mrs. Anna Sellman. Herman C. Meyer was born on his father's ranch, seven miles east of Stockton, October 20, 1863, the son of Henry and Anna R. (Behrman) Meyer. His father, Henry Meyer, was one of California's pioneers, coming West in 1849. He engaged for awhile in mining and then the family located on a farm in the fertile San Joaquin County where seven sons and one daughter were born. Young Herman attended the Delphi district school and at seventeen years of age started out to earn his own living. His first employment was in a San Francisco grocery store. After three years in the metropolis, he returned to Stockton and entered the employ of Mr. Lafayette Sellman, who then owned and managed the Stockton City Steam Laundry.

After Mr. Sellman's death, Mr. Meyer was made manager. In 1903 the laundry was incorporated and he was elected vice-president and general manager of the institution, a position he has ever since held. Always the aim and purpose of the management of the Stockton City Laundry has been service. Many years of conscientious thought and close study and the expenditure of much money for the latest and most efficient machinery has developed the institution to its present high rank among the laundries of the West.

Associated with Mr. Meyer in the conduct of the business has always been Mrs. Anna Sellman and her daughter, Grace Sellman Coates, who is secretary-treasurer of the company. In answer to the demands of inevitable expansion, they have made extensive improvements. The entire plant is in three units, on lots each 50x150 feet, and about sixty-five hands are employed regularly.

Machinery that performs marvelous work has been installed and the big plant has won the admiration of men who specialize in the laundry business. Experts from many cities have informed Mr. Meyer that his establishment represents the last word in laundry equipment. One of the outstanding features of the laundry process is the equipment for softening the water, thereby eliminating the use of caustic sodas, etc. This is an invaluable protection to all materials laundered. This softened water combined with pure soap greatly prolongs the life of the fabric. A girls' rest room is in process of installation, with lockers for each girl and hot and cold water, and an attractive lunch room. Tea and coffee will be served by the company. These provisions are greatly appreciated by the employees who, it is needless to say, are among the most expert to be found anywhere. Through Mrs. Sellman's humanitarianism each employee is presented with a life insurance policy at the end of six months' service.

While this busy institution has been Mr. Meyer's hobby and his life's work, yet he has found time to engage in extensive operations in other fields. He is a director in the City Bank of Stockton, and also in the Home Builders' Investment and Securities Company, and a member of the firm of Charles E. Pike, furniture dealers.

Herman Meyer is a fraternal man—big hearted and brotherly. He holds active membership in all Masonic bodies, including the Shrine, and is an Odd Fellow of high standing. He is a member of the Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W., of Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E.; he belongs to the Stockton Golf and Country Club, the Yosemite Club, and the Rotary Club. He was married in 1913 to Jessie Ora Farmer Belding. They have two children: Miss Benora F. Belding, aged sixteen, and Miss Anna Cort Meyer, aged eight, in whose companionship he finds the greatest delight.

LEON E. McCLUNG.—An early settler of Lodi is represented by Leon E. McClung, who for the past thirty-one years has been an important factor in the remarkable development of the Lodi section. His parents were farmers near Niles, the county seat of Berrien County, Mich., and he was born on his father's farm on December 31, 1864. His paternal grandparents were pioneers of Michigan, settling there when it was a vast wilderness, where they reared their family.

Leon E. received his schooling in the district schools in his native county and twenty-six years of his life were spent on the farm, years of toil, but none the less valuable in after life. During the year of 1890 he left home for the Pacific Coast and located in Spokane, Wash., where he remained for one year, coming to Lodi in 1891. He formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Ed. F. Van Vlear, in the building business and they were the pioneers in that line, the partnership continuing for four years, during which time many residences were erected throughout the county and city. Besides his building operations Mr. McClung bought acreage property, which he cut up into small tracts, erecting houses on same and selling them. He purchased four acres in the Barnhart tract and erected four houses, each house surrounded by an acre of land; thus his work has meant the upbuilding of the community adjacent to Lodi, and its permanence and stability. He has specialized in contracts with ranchers to take bare land, erect residences and out-buildings, complete in every respect, and has made a great success in this line, employing as high as twenty men in his building operations. His experience and connection with viticulture have been quite extensive in buying, developing and selling the improved vineyards. He was among the very first growers to irrigate vineyards, contrary to the advice of many other growers, but by actual demonstration he found that the irrigated vineyard produced more and better grapes than the unirrigated one. At one time he owned a twenty-acre vineyard in the Dougherty tract, one of the best producers in the county; this he later sold at a good profit.

Mr. McClung has been twice married, his first wife being Miss Lizzie Van Vlear, a native of Michigan, who passed away in 1916. Two children were born of this union: Myrtle is Mrs. Henry Daley, and they reside at Burlingame and have two children; Earl is married and has two children, residing in Sacramento; he is associated with an automobile company. The second marriage of Mr. McClung united him with Mrs. Elizabeth (Riggs) Howe, a native of Missouri. She owns a fifteen-acre vineyard in the Lodi section. Mr. McClung has demonstrated his ability to advance steadily toward the goal of prosperity and at the same time to give his aid to matters destined for the progress and development of his locality.

WILLIAM MECKLENBERG.—For the past thirty-seven years William Mecklenberg has continuously resided in San Joaquin County and since early manhood has been prominently identified with the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County, having been one of the most extensive grain farmers of the West Side. He was born at Des Moines, Iowa, on February 2, 1883, and when two years old was brought by his mother to this state and entered the home of George Thoming, near Vernalis, and in this splendid environment he grew to young manhood. He received a good education in the schools of the district and when he was fourteen years old began to make his way in the world. He worked for five years on the Thoming ranch, or until he was nineteen years old, then began to farm on shares, receiving in the neighborhood of 11,000 sacks of grain for his share. In 1905 he purchased 160 acres of land and gradually added to it until he owned a half-section, and with another quarter-section leased he thus farmed 480 acres to wheat and barley. In connection with his grain raising, he had also dealt in buying and selling mules and horses.

On account of failing health he sold everything in 1919, and upon his removal to Tracy, he underwent three serious operations, but by excellent care is slowly regaining his former health. He now owns twenty acres of excellent irrigated alfalfa land on the Lincoln Highway, three miles east of Tracy, on which is a fine residence and other farm buildings. Mr. Mecklenberg is the father of two children, Ivan and Dorothy, and his mother makes her home with him. He owns a residence on East Tenth street and other desirable town lots in Tracy. Politically he is a Republican and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. He is a representative resident of San Joaquin County, where he has made his home from his boyhood days.

JAMES P. MURPHY.—An experienced, progressive and very successful rancher, fortunate in the aid of his equally ambitious and enterprising sons, is James P. Murphy, well-known in patriotic circles as a stand-pat Jeffersonian Democrat. He was born in Sonora, Tuolumne County, on November 8, 1870, the son of John and Mary Margaret (Vizzard) Murphy, both of whom were natives of Ireland. Our subject was afforded the best common-school advantages, and in 1886 rounded out his studies, with honors, at Atlanta, in this county. The following year he took up ranching on the homestead, not far away, cultivating a portion of his father's ranch; and in this initial venture he was very successful. About 1904, he removed to another ranch, near Lodi, where he followed grain-farming for about eleven years. He painstakingly availed himself of the last word of science in modern agricultural methods, studying conditions and prospects in the California field in particular, and he used only the most up-to-date appliances, as a result of which he not only advanced to the forefront, but he was able also to point the way where others might follow.

At Modesto, Mr. Murphy was married to Miss Helen Ida Johnson, the ceremony taking place on June 16, 1890, and the lady being a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman and Magdalena Johnson, pioneers in San Joaquin County. Both of these esteemed parents are now deceased; but a brother of Mrs. Murphy, Fred Johnson, is still living, the popular chief deputy county clerk in San Joaquin County. Nine children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Murphy: William J. resides with his wife and five children on a ranch near Vernalis; Thomas F., who is also married, is a merchant in San Francisco; James P. Murphy, Jr., saw valiant service in the U. S. Army and is now chief business clerk of the Ford Garage at Tracy, his popularity having been increased by his candidacy for the office of city trustee in Tracy, on April 10, 1922; Ed. P., a rancher, also served in the U. S. Army; Cecilia Anne is the wife of Harold Strother, and resides at Gridley, Colusa County, and they have one daughter; Mary M. is the wife of Fred Hilken, of Tracy; Delia E. is a nurse at the St. Joseph Home, in Stockton; Miss Agnes lives at home; and Joseph A. is still a student. In 1915, Mr. Murphy and his sons acquired the William Mecklenberg rancho near Vernalis; and there they have since very successfully engaged in grain farming.

MARCELLO NEGRETE.—The well-known harnessmaker and automobile top manufacturer, an expert in his line, Marcello Negrete, is a native of Mexico, having been born in Mexico City, January 16, 1865, and there received all the schooling he ever had. While still young in years, he was apprenticed to learn the harnessmaker's trade and worked at it until he was twenty-three years old, when he went to Mazatlan, Sinaloa, Mexico, and there continued to work at his trade. In 1895 he removed to Stockton, and was first employed by C. Rodder, the harness man; later with C. G. Schneider in the same work. Nineteen years ago he established his own business at 129 South Hunter street, where he remained for ten years and then located at his present place, 112 South Hunter street, where he makes automobile tops and specializes in fine hand-tooled Mexican saddles, an art he acquired while residing in Mexico. He makes the steel tools with which he executes the designs of flowers and fruits and these saddles bring a high price. Mr. Negrete engraved a large piece of leather for the Chamber of Commerce for exhibition at Buffalo, N. Y.; this piece was also recently shown at the San Joaquin County fair held in Stockton in 1921, and attracted a great deal of attention, it being a very fine piece of work. He has also engraved a suitcase, which is considered by the salesmen who handle it, as the finest piece of engraving on the market. Mr. Negrete is known throughout the state as the most expert workman in his line.

The marriage of Mr. Negrete united him with Miss Adella Lizarraga, a native of Sinaloa, and seven children blessed their union: Vincent Negrete is a graduate of the Stockton high school and is with the Joe Gianelli Company; Antoinetta is a graduate of the high school and the Brothers School and is now one of the Dominican Sisters in the San Francisco convent; Ralph is a graduate of the high school and the Brothers School and employed by the Sampson Iron Works; Irma is a graduate of the high school and the Brothers School and is a clerk with the Merchants' Association Rating Bureau of Stockton; August is clerk in the Stockton Branch of the Bank of Italy; Aurora is employed by the Joe Gianelli Company; and Salvador is a student in Santa Rosa College. Mrs. Negrete passed away February 2, 1919.

JOHN J. PEDRO.—Linked with the development of the city of Tracy and more particularly the West Side section of San Joaquin County, John J. Pedro is an enterprising rancher owning an extensive alfalfa ranch and Holstein dairy four miles west of Tracy on the Lincoln Highway. He was born on the Isle of Flores, Azores, on June 26, 1890, a son of Joseph and Rosalia (Andrada) Pedro Cameria. An older brother, Anthony, preceded him to California and became active in agricultural pursuits until his death at Newman, Cal., in 1920.

Leaving his native land when he was fifteen years old, John J. came to America and upon arrival in California was glad to make this his permanent home; accordingly he applied for U. S. citizenship and at Merced, Cal., in 1913 received his final papers in the name of John J. Pedro, as he desired. He began by working for wages near Gustine, Cal., and within two years had saved about $800; later, in partnership with other men, he engaged in various businesses and was unusually successful, and when he decided to locate in San Joaquin County in 1914, a choice piece of land was purchased and in partnership with a brother this land was developed into one of the finest modern dairies in the district, which was disposed of in 1920 for $60,000. The brothers had acquired a piece of raw land from the Looney Bros. four miles west of Tracy, consisting of 200 acres, and were among the very first farmers to grow alfalfa; modern barns and necessary apparatus were constructed. The alfalfa is yielding five crops each season and a herd of choice Holstein milch cows is being built up, now numbering 165 head. Fourteen years of hard work and practical experience in connection with farming and dairying enables Mr. Pedro to take advantage of many things which would be overlooked by the average farmer.

Mr. Pedro's marriage in 1909 united him with Miss Julia Catherine Pedroza, a native daughter of California born at Salinas, Monterey County, Cal., in 1890, a daughter of Joseph and Mary Julia (Bettencourt) Pedroza, both natives of the Azores and now residents of San Jose, Cal., engaged in horticulture. Mr. and Mrs. Pedro are the parents of three children, Alfred, Evelyn and Walter, all pupils in the Lammersville district school. Mr. Pedro is a member of the board of directors of the Tracy Branch of the Bank of Italy. During the World War he organized the work of the war drives and Liberty loans for the West Side territory and solicited the Portuguese settlers with splendid results in each case. Mr. Pedro is a member of the S. E. S. of Tracy. During 1918, Mr. Pedro made a visit to his homeland and birthplace, spending six months going and coming, bringing back with him his father, mother, two younger brothers and a niece. Mr. Pedro is a big booster for Tracy, and has given of his time and money to aid the cause of irrigation.

ST. JOSEPH'S HOME AND HOSPITAL.—

Among the institutions of San Joaquin County devoted to caring for suffering humanity, St. Joseph's Home and Hospital of Stockton stands pre-eminent. It was founded by the late Rev. Father W. B. O'Connor, who had presided over the parish of St. Mary's for forty years, and originally was built for a home for old men. But as the years have come and gone the institution has been enlarged until it embraces many kinds of helpful agencies. The land upon which the buildings stand was donated by Miss Julia Weber, daughter of Captain Weber, the founder of Stockton, and work was begun; however, before the building was completed, at the request of Dr. Gibbons and other physicians of Stockton, a portion of the building was converted into a hospital. This was the first hospital in Stockton and was opened on Christmas Eve of 1900 by the Sisters of St. Dominic. Those in charge of the opening were Sisters Margaret, Imelda and Philomena; the last named was the first Sister Superior, while Sister Margaret had charge of the sick.

When the hospital was opened there were twenty-five beds, later a like number were added, then as demands came for more rooms the old men were removed to a temporary building in the rear while a brick structure was being built for them. Later a new addition was added for their use and a new chapel erected. In 1902 the original building was made into a hospital and was in charge of Sister M. Eulalia; the next year she founded the first nurses' training school in Stockton and up to the present time there have been ninety-eight nurses graduated from this school. The school is now in charge of Miss Anna McDonald, who has been connected with the hospital since 1902. Sister Superior M. Eulalia, who is now in charge of the institution is a native Californian, born in San Francisco of pioneer parents, and has had charge of Catholic hospitals and been an instructor in schools and convents in Nevada and in California for years and is a woman of much business ability.

The lower floor of the first hospital building is now used for a maternity ward; the upper floor is the home of the nurses and there is also a nursery for children in the same building. In the east wing is a dining room for nurses. The hospital laundry occupies a separate building and is equipped with every modern appliance used in that industry.

In 1916 the new hospital building, containing eighty-five beds, was erected on the north end of the property. This is among the finest and best equipped hospitals of its size in the State. The interior finish is white enamel and every modern convenience has been considered. There are five operating rooms; one being used exclusively for eye, ear, nose and throat operations. There is a complete X-ray laboratory in charge of Sister Gregory; a room is set apart for preparing dressings and one for sterilizing. There is a long sun-porch on the east side of the building used for the patients in winter months and in summer there is a beautiful lawn with ample shade for their convenience. The number of beds, including the maternity ward, now has reached 100. The hospital is presided over by six graduate nurses and thirty student nurses. In planning the entire structure with its various additions the Sisters of St. Dominic have overlooked nothing that would add to the comfort of the patients in their care, nor to the convenience of the physicians caring for their charges. It is hard to estimate the great good accomplished by an institution of this kind, but that its far-reaching and satisfying results will maintain with coming generations the prestige it now has is assured, for the Sisters have builded for all time and fully realize that the "good we do lives after us."

JOHN WORTHINGTON DORSEY EWING.—Prominent among the distinguished residents of Stockton whose influence for progress is always perceptible is the very representative American, John Worthington Dorsey Ewing, who was born in San Antonio, Bexar County, Texas, on September 4, 1880, the son of Philip C. S. Barbour Ewing and his good wife, who was Miss Lou Eleanor Dorsey before her marriage, the former, now deceased, a native of Mississippi and the latter of Missouri. The elder Ewing was born in the Bayou State and reared by his uncle, Philip Barbour, who owned an old plantation near Louisville, Ky. Upon reaching manhood he returned to the old Ewing plantation in Owen County, Ky., where he raised tobacco, cattle, horses and mules. During the Civil War, on account of his sympathy with the cause of the South, he gave to the Confederate Army all of his livestock. Later he purchased the old Mayo place in Cooper County, Mo., where he continued to raise tobacco and livestock. The old Mayo home was built of black oak slabs in 1831, and still stands on a hill on the old plantation, where Daniel Boone and his companions camped during the Indian Wars. The old gentleman came to California in the seventies, and stocked the Dorsey ranch in Stanislaus County with fine blooded stock, cattle and horses, and he later returned to Missouri, thereafter spending part of his time in California. Here he married a lady of Pike County, Mo., and they had three children: Edwa W. Dorsey, John W. D., and O. Barbour, who became Mrs. Harry Cory Marsh, of San Francisco. Mrs. Ewing and her sister, Miss Anna B. Dorsey, are the only ones left of the old Dorsey family.

John W. D. Ewing attended the public schools of Stockton and in time was graduated from the Stockton high school in 1899. Then he clerked in the freight department of the Southern Pacific railroad at Stockton, after which he entered the First National Bank of Stockton, where he was for fifteen years the paying teller. The close confinement beginning to tell on his health, he resigned. Since leaving the bank he has devoted his time to his mining interests in Calaveras County and his grain ranch, sixteen miles southeast of Stockton, near Atlanta.

Mr. Ewing is very prominent in the Masonic fraternity. He is a past master in all bodies of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Free Masonry, and belongs to the Ben Ali Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Sacramento. While he has advanced to the 32nd degree in the Scottish Rite, he also has the honorary degree of the K. C. C. H., the vestibule to the 33rd degree. He is past chancellor commander of the Centennial Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and held that office in 1903, the youngest man in the order with that responsibility and honor. This is natural enough, for Mr. Ewing's ancestors for generations were Masons, dating back to 1740, some of them being the first Grand Masters in the state of Maryland.

Mr. Ewing organized the first chapter of the American Institute of Banking in Stockton, and served for two years as its first president. He belongs to the Anteros Club of Stockton.

J. Dorsey Ewing, as he is generally known, is always found in active leadership of all civic movements for the public betterment or spiritual uplift. For many years he has been a vestryman of St. John's Episcopal Church, being one of the oldest in length of service in the Vestry.

During long years of service as treasurer of the Y. M. C. A. he saw it grow from quarters in a small rented room to the handsome $100,000 building it now occupies.

He has a fine library, including some tomes printed in 1792 and handed down through generations of his family. As an enthusiastic reader, he is a student of economics, and keenly alive to all important questions of the day. Mr. Ewing, a man of truly sterling character, is a friend, in all that word implies, to everybody.

RAYMOND NARBAITZ.—An enterprising, successful sheepman, who has been abundantly rewarded for his years of hard work and sacrifices, is Raymond Narbaitz, who was born in the Basses-Pyrenees, at Bigorre, on November 20, 1878, the son of Pierre and Mary Narbaitz, the former an agriculturist known in his country for miles around. The worthy couple had three children, among whom our subject was the eldest, the others being Jean and Grace.

Raymond attended the grammar school at Bigorre, France, but only for the first time when he was eight years of age and then for just a brief period of two short years, for when he was eleven years of age, he commenced to help run the farm. He remained with his father until 1900, when he came out to the United States. He came directly to San Francisco, but he did not remain there long, for he soon found work as a shepherd, and for a short time was engaged in that employment in Fresno County, continuing there for five years and then he moved to Stockton.

He then commenced to buy, feed and sell sheep, and through sparing no efforts to supply just what his patrons asked for, he built up a reputation that was an asset in itself, and came to be favorably known as one of the best sheepmen of the county. He still engages in running sheep on rented land in Fresno, Merced and San Joaquin counties. He usually keeps from 3000 to 7000 head and has in the main been successful and has become a very prosperous man; at times he has met with reverses, however, and in 1918, 1000 head died in one day from poison. Mr. Narbaitz is a staunch Republican.

While at San Francisco, in May 1905, Mr. Narbaitz was married to Mary Ospital, who first saw light in the same mountain district in which he was born, and who braved the dangers and inconveniences of a trip alone, from France to California, to join him and make him a home. Five children were granted to Mr. and Mrs. Narbaitz, and four are now living. Pierre is the eldest of the quartette; then come John and Pete and Raymond. Lucille died in 1918. Mr. Narbaitz bought a fine residence at 111 North Central Avenue in 1918, which has more than doubled in value since he first acquired it; and there he and his family have since made their home. With Joe Oyarbide, Mr. Narbaitz owns the Royal Hotel on Hunter and Sonora streets as well as other valuable property.

GEORGE LOUIS FRERICHS.—Fine and deserving traits of character have contributed to the success of George Louis Frerichs, who came to San Joaquin County when two years old, and his well directed energy has accumulated a competence and at the same time he has been most active in upbuilding the locality he selected for his home. He was born in San Francisco March 7, 1867, and in 1869 was brought by his parents to San Joaquin County; there being no railroad, travel was made by steamboat to Mohr's Landing, and from there by wagon about twelve miles to a small house located on the north-east quarter of section thirty-two. When he was seven years of age he started to the district school, and continued until he had passed the eighth grade. Although reared on a farm he did not take to farm work, but had a desire for anything mechanical. Leaving the farm he took up the harnessmaker's trade and followed it for a number of years.

During the year of 1900, Mr. Frerichs was united in marriage with Miss Emma J. Goetjen, also a native of San Francisco, who had resided in San Joaquin County since her tenth year. Returning to Tracy, Mr. Frerichs opened up a small shop on Central Avenue, having only a few tools and a limited capital, which he had saved from his earnings. During the six years that he was in business for himself, there were three children born to them: the eldest died at the age of five months; B. Adella is the wife of R. A. Miller and they have two children, Billie and Jane; Edith L. is assistant city clerk of Tracy.

Crop failures and losses due to outstanding accounts compelled Mr. Frerichs to discontinue business and accept a position with a San Francisco concern. After a short stay in the city, not enjoying good health, the family longed to return to their former home. While on a much needed vacation, C. A. Slack, knowing that Mr. Frerichs was handy with a paint brush, solicited him to return to Tracy and work on the buildings he was at that time erecting, and very soon the family returned to Tracy. For several years Mr. Frerichs engaged in interior and exterior decorating, and built up a nice trade. He was then solicited by the people to accept the position of postmaster under President Taft's administration, which he did for one term. The following term there was a change in the administration and as Mr. Frerichs was a Republican in principles, the position of postmaster was filled by a Democrat. About this time the office of city clerk was about to be vacated and upon receiving the unanimous vote of the members of the city board of trustees, he was elected to fill the unexpired term of one and one-half years, after which he was elected by the vote of the people. Mr. Frerichs has been elected three consecutive times, winning each time by a fine majority and is now entering upon his eighth year of service. Previous to the last election held in April, 1920, the laws were amended, making the term of the office of city clerk four years. During his career as city clerk, he has held other positions of trust in connection therewith, and at present is city recorder and has handled some very difficult cases against law violators. Besides being active in public affairs, he is much interested in fraternal organizations, being a member of the Masons, a past officer in the local Odd Fellows Lodge, Knights of Pythias and Native Sons, having served in nearly every office in these orders except the Masons.

ELI STEWART FERGUSON.—A successful vineyardist, whose methods and accomplishments have been a source of real inspiration to others, is Eli Stewart Ferguson, a native of Blairsville, Pa., where he was born on May 2, 1853, one of an old established family of the Keystone State. His grandfather Atkinson was a native of England, and his grandmother, also on his mother's side, was of Irish descent. On his father's side, the family was Scotch-Welsh. His father married Miss Matilde Atkinson.

Our subject had to rough it in order to get an education, and in winter he walked two miles through the snow to get to the Pennsylvania school. Then there were only three months of public schooling a year, and if any one attended for a longer period, he had to pay private tuition, and being the eldest boy of the family of eight children, Eli could not afford to do so. His father was a blacksmith by trade, and boys were handy.

When thirteen he started out for himself by working on a farm at twenty cents a day and his board; but when eighteen, he took an engineering job with the Isabelle Furnace Company, and worked at that for a year. He then came out to Iowa and worked for W. J. Young, at Clinton, in the sawmill. After that he went to Kansas and worked for six years in Atchison in a furniture store belonging to the mayor of the city; and through him he was put on the police force of Atchison, and served there in that capacity for four years.

In 1875, he came to California, and arrived here on the first day of December; having previously, however, spent a year in the Northwest, chiefly at Seattle and Portland. He then came to San Francisco, and from the ocean inland to Stockton, paying only one dollar for his fare on the boat. He worked for Craven & Myrtle, the contractors, who laid the sewer pipe of Stockton, and in 1891 he came over to Acampo, and here worked for P. B. Armstrong for three years and six months, and then worked for John Cory for two years. He next started on a contract basis. He chopped wood for B. F. Langford for $1.50 a day, and boarded himself; and with W. E. Wilder he fixed up a contract to graft 300 acres for Langford at the low price of eight cents a tree.

Mr. Ferguson then formed a partnership in the nursery business with Wirt E. Wilder, now deceased; and this partnership lasted for twenty-one years. In the beginning they had a ten-acre tract, and needing more ground, they bought forty acres from J. C. Thompson, and in three years they had made enough profit to pay for the land. On Mr. Ferguson's present ranch there are almonds, grapes and plums.

On Thanksgiving Day, in 1908, Mr. Ferguson was married to Mrs. Mima (Lewis) Jones, the daughter of Henry and Elizabeth Lewis, the ceremony taking place at the Cory ranch; the father of the bride was a native of Wales and also a farmer, who had married in his native land. He then came out to America and settled in Jackson County, Ohio. There Mrs. Ferguson was born, the youngest of seven children, and there she attended the local schools. In Jackson County, too, she first married Mr. E. Jones, who was the youngest and only brother of Lord James, the ship-owner of England. Evan Jones' name was also Evan James in Wales; but his name was changed to Jones upon coming to America. Their native home was at Merthyr-Tydfil, Wales. In 1883 Mr. and Mrs.

Jones came out to Portland, and about seven years later moved to California. They had one daughter, Ida, now Mrs. Giles of Coalinga; and she has two children by her first husband whose name was Jack Hurd, of Hurd Brothers in Stockton: Hazel and Nellie Hurd. In November, 1910, Hazel married Earl Brinson, and they live at Lodi. He is a blacksmith, and they have one daughter, Bessie Inez. Mrs. Ferguson, therefore, has seen the third generation through her former marriage. Mr. Ferguson is a Republican.

FRANK GALLEG0.—Another strong advocate of irrigation whose success in ranching has given force to his arguments as to one of the most vital of all needs in parts of California, is Frank Gallego, the popular and wide-awake merchant of Banta. A native son, he was born at Pleasanton, in Alameda County, on September 24, 1862, the youngest son of Anselmo Gallego, a native of the City of Mexico, who came to California in the great Argonaut year of 1849. He settled in Pleasanton Valley and became prominent as a stockman, trying his luck in the mines of that period. His paternal ancestors were subjects of the Crown of Spain, and he inherited much that anyone might envy. The father married Juanita Carrasco, a native also of the City of Mexico, and a charming and accomplished lady. These worthy parents made a splendid record. Both are now deceased, having passed away at Banta in 1887.

And there Frank Gallego grew to maturity, and became a rider on the range of his father; and when his parents died, he continued near Banta until 1897, farming to grain and stock. Mr. Gallego was married to Miss Bernal, a daughter of Antonio Bernal, and a descendant of Don Bruno Bernal of San Jose de Guadalupe, and owner of the Rancho Santa Teresa; and two children were born to them: Juanita has become the wife of Paul de Ranga, and they have one daughter, and reside at Stockton; and there also Antonio resides. Mrs. Gallego died at San Jose in 1893, and Mr. Gallego's second marriage united him with Miss Refugia Ortega, a sister of Mrs. John A. Fellom, Sr., of Gilroy. She was born at San Ysidro, received a good education at St. Mary's Convent, Gilroy, and was married in 1895. Now she is the mother of one son, Anselmo R., who is employed by the Southern Pacific Railway at Tracy, and resides at Banta. Mr. Gallego is a Republican. He is a member of the I. D. E. S. at Stockton.

In 1897 Mr. Gallego removed to Banta, and there he now conducts a soft-drink parlor, and also owns and manages much good realty, including his residence. He has 120 acres adjoining Banta on the south, and there he has installed a complete irrigation plant, greatly improving the property, which he operates himself as a grain and alfalfa farm.

Mr. Gallego's first business in Banta in the early '90s was to operate a sheep-shearing and sheep-dipping camp. He was a professional sheep shearer, working in California, Nevada and Oregon. His record was shearing 143 sheep per day, then dancing all night, and shearing as many sheep the next day. He made this record at Firebaugh, Fresno County, when he worked for Miller & Lux. His excellent wife kept a boarding house in Banta for eighteen years and was in every way a true and loyal helpmate to her husband.

JOHN B. ARRABIT.—A very successful stock man who was a man of affairs in the San Joaquin Valley is John B. Arrabit, a prominent sheep grower and enterprising man. He was born in Bayonne, Basses-Pyrenees, France, November 5, 1880, a son of Jean and Marie (Garra) Arrabit, also natives of that place, who are successful stockraisers and both are still living. The father made a trip to California in 1905 for a visit to his children, after which he returned to his home in France. They had six children: Anna, Mrs. Sallaberry, resides at the old home with her parents; John B., the subject of this review; Jacques, a sheep grower in this Valley; Etienne is the wife of D. Changala of Stockton; Martin is a sheep raiser at Los Banos; and Ben a sheep raiser in Stockton.

John B. spent his boyhood in the lower Pyrenees region where he received a good education in the public schools. From a lad he assisted his father on the farm and in the care of their cattle and sheep. In 1901 he responded to the military law of his country and entered the French army, serving in the 24th Light Artillery, being stationed at Tarbes, Haute-Pyrenees. Having served the required time of one year he was honorably discharged and could go wherever he liked.

Mr. Arrabit had read and heard of the wonderful opportunities here awaiting men of brawn who were not afraid to work so he decided to cast in his lot in the land of gold and sunshine. Leaving his home in 1902 he came to New York, then crossed the great American continent to Stockton, Cal. He immediately went to work, having found employment with Julian Masterrena, a sheepman at Los Banos, continuing with him for a period of four years. During this time his keen observation and perception gave him an insight into the successful raising and handling of sheep as done in the West, and he determined to embark in the business on his own account. He had saved some money and also established a good credit, and this enabled him to purchase a band of sheep which he ranged in the vicinity of Mendota. He began with 1,000 head, which he increased from time to time, and he soon had a band of 5,000, which is about the number he now keeps; in summer he has a range in the Forest Reserve Park in Mono County, while the balance of the year he ranges them on the west side from Mendota to Coalinga and on to Bakersfield. The last few years he has made his headquarters and residence in Stockton.

The marriage of Mr. Arrabit occurred in Bakersfield in 1916, when Miss Marie Saldubahere became his bride. She was born in Aldudes, Basses-Pyrenees, France, and came to Bakersfield when a young lady, making her home with an uncle who was an old resident of Kern County. Mr. Arrabit is a very energetic man and is never idle, looking after and seeing to every detail of his business. Thus he has been able to see his affairs grow from a small beginning to a large paying business which yields him a competency while he is yet in the prime of life, a result of his starting out with the idea that industry and frugality will win success when rightly applied and practiced. He is enterprising and public-spirited and always ready to help movements and enterprises that have for their aim the development and building up of this great valley in which he has such unbounded faith. He is a believer in protection as a fundamental principle for Americans, and is therefore a strong Republican.

HENRY FINCK.—A highly-progressive and very successful farmer is Henry Finck, a pioneer of Banta district of San Joaquin County, who was born in Hanover, Germany, on September 5, 1844, and came to America with an uncle and a sister in 1859. They journeyed to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, and arrived in San Francisco in October of that year. His uncle died shortly afterward, and our subject was obliged to earn his own living when only fifteen years of age.

He first followed clerking in a grocery store; but he proved such a hustler that at the age of nineteen he owned an interest in a butcher shop in San Francisco. The shop was on Montgomery Street, near Union, and thus he grew up and lived in the Telegraph Hill district. In 1866, in company with the three Lammers brothers, he located in San Joaquin County; and there they took up a quarter section of Government land at Mohr's Landing, now called Bethany, and bought a section of railroad land which was farmed to barley. From that date on up to a short time ago Henry Finck was one of the leading and successful farmers of that section; and he is now retired. The first year, for example, he sowed 100 acres to grain; the second, 600 acres; and the third, 1,200 acres. He farmed this up to 1888, and five years before that he bought land near Banta, and at one time owned 1,900 acres.

This last ranch, of which he still owns 600 acres, was a part of the McMullin & Trahern rancho, and for a number of years he ran a slaughter house on the West Side, and also had a dairy of eighty fine Holstein cows. He made cheese, and sold the output to the Hobbs-Parsons Company of Stockton. He was the first man to build a levee in his district, constructed on his land for drainage purposes. He bought large tracts of land on Union Island in 1873, which he again sold in two years, and in 1918 he bought back 1,100 acres of the same, and was one of the largest grain-growers there, having 10,000 sacks in one lot piled up for shipment. The flood of 1906 caused him a heavy loss in cattle, cows and grain; but the next year he harvested 1,140 tons of wild oats, on the plains, which helped to remunerate him. On January 1, 1868, he killed the last elk known to have been dispatched in the valley. It had come down from the mountains to swim the river, and weighed 800 pounds when it met its fate at Mohr's Landing.

Mr. Finck has been twice married. His first wife was Lena Rohde, a native of Germany; and they had nine children, the first three sons dying in infancy, while the others are as follows: Jenna is the wife of Henry Krohn; Anna is the wife of Adolph Windeler; and Dora is the wife of Leland Raab. The sons are Fred Henry, Harry Carson, and Martin Lammers. Through his second marriage, in 1918, Mrs. Mary (Conrady) Denz, a native of Baltimore, Md., became his wife. She was the daughter of Dr. C. A. Conrady, a pioneer German physician, who came to Stockton twenty-eight years ago from Bay City, Mich., and practiced here, dying four years after his arrival. Her mother recently died at the age of eighty-five years. Both parents were born in Germany. Henry Finck recently presented each of his six children 150 acres of his Union Island ranch, and the 600 acres of the old home ranch at Banta are now being farmed by his son, Harry. He was a school trustee of the Lammersville and Banta school districts, and he helped to raise the money to build the German Lutheran Church at Tracy. He himself is a member of the German Methodist Church at Stockton. He is a charter member of the Tracy Lodge of Odd Fellows, No. 177, and in 1921 celebrated his half-century membership of the same. He is a past noble grand of the order; and on the occasion referred to, was presented with a gold medal, which he values very highly.

(Since this biography was written Mr. and Mrs. Finck met with accidental deaths while motoring to their home. A Western Pacific train struck them at the East Park Street crossing May 1, 1922, removing from the midst two of San Joaquin County's most influential upbuilders.)

ALEXANDER L. GARROW.—A successful merchant of Stockton is Alexander L. Garrow, who owns and operates a grocery store located at 638 North Aurora Street. He was born in Stockton, June 5, 1870, the eldest son of Charles and Elizabeth (Lau-meister) Garrow. Charles Garrow was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and at sixteen years of age came to America and was one of the California '49ers and in the early '50s located in Stockton, where he conducted a store. Next he purchased an interest in the City Brewery but sold it some years later and established the "Red Store," a grocery store on California and Sonora streets. On disposing of it he became steward at the County Hospital, a position he held for six years. Then he purchased one-half block on North Aurora and West Park streets, where he built a store and did a successful business until he sold it and purchased a one-quarter block on Fremont and East streets where in partnership with A. Munch he engaged in the grocery business and also handled poultry and eggs. Here Mr. Garrow was in business until his death in 1910; his widow still resides in Stockton. This pioneer couple had eleven children, of whom Mr. Garrow is the oldest.

Alexander L. Garrow grew up and received his education in the Stockton schools and after completing his education entered the employ of the city as a clerk in the street department at the city hall, where he remained twenty years. Ten years ago he purchased property at 634 North Aurora Street and established his present lucrative business at No. 638, on the same street.

The marriage of Mr. Garrow occurred in Stockton April 20, 1892, and united him with Miss Lena Ray, born in Stockton, the daughter of David Ray, a pioneer carpenter of Stockton. David Ray was a native of Pennsylvania and crossed the plains in 1849 to California. He married Catherine Henceman, a native of Texas, who came with her parents to San Joaquin County, where her father became a pioneer builder, a business he followed all through life. He passed away March 26, 1906, while his widow died April 26, 1923. Eleven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Garrow: Lucial is the wife of Paul Oard, whose sketch appears in this volume; Ethel is the wife of Minor Sosey, a member of the grocery firm with Mr. Garrow; Elston served two years in the Marine Radio as an operator with the Matson line. The others are: Bragdon, John A., Laverne, Robert, Merle and Ruth (twins), and Ralph and Melvin (also twins). Fraternally, Mr. Garrow is a member of the Moose and Eagles lodges of Stockton.

MRS. MARTHA ALICE FREDERICK.—For more than a half century Mrs. Martha Alice Frederick has been a resident of San Joaquin County and is honored throughout the county for her true worth. She was born at Rising Sun, Polk County, Iowa, on August 19, 1862, the youngest of a family of nine children born to Robert R. and Mary Jane (King) Wilcox, both natives of New York, born February 25, 1819, and January 10, 1823, respectively. Her parents located in Pennsylvania on a homestead in 1828, where Robert R. Wilcox became identified prominently in the lumber and oil business and there amassed a large fortune. He was married at Oil Creek, Pa., to Miss Mary Jane King and nine children were born to them. Eleanor became the wife of James R. Curtiss and settled in western Kansas; she passed away at Summerfield, Kans., April 17, 1922, aged eighty-one, and was survived by five children. James R., a veteran of the Civil War in which he was twice wounded, is a retired farmer and stockman residing with his family of three children at Beattie, Kans. Clarissa Angeline is the widow of Benjamin G. Frederick, who was born July 3, 1844, near South Whitney, Ind., and was reared on a farm. Early in 1870 he and his wife arrived in California and settled in Ripon, where he erected the first building and conducted a boarding house; later Mr. Frederick became a prominent orchardist. He was a veteran of the Civil War, having served in Company I, 18th Volunteer Infantry from Iowa. He was familiarly known as Uncle Benjamin in the vicinity of Ripon and was a prominent member of the Brethren Church; he passed away June 29, 1906. Mrs. Benjamin Frederick divides her time between Stockton and her old home at Ripon. John Gilbert is residing with his wife and six children in Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he is engaged in the hardware and implement business; W. R., an inventor and mining expert in Manhattan, Nev., died November 15, 1922; Sarah Jane is deceased; Henry F. is a building contractor in Salida, Colo.; Emory is deceased; Martha Alice is the subject of this sketch. Robert R. Wilcox, the father of our subject, settled in Ripon in 1882 and farmed for a few years near Taylor's Ferry; he passed away at Ripon, November 23, 1904, aged eighty-five years; his wife had passed away May 23, 1865.

Martha Alice Wilcox accompanied her sister, Mrs. Clarissa Frederick, to California in 1870 and grew to young womanhood in Ripon. On August 14, 1881, she was married to Harrison Frederick, born in Indiana, September 20, 1845, a son of Duncan and Lucinda (Beatley) Frederick, natives of Ohio, the father a pioneer farmer of his native state of Ohio. Harrison Frederick accompanied his two brothers, John and Thomas, whose sketches also appear in this history, to California across the plains in 1862, bringing with them considerable stock; they settled on the Stanislaus River near the present site of Ripon where they engaged in farming and stock raising and all three of the brothers became well known and influential citizens. Mr. Frederick built a fine large residence on his ranch where the young married couple began their wedded life. Three children were born to them: Gilbert is married and has two children—Benjamin and Harrison; he is a rancher and merchant; Clara Lillian resides at home with her mother; Nellie B. is the wife of Clyde Wilcox and they have three children: Robert, Wesley and Martha; they reside at Melones, Cal. Mr. Frederick was a liberal contributor to all worthy movements; he gave the land to the county for the San Joaquin school and served as a trustee of that district for many years; fraternally he was a charter member of the Mt. Horeb Lodge, I. O. O. F. When he passed away November 11, 1913, the county lost one of its most worthy pioneers. After her husband's death, Mrs. Frederick and her daughter, Clara Lillian, continued the management of the home place, which became one of the show places of the Ripon section. In 1919 the home place was sold for a large sum and in 1921 the family residence at 601 Tuxedo Park, Stockton, was built. Mrs. Frederick is past matron of the Rebekah Lodge at Ripon and she and her daughter are members of the Iowa Club of Northern California.

MAX LEETZOW.—Of the sturdy and stanch pioneers who settled in the wilds of the Golden State in the early days none were more worthy than the ancestors of Max Leetzow, and the same sterling traits of character which they possessed are found in him. He was born on his father's farm in north San Joaquin County in the Turner school district, February 18, 1883. His parents were Gottfried and Mary Leetzow, the former a native of Germany, and were pioneers of 1849, who crossed the plains to California with an ox team train. Our subject is the youngest of three children born to this worthy pioneer couple, the others being two daughters, Lottie and Bertha. Gottfried Leetzow settled in San Joaquin County, where he took up 160 acres of Government land at the west end of the Kelly Road. There he spent the remainder of his days, passing away at the age of eighty-three in 1910, while the mother died at the age of seventy-nine. Upon distribution of the father's estate, the home place was given to the subject.

Max Leetzow received his education at the Turner district school and in boyhood learned many practical lessons in agriculture, so that when he was old enough he began to farm for himself. He has owned and farmed several ranches in the county; among the first was a seventeen and a half acre vineyard at Dougherty Station northeast of Lodi, where he resided for a number of years before moving to Lodi. He now owns a seventy-acre vineyard five miles north of Lodi on Cherokee Road. He also owns a tract of land in Sutter County, consisting of 192 acres; this is timber land and it is the intention of Mr. Leetzow to develop the entire acreage to orchard.

On November 18, 1915, at Stockton, Mr. Leetzow was married to Miss Louise Youngman, a native of San Jose, Cal. She is the daughter of Nicholas and Selma (Krauter) Youngman. Her father passed away when she was a small girl of two years and subsequently her mother married Peter Stuter. Her mother resides in Lodi at the present time, but her step-father passed away in 1909. Mrs. Leetzow is the youngest of three children, the others being Carl and Alice, and there was one step-brother, Frank Stuter, now deceased. After her mother's second marriage, the family removed to Santa Cruz County, where Mrs. Leetzow received most of her education. Mr. and Mrs. Leetzow reside in their comfortable home at 338 East Oak Street, Lodi, with their two children, Selma Marie and Harold Max. In politics Mr. Leetzow is a Republican, and an enthusiastic booster for San Joaquin County. He is a well known and popular citizen, and in many ways has performed a useful part in the affairs of his community.

THOMAS H. LUKE.—A wide-awake business man, noted for both his initiative and his executive ability, is Thomas H. Luke, the efficient and popular director of sales of the Holt Manufacturing Company at Stockton. He was born in Gear's Valley, Nevada County, Cal., on August 29, 1869, the son of a well-known pioneer who came out to the Golden State in 1851, by way of the Isthmus, and on reaching Gear's Valley and Virginia City, Nev., went in for mining. He built the first brick structure there, a hotel, and conducted it for a number of years; and the evidence of his thorough way of doing things, even in those primitive days of building, is the fact that the house is still standing, an interesting land-mark.

Thomas Luke went to school in Virginia City and Grass Valley, and ranched for five years in Nevada County. He came to Stockton in 1891 as a wheelwright, with the Holt Bros. Company, and he has been continuously in the employ of the Holts ever since. He holds the record there of the longest term of continuous employment of any man in their employ—thirty-two years—and during that time he never lost a day's pay. He has worked in every department, and was the first man to travel on the road for the company. He was clerk in the Holt office, and later in charge of sales, and since 1911 he has been director of sales, in full charge of the selling of all the Holt products. He has traveled all over the Pacific Coast, and personally knows every customer in every town and city. He started selling harvesters; then he went to steam tractors; and since 1909 he has made it easier for the inquiring public to learn the advantages of the "Caterpillar" tractor.

In addition to his responsibilities in the matter of making more sales for the Holt products than any other competing house may boast of, Mr. Luke is president of the People's Finance & Thrift Company, which was organized to combat the loan shark. In a most complimentary notice published in the Stockton Record at the time the project was launched, that highly-representative newspaper said, under the caption, "New Bank Organized in Stockton to Extend Loans to Wage Earners," that the object of the incorporators was to lend money at a reasonable, and not an exorbitant rate of interest, and that the stockholders had selected the following directors: Thomas H. Luke, Joseph Solari, F. H. Clark, P. Pezzi, George L. Meissner, Albert B. Wimsett, Leroy S. Atwood, Ralph Vignolo and E. V. Burke. The officers chosen at a subsequent meeting of the board of directors were: Thomas H. Luke, president; F. H. Clark, first vice-president; P. Pezzi, second vice-president; Earl D. Pillsbury, secretary; and C. W. Humphreys, treasurer. The introduction of the People's Finance and Thrift Company into this community sounds the death-knell of the loan sharks, and others who have been charging exorbitant and usurious rates of interest for small and much-needed loans. It has been thoroughly demonstrated by these institutions that character plus earning ability is a proper basis of credit, and the lines carried out by President Luke's company will be similar to those followed in other parts of the United States where these institutions are in successful operation.

In the year 1891, Mr. Luke was married to Miss Ida Balch, a native of Grass Valley, and their union has been blessed with the birth of three daughters, Florence, Lorain and Alice. Mr. Luke belongs to Stockton Parlor No. 7 of the Native Sons of the Golden West, to Lodge No. 218 of the Stockton Elks, and to San Joaquin Lodge No. 19 of the Masons; and he is also a member of the Yosemite Club.

JERRY O'BRIEN, D. D. S.—Occupying a position of distinction as a representative of the dental profession in Stockton, Dr. Jerry O'Brien's capability is evidenced by the large patronage which is accorded him. His equipment for the profession was unusually good and this he has continually extended through keeping in touch with the marked advancement that has been made in this profession in the last quarter of a century. One of California's native sons, Dr. O'Brien was born at Colusa, on July 6, 1874, a son of Dennis and Mary E. (Spillane) O'Brien, both natives of Ireland. The mother and father were married in New York City and came to California via Panama in the early '50s, being carried across the Isthmus on the backs of natives. The father was a shoemaker by trade, and upon arrival in San Francisco opened a shop on Market street where the Palace Hotel now stands; later he removed to Colusa and the Gold Hill mine, but finally returned to Colusa, where the family resided for a time; then removed to Modoc County. There were nine children in the family and both parents are deceased; the father, who passed away in Alturas in 1921 at the age of ninety-two years, had been an Odd Fellow for many years. The mother passed away in 1887.

Jerry attended the grammar school in Colusa until he was ten years old, then when his family removed to Modoc County he attended school at Alturas. Being one of a large family of children, he was obliged to look out for himself after finishing the grammar grades, so he learned the printer's trade on the Alturas New Era, and then went to Marysville and there continued on the Appeal and later the Democrat; later he worked in the state printing office at Sacramento. Then, with his brother, W. S. O'Brien, he purchased the Sutter Independent, a weekly newspaper at Yuba City, and together they ran same for three years, when he removed to Stockton and entered the Stockton Business College, from which he graduated in 1898. He then returned to Sacramento and again worked in the state printing office; then he went to Marysville, where he became cashier for the general merchandise store of Weinlander & Hexter. In 1900 he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons at San Francisco, studying dentistry and medicine, this course covering a period of two years, when he entered the University of California, from which he was graduated in 1903 with the degree of D. D. S. For the next ten years he practiced his profession in Central America, principally in Guatemala City, and while there he was graduated from the College of Medicine and Pharmacy with the degree of C. D. and is a member of the faculty of the above college. On returning to California in 1916, he began practice in Stockton and also took charge of the dental clinic at the Emergency Hospital. In 1918 he volunteered his services to the dental department of the American Red Cross and was commissioned a first lieutenant and sent to Siberia, where he was in charge of the dental department of the Red Cross Hospital at Omsk, an institution with 1,100 beds, and while there he was commissioned a captain. Later he was transferred to Tomsk, where he was in charge of the refugee department, distributing supplies. After sixteen months in Siberia he returned home on the transport Thomas via Manila to San Francisco. He opened new offices in the Elks building at Stockton, resuming his practice, and was again in charge of the dental clinic a year. Later, however, he resigned to devote all of his time to his practice.

Dr. O'Brien was married in Guatemala City to Miss Mary Esther Penzotti, a native of Chile, who was educated at the Newton, Mass., high school and Boston Conservatory of Music. They have two children: Francis Joseph, born in Marysville, Cal.; Mary Esther, born in Guatemala. Dr. O'Brien was the founder of the Beta Delta Chapter of the Psi Omega Dental Fraternity at the University of California. They own their own fraternity house near the Affiliated Colleges in San Francisco, and he was first grand master. He is president of the Central California District Dental Society and is also a member of the American and State Dental Associations. He is a member of the Stockton Advertising Club. He is a member of Delta Lodge No. 47, F. & A. M., and also all the Scottish Rite bodies in Stockton as well as the Sciots, and with his wife is a member of the O. E. S. He is also a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., Stockton Lodge 218, B. P. O. E., and the Loyal Order of Moose, and is an honorary member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and was one of the founders of the Siberian Veterans' Association.

DONALD M. BIGGS.—One of the most notable and successful stockmen of San Joaquin County may be found in Donald M. Biggs, who has been for over thirty years actively connected with the sheep and cattle industry of the Coast states, and is known throughout California, Oregon, Washington and Nevada as one of the best posted along these lines. Being a native son of California has been no small factor in the success of Mr. Biggs, his native city being San Francisco, where he first saw the light of day on August 29, 1874. His parents, John H. and Mary (Bowen) Biggs, natives of England, were both California pioneers and both came around the Horn in sailing vessels, landing in San Francisco in 1848, and for many years Mr. Biggs followed mining throughout the northern part of the state; later he became a trusted employee of the Baker & Hamilton Company of San Francisco, and both spent the remainder of their days in that city, having been among the first settlers in the Mission district. This worthy pioneer couple were blessed with five children, four boys and one girl. The sons were all engaged in the stock and butcher business. Donald M. was the youngest of the family. He attended the public schools of San Francisco and while still a lad learned the butcher business with J. G. Johnson and Son of the same city. At the youthful age of sixteen he became a stock buyer for Eugene Aby of San Francisco; later served in the same capacity for J. G. Johnson and Son. For a number of years he has been chief buyer for the Union Sheep Company, owned by H. Moffatt and Company of San Francisco, among the largest dealers in sheep and cattle in the West; their extensive Ione Ranch situated near Ione, Cal., consists of 34,000 acres on which range their thousands of sheep and cattle. They ship from 10,000 to 20,000 head of sheep monthly to the Eastern markets. Mr. Biggs's buying operations for this large company take him from Bakersfield, on the south, north through California, Oregon, Nevada, Idaho, Montana, Arizona and New Mexico, where he buys thousands of head of sheep and lambs each month, shipping them to the San Francisco and Eastern markets. In his line of work there are few equal to Mr. Biggs, for his years of practical experience, coupled with an intelligence surpassing that of the average citizen, have made his efforts tell so that he is, without doubt, one of the best-posted stock buyers in the West. During the thirty years that he has been actively connected with this industry, he has covered the Coast states many times a year.

For over twenty-five years Mr. Biggs has made his headquarters and resided in Stockton. He was one of the early members of the Stockton Lodge No. 218, Elks. His love for California in general and Stockton and the San Joaquin Valley in particular has never waned through the years.

CHARLES H. MILLER.—Since coming here in 1914, Charles H. Miller has done his full share in the upbuilding of Stockton in his high-grade work as a brick contractor, thereby contributing to the permanency of the city's development. Mr. Miller is a native of North Carolina, born in Davidson County, April 14, 1883. He learned the trade of brick-mason in his home neighborhood and followed it in his native state, then in Tennessee and Missouri. In 1913 he came to Los Angeles, Cal., and for a year was with the F. O. Eckstrom Company, contractors, coming to Stockton in the fall of 1914, where he entered the employ of Cowell & Son, brick contractors. While with them he worked on the brick work of many of the large buildings of Stockton, including the Belding Building, the new Weber school, the Lincoln school and many others.

In 1917 Mr. Miller started in business for himself as a brick contractor and among the buildings on which he has done the brick work are the following: Elmwood school, Greenwood school, Everett school, Georges Building, Hobbs-Parsons Building, Deneen Block, French Laundry Building, Davis Iron Works, Superior Manufacturing Company's Building at Lodi; ten tile houses in Modesto, the Noble Block on North Hunter Street, Stockton, Parisian Cleaning and Dyeing plant, Black Package Company Block on East Weber, C. G. Call Block, Clay Street Methodist Church, Armanino apartment house, an addition to the Smith Building in Tracy, Pennant Cleaners on South El Dorado, and a cottage for Gardella on Sierra Nevada. In Sonora he did the brick work on a store building and apartment house, and he has made a specialty of artistic mantels and fireplaces, installing them in many of the fine homes of Stockton, his work being of the highest order.

Mr. Miller was married on October 12, 1905, at Lexington, N. C., to Miss Ellen E. Yarbrough, also a native of North Carolina, and they are the parents of four children: Hubert D., Viola Veigh, W. Franklin and Charles H., Jr. In fraternal life Mr. Miller is a Modern Woodman and since settling in Stockton he has taken an active interest in all movements for the city's improvement.

GILBERT D. KEITLE.—An assistant managing secretary of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce Gilbert D. Keitle is doing valuable and important work, his efforts proving directive forces in promoting the development and prosperity of this district along commercial and agricultural lines. He is a member of one of the old pioneer families of Stockton and was born in this city February 23, 1896, his parents being Albert W. and Nettie (Hamlet) Keitle, the former a native of the state of New York and the latter of Stockton. In the early days the maternal grandfather crossed the plains to California, settling in Stockton, where he established a soap manufacturing plant, which he conducted for many years.

Gilbert D. Keitle acquired his education in the schools of his native city and was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1914. Before completing his studies he started a newspaper, which he conducted under the name of the Weekly Tribune, and for some time he continued to publish that paper, meeting with success in the venture. Journalism had always attracted him and following his graduation from high school he entered the employ of the Daily Record, with which he was connected until the United States entered the World War. He enlisted in the Medical Corps but was transferred to the aviation section and sent to Waco, Texas, going from there to North Carolina. He next entered the officers' training school at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga., maintained in connection with the infantry department, and was there stationed when the armistice was signed. He received his discharge at the close of eighteen months' service and returned to Stockton, resuming his work with the Record. In October, 1919, he was appointed assistant managing secretary of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, serving as acting secretary for a period of seven months during 1920, and he was also secretary and treasurer of the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau, making an excellent record in each connection.

Mr. Keitle is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and he is also connected with the American Legion and the Elks Lodge, No. 218. He is an enterprising, wide-awake young man whose progressiveness and public spirit prompt him to put forth earnest and effective effort in advancing the welfare of his city, county and state, and that his life has been an exemplary one in all respects is indicated in the fact that those who have known him from boyhood to the present time entertain for him the highest regard and esteem.

HARRY MARTIN.—In connection with the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County, and more especially seed growing, no name is more familiar than that of Harry Martin, whose industry has brought him rich returns. He was born at Newark, N. J., January 14, 1880, and his earliest recollections were of farming, for his father was a truck gardener in New Jersey. At the age of twelve years he left home to shift for himself. He made his way to New York City and among his various jobs was that of selling papers on the streets; then he worked in the Gansford Market and in the seed gardens and farms of Long Island until 1906, when he removed to California and found employment in the lumber camps of Sierra County. He worked at the Weber Lake summer resort in the mountains east of Stockton and there met with people who were farmers of the Delta lands. At the end of the season he returned to Stockton and secured work on ranches in the Delta district and while thus engaged conceived the idea that vegetable seed could be grown there for commercial purposes. While working on the Sargent-Barnhart tract as a laborer he began his seed experiments when he first planted three-quarters of an acre owned by John Moore. In 1911 he went on Roberts Island and still owns his property there. He was not the first man who had tried seed producing here, but he is the first man to succeed in his undertaking and some of those who had tried it and failed tried to discourage his experiment, but to no avail, and his perseverance and industry won for him not only financial success, but also the satisfaction of knowing that he had accomplished the purpose for which he strived. The return from the first acreage planted was very encouraging and year by year more acres were devoted to seed growing. Mr. Martin was the first to produce the true type of Golden Self Blanching celery seed in California. From his first experiment on his three-quarter-acre tract he had $2,700 worth of this celery seed as a result of his labors, thus demonstrating what was possible in this line in San Joaquin County; he also raises onion, beet, carrot and other seeds, which find a ready market all over the country, for he has made a careful study of seed growing and does nothing by guess, but knows what kind of soil and climatic conditions will produce the best seed and he has become an authority on the subject. Mr. Martin's real estate holdings consist of 570 acres in Clifton Court, Contra Costa County, and fifty-four acres on Roberts Island in San Joaquin County, on which he grows seed, which he sells direct to the seed houses and jobbers in all parts of the country, some of them being among the oldest and most reliable firms in the United States.

The marriage of Mr. Martin united him with Miss Dorothy Dow, a native of New Jersey, and they are the parents of two sons, Henry Irving and Norman John, both native sons of California. In his business career his strong determination and indefatigable energy have been the basic elements of his success and have enabled him to work his way upward from humble surroundings to a position of prominence and affluence.

HENRY R. MCCOY.—The name borne by Henry R. McCoy is indelibly connected with the history of San Joaquin County, for he was one of the pioneer farmers on Roberts Island, an eyewitness to its growth and development from a wild and desolate place, much of the land under water, to one of the most fertile districts in the whole state. He was born at Nevada City, Cal., on July 12, 1872, a son of Hamilton Robert and Mary S. (Gaughenbaugh) McCoy, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Pennsylvania. The parents came to California via Panama in 1861 and engaged in mining in Nevada County until 1873, when they came to San Joaquin County, settled near Woodbridge and engaged in farming for the following six years. In 1879, Mr. McCoy went to Roberts Island, where he was one of the first to grow grain on the island; this was before the land had been reclaimed and many were the losses and discouragements from floods. Mr. and Mrs. McCoy had four children who grew to maturity: Hugh died in Honolulu in 1918; Isaac L. died in 1920 in Stockton, leaving three children; then come Henry R., of this review, and Clara E., the widow of John Nassano. The father passed away in 1892 and Mrs. McCoy in 1902.

Henry R. McCoy received his education in the public schools of Woodbridge and Roberts Island and in early life gained practical knowledge of farming. After his father's death he rented land on Roberts Island and in partnership with his brother Isaac L. farmed from 400 to 800 acres of land. In 1910 he had 300 acres of celery, besides potatoes, beans, onions and grain. His farming activities were accompanied by many discouragements. For four years he lost his crops by floods, but by patience and hard work he made a success of farming and he is now considered an authority on land reclamation, having made a close and scientific study of the question. The first reclamation work on the island was done by the Glasgow California Land Company, who employed 3,000 Chinese and wheelbarrows; next the bucket dredgers were used, and now the clam shell dredgers.

The marriage of Mr. McCoy united him with Mrs. Edith Oard of Portland, Ore. Fraternally he is an Odd Fellow, belonging to Stockton Lodge No. 11. He is a self-made man, and by his own industry has progressed steadily to his present position.

HERBERT S. CHAPMAN, M. D.—A native son of California who is steadily forging ahead in his profession is Dr. Herbert S. Chapman, a member of the surgical staff of the Stockton Emergency Hospital, whose training and experience fitted him for general practice. He was born in Clayton, Contra Costa County, Cal., on April 7, 1892, a son of Charles E., also a native of Contra Costa County. Grandfather George Oliver Chapman was a native of Kentucky who came to California in 1843, while the great-grandmother, Mrs. Tarwater, residing in Contra Costa County at the age of one hundred years, came to California in 1839.

Herbert S. Chapman attended the Contra Costa public schools and graduated from the Concord high school. Entering the Stanford University he was graduated with the class of '14 with an A. B. degree; and three years later, in 1917, received his M. D. degree. While in the university he was instructor in medicine and physiology. After a post-graduate course in the Rockefeller Institute, and a special course in the Carrel-Dakin College on sterilization of wounds, he entered the Phipps Institute in Philadelphia. Later he received a commission as lieutenant in the U. S. Navy and saw active service overseas during the World War, spending two years with the mine-laying division in the North Sea; for fourteen months he was attached to the Base Hospital No. 2, a Stanford University unit, located at Strathpeffer, Scotland. Upon his return to the United States, he took a post-graduate course in surgery at the New York Post Graduate Hospital; then returning to California, he spent two months in the clinics at Stanford studying skin diseases, thus extending and widening his experience and knowledge. Returning to Stockton, he opened offices in the Yosemite Building where he is engaged in a steadily growing practice.

Dr. Chapman's marriage occurred on July 24, 1920, and united him with Miss Luella Sibbard, a native of Santa Rosa, Cal., and they are the parents of one son, Duff Gordon. He is a member of Karl Ross Post of the American Legion, a member of the Morning Star Lodge of Masons, the Knights of Pythias and the Kiwanis Club of Stockton, being a member of the board of trustees of the latter organization.

VICTOR N. LEONARDINI.—An enterprising real estate dealer in Stockton is found in the person of Victor N. Leonardini, member of the firm of Leonardini and Gatelli, with offices in the realty building on South San Joaquin Street. A native son, born on a ranch near Stockton on December 29, 1897, Victor N. Leonardini is a son of Domenico and Madeline (Stagnaro) Leonardini, both born and reared in Italy and who located in San Joaquin County in 1884. Mr. Leonardini worked on ranches in the county and was one of the organizers of the Italian Gardeners' Association, serving as its president for nine years. He accumulated property and is now living retired in Stockton. Mrs. Leonardini is the owner of 148 acres of valuable ranch land located near Stockton on the Calaveras River and devoted to peaches, cherries and apricots. There are seven children in the Leonardini family and the sons manage the orchard property for their mother.

Victor N. attended the grammar school in Stockton and at the age of eleven began working on the home ranch; later he took a course in Heald's Business College in Stockton, and then with the aid of his two brothers, Albert and Leo, managed the home acres. In March, 1921, he formed a partnership with Fred Gatelli under the name of Leonardini and Gatelli to conduct a general real estate and insurance business; specializing in country property. Both are good judges of values and by their square dealing have met with gratifying success. They also do a commission business, handling produce and fruits, and deal in sulphur and orchard spray, which is being successfully used in the orchards and vineyards in this district. After having become thoroughly organized, the firm of Leonardini and Gatelli, in fourteen months handled nearly a million dollars of property and each month sees their firm more strongly entrenched in the business circles of the county.

Mr. Leonardini was united in marriage with Miss Winifred Anderson of San Francisco. He is a member of the Athens Club of Oakland; the Stockton Italian Club and of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W. As a progressive business man and citizen there is much to commend Mr. Leonardini to the public for he has won the high regard of all with whom he comes in contact.

FRED GATELLI.—The junior member of the realty firm of Leonardini and Gatelli, located in the Realty Building on South San Joaquin Street, Stockton, Fred Gatelli was born in San Francisco on August 28, 1897. He is a son of Antonio and Marie (Camacia) Gatelli, natives of Italy, but who have been citizens of the Golden State for many years. In 1903 Antonio Gatelli came to San Joaquin County and bought 150 acres of land in the Weber Tract and planted it to a vineyard and met with success in his venture as a vineyardist. In 1915 he retired and spent the remainder of his days in Stockton. Mrs. Gatelli is still living and is the mother of eight children. The home ranch is still in possession of the Gatelli family.

Fred was educated in the schools of the Bay City and followed various lines of business until he formed his partnership with Mr. Leonardini; since then he has met with the most gratifying success as a realty dealer. His marriage united him with Miss Marie Mantovain, a native of Italy, and she died, leaving a daughter Eleanor Marie. Fraternally Mr. Gatelli is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W. He is always ready to do his part to promote the best interests of Stockton and vicinity and by upright dealings has won the confidence of all with whom he has business dealings.

WILLIAM LORD.—Those who have business dealings with the American Railway Express Company's office at American Avenue and Market Street, Stockton, appreciate the experience and foresight and untiring efforts of the ever-accommodating general agent, William Lord. A native son—having been born in Colfax, Placer County, on June 17, 1871—he has had the commendable pride to make Stockton's express service second to none in the country; and that he has pretty well succeeded, the satisfaction of the average citizen will testify.

His father, Thomas J. Lord, was a native of Massachusetts, and his mother, who was Miss Caroline Thorn before her marriage, was a native of England; and it thus happened that in this blending of Old and New England inheritance and force, the lad was particularly fortunate in his parentage. William attended the public schools of Colfax, meanwhile keeping his eyes wide open and greatly enlarging his knowledge by observation and occasional practical experiment; and when, at the age of seventeen, he was offered a chance to enter the service of the Wells Fargo Company, it was found that he was able, from the start, to assume responsibility. He learned all the branches of the business, taking one after another up in rotation, for he was by turn driver, clerk and messenger, and after awhile he became route agent. He was the agent at the Ferry office in San Francisco, then he was agent at Salt Lake City, and then at Denver; and at other times he was at Tonopah, Nev., and in various places in Oregon and Washington. He may be said to have followed his line of work all over the Western States, and he is particularly well-known on the Pacific Coast. When the express companies were consolidated in July, 1918, he was sent to Stockton to take charge of the express office; and he has made it of increasing importance. Mr. Lord is married, and has one son, Harold J., of San Francisco. He belongs to Lodge No. 944, B. P. O. E., at Ashland, Ore., and also to the Maccabees.

FRANK F. IREY.—Emphatically in accord with the true western spirit, and one whose confidence in San Joaquin County's future grows with his own ever-increasing success, Frank F. Irely has since the summer of 1904 been a prominent factor in the progress of the Lodi district. He was born in the rural district of Moniteau County, Mo., on March 29, 1877, and was reared to manhood on a farm, his education being obtained from the district schools. During the year of 1898 he decided to come West and located in New Mexico where he followed mining and railroad-ing with the Santa Fe Company for two years; then in 1900 he located in Riverside, Cal., and there engaged in farming.

In the summer of 1904 he drove into Lodi from Riverside with a team of four horses hitched to a wagon, having $500 in his pocket and a good store of determination and perseverance, which has aided him in becoming a big factor in the development of the Lodi district. He started to do teaming, hauling grapes from the vineyards to the packing houses; his first work being the hauling of a carload of grapes daily with a four-horse team from the El Coval vineyard to the packing house, which was considered a record in those days. He has built up a large transfer, express and contract hauling business and now owns and operates eleven motor trucks. He does excavating for basements. For all the large buildings erected during recent years, the excavating has been done by Mr. Irely; he has also done much house moving, his record being the moving of a large house seven miles. With his partner, S. W. McCleary, he graded and did macadam work on many of the county roads; also constructed bridges and other substantial improvements. He has been extremely active in the real estate line, buying, planting and improving and then selling many vineyards in the Lodi district; he has also built a number of residences in Lodi, disposing of them at a fair profit. At one time he owned a quarter of a block on Grand Avenue, but a greater part has been sold; a modern eight-apartment house on Grand Avenue was erected by him, and he owns a valuable corner lot on Pine and Washington streets on which he intends to erect a modern apartment house. His real estate holdings extend into Butte County, where he owns an interest in a nine-hundred-acre timber tract located near the city of Chico; he also has property in the city of Alameda.

Mr. Irely has been married three times, there being three children by his first marriage: William Leslie, Leona May, and Cecil Raymond; by his second marriage there was one child, Mabel Elmira; his third marriage united him with Miss Rebecca Beryman of Illinois, and they have one child, Paul Ardon. Fraternally he is a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons, No. 256.

WILFORD H. BURGESS.—A man who has been instrumental in the upbuilding of the city of Stockton and environs is Wilford H. Burgess, superintendent of bridge construction for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for the Stockton division. He was born in San Francisco, Cal., on July 10, 1870, the son of a California pioneer who came from Newark, Wayne County, N. Y., via the Isthmus of Panama in 1858, locating in San Francisco, where he remained until 1862, when he located in Sacramento and there conducted a livery stable, but was driven out by the floods of that year. In 1868 he returned East and was married to Almira C. Harmon, a native of Phelps, Ontario County, N. Y. Bringing his wife to California via Panama, he settled in San Francisco, but in 1880 moved to Napa County, where he had bought a small ranch in 1871.

Wilford H. Burgess received his education in the public schools of Napa and in 1895 became associated with the engineering department in constructing the Alameda and San Joaquin Railroad under George A. Atherton of Stockton. Two years later, in 1898, he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and helped in the construction of the Harrison Street bridge over the estuary in Oakland, under W. S. Palmer, division engineer, and D. Robertson, bridge superintendent. Mr. Burgess continued with the engineering force in construction work as rod man and assistant engineer, during which time he installed the fuel oil plants in the division, this being the year that the railroad changed their locomotives from coal to oil burners. On September 5, 1903, he became roadmaster at Tracy, and one year later, on June 10, 1904, was transferred to Stockton serving in the same capacity. On November 1, 1910, the Stockton division was established and Mr. Burgess was appointed supervisor of bridges and buildings, and many structures which bear evidence of his skill and ability are to be seen throughout the Stockton division. He has built approaches to numerous bridges in the division, including the approach to the San Joaquin bridge at Herndon; he also erected the concrete roundhouse at Tracy.

The marriage of Mr. Burgess in 1892 united him with Miss Clara V. Beguhl, a native of San Francisco, and they are the parents of five children: Howard H., a student in the dental department of the University of California; Edith M., the wife of Gordon C. Patterson of Stockton; Lloyd E., a student in the engineering department of the University of California; Ruth A.; and Dorothy V. Fraternally Mr. Burgess is a member of San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Stockton Council No. 10, R. & S. M., and the Independent Order of Foresters. He is a member of the American Railway Bridges and Building Association.

JASON HAMILTON DAVIS.—An expert in horticultural matters, through a deep study of this interesting subject and many years of practical experience, Jason H. Davis has proved himself an authority on this subject through the results he has attained as superintendent of the large holdings of Frank H. Buck, comprising three ranches of nearly 1,200 acres at Acampo, San Joaquin County. Mr. Davis was born near Elk Grove, Sacramento County, February 13, 1871, the son of David L. and Eliza (Murray) Davis, the former a native of Ohio, while Mrs. Davis was born in Ireland. David L. Davis made his first trip to California via Cape Horn on a sailing vessel, coming across the plains the second time in the early fifties. For a time he mined at Diamond Springs and later bought considerable land near Elk Grove, where he farmed and raised cattle and sheep, being a pioneer settler there. Of the children of these early settlers the following are living: J. J. Davis of Boise, Idaho; Mrs. D. S. Watkins of Sacramento; Mrs. C. H. Cantrell of Elk Grove; Mrs. E. A. Riley of Arno, Sacramento County; Thomas N. and Jason H., twins, and Charles D. David L. Davis died August 20, 1900, Mrs. Davis surviving until May 9, 1921, when she passed away at the age of eighty-nine.

Rearing on the home farm in Sacramento County, Jason H. Davis attended the public schools there and the Atkinson Business College at Sacramento, after which he followed farming in that vicinity. In 1906 he entered the employ of Buck and Cory on their ranch near Acampo and his capability soon advanced him to the position of foreman, where he remained until he became superintendent of the three ranches of Frank H. Buck in the Acampo district, consisting of the old home ranch of 520 acres, Woodlake vineyard, 426 acres, and the Keen ranch of 200 acres, devoted to orchard and vineyard. The Buck property is one of the most productive in the district, being rich river bottom soil, and under Mr. Davis' management it has been brought up to a high state of cultivation. He has entire supervision over all the operations of this great estate, employing hundreds of hands during the harvest season to take care of the crops. For years deeply interested in horticulture, he has made an extensive study of this subject, and keeps abreast with the latest scientific pronouncements, and this, combined with his years of practical experience, has made him most successful. At one time Mr. Davis was inspector of the Lodi district under appointment by F. W. Reed, specialist in standardization for the State of California, and his advice on matters pertaining to horticulture is frequently sought.

At Merced, on September 29, 1895, Mr. Davis was married to Miss Zoe Howell, a native daughter of Shasta County. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are the parents of two children: Nelson H., the foreman on the Acampo ranch, and Mrs. Thelma Girard of Acampo. The old home ranch of David L. Davis near Elk Grove, Sacramento County, still remains in the family, Mr. Davis having an interest in the property. Mr. Davis resides in his own home at 216 West Locust Street, Lodi. A man of fine executive ability, he stands high in the community, which he has done much to upbuild.

F. STANLEY SIEGFRIED.—Among the more recent accessions to business circles of Lodi is F. Stanley Siegfried, a man of keen discrimination and good judgment, whose executive ability and excellent management have brought to his stationery and art business a large degree of success. The sterling policy which he inaugurated in his business career has secured a patronage which makes the volume of trade transacted of considerable magnitude. He was born in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., August 18, 1889, a son of A. W. and Emma (Aicher) Siegfried. The father is a wholesale cigar salesman and both parents still reside in Pennsylvania. There are six children in the family: Katherine, Melvin, F. Stanley, the subject of this sketch, Raymond, Harold and Walter.

F. Stanley Siegfried attended grammar school in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., then entered high school and after graduation from high school went to the Ithaca Conservatory of Music at Ithaca, N. Y., graduating with the class of 1911 in violin. For the succeeding seven years he followed his profession, teaching violin, and in concert work throughout the East. Since coming West he has continued his profession.

On April 29, 1913, at Philadelphia, Pa., Mr. Siegfried was married to Miss Josephine K. Babinger, a native of Gowanda, N. Y., a daughter of Blaise and Regina L. Babinger. Her father, Blaise Babinger, was born in Alsace-Lorraine, France, and was an officer in the French army until he settled in the United States. He engaged in his trade of art moulder at Gowanda, N. Y. There are six children in the Babinger family: Joseph, Virginia, Mary, Kathryn, James and Josephine K., Mrs. Siegfried. Mrs. Siegfried is a graduate of the Ithaca Conservatory of Music, majoring in piano, and while a student there met Mr. Siegfried. He is a member of the American Federation of Musicians of Lodi, also the Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and Stockton locals of this order. In national politics he is a Democrat, but locally votes for the candidate best fitted to perform the duties of the office for which he is selected. Mr. and Mrs. Siegfried are members of the Catholic Church of Lodi and he is a member of the Knights of Columbus. Mr. Siegfried occupies his spare time teaching the violin and directing orchestras at the Lodi and Stockton theaters.

GEORGE W. LEISTNER.—George W. Leistner, born February 22, 1878, at Boise Idaho; educated in Stockton schools, two years at Stanford University, admitted to bar but never practiced. Entered real estate business in 1904; member of firm of Grunsky, Dietrich & Leistner, later Dietrich & Leistner. Identified with development of Stockton and San Joaquin County; president of Stockton Chamber of Commerce in 1915; past president of the Stockton High School Alumni Association; Yosemite Club of Stockton, Stockton Golf and Country Club. Vice-president and one of the organizers of San Joaquin County Abstract Company; secretary and identified with organization of the Stockton Investment Company, builders and owners of the Hotel Stockton; secretary of the Stockton Realty Company, owners of Bours Park; secretary of the City Development Company, Mutual Development Company and Valley Colony Company, and at present vice-president of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce and president of Stockton Golf and Country Club, and director of Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers Association; president of Land Settlement Board for graduates of the United States Rough and Ready Training Center.

Married Florence J. Ashley; two children, George W. and Mary Louise. Fraternal association: Member of Elks, Knights Templar, and Shrine.

GEORGE STEINMETZ.—At his farm home in Tulare Township, George Steinmetz breathed his last upon the 17th day of December, 1915, after a long and useful life, being then in his eighty-second year. Mr. Steinmetz belonged to that sturdy group of men whose force of character and strong determination enabled them to face and survive the many hardships incident to pioneer life, and helped lay the foundation for the present development of San Joaquin County, particularly the vicinity of Banta, where he owned his well-improved home farm of 590 acres and other valuable lands. A native of Germany, Mr. Steinmetz was born August 4, 1834, of German ancestry. He was reared in the land of his nativity until eighteen, when, in 1852 he emigrated to the United States, taking passage on a west-bound sailing vessel at Bremer-Haven, and landing at New Orleans after a six-weeks' voyage. After a year or two in Howard County, Mo., he braved the hot sandy plains and dangerous mountain passes, arriving in the Golden State in 1854. In common with thousands of others he was lured by gold and immediately went into the gold mines, but soon made up his mind that his fortune lay in agricultural pursuits and therefore made his way to San Joaquin County, during the latter part of 1854. He made no mistake in this. He went to work, and gained such success that he never thereafter moved away. He settled upon his farm near Banta in 1865, and made of it one of the finest country homes in southern San Joaquin County. He was a good business manager and an indefatigable worker, and was one of the foremost citizens in his community.

Mr. Steinmetz was twice married. His first wife was Miss Christiana Boysen, a native of Schleswig, Germany. To them were born the following five children: Henry, who died when six years old; Edward C., a leading citizen of Tulare Township, who has acceded to the Steinmetz home place, where he now resides (see his biography in this work); George A. is a stockraiser in Lone Tree Canyon, San Joaquin County; Lewis F., who married Miss Lena Krumer-land of Byron, resides at Banta, and has three children; and Annie C., now the wife of Charles Brandenman (a rancher near Carbona), is the mother of two girls.

After the death of his first wife, George Steinmetz wedded Geraldine Hahn, a native of Germany; and by her he had two children. Sene is now the wife of Henry Brandenman, who is an employee of the Chevrolet automobile people, residing at San Leandro. They have an adopted daughter, but no children of their own. August is a farmer and lives at Banta, where he owns 170 acres, and farms 480 acres in all. He married the daughter of Benjamin Canale, merchant at Banta.

Mr. Steinmetz took a very active interest in educational affairs, and was public-spirited in all matters pertaining to the general welfare of the community in which he lived. He served for many years on the board of trustees of the Valley school district, which was his home district and which he did much to establish and maintain. In national politics he was a consistent Democrat. In his dealings with his fellow-men he observed the Golden Rule. He saw the San Joaquin Valley develop from a primitive condition to a garden spot enjoying a highly advanced civilization. When he came here, wild animals were still numerous and roved over the desert-like country, while much of the land was still unclaimed and uncultivated. He manifested the keenest interest in the building of the railroads and state highways, the growth of the cities and towns, the introduction of all improvements, and the acquirement of the various accessories of modern life, and rejoiced at the advancement made. Generous and public-spirited to a fault he did his full duty in the upbuilding of his home, county, state and nation.

EDWARD C. STEINMETZ.—Four and one-half miles east of Tracy lives Edward C. Steinmetz, who is the oldest living son and child of the late George Steinmetz, a well-known San Joaquin County pioneer, whose biography also appears in this historical work. He is a prominent citizen and well-to-do and successful farmer of Tulare Township, where he has acceded to and is happily domiciled upon that portion of the George Steinmetz farm which contains the old Steinmetz home residence. He was born on this place on October 26, 1872, and grew up here. Being the oldest son in a large family of children, he was called upon to do hard manual work while yet a lad of tender years. He received a good public school education in the district schools.

In 1898 he went to Buchanan County, Iowa, and there worked at the carpenter's trade for three and a half years, and then went to Alaska, where he was employed as carpenter for the "Alaska Packers" on the Nac Nic River, which empties into Bristol Bay.

Returning home, in partnership with his brother George he farmed the Steinmetz ranch for seven years, until the death of his father, December 17, 1915. The father's estate was then divided and Mr. Steinmetz obtained the quarter-section upon which the Steinmetz residence was located. To this he later added twenty-three acres by purchase; but sold about nine acres to the Western Pacific for a right-of-way, leaving him 174 acres in his present farm, which is in a high state of cultivation. It is farmed principally to barley.

In the year 1918, Mr. Steinmetz was married to Miss Lydia Engster, who was born in Canton Zurich, Switzerland, and came to California in 1916, accompanied by her sister, who is now Mrs. Henry Himes. Mrs. Steinmetz is an accomplished woman, an excellent housekeeper, and a true helpmate to her husband, graciously presiding over the Steinmetz household, keeping up the famed hospitality of this pioneer ranch home. Mr. Steinmetz is a charter member of Tracy Parlor, N. S. G. W., and has twice been through the chairs. He is also a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Tracy, as well as of the Encampment and the Rebekahs, of which order Mrs. Steinmetz is also a member. He is past grand and chief patriarch of the Encampment.

In national politics Mr. Steinmetz is a Democrat. In local matters he gives his support to the candidate who in his estimation will best conserve the public interest. Like his father, he is industrious and energetic, and intelligently seeks the common good.

CHESTER W. CONKLIN.—A member of the firm of DeYoung & Conklin, undertakers, Chester W. Conklin is a capable representative of the younger business men who are at present guiding the progress of commercial life in Stockton. Mr. Conklin is a native son, born at Stockton, November 5, 1889, the son of Fred L. and Nettie (Eldred) Conklin, both natives of Michigan. The father came to California in 1876, and for a time had a market garden near Sacramento, then farmed at Santa Barbara. In 1883 he located at Stockton and entered the employ of the Sperry Flour Mills and was one of their valued employees until he retired on January 1, 1922, holding the position of head miller for many years. Mrs. F. L. Conklin passed away in September, 1917. Fred L. Conklin is the owner of a fine sixty-acre ranch near Acampo, which he developed from raw land into a prune orchard and a vineyard of Tokay grapes. It is now in full bearing and very productive. He is prominent in the ranks of the Odd Fellows, being a member of Truth Lodge No. 84, and of the Canton and Encampment.

Mr. and Mrs. Conklin were the parents of two sons, James E. and Chester W., of this sketch, who attended the grammar and high schools at Stockton and was for a time with the Sperry Flour Mills, and also in the real estate business. He took up the undertaking business, thoroughly learning all its details, with Warren & Smith, of Stockton, and on May 1, 1917, he formed a partnership with C. C. DeYoung, under the firm name of DeYoung & Conklin, Undertakers. These partners are boyhood friends and schoolmates, growing up together, and so the closest spirit of co-operation and harmony is manifested in all their business relations. They bought out the pioneer firm of Ford & Brignoli, and have built up a fine business with all modern equipment.

On October 31, 1911, Mr. Conklin was married to Miss Elizabeth Owen, born in San Joaquin County, and a daughter has been born to them, Janis E. Mr. Conklin is a member of Elks Lodge, No. 218, Truth Lodge No. 84, I. O. O. F., and the Improved Order of Red Men. He is a past president of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and served as district deputy grand president of this order. Mrs. Conklin joins him in his fraternal affiliations, being a member of the Rebekahs and the Native Daughters.

JACKSON B. DEATON.—An expert in the line of automobile painting, who has also specialized in monogram and lettering work of the finest type, Jackson B. Deaton has built up a record business in Stockton since locating here in 1919. A native of Missouri, Mr. Deaton was born in Cass County, March 18, 1886, the son of William P. and Louisa E. (Daniels) Deaton. William P. was born in Kentucky and was a pioneer in Missouri and in looking for a location he traveled in the primitive way—with ox team—through Iowa in the early '50s when there were no railroads and the country was infested with Indians, and he had some interesting experiences on the frontier. Settling in Missouri he farmed and when the Civil War broke out he served over four years with the Union army. Once his horse was shot from under him and again a bullet shattered a watch he carried, but neither bullet penetrated his body. In 1887 he settled in Howell County, Mo., and there he answered the final roll call in 1896. In 1900 the mother and her five children removed to Des Moines, Iowa, and there she died in 1918.

Jackson B. Deaton, the only member of the family in California, received his education in the public schools of Missouri and Iowa, laying the foundation for his future usefulness and in 1901 he apprenticed himself to learn the painter's trade with the Baker Carriage Company of Des Moines, receiving as a wage the sum of five cents an hour. Next he was with the Kratzer Carriage Company, remaining with them for more than ten years, then going into business for himself in Des Moines, opening up a carriage and auto painting shop, this being his first experience in the latter field. In 1914 Mr. Deaton entered the employ of the Matthews Carriage Company at Des Moines and for five years was foreman of their painting department, and here he gained a valuable experience in lettering and fine monogram work. He was next with the Payne Motor Car Company in charge of their painting department for a year, and spent the same length of time with the Packard Motor Company at Des Moines, remaining there until he came to California.

On November 1, 1919, Mr. Deaton opened up in business for himself in commodious quarters on the second floor of the Studebaker Garage building on Sutter Street and East Miner Avenue and on February 1, 1920, he bought the property and business established by John A. Merz at 732 East Lafayette Street. He started in to give his customers the best class of work and he attributes his splendid success to the fact that he has lived up to his motto, "Give every man dollar for dollar." He personally inspects all the work done and still does all the lettering and monogram work himself, every job being given the most painstaking care, so that it is easy to understand the large patronage he receives.

While a resident of Iowa Mr. Deaton was married to Miss Emma Green, a native of that state, and they make their home in Stockton. As a member of the San Joaquin Auto Trades Association, Mr. Deaton takes an active interest in its programs and for some time was a member of the executive committee of that body. His membership in the Masons is in Lodge No. 370, Des Moines, Iowa, and he belongs to the Stockton Pyramid of the Sciots, to the Lions Club, the Kiwanis Club, and the Sons of Veterans.

J. B. Deaton

While in Des Moines, Iowa, Mr. Deaton was a member of the Y. M. C. A. preliminary officers training school, but the armistice came before he was called.

ISAAC P. DAVIDSON.—A very successful business man of Stockton, is the owner and proprietor of the Stockton Pipe Works, Isaac P. Davidson, who, from a small beginning is enjoying well-merited prosperity. He was born in Russia, in the city of Minsk, in December, 1882, and is the son of Meyer and Hazel (Todresic) Davidson, both natives of Russia. His father came to San Joaquin County in 1890 and located on his brother's farm near Waterloo; later he established a business on Weber Avenue and was successful; he then erected a modern apartment house at 720-724 East Park Street, where his family reside, and passed away in 1919 after a busy and useful life. In 1893 Mrs. Davidson left Russia and joined her husband on the ranch.

Isaac was eleven years old when he accompanied the family to Stockton and his education was obtained at the Greenwood school in the Waterloo district; when quite a young man he worked on the ranch and peddled throughout the country; later he worked in his father's store in Stockton. When his brother, Morris, established the Stockton Pipe Works, he entered his employ and in 1913 bought the business. Under his management the business has greatly increased and new equipment has been added. He is now engaged in making the International pump, which finds a ready sale in the farming district adjacent to Stockton; he is also agent for the Wagner motor and carries a full line of pipe. He specializes in the installation of pumping plants and is kept steadily employed in this line of work. He has installed pumping plants on many of the leading ranches in San Joaquin County, and also installs gas engines. He is a member of the Jewish Orthodox Congregational Church of Stockton. Mr. Davidson is interested in all movements that have for their aim the betterment of the community and is rapidly building up a reputation among the business men of the county.

DAVIS-HELLER-PEARCE COMPANY. — A strong Stockton organization devoted to architecture, construction and engineering is composed of H. Y. Davis, H. E. Heller, and J. W. Pearce—one of the firms which show that Stockton and the San Joaquin Valley have the brains and the man-power to take advantage of the present exceptional opportunities. This company has perfected a system for handling construction work and has developed an organization of men expert in every line of the business which insures the company a permanent position in the affairs of this great and growing section. The company has to its credit a record of achievements that is noteworthy, as its many clients will testify. While specializing in the building of industrial and commercial structures, this firm also constructs residences and is equipped to handle construction work of any nature, anywhere.

One of the interesting contracts handled by this company was the building of a great sawmill plant for the Apache Lumber Company at Cooley, Ariz., in the heart of the pine timber country, on the old Fort Apache Indian Reservation, 7,500 feet above sea level, where very few white men had ever visited. The lumber plant represents a $7,000,000 investment, and the Davis-Heller-Pearce Company erected forty-two buildings there. It was necessary to send hundreds of men of all crafts from San Diego, San Francisco, Sacramento and Stockton, to do the work. The Davis-Heller-Pearce Company are supervising architects and engineers for the Stockton School District, directing a $1,275,000 school building program, and for the College of the Pacific, who are spending $750,000 for new buildings in Stockton. They are architects and engineers for the new $200,000 Union high school building at Manteca, and, in association with two other local firms, are architects and engineers for the new $600,000 Stockton City Hall. The high character, native ability and broad experience of the members of this organization account for its success.

H. Y. Davis, who is in charge of the architectural and engineering department of the firm, was educated at the University of Illinois, and has been in active practice of his profession since 1910. He is a man of talent and vision, and while constantly striving to perpetuate the best traditions of architecture, is intensely practical in meeting present day problems.

H. E. Heller, who is in charge of all construction work, has spent about twenty years in the business. He is a master of every detail of it, is full of energy and initiative, inspires confidence, and is a natural leader, resourceful and determined.

J. W. Pearce, who is in charge of the business and financial interests of the company, has had a wide and varied experience, having spent twenty years in the transportation and banking field. He is conservative and sound in his judgments, a far-seeing and broad-minded man who has the confidence and esteem of all who know him. Mr. Pearce made a splendid record as campaign manager of Liberty Loan and other activities during the late war, takes a leading part in all public affairs of the Stockton community, and is now an officer in many civic organizations. This firm should go far, and is certain to contribute no small part to the life of this district.

EUGENE WILLIAM DELUCCHI.—An enterprising and successful business man who was born and reared in San Joaquin County, Eugene W. Delucchi was born near Lodi, Cal., June 13, 1893, a son of Antone and Marie (Stadino) Delucchi, both natives of Italy and both still living. His father came to California when sixteen years of age and for forty-five years was engaged in agricultural and horticultural pursuits in the Lodi district and was well and favorably known in that section, being among the early settlers of the county. He is now located in Oakland and is engaged in the nursery business. Mr. and Mrs. Delucchi are the parents of six children: Louise, Eugene W., Louis, Mary, Lizzie and Albina.

Eugene W. was educated in the grammar schools of Stockton; later took a business course at Heald's Business College. He spent his boyhood days on his father's farm near Lodi and helped with the farm work. On completing his education he was employed by the Wells Fargo Company for two years; then engaged in the real estate business in Stockton for two years, gaining a thorough knowledge of land and land values in San Joaquin County; he next worked for Jacob-Malcolm and Burt Company of San Francisco, one of the largest fruit distributing firms in San Francisco and gained valuable knowledge of the fruit distributing industry. On returning to Stockton he formed a partnership in the fruit buying business with Emil J. Campodonico and they represent the J. C. Richardson Company of Los Angeles, fruit and produce brokers; also B. F. Pearce of Seattle. Besides attending to their growing business, they farm 600 acres to barley in the Sutter Basin, and are also interested in real estate transactions in Stockton. In 1919 Mr. Delucchi farmed 250 acres in beans on Delta lands.

Fraternally Mr. Delucchi is past grand sagem Stockton Lodge of Red Men; a member of the Stockton Lodge of Elks and the Native Sons of the Golden West. He is among the progressive young business men of his district and enjoys the full confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens.

ERNEST P. CAMPBELL.—Among the progressive and far-seeing business men of Stockton is Ernest P. Campbell, a mechanical inventor and the owner and proprietor of the Campbell Auto Works, 238 North El Dorado Street. He has built up a business that extends among auto and truck and tractor owners in all sections of the country.

He was born in Jewell County, Kan., on December 13, 1886, and was reared and educated in his native county. When he reached the age of nineteen he spent four years learning the machinist's trade in the railroad shops of the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad at Neodesha, Kan.; then he was employed in the shops of the Standard Oil Company of the same place; he then went to Kansas City, Mo., and was in the shops of the Missouri Pacific Railroad. Early in the year of 1908 he arrived in Stockton and entered the employ of Charles F. Holman as head of the machine shop; later Mr. Holman sold his business and Mr. Campbell purchased the mechanical equipment and in 1910 opened his own automobile repair business on Main Street in the building now occupied by the Colonial Theater. Starting in a small way with but one lathe, his business has steadily grown and in 1912 he moved to his present commodious quarters at 238 North El Dorado Street, where he has an up-to-date machine shop, fully equipped for all kinds of repair work.

Mr. Campbell is an inventor of established fame who has created implements highly useful to the auto world, the Campbell combination bearing puller and race extractor being especially valuable in the pulling of magnetos and electrical generator bearings, one of the most timely productions of the age. It is in general use among automobile and tractor owners. All wide-awake mechanics and shop owners who have seen the Campbell bearing puller work, speak highly of it. He has also put on the market the Campbell expansion cylinder reamer for the successful re-boring of automobile engine cylinders; these tools are being sent to all parts of the United States, the fame of the products having spread everywhere, and shipments are made daily. The Campbell Works make a specialty of auto-repairing and rebuilding and make over all kinds of machinery, the work being personally supervised by Mr. Campbell. He employs skilled mechanics and the well-equipped factory is properly provided for handling repairs expeditiously. A specialty is made of complete overhauling of all makes of automobiles, trucks and tractor engines. Mr. Campbell has built up a trade and a patronage that extend among auto, truck and tractor owners in all sections of the country. He is an alert business man who believes in results, and his friends and patrons are legion throughout the Stockton and Delta sections.

MARCELLS G. BATTILANA.—An interesting business that flourishes more and more is that of Marcell G. Battilana, who styles his enterprise the California Floral Company, located on North California Street, Stockton, in which city he was born on the 25th of February, 1900. He is the son of Joseph and Lottie (Gianelli) Battilana, the former a native of the Genoa district in Italy, and the latter a native daughter of Stockton, her father being G. Gianelli, a pioneer grocer of the city. Joseph Battilana is now a prominent real estate dealer in Stockton, recognized as one of the progressive and influential leaders in his field. It is no wonder, then, that our subject is well-known as one of the rising young merchants of the city.

He attended the Lafayette, Jackson and South schools, and was graduated from the Washington school, after which he went to San Francisco in 1916 and was with the Bank of Italy. Leaving that institution, he took a position with the Pacific Coast Shipbuilding Company of San Francisco, and worked in the shipyards during the World War. Returning to Stockton, he became associated with his father in real estate ventures, and later he was connected with the Commercial & Savings Bank of Stockton.

A. Serventi, an uncle, had established the California Floral Company, in Stockton, and his health failing, on April 6, 1921, Mr. Battilana and I. L. Randolph bought the established business continuing the same under its original name. Mr. Serventi is now deceased. "Say it with flowers" is the slogan challenging the attention of the public to their business, which has fairly doubled itself since these hustling young men took it over. They have everything in the line of flowers and ornamental plants, and their place is always among the most attractive in the city. They deal direct with the leading wholesalers of San Francisco, and are therefore always sure of commanding the market.

At San Francisco on January 15, 1921, Mr. Battilana was married to Miss Inez Squellati, a native of Jackson, Amador County, the daughter of Virgil Squellati, a pioneer of Amador and Calaveras counties and a graduate of the Stockton high school. She also taught school for a year at Palermo School in Valley Springs. One daughter blessed their union, Marcelyn Jean, born on June 14, 1922. Mr. Battilana is a member of the American Institute of Banking in San Francisco, having taken a course with the Bank of Italy; and he also belongs to the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and the Druids. Being among the best-liked of the younger set, his social connections spell prosperity in his business; and the prosperity of his floral undertaking is a matter of concern and congratulation to the community, since the California Floral Company renders an exceptional service to many.

WILLIAM B. REINEY.—An enterprising, up-to-date hosteler, whose well-appointed establishment has become one of the attractions of life in San Joaquin County, is William B. Reiney, proprietor of Hotel Clements, at Clements. He was born in Monaghan, Province of Ulster, Ireland, in 1861, the son of Robert A. and Sarah A. Reiney, who had five children. The others were Phoebe, who was educated at Trinity College in Dublin; John, deceased; Robert, in California; and Elizabeth, deceased.

William Reiney attended the public schools, and in 1877 came out to California. Although then only sixteen years of age, he went into the redwoods, in Mendocino County, and took up the hardest of labor, mastering in time every branch of work in connection with the redwood industry, such as cutting down trees, milling, curing lumber, and everything that pertains to a redwood lumber camp and its varied activities. He worked near Mendocino City for four years, and then went to Reno, Nev., where he put in two years. After that he worked for Messrs. Smith & McNabb, and for Pierce Brothers, in San Francisco, rounding out three years with them; and then he went to San Luis Obispo and entered the service of A. I. Lyons, who had purchased a part of the Blackburn grant near the old Mission town, acting as his foreman for three years on the 1,600 acres making up the fine ranch tract. Then he rented the ranch from Mr. Lyons and there raised stock.

About thirty-two years ago, Mr. Reiney came to Clements to take charge of another Lyons ranch, to the northeast, and was there for four years, building levees and reclaiming the land, which the Wakefield brothers now lease. About 1894 he came to Clements and bought the Clements Hotel, and he has since conducted it as a first-class country inn. He owns some other town property, and is intensely interested in the development and prosperity of this section.

At San Francisco, on March 31, 1887, Mr. Reiney was married to Miss Mary Agnes Foley, a native of Cork, Ireland, who came to America a promising young woman of eighteen, and was married soon afterward. Two children and three grandchildren have resulted from this union. William John is the father of two children, Harold and Beatty; and Mary, now Mrs. Morrow, of Stockton, is the mother of one infant daughter, now seven months old, christened May Reiney Morrow. Mr. Reiney is a Republican, and a member of the Foresters of America, the Eagles, and the Moose. He is intensely interested in all manly sports, being an amateur athlete.

William John Reiney, the son, enlisted in Company E, 26th Engineers, for service in the World War, and he went to France with his regiment, enlisting from Taft as an expert well-driller. He took part in the great offensive at Chateau-Thierry and St. Mihiel, in the Meuse-Argonne campaigns. On March 27, 1918, at Camp Dix, in New Jersey, he was promoted a sergeant, and as such he served during the war. He returned to America with his regiment, and from New York accompanied the body of a deceased officer to San Francisco; and there, at the Presidio, he was honorably discharged.

CLYDE E. CONDIT.—An experienced and influential business man of Stockton, Clyde E. Condit is the proprietor of the Electric & Machine Equipment Company located at 124 North El Dorado Street. A native of Iowa, he was born at Grinnell on August 25, 1866, and he received his education in the public schools of his native city. Desiring to complete his education to better equip himself for his chosen field of labor, he removed to California and entered Stanford University and was graduated from that institution in 1891 as an electrical engineer; after his graduation he went to Goldfield, Nev., and entered the employ of the Nevada-California Power Company. This company erected the first steam power plant in Nevada at Goldfield. Having gained valuable practical experience while being employed with this company, Mr. Condit resigned his position and entered the business arena for himself, opening up as an electrical engineer and having for sale mining machinery, with branch stores at Reno, Nev., and San Francisco, Cal. Some time later he sold his business and located in Portland, Ore., where he entered the employ of the Northwestern Electric Company. In 1917 he came to Stockton and purchased the Electric and Machine Equipment Company, which was started in 1907 by L. F. Youdall. For two years he followed electrical contracting, and equipped many of the large buildings in Stockton; in 1919 he gave up contracting and has become a wholesale and retail dealer in electrical supplies. He is a member of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce; of the Merchants Association and of the Yosemite Club. His twenty years' experience, backed by a thorough education along electrical lines, has enabled Mr. Condit to attain to and hold an important and influential place in the business circles of his locality.

JOHN J. MOLLOY.—A man whose industry and exemplary management in his chosen line of work have placed him well to the front as a leader among the millers of the Pacific Coast, is John J. Molloy, the superintendent of the Cereal Mill of the Sperry Flour Company at Stockton, who was born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, June 7, 1871. His father, John Molloy, was born in County Mayo, Ireland, where he learned the miller's trade and there he married Mary Johnson, also born there. He came to the United States and located at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, having been employed by George Douglas, of Douglas & Stewart, to take charge of their mill; this mill was afterwards absorbed by the American Cereal Company, and later still taken over by the Quaker Oats Company, and is now the biggest cereal mill in the world. Mr. Molloy, who was a veteran of the Civil War, was with this company until he was eighty years old and was retired on a pension. Both parents are now deceased. They were the parents of two boys and one girl. Our subject and a sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Shields of Cedar Rapids, are the only surviving children.

John J. Molloy was the youngest child and he received his education in the public schools of Cedar Rapids; his vacations were spent helping in the mill and when thirteen years old he began to learn the miller's trade and with it the dressing of stone burrs and in time became second miller of the Douglas & Stewart Mill under his father. In 1898 he accepted an offer from the Sperry Flour Company to come to California as superintendent of their San Francisco mill, continuing there until the big fire in 1906 when the mill was burned down; he was then transferred to the Stockton mill, where he installed new machinery, converting the old Sperry Flour Mill into an up-to-date cereal mill, and on August 7, 1906, he started the first mill, which has since been enlarged until it is now the largest cereal mill on the Pacific Coast, making the greatest number of varieties of cereals of any in the world, sixty different varieties, with a capacity of 2,000 barrels a day. This company ships, not only all over the United States, but to Europe, Central and South America, China, Japan, and all over the Orient. Mechanically inclined, and of an inventive turn of mind, Mr. Molloy makes his drawings for the devices and improvements used in the mill. To better fit himself for his work, he took a course in the International Correspondence School in mechanical drawing, completing the course by night study. Mr. Molloy devised the overhead carrier system, which crosses Weber Avenue and transports grain to the mill and cereal to the river boats. The demand for the Sperry products is so great that the mill is never idle, employing three shifts of workmen of eight hours each; automatic equipment has recently been installed so that the output will be trebled. One hundred girls are employed in the packing and labeling department; a large room has been fitted up in the upper story with a dining room and kitchen in connection, the company furnishing luncheon for the girls. Mr. Molloy designed and built a replica of the old pioneer Sperry mill built at Sacramento in the early '50s, for the '49 celebration there in 1922, and it attracted much attention.

Mr. Molloy has an international as well as a national reputation as a miller; he was one of the organizers of the Professional Millers' Association of California and served as its president; he is now deputy supreme secretary of the California Professional Millers' Association, a branch of the national order; he is a member of the supreme council of the above and the only member in California who has a vote in the supreme council of the nation and votes on every matter of importance that comes before that body.

Mr. Molloy's marriage in San Francisco united him with Miss Ida E. Loichot, a native of Canton, Ohio, and they are the parents of three daughters: Mrs. Mary Cornwall, residing in Stockton, and Adelle and Thelma, both attending Stockton high school. Fraternally he is a Knight of Columbus and a Modern Woodman. His intelligent leadership and management have been an influence for progress in city, county and state.

EDRIS B. MYERS, JR.—Perseverance and industry have ever been the characteristics of Edris B. Myers, Jr., and these qualities, combined with his native ability, have been responsible for his rise to the important post of chief engineer of the three mills of the Sperry Flour Mills at Stockton. Mr. Myers is a native of Illinois and was born at Peoria on January 7, 1875, the son of Edris B. and Margaret (Fyfe) Myers, the former a native of Indiana and the latter of Pontiac, Illinois.

In March, 1886, the family removed to Stockton, Cal., and here Edris B. attended the Lafayette school until he was fifteen, when he started out to earn his own living. He followed various occupations as a boy, first as a messenger boy for the Western Union Telegraph Company, and then with Charles W. Dohrmann, the insurance man. In 1893 he took up the machinist's trade with Straight & Cadle, the proprietors of the Globe Iron Works, and was with them until 1895, when he entered the employ of the Sperry Flour Mills Company, working as a fireman for two years. From 1897 to 1898 he was with the Stockton Gas & Electric Company, and then went back to the Sperrys for two years. Receiving an appointment as assistant engineer at the State Asylum at Stockton under H. G. Balkwill, Mr. Myers was there from 1900 to 1905, and being ambitious to progress more rapidly, during this time he took a course in engineering with the International Correspondence Schools. Returning to the Sperry Company as assistant engineer, he was made chief engineer of the Union Mill in 1905, of the Capital Mill in 1912, and the Crown Mill in 1915, all owned by this company, these promotions giving concrete evidence of the appreciation of his capability and faithful service, and he now has fifteen men working under him.

Mr. Myers' marriage, which took place in 1912, united him with Miss Frances Gillis, a native daughter of Stockton, whose father, James Gillis, was one of the city's honored pioneer residents. Mr. Myers has been a member of the Odd Fellows since 1906, being affiliated with Charity Lodge No. 6 of Stockton.

DOMINGO CHANGALA.—Among the interesting citizens of Stockton and San Joaquin County who have done their best to make this a better place in which to carry on business and to live, is Domingo Changala, now counted among the leading sheep men of Central California. A native of France, he was born in the Basses-Pyrenees, southern France, September 29, 1878. He was reared on his father's farm and attended the public schools of his neighborhood, working on the farm during vacations. Upon reaching military age, he entered the French army as an infantryman and served for two years in France, and one year in the French possessions in Africa. When leaving the army Mr. Changala determined to come to America and California, and borrowing the money for his passage from his cousin he set out alone. He had an acquaintance in Stockton and upon his arrival here on December 26, 1902, found himself without money and a stranger in a strange land, unused to the customs and language, but he soon found employment on the John Prather ranch, near Linden, as a herder of sheep for which he received twenty-five dollars per month. He worked for Mr. Prather for five and one-half years and never missed a single day, a record he may well feel proud of. By the end of the first year he had repaid his cousin the money he had borrowed; then the next two years, or during his father's lifetime, he sent his father nearly all his earnings because he was poor and needed help.

Through hard work and economy Mr. Changala accumulated money enough to invest in 1,100 sheep of his own, and from this small beginning he advanced to be one of the leading sheepmen of the county, running as high as 5,000 head; at the present writing he has about 4,000. He employs only the most approved methods in caring for his flocks, which in large measure accounts for his success. As a member of the Central California Sheep Growers' Association he has been active in bringing about a number of things that have been beneficial both to the grower and to the consumer. Showing his faith in California realty Mr. Changala has invested in a fine dairy and alfalfa ranch of sixty acres near Patterson, in Stanislaus County, and here he has a fine herd of fifty Holstein cows; he also owns valuable real estate in Stockton.

The marriage of Mr. Changala on January 6, 1909, in Stockton, united him with Miss Etinnette Arrabit, born in the Basses-Pyrenees. She came to California in 1908 and has since been a resident of Stockton. They have three interesting children, Josephine Annie, Nellie Katherine and John Battiste. Mr. Changala here became a citizen of the United States in Stockton in 1915 and ever since has done his duty as he saw it by voting for the best men and measures that in his estimation would be of the most benefit to the people and to the country. It is to such self-made men that the county can look with pride for they have done what they could to advance every interest and every reform, to make the county and state take its proper place in the history of our great nation.

WILLIAM A. MURPHY.—After ten years of efficient service as city inspector in the electrical department of the city of Stockton, wherein he became widely known throughout the city, William A. Murphy resigned his post to engage in business for himself, organizing the Bright Spot Electric Company on January 1, 1918, opening up headquarters at 235 East Market Street, Stockton, and winning success from the start. A native Californian, Mr. Murphy was born in Calaveras County, July 9, 1876, the son of Patrick and Margaret (Fitzgerald) Murphy; both were natives of Boston, Mass., and there they were married, crossing the plains in an ox-team train in 1849 with their two children. The father was one of the pioneer miners and farmers of San Andreas, Calaveras County, where he resided until 1896, when he retired and removed to Stockton, where he died in April, 1900, aged seventy-three. Mrs. Murphy passed away in September, 1914, aged eighty-four.

Ten children were born to this worthy pioneer couple: Mrs. William Webb, deceased, the mother of eleven children; James, a rancher in San Joaquin County, is married and has one child; Thomas passed away leaving a widow and two children, and one of them, R. W. Murphy, is the Pacific Coast manager for the Westinghouse Lamp Company, with headquarters in San Francisco; Mrs. Nellie Williams lives at Oakdale, Cal.; Mrs. Margaret Thompson of Angels Camp, Calaveras County, has six children; Mrs. Mary Von Dulm is deceased; Mrs. Robert O'Brien of Oakland has two daughters; Frank J. of Stockton; Eliza, deceased; and the youngest, William A. Murphy, of this sketch. He was educated in the public schools of Calaveras County and came to Stockton when a young man and learned the blacksmith trade with the Holt Manufacturing Company, finishing with the Hammond Car Works of San Francisco.

Not seeing any future in this trade, Mr. Murphy returned to Stockton and opened a cigar store on Main Street, which he conducted for two years, when he sold out to William Hickman. He then decided to learn the electrical business, and this he has now followed for twenty-three years. He started with the American River Electrical Company, which was installing a transmission line from Placerville to Stockton, working for only a dollar a day at first, and was with this company for four years. He then engaged in the electrical business for himself for a year, selling out to Harry Spencer, and remaining with Mr. Spencer for a year and a half as foreman. He then became foreman and manager for the Powell Electrical Company on construction work, and installed the electrical system in many of the older buildings, among them the Clark & Henery Building, the old St. Joseph's Home and the Clark Sanitarium, also installing much work in Turlock.

In 1907 Mr. Murphy was appointed city electrician of Stockton under Mayor R. R. Reibenstein, the first man to hold this office, which he filled faithfully and efficiently for ten years. During this time many of Stockton's large, modern buildings were erected—Hotel Stockton, Hotel Clark, Hotel Lincoln, Farmers and Merchants Bank, Commercial Bank, City Bank, and he passed on the electrical installation in all of them. Resigning from this post, he opened his business, the Bright Spot Electric Company, in 1918, and today he has one of the most representative establishments in this line in the county, enjoying a patronage extending into the rich Delta, as well as in the towns and communities around Stockton in other directions. Houses are wired, industrial and commercial lighting plants are installed complete, and motor and pumping plants are installed for irrigation and general ranch use, irrigation machinery being a specialty of Mr. Murphy. He was the successful bidder for the installation work and lighting equipment for the Antioch $60,000 city hall, and this work was so satisfactory that it called forth much praise.

At Reno, Nev., in December, 1898, Mr. Murphy was married to Miss Ida B. Fischer, a native of Switzerland, and they make their home at 735 North California Street. One of Stockton's enterprising business men, Mr. Murphy is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Progressive Business Club, the Stockton Advertising Club, the California Electrical Contractors and Dealers Association, and the Jovians, a national order of the electrical industry, and fraternally he is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West, Woodmen of the World, Red Men, and a charter member of the local Eagles.

JOSEPH D. CROSE.—An influential and leading citizen of Lodi, for many years a successful merchant, who through his faithful public service has played an important part in the city's growth, is Joseph D. Crose, one of the city trustees of Lodi and an efficient and loyal public official, serving four years. For forty years a merchant, he began his mercantile career at Armstrong, Howard County, Mo., where he was born at Boonesborough, June 7, 1858. In 1886 he removed to Crawford, Nebr., where he homesteaded 160 acres and farmed for a time, and on deciding to take up his residence in Arizona, he drove across country in wagons with his family, reaching Mesa after a three months' trip that had many interesting experiences. Here he established himself as a merchant, taking a leading part in the town's enterprises and serving as justice of the peace.

Coming to Lodi, Cal., in the fall of 1905, Mr. Crose built two business blocks in the spring of 1906 and engaged in the grocery business, which he continued until that fall, when he sold out, and bought a one-half interest in a shoe store known as the Walk-Over Boot Shop. Meeting with splendid success, he remained actively in this business until January, 1920, when he disposed of his interest to his partner and is now living retired from active life in the business world, but finding his time well occupied with his valuable real estate interests.

In Missouri, on September 8, 1881, Mr. Crose was married to Miss Annie E. Patrick, who was a native of Missouri but was reared in Colorado. Twelve children were born to them, five of whom are now living, as follows: Ira N. is the manual training teacher in the Lodi high school; John D. was a missionary in Tokio, Japan, working two years among the students of the Imperial University, and now has a congregation at Pomona, Cal.; Mrs. Laura Giles lives in Los Angeles; Joseph W. is a merchant at Orange, Cal.; Mrs. Annie E. Beckley is a resident of Lodi. Mr. Crose is a member of the Church of God and one of its generous contributors; this church was organized in Lodi a few years ago and now has a membership of fifty. For the past four years Mr. Crose has been a member of the board of city trustees of Lodi and chairman of the health and safety committee. Having occupied this official position during the years of the city's greatest growth, he has contributed effectively to its orderly development, and with the city's interest at heart he has given generously of his time and talents toward every movement for its betterment.

CHARLES W. RUFF.—An enterprising, successful man of varied affairs of real practical importance to this portion of California is Charles W. Ruff, formerly a stockholder in and manager of the mill of the Lodi Mill & Manufacturing Company, and now engaged in building operations in the Sturla Tract. He was born at Muscatine, Iowa, on December 12, 1864, and there he remained until he was fifteen years of age, when he removed to South Dakota, where he was for five years on a ranch, at the same time that he finished his schooling.

Returning to Iowa, he entered upon planing-mill work, at Sioux City, starting in at the bottom of the ladder, and thereby gradually gaining a thorough knowledge of mill-work in all branches. And from that time on, he followed mill-work until in the spring of 1921 he sold his interest in the Lodi Mill & Manufacturing Company. In Sioux City he entered the employ of the Anderson & Floyd Manufacturing Company, and from there he went to Waterlooc, Iowa, where he worked for nine years with Nauman & Company in their planing mill. He then went north to Seattle, and was with Messrs. Morgan Bros., ship-builders, for a year and a half; and coming to Lodi in 1906, he entered the employ of Cary Bros., in the Lodi Planing Mills. Later, a corporation was formed, called the Lodi Mill & Manufacturing Company, which bought out Cary Bros.; and Mr. Ruff was a partner in the concern, with E. C. Cary, J. M. McMahon, and E. F. Van Vlear. After all these years of changing application, Mr. Ruff became one of the best-posted and most-experienced planing-mill men in this part of the country, and it was easy for the Lodi Mill, under his management, to make a specialty of remodeling store-fronts. Although this seems an odd specialty, the company was kept busy, and many of the most ornate facades in Lodi are due to their taste and skill. They erected, for example, the fronts of the Friedburgh Kaiser store, and that of both M. Newfield and Messrs. Beckman, Welsh & Thompson.

Since entering upon his new field, Mr. Ruff has been equally successful. He built the first residence in the Sturla Tract, and he seems destined to build many more. He buys well-located lots, erects houses of the most desirable character, and puts them on the market at prices reasonable and within the reach of many; and in this important work of helping to build up the community, he has accomplished much good. It is no wonder that his fellow-citizens look upon him as an exemplary citizen, and speak of him as good timber, before long, for public office. An active Democrat for years, he has long served prominently as a member of the Democratic County Central Committee.

The marriage of Mr. Ruff united him with Miss Mabel Paul, a native of Iowa, and their union has been blessed with the birth of three children—Cecil, Paul and Juanita. Mr. Ruff is a Mason, being a member of Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., and he also belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen.

ALEXANDER BROTHERS.—Among the prosperous and enterprising representatives of the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County, the three Alexander brothers, John, Thomas, and Christ, have given ample evidence of the progressive spirit and up-to-date methods which make for success along every line of worthy endeavor. John and Thomas, twins, were born June 10, 1884, and Christ was born April 16, 1890, at Cephalonia, Greece. They are sons of Zesus and Diamond (Vandoros) Alexander. The parents were farmer folk in their native land, and their nine children were reared on the farm, where they all received practical experience in agriculture. The nine children are: Angelus, Stephen, Thomas and John (twins), Andrew, Christ, Anna, Angelina, and Alexandria—all residing in Greece with the exception of the three brothers referred to in this sketch. All three brothers received a good education in the grammar and high schools of their native country. When John Alexander was about sixteen years old he left home and went to Palestine, where he attended school for a year; then he went to Port Said, Egypt, and for seven months worked in a clothing store. Giving up his position, he traveled throughout Egypt for a short while, and then returned to his home in Greece for a visit, after which he went to Athens and worked for two years. He then went to the English colony of the Sudan, Africa, where he worked in a grocery store for a year and a half. Returning to Athens, he met his brother Christ and together they came via Marseilles and La Havre, France, to New York City, where they were met by their brother Thomas. Thomas Alexander left home when he was nineteen years old and went to Constantinople, where he worked in his uncle's large dry-goods store for about six months, then removed to Cardiff, Wales, where he worked for a few months. He then made his way to Rio de Janeiro and from there to Buenos Aires, where he served in the Argentine navy for two years. Leaving here, he came to New York City, and joined his brothers there. The three brothers worked in New York City for about a year, and then removed to Denver, Colo., where they found employment in various hotels for two years. Thereafter the three of them went to Chicago and there learned the barber trade, which they followed for two years; they then returned to Denver and followed their trade for a year and a half, and in 1910 came to San Francisco and established their own shop, which they conducted for one year. Then they moved to Redwood City and opened a shop, which they ran for five years. In 1916 the three brothers came to San Joaquin County and leased the A. W. Franklin ranch, seven miles west of Lodi, and engaged in farming for a year.

On September 19, 1917, Christ Alexander entered the United States Army and was sent to Camp Lewis and placed in Company L, 363rd Infantry, training for six months; and then was sent to Camp Green, N. C., where he received two months intensive training. From Camp Green he went to Camp Mills, N. Y., and was here transferred to Company C, 59th Infantry of the 4th Division. From Camp Mills, N. Y., his company sailed for France via Liverpool, England, and upon their arrival were immediately sent to the front and were in the Chateau-Thierry and Aisne-Marne offensives. In the Vesle offensive he received a severe shrapnel wound in one of his legs. He was sent to a hospital, where he remained for eleven months, and then was returned to the United States and, on July 8, 1919, was discharged from the Letterman Hospital, San Francisco, and then returned to his home in San Joaquin County. He then entered a vocational training school, where he studied dentistry, but at the end of six months was obliged to give it up on account of the strain on his wounded leg; he then tried to work at his trade in Lodi, but was obliged to give that up also. In 1919 his brothers, John and Thomas, had bought a twenty-acre vineyard one-half mile north of Victor, and in 1921 they purchased a forty-acre vineyard five miles northwest of Woodbridge; here Christ Alexander went to work, and has partially recovered the use of his wounded leg. The Alexander brothers have set twenty acres of the forty-acre ranch to young vineyard, and have further improved it with a six-inch pump and a fifteen-horsepower motor for irrigation purposes. They came to America empty-handed; but taking advantage of the splendid opportunities offered in the New World for advancement, they have worked their way steadily upward to prosperity.

RALPH P. MORRELL.—Many of Stockton's finest and most substantial structures are the handiwork of Ralph P. Morrell, the pioneer architect of the city, which he has seen develop from a town of 12,000 inhabitants until its population now exceeds 50,000. He is a native son of California, his birth having occurred at San Francisco, February 5, 1867, and his parents were Oliver L. and Margaret (Holmes) Morrell, the former a native of Vermont and the latter of New Bedford, Mass. In 1850 the father came to California via the Isthmus of Panama, locating in San Francisco, where he built and operated the first furniture factory in the city. He established his plant at the corner of Fremont and Market streets and was numbered among the pioneer business men and upbuilders of the city.

Mr. Morrell attended the Lincoln grammar school at Fifth and Market streets in San Francisco, and after their lessons for the day were ended the boys would frequently devote their energies to digging up Indian beads and other trinkets on the present site of the San Francisco Civic Auditorium. He also remembers when there were plank sidewalks on Market Street and the first railroad station was located at the intersection of that thoroughfare with Seventh Street, his reminiscences of San Francisco's early days being most interesting. In 1879 he came to Stockton, where he attended the public schools, and afterward completed an apprenticeship in furniture designing and decorating, becoming very proficient in that line. Later he embarked in business on his own account, erecting a large planing mill on Lafayette Street in March, 1890, and at the same time he began his work in architectural drawing. The mill was afterward destroyed by fire and Mr. Morrell has since devoted his attention to architectural work, in which he has been very successful. The greater part of the business blocks in Stockton were designed by him and also a large number of fine homes, for which he has likewise selected the furnishings. His reputation has spread beyond the boundaries of Stockton and he has drawn the plans for public buildings and private residences in cities from Bakersfield to the northern part of the state and he has also done architectural work in Nevada, being widely known in this connection. In fraternal circles he is well known, belonging to Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and to Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F. He occupies a position of leadership in his profession and his work, which is of high character and standard excellence, is a credit to the city and a feature in its substantial improvement.

PACIFIC CARPET CLEANING COMPANY.—

The enterprising concern conducted under the firm name of the Pacific Carpet Cleaning Company, located at 330 South California Street, Stockton, Cal., is one of the pioneer institutions of this city, being established in 1897. On March 1, 1910, George S. Ferguson and Anthony V. Bowers purchased the business, which was of small proportions and which consisted principally of cleaning carpets; during the twelve years of their ownership new departments have been added and it has become a prosperous and well paying business. The company manufacture awnings, mattresses, do upholstery, renovate mattresses, and do all kinds of carpet cleaning, specializing in carpet shampooing, this being done by a special machine. After the carpet has been cleaned, soap is used and the luster brought back, thus increasing the life of the fabric.

Anthony V. Bowers was born on his father's ranch near Stockton, San Joaquin County, Cal., on October 20, 1879, a son of Frank and Mary (Sheehan) Bowers, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Massachusetts. His father sailed around the Horn in 1861 and was one of the early grain farmers of San Joaquin County, his ranch being located on the Waterloo Road, six miles from Stockton. There were eight children in his father's family: Mrs. J. V. Sprengler, Mrs. M. L. Graven, Mrs. J. F. Muldowney, Henry A., Frank E., Charles A., Anthony V., of this sketch, and George W. Both parents have passed away.

Anthony V. was educated in the Greenwood school and was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1898. He is a natural born musician; at the age of six years he began playing the violin and at the age of seven began the study of that instrument, and when thirteen years of age was playing professionally. He has been a teacher of the violin for many years and is now the director of Bowers' Orchestra, which is very popular in Stockton for dances, entertainments, etc. For five years he was a bookkeeper for a local firm and in 1910 bought an interest in the above company, which has proven a good investment. Fraternally he is a member of the Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and the Fraternal Brotherhood; he is also a member of the Stockton Rotary Club. Mr. Bowers' marriage united him with Miss Ella Reynolds, a native of Oakdale, Cal.

George S. Ferguson, the other partner in the above enterprise, is also a native of San Joaquin County, born near Linden on September 8, 1878, a son of William W. and Ida (Prather) Ferguson, the former a native of California and the latter born in Missouri. His paternal grandfather was a native of Illinois and crossed the plains in the pioneer days, settling in Stockton where he conducted the Eureka Bakery. W. W. Ferguson was a grain farmer for many years near Linden and was a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, the N. S. G. W. There were two sons in the family: Elmer S., deceased, and George S., the subject of this review. The father passed away, but the mother still lives on a portion of the old home place near Linden. George S. attended the Linden school and followed farming until his removal to Stockton where he became associated with a carpet company, and in 1910 he purchased an interest in the Pacific Carpet Cleaning Company.

The marriage of Mr. Ferguson united him with Miss Lida Smith, a native of San Francisco, Cal. He is a member of the Junior Order of Mechanics and the Loyal Order of Moose. He owns a twenty-acre fruit ranch at Linden, a part of the home place, which is in full-bearing walnuts, prunes and peaches.

JOHN J. SCHEURER.—A man of good business capacity, John J. Scheurer now holds the responsible position of line foreman with the Western States Gas & Electric Company at Stockton. A native of Kentucky, he was born in Louisville on November 11, 1859, and was taken by his parents, Jacob and Marian Eva (Schuck) Scheurer to Evansville, Ind., where he was reared. His parents were both natives of Germany, the father born in Nassau in 1824 and the mother in Baden in 1830, and they were married in Kentucky on October 30, 1848. Jacob Scheurer, who was a cigar manufacturer and dealer, died at Evansville, Ind., in June, 1897, the mother passing away there in June, 1896, the mother of ten children, four of whom are living.

As a boy John J. Scheurer worked for the Evansville Gas Company as a lamp trimmer; later he became interested in baseball and became the leading player in southern Indiana, and played throughout the southern states in the Southern League as catcher for about five years. In 1882 he joined Sells Bros. circus as boss bill poster, covering 44,000 miles in one season; in 1886 he was with the W. W. Cole circus for one season, then went back to Sells Bros., but when he arrived in Stockton in the winter of 1888, he concluded to end his circus career. He began working for the Stockton Gas Light & Heat Company, now the Western States Gas & Electric Company, being service construction foreman, and is now the oldest employee of the company, having been with them since 1888.

In Stockton, on March 14, 1894, he was married to Mrs. Bertha J. (Fairfield) Barthold, born near Fort Wayne, Ind., a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Thurber) Fairfield, natives respectively of Kennebunkport, Maine, and Quebec, Canada. Grandfather Fairfield ran boats on the Erie Canal and later became a pioneer of Fort Wayne, Ind., Fairfield Avenue in that city being named for him. James Fairfield was a farmer in Allen County, Ind., and there Mrs. Scheurer was reared. Her first marriage united her with C. G. Barthold, and they came to Stockton in 1888, where he worked as an electrician until his death in 1892, leaving her two children: C. G., who is with the Western States Gas & Electric Company, and Bertha Jamesetta, who died February 9, 1917. Mr. and Mrs. Scheurer are the parents of two children, John E. and Cyrus L., who died at the age of two years. John E., who is with the Western Gas & Electric Company, served in Battery C, California, on the Mexican border and afterwards served overseas in the World War. He married Miss Florence Davis and has two sons, Ralph E. and Jack Louis.

Mr. Scheurer is a member of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics and is past counselor of that order; he is a member and past chancellor commander of Charter Oak Lodge, K. P., and belongs to the Knights of Khorassan.

MATTHEW D. FOCACCI.—An enterprising and thoroughly progressive business man of Lodi, who has done much to place and keep his town in the front rank of San Joaquin County cities, is Matthew D. Focacci, the president of the Lodi Shoe Store, Inc., at 10 West Pine Street. He was born here on December 16, 1883, although his parents, John and Maria Focacci, were both natives of Italy. His father came to Lodi in early days, and for some time was in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; and he died in 1896, leaving an unblemished reputation as an honest and intelligently industrious man. Mrs. Focacci is still living, the mother of six children. The eldest is Mrs. Columbia Denevi, John is the second; our subject was the third, and the others are Joseph, Louis and Charles.

Matthew attended the school at Salem, but when Mr. Focacci died, and his widow bought twenty-one acres of raw land, a part of the John Hutchins ranch, the present site of the Emerson School, for $110 per acre, he assisted his mother to improve the place. They put in water, planted a vineyard, and also went in for an orchard and the growing of vegetables; and at the end of the year they were able to sell the property at $700 per acre. This property, since subdivided, is known as the Schroeder Tract, and lots are sold there at as high a figure as $1,200 each—an interesting contrast to the time when the Focaccis were farming the place, and packed their grapes, which they sold for twenty cents a crate, under the trees. They also leased a part of the Girard Tract for farming purposes.

After the ranch was sold, Mr. Focacci decided to enter the mercantile field, so he accepted a position with J. P. Callahan, who conducted a small shoe store on North School Street. There he gained a thorough knowledge of the shoe business, and he then bought out Mr. Callahan, and later with Mr. W. H. Thompson he incorporated the Lodi Shoe Store. In 1914 they removed to their present place of business in the Lodi National Bank Building, where they carry only the highest quality of stock, and have built up a very profitable trade. Mr. Focacci is a graduate of the American School of Practipedics, at Chicago, where he completed a two-year course in 1918; and he has found that his actual experience, as well as his reputation for expert training in shoe-fitting and all that pertains to the foot specialist, has been of great assistance to him. This art of expert shoe-fitting has been in vogue in the finest shops in the East for some years, and Mr. Focacci has the honor of being one of the first to introduce it into California.

At Lodi Mr. Focacci was married to Miss Jennie Beronio, also a native of the town of Lodi; and they have one son, Leslie D. Focacci, who is now two years old. Mr. Focacci is a popular member of Lodge No. 18 of the Eagles, Lodge No. 848 of the Woodmen of the World, and also of the Lodi Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West.

M. D. Trocacci.

MRS. NELLIE WEHR.—A native daughter, Mrs. Nellie Wehr was born in Cherokee, now called Tyler, Nevada County. Her father, Jeremiah Morrison, was a native of Ireland, where he learned the blacksmith trade. He emigrated to New Orleans, La., and there married Miss Isabella Gilday, also a native of the Emerald Isle, born in Donegal, who had come to New Orleans, La., with her uncle. In 1849 or 1850, Mr. Morrison came via Panama to San Francisco, where he followed his trade, and then later made his way to Cherokee, Nevada County, and established himself in the blacksmith's business. His shop came to be the leading establishment in the place in the "days of '49," when they shod oxen as well as horses at the smithy. He died on December 11, 1867. His widow survived him for many years, passing away at Redding, while on a visit, in April, 1906, at the advanced age of eighty-two years. There were five children born to this pioneer couple: Mrs. Mary Huy, who died at Redding; Mrs. Sarah Collins, residing in Redding; Hanora, now Mrs. James Graham, residing in Stockton; Mrs. Isabelle Cuddy, of Southwick, Idaho; and Mrs. Nellie Wehr, of this review.

Nellie Morrison spent her childhood in Cherokee, and there she received a good education in the public schools. Her first marriage took place in Sacramento, and united her with Samuel O. Hurlbut, who was born in New York State. He crossed the plains with his parents in an ox-team train in the early fifties, taking up his residence in Sacramento, and there he attended public school. Soon after the breaking out of the Civil War he responded to his country's call, enlisting on August 29, 1861, in Company F, 2nd Regular California Cavalry, and served until he was honorably discharged at San Francisco, September 24, 1864. He spent several years as a moulder in railroad shops, and thereafter as stationary engineer, until his death at Angels Camp, April 20, 1905. Fraternally, he was a member of the Red Men.

Soon after Mr. Hurlbut's passing, his widow removed to Stockton, where she made her home until her marriage with John Wehr, a native of Wisconsin and a mining man. Mr. Wehr was accidentally killed at the Shawmut mine, April 28, 1909. A son, Warren O., was born to Mr. and Mrs. Wehr. He is a manufacturer of radio instruments in San Francisco. Mrs. Wehr now makes her home in Stockton, surrounded by her many friends, who appreciate her for her many acts of kindness and hospitality.

CHARLES J. SWEEM.—A representative of an old pioneer family who is himself a native son, is Charles J. Sweem, born in Stockton, December 30, 1856, a son of J. B. and Nancy (Blankinship) Sweem, natives of Virginia, who came out in 1847 to Missouri, where they outfitted with ox-teams and wagons and in 1848 started across the plains. Arriving in California, they settled near Stockton and engaged in ranching until 1861, when they removed to Fresno County, and Mr. Sweem built the first flour mills and also took out the first ditch in the county, at Centerville, which was used for water power. He ran the mill until 1876, when he returned to Stockton; and here he and his wife both passed away. This pioneer couple had thirteen children, twelve of whom are living: Franklin, of Merced; John, living in Chico; Charles, of this sketch; Thomas, who died in Arizona; George, a resident of Napa; Jeff, of Oroville; Lee, living in Chico; Stirling and Mrs. Mary E. Riggins, twins, both residing in Stockton; Mrs. Jennie Brown, of Stockton; Edward, of Chico; Fred, of Stockton; and Mrs. Nellie Creason, residing in Richmond.

Charles Sweem remembers Stockton in the early days as a small hamlet, with its sloughs where wild cattle and antelope roamed at will. In 1851 he went to Centerville, Fresno County, with his parents; and there he attended school. He assisted his father in the mill and in time learned the miller's trade, even to dressing the burrs. His father surveyed and took out the first ditch in Fresno County, from three miles above Centerville, and brought it to a bluff sixty feet above the town; and people came from different places to see it, for it seemed he had brought the water up hill. Once the water got beyond control and flooded a large section of the county. Trees afterwards sprang up all over, and thus people's eyes were opened to what could be done by irrigation.

In 1876 Charles Sweem returned to Stockton. He followed farming for a while, and thereafter was employed in various ways. For fifteen years he was with H. B. Riggins. He purchased a lot and built his home at 1725 South Stanislaus Street, where he still resides. Mr. Sweem is now in the employ of the city, having charge of McLeod Lake Park and Tuxedo Park.

He was married in Olympia, Wash., to Lulu Maud Couch, a native of Illinois, and they had seven children: Mary (Mrs. Jorgensen) and Mrs. Annie Purish both died in Stockton of influenza; Emma and Lena are also deceased; Mrs. Goldie Gropner resides in Stockton; Nellie makes her home with her parents; and Charles is a musician and also lives here. Mr. Sweem is a Democrat. Fraternally, he is a member of the Loyal Order of Moose.

PHIL LANDMANN.—The proprietor of the Stockton Hat Works, Phil Landmann has been a resident of Stockton for the past twenty-eight years, and during that time has succeeded in building up a fine business. He was born in Tarnof, Austria, August 27, 1860, a son of Elias and Jennie (Newman) Landmann, both natives of that country. Elias Landmann was a tailor by trade and both parents lived and died in their native land. Three sons and two daughters were born to them.

Phil Landmann attended a private school in Vienna and at the age of fourteen began to learn the hatter's trade, spending four years as an apprentice; he then became stock clerk in a large hat factory in Vienna. In 1881 he left his home and after visiting relatives in Austria and Germany, he traveled through France, Belgium, Holland, and England; he then boarded a vessel bound for America and on August 4, 1881, he arrived in New York, where, for the following eight years, he had charge of the block and shape department for George Brunson & Co., cap and hat works; he arrived in San Francisco twenty-eight years ago, where he went into business on Howard and Polk streets, and in the meantime established a store in Stockton, going back and forth to San Francisco by boat. His first location was at the corner of San Joaquin and Weber streets; then a few years later he removed to No. 12 North California street, and early in the fall of 1922 located at No. 119 North San Joaquin street, where he operates a modern hat shop, which has been incorporated as the Stockton Hat Works.

Mr. Landmann's first marriage occurred in New York City in 1885, which united him with Miss Julia Ancker; she passed away in Stockton in 1914. In 1916, at San Francisco, Mr. Landmann was married to Mrs. Sarah Carssel, a native of Russia, but reared in England. Four children were born to Mr. Landmann by his first wife: Pauline is the wife of Dr. Catts of Stockton; Emile served in the U. S. Army during the World War and is a member of the American Legion; Jennie and Tillie are at home. Mr. Landmann received his U. S. citizenship thirty-six years ago in New York. Politically he is a Republican and fraternally he belongs to the Eagles, Moose, W. O. W. and was treasurer for six years of the Ancient Order of Foresters; he is also a member of the local Chamber of Commerce and the Red Cross.

JACOB ENGELLANDT.—One to whom San Joaquin County is greatly indebted for the active and beneficial work he accomplished is Jacob Engellandt, who was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, August 6, 1851, and at the age of nineteen was drafted for service in the German army, serving until he came to New York City on August 14, 1871. The following year he spent in Washington County, Nebr.; then, on March 1, 1873, he came to Stockton, California. He found employment on the Feck, Rockendorf, Captain Moss, and Pat Elliott ranches, but in 1880 returned to his native country for a few months' visit.

In 1889 Mr. Engellandt removed to Woodbridge, where he farmed for six years, when he returned to Roberts Island and farmed the Levy tract. Twenty-one years ago he bought sixty acres from the George Hury estate, where he made his home until seven years ago, when he retired on account of ill health and removed to Stockton. He passed through the disastrous floods of 1884 and 1886, when the levees broke and the water covered the land, devastating the whole island. The flood of 1886 occurred in January, the storm being accompanied by high winds which almost carried away the small farm house, which consisted of two rooms. That year he had seeded to grain 600 acres, doing all the work himself with his eight-horse team, and all was a complete loss; glad enough were they to escape with their lives.

The marriage of Mr. Engellandt occurred in San Francisco, February 17, 1883, and united him with Miss Mary Elizabeth Mann, a native of London, England, and they were the parents of four daughters: Ida, the wife of A. F. Ruhl, hardware merchant in Stockton; Mabel, wife of H. E. McClure, a dairyman here; Alice, the wife of J. C. McIntosh, proprietor of an electric planing mill here; and Miss Edna Engellandt, who assists her mother in presiding over the home. There are two grandchildren, Bernard Jacob Ruhl and Aileen McClure. Mary Elizabeth Mann was the daughter of Alexander and Elizabeth (Jones) Mann, born in Scotland and Wales, respectively. Her father was a civil and mechanical engineer and brought his family to Erie, Pa., in 1872, and a year later to California, on an early transcontinental train, arriving in San Francisco in the spring of 1873, where he followed civil and mechanical engineering. He died in San Francisco in 1905, his wife having preceded him. He was a prominent Mason for more than fifty years. This worthy couple had two children: Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Engellandt and Mrs. Alice Rice of Oakland. Mrs. Engellandt was educated in the Lincoln school, San Francisco, Fifth and Market Streets, opposite the U. S. Mint, which was burned at the time of the fire in 1906. Mr. Engellandt died on March 16, 1922, his residence in San Joaquin County having covered a period of forty-nine years, during which time wonderful changes had occurred. He was well read and interesting and a faithful student of the Bible, being a member of the Lutheran Church. In 1879 he became an American citizen and no native-born son was more faithful to his allegiance to the Stars and Stripes.

ANTONIO L. SOLARI.—Since 1892 Antonio L. Solari has lived in San Joaquin County, and during that time has become a successful agriculturist. His homestead is situated on Waterloo Road just east of the city limits of Stockton. The land is devoted to an orchard of figs and peaches, interplanted with vegetables and he has gained a most gratifying success from his labors in that direction. He was born in Genoa, Italy, August 16, 1865, and was reared on his father's farm. His father, John Solari, lived to be 103 years old and his mother, Mary Solari, lived to be eighty-three, and during all the years that Mr. Solari has been away from home, he regularly sent his parents in Italy money to take care of them in their declining years up to the time of their passing.

At twenty-seven years of age he left his native land and came to America, borrowing money for his passage and upon arrival in Stockton had thirteen francs in his pocket. He found work on Bert Podesta's ranch on Lower Sacramento Road where he worked for a while, and as soon as he had earned enough money he sent it back to the man from whom he borrowed funds to pay his way to California. Then he went to Calaveras County and worked for John Podesta, where he remained until 1896 when he returned to Stockton and began to work for Tom Gattorno on the Waterloo Road, where he has resided ever since. After three years' work for the latter party he leased land from his employer and followed vegetable gardening for many years and when Tom Gattorno died Mr. Solari took care of his widow until her death, when she willed Mr. Solari the ranch, as she had no heirs. The ranch of 6¼ acres was originally planted to cherries but the trees died and then Mr. Solari planted figs and peaches; then he bought twenty-one acres bare land on the Linden Road which he planted to cherries, peaches and vineyard. This he cultivated for ten years, then sold it at a good profit. From a financial standpoint, Mr. Solari has been very successful, but it has not been accomplished without close application to business. He also owns valuable real estate in Stockton, including a business block on South El Dorado Street which he erected; he has also bought and sold real estate and in this way has made good profits on his investments. In partnership with A. J. Munch, he bought eight acres on the Waterloo Road which they subdivided, and it is known as the Intervale Tract. This tract has all been sold and homes built on it.

The marriage of Mr. Solari united him with Miss Louisa Capello, a native of Genoa, Italy, and they are the parents of one son, Joseph J., a member of the firm of Foppiano & Solari of Stockton. To the type of citizens such as Mr. Solari, the county owes much of its prosperity, for he has done his part as a good citizen in all public enterprises.

PATRICK BRENNAN.—For many years Patrick Brennan was a foremost agriculturist of the Atlanta district of San Joaquin County, and his death on October 9, 1879, when in his fiftieth year, meant a personal loss to the citizenship of the locality. He was born in County Rosecommon, Ireland, in 1829, and there grew to young manhood. He was married in New London, Conn., to Miss Bridget Kelly, also a native of Ireland, born in 1834. Embarking for America in 1852, Mr. Brennan arrived in the United States and located at New London, Conn., where he was married and where the young couple remained for four years; then, in 1856, they started for California, and on September 15 of that year arrived in Stockton, where they spent another five years. Deciding that agriculture was best suited to him, Patrick Brennan bought 320 acres of land eighteen miles southeast of Stockton on the French Camp Road, near Atlanta, where he successfully farmed until he died on October 10, 1879, survived by his wife and seven of their nine children: Frank J.; William J.; Joseph; George (died in youth); John (died in infancy); Henry; Mary Sullivan; George W. and Stephen E., whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. Following her husband's death, Mrs. Brennan managed the ranch and paid off the mortgage and reared and educated her children. This was not accomplished without hardship and privations incident to early day life in California, but her courage and determination to overcome all obstacles resulted in keeping the family home intact and giving all her children a workable education. Five children now survive the mother, who passed away on May 29, 1912, mourned by a large circle of friends, who were loud in their praises of her remarkable force of character and genial disposition. After her death, the home place was divided among the surviving children, and they in turn subdivided their portion, until a number of farms have been made out of the original tract, and under the South San Joaquin Irrigation District have been made to blossom like the rose. Thus one by one the old pioneers of the fifties are passing away, the younger generation assuming the responsibilities of the development and prosperity of the great state of California. Mrs. Brennan was an ardent supporter of St. Patrick's Catholic Church at Atlanta and so remained until her death.

EARL EDWARD BURLINGTON.—A representative citizen, engaged in viticulture in San Joaquin County, is Earl Edward Burlington, who was born in Carson City, Nev., November 13, 1892, a son of Edward and Minnie (Cowing) Burlington. Edward Burlington was a native of Old Boston, England, while the mother was born in Carson City, Nev. Edward Burlington left his home in England and went first to Canada, afterwards to New York, and from there to Carson City, where he conducted a shoe store, and where he met and married Miss Minnie Cowing. Her father, George Cowing, was a native of London, England, and had come to the United States and across the plains to Carson City in frontier days, where he was at one time a deputy sheriff. Earl Burlington is the youngest of a family of three children, the others being Arthur and Nell, now Mrs. Trimmer, residing at Oakland. The father passed away in Carson City, on April 12, 1907, while the mother now makes her home in Oakland.

Earl Burlington attended the Carson City public schools and at odd times assisted his father in the store. After finishing grammar school he entered high school; and then in 1910, removed to Berkeley, Cal., and entered the Van der Nailen Engineering School at Oakland. During his engineering course he practiced engineering in the field, spending five years in the school and in the field in California and Nevada. In 1914 he was duly graduated, and thereafter spent another year at his profession in the two states. He then located at Lodi, where he rented two vineyards, one on Kettleman Lane and the other on Sargent Road, 120 acres in all, on which he had a three-year lease. At the outbreak of the World War he gave up his lease and enlisted in Company A of the 1st California Engineers, on June 8, 1917; later this company was transferred into the 42nd Division and was designated as Company D, 117th Engineers, of the 42nd (Rainbow) Division. This regiment was used in the construction of Camp Fremont. It was then sent to Camp Mills, N. Y., was trained there until October, 1917, and then sailed for France, landing on French soil November 1, 1917, at St. Nazaire. Here his regiment was employed in building barracks, bath houses and other necessary buildings, preparatory to the coming of the American forces. He continued in this work until February, 1918, when his regiment was sent into the Vosges sector near Lunerville, to train for front-line duty. His regiment first worked in connection with the fifth French army, then was transferred to the American Army, and was in action at Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, and Meuse-Argonne No. 1 and No. 2; and at the time of the signing of the armistice the regiment was nearing Sedan. His regiment then marched into the occupation area and was stationed to the left of Coblenz, Germany. Mr. Burlington then returned to the United States, and was discharged on May 18, 1919, at the Presidio, San Francisco, as a sergeant, first class. Returning to San Joaquin County, he rented a forty-acre vineyard about six miles from Woodbridge on the Thornton road, in the Ray school district, where he is still located. Mr. Burlington is a member of the Lodi Growers' and Shippers' League.

On January 4, 1921, in Lodi, Mr. Burlington was married to Miss Jennie Graffigna, a daughter of Andrew J. and Louise (Solari) Graffigna. Jennie Graffigna was born in Lodi, and was educated in the grammar and high school. She graduated in 1914, having majored in commercial work, and was then engaged for some time in bookkeeping. Mrs. Burlington is the fifth in a family of seven children: David; Ida, Mrs. J. D. Graffigna; Emil F.; Anthony J.; Jennie, Mrs. Burlington; Lena; and Julia. Her mother passed away on November 15, 1919; the father is still living in Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Burlington have one son, Earl Edward, Jr. Mr. Burlington is a member of the Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Lodi Aerie, No. 848, Eagles. He is also a member of Lodi Post, No. 22, American Legion; and a member, and at the present time state president, of the California Chapter of the 42nd (Rainbow) Division Veterans. He belongs to the Mokelumne Club in Lodi. Mrs. Burlington is a member of the Lodi Women's Club; the Young Ladies' Institute of Lodi, No. 91; and the Woman's Auxiliary to the American Legion.

LEE R. BURROW.—A typical native son of California, Lee R. Burrow was born at Murphy on August 30, 1880, a son of Thomas J. and Relefe (Dunlap) Burrow, natives of Illinois and Wisconsin, respectively. Thomas J. Burrow was a surveyor and lumberman, who came to California as early as 1872. There were seven children in their family, as follows: Cecil; George, residing at Vallejo; Thomas, living at Jackson; Maude, Mrs. Bunch, of Lodi; Relefe and Lee R., twins, the former being deceased; and Roy, deceased. The father and mother still reside at Murphy, Cal.

Lee R. Burrow attended the grammar school at Murphy, and at the age of eighteen learned the carpenter's trade and worked at various mining camps throughout Calaveras County. He also worked at his trade in Carson Valley, Nev., and in Mason and Antelope Valleys, in California. He then removed to Stockton and spent thirteen years there, part of the time working for Davis, Heller & Pearce.

Mr. Burrow's first marriage occurred on August 26, 1906, at San Andreas, uniting him with Miss Christina Christy, a native of Oakdale, Cal., and a daughter of William Christy; and they were the parents of one son, Randal, now residing at Stockton. His second marriage occurred in Stockton on December 26, 1918, and united him with Mrs. Katherine (Koontz) Thisby, a daughter of that worthy pioneer couple, Henry and Clemence Arabella (Hay) Koontz, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. Henry Koontz came from Illinois to California, and was an early settler in the New Hope section, where he resided until his death. Miss Katherine Koontz was first married to Leonard Thisby, a native son of California, born at Walnut Grove, a son of George and Rebecca Thisby, the former a native of England who came to California in the early days and settled at San Francisco, where his son Leonard was educated. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Thisby made their home in Sacramento, where he was supervisor for one term for the fifth district of that county, and also served as under-sheriff of the county with Sheriff Donnley. Mr. Thisby was a Republican in politics. Fraternally, he was a Mason, Odd Fellow and Elk. He passed away on December 13, 1915. To them were born one son, William Henry Thisby, who married Miss Beatrice Baker; and they have two children, Leonard William and Marian Elizabeth. William Henry Thisby is the foreman on the Fred Villinger ranch at Lodi. Mrs. Burrow received twenty acres from her father's estate, which she improved to Bartlett pears, and two years ago she and her husband moved onto this place, which has since been their home. It is a full-bearing pear orchard, highly cultivated, and has become very valuable. It is irrigated by a ten-inch pump driven by a twenty-horsepower motor. Mr. Burrow is energetic, progressive and practical, and gives his undivided attention to his business affairs, in which he is prospering.

NICK YLARRAZ.—A thoroughly progressive and up-to-date hotel man is found in Nick Ylarraz, the genial proprietor of Hotel Central, located at 124 West Main Street, Stockton. He was born on his father's farm in the Pyrenees Mountains, Spain, July 5, 1883, and his education was obtained in the district schools of his neighborhood and his spare hours and vacation periods were spent in helping on the home farm. When he was twenty-two years old, in 1905, he came to the United States and located in Nevada, where he spent two years herding sheep; then the following six years he herded sheep in Oregon; then he located in Lassen County, Cal., where he worked in a saw mill of the Westwood Lumber Company for three years. He then removed to Reno, Nev., and spent three years in business there. About three years ago he located in Stockton and on November 14, 1919, entered into partnership with Vic Bodaya in conducting Hotel Central, which has proved to be a profitable and successful undertaking. From a business standpoint he has been successful, and at all times he has been straightforward and honorable in all the relations of life.

The marriage of Mr. Ylarraz united him with Miss Felicia Zandeweta, a native of the same country as her husband and they are the parents of one daughter, Theresa.

WALTER SCOTT BUCHANAN.—In 1907 Walter Scott Buchanan took up his permanent residence in Manteca and has been active and progressive in the development of this locality. He is engaged in the real estate and insurance business and the steady progress and success which he has won indicate the persistence and energy of his character. He was born on May 1, 1869, near Shampoeg, Ore., the first capital of Oregon, settled by the French Canadians, and where the territorial legislature assembled before Oregon became a state. His father, John C. Buchanan, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, August 1, 1827. At the age of twenty-one he was graduated from the Edinburgh University as a mining engineer. From Scotland he went to Australia where he followed his profession for five years, then returned to his native land and in 1857 came to America. For six years he was connected with mining in Western Idaho, but later gave it up and engaged in farming in the Willamette Valley, Ore. He married Miss Rosa A. Barnhart, a native of Canada and a niece of Colonel William Cody, known as Buffalo Bill. There are three sons in the family: Walter Scott, the subject of this sketch; John C., Jr., an extensive land owner in northwestern Oregon; and Charles B., who owns and operates the largest warehouse and lumber mill in Oregon, located at Hillsboro. The father passed away in 1898 while the family were residing in Oregon; the mother now makes her home with our subject near Manteca.

The education of Walter Scott Buchanan was obtained in Oregon and in 1884 he entered the Pacific University, where he attended two terms; then he entered the printing shop of Dana Thomas, editor of the Pacific Pharos, and there he spent eight years. On June 13, 1895, he enlisted in the U. S. Regulars, Fourth Infantry Headquarters Company, and was sent to Fort Sherman, Idaho. His regiment belonged to the Fifth Army Corps, the first to be transported to Cuba, and Walter Scott Buchanan was made a sergeant in his company. During his stay on the island he was employed in a printing shop most of the time and while there he became personally acquainted with General Leonard Wood, at that time a colonel in the Fifth Army Corps. In the spring of 1901 he returned to the United States, and after his arrival in San Francisco he reenlisted in the Twenty-ninth Infantry and was made a first sergeant; he was immediately sent to the Philippine Islands on board the S. S. Buford, and his foreign service covered a period of twelve months. His army record includes four enlistments and service up to 1907, when he was honorably discharged at Fort Mason on June 30. He then settled in Manteca and for four years was engaged in development work on the West & Wilhoit vineyard. He then purchased twenty acres and developed it to vineyard, which he has since sold. He owns his home and a small ranch located on the corner of Hogan and Veritas roads three miles south of Manteca.

The marriage of Mr. Buchanan united him with Miss Lucy Keen, and they are the parents of one son, Millard E., who distinguished himself during the World War with the A. E. F., and is the fifth in line since 1812 to serve the U. S. Government. Mr. Buchanan is a Republican in politics and a member of the Manteca Chamber of Commerce and contributes to the local newspapers as a special writer.

CARL C. BUSCH.—A progressive citizen of the Ripon section of San Joaquin County, is Carl C. Busch, who is successfully combining the development of a forty-acre ranch with contracting and building activities. His excellent fruit and dairy ranch west of Ripon demonstrates his characteristics of thoroughness and ability which he has displayed in his career. He was born near Copenhagen, Denmark, on his father's farm, on June 4, 1872, and attended the public school in the neighborhood until he was fourteen years old. At this age he left school to work on the home farm and two years later, when he was sixteen, he was apprenticed to learn the carpenter's trade, in which, from the beginning, he showed particular ability and aptitude for the trade and became a very excellent workman. He remained in Denmark until he was thirty-two years old, then started on a trip to New Zealand on the S. S. Oroya, the voyage consuming fifty-six days. His stay in New Zealand covered a period of two and a half years, during which time he was occupied at his trade of carpenter.

In May, 1907, Mr. Busch arrived in San Francisco and for the following two years he worked at carpentering in the Bay region, meeting with fair success. Concluding to combine his knowledge of agriculture with his trade, he removed to San Joaquin County and settled at Ripon, where he bought his present home place of forty acres five miles west of Ripon, which he has made into a productive fruit, alfalfa and dairy ranch. During his twelve years' residence in San Joaquin County, Mr. Busch has erected the Van Allen district school building, the San Joaquin school building and numerous country and town residences in the Ripon section of the county. He is now erecting the gymnasium for the Ripon Union high school and his excellent workmanship bespeaks for him continued prosperity. His brother, Walter Busch, is married and has a family; he is a rancher three and a half miles west of Ripon where he located in 1919. Both brothers are substantial and progressive citizens and give an active support to all development measures. Mr. Busch became a U. S. citizen in 1914 at Stockton, and since that time has voted the Democratic ticket. Fraternally he is a member of Mt. Horeb Lodge, I. O. O. F.

MRS. JENNIE H. BROWN.—An inspiring example of what an intelligent, experienced, courageous and aggressively progressive woman may do, when called upon to manage farm properties, is afforded by the very enterprising rancher, Mrs. Jennie H. Brown, who cultivates some fifty-four acres in the upper division of Roberts Island, about thirteen miles southwest of Stockton. A native of New York City, she was born in March, 1862, and is a daughter of Edward and Margaret (Bennett) Hewson, who had come to America on their honeymoon from their native County Tipperary, Ireland, in 1861. She accompanied her parents to California in the spring of 1868, or when she was about six years old. Eventually, they had five children, among whom she was the eldest. For many years Mr. Hewson was a prosperous West Side rancher, having early bought a fine tract of land about six miles northwest of Mohr's Landing, now known as Bethany; and did his share to help develop that part of the country. He passed away in January, 1891, at the age of fifty, survived by his widow and five children, and widely esteemed. These children were Jennie, the subject of our story; Lydia, since deceased; William H., now residing at Bethany; George E.; and Mary A., who is the wife of Walter Mowry, of Stockton. Mrs. Hewson continued to manage the old, hospitable home, until she, too, passed away in 1914 at the age of seventy-four.

Jennie Hewson attended the district school and grew to womanhood on the home rancho. At San Francisco, on August 23, 1882, she was married to John C. Brown, the ceremony, performed by the Rev. Robert McKinsey, taking place in the Howard Presbyterian Church. Mr. Brown was born in Scotland, in July, 1847, and was brought to Canada by his parents when he was three years old. They settled at Pittsburgh, and there he was well educated, taking up engineering. In 1862 he came West and established himself as a reclamation engineer in the Delta of San Joaquin County, associating himself with Bixler & Williams; but on marrying, he abandoned his profession for farming.

In 1882, then, Mr. Brown commenced to farm 500 acres on Union Island, and later on he bought land from the Pescadero Grant on Roberts Island, continuing to cultivate the same until his death in 1919. This later purchase was the home place from 1891 until the present day. However, Mr. Brown lived to see his dream realized, and to behold an unhealthy swamp area of Delta lands transformed into one of the richest of ranch properties in the world—a triumph of American foresight and hard, honest labor reflecting the highest credit upon such brave pioneers as Mr. and Mrs. Brown, who struggled together for years against storms and floods. Few men enjoyed a more honored position than that of Mr. Brown in the community, where he so long lived and labored, and where his word was regarded as even better than his bond. For thirty-eight years he was an honored member of Sumner Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Tracy, and he was also a good Mason of fifty years' standing at the time of his demise.

Mrs. Brown shared not only the hard work and the perplexing problems and heavy responsibilities of her husband, but also his success and honors, and today her deepest joy is in the associations afforded by her children, all of whom are a credit both to the family name and the community in which they have grown up. There were ten children: Lydia married A. J. Thompson, a rancher living near Lathrop, and is the mother of two children; Jennie has become Mrs. A. Maggini, and they reside with their one daughter at Stockton; John A. is a rancher at Bethany; Ed H. is a railway mail clerk; and William C. also follows agricultural pursuits; Robert A. also follows ranching but lives at home; Pearl is the wife of F. Tiana of Stockton; her twin sister, Ruby, is deceased; George A. farms on the home ranch; and Hazel, who graduated from the Stockton Business College, is with the Holt Manufacturing Company in Stockton.

HENRY MURLIN COX.—Forty-nine busy years have passed since Henry Murlin Cox came to San Joaquin County, and during those years he has been a witness of and an active participant in the progress and development of the Linden section of the county. Mr. Cox is the youngest of the four Cox brothers who conduct extensive grain farms near Farmington, Peters, Bellota and Linden. He was born at Chatham Hill, Smyth County, Va., July 15, 1849, a son of Andrew H. and Mary (Umbarger) Cox, natives of Smyth County, Va., the former of an old southern family of Scotch and French descent, and the latter of German descent. Andrew H. Cox was born in 1797 and received a fine education in his native state where he became in time one of three senior judges of Smyth County. He was a miller by trade and owned and operated a large mill at Chatham Hill. He passed away in 1872, aged seventy-five. In November, 1874, the mother and children came West to California, arriving in Stockton the same year, which was then a small town. In 1875, Mrs. Cox purchased ten acres of land near Linden for the home place, where they began to farm and within four years added to it until in 1878 they owned 160 acres of choice land. The year 1878 was saddened by the death of the beloved mother, but she had lived long enough to see her family well along the road to prosperity. She left seven children to mourn her loss: Phillip Dodridge served in the Confederate Army, was wounded and also taken prisoner; he died at Linden in 1917; Wyrinda Smyth died in January, 1917; William M., who served as captain in the Confederate Army, died at Linden in 1895; he left a widow, Mrs. Bertha Cox, and four children: William H., Henry F., Mrs. Lillie Welch, and Mrs. Mary Archibald; James B. resides at Linden; John Bell served in the Confederate Army and was wounded and captured; he died February 25, 1923; Andrew Hamilton married Sarah E. Brazelton and resides in Pacific Grove; he has a son, Perry Hamilton; Henry Murlin is the subject of this sketch. The Cox ranches have been conducted by the four brothers working in harmony and they have become independent and wealthy and now own over 1,000 acres of land. During the '80s they raised and supplied the Government with many fine mules and in 1886 sold Borax Smith three eight-mule teams. For the last few years the Cox brothers have leased a great part of their ranch holdings and are enjoying the fruits of long years of agricultural activity.

SVEND OTTO TRONDHJEM.—When S. O. Trondhjem located at Ripon in 1908 there were but six frame structures in the business section of the town, consequently this was a good opening for a first-class contractor and builder. Among the business blocks he has erected are the First National Bank Building, the postoffice and scores of attractive residences throughout the South San Joaquin section. He has also been very successful in his agricultural pursuits, for on his forty-acre ranch he has developed a very productive peach orchard of five acres and the balance of thirty-five acres produces an abundance of alfalfa since irrigation has been developed in the district. He was born in Nyborg, Denmark, February 16, 1881, and by the time he was thirteen years old his school days were over and he began to learn the stone and brick mason and plasterer's trade and followed this for six years in Denmark; he then went to Hamburg, Germany, where he followed his trade for four years in the large cities of central Germany; he then returned to his native country for a visit for a few months; then, believing that greater opportunities for young men to succeed financially were to be found elsewhere, he went to Cape Town, South Africa, where he soon found work and was occupied for four years in contracting and building; then he started for an extended tour and three months were consumed in visiting in Australia, South Sea Islands, Seattle, British Columbia, and in February, 1907, he arrived in San Francisco. He remained in the Bay district about one year and during this time took out his first naturalization papers. In 1908 he located in San Joaquin County, where he bought a forty-acre ranch, a portion of the Thomas Frederick place, two miles west of Ripon, and has developed it into a most productive place.

During 1914, Mr. Trondhjem made an extended trip to Denmark to visit his old home and while there was married to Miss Anna Rasmussen, a native of Denmark and a daughter of Jasper and Mary Rasmussen, farmer folk in Denmark. Mr. and Mrs. Trondhjem are the parents of four children: Rita, Greta, Svend Otto, Jr., and Julia. Besides raising peaches and alfalfa on his ranch, Mr. Trondhjem has a dairy, which he has leased to others for the next three years. During the spring of 1922 he completed his fine modern residence on the outskirts of Ripon, where the family reside and from which he handles all of his contract work. Fraternally he is a member of the Danish Brotherhood at San Francisco, Cal., the Dania Society at Modesto, and the Mt. Horeb Lodge of I. O. O. F. at Ripon.

CHARLES F. COOPER.—A native of Iowa, Charles F. Cooper was born near Charter Oak, June 19, 1897, a son of Charles A. and Olive (Currier) Cooper, both natives of that state. The father was reared on the prairies in his native state and early in life became interested in stockraising; later he became a prominent figure in the livestock markets of St. Louis and Chicago. In 1901 he removed with his family to McIntosh County, N. D., and became an extensive stockraiser; he still owns twelve sections of choice farming land in that state. In 1912 the Cooper family came to California to make their permanent home and located in Sanger, Cal., where the parents now reside.

Charles F. Cooper finished the grammar and Sanger high school in Fresno County, then entered the University of Southern California, where he continued his studies for one year. That fall, on September 1, 1917, he enlisted in the U. S. Marine Corps, Fifteenth Regiment, and served at the Mare Island Navy Yards and at Quantico, Va.; fourteen months later he went to San Domingo where he served for five months, and on February 21, 1919, he was honorably discharged at the Marine Barracks at Quantico, Va.

On May 17, 1920, Mr. Cooper was married to Miss E. Irene Simpson, born at Academy, Cal., a daughter of Marvin Simpson, who married the eldest daughter of Rev. Joel Hedgepeth, the well-known pioneer minister, stock and grain farmer of Academy. Mrs. Cooper received a fine education and is an accomplished and talented woman. In 1912 the property of 420 acres, the home place of the late Richard Draes, was purchased by a group of Fresno county citizens, among them being Charles A. Cooper, the father of our subject. In 1917 Mr. Cooper purchased the interests of the other members and 100 acres was sold, leaving 320 acres which was leased. Later Charles F. Cooper chose agriculture as his field of labors and purchased the present ranch from his father. He set out thirty acres to prunes and plums and uses two tractors and the most up-to-date machinery in the cultivation and development of this ranch. Mr. Cooper has also installed a Sterling deep-well pump and has laid concrete pipe for irrigating his orchards. He is a member of the American Legion and was made a Mason in Valley Lodge No. 135, at Linden. Since his location in Farmington Mr. Cooper has won success and gained for himself the confidence and good will of those with whom he has been associated in relations of friendship and of business.

J. OLIVER COOPER.—A representative of the best interests of his community from the standpoint of public-spirited citizenship and useful activity in industrial affairs is found in J. Oliver Cooper, the efficient towerman for the Western Pacific Railroad at Lathrop, Cal. He was born at Columbus, Ohio, April 18, 1872, a son of Henry H. and Mary (Whitbeck) Cooper, both natives of New York. J. Oliver Cooper is the eldest of three children and the only one residing in California. The parents are now residing in Greene County, N. Y.

J. Oliver Cooper was educated in the grammar and high schools of Greene County until he was fifteen years of age, then went to work in a store at Leeds, N. Y., where he remained for three years; later he worked in a large creamery at Schoharie, N. Y., for three years, and became thoroughly conversant with the creamery business. Later, when he went to Galilee, Pa., he became superintendent of a cooperative creamery and was occupied successfully for three years. In 1902 he resigned his position and came to California, locating first at San Diego and then he went into the Imperial Valley and opened up a creamery business where he remained for three years. Mr. Cooper was active for fifteen years as an expert creamery man, but since 1909, when he came to San Joaquin County, he has been in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Turlock. Due to ill health he was forced to seek outside work, so disposed of his creamery interests and took up railroad work as a member of the section gang. He soon became a foreman and moved to Lathrop where he had charge of eight miles of track on the Fresno division and remained in that capacity for three years when he became identified with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as towerman at Lathrop, his service extending over a period of nine years.

The marriage of Mr. Cooper occurred at Stamford, N. Y., and united him with Miss Ella Sarah Hartwell, a daughter of a New York pioneer, and they are the parents of two daughters: Marjorie, Mrs. W. E. Graham, who has a son and resides at Modesto; and Mildred. Politically Mr. Cooper is a Republican; fraternally he is a Mason. The family reside in a comfortable residence at Lathrop.

DAVIS BROS.—Twelve years ago the Davis brothers came to Ripon for the purpose of establishing a hardware store. The first store building they occupied was of small proportions and as their business has grown three additions have been added until their floor space amounts to 14,800 square feet and the business is steadily increasing each month. Their large success has been realized entirely through their steady industry and good business management. George R. Davis, the senior partner, was born at San Francisco, July 30, 1880, while his brother, Harold T. Davis, the other member of the firm, was born near San Juan, Cal., August 9, 1882. These enterprising young men are sons of Henry Clay and Emma (Thrush) Davis, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of California. Henry Clay Davis accompanied his parents to California in '49, crossing the plains with ox teams in search for gold. They engaged in mining in Nevada County and the young man Henry C. drove stages in the mountains and later in the '80s located in San Joaquin County, where he was employed in Dr. Bentley's store at Woodbridge. Henry Clay Davis married Miss Emma Thrush, a native of Rio Vista, Cal., a daughter of Richard Thrush, now deceased, who came to California in 1849 and engaged in farming. Three children were born to this pioneer couple: George R., Harold T. Davis and Mrs. O. V. Freeman, who resides at Visalia. About 1887 Henry Clay Davis removed to Fresno where he purchased a tract of land about six miles southwest of Fresno, which he developed to orchard and vineyard and the family resided there about twenty years. Mrs. Davis passed away in the Fresno home in 1917. After his wife's death the father removed to Visalia where he makes his home with his daughter, Mrs. Freeman.

George R. Davis received a good education in the schools of Fresno County, graduating from the Fresno high school in 1899, then entered Heald's Business College where he completed a short business course. He then went to Spokane, Wash., where he spent about a year and a half in clerical work, then returned to Fresno, where he took charge of the circulation department of the Fresno Herald, handling it successfully until 1910 when he resigned to enter the hardware business in conjunction with his brother in Ripon. Harold T. Davis, the junior member of the firm, was also educated in the Fresno schools, then was apprenticed to learn the plumbing business at Sacramento, where he served four years, his first wage being three dollars per week, but at the end of four years was an expert plumber. He then went to Goldfield, Nev., where he followed his trade from 1903 to 1908, having charge of plumbing inspection of the Goldfield Hotel and Elks building at that place; later he returned to the San Joaquin Valley and followed his trade in Turlock for two years. In March, 1910, in partnership with his brother, George R. Davis, a hardware and plumbing establishment was opened. For a number of years Harold T. Davis handled the plumbing work himself, but the business has grown to such proportions that he has turned that part of the business over to others and is busy now with the management of his affairs. The Davis Bros. carry the John Deere line of farming implements and the Winchester hardware specialties in which company they are stockholders. They are members of the California State Hardware Association and directors in the First National Bank at Ripon, and Harold T. Davis is president of the Ripon Merchants' Association. Both brothers are prominent lodge members and own valuable property in Ripon.

PATRICK DONELON.—The ranching interests of San Joaquin County are well represented by Patrick Donelon, who for almost a quarter of a century has engaged in grain and stockraising in the Bellota section. His present home place consists of 515 acres seventeen miles east of Stockton, which he conducts as a dairy and stock farm with gratifying results. County Galway, Ireland, was his birthplace and he is a son of Thomas and Catherine (Herbert-Donelon) Donelon, both also born in Ireland.

Patrick Donelon received a good education in the schools of the town of Dunmore, and at seventeen years of age he went to England, where he was employed on a farm in County Cheshire, working for four seasons, each winter returning home to be with his parents. In 1883 he left home for America with passage paid to Sacramento, Cal., and upon his arrival in Sacramento he found work in the Southern Pacific Railroad shops, where he worked for about one year; then he found employment on the passenger steamer Apache, one of the Sacramento River steamers to San Francisco. Mr. Donelon worked as deckhand for four years and as fireman on this steamer for ten years and was oiler for one year. For his efficient service he was given engineer papers as a second-class operator of river boats in California. Mr. Donelon was on this boat at the time of collision in 1885 with the T. C. Walker and received a painful injury in his side and hip, which necessitated remaining in the Marine Hospital in San Francisco for a month. During the years of his service on the Apache he received his U. S. citizenship papers.

Mr. Donelon's marriage in San Francisco united him with Miss Ellen Donelon, born in County Galway, Ireland, who had come to San Francisco in 1893. After their marriage the young couple settled on their ranch four miles east of Bellota, which Mr. Donelon had purchased in 1889. For twenty years they resided on this place, and here all their children were born. They are the parents of five children: Catherine is a graduate of Notre Dame, San Francisco, and for the past two years has been teaching in the Fair Oaks school in Stockton; Mary is a graduate of the San Francisco Normal and Notre Dame and is a teacher in the Elmwood school; Thomas attends the Stockton vocational high school, where he is learning the auto mechanic trade; Agnes and Lucile attend school in Stockton. Five years ago Mr. Donelon acquired the present home place of 515 acres, which he is steadily improving, and he purchased a residence at 1066 North Sierra Nevada Street, Stockton, as a home for his daughters.

For several years he served as trustee of the Douglas school district and at the present time is a trustee of the Bellota school district. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus of Stockton, and has always manifested a public-spirited interest in the general progress and development of his locality.

O. J. GALASSI.—An important branch of interior decorating is that of mosaic and terazzo work in marble and stone and the work along this line done by O. J. Galassi is worthy of creditable mention. He was born in Boston, Mass., February 20, 1880, a son of Francis and Emma (Ferretti) Galassi, born in Rome, Italy. When he was four years old his parents made a trip to their native city on a visit; returning to Boston the father worked at his trade of coppersmith until his death in 1911, aged sixty-three; the mother of our subject resides in Rome, Italy. O. J. Galassi attended school in Italy until he was twelve years old, then accompanied an uncle to Brazil; when he was thirteen years old he worked on a large coffee plantation for his board and lodging, driving an ox-cart about the plantation; later he became a jockey, riding the races. He spent six years in Brazil and then returned to Boston where he learned his trade, working for the Charles E. Old Company for five years; in 1901 he did the mosaic work in the Museum of Natural History in New York, which occupied fourteen months. After completing this work he came to San Francisco and did contract work for the U. S. Government, doing the work in the postoffice building in San Francisco and Portland, Ore. He established headquarters at 1121 Fell Street, San Francisco, and among his outstanding work was the mosaic and terazzo work in the Palace Hotel, Standard Oil Building and the Sub-Treasury Building. In 1915 he permanently located in Stockton and opened his shop at 138 East Sonora Street, modernly equipped to do all kinds of stone and marble work; he has also invented and has received United States and Canadian patents on the Everlasting Sanitary Sink top, perfected after many years of work. It is now being used in most of the modern homes.

The marriage of Mr. Galassi occurred in Stockton November 10, 1907, which united him with Miss Mary Ann Riba, a daughter of Battista Riba. Three children have blessed their union: Francis, O. J., Jr., deceased; and Victor A. Mr. Galassi is a charter member of the Loyal Order of Moose, Stockton, and in politics is a Republican, and is a member of the Stockton Builders' Exchange.

MRS. J. S. GRAHAM.—An enterprising business woman who is the proprietor of the Budd Apartments in Stockton is Mrs. J. S. Graham, a native daughter of the state, born at Cherokee, Nevada County. Her father, Jeremiah Morrison, was an early pioneer of California, and is represented in the sketch of her sister, Mrs. Nellie Wehr.

Mrs. Graham was in maidenhood Hanora Morrison. She spent her childhood in Cherokee, Nevada County, receiving a good education in the local school. It was there her first marriage occurred, which united her with John Gaffette, a native of Belgium, who emigrated with his parents to Iowa, where he lived until he was sixteen years of age. He then crossed the plains to California, and engaged in teaming in the Mother Lode country until his death in 1903. There were four children in their family: Kate, the wife of

P. J. Galassi

T. P. Coughlan, of Stockton; John, who died at thirty-two years of age; Roy, deceased when eight years old; and Percy, who died at eighteen years of age.

Several years after Mr. Gaffette's death his widow married again, the ceremony taking place in Sacramento, when Hanora Gaffette became the wife of James S. Graham, a native son born in Nevada County, a son of James and Alice Graham, California pioneers who settled in Nevada County. Mr. Graham was a mining man in Nevada County. They moved to Stockton in 1906, and there engaged in the hotel business, first as proprietors of the Kansas House and later of the St. James Hotel; and after disposing of this, they became proprietors of the City Hotel, which they conducted until 1922, when it was sold. Soon afterwards Mrs. Graham purchased the Budd Apartments, a modern and popular apartment house, and there they now make their home. Mr. Graham is a popular member of the Loyal Order of Moose.

JAMES FREDERICK SWEEM.—A native son of California whose father came here prior to the days of '49, is James Frederick Sweem, born near Center-ville, Fresno County, March 10, 1874, but reared in Stockton. He is a son of J. B. and Nancy (Blankenship) Sweem, early and worthy pioneers also represented in this volume in the sketch of Charles J. Sweem.

Fred Sweem, as he is usually called by his many friends, was brought up on the farm here and in Oregon, where he attended public school. Returning to Stockton when fourteen years old, he completed his education in the Stockton schools, and when eighteen years old he began teaming. As soon as he was able to purchase an outfit, he began contract teaming and hauling. Adding to his outfit, he branched out into general contracting and excavating, continuing for a number of years, until he sold out. He then spent three years with the Holt Manufacturing Company as a machinist. In 1918 he accepted a position in the park department in the city of Stockton, and is now in charge of Washington Park. He owns a comfortable residence at the corner of Third and American streets, where he resides with his family.

In July, 1899, at Stockton, occurred the marriage of Mr. Sweem, uniting him with Miss Mamie Pulliam, a native of Missouri, who came to Stockton with her parents when a girl and was here reared and educated. Their union has been blessed with five children: Everett, a druggist in Stockton; Leo, a book-keeper residing in Oakland; Otie, attending Stockton high school; and Alma and Earl, attending the grammar school. Enterprising and progressive, Mr. Sweem is interested in having good schools and good government, exercising his franchise as a Democrat. Fraternally, he is a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Red Men.

JOHN A. DUPLISEA.—A farmer and vineyardist living at Lodi, San Joaquin County, is John A. Duplisea, who has been a public-spirited citizen of this section of the state since 1908. He was born in Princetown, Maine, on January 20, 1863, a son of A. J. and Hannah (Byers) Duplisea. The father was a carriagemaker by trade, and was the parent of eleven children, eight of whom are living, John A. being the only one residing in California. Their names are as follows: Tillie, Eileen, Elsie, John A. (of this sketch), Edward W., Frank, Anabelle, Ada, Mande, June and Lou. The father is still living at the age of ninety years. The mother passed away at the age of sixty-eight.

John A. Duplisea received his education in the public schools of his native town, and when he was eighteen years old selected the painter's trade as an occupation. After following his trade at Princetown and various places in New England, he went to Montana and engaged in sheep raising in Dawson County, where he had as many as 5,000 head in one flock, ranging them on government and railroad land. The sheep business occupied him four years. Returning to his native state he again took up his trade and worked for four years. He then returned to Montana, and after living there eight years went to New Brunswick, Canada, where he spent one winter.

The marriage of Mr. Duplisea was solemnized in New Brunswick in 1905, when he was united with Miss Letitia Anderson, a native of that place and a daughter of Charles and Elenor Anderson. Her father was a millwright by trade. Mrs. Duplisea was educated in the schools of New Brunswick. There were five children in the family: Anna, Letitia, Charles, George and Hannah. Her father lived to be seventy-six, and her mother seventy-two years old. In 1908 Mr. and Mrs. Duplisea left New Brunswick for California, and settled in Lodi, where they purchased fifteen acres, a Tokay vineyard, about one-half mile east of Lodi on the traction line. Among the improvements that Mr. Duplisea has put on his home place is an electric pumping plant for irrigating his ranch.

FRED DUTCHER.—Among the more recent accessions to the agricultural class in San Joaquin County is Fred Dutcher, who since 1919 has farmed successfully on his homestead of seventy-seven acres northwest of Woodbridge. He was born near Warren, in Jo Daviess County, Ill., April 6, 1872, a son of John Henry and Margaret Elizabeth (Renwick) Dutcher. When Fred Dutcher was six weeks old his parents moved to Beloit, Kans., where the father homesteaded a quarter-section of land and engaged in general farming pursuits; later he sold his ranch and moved into the city of Beloit. Grandfather Dutcher was an early settler of Illinois. Before the Civil War he settled among the Black Hawk Indians of northern Illinois, and served in the Black Hawk Indian wars. He acquired a section of land and engaged in farming. His farm was well improved; his barn cost about $50,000, and his house was built of black walnut lumber and was splendidly furnished.

Fred Dutcher received only a limited schooling, for he was only eight years old when he left home and became a jockey. He rode for many years for Ed Corrigan, riding in races throughout Texas, Louisiana, and the Southern and central Western states during a period of thirteen years. He was twenty-one years old when he decided to quit the tracks. Thereafter he did all kinds of work through the middle West, and covered a great deal of country in his travels.

On May 20, 1902, at Salina, Kans., Mr. Dutcher was married to Miss Edith Armstrong, a native of Texas, a daughter of Robert and Lucinda (Snody) Armstrong. The young couple resided in Salina until 1909, when they removed to Morgan Hill, Cal.

and Mr. Dutcher found work in the prune orchards of that locality. Afterwards he moved to Coalinga, Cal., and worked on the rotary drilling machines in the oil fields for two years. Then for one year he drove tractors for the Kern Trading Oil Company. Later he was with the San Joaquin Valley Farm and Land Company; and then he moved to Corcoran, Cal., and worked for the El Rico Land Company. He was also employed by the David Jacks Company on their Monterey City ranch, where he remained until six years ago. Then he came to Lodi as foreman for Judge De Vries on his ranch north of Woodbridge, and continued in that capacity for three years.

In 1919 Mr. Dutcher purchased forty-seven acres north of Woodbridge, twelve acres of which is in seventeen-year-old vines. Later he purchased an additional thirty acres near his other property, which was in alfalfa and unimproved land. He runs a dairy of thirty-three head. His ranch is equipped with a seven-inch pump driven by a fifteen-horsepower motor, for irrigation. Sound judgment, industry and strong purpose are salient features of Mr. Dutcher's business career, and these constitute the basis of his prosperity.

BRUCE R. DU VALL.—Classed among the successful business men of Ripon is Bruce R. Du Vall, the owner and proprietor of the Ripon Lumber Yard and mill, and in addition to furnishing lumber, his mill turns out the finished material for completed buildings. He was born and reared in the vicinity of Minto, N. D., and was fortunate in receiving a good education. His education began in the grammar schools of Minto, then three years in the high school of that place, and one year in high school in Chicago, then two years in Baltimore, Md. In 1908 he entered Cornell University, taking a course in mechanical engineering, where he remained for three years. At this time he was offered a good position with a manufacturing company at Roselake, Idaho, where he was employed for the next three years. In 1914 he came to California as assistant manager of the Ripon Lumber Company, then owned by Mr. Steele, who resides in Modesto.

The first marriage of Mr. Du Vall occurred at Ripon which united him with Miss Rhoda Strome, also born at Minto, N. D. She was a graduate of Castle School for young women at Tarrytown, N. Y., and in 1908 accompanied her parents to California. She passed away at the family home in Manteca in January, 1919. Mr. Du Vall removed to Manteca in 1916 where he purchased the Home Lumber Company. The business grew from the time he acquired it and he erected a fine home and was well satisfied with the business outlook. During the influenza epidemic, Mr. Du Vall was taken ill and his life despaired of, and at this time his wife passed away with the dread disease. Recovering from his severe illness, Mr. Du Vall sold his business and home and returned to Ripon where he became employed with the Ripon Lumber Yard and in 1921 purchased a controlling interest in the company. In June, 1920, Mr. Du Vall was married to Mrs. Helen Gotshall, widow of Karl A. Gotshall, who passed away in 1919, survived by his widow and two sons, Robert and Paul Gotshall. Karl A. Gotshall was the proprietor of the lumber yards at Ripon and was also engaged in the stock business. Mr. Du Vall is a member of the Masons at Manteca and the Mt. Horeb Lodge of I. O. O. F., and locally is a member of the Ripon Merchants' Association. Besides his lumber and mill business at Ripon, Mr. Du Vall owns a thirty-acre vineyard north of Manteca. As a public-spirited citizen, he has interested himself in community progress and welfare and is doing his full share in the work of industrial development in his locality.

VITTORIO LAGORIO.—An orchardist whose well-earned success has made him an influential citizen is Vittorio Lagorio, who was born in the province of Genoa, Italy, May 8, 1866. He was a son of Angelo and Teresa (Russio) Lagorio, farmers near Genoa. Of their eight children, Vittorio was the fourth in order of birth. He was raised on the home farm and was educated in the local schools. He was nineteen years old when he left his home in Italy for America, to join his brother, Louis, who had come seven years previously. Arriving in Stockton on April 4, 1885, he began to work at anything that would earn him a livelihood, then went to San Francisco, where he worked in a sugar refinery for one year. He then went to Washington, where he bought a team of horses and was engaged in construction work on the railroad building out of Pt. Townsend, receiving $50 a month for himself and team. Returning to California, he came to Stockton in 1892 and purchased a fourteen-acre ranch in the Elmwood district on the Copperopolis road, which he developed into a profitable orchard and vineyard. Later he purchased thirty acres of the Charles Haas ranch on Bishop Lane, which he also set out to vineyard and orchard, later adding thirteen and three-quarters acres, on which he has built a fine residence. The chief crops produced on his ranch are apricots, peaches, and cherries, while between the trees he raises fine vegetables for the market in Stockton. He also owns a half-interest in a ranch of 196 acres near Peters, where they have planted a twenty-acre vineyard, and will rapidly set the whole acreage to vines. Mr. Lagorio has great faith in the future of San Joaquin County lands and Stockton real estate. He owns a business building on Washington Street, which he leases.

On October 5, 1896, Mr. Lagorio was married to Miss Annie Sanguinetti, born in Stockton, a daughter of Angelo Sanguinetti, an honored pioneer whose sketch also appears in this work. Mrs. Lagorio, a devoted wife and mother, passed away May 20, 1914, leaving him six children: Emily, a graduate of Heald's Business College, and now bookkeeper in the Commercial & Savings Bank of Stockton; Mary, who makes her home with her father; Angelo, educated at Heald's Business College, and now a partner with his father in farming and fruit-raising; Lorraine, a graduate of Heald's Business College, now employed as stenographer for C. H. Vance, attorney-at-law; Romildo attending Stockton high school; and Vittorio, Jr., still in grammar school.

In 1918, Mr. Lagorio made an extended trip to his old home in Italy, visiting his friends and the scenes of his boyhood days. While there he was married a second time, being united with Laura Camera, who was born in the vicinity of his old home. Returning to his Stockton ranch, he again took up farming. In 1923 he completed a residence at 2020 North Center Street, Stockton, where he now resides, having turned over the management of his ranches to his son Angelo. He rightly retains a love for the land of his birth but he is loyal to the institutions of his adopted country and his interests center in the land of the Stars and Stripes, and particularly in California, where he has steadily worked his way upward.

THOMAS C. EVANS.—A worthy representative of the early California pioneers is Thomas C. Evans, a highly respected citizen of Stockton, who is now living retired at his beautiful home located at 145 Sperry Street, where he has resided for the past fourteen years. He was born in Carmarthenshire, Wales, May 24, 1849, and his father died when he was one year old. Subsequently his mother was married to Henry V. Moore, also a native of Wales, and in 1852 they came to America settling near Salt Lake City, having crossed the plains by ox-team thither. Mr. Moore was engaged in mining and prospecting for several years. In 1859 the family removed to Carson City, Nev., where Mr. Moore was employed on the construction of a tunnel through the mountains from Jacks Valley to Washoe Valley. In 1860, Thomas C. Evans came with his mother to California, settling in the Linden section of San Joaquin County, where they resided for two years, then were joined by Mr. Moore, and the family then removed to Contra Costa County to a ranch at the foot of Mt. Diablo, where Mr. Moore raised stock and successfully farmed for a number of years; later the family returned to San Joaquin County and in 1897 Mr. Moore passed away at Lockeford. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Moore, three daughters and three sons. After her husband's death Mrs. Moore removed to Stockton and later to Oakland, where she lived until she passed away in 1906.

At Stockton, October 11, 1874, Mr. Evans was married to Miss Katherine Hoerl, a native of New York City, a daughter of Frantz and Lona (Kramer) Hoerl, both natives of Germany, who came to America in the late '50s. Mrs. Evans has three brothers; Joseph resides in Stockton, Henry resides near French Camp and John Hoerl at Lodi, all ranchers. The Hoerl family emigrated to California via Panama in the early '50s, and both parents passed away many years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Evans are the parents of three children: Gertrude died at the age of nine years, Gilbert died at the age of two years, and Thomas Herbert is married to Miss Mary McAdams, and has seven children; he is a rancher and conducts the Ellsworth farm on shares with his father; he is a prominent member of the Eagles in Stockton.

In 1880 Mr. Evans removed to Stockton, where he built and conducted a hotel at Collar and Elbow, Roberts Island, in the early reclamation period of the Delta district; he also built several similar places, one at Holts on the middle division of the island and one on Waterloo Road just outside of Stockton, engaging in this business until 1887, when he entered the sheep dipping business. He built and conducted the sheep dipping plant on the edge of Roberts Island near Stockton where during the first season more than 120,000 sheep were dipped; he also cared for large herds of sheep on shares, but after two severe winters when he suffered financial reverses he gave up the sheep business and turned his attention to farming in the Delta, where he made considerable money. For ten years Mr. Evans conducted the club rooms of the Grand Central Hotel in Stockton and in 1896 built the Wallace Hotel at Wallace, Calaveras County, at that time the terminus of the Sierra Nevada Railroad, which he conducted for six years; he also built hotels at Dogtown, Ringer and Elliott, which he ran for a few years, then sold to good advantage. Meantime, Mr. Evans has carried on farming in which he is still active, owning a choice grain farm in the Ellsworth district, which is managed by his son, Thomas Herbert. Mr. Evans is affiliated with the Stockton Lodge of Red Men.

JULIUS E. ENGLANDER.—A representative member of the agricultural class which has made the San Joaquin Valley one of the most prosperous farming districts in the state of California, is Julius E. Englander. He is a pioneer of Union Island, where he began his farming operations in 1880, forty-three years ago, and his long residence and experience in Delta farming have made him prominent and influential in the development and advancement of this portion of the county, a citizen of more than ordinary degree of public spirit and personal worth. He is a native son of California, born in San Francisco, June 7, 1856, the eldest of six children born to Aaron and Minnie (Pink) Englander, both natives of Germany. Aaron Englander left his native country for America in 1849, arriving in San Francisco, then called Yerba Buena, the same year, having crossed the plains with ox-teams and wagons with two brothers, Leopold and Max. He opened the first confectionery store on Second Street, which he conducted for two years when he sold out and removed to Marysville, bought land and engaged in farming, producing large crops of broom corn, which he exhibited at a state fair in 1856, receiving therefor the first banner and medal ever given for this product. In 1858 he returned to San Francisco, where he opened a commission house on Battery Street, continuing until his death in 1868, aged fifty years. Six children were born to this worthy pioneer couple of whom only two survive, Julius E., the subject of this review, and Samuel, superintendent of wharves in San Francisco. Aaron Englander was a prominent member of the Masons, Odd Fellows and Red Men in San Francisco.

Julius E. Englander was reared and educated in San Francisco, and early in life learned lessons of industry and thrift and while still a young boy was employed in various stores and spent his evenings at home in study. He remained in San Francisco until 1873 when he removed to Livermore where he was employed on the Watts stock range for three years. In 1877 he was married to Mrs. Mary Phelps, widow of William Harrison Phelps. There were two children in the Phelps family, William and Ella May. Mr. and Mrs. Englander are the parents of four children: Arthur Garfield, Maude C., Mabel M., and Ethel L., all natives of San Joaquin County. In the fall of 1880 the family removed to Union Island where Mr. Englander engaged in general farming on the Pescadero grant, remaining there for seventeen years when he removed to Hanford and farmed for five years. With the exception of three years spent in San Francisco, Mr. Englander has been a continuous resident of San Joaquin County since 1907, when he entered the employ of the Bixler Farms and fourteen years ago he became foreman of the Canal ranch, where he carries on dairying, stockraising and general farming. He makes his home on the historic Kidd ranch fifteen miles southwest of Stockton. He is active in the affairs of the Democratic party and serves on the election board.

H. W. EKHOLM.—An enterprising citizen who has been identified with the Escalon district of San Joaquin County since 1910, when he purchased a forty-six-acre tract, is H. W. Ekholm, who developed his place to fruit and alfalfa, and is now leasing it while he is engaged in carrying mail out of Escalon. He was born near Rock Island, Ill., January 16, 1876, a son of Peter Ekholm, whose mother was Annie (Petersen) Ekholm. Peter Axel Ekholm was born in Sweden, August 11, 1852, and by the time he was twelve was making shoes in his father's shop in Sweden, a trade he followed until he was twenty years old, when he left home and boarded a west bound vessel at Gottenburg, and on September 9, 1872, landed in Quebec, Canada; from there he went to Orion, Henry County, Ill., and soon thereafter he was married to Miss Julia B. Peterson, also a native of Sweden, who had come to America in 1872. From Illinois, Peter Ekholm removed to McPherson County, Kansas, in 1880, where for thirty-two years he engaged in farming and stockraising. In 1912 the family came to California settling at Escalon, and Mr. Ekholm lived retired until the time of his death on December 3, 1922. Here as in every other place where he had ever lived he gained the friendship and respect of all who knew him and his death brought deep sadness to the entire community.

H. W. Ekholm accompanied his parents to Kansas when he was a small boy and received a good education in the public schools of that state, then in 1908 completed a business course at Quincy, Ill. He then removed to Salt Lake City, Utah, where he entered the employ of a large machine and wagon factory, remaining with them about one year, when he took the civil service examination and received an appointment to a position at Vallejo, Cal., where he worked for two and a half years for the Government.

While residing in Salt Lake City Mr. Ekholm was married to Miss Amanda O. Edenburg, a native of Kansas, the daughter of Peter and Matilda (Lundquist) Edenburg of Lindsborg, Kans. Mr. and Mrs. Ekholm are the parents of three children: Paul, Ruth and Carl, all students in the Escalon public school. In 1910 Mr. Ekholm bought forty-six and a half acres, partly improved, near Escalon, and two years later moved his family to the ranch and until 1916 was engaged in raising fruit and alfalfa. Again Mr. Ekholm entered the service of the Government and since 1916 has been employed in carrying the mail on a rural route out of Escalon. The family reside in a fine home at the corner of French Camp Road and Raymond Avenue and are active members of the Lutheran Church at Escalon, of which Mr. Ekholm is a trustee.

ESCALON UNION HIGH SCHOOL.—San Joaquin County owes much of its progress, especially the rapid increase of its population, to its excellent institutions of learning, for where there are good educational facilities there the homeseeker will settle. Among the more recent institutions of learning is the Escalon Union high school, which was completed and opened for the second semester of the school year on March 15, 1922. Realizing the importance of having a high school in Escalon, a number of the prominent and progressive citizens started the movement for one in 1917. Two elections were held, at which it was voted down by the citizens of that section; however, a special election was called in the district and a board of trustees were selected as follows: W. L. Combs, as president of the board; H. H. McKinney; H. Louis Morgenson, clerk; Otto Peterson and G. R. Smith. Five districts were represented in the general election, namely, Van Allen, Burwood, Enterprise, Lone Tree, and Four Tree, and in May, 1919, the high school was founded and the original officers comprising the board of trustees are still serving. On July 16, 1919, the board held their first meeting at Escalon and the following September high school was opened in the Jones residence, offering a two-year course in charge of two teachers, F. W. Denny serving as principal for two years. The other teacher during the first year was Miss Anna von Glahn, who resigned during that year and was succeeded by Miss Mildred Orr. During its second year the school had five teachers. Prof. Oliver Irons is now principal over six teachers. On May 5, 1921, an election was held to vote bonds for the erection of a suitable building and the bonds carried for $85,000. Bids were opened on August 2, 1921, and on August 30, 1921, the contract was let to John Madsen of Ripon who used every effort to hasten the completion of the building and the work progressed so well that on March 15, 1922, the services of dedication were held with F. W. Wurster of Stockton in charge of the program, the principal speaker of the occasion being Dr. Tully C. Knoles, president of the College of the Pacific. The standard four year high school course is maintained with a corps of eight teachers and at the present time there are 100 students and as the Escalon section expands the building will still be adequate to care for the students from the districts adjacent to Escalon. The board of trustees hold bi-monthly meetings and have the full confidence and cooperation of the entire public and Escalon is to be congratulated on the substantial and handsome high school building and for the students that traverse its halls and for the progressive and far-seeing citizens and friends that made possible such an institution.

FRANK ESHBACH.—Among the efficient members of the Stockton police department is Frank Eshbach, sergeant of the identification department of the police force, his duties including the taking of finger prints and photographs. He is a native son of Stockton, born January 10, 1866, a son of Henry and Madaline (Robert) Eshbach. Henry Eshbach was born in Switzerland, and came to the United States and settled in a French colony near New Orleans in the '40s and in the early '50s came to California; the mother was born in Alsace-Lorraine, near Strasbourg. Two children were born to this pioneer couple: Frank and Henry. Henry Eshbach, the father of our subject, followed the carpenter's trade in Stockton and later ran a dairy. He owned a tract of land northwest of Stockton, which later became known as the Meyers tract. Frank Eshbach attended the Stockton grammar and high schools and subsequently took a commercial course. At twelve years of age he took his first job in a cigar store, working at odd hours and during summer vacation; then he worked in the jewelry store of Charles Haas and thoroughly learned the jewelry business. He removed to Portland, Ore., where he worked at his trade for four years, then on account of failing health he returned to Stockton, where he established the plating works, now known as the California Plating Works; he sold this business to Levy Bros. in 1908. Twelve years ago he became identified with the Stockton police department, where he has shown his capabilities to a marked degree.

The marriage of Mr. Eshbach occurred in San Francisco, June 2, 1897, which united him with Miss Lucy E. Benjamin, a native of Stockton and a daughter of C. D. Benjamin. Mrs. Eshbach received her education in the Stockton grammar school and the Dolores Convent in San Francisco. Two children have blessed this union, Katheryn V. and Francis H. Mr. Eshbach is a veteran of the National Guard and held the commission of lieutenant in the Signal Corps of the National Guard; he was captain of the Washington National Guards, and also captain and aide-de-camp on Brigadier-General Lehe's staff, and was also rifle inspector in the same command. After the close of the Spanish-American War he was deputy county recorder of San Joaquin County. He is a Democrat in politics and fraternally is a member of Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., of Stockton, and Mrs. Eshbach is the president of the Ladies' Catholic Aid Society.

STEPHEN D. HILDEBRAND.—The name of Stephen D. Hildebrand is closely connected with the history of pioneer days in California, for he was but a lad of nine years when his parents came to the West. He was born in Indiana, on March 10, 1844, a son of Abraham W. and Matilda (Heck) Hildebrand, both of Holland ancestry, who settled in Pennsylvania. Later the parents removed to Indiana, and were early settlers in that state; in 1848 they removed to Iowa, and remained there until 1853, when the family crossed the plains to California, taking seven months to complete the journey from Muscatine. They came via the Salt Lake route and Strawberry Valley into California. The father, Abraham W. Hildebrand, engaged in mining in the placer mines at Shaws Flat; but not meeting with much success, he removed to Santa Clara County, located near Gilroy, and engaged in stockraising and grain farming there.

The education of Stephen D. Hildebrand was obtained in the school in Gilroy. When he was twenty years old he went to work in a dairy and later he conducted a dairy of his own near Gilroy. During 1874, he left for Calaveras County, where he purchased a sixty-five-acre grain and fruit ranch near Milton; his residence on this ranch covered a period of forty years. In 1913 he disposed of his holdings at Milton and removed to his present home three miles northeast of Lodi. His place consists of twenty acres, twelve acres in vineyard, five acres in orchard and the balance in alfalfa. His property is improved and is irrigated by a four-inch centrifugal pump propelled by a ten-horsepower engine.

In Stockton, California, on February 22, 1870, occurred the marriage of Mr. Hildebrand and Miss Ella Powers, a daughter of Richard Powers. Her parents came to California across the plains to Salt Spring Valley, Calaveras County, in 1854. Mrs. Hildebrand received her education in Tuolumne City.

When she was five years old, her mother passed away in Salt Springs Valley. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Hildebrand. Irene, the widow of William H. Dickhaut, is teaching school in Butte County; Desse is Mrs. Thomas Gill, and resides at Stockton; Stephen R. is interested with his father in the ranch, and assists in operating the place. Mrs. Hildebrand passed away on January 22, 1912. While residing in Milton, Mr. Hildebrand was road master for four years. Fraternally he is a past master of Keystone Lodge No. 161, F. & A. M., at Milton, being master of the lodge for four years.

MRS. AMELIA E. HOLLENBECK.—Since 1870 Mrs. Amelia E. Hollenbeck has resided on her fine ranch home of 236 acres, near Stockton, on the Sonora Road, and in all respects is a representative citizen of California. She has manifested unusual skill and executive ability in the management of her business interests since her husband's death, and one would be safe in saying that she has not had a superior as a rancher among the women of the state. Her land is kept under the highest state of cultivation, and for many years she gave her personal attention to most of the details of her property interests, but now is content to transfer the responsibility to her son William. She was born in Livingston County, N. Y., March 8, 1840, a daughter of Ambrose D. and Rebecca L. (Everett) Taggart, her father a native of Pennsylvania and her mother of New Jersey. Her grandfather, William Taggart, was a Revolutionary soldier, and the Taggart family is said to be of Scotch-Irish lineage. Amelia was reared in Livingston County at the village of Danville, and through a portion of her youth lived in other sections of New York state until she was twelve years old. She then accompanied her parents to Three Rivers, Mich., where she grew to womanhood and there she became the wife of Josiah M. Griffin in 1862. By this marriage she had a daughter, Lenore B., who is now deceased. Her first husband volunteered his services to the Union during the rebellion and lost his life during the Civil War.

In 1864 Mrs. Griffin accompanied her parents and other members of the family on their migration to California, the trip being made by the Panama route. From San Francisco they came to Alameda County, and thence after a short residence they moved to San Joaquin County in 1868, where her parents took up their abode near Stockton and lived there throughout the remainder of their lives. In 1869 she was united in marriage with John Hollenbeck, who was born in New York State, December 12, 1834. After their marriage they located on the ranch where Mrs. Hollenbeck still makes her home, and he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death, which occurred in 1874. They were the parents of four sons: William married Miss Amanda Jarvis of Stockton and they have four children—Everett, Claude, Robert and Elva; Walter F. is a rancher residing near Waterloo; Howard P. farms near Collegeville; and John A. is also a rancher. Six years ago Mrs. Hollenbeck divided the fine old homestead equally among her sons; however, she retains a life interest and continues to make her home on the ranch, where she has continuously resided for over a half century. She has been a staunch member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stockton throughout her residence in the county. Mrs. Hollenbeck has pioneered in San Joaquin County, and the comforts of life she now enjoys have been well earned, and she is held in high esteem by old and young alike.

WILLIAM FRANK HOLBROOK.—Foreman of construction of roads and bridges in San Joaquin County, William Frank Holbrook was born at Bristol Station, Kane County, Ill., December 23, 1874, a son of I. W. and Sarah (Huffman) Holbrook. His father was a farmer and a cooper by trade and in 1889 came to California, first settling in Stockton, then later he removed to Hayward, where he passed away at the age of seventy-two. He served in a company of cavalry during the Civil War. The mother of our subject lives in Campbell, Cal., aged seventy-four years. William F. Holbrook had little opportunity for an education, having to make his own living at twelve years of age, working at odd jobs on ranches in the neighborhood of his home.

On November 9, 1894, in Oregon, Mr. Holbrook was married to Miss Ella Thompson, a native of Indiana, a daughter of David and Mary (Smith) Thompson. In 1904 he came to Stockton to reside and found employment at the Stockton Iron Works, where he remained for three years. In 1907 he removed to Oakland, where he learned the carpenter trade and remained there for three years, when he returned to Stockton. At the time the county highway commission was first formed he became foreman of bridge construction, then he spent one year as foreman of construction for the State Highway Commission and since that time has been employed by the county in road construction. Mr. Holbrook has owned a number of ranches throughout the county, which he later disposed of to good advantage. At one time he owned a twenty-acre tract of the Joshua Cowell estate at Manteca. Two years ago he moved into his commodious new home located at 414 West Acacia Street, where he and his wife and adopted daughter, Mildred Thompson, reside. In politics he is a Republican.

MRS. J. BELLE (HOLMAN) HOBRON.—A native daughter of California and a woman well known in educational circles, is Mrs. J. Belle Hobron, principal of the Greenwood school on the Waterloo Road. She was born in Wallace, Calaveras County, the daughter of William E. and Anna E. (Miller) Holman, both natives of the Golden State. Her grandfather, Ira Holman, was a California pioneer and for many years he farmed land he had purchased from the Government. The ranches owned by Ira and William Holman adjoined and are located partly in San Joaquin County. Ira Holman lived to reach the age of ninety-one years.

William E. Holman was born on the ranch owned by his father and on that same ranch all of his children first saw the light of day. They are: J. Belle, Mrs. Hobron; Dora became the wife of H. P. Sullivan and lives in Sacramento; Bertha E. married Charles Murdock and resides in Stockton; Frances E. is Mrs. Fred Levy of Stockton; Clarence A. is also a resident of the slough city; Jesse L. resides at Marysville; Frank E. lives at Wallace; Mabel E. married Joseph Chirhart and lives in Lodi; Luther W. makes his home in San Francisco; and Velma A. also resides there.

J. Belle Holman attended the Wallace grammar school and the Ione high school, then took a course at Chestnutwood Business College in Santa Cruz, after which she engaged in teaching in San Joaquin and Calaveras counties. She was married at Stockton, on January 20, 1901, to George C. Hobron, born in Coulterville, Cal., a son of Cornelius and Emily Hobron; the former owned and operated a lumber mill at Coulterville in partnership with a brother. In early life he had been a seafaring man. When George C. was a lad of four, his parents moved to San Francisco, and two years later settled at Santa Cruz, where the father lived a retired life and where later George C. conducted a stationery store. In 1910 Mr. and Mrs. Hobron removed to Wallace, Calaveras County, and Mr. Hobron farmed for a year and Mrs. Hobron taught school; next they moved to Murphys and Mr. Hobron took up assaying, and the next year they returned to Wallace and he was engaged in mining, continuing until he became an employee of the Southern Pacific Railroad as station agent at Turlock; one year later he was transferred to Wallace in the same capacity. In the meantime Mrs. Hobron engaged in teaching at Wallace.

Resigning her position at Wallace, Mrs. Hobron again taught school in San Joaquin County during the war. After the war Mr. Hobron was again employed at mining with the American Gold Dredging Company at Wallace and his wife took up educational work in the Wallace schools. In 1921 Mr. Hobron accepted a position as shipping clerk with the California Packing Corporation at Stockton and upon their removal to Stockton Mrs. Hobron became principal of the Greenwood school. She is a charter member of Geneva Parlor, N. D. G. W., at Comanche, Cal., and when she went to Santa Cruz she joined the Santa Cruz parlor and in time served as district deputy grand president of Santa Cruz, Monterey and San Benito counties. She was a member of the board of education in Calaveras County for two terms. Mr. Hobron is a member of the B. P. O. Elks, No. 826, of Santa Cruz, and both are staunch Republicans in politics.

MRS. HATTIE E. HUNTLEY.—Among the pioneer women of San Joaquin County, is Mrs. Hattie E. Huntley, who resides in the Lone Tree district about four miles northeast of Escalon, where she owns an excellent ranch of 120 acres, all under cultivation. She is a good business manager, and since the death of her husband she has most creditably borne the obligations and duties laid upon her. She was born in Iowa, July 6, 1856, a daughter of Calvin S. Thornton, and she was a small girl of five years when her family left Iowa for California. The night before the emigrant train was to leave, the rebel soldiers stole all the horses belonging to the party, which delayed them for two weeks. Calvin S. Thornton and his family reached California in the fall of 1862 and located near Linden, where he farmed for two years to grain and stock; in 1864 he removed to a ranch on the Sonora Road in the Lone Tree school district, where Mrs. Huntley now makes her home. Here Mr. Thornton took up Government land when there were only three families in the district and Mrs. Thornton taught the first school, having twelve pupils. Calvin S. Thornton proved up on eighty acres, which he farmed to grain. Three sons and two daughters were born to this worthy pioneer couple: Oscar, a Civil War veteran, came around the Horn to California in 1867 and now resides in San Francisco; Julius E. is deceased; J. Milan resides in Escalon; Mrs. Ada Hall resides at Salida; and Hattie E. Huntley is the subject of this sketch. For many years Mr. Thornton was a trustee of the Lone Tree school district and was otherwise connected with the growth and development of his locality; he passed away at the home place, February 2, 1894, Mrs. Thornton surviving him until September 28, 1904.

On April 5, 1877, Miss Hattie E. Thornton was married to Edwin Everett Huntley, a native of Ione, Cal., born May 14, 1854, the eldest son of Lyman and Matilda (Brown) Huntley. Lyman Huntley crossed the plains with ox teams in 1850 and located in El Dorado County, where he engaged in mining. After their marriage, the young people located on a farm near what is now known as Riverbank, where Mr. Huntley continued his farming pursuits. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Huntley: Dora is the wife of Fay Thornton, and they have two daughters and reside at Escalon; Idelete, Mrs. James Beasley, resides in Modesto and has six children; Lyman L. is married and has five children, and is a rancher residing in the Lone Tree school district; Effie, Mrs. Charles Miller, passed away February 13, 1914, leaving one son, Roy; Hattie E., Mrs. Garvey Donahue, has one daughter and resides at Arvin, Cal.; Estella, Mrs. George Hill, has two sons and they reside at Knights Ferry; John Huntley is an adopted son and is now the manager of the home place. Mr. Huntley passed away on March 26, 1921. Following her husband's death, Mrs. Huntley took up her abode on the old Thornton home place and is active in its management. This ranch consists of 120 acres, ten acres of which is in vineyard and the balance is devoted to raising alfalfa and corn, and to a fine dairy maintained on the ranch. Mrs. Huntley is an active member of the United Brethren Church at Riverbank.

DELLIVAN CAMERON INGRAM.—Since 1899 Dellivan Cameron Ingram has made his home in California. Fourteen years ago he located in San Joaquin County, and most of his time since then has been given to agricultural pursuits. He was born in Saunders County, Nebr., April 24, 1876, a son of Daniel Cameron and Mary (Hurt) Ingram. Daniel C. Ingram was a farmer in Nebraska, where he owned a quarter-section of land. He was twice married, and Dellivan Ingram is one of six children of the first marriage: John L., Ada, Anna, William, Dellivan Cameron, and Mary (deceased). Subsequent to his wife's death, Daniel C. Ingram married again, and by his second wife he had eight children, namely: Benjamin was deputy constable at Tracy and was killed while discharging his duties, Winfield, Daniel Margaret, Rhoda, Georgia, James, and Hattie Pearl. The father lived to be seventy-six years old and the mother died at the age of seventy-four.

Dellivan C. Ingram received a public school education in his native state, and at an early age began to make his own way in the world, working on various farms. In 1899 he came with his parents to Fresno County, Cal., where for nine years he found work in the logging camps. In 1908 he located in San Joaquin County, and became foreman for Robert Boyce on his ranch northwest of Woodbridge, remaining nine years. Then for three years he was foreman for C. A. Belli on his large ranch near Woodbridge. He then took up his duties as superintendent of the J. V. Bare ranches, 320 acres in one and 130 acres in the other, all in fruit, vineyard, alfalfa and grain. Here he has under his supervision from eight to fifty men, according to the season.

On March 12, 1904, at Stockton, Mr. Ingram was married to Miss Mamie Rodger, a native of Stockton, Cal., daughter of Manuel Garcia and Angelica Rodger, both natives of the Azores Islands. Mrs. Ingram received her education in the schools of Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Ingram are the parents of two children: Roger and Edmond. In 1920 Mr. Ingram purchased a ten-acre ranch devoted to orchard and alfalfa. It is located two miles west of Woodbridge on the Thornton Road, and is irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch. Fraternally, Mr. Ingram is a member of the Knights of Pythias of Woodbridge, and has passed through all the chairs of that order.

JAMES R. JOHNSON.—A young contracting engineer of outstanding capabilities is James R. Johnson, whose specialty is the installation of large pumping and irrigation systems throughout San Joaquin County. He installed the irrigation systems on the Anderson-Barngrover and the Grimsley ranches, both located in the Linden district of the county; he has also had contracts for building bridges throughout the county. In the spring of 1922 he installed a system of irrigation on 2,000 acres devoted to orchard. He was born in San Jose, Cal., in May, 1886, a son of James and Frances (Severance) Johnson. The father was a native of Bangor, Maine, and migrated to California via the Panama route in 1854. The mother was born in New York State and she came via Panama in 1852. The family settled in San Jose, where her father was a photographer; and he also owned a fifty-acre prune and apricot orchard at Berryessa. He died at the age of sixty-eight years; the mother still lives at San Jose and is eighty years old. Two sons were born to this couple, James R., our subject, and Frank S.

James R. Johnson began his education in the Pala district school of Santa Clara County, then entered the San Jose high school, and in 1909 was graduated from the Stanford University in electrical engineering. Following his graduation he went to Schenectady, N. Y., and for two years was identified with the engineering department of the General Electric Company; then he returned to San Jose and purchased a ranch on Penetencia Creek Road and Capitol Avenue in the Berryessa district of the county. This was the old Start place on which there was a run-down orchard, which, within two years, he developed into a first class producing orchard and then sold it to good advantage. In 1914 he removed to Stockton and engaged in general engineering work.

On June 15, 1911, in San Jose, Mr. Johnson was married to Miss Florence Fickett Grant, born in San Jose, a daughter of J. T. and Hattie (Fickett) Grant, the former a native of Kansas, who came to California in an early day, and the latter a native of Stockton, Cal. J. T. Grant first farmed on Woodward Island, then removed to Santa Clara County, and was the man that set out the famous Flickinger orchard at Berryessa; later he returned to Stockton, where he now resides. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson: Grant, Barbara and James R., Jr. Mr. Johnson owns a forty-two-acre ranch at Linden, set to peaches and walnuts, on which there is a seven-inch pump with a thirty-five-horsepower electric motor. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally he is a Royal Arch Mason, and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star of Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are members of the First Congregational Church of Stockton.

WILLIAM E. IVEY.—An old-time resident of San Joaquin County is William E. Ivey, who has for many years held a foremost position among his fellow-citizens. He came alone to California in 1890, an orphan boy, without friends or relatives in the Golden State, but his firm determination to make good has been the leading thought in his mind and no obstacle or discouragement has been too great for him to overcome, until he now occupies a position of prominence and reliability in his locality. He was born near Perryville, Ark., January 18, 1871, a son of M. L. Ivey, a native of Mississippi. He was left an orphan at eight years of age, and remained in Arkansas until he was nineteen years old, working at anything he could find to do for a livelihood, then decided to come to California, arriving in Galt on January 26, 1890. He soon found work on a ranch and had worked about one year when he was severely injured by a horse kicking him, from the effects of which he was in a hospital for two years. He then entered the employ of J. M. Short where he became foreman of the ranch of 1,000 acres, a stock and grain ranch, where he remained for ten years. Mr. Short also had a summer range for his stock in Alpine County and Mr. Ivey spent a portion of his time on this ranch riding the range.

On August 25, 1902, at Stockton, Mr. Ivey was united in marriage with Miss Esther Jatunn, a native of Fresno County, and seven children have blessed their union: Naomi, Mrs. B. Kern, resides at Ripon and has one daughter; Evelyn; Lucile; Ernest; Elwood; Mabel and Jeanette. When Mr. Ivey first came to San Joaquin County he had charge of the Fred Rule ranch, but in 1902 he entered the employ of Yapple & Company, conducting the cream station and barley crushing mill for sixteen years. During this time Mr. Ivey acquired a small ranch near Ripon which has since been subdivided and sold for town lots. In 1920 he deeded a sixty-foot strip to the county through his property to be used as a street. For the past four years he has devoted his time to the development of the Moulton estate to orchard. His fraternal relations are with the Mt. Horeb Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Ripon, and the Modern Woodmen of America.

HUGH L. JONES.—An important industry in San Joaquin County is that of seed growing, and among those extensively engaged in this interesting and lucrative work is Hugh L. Jones, the owner of extensive ranch holdings. His business career has been characterized by perseverance and industry, and his well-directed labors are responsible for his continued success. He was born in San Francisco, Cal., June 7, 1884, his parents being Hugh and Julia (O'Leary) Jones, natives of Wales and Maine respectively. The father of our subject came to the United States when he was twenty-two years old, coming directly to Nevada, where he engaged in mining. There are only two children in the family, Mary Ellen and Hugh L., our subject. The father passed away on December 14, 1917, at the age of sixty years, while the mother is still living. Hugh L. Jones received his education in St. Joseph's Academy at San Jose, and Santa Clara College. In 1912 he came to Stockton and decided to go into the seed growing business and leased twenty acres of land in the Holland tract; then as his business grew he leased more land, until in 1918 he was cultivating 680 acres in various places. He leased a ranch at Coyote, Santa Clara County, and has three different ranches in San Joaquin County, one in the Fabian tract, another in the Mandaville tract, and the other in the Holland tract. In 1919 he purchased 180 acres on Hammer Lane and also leases 510 acres in the Delta district, all of which is devoted to seed growing. His 180-acre ranch is the headquarters ranch, where he has built a house for his foreman; he has also erected a warehouse and a cleaning plant for seeds. In 1921, 50,000 pounds of onion seeds were grown for the Government to be distributed by the bureau of free seed distribution. Mr. Jones raises and ships, on an average, six carloads of vegetable seeds each year, which he sells at wholesale. In politics Mr. Jones is a Republican, and fraternally he belongs to the Knights of Columbus and is a member of the Catholic Church. He resides at 229 East Oak Street, Stockton.

GEORGE MILTON KOONTZ.—A life-long resident of San Joaquin County, George Milton Koontz was born on the old Koontz ranch in the New Hope district of San Joaquin County, December 30, 1883, a son of Henry and Clemence (Hay) Koontz, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Illinois. The father was two years old when his parents left Ohio for Illinois. There he remained until he was twenty years old, when he came to California. He came via Panama, and upon his arrival in San Francisco remained there but a few days, proceeding thence to San Joaquin County. He purchased land in the vicinity of New Hope, and there spent the remainder of his life. In 1874 he was married to Miss Clemence Hay, and to them were born six children: John L.; Elizabeth, deceased; William Henry; Katherine, Mrs. L. R. Burrow; Clemence A., Mrs. Robert Thisby, deceased; and George Milton, of this review. The father passed away in December, 1913, when seventy-seven years old; the mother died when only thirty-two years old.

George Milton Koontz was reared on the home farm, assisting his father in farming, and received his education in the New Hope district school. At thirteen years of age he began to make his own way and learned the painter's trade, which he followed for two years. He then worked on a dredger for five years, building levees in the various reclamation districts of the county. In 1908, Mr. Koontz became pump and bridge tender for the Western Pacific Railroad at Thornton; and he has held that position ever since. He owns thirty-four acres of the old home ranch, which is devoted to orchard and alfalfa.

On September 10, 1912, in Stockton, Mr. Koontz was married to Miss Ethel Elizabeth Mills, a native of San Francisco and a daughter of Bertram and May Bell (Binkley) Mills. Her father was a native of England, who came to Salt Lake City with his parents when he was five years old, and was there reared and educated. In 1887 he came to San Francisco where he engaged in seafaring. He was engineer on the steamship Big China, plying between San Francisco and China ports. Mrs. Koontz is the eldest of a family of three children, the others being May Bell, Mrs. Ford of Sacramento; and Gladys Henrietta, Mrs. Molakidis, residing in San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Koontz are the parents of three children: Dorothy Gladys; Milton George, deceased; and Bernice Mae. Mr. Koontz is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West, of Galt.

WILLIAM HENRY KOONTZ.—A man of recognized enterprise and ability, who is also a native of San Joaquin County, is William Henry Koontz, a man of influence and substantial position in his locality. He was born at Thornton, Cal., November 16, 1880, a son of Henry and Clemence (Hay) Koontz, natives of Ohio and Illinois, respectively. When the father was two years old his parents removed to Illinois, where he was reared, remaining in that locality until he had passed his twentieth birthday, when he came to California. He had been educated in the schools of Illinois, such as existed in a pioneer region, and after arriving at years of maturity emigrated to the Pacific Coast via the Isthmus route. Arriving in San Francisco, he proceeded at once to San Joaquin County and settled upon a ranch in the New Hope district, where he spent the balance of his life. On June 29, 1874, he was married to Miss Clemence Hay; and they became the parents of six children: John L.; Elizabeth, deceased; William Henry, of this review; Katie, Mrs. L. R. Burrow; Clemence A., Mrs. Robert Thisby, deceased; and George M. The father lived to be seventy-seven years old; the mother passed away at the age of thirty-two.

William Henry Koontz received his education in the New Hope district school, and assisted his father on the home place until his twentieth year, when he started out for himself. He leased 400 acres in the tule lands of San Joaquin County, where he raised hay and beans. When his father's estate was divided, he received thirty acres as his share, which he cultivated for a number of years and then sold.

On February 2, 1903, at Thornton, Mr. Koontz was married to Miss Alice Thornton, also a native of San Joaquin County. She is a daughter of Arthur and Emma (Greives) Thornton, the former a native of Scotland and the latter of Ohio. Her father was born in 1838 and came to America with his parents in 1852, settling in Iowa. His parents removed to Kansas, where the grandmother died; the grandfather, William Thornton, was buried on the plains in 1854. Arthur Thornton started across the plains for California in 1854, in the employ of the Government. Arriving in Salt Lake City, he remained there for the winter, and the following spring again resumed his journey. He had been commissioned by the government to take some horses, wagons and mules to a fort. This being accomplished, he again set out for California. Upon his arrival at Benicia, he left the employ of the government and went to work at odd jobs for wages. He finally settled in San Joaquin County and was the proprietor of the New Hope Hotel for many years, and also operated a blacksmith shop and general mercantile business. He married Miss Emma Greives, and they became the parents of six daughters: Mary Alvernia, Mrs. W. J. Bates; Clara B., Mrs. Lawton; Maggie Lander, deceased; Jessie C., residing at Thornton; Alice T., Mrs. Koontz; and Georgie M., deceased. Both parents are now deceased. Alice Thornton received her education in the Thornton schools and later entered the College of Notre Dame at San Jose, where she finished her education. Mr. and Mrs. Koontz have had one child, who died in infancy. Mrs. Koontz was severely injured some time ago in an automobile accident, which necessitated an operation to remove portions of the fractured skull. She is fortunate to have recovered sufficiently to enjoy good health once more. Mrs. Koontz received a gift of a ten-acre ranch from her father, which is devoted to the growing of apricots, and she is also interested in her father's estate with her three sisters. Politically Mr. Koontz gives his support to the Republican party. While he is not a member of any church or fraternal organization, he is known as a citizen of high principles and a supporter of "whatsoever things are of good report."

G. W. KUESTHARDT.—A period of twelve years covers the time in which G. W. Kuesthardt has accomplished much in the way of development work in the Ripon section of San Joaquin County. As an expert deep-well driller he has succeeded in developing hundreds of wells throughout California; he has also developed two ranches, one of forty acres near Ripon and one of twenty acres, which was formerly a part of the Hughes estate, west of Ripon, where he has erected a fine residence and where he now lives. He was born near Arnsburg, Germany, May 28, 1866, a son of G. C. W. Kuesthardt, born in Hessen, Germany. The father was a finely educated man and was in charge of a children's home at Arnsburg, Germany, for twenty-four years and passed away while in the discharge of his duties in 1876, survived by his widow and eight children. One son, Samuel Kuesthardt, came to America and located at Toledo, Ohio, where he was ordained as a minister in the Lutheran Church. Following the father's death, G. W., our subject, and his mother left Germany for America, arriving in October, 1876, and went directly to Toledo, Ohio, to visit the son and brother Samuel; then they went to Minnesota where they visited at the home of Rev. J. C. Clubsteak, a brother-in-law of our subject, and remained in Minnesota for about one year. Returning to Toledo, Ohio, G. W. entered school and there completed his education. After his school days were over, he learned the cabinetmaker's trade and then went to Norwalk, Ohio, where he found employment in an organ and piano factory, working at his trade until 1884. In 1885 he and his mother came to California, locating in Los Angeles, where he followed carpenter work and at the same time developed a ten-acre orchard near Pomona, and he and his mother resided there until 1906.

From 1896 to 1906, Mr. Kuesthardt followed deep-well drilling in Southern California with marked success. In 1905 he made a visit to Stockton and decided to transfer his activities to San Joaquin County, so in 1906 he removed to Ripon, where he bought forty acres close to town and one acre within what is now the business section of Ripon. Mr. Kuesthardt has equipped his well-drilling outfit with the most modern appliances which greatly facilitate his work, and he has been very successful in his line of work. Among his larger deep-well drilling contracts were those for the Simon Newman ranch, the Associated Pipe Line Company, and other large properties, corporations and municipalities. Mr. Kuesthardt bought twenty acres south of Ripon, which he subdivided; this is known as the Sunnyside subdivision, and today many of the finest homes in Ripon are located here; later he bought twenty acres of the Hughes estate west of Ripon, where he has erected a fine residence, which is his present home.

At Pomona, in 1900, Mr. Kuesthardt was married to Miss Mabel F. King, born near Sheldon, Ill., a daughter of George R. and Mary (Bonzell) King, both natives of Illinois. Her parents removed to Dakota and later came to California, locating in Pomona about 1884. Mr. and Mrs. Kuesthardt are the parents of three children: Ruby, Ella, and Roger. In 1888, while residing in Los Angeles, Mr. Kuesthardt received his final U. S. citizenship papers and has since voted the Republican and Progressive tickets. After four years of experimentation and propagation, Mr. Kuesthardt has perfected what is known as the "Honey Persian" melon. During the season of 1922, he produced over 150 tons of marketable melons from fifteen acres.

RUSSELL B. KINCAID.—A widely known business man of Ripon, Russell B. Kincaid is also a native of this vicinity and the popular and successful proprietor of the Ripon Meat Company. He was born on the Kincaid ranch near Ripon, December 18, 1881, the youngest son of the Hon. F. H. Kincaid, a native of Iowa, a Civil War veteran, and in early days a member of the California Legislature. Russell B. Kincaid was reared on the ranch and attended the River district school until he was fifteen years of age; then he worked on the home place until he was twenty-one, when he went to Merced to learn the carpenter's trade, which occupied him for two years. In 1904, in partnership with Mr. Powell of Escalon, he bought the meat department of Yaple & Company. After four months the partnership was dissolved and Mr. Kincaid became sole owner and has since conducted the business on conservative business lines. Four years ago he took as his partner, A. E. Van Slyck. The company maintains a slaughterhouse one and a half miles southwest of Ripon, on the Stanislaus River, which has been conducted on strictly sanitary lines for the past fourteen years. The town shop is a model meat market in every particular and the company enjoys a growing business, catering to the trade throughout south San Joaquin County.

The marriage of Mr. Kincaid occurred at Stockton, which united him with Miss Clara Garrison, a daughter of John and Eliza (Frederick) Garrison, pioneers of Ripon. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Kincaid; Estella, Inez, Russell B. Jr., William, and Evelyn. Mr. Kincaid is a member of the Ripon Merchants' Association and Woodmen of America and Mt. Horeb Lodge, I. O. O. F. He owns a fine residence in Ripon and other valuable real estate. An excellent business man, he has gained for himself a handsome competence, which places him among the substantial residents of the community.

EDWARD M. COONEY.—Already well established in his chosen profession, at an age when many young men have hardly made a choice of their life work, Edward M. Cooney has a brilliant future before him in the field of architectural designing. He was born at Dos Palos, Merced County, on June 27, 1895, and was reared and educated at Stockton, attending St. Mary's College and the Stockton high school. Gifted with a natural talent as an artist, he began when quite a youth to draw cartoons for different newspapers, but feeling that the profession of architectural designing offered greater opportunities, he decided to take up this interesting work.

In order to gain a thorough knowledge of designing and a practical experience in all its details, Mr. Cooney took employment with several architect's offices in Stockton, spending four years in securing the training he desired, and in 1917, he branched out for himself and began to practice his profession. His love for his work and his assiduous application to it have brought him splendid success and his clientele is steadily increasing.

Mr. Cooney is special architect for the Wagner Leather Company and has drawn plans for a number of their new buildings, including the $50,000 four-story brick building, a large warehouse costing $30,000, at the foot of Weber avenue, a $35,000 three-story building for the artificial drying of leather, and other units for this company, such as sawtooth buildings, a commission that in itself denotes his capability. Among the residences he has designed are the Manthey home, and those of F. Quail, A. Sattui, George Chillion, G. Battistini, F. Hazelquest, P. Sanguinetti, and Mr. Thrash; also the parochial residence, mausoleum for Father Bandini, a $60,000 apartment house on California and Lafayette streets, Red Men's Hall, and the addition to St. Joseph's Home, the M. Dentoni garage on North California street and others in Stockton. He has also drawn plans for stores and homes at Manteca, Tracy and Lodi, and one of the latest important commissions he has accepted is that of the new Lilliputian Studios, the first studio to be erected in Stockton, devoted to the making of moving pictures.

DANIEL CLIFTON GIBSON.—An enterprising, progressive and very successful rancher is Daniel Clifton Gibson, who was born at Clyde, Wayne County, N. Y., on September 1, 1870, the son of Daniel Gibson, a native of Vermont who removed to New York and later married Miss Maria Hosler, who was born at Montreal, of English parentage. They were favored with six children, all of whom are living today: Mary, the wife of Newton Mahaffey, of Stockton; Daniel C., the subject of this review; Fannie, Mrs. Fred Mathews; Alice, Mrs. Edward Cotton; Margaret, Mrs. Canning; and Mrs. Louise Tricker, of New York. The father was a stonemason by trade.

Dan Gibson, as he is familiarly called by his friends, attended the Wayne County schools, and when twenty-one left home to come to California. Arriving here in 1891, he settled in San Joaquin County. Later, he went to Comanche, Cal., and mined for some seven years, and then he returned to San Joaquin County and located at Clements, where he was for three years in the service of Chrisman & Clements, merchants. While clerking, he rendered himself popular because of his efficiency and his willingness to accommodate. There he joined the Modern Woodmen of America; he is a past consul of the lodge at Clements, and has filled all the chairs.

At Clements, on May 19, 1902, Mr. Gibson married Miss Nora Mehrten, the daughter of Daniel and Mary (Poppe) Mehrten. Daniel Mehrten came to California in early days and followed mining at Comanche. He married Mary Poppe, a native of New York, who crossed the plains with her parents, Bernard and Elizabeth Poppe, when she was a girl. Mr. Poppe located a claim on the Mokelumne River, near Mackville Corners, and there set out the first commercial orchard in these parts. He died at eighty-four, and his wife at seventy-six. Mrs. Mehrten inherited the Poppe place and resided there until she died, in July, 1910, at the age of seventy-one. Mr. Mehrten also died while living near Clements. They had eight children: Mrs. Lizzie Barton, of Berkeley; Henry, deceased; Mrs. Annie Simpson of Wheatland; Daniel, residing near Clements; George, deceased; John, residing near Clements; Charles, at Comanche; and Nora, Mrs. Gibson, of this sketch. She inherited 107½ acres of the old Poppe place, and there the family make their home. Mr. and Mrs. Gibson have four children: Clyde; Mary, Mrs. William Classen, of Lockeford; and Florence and Olive. Mr. Gibson is a Democrat.

ELMER E. GORDON.—The pioneer plastering contractor of Stockton, Elmer E. Gordon has built up the same reputation for fine work as his father, who was known throughout this district in the early days for his excellent workmanship in the building up of Stockton and the outlying towns. He was born in Calaveras County, July 8, 1868, his parents being Aaron and Eliza J. (Anderson) Gordon, the former, a native of Ohio, now deceased, while Mrs. Gordon, who was born in Indiana, in November, 1835, is still living.

Aaron Gordon brought his wife and three children to California via the Isthmus in February, 1868. His wife's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Anderson, resided in Calaveras County, but he soon located in Stockton, where he followed the business of brick and plastering contracting, and he was one of the pioneers in this line. He was a factor in the development of Oakdale and Lodi, building many of the structures there, and in Stockton, among many others, did the brick work at the County Hospital and the plastering of the Franklin, Jefferson and Weber schools and the "What Cheer" House. He was widely known to the earlier residents of San Joaquin County and built up a reputation for fair dealing and honest work that is still well remembered. Many of the buildings which he erected in those early days are still standing. He was a veteran of the Civil War and served in Company A, Eighty-third Illinois Regiment, and was a charter member of Stockton Post, G. A. R. Public-spirited and interested in the upbuilding of the neighborhood's best interests, he served as a school trustee of the Homestead district. Mrs. Gordon's father, Josiah Anderson, came to California in 1849 and mined with success. He returned East with bags of gold, paid off his debts and returned to San Joaquin County with his family, spending his last days in Stockton. Four children are living of the family of Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Gordon: Virgil R., Elmer E., Mrs. Emma G. Matteson, and Mrs. D. C. Loos.

Elmer E. Gordon went to school in Stockton and learned the trades of bricklayer, cement worker and plasterer under his father, working with him in different parts of the county until his death. In recent years he has specialized in plastering contracting and his work can be found on many of the finest buildings of Stockton, among them the Stockton Savings & Loan Bank building, the San Joaquin Valley Bank, now the Bank of Italy, the San Joaquin Building, Elks Building, Sciots Hall, Gall Building, Gianelli Building, additions to the Smith & Lang Building, St. Agnes Academy, the beautiful home of Frederick K. Rindge, one of the finest mansions in the valley, Oakdale Church, many schoolhouses outside of Stockton and a large number of residences in the city. He is a member of the Builders Exchange.

In Stockton, on July 8, 1905, Mr. Gordon was married to Miss Maude Frodsham, a native daughter, born in San Francisco, and they make their home at 1622 South Sutter street, Stockton, where they own a comfortable bungalow. Mrs. Gordon is the daughter of Edward E. and Mary E. (Frodsham) Frodsham, who were born in England and came to California across the plains. Mr. Frodsham was a miller in San Francisco, coming to Stockton in 1894, and there he died; his wife had preceded him in 1880. The youngest of eight children, three now living, Mrs. Gordon was educated in the schools of San Francisco. Grandfather William A. Frodsham was a watchmaker, as were his ancestors, who were celebrated chronometer manufacturers. After his father's death, Mr. Gordon gave up his contracting work for some time and traveled as a colporteur for the International Bible Students Association, distributing religious literature in Nevada and over a large territory in California, but in 1915 he again engaged in contracting.

MRS. JOHN HENNING.—San Joaquin County has always honored its teaching profession, of late years so well represented by Mrs. John Henning, who was in maidenhood Myrtle Harnly, and who was born in this county, near Acampo, the daughter of Jacob Harnly, a native of Mansfield, Ohio, who married Miss Emma Ray, born in Woodbridge, Cal. Grandfather John Harnly had a large flour mill on the Ohio River in early pioneer days. Jacob Harnly came to California in 1876, and operated a grain ranch of 160 acres at the northern end of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Harnly were married in Woodbridge, and Mrs. Henning's grandparents, Samuel and Melvina (Guard) Ray, were married while members of an ox-team train, en route across the plains from Illinois to Oregon, in 1849. Both the Ray and the Guard families were in the same train, and the young married couple reached California in 1851. The maternal grandmother's people were natives of Virginia, and before the Civil War the entire family moved to Illinois, on account of their sympathy with the views of the Abolitionists. In 1851, Grandfather Ray settled at New Hope, San Joaquin County, where he bought 640 acres of land, a part of which lay in Section No. 13, Union Township, and a part in Section No. 18, Elkhorn Township, and here he raised cattle for years. Samuel Ray's house was on a high knoll, and the cowboys used his place as a refuge from the flood waters. He died at the age of sixty years, but his wife lived to be seventy. Jacob Harnly died in 1918, but Mrs. Harnly is still living in Lodi. Our subject has only one sister, Mrs. Effie Valentine, who resides at Lodi. Mr. Harnly at one time leased a part of the B. F. Langford estate, now known as the Cory ranch, when the ranch was completely covered with large oak trees and brush. He employed Chinese to clear it and raised wheat for years.

Myrtle Harnly attended Miss Beebe's private school at Stockton, as well as the Oakland high school, and then took courses at the Stockton Business College and the San Jose State Normal School. She then began teaching at Mackville, two miles north of Clements, where she taught for two years, and afterwards at Elliott, Acampo, and Waterloo, seven years in all, until her marriage. Just after the World War, she again engaged in teaching as prinprincipal of the Washington school, two miles east of Clements, where she is now teaching her fourth year.

At Lodi, on April 14, 1907, Miss Harnly was married to John A. Henning, the son of A. P. and Sarah E. Henning, members of a worthy pioneer family whose life-story is elsewhere outlined in this work. Her husband attended school at San Jose and also in Shasta County, and at present is superintendent of public utilities for the city of Lodi. He has held this position ever since the city took over its utilities, and spent the five preceding years in the same position with a private company. He is a member of the Healdsburg Lodge of Masons. Three children have blessed their union: Clinton, Elma and Ellen Irene. Mrs. Henning is an active member of the Lodi Woman's Club, a member of the board of directors, and chairman of civics, and with the other members is having her name transmitted to posterity in the cornerstone box of the club-house just completed. She has been very active in the movement for procuring a permanent playground and recreation center for children and grown-ups in Lodi.

MARK WILLIAM HILD.—The distinction of being a native Californian and the son of a California pioneer belongs to Mark William Hild, one of the leading electrical contractors of Stockton. He was born in Eureka, Humboldt County, Cal., on December 25, 1886, a son of Charles and Melinda (Hughes) Hild. His maternal grandfather, Mark Hughes, crossed the plains to California in 1849 and pioneered in Tuolumne County. He died in San Francisco, having been a resident of Sonora until his death, serving as postmaster for years. Mr. Hild died in San Francisco and Mrs. Hild is residing in Stockton.

In 1896, when our subject was ten years old, the family located in Stockton and he was educated in the public schools of that city. After completing his education he learned the trade of electrical engineer with the firms of H. Belding & Company and Jackson & Earl of Stockton; and during the years of 1904, 1905 and 1906 he followed his trade in San Francisco. In 1907 he became superintendent of the Electric Machine & Equipment Company of Stockton and held this position for eight years; during this time he superintended the installation of electrical equipment for the Hotel Clark, the Henery apartments, the Home apartments, the Belding building and other large buildings. In 1918 he started in business for himself and is located at No. 106 West Weber avenue, but in September, 1922, he moved to No. 519 East Market street, where a building has been constructed for his special use, everything of the most modern and up-to-date equipment and the finest establishment to be found in Central California. He has contracted for most of the large buildings that have been erected, among them being the St. Agnes Academy, the annex of the Lincoln Hotel, the Native Sons Building, the Yost and Dohrman buildings, the Stockton Savings Bank, the F. R. Rindge residence, the California Cedar Products factory and the Valley Vineyard Products Plant of Manteca; he has also installed a number of pumping plant systems throughout the valley; he installed the water pressure system in the Hotel Clark, one of the best in this part of the state. He also has the agency for the Byron-Jackson pump for San Joaquin County and the agency for the Westinghouse motor for Stockton, and is kept constantly busy with the various branches of his business.

Mr. Hild was united in marriage with Miss Stella Del Monte, a native daughter born in San Francisco, and they are the parents of one son, Mark William, Jr. Fraternally he is a member of the Stockton Elks, the Native Sons of the Golden West, the Kiwanis Club and the Chamber of Commerce.

JAMES EDWARD KELLEY.—As superintendent of gas manufacture for the Western States Gas and Electric Company of Stockton, James E. Kelley occupies a position of great importance and responsibility in connection with one of the largest public service corporations in California and a strong factor in promoting the industrial development of many cities and towns in the central portion of the state. He is one of California's native sons, his birth having occurred at Benicia, in Solano County, on August 15, 1878, and his parents, Timothy and Mary (Shortell) Kelley, were natives of Ireland. The former came to California when nineteen years of age in the fifties, and was married in San Francisco to Miss Shortell. She came to California when she was about fifteen years old. They were ranchers at Benicia until they retired to Stockton in 1885, and here they passed away, the mother on August 24, 1912, and the father on October 10, of the same year. In their family were three children: James E., our subject, Frank and William, all residents of Stockton. Timothy Kelley proved his loyalty to his adopted country by serving in the Civil War.

James E. Kelley acquired his education in the grammar schools of Stockton and while pursuing his studies he acted as lamp lighter for the Stockton Gas and Heating Company, performing the task faithfully each evening. At the age of sixteen he laid aside his textbooks and secured employment with the California Paper Company, with which he remained for a year, in 1895, and then became wagon driver and errand boy with the Stockton Gas, Light and Heating Company, now the Western States Gas and Electric Company. He conscientiously applied himself to his work and was gradually promoted through the various branches, being for a time in the electrical department, while later he was transferred to the gas department, working his way from the bottom, acting as fireman, oiler and also as engineer. He was next made foreman of the gas plant and in 1910 merit and ability won for him promotion to his present position, that of superintendent of gas manufacture, in which connection he has charge of from forty to fifty men, while he also acts as superintendent of the company's natural gas wells, having seventeen wells in Stockton. He does everything in his power to promote the efficiency of his department and his services are of great value to the corporation.

Mr. Kelley married Miss Nellie Brisco, a native of Stockton and a daughter of Michael Brisco, now living retired in Oakland, Cal. He became one of the pioneer settlers of Stockton and took an active part in public affairs, serving as city councilman and also as a member of the Volunteer Fire Department. Mr. and Mrs. Kelley have a son, Francis V., attending Stockton high school. Mr. Kelley owns his residence at 426 East Vine street, where he resides with his family. He is a member and officer of the Pacific Coast Gas Association and of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks.

JOSEPH ALEGRETTI.—Among the representative men of the second generation in San Joaquin County we mention Joseph Alegretti of Stockton, who was born in this city on January 23, 1880, the son of Gaetano Alegretti, who came to California in 1859 and was one of the first Italians to settle in Stockton. He was born in Chiavari, Italy, June 22, 1841; his father was Joseph and his mother was Giovanni (Bisagno) Alegretti, the former a distinguished sculptor. Gaetano attended a private school until six years old, later a school kept by a priest, but his attendance was irregular for seven years; and he also went to an evening school for study drawing, as he early evinced an aptitude for art. He helped his father in his shop to carve and in 1856 began learning a trade in a shipyard. His uncle, Pio Bisagno, had been in California and had gone back to Italy in 1857, with glowing tales of the wonders of the Pacific Coast country. Gaetano was enthused and wanted to come to California, but he had no money for transportation. In 1858 arrangements had been made for his fare to New York and he prepared for the trip, but being under legal age he could not get a transport to leave Italy, and on June 13, 1858, he enrolled as a carpenter on a sailing vessel bound for Philadelphia. Before leaving he visited friends and relations, who, upon parting, gave him small sums of money as presents. His father went to Genoa to see him off and when bidding him goodbye, Gaetano put this money, some sixty francs, into his father's hand and told him to keep it. It took the ship three and one-half months to reach its destination and upon arriving in Philadelphia the lad was given to understand that at a certain hotel he would find more money from uncles in California for his passage to San Francisco. This had not arrived and he had to wait some little time; fortunately the next incoming ship from the coast brought the money and he bought a ticket via Aspinwall and the Isthmus to San Francisco, arriving twenty-two days later on the S. S. Golden Gate. He at once went to work for his uncles, Bisagno Brothers, in a crockery store, and six months later he was sent to Stockton to take charge of a branch store which was erected at the corner of Washington and El Dorado streets. He received $20 a month for the first two years, then $30. His studies and contact with people had made him a good French, Spanish and English scholar and he was thus well qualified to carry on a responsible business. When he left the employ of his uncles he opened a grocery store in partnership with a cousin, A. Daneri, at El Dorado and Lafayette streets; then eighteen months later bought his uncles' store and ran it for the same period at the old location, then moved to 430 South Center Street. Beginning with a small salary Mr. Alegretti saved his money and invested it intelligently in real estate in San Joaquin County, all of which has greatly increased in value so that his heirs enjoy a competency accrued from his labors. Mr. Alegretti related interesting experiences during his lifetime. During the flood of 1862, when the lower part of the city was covered with water, an old barge from the river floated down the street and went aground at the corner where he was employed in the store; he also told of the miners and Spaniards who would often come into his store and demand free drinks, flourishing guns to emphasize their demands, and how he drove them away with an old pickaxe he had hidden back of the counter for such occasions.

Gaetano Alegretti was united in marriage on August 19, 1864, to Miss Maria Macchiavello, born at Soti, Italy, and they had six children; one now deceased was named Giovanna; and the eldest, Mrs. Clotilda A. Macchiavello, died December 4, 1915, leaving a son Gaetano and a daughter, Maria, living in San Francisco. Those living are Miss Clorinda; Leonora A., Mrs. G. Ghiglieri; Miss Anna, all in San Francisco; Joseph, of Stockton, the only son. Gaetano Alegretti was one of the founders of the Italian Gardeners' Association and was president of the lodge many years; he gave his gun, belt and sash, which he wore when presiding over the lodge, to his son, Joseph. He was a member of the Odd Fellows; the Druids, serving as secretary and treasurer of the latter; and was treasurer of Court Cavalotti of the Foresters and a member of the Knights of Pythias, Lodge No. 20. He was one of the organizers of the Commercial & Savings Bank and was a member of the board of directors, and his name, with the names of the other founders, is inscribed on the wall in the new bank building at the corner of Sutter and Main streets; he also helped organize the Union Safe Deposit Bank. He accumulated several ranches in the county and valuable real estate in Stockton, and the old home is still standing at the corner of Commerce and Washington streets, a portion of which was brought around the Horn in pioneer days. The holdings of Mr. Alegretti have been incorporated under the name of G. Alegretti Company, of which Joseph is the president. Gaetano Alegretti died on February 5, 1910, and he was survived by his widow until January 21, 1916. Mr. Alegretti was a leader among his countrymen and they sought him for advice because they did not understand the ways of this country, and he often became their banker in the earlier days in Stockton.

Joseph Alegretti was educated in the schools of Stockton and worked with his father as long as he continued in business, and since the death of his parents he has had charge of the large estate as president of the corporation.

Of the union of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Alegretti there are three talented daughters who are the pride of the Alegretti home: Georgia, Leonora M., and Margaret C. Fraternally, Mr. Alegretti is a member of the Stockton aerie of Eagles, being among the oldest members of the lodge at this time. Mr. and Mrs. Alegretti have a large circle of friends throughout San Joaquin County who appreciate their worth as citizens of this great state.

JULES PERRIN.—A progressive and influential citizen, Jules Perrin has proven himself a constructive business man and as a concrete contractor he is entitled to the prominent position which he has attained. He was born in the rural districts of Quebec, Canada, on November 2, 1870, and remained there until he was twelve years of age, attending school. Then he removed with his parents to Willow City, N. D., where he grew to manhood. He was employed in various lines of business until he was twenty-one, when he took up a homestead of 160 acres, which he improved and farmed. In 1896 he engaged in the butcher business at Willow City and then he enlarged his operations by adding a bakery, restaurant and bowling alley, and carried on the combined businesses until he came to California. He still owns his property there. Coming to Lodi, he became the partner of his brother, Henry, in the cement contracting business. In 1919 he purchased his brother's interest and is now sole owner, the business consisting of the manufacture of the Miracle concrete building blocks, which are extensively used in building homes, garages, business blocks, packing houses and other structures.

Among the buildings for which Mr. Perrin has furnished the concrete blocks are the Lodi Canning Company, the Tokay City garage, the Buchanan sanitarium, Ford garage, and the Lodi Hardware Company block; he has also erected a number of reinforced concrete buildings in Lodi; the hotel at Lone, a garage at Sonora, a store building at Groveland, a garage at Madera, several blocks in Stockton, a business block in Galt, the Forest Lake school building, a garage at Clements, a bank and store at Tracy, and a residence on the Curry ranch. He has operated all over the valley and his work has been first-class and of the highest order and his business has greatly increased. He is agent for the American River Sand and Gravel Company of Sacramento and handles thirty carloads every month. His manufacturing plant and yards are located at the corner of Stockton and Locust streets. Mr. Perrin has completed a three-story hotel and apartment house of his own on South Sacramento street, built of Miracle concrete blocks, and which is a great improvement to the city. There are fifty rooms in this building, made into eight apartments and the balance single rooms. In 1923 he finished two modern garage buildings and sales-rooms adjoining the hotel.

The marriage of Mr. Perrin united him with Miss Mary Ann Cota, a native of Canada, and they are the parents of nine children, seven of whom are living: David B.; Cecil, an architect and manufacturer of cement lamp posts; Philip is married and has two children; Paul is captain of the Lodi football team; Veronica; Cecelia; and Jules, Jr. Fraternally, Mr. Perrin is a member of the Modern Woodmen, Lodi Lodge of Eagles, No. 848, Royal Neighbors, and Knights of Columbus. He is a member of the Lodi Business Men's Association and of the State Automobile Association.

CECIL P. RENDON.—A prominent attorney of San Joaquin County and Stockton who was for many years closely identified with the law as a representative of the public's interests is Cecil P. Rendon who maintains offices in the Wilhoit Building, Stockton, as a member of the law firm of Foltz, Rendon & Wallace, and enjoys a lucrative practice throughout the county. He was born in Sonora, Tuolumne County, October 6, 1861, the son of Jesus Rendon, a native of Mexico who came to California in 1849 and engaged in mining. Grandfather Rendon was a native of Spain, migrating from there to Mexico and later to California, and he was a goldsmith at Sonora in the early days of the gold excitement.

Mr. Rendon's boyhood days were spent in Humboldt County, Nev., where he attended the public schools, living the life of a cowboy and learning the printer's trade on the Humboldt Register at Winnemucca, Nev. He spent one year at Santa Clara University, Santa Clara, Cal., and then returned to Nevada and rode the range for a time. In 1884 he returned to California and worked as a printer in Oakdale and on the Modesto News, and while there he studied law in the office of T. A. Caldwell, the district attorney of Stanislaus County. Coming to Stockton in 1885 he read law in the office of Governor James Budd, and in 1887 he was admitted to the bar of California.

Mr. Rendon was appointed prosecuting attorney of Stockton, under Mayor William A. Clark, serving for three and a half years, and for the next four years was city justice of the peace. Later he was appointed assistant district attorney for San Joaquin County under George McNoble, serving four years, and for the next eight years occupied the same office, when Edward P. Foltz was district attorney of the county. He has always been very active in Republican politics in California as a member of the Republican County Central Committee, taking an active part in the party conventions. For six years Mr. Rendon was a member of Company B, 6th Regiment, 3rd Brigade, N. G. of C., and was closely associated in military affairs with Col. Eugene Lehe and Brig.-General James H. Budd of the 3rd Brigade. Prominent in fraternal life, Mr. Rendon has been state head of three fraternal orders and the national head of one. He was a past grand president of the Young Men's Institute of the Pacific Coast, and is past grand chief ranger of the Foresters of America for the state of California, past state president of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and supreme chief ranger of the Foresters of America, this being the highest office of the national order. He has also been popular in local fraternal life, being a member of the Elks, Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W., and Iroquois Tribe of Red Men, and is ex-president of the San Joaquin County Bar Association. His three children are Mrs. Cecelia DeYoung, Mrs. Anita Atkinson and Raymond V. Rendon.

BERT A. BENEDICT.—An enterprising rancher whose success as an almond-grower has made his progressive methods an object of special interest to all concerned with the advancement of California agriculture, is Bert A. Benedict, who resides on a place owned by his brother, E. A. Benedict, three miles northwest of Acampo. He was born near Nora Springs, Floyd County, Iowa, April 12, 1871, a son of Francis and Abigail Benedict, and was fortunate in entering the family of a farmer, and so, from his boyhood, getting familiar with farm life. The worthy couple were blessed with five children, three of whom are now in California: Louis lives in Iowa; Lyman L. is deceased; E. A. Benedict of Lodi; Harrison, in Iowa; and Bert, the subject of our interesting review.

Bert Benedict attended the district schools in Iowa, and afterward enjoyed one year at the high school. His father had come to Iowa in frontier days, and in time he cultivated some 200 acres of rich land and the "stick-to-it-iveness" with which he pursued his work may be judged from the fact that at one time he walked 100 miles in the direction of Cedar Rapids to locate some of his horses that had strayed. Bert remained on his father's farm until he was married on December 22, 1898, at Nora Springs, Iowa, to Miss Anna L. Darling, who was born and reared in that part of the country. Her father, Charles Darling, was a farmer by occupation, and owned land at Nora Springs, on the east side of the river. Mr. and Mrs. Darling had three children, and Miss Anna was given a high school education.

Bert Benedict cultivated a farm of 120 acres at Nora Springs until 1910, and then he came out to California and settled at Lodi. Here he purchased an almond orchard of five acres on Acacia Avenue, west of Cherokee Lane; and this well-irrigated ranch, bearing I. X. L., Ne Plus and Non Parael almonds, he still owns. The past year he has helped to care for his brother's ranch of sixty acres three miles to the northwest of Acampo, one of the very desirable ranch properties in this part of the county.

Public-spirited to a degree that makes it impossible for him to be merely a partisan voter, although he endorses heartily the general principles of the Republican party, Mr. Benedict is keenly interested in all that makes for the progress of the Golden State, and is known as one of the effective local "boosters."

ALBERT C. BOWMAN.—One of the younger business men of South San Joaquin County who is meeting with success is Albert C. Bowman, of the firm of Bowman & Sharenbroch, proprietors of the Midway Garage, on the State Highway between Manteca and Ripon. He was born at Sturgeon Lake, Minn., in 1894, being a son of Gus and Anna (Kling) Bowman, both of Swedish birth. They removed from Minnesota to California in 1902, bringing with them their family of eight children, and settled at Manteca, where the father still resides, Mrs. Bowman having passed away in 1917.

The seventh of the family, Albert C. Bowman was reared at Manteca and after attending the public schools there he supplemented his education with courses in the Polytechnic College of Engineering and the Automobile school at Oakland, after which he engaged as a mechanic in different garages at Manteca, and in 1916 was employed in this line at Stockton. In 1917 he enlisted at San Francisco in the 280th Air Squadron as a mechanic, serving at Waco, Texas, and Brindley Field, Long Island, N. Y., and was honorably discharged at San Diego in 1919. After returning home he worked at the Ford garage at Manteca until he accepted a position with the Shell Oil Company at Stockton, remaining with them about three years. On September 1, 1922, Mr. Bowman in partnership with Mr. Sharenbroch, took possession of the Midway garage, leasing it from its owner, E. T. Pierce, and here they maintain a first-class machine shop and service station and are meeting with success.

In 1920 Mr. Bowman was united in marriage at Stockton to Miss Alice Bryer, and they have one child, Albert Curtiss. Mr. Bowman is a member of the American Legion at Stockton and Manteca Lodge No. 124, I. O. O. F., while in politics he is Republican.

LUCIEN BORDENAVE.—As a successful sheep and wool grower, Lucien Bordenave is well known throughout San Joaquin County; he is the owner of what is known as the old Butterick place, consisting of 187 acres five miles south of Stockton on the old Stockton Road. He was born near Pau, France, February 12, 1867, a son of J. Peter and Catherine M. (Souviet) Bordenave, well-to-do sheep growers and farmers in their native land; they were the parents of three children: John, Mary and Lucien, the subject of this sketch. At eighteen years of age L. Bordenave left home for America to join an uncle, but upon his arrival in New Orleans he found that his uncle, N. Bordenave, had passed away, which was a sad blow to the lad in a strange country. He then went to Galveston, Texas, and found employment on a ranch at twelve dollars per month; while there he suffered an attack of fever and as soon as he was able

he came to California, arriving at San Francisco in 1889. Going into the San Joaquin Valley he found employment at general ranching until he entered the sheep business at Los Banos, first as a herder, which occupied him for five years; then with a partner bought 1,800 sheep near Fresno and since that time has increased his herds and now holds a prominent position among the successful sheep and wool growers of the Pacific Coast. Mr. Bordenave took the contract to prune and care for the vineyard for the Margaretta Vineyard Company of Madera County, and was also a teaming contractor for the Sugar Pine Company for three years. In 1903, Mr. Bordenave brought 1,300 sheep of his own and in company with another man from Madera County, 6,000 sheep across the Siskiyou Mountains from Oregon to the San Joaquin Valley; they used 150 French sheep bells and four Indians as guides; they started in May, 1903, and were until October of the same year reaching their destination. He sold his bands of sheep in 1922 and is looking after his interests.

The first marriage of Mr. Bordenave occurred in Stockton in 1905, which united him with Miss Josephine Bernard, also a native of France, who came to America in 1900. Two sons were born to them: Peter is a graduate of Heald's Business College; and John. Mrs. Bordenave passed away October 27, 1918; Mr. Bordenave was married a second time on June 3, 1920, to Miss Catherine Condon, a native of Pau, France, who arrived in California in 1902. In 1915 Mr. Bordenave completed a commodious residence at French Camp where he is well known for his hospitality.

ROBERT J. HEATH.—A well-known and successful grain farmer and stock raiser is Robert J. Heath, who resides on his ranch four miles east of the town of Peters, San Joaquin County. He was born on his father's ranch two miles west of his present home place, January 8, 1872. His father, Patrick Heath, was a native of County Mayo, Ireland, who came to America in the late '50s, and as early as 1861 began farming in San Joaquin County with a single plow and a yoke of oxen. He married Miss Johanna Lyons, also a native of Ireland, who came to California via Cape Horn. Three sons and one daughter constitute the family of this pioneer couple: Robert J., the subject of this sketch; George J. resides in San Francisco; Mary Ann died at the age of seven years; and Fred Thomas resides in Farmington. Patrick Heath passed away in November, 1906, his wife preceding him in July of the same year. Robert J. attended the district school in his vicinity and being the eldest of the family, early in years assumed the responsibilities of farm life and became associated with his father in grain and stock raising.

On February, 4, 1906, Mr. Heath was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Dorgan, born in County Clare, Ireland, May 1, 1869. She left Ireland in her sixteenth year, in company with her sister Mary, and arrived in San Francisco in August, 1886. Mary Dorgan entered Notre Dame in San Francisco, where she became Sister Mary Verimus, and for twenty-five years she devoted her time to the church and passed away in San Jose, Cal., in 1915. Mr. and Mrs. Heath are the parents of two daughters: Mary Catherine Gabriella and Helen Johanna Marie, and both are students at the Notre Dame Convent in San Francisco. Mr. Heath's activities as an agriculturist have been of the highest order, as can be seen on his fine ranch of 320 acres east of Peters; he employs only the most modern machinery and methods in farming, which invariably are productive of the best results. Mr. Heath cooperates in local affairs by belonging to the farm bureau at Farmington.

WILLIAM CHRISTOPHER HOUSKEN.—The name of William Christopher Housken is well known throughout San Joaquin County, for here he has passed his entire life, and here his parents lived since early California days. He was born on the present ranch at New Hope, San Joaquin County, August 16, 1873, a son of George and Katherine (Ling) Housken. The father was a native of Norway, where he was born December 14, 1838; and at the age of twenty-two he came to America and direct to California, where he was captain and owner for many years of the schooner Reliance which plied the Sacramento River, and he was also engaged in the Oregon lumber trade. In 1873 he purchased 380 acres in Union township, San Joaquin County, and later acquired a ranch of 480 acres in the same township, which he cultivated to wheat, and his farm was well stocked with horses and cattle. In 1865, in San Francisco, he was married to Miss Katherine Ling and they were the parents of eight children: George resides in Stockton; Frank at Tracy; Oscar is deceased; William Christopher is the subject of this sketch; Kate, Mrs. Fountain of Oakland; Augusta, Mrs. Von Euden, lives in Holland; Laura, Mrs. Cogshall, resides in Berkeley; and Josie, Mrs. Von Doran of Portland, Ore. The mother passed away in Stockton on January 17, 1918; the father now resides in Oakland, aged eighty-five.

William Christopher Housken began his education at the New Hope grammar school and later took a course at the Stockton Business College, after which he became manager of the Don Ray Company's store at New Hope, where he remained for six years. The marriage of Mr. Housken occurred at Lodi on December 7, 1902, which united him with Miss Sigrid Sigilkoff, a native of New Jersey, and a daughter of Henry Siglikoff, a farmer, who came to Walnut Grove, Cal., when his daughter Sigrid was eight years old. Mrs. Housken is one of six children: Anna, Eva, Harry, Frank, Sigrid is Mrs. Housken, and Arthur. Mr. and Mrs. Housken are the parents of two children: Merle and George. After working in the general merchandise store in New Hope for six years Mr. Housken then went to Antioch where he became a pilot of river launches and did towing on the river for three years; he then went to Stockton and worked for two years in the Sampson Iron works. About this time he returned to the old home place where he has since resided with his family, and he operates the 270 acres where he raises alfalfa and beans, and grazes cattle.

Mr. Housken and his family live in the house where he was born, which was built by his father many years ago, but which has been greatly improved by additions made by Mr. Housken. He served as justice of the peace of Union township for two years and as a member of the school board of New Hope district, and he was active in the building of the new school building. Having always lived in San Joaquin County, he is deeply interested in all that pertains to her welfare and progress, and is a typical western citizen, alert and enterprising.

JOSEPH C. KENNISON.—Among the fruit men of San Joaquin County who are interested in all departments of that greatest of California industries, is Joseph C. Kennison, a native of the state, born at Jenny Lind, Calaveras County, on May 8, 1866. He is a son of Joseph L. and Miranda (Cutts) Kennison, both descendants of old New England families. Great-grandfather David Kennison was a member of the Boston Tea Party and also served in the Revolutionary War and the War of 1812. He lived to be 115 years of age.

Joseph L. Kennison came via Cape Horn to California in 1849 and engaged in mining in Calaveras County; later he went into business at Jenny Lind. When their son, Joseph C., was a child of two years the family removed to Stockton, where the father followed his trade of brick mason and also did considerable contracting; many of the early brick buildings in Stockton attest the kind of work he did. Joseph C. is the youngest child in a family of three, the others being J. F., residing in Oakland, and May, a resident of Los Angeles.

Joseph C. received his education in the Stockton and Oakland public schools; then took a course in the Stockton Commercial Business College; when he was fifteen years old he became a clerk for the Hartford Fire Insurance Company in San Francisco, and remained with them for four years. He then gave up inside work and went to San Ramon near Danville, where he worked for wages on the James Boone ranch; then he removed to his native county and worked in the olive grove of H. H. Moore near Jenny Lind. In 1894 he bought ten acres of the tract he now owns and from time to time added more land until he now has forty acres; this was unimproved land on the Mokelumne River about two miles northwest of Lodi; he set out a vineyard to Tokay grapes and an orchard of peaches, also built a house and farm buildings. His ranch now has a peach orchard containing twelve acres, an apricot orchard of three acres, and the balance of twenty-five acres is in a fine, full-bearing vineyard. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally is affiliated with the Charity Lodge of the I. O. O. F. of Stockton.

CHARLES CLAY LITER.—One of the representative business men in the city of Lodi, San Joaquin County, is Charles Clay Liter. He was born in Lafayette, Mo., March 27, 1884, a son of Charles and Kate M. (Biggerstaff) Liter, the former a native of Illinois and a farmer who lived to be sixty-seven years old, while the wife and mother passed away at the age of twenty-seven. There were five children in the family: William C., Finley F., Mary Lillian, Claude Albert, and Charles Clay, the subject of this sketch. Charles Clay Liter received his education in the grammar and high schools of Blackburn, Mo., and at Brown's Business College at Kansas City, Mo., and at the age of nineteen was well equipped to enter the business world. After finishing school he owned and conducted a butcher shop at Blackburn for two years; then he removed to Fort Worth, Texas, where he operated a transfer business for three years; then he removed to Oklahoma and worked at McAlester and Muskogee for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for three years. While at Muskogee, within three months' time, he was promoted from the position of agent to assistant manager; he then came West to California and was the agent for the same company for the following five months. From 1912 to 1915 he was a tea and coffee salesman for a Fresno company; then was transferred to Oakland in the same capacity for the same company where he remained for the next five years. In January, 1920, he arrived in Lodi in search of a location for an electric appliance store, but was unsuccessful; however, he rented a furnished room and began to sell vacuum cleaners; the following May he secured a small store building at 10 North School Street and put in a stock of electrical appliances. He rented a place of business from the blueprints and upon completion of the building moved into the Gilbeau Building in November, 1921, where he built up a fine, growing business in electrical supplies. In January, 1923, he sold this business to the Mexer Electric Company and continues with them.

In Blackburn, Mo., on October 11, 1905, Mr. Liter was married to Miss Edna A. Watson, born at Miami, Mo., a daughter of Benjamin and Sallie Watson. Mr. and Mrs. Liter have two children: Mary Estelle and Martha Louedith. Mr. Liter is a Republican in politics and fraternally is a member of the Eagles. He is a member of the committee appointed to reconstruct the electrical construction ordinance for buildings in the city of Lodi; he is also an executive on the Lodi playground committee. He was instrumental in establishing the Exchange Club in Lodi and was its vice-president during 1922. He and his family are members of the First Christian Church of Lodi, where he is a teacher in the Bible school. Mr. Liter is a public-spirited citizen, a friend of education and promoter of general progress, and enjoys the thorough confidence of his fellow citizens.

WALTER E. MAESTRETTI.—Among the younger generation of ranchers of the Elliott district is Walter E. Maestretti, who is making a decided success of his agricultural activities. He is a Californian by birth, born at San Francisco on December 3, 1890, a son of Emilio and Media Frances (Orr) Maestretti, the former a native of Canton Ticino, Switzerland, and the latter of San Francisco, Cal. The father, Emilio Maestretti, was born in 1863 and when sixteen years of age came to California and began work as a shepherd; later he went into the sheep business for himself. In 1893 the father bought 160 acres at Clay Station, Sacramento County, and engaged in general farming, specializing in the raising of turkeys on a large scale. Emilio Maestretti married Media Frances Orr, a daughter of Andrew Younger Orr, a native of Scotland, who came around the Horn as a sailor with Captain Sir Herbert Austin. Landing in San Francisco, he immediately went to the mines at Camp Seco; later when he returned to New York he enlisted and served in the 142nd New York Volunteer Infantry, and being a baker by trade he followed it throughout the Civil War. They are the parents of seven children: Walter E., the subject of this sketch; Emma; Andrew, born at Clay Station July 1, 1895; George resides in Sacramento; Josie is the wife of Andrew Aldrich; Alfred, living in Sacramento; and Wesley.

The education of Walter E. Maestretti was obtained in the district school near Clay Station and when he was twenty-two years old he left home and settled in the Elliott section of San Joaquin County, where in partnership with his brother Andrew, he farms a 144-acre tract of land. Besides their farming activities, they own a Holt seventy-five-horsepower tractor, a Holt harvesting outfit, and a full line of grain farming implements and are kept busy a great portion of the time doing tractor contract work throughout the county.

Mr. Maestretti entered the service of his country during the World War in December of 1917, and was sent to Camp Lewis and placed in the Ninety-first Division, Fifth Battalion, Company Fifteen of the One Hundred and Sixty-sixth Depot Brigade, but on account of illness was unable to leave Camp Lewis and in January of 1918 was discharged from the service and returned to his home in Elliott.

PABLO MIRAMONTES.—The name of Miramontes has been a prominent one in the early history of California since the grandfather of our subject received a grant of California land as a reward for his valiant service to the King of Spain. Our subject was born at Halfmoon Bay in 1875, a son of Jose Miramontes, who was born at Yerba Buena, now San Francisco, March 28, 1835. The California grant of land was known as the Miramontes grant and embraced all land from the Pacific Ocean to Half Moon Bay and the Coast Range of mountains; this rancho included the famous Palo Alto rancho and Leland Stanford's lands in the Coast Range. Jose Miramontes was married twice and four children were born of the first union; of the second union six children were born, all now deceased but Pablo, the subject of this sketch. When Pablo was eleven years old he was taken by his parents to San Joaquin County and Jose Miramontes was employed on the ranch of Undine & Williams in the Delta; later on he was in charge of the livestock on the Williams & Bixler farms which he held until his death in 1912.

Fifteen years ago Pablo Miramontes succeeded his father, having full charge of all the livestock on the Williams & Bixler ranch. For many years he did competitive riding at fairs and rodeos in Sacramento and Stockton, winning the highest honors on every occasion. His record is entering a track and in an hour and a half, breaking and riding five of the wildest horses that could be obtained. Six years ago he was obliged to give up exhibition riding on account of an accident received while working on the ranch. He has broken 135 head of work horses on the Bixler ranch and takes special pride in his work. He lives a quiet, retired life and is well and favorably known by all who know him as an authority on livestock.

JOHN J. NOWAK.—A rancher whose thorough understanding of the agricultural conditions in California has enabled him to attain substantial success is John J. Nowak, of Dry Creek, about three and one-half miles northwest of Elliott school. He was born near Galt on January 14, 1889, the son of Adam and Katherine Nowak, his father having come to California when about twenty-one years old. Adam Nowak grew up a farmer, and reared a family of five children; Stanislaus; Anna became Mrs. Joseph Steiner; John J. is the subject of our review; Frank, born October 5, 1890, is next to the youngest; Clara is now Mrs. Albert Schmidt.

The children attended school in the Alabama district, in Sacramento County, enjoying home-life for a while in that section, the recipient of all the affection bestowable by parents who are still living and are honored residents at Lodi. After a while the father removed from the Alabama district to San Joaquin County, where he bought a ranch of 220 acres on Dry Creek, northwest of Elliott. This is the ranch which our subject is today operating, leasing it from his father; and there he has fourteen acres of Zinfandel grapes, while the balance is in alfalfa and pasture and grain land. His father had improved this ranch with all necessary farm buildings, all of which proved a great advantage. John Nowak has a small dairy of ten cows, and is assisted by his brother Frank, who is working for him.

Besides having something worth while to show for his farm enterprises, Mr. Nowak has a military record of which he may well be proud. On April 28, 1918, he entered the U. S. service in the World War as a member of Company C, 316th Ammunition train, 91st Division, trained for two months at Camp Lewis, and was then sent across to France, where he went through all the drives in which the 91st Division participated. He served as a truck driver, and experienced several narrow escapes. He returned to America safely with his regiment, and on May 13, 1919, was honorably discharged at the San Francisco Presidio. Reaching home, he took up the problems of the ranch, and with increasing success he has been solving them ever since.

MRS. W. L. BRENNAN.—A favored native daughter of San Joaquin County is found in Mrs. W. L. Brennan, a daughter of the late John O'Malley and the widow of the late W. L. Brennan, both prominent and highly honored citizens of this county. She was born on the John O'Malley ranch two miles above Atlanta, on the French Camp Road, where her father owned 1,320 acres of grain land, which he farmed successfully for many years. John O'Malley was born in Ireland and in young manhood came to the United States and settled in Connecticut, where he was later married to Ann Elizabeth Brennan, also born in Ireland. John O'Malley came to California in the early 'fifties alone and upon arriving in Stockton became steward of the Weber House, now known as the Occidental Hotel. His wife and two children, born in the East, joined him in Stockton in 1855. This worthy pioneer couple were the parents of nine children, five of whom are now living. John O'Malley retired from the hotel business on account of his health and went to the mines near Copperopolis, but soon became interested in farming and became unusually prosperous in the raising of wheat and other grain. The O'Malley family have always been prominent in the Catholic Church and John O'Malley donated large sums of money for its advancement. Both parents are now deceased, and while their heirs have sold considerable of the property, they still retain the old home place of 130 acres because of its tender associations.

Mary Agnes O'Malley attended the Van Allen district school in the vicinity of her father's ranch and finished her education at St. Agnes Convent in Stockton. On November 13, 1882, she was married to William L. Brennan, familiarly known as Billy Brennan, a native of Ireland, who came to California in 1872. He was the proprietor of the San Joaquin livery stable, the leading one in Stockton for many years. He was a public-spirited citizen and among his various civic duties he was park commissioner. Mr. and Mrs. Brennan became the parents of nine children: John James, Vincent John, William Leo, Sylvester Ambrose, Austin Edward, are all deceased; the living children are Cyril Joseph; William Leland married Ruth Irene Craven and they have one child, William Leland, Jr., and reside in Stockton; Anna Clare; and Reginald Vincent, a student of dentistry at the Affiliated Colleges in San Francisco. Mr. Brennan owned considerable valuable real estate in Stockton, including a number of store buildings. He passed away November 23, 1914, mourned by all who knew him as a man of strict honesty and upright dealings. He was known throughout the county as a staunch Democrat. Mrs. Brennan is a member of St. Mary's Catholic Church and the family home is located at 1119 North San Joaquin street.

LOUIS CALESTINI.—An enterprising realtor of Stockton, Louis Calestini, as a former member of the firm of Triolo & Calestini, and more recently of the Louis Calestini Real Estate Company, has become one of the active promoters of country and city property in this locality. A native Californian, he was born in San Francisco, Cal., on November 15, 1884, a son of Luige and Clementina (Reholi) Calestini, both natives of Italy. Luige Calestini came to California in early days and conducted a grocery store in Stockton.

At the age of six, Louis Calestini was taken back to Italy to be educated, and for eight years attended the grammar and high schools of Parma. After finishing high school, he became a special writer on a weekly newspaper in Spezia, writing special articles on the "Life of the Students." In 1902 he returned to America and located in New York City, where he worked for the Butterick Pattern Company for two years. At the end of this time he came to California and became the receiving clerk for the Italian-Swiss Colony Company in San Francisco, which position he occupied until 1908, when he became a real estate salesman. Close attention to business and hard work brought him considerable success, and three years later, in 1911, a partnership was formed with John P. Triolo in the real estate and insurance business under the firm name of Triolo & Calestini. Success crowned their intelligent efforts; and many large real estate deals, in city and country property, were consummated by them. During the past five years, they erected and sold twelve business blocks, among them being the following: the Realty Building, the Japanese Theater, a four-story Japanese lodging house, the Nippon Hospital. They have also built thirty fine residences and a number of apartment houses throughout the city. They erected seven buildings on Lafayette street between Hunter and Center streets. Some of their buildings they have sold the second time at a handsome profit. The J. E. Penny block on East Main street netted the owner a profit of $9,000 in two years. They sold the Bronx Hotel and the Masonic Temple building, and the Hodgkin block, on the southeast corner of Eldorado and Weber. They also sold over 200 lots in the business section of Stockton, on which business blocks have been erected. The two-story business block on South California street, where their office was located, was owned by them. Country property also received their attention, as they bought, developed and sold many dairy and fruit ranches throughout the county. At one time they owned a seventy-acre dairy ranch on the Calaveras River near Linden, which was stocked with one of the best herds of Holstein cows in the county. The firm ranked among the first in the city and county. Recently Mr. Caletini withdrew from the firm, and is now doing business under the firm name of Louis Caletini Real Estate Company.

Mr. Caletini's marriage united him with Miss Mary Gianelli, a native Californian, and they are the parents of two children, Leo and Elma. Mr. Caletini has recently returned from a fifteen-months' trip to Italy. He was accompanied on the trip by his family, visiting places of interest throughout Europe.

WILLIAM J. SCOTT.—Among the well-known and successful contractors now operating in San Joaquin County is William J. Scott of Stockton. He was born in Belfast, Ireland, on November 18, 1887, the son of English parents, and as a lad he attended school near Whitehaven, Cumberland, England, until he was fourteen, then he became apprenticed to learn the trade of carpenter in Cleator, England, the time being seven years to complete the trade and he had to give a bond of fifty dollars as a guarantee that he would remain the required period of time. The wage paid him was one dollar per week, and in addition he had to supply his own tools; in England it requires a greater variety of tools to carry on the carpenter trade and the lad had two chests full of different kinds of tools. He learned the trade on the large estate of M. Ainsworth, a member of parliament who owned mines and mills and houses that were occupied by the employees who numbered thousands, and his training covered every department of wood working craft, pattern making, mill work, turning, etc. It is safe to say that the knowledge gained in those seven years have equipped Mr. Scott to be a specialist in almost every line of work where wood, brick or cement is used in building.

When he had finished his apprenticeship he went to London and in time became a foreman with a large contracting firm, later was manager, and before he left England he was a partner, the firm being known as Scott & Meech, general contractors at Brixton Hill, London, Southwest. This firm built hundreds of seven-room houses of brick and stone, with leaded-glass windows, for a man who owned the property and afterwards sold them. It was a frequent sight to see twenty of these houses going up at one time on a single street, enclosed by stone and brick walls, and often there would be several blocks of houses under construction at one time. Five special designs were used in every one hundred houses built. In England a man working for a contractor was under close scrutiny, as his family history, past experience and even the clothes he wore must be satisfactory to the employer.

William J. Scott had heard much about California and he was very anxious to see the land of sunshine and gold for himself and in 1911 he left his native land bound for San Francisco, and he arrived in the city of Stockton in the winter during a flood when many of the streets were under water. He was accompanied by his brother, Samuel Scott, a mechanic who had hoped to find employment in some factory here but he was unsuccessful and soon went away. William J. was built of sterner stuff and remained. He could not find any work at his trade here so he went to Middle River to work on a cannery under construction. Arriving at his destination he approached the foreman, who asked him if he had brought his blankets. This was his initial experience into the life of the workman in this state and he was obliged to send back to Stockton for an outfit and he was bunked in a room with eight others. When the job was finished, Mr. Scott came back to Stockton and was engaged as a stair-builder by the Union Planing Mill; later he worked for Totten & Bryant, becoming foreman of their crew. He again was employed by the Union Planing Mill Company as the manager of their plant, remaining until he took up contracting on his own account in 1913. It is needless to say that Mr. Scott had many trying experiences getting used to Western life and ways, often wishing he had remained back in England, but would never admit defeat and stuck to his work until he has risen to a position of prominence.

In 1913, Mr. Scott began taking contracts in Stockton, his first contract being the Golden West Hotel, and soon had a fine business started, giving every part of the construction work his personal attention. Among some of the homes he built during the ensuing years are M. Woodward, J. Patti, G. Jordan, H. Patterson, Grover Smith, J. Howe, S. H. Rothermal and E. E. Jenkins; he built the Elmwood school, Greenwood school, and Summer Home school near Manteca; and he also has done considerable private work for E. F. Harris. He erected the modern block for Charles Gall on West Main Street and the new building for the Black's Package Company on Weber Avenue, as well as remodeled their old store, and built and designed the Baccico flats on East Poplar Street; he also rebuilt Cowell Bros.' building on Weber Avenue and Hunter Street.

The marriage of Mr. Scott in 1913 united him with Miss Margaret Black, born in England and a niece of the late Prof. Samuel Black of San Diego, the former president of the State Normal of that city. This union has been blessed by two children: Samuel James and Mary Janet—twins. Mr. Scott is a Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Sciois and the Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers Association since its organization, and Builders' Exchange. In religious connection he is an elder in the First Presbyterian Church, and superintendent of the Sunday school. In 1920 he took his family for an extended trip back to England and visited points of interest, old scenes and friends of his youth, but having become typically Western he was not content to stay there, even though he had an offer from the builders' association to start him in business. He returned to the country of his adoption more than ever glad that he had pitched his tent in California where opportunities are offered the busy man to make a name and place for himself on his own merits, as has been done by Mr. Scott. He is a "booster" for San Joaquin County and feels that it has only made a start for the prosperity that is to be granted it and its citizens in the future.

LOUIS S. PELETZ.—A public-spirited man who believes it to be both the duty and the privilege of the citizen to contribute in every way possible to both the building up and the upbuilding of the community, is Louis S. Peletz, a contractor and builder, located at 619 East Miner Avenue, Stockton. He was born in Russia on August 15, 1883, and attended school there for a short time, and learned the trade of carpenter and cabinetmaker. He then removed to England and from 1901 to 1903 worked at his trade; later, in 1903, he set sail for the United States and landed in New York City during that year. He worked at his trade by day and attended night school and in this way passed through the grammar grades and the high school, specializing in architectural drawing. He spent a number of years working for an education, but finally mastered the English language and was well fitted for his life's work. He followed his trade in New York and was superintendent of construction for a New York firm of contractors. During the year of 1911 he removed to Oakland, Cal., and in the spring of 1912 came to Stockton and was employed by the Totten & Brand Planing Mill for two years. In the fall of 1914 he set up in business for himself as building contractor. Some of the outstanding buildings erected by him are as follows: the Walsh, Selma and Jacobs apartments; the August school; Dr. J. A. Stamer flats; J. Greenberg residence, a store building for Judge Tye, and a store building for L. Jacobs, and other fine homes in Stockton; a $10,000 residence for W. C. Brown near Lodi and the Burwood school near Escalon; in the summer of 1920 he erected a $50,000 garage of brick and concrete in Fresno, and has since built $35,000 worth of buildings there. His conscientious and painstaking work bespeaks for him an increased patronage and great financial gains.

The marriage of Mr. Peletz united him with Miss Rose Davidson, a native of Russia who came to America when only five years old. They are the parents of two children: Harold and Cyril. Mr. Peletz takes a deep interest in civic and business affairs and is an ardent supporter of all progressive measures for the good of his locality.

GIOMBATTA CANESSA.—An Italian-American who, on account of his marked success in the cultivation of a trim orchard and vineyard of some twenty acres four and one-half miles out of Stockton, on the White Road, the result of his combined progressive methods and thorough, scientific industry, has become one of the most interesting ranchers in that locality, is Giobatta Canessa, who was born in Canale province, Genoa, Italy, in 1870, the son of Louis and Mary (Cunco) Canessa. His father was a farmer, and he lived and died in Italy, where his affectionate and equally devoted mother also breathed her last. The worthy couple had eight children: Nicholas, deceased; Antonio; Giobatta, the subject of this story; Rosie, Angelo, Louisa and Mary are dead; and Anna.

Reared in Italy, and educated in her public schools, Giobatta, on the 20th of September, 1888, arrived in San Francisco, where he secured work in a fish market. He could not stand the dampness, however, and after three months took up vegetable garden work for two years. He then spent one summer at Ventura, and having returned to the north, he put in four months in a hotel at San Rafael. He then secured a job with the Pacheco-Gray Tankhouse Company, and for the following three and one-half years worked for them. After that he was employed in a lumber yard, between Fourth and Fifth streets, in San Francisco.

In 1904, he bought twenty acres of stubblefield, but soon sold one-half of it, setting out the other ten acres as an orchard and vineyard, and then built a home upon it. A few years later he purchased a neighboring ten acres, on the north, which had already been set out as an orchard, and for two years he managed these twenty acres for himself. He then leased the ranch and ran a vegetable and fruit wagon to Waterford, Knights Ferry, Turlock and Jamestown, his object being to help pay for his farm.

After that, he made a trip to Toronto, Canada, where he spent three months, when he returned to Italy and spent some time in a delightful visit to his home and native district, and among kinsfolk and friends. Coming back to San Francisco in 1908, he was married on November 29 to Miss Katherine Roggio, a native of Chiavari, Italy, and the daughter of Guisepe and Angela Roggio, a very worthy couple still living in Italy, who had five children, the eldest being Guisepe, the next youngest, Alfred, who was killed in the late World War, in brave action on the battlefield, and Angela, Christina, and Katherine, the devoted wife of our subject. Two children have blessed this union, Rita and Norma. Mr. and Mrs. Canessa have a comfortable home, where they extend a welcome to all who come their way; and as an industrious, thrifty and public-spirited couple, they afford a fine example of the native of Europe who frequently adds much, in wealth of one kind or another, on settling here and electing to become an American citizen.

C. W. COFFMAN.—A worthy representative of Handy County, Va., who became a well-known pioneer of the Prairie state, is C. W. Coffman, who was born in Henderson County, Illinois, on September 24, 1863, and there reared and educated in one of the common schools. His father was Jesse Walter Coffman, who married Miss Margaret Switzer. Four children were granted the sturdy couple. Isaac, William Henry and John are deceased; and there is left only the subject of this story.

Mrs. Coffman died when the lad was eleven years of age, and his father married a second time. He had three ranches, one of 122 acres, and two of eighty acres each; and C. W. remained at home with his father until he was twenty-five years of age. In the county where he was born, he married, on March 8, 1896, Miss Atlanta Jane Hazen, the daughter of Joseph and Emeline Hazen, and a member of a family of experienced farmer folks. She was born in Nemaha County, Kansas, and her father was a native of Ohio, who moved to Kansas and took up government land when she was one and one-half years old. Then, after awhile, they removed to Henderson County, Illinois, and there Mrs. Coffman was reared and educated in the public schools. They have had nine children in the Hazen family, but only three are living today, and these are Henry, Mrs. Atlanta Coffman, and Verna, Mrs. Biasi.

Mr. and Mrs. Coffman followed farming in the vicinity of the old home place until some seven years after their marriage, and then they moved to Coffee County, Kansas, where they bought a farm and ranched until they came to California, in 1912. They were fortunate in settling at once in San Joaquin County, where Mr. Coffman first purchased a vineyard of twenty acres, which he sold in 1918, when he bought the present ranch of ten acres on the Cherokee Lane Road, about two miles southeast of Acampo, and one mile south of the Houston School. The Coffmans have been here on this ranch since 1918, and they devote it partly to vineyard, and partly to orchard purposes. They have four children.

A staunch Democrat, Mr. Coffman is nevertheless a broad-minded "booster" of the best things locally, regardless of partisanship. When he was a resident of Kansas, he was a school trustee, and he has always been interested in the problems of public education. He was long an Odd Fellow, and attended the lodges, until deafness prevented him from enjoying the occasions, when, to the regret of many, he withdrew. Mrs. Coffman and the daughter, Iva, are members of the Rebekahs.

LOUIS DELUCCHI.—An enterprising young business man of Stockton, engaged in the grocery business, Louis Delucchi is the junior member of the firm of Gaia, Delucchi & Company, dealers in staple and fancy groceries, and who also carry a full line of market products. This enterprising mercantile house carries a large stock and the success which they enjoy is well deserved. Louis Delucchi is a native son of California, born in Stockton, October 9, 1899, the only child of Augustine and Tillie (Botto) Delucchi, both natives of Italy. Augustine Delucchi came to Stockton while still a young man, and there he met and married Miss Tillie Botto; thirty-three years of his life were spent in the hotel business in Stockton. Both parents are residing in Stockton. Louis attended grammar and high school in Stockton and at sixteen years of age began his business career, entering the firm of E. Fontana & Company, the partnership continuing until 1915, when Caesar Gaia purchased the interest of E. Fontana and the business was continued under the firm name of Gaia, Delucchi & Company, located at 320 East Market street, which is still their present business location; here they manufacture ravioli, tagliavini, salami and other food products. They supply Lodi and other neighboring cities and towns in the mountains and foothill country with ravioli, macaroni, salami, Italian ham, domestic and imported cheese, fish and other delicacies, as well as a complete line of staple and fancy groceries.

The marriage of Mr. Delucchi occurred in 1917 and united him with Miss Irene Aaron, a daughter of Capt. Aaron of the Stockton Fire Department. They are the parents of one child, Louis, Jr. Mr. Delucchi is erecting a residence at the corner of Lexington and Allston Way, where the family will reside as soon as it is completed. Mr. Delucchi is a member of the Eagles, Druids and the Stockton Italian Club. He is a self-made man, since the success he has made in life has been the result of his individual efforts.

MONROE D. EATON.—The progressive spirit and thorough understanding which Monroe D. Eaton displays in connection with the real estate business has brought him most gratifying results and at the same time has been a salient factor in the advancement of the county. His parents, Edward R. and Eliza (Wright) Eaton, both natives of New York State, were early settlers of California, where they engaged in farming pursuits on a ranch east of Stockton and on which Monroe D. was born April 30, 1862. His father sailed around the Horn to California in 1860 and in time became a very successful farmer and a large landowner. There are three living children in the family: Mrs. Ella M. Smail of Stockton; Fred F. of Palo Alto; and Monroe D., our subject. His father passed away in October, 1887.

The education of Monroe D. Eaton was obtained in the grammar and high schools of Stockton and finished with a course in the Stockton Business College. He then entered the employ of the M. P. Henderson Company and followed his trade of woodworker, making wagons and other vehicles and farming implements, for seven years. In the spring of 1886 he established a real estate business with Tom Walsh as a partner, occupying a small office on East Main street, which continued for three years. Mr. Eaton then went into partnership with Eugene M. Grunsky, their partnership covering a period of a few years, when Mr. Eaton sold his interest to Otto Grunsky, a brother of his former partner. In 1893 a partnership was formed with William G. Buckley and Sidney S. Newell, and when Mr. Newell retired from the business three years later, Eaton & Buckley have continued the business to the present time. They have made a specialty of buying ranch property, subdividing and selling, having subdivided more ranches than any other firm in Stockton, among the most outstanding being the Elliott tract of 160 acres near Lodi; the Grover tract of 400 acres on the San Joaquin River; the Barnhart tract in Lodi of 410 acres; these tracts were subdivided into lots and small acreages and is now built up, which has been the means of increasing the population and prosperity of the section. The Wilhoit and Douglass tract of 3,500 acres on Roberts Island was subdivided into twenty acres or more and sold; also the Kellerman tract of 240 acres, the Adam Parker establishment of 355 acres in and adjoining Tracy, and many other large tracts of importance, their main idea being to attract new settlers to the county, which is the most gratifying development of any community. Mr. Eaton enjoys the reputation of being the best-posted man on land valuations in the county. As a director of the Stockton Savings & Loan Bank, he is a member of the finance committee and appraiser of bank loans.

The marriage of Mr. Eaton united him with Miss Ida B. Petty, a native Californian, whose father was an early settler and farmer of San Joaquin County. They are the parents of three children: Zelma is the wife of W. F. Dietrich, a mining engineer with Stanford University; Captain Ralph M., a professor in Harvard University. He is a graduate of the University of California and of Harvard, and was a student there when the United States entered the war; he received a commission of second lieutenant, Infantry of the Rainbow Division; saw active service all through the war on the West Front and was advanced to first lieutenant at Verdun when the armistice was signed. At the close of the war he was acting captain of the Supply Company. Monroe D. Jr., enters Stanford in the fall. Mr. Eaton is a member of the San Joaquin Farm Bureau and has always been active in promoting the welfare of the growers of his locality. In his fraternal relations, he is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, of the N. S. G. W., of the Stockton Elks, No. 218, and a charter member of the Truth Lodge of Odd Fellows.

ERNEST FOX.—Prominent among the important sociological agencies at work in Stockton for the betterment of society and the making of the city one of the choice places of residence in the United States must be rated the Stockton Coffee Club, at 22 North Center Street, organized by Noel Garrison, the progressive and popular principal of the Stockton high school, but suggested by Ernest Fox, the originator of the American Coffee Club movement, and now the manager of the local club. The movement is based upon the English Coffee Club plan, with the addition of the non-profit and automatic extension feature. In England, coffee clubs are private enterprises conducted for the profit of the proprietor; but Mr. Fox's plan has eliminated private ownership and provides that any profits resulting must go into extensions and betterment of service.

Under the plan of Mr. Fox, the club is positively kept out of the restaurant business, and so does not arouse the antagonism of other restaurants or any precautionary opposition of dealers in other lines who may fear that the scope of the movement might be enlarged to include their own. The sale of coffee and other foods is not the primary purpose of the club; the primary motive is the maintenance of a social club-room, and the sale of the coffee is made merely as a means of financing the club. One result of this policy is that the patrons of the place do not feel that they are the recipients of charity; and since service is the purpose of the club, and not commercial gain, the help employed find that the work is dignified and there is little or no trouble in getting workers to wait upon others.

Mr. Fox organized the first club in San Diego in 1898, and this pioneer club, watched with keen interest from the Pacific to the Atlantic, experienced a wonderful growth as long as it held to the Fox plan. The next club was organized in San Jose, on November 22, 1900; and seven years later the Stockton Club was organized. Since then there has been a movement to effect a state supervising organization, and this should be of peculiar satisfaction to Mr. Fox, who started the ball a-rolling in America, and has helped to organize nearly all the coffee clubs in California. It should also interest the sociological student, for funds for the club are obtained for the most part through one dollar membership fees, donations and receipts from concerts and entertainments. Mr. Fox, who was born and reared in England, enters heartily into American life, and is strongly inclined to the humane side of life everywhere; and in his laudible efforts, he is ably and loyally assisted by his good wife.

February 13, 1907, witnessed the organization of the Coffee Club in Stockton, at 229 East Weber avenue, from which place it was removed to 22 North California street, and thence to 446 East Weber avenue, and finally to its present location at 22 North Center street, where it is now to be seen in a flourishing condition. It provides free reading and social rooms, with checkers, chess, dominoes, etc., and lunch at reasonable prices. The purpose, in short, is to provide a social center free from degrading influences, for the human being is in need of rational enjoyment.

Mr. Fox fought against the idea that the Coffee Club movement should prove a substitute for the saloon, although ninety per cent of the contributions were made on that theory. Mr. Fox stated, in a letter to the "American Issue," of Dec. 4, 1903, his views upon this subject. "I do not call our Coffee Club a saloon substitute," he says. "It is more than that. It is a social center free from all that is evil, and is used by dozens of young men, many of them homeless, who would otherwise not know what to do. Good treatment may be good enough for a horse or a dog, but a human being needs fellowship. It is partly because this fellowship has been denied to him that he has taken the substitute supplied by the saloon; always bear in mind that the saloon is the substitute, and that the wild revelry of the sa'oon has been substituted for rational enjoyment."

The first coffee club in California was incorporated through the efforts of Mr. Fox in 1898, at San Diego, but it eventually failed because they started a bakery, going outside of their original scope and purpose. The second coffee club was started in San Jose in 1900; and Mr. Fox is still interested in its wonderful success and has furnished every manager for it since. He has also taken a very live interest in the Lodi Coffee Club, which was opened in 1911. He also helped to establish the Santa Rosa Coffee Club, which is financially the most successful of any in the state; and he and his associates are now ready to organize the second branch of the Stockton Club, which will be a mixed club for women as well as men. Mr. Fox has devoted twenty-three years of his life to this work, and his heart and soul are in it.

He was born at Sandbach, England, on April 7, 1868, the son of William and Sarah (Pedley) Fox; his father was an English school-teacher, who later became a photographer. He lost his devoted wife at Sandbach in 1891, and in 1896 he brought his two daughters, the subject of this sketch, and two older brothers, William and Frank, to San Diego, the youngest brother, Arnold, having preceded him to America. He died there only three weeks after he arrived. Ernest was brought up in the Congregationalist Church in England, but attended the Methodist day school at Sandbach; and when only fourteen, he went to work in a drapery and dry goods store in his native town.

At Stockton, in 1907, Mr. Fox was married to Miss Adelaide May Waite of Seattle, a daughter of Charles A. Waite and a distant relative of former Chief Justice Morrison Remick Waite. She attended school at Minneapolis and Seattle. Her mother, who was Martha A. Mathews before her marriage, is still living at Seattle, a native of Pennsylvania. Like her husband, Mrs. Fox belongs to the Congregational Church. She has entered actively into the work of her husband, and has been one of the determining factors to make real the purpose of the Stockton Coffee Club Association. This purpose is to provide a place of refreshment, recreation and amusement where no intoxicating liquors, cigars or tobacco in any form shall be sold; and it is not surprising that about 800 people daily visit the Stockton Coffee Club to lunch, read, rest or enjoy a social chat. The income from the lunch counter pays all expenses. On April 9, 1923, Mr. Fox opened a second Coffee Club at 19 South Hunter street, where a rest-room and reading-room for women are provided. The Stockton Coffee Club was duly incorporated under the laws of California, but is not profit-sharing to its stockholders, being a benevolent association, though not a charity. In 1905, Mr. Fox revisited England and was everywhere enthusiastically received when he appeared to tell of the great reform work started by him here in California.

DR. NATHAN SINAI.—A public official of Stockton who enjoys the esteem and confidence of everyone, is Nathan Sinai, the popular health officer of the city, who was born, a native son, in Stockton, on November 28, 1894, the youngest of a family of seven children born to Max and Sophia Sinai, early settlers of Stockton, where the father has been a merchant for many years. Nathan Sinai attended the public schools and was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1911. After that he matriculated at the University of California, and in 1915 stepped forth as a graduate of that world-famous institution. Becoming a veterinary surgeon, he went in for a general practice of his profession, and when he had established an enviable reputation he entered the employ of the Public Health Service as a food inspector. He was by this time just the man wanted for efficient work in the World War; and having taken the U. S. Army examinations in 1917, he was appointed second lieutenant and later first lieutenant in the Veterinary Corps at Chicago and Camp Kearney, and was in charge of food inspections. In 1918 he was honorably discharged, whereupon he returned to Stockton and resumed work as city food inspector.

In October, 1921, Dr. Sinai was appointed by the City Commissioners health officer for Stockton; and his assumption of the responsibilities involved was the more interesting because he was the youngest man to hold that office in the state. The appointment met with general commendation and endorsement, and in the trying interval Dr. Sinai has more than made good. Under his administration the sanitary condition of the city has greatly improved, and Stockton is more than ever able to make its appeal as a home center. Dr. Sinai is a member of the Foresters of America, Reno Lodge No. 597, B. P. O. E., as well as Stockton Lodge of Odd Fellows.

JAMES C. SOMMERS.—A popular official of the progressive Stockton Chamber of Commerce who has proven himself to be doubly efficient because far-seeing and particularly wide-awake, is James C. Sommers, the manager of the traffic department of that well-managed organization. He was born in Hope, Kans., on September 13, 1890, and attended the public schools at Ellsworth and Abilene in that state. He entered the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad at Ellsworth, and continued in various positions with that great company until he came further westward in 1912. At San Francisco he engaged with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and then he removed to Sacramento, in order to continue Southern Pacific work there. In each of these cities he established a reputation for both knowing the field of railroad endeavor and problems, and for working unselfishly to give the public that satisfaction which comes only when the public realizes the great service to civilization constantly performed by the railroads.

In 1916 Mr. Sommers came to Stockton to assume the responsibility of assistant traffic manager with the Chamber of Commerce of this city; and the next year he was appointed manager of the traffic department. He joined the 118th Corps, U. S. Engineers, and he saw ten months of service on the front in France. After the armistice his company ran the first train into Verdun. He thus returned to the United States much richer in experience of a kind likely to be helpful in his particular line of work.

The traffic department of the Chamber of Commerce covers in its supervision and activity a wide and most useful field. It establishes rates with the railroad companies for the local manufacturing companies, handling the checking of their accounts and filing any claims against the transportation companies; while the community work includes the adjustment of rates for local merchants on freight to and from Stockton; and it also includes the adjusting of rates for competitive centers, making them to conform with local rates. It confers with projectors of new industries, contemplating the possibility of locating in Stockton, and by going over the ground thoroughly with the parties interested, endeavors to show the advantages of making Stockton their headquarters. It also handles the loss and damage claims of local shippers—a very important branch of the Chamber of Commerce work which has come to the fore in recent years. Mr. Sommers has been able repeatedly to give entire satisfaction to local merchants and manufacturers having such claims. In this ambition he has been assisted to a great extent through his years of invaluable experience with the great railroad companies, whose ways he understands, and with whom he has the greater influence because he knows how to go about it to give satisfaction to both sides, and thus to bring them together in harmonious working. Mr. Sommers is a live wire in the American Legion of Stockton, belonging to Karl Ross Post; and he is also a popular member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks.

FRANK TUCKER.—A progressive enterprise, which has given the city increased commercial standing, is the building business of Frank Tucker, who was born in Stockton, San Joaquin County, Cal., on August 8, 1871. His father, Thomas J. Tucker, a native of Maine, came to California via Panama during 1851, locating in Tuolumne County, where he engaged in mining at Shaw's Flat; three years later he located in Stockton and established the first brick yard and made the first bricks ever made in Stockton; his yard was on the present site of the shipyards of the California Navigation & Improvement Company on the north side of the Stockton Channel. Clay for the making of brick was taken from the water front; in 1864 he moved his plant to near what was known as Goodwater Grove, now Oak Park, and continued there until 1882, when he retired from brick-making to engage in teaming. He furnished the brick for the first court house erected in 1854 and for many of the old buildings erected in early days, many of which are still standing, among them being the old Holden building, Odd Fellows block, U. S. Hotel and Russ House. He married Miss Ellen Chatham, a native of Lancashire, England, and they were the parents of three children, all living: John E., Frank, our subject, and Mrs. W. H. F. Schmacher of Anaheim, Cal. Both parents died in Stockton.

Frank received his education at St. Mary's College, Stockton, and learned the trade of brickmason with Confer Bros., working with them for five years, when he started for himself as a contractor and builder, and many fine residences and buildings attest his ability, among them the Wolf block, the Simon block, the Barnhart residence, and many others in Stockton, as well as a number of fine brick residences in the country. For five years he covered a territory including Fresno, Tracy, Merced, and as far north as Seattle, where he erected a number of brick blocks, his operations covering a period from 1893 to the present time. Other constructive work was the building of many residences in Stockton, for the purpose of disposing of them, thus building up a portion of Stockton with first-class houses. He is interested with other capitalists in a gold mine in Tuolumne County.

Mr. Tucker's marriage united him with Miss Mamie Filippi, a native of Stockton and a member of a pioneer family. Fraternally he is a member of the Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M., Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F., and the Sciots.

WALTER W. TURNER.—In this age and generation, when so many motorists have lost confidence in garage service, and when this disappointment leads back, in so many cases, to experience with shops, the operators of which are willing to turn out almost any service, if only they can start the traveler off on his journey and get him away from their premises, it is refreshing to stop at the Turner & Lease Garage, at 122 North School Street, Lodi, whose proprietors, Walter W. Turner and Russell Lease, are known far and wide as experts of such high standards and conscientiousness that when they once finish repairs upon an automobile, the owner may well believe he has received dependable work. W. W. Turner was born on the Turner ranch, near New Hope, now Thornton, in San Joaquin County, on April 26, 1876, the son of S. Odillon and Sarah Jane (Tock) Turner, the former a native of Louisiana and the latter of Maine; and in him, therefore, are blended the best strains of Northern and Southern blood. Frank Turner, the grandfather, brought his family to California by way of Cape Horn, traveling in a sailing vessel in the late 50's and he followed farming near Lodi. Our subject's father became a large grain farmer in early days in the Delta district. The Turner ranch is now the Spenser ranch. Several children were born to this worthy couple. Walter W., Jr., lives at Lodi; Delbert resides at Lodi; Lola has become Mrs. Schmidt of Berkeley; and Anna is Mrs. Bechthold of Woodbridge.

Walter attended the district school at Woodbridge, as well as Woodbridge College, and he learned the trade of mechanic with R. A. Jackson, while using a steam engine and working in the Delta district, reclaiming land. Then he farmed grain for three years on Staten Island, and for two years he was superintendent of the B. A. Towne vineyard. For the past twenty years, however, he has been engaged in the garage business, conducting an automobile repair shop; and having come to enjoy the reputation of being one of the very best auto repair mechanics in all San Joaquin County, he has never wanted for patronage, and in fact has been offered work in such increasing proportion as to make it a problem, at times, how to handle it and yet to turn it out in the shape in which it ought always to be done. On September 1, 1921, he took over the Tourist Garage at 122 North School Street, Lodi, an event for the locality, having as a partner Russell Lease, and they changed the name to Turner & Lease Garage, and ever since he has tried to outdistance himself and eclipse his earlier reputation for first-class work. Mr. Turner was an expert bicycle rider, and took part in the bicycle relay race from San Francisco to New York, inaugurated by the Stearns Bicycle Company and the Cleveland Company. Mr. Turner rode for fifteen miles through the Lodi district as the representative of the Stearns Company, and the race was won by this company.

At Stockton, October 22, 1902, Mr. Turner was married to Miss Myrtle Bandy, a native of Napa, and they have two children, twins, Burton B. and Bernice, eighteen years old. He belongs to Lodge No. 218, of the Stockton Elks, and to Lodge No. 848 of the Lodi Eagles, and Lodi Parlor, N. S. G. W., and he enjoys an enviable popularity in their circles.

JOHN A. MUZIO.—The enterprising proprietor of the Muzio orchard and market gardens, located five miles east of Stockton, is John A. Muzio, whose birth occurred at Stockton, Cal., August 4, 1896, the eldest son of Felix and Maria (Pinasco) Muzio, both natives of Genoa, Italy. Felix Muzio was reared on a little Italian farm, the home of his parents, and remained at home until 1894, when he came to California; later his wife and their daughter, Jenny, came to Stockton. Felix Muzio was a hard worker and had succeeded in establishing a home on ten acres of land east of Stockton, but was not permitted to enjoy it long, for he passed away on December 30, 1901, survived by his widow and five children: Adelle is the wife of Stephen Pinasco; John A., our subject; Eugene is a rancher; Ernest R. is a bookkeeper; and Jenny, who died at the age of nine years. After her husband's death, Mrs. Muzio kept the family together and managed the ranch and in 1903 she married Joseph Frugone, born in Genoa, Italy, November 17, 1877; he arrived in Stockton in December, 1900, and engaged in fruit and market gardening. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Frugone: Julia, Louisa, and Jenny.

Felix Muzio purchased ten acres of the home place in 1894 and since that time an additional thirty-five acres has been bought, twenty acres of which is now in vineyard, while the balance is devoted to raising fruit and vegetables for the markets of Stockton. Mr. Muzio has experienced disastrous floods, one in 1907 and another in 1911, when the greater portion of their ranch was under water for a number of weeks at a time. Mr. Muzio, Mr. Frugone, his stepfather, and his two brothers, Eugene and Ernest R., carry on a fine market business, it having grown to such proportions that they have purchased a Moreland truck to haul their products to market.

Mr. Muzio married Miss Loretta Calosso, born near Stockton, a daughter of Frederick Calosso, prominent cherry grower residing near Stockton. They have two children, Frances and Norma. Mr. Muzio votes the Republican ticket and with his brother Eugene is a member of the Red Men.

ROBERT NICHOLS, JR.—An enterprising farmer, who is engaged in orcharding and dairying, is Robert Nichols, Jr., who owns and operates a twenty-eight-acre orchard one mile northwest of Thornton, on which he has made his home since 1912. A native Californian, he was born at Sheldon, August 12, 1881, a son of Robert and Mary (Traganza) Nichols, the former a native of Devonshire, England, and the latter of Placerville, Cal. The father left his native country at seventeen years of age and came to the United States, and three years later came to California. Here he was married a few years later to Miss Mary Traganza, a daughter of Thomas Traganza, an early pioneer of California, who engaged in mining on the Cosunnes River and later took up land from the Mexican government near Sheldon, where he reared his family. In time he came to own 800 acres of land in Sacramento County. Robert and Mary Nichols were the parents of five children: Thomas, Lavina, Mrs. Alltucker, residing at Elk Grove; Mary, Mrs. Schirmer, living in Sacramento; Robert, of this sketch; and Hazel, Mrs. Polhemus, of Elk Grove. The father is living, now aged seventy-five years, while the mother passed away in 1909.

Robert Nichols, Jr., received his education in the Union district school of Sacramento County. In his twentieth year he took up the plumbing and tinning trade under Lattourrette-Fical Company of Sacramento, remaining with this company for four and a half years. Then he returned to the home ranch, which he operated for four years. After this he again went to Sacramento, and purchased a half interest in the Ford agency with Mr. Fical, his former employer. At the end of ten months he sold his interest to his partner and bought a twenty-acre improved ranch about one mile northwest of Thornton, and soon afterward purchased about eight acres more adjoining. Here he is engaged in the raising of beans, alfalfa, and fruit, and also conducts a dairy.

On September 23, 1903, in Sacramento, Mr. Nichols was married to Miss Mabel Gertrude Shepard, a native of Ohio and a daughter of George A. and Eliza M. (Wood) Shepard. Her parents came to California when she was five years old, and her father was employed in the Southern Pacific Railroad shops at Sacramento; and there Mrs. Nichols received her education. Mrs. Nichols is one of two children. Her brother, George W. Shepard, resides in Sacramento. Six years ago her father passed away; the mother now resides in Sacramento. Mr. and Mrs. Nichols are the parents of two children: Roberta Gertrude and Aletha Lilis. In politics Mr. Nichols generally favors the Republican party candidates. For two years he has been constable of the New Hope district of San Joaquin County, and for six years he has been a member of the New Hope school board, and at the present time is clerk of the board. Fraternally, he is a member of the Odd Fellows, Oak Park Lodge No. 5, of Sacramento, and was also a member, a past district deputy and great sachem of the Winnebago Tribe of Red Men, No. 94, at Sacramento. Mrs. Nichols is in charge of the Thornton branch of the San Joaquin County public library. Mr. Nichols is a public-spirited man, favoring any measure that promotes general progress, and has done much valuable service for his community.

BRONSON S. NUTTER, D. D. S.—Occupying a conspicuous place among the leading professional men of the city of Stockton, since the year 1914 Bronson S. Nutter has successfully practiced his profession of dentistry and his clientele is made up of many of the finest families of this thriving city. He is a native son of this city and has reached a high place in the esteem of his fellow citizens, many of whom have known him since he was a child. His birth occurred in Stockton on January 16, 1890, and he is a son of William B. Nutter. To the public schools of his native city Bronson S. Nutter is indebted for the early educational privileges which he received. Completing the grade work he entered the Stockton high school, from which he was graduated with the class of 1910; he then entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in San Francisco and was graduated with the class of 1914 with the degree of D. D. S. Immediately after his graduation he opened offices in Stockton, where he has continuously practiced.

The marriage of Dr. Nutter, which occurred in Stockton, united him with Miss Geraldine Confer, a descendant of a pioneer family of San Joaquin County. Dr. Nutter entered the dental section of the Medical Corps during the World War and his service was at the Letterman General Hospital at the Presidio, San Francisco. Dr. Nutter is very popular in fraternal circles, being identified with the B. P. O. Elks, No. 218; the Delta Blue Lodge; the Sciots, and Karl Ross Post American Legion, and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of San Francisco.

M. J. O'CONNELL.—Numbered among the successful almond growers of the county, M. J. O'Connell has a beautiful and valuable ten-acre orchard three miles northwest of Ripon, which has yielded large profits for a number of years. He is a native son, born at Stockton, November 3, 1876, the only surviving member of his immediate family; he is the son of John and Bridget (O'Neil) O'Connell, both natives of Ireland. John O'Connell left Ireland and came to the United States during the Civil War and was employed as a carpenter on the Union boats in the Boston harbor. While living there his brother William came from Ireland and joined him and in 1867 the two brothers came West and located in Stockton and the O'Connell home was maintained in Stockton until 1917. John O'Connell was killed in a street car accident in Stockton, July 3, 1896, and was survived by his widow and two children. In 1901 the mother passed away, and on July 3, 1902, the only sister of our subject died. M. J. O'Connell received a good education in the Stockton schools and when his school days were over he entered the harness shop of C. Rodder, where he learned the trade of harness-maker and conducted the shop for twenty years; then for five years, until 1917, he was employed by the city of Stockton; then he purchased his present home consisting of ten acres, which he has improved to an almond orchard.

The marriage of Mr. O'Connell united him with Miss Bertha Meyers, a native of Ohio, who came to California with her parents at the age of thirteen. Mr. and Mrs. O'Connell are the parents of two children: Floyd is a rancher, and Gertrude is a student in the Calla district school. Mr. O'Connell is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters and the Almond Growers Association. He is not only an advocate of irrigation but of material progress in general, and as a man of self-attainment wields important influence in his community.

NICOLAUS OBAD.—A representative California rancher, Nicolaus Obad resides on his fine farming estate of twenty-six acres in the Banta district of San Joaquin County, fifteen miles southwest of Stockton on the Lincoln highway. He is progressive, enterprising and thoroughly systematic in his farming activities, and for the success he has won through his own hard labor and conscientious industry he quite deserves the respect and esteem which his fellow-citizens accord him. He was born near Dubovnich, Dalmatia, August 29, 1883, a son of Peter and Mary Obad, who were both natives of the same province in Dalmatia. Paul Obad, a brother of our subject came to California and the San Joaquin Valley in 1887, but has since returned to his native country and there passed away in May, 1910. He had become an American citizen before he returned to Dalmatia. Both parents are living in Dalmatia and are prosperous olive and grain farmers of that country.

Nicolaus Obad received a good grammar school education in the schools of his native province and was reared on his father's farm until he was nineteen years old, when he decided to try his fortune in a new country. He embarked at Havre, France, and fourteen days later arrived in New York. Of a party of ten young men who came to California, Mr. Obad is the only one residing in this county. Being a practical farmer, he soon obtained employment on a ranch, and in 1908 he purchased his present ranch of twenty-six acres, which is devoted to the raising of fruit and alfalfa, and he also conducts a dairy. Recently he erected a fine residence on his ranch where he resides with his family.

The marriage of Mr. Obad occurred on March 22, 1910, and united him with Miss Ellen Durango, and they are the parents of two children, Peter and Mary. In 1907 Mr. Obad received his U. S. citizenship papers and he has never failed to cast his vote for Republican candidates. Fraternaly he is identified with the Knights of Pythias of Tracy. Coming to America when nineteen years of age, he has never regretted the step then taken, for he has worked his way upward, winning success and gaining for himself the confidence and good will of his associates.

JEAN OSPITAL.—Possessed of a temperament that fitted him for the endurance of frontier hardships, Jean Ospital came to California in 1891 when large opportunities were afforded for the exercise of his natural talents. Many and varied have been his experiences in the meantime, but he has surmounted them all and has become recognized as one of the prosperous citizens in San Joaquin County, where he has resided for almost a quarter of a century. He was born at Bigorre, Basses-Pyrenees, France, November 27, 1869, on the ranch of his father, Pierre Ospital. Jean attended public school near his home and at an early age helped his father in the stock business, among his earliest recollections being herding sheep, thus learning by practical experience the lessons that were to prove of inestimable value in later years. He was also employed on neighboring ranches, receiving as compensation for his work, sixty dollars per year. In 1891 he left home for America, and on arriving in California, the first year was spent in sheep herding near Huron, Cal.; then for the next six years he herded sheep in the vicinity of Los Banos; following this he removed to the Wheeler ranch near Bellota and soon thereafter was hired by Mr. Prather as foreman, remaining over seven years. Meantime he had saved sufficient money to start into business for himself and with three partners owned 1500 sheep which they grazed on leased land. Sixteen years ago the partnership was dissolved and Mr. Ospital started with 1000 sheep and has made such splendid success that he is one of the best known sheep men in California.

On October 19, 1907, in Stockton, Mr. Ospital was married to Miss Fannie St. Julian, a native of Navarro, Spain, but reared in Basses-Pyrenees, France. She accompanied some friends to San Francisco about twenty years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Ospital are the parents of five children: Josephine; Peter; John; Julia; and Madalaine. Mr. Ospital owns a fine residence in Tuxedo Park, Stockton, but makes his headquarters on his ranch, known as the Old Conrad place, twenty miles east of Stockton on the San Andreas, Bellota and Linden highway.

LAWRENCE POUNDSTONE.—A successful rancher of San Joaquin County is Lawrence Poundstone, who was born in El Dorado, Cal., April 19, 1878, a son of the pioneer miner, Lawrence Ryder Poundstone, who crossed the plains to California in 1861 from his native state of Pennsylvania. Lawrence Ryder Poundstone married Miss Ann Burke, a native of Michigan, who also came to California in the early sixties. The father became a miner in Eldorado County, and was associated with Colonel Hayward. When Colonel Hayward made his great strike known as the Eureka mine, the father owned a quartz mill about a mile from the Eureka mine and Colonel Hayward purchased the mill. The father died recently at the age of eighty-seven years.

Lawrence Poundstone obtained his education in the public schools of Benicia, Cal. At eighteen years of age he started to work in one of his father's mines; and he followed mining with his father until about four years ago. The Poundstone family still own interests in two mines on Sutter Creek, Amador County.

At Colusa, on November 25, 1905, occurred the marriage of Mr. Poundstone and Miss Nellie Frasier, born in Colusa and a daughter of Jared and Sarah (Alexander) Frasier. Jared Frasier came around the Horn from Canada to California in the fifties, and helped to build the state capitol building at Sacramento. Mrs. Poundstone received her education in the schools of Colusa. She is one of a family of seven children, three of whom are living. The other living children are: Neva, Mrs. Coazza of Grimes, Cal., and Stanley of Colusa. Her father passed away at the age of sixty-eight, while the mother is still living. Four years ago, Mr. Poundstone purchased 120 acres of land in the northern part of San Joaquin County, on the Mokelumne River, about eight miles from Woodbridge. Nine acres of his ranch is devoted to vineyard and the balance is used for raising grain and for pasture for his stock; he conducts a dairy of seventeen cows. Four years ago he erected a fine, modern bungalow residence on his ranch, where he resides with his wife and two children, Miriam and Lawrence, Jr. Mr. Poundstone is a member of Henry Clay Lodge of Masons, Sutter Creek. Mrs. Poundstone is a past noble grand of Sutter Creek Lodge of Rebekahs, and a past worthy matron of the Eastern Star of Sutter Creek; and she is also a member of the California Parlor, N. D. G. W., of Amador City. At the present time Mrs. Poundstone is clerk of the school board of the Ray district.

FREDERICK WILLIAM OTT.—Among the up-builders of San Joaquin County who have been most prominent in the promotion of its interests and in its development is numbered Fred W. Ott. He has for a long period been recognized as a forceful and honored factor in agricultural and business circles of this portion of California. His connection with the public interests of San Joaquin County has been far-reaching and beneficial, and he is now serving his fifth year as deputy county assessor of the Island district. A native of San Joaquin County, he was born on the Ott homestead seven miles southwest of Stockton on June 23, 1879, the only son of Martin Ott, a native of Germany who came to America with his parents when he was six years old and grew up in New York City. He worked in a large department store in New York City until 1858, when he came to California. Here he obtained work in the Southern mines, working for a period of nine years. He accumulated a good fortune in the mines and, on his removal to San Francisco, met C. A. Bachman, who owned a large ranch in this county. Martin Ott purchased 300 acres of rich bottom land for three dollars per acre in 1869 and the same year took up his residence on the property. In 1875 he made a visit back home to Germany, where he married Marie Wille, a native of Wurtemberg. Mr. and Mrs. Ott sailed for America soon after marriage, Mrs. Ott being but seventeen years old. They settled in San Joaquin County. Martin Ott passed away February 8, 1897. The mother resides at her home, 127 W. Willow Street, Stockton.

Fred W. Ott attended the public schools at French Camp and finished in 1893; then for five years he was employed on his father's ranch. He then entered the Western School of Commerce at Stockton, from which he was graduated. After his father's death he returned to the ranch. With the exception of two years spent as proprietor of the Bogue & Ott grocery store at Stockton and fourteen months with the Stockton Railroad Company, Mr. Ott has been occupied with farming pursuits.

Mr. Ott's marriage occurred February 15, 1905, which united him with Miss Myrtle Frances Scott, born near Danforth, Maine. Her father, Frank Scott, was a descendant of an English family who had settled in Maine; while her mother, Julia Ann (Preston) Scott, was the daughter of a prominent Southern family. Mrs. Ott came to California with her parents when she was two years old and was reared and educated in Mariposa County and attended the Western School of Commerce at Stockton, pursuing the normal course. For five years before her marriage she taught in the public schools of Mariposa County. Her mother passed away in 1903, her father surviving until 1913. Mr. and Mrs. Ott are the parents of six children: Martin F., Thelma M., Anna Julia, Allen F., Barbara M., and Frederick William, Jr. Mr. Ott cultivates 200 acres to grain. He has always been active in farm circles and is a member of the Farm Bureau of his locality; he is also serving as school trustee of French Camp district and has proved to be a most capable official. There has been nothing sensational in his life record, but his entire career has been marked by steady progress that has resulted from diligence and perseverance.

OTTO PETERSON.—The opportunities afforded in the West to men of determination and energy are exemplified in the business career of Otto Peterson, one of the leading citizens of the prosperous town of Escalon, whose progress is the result of wise investments and industrious application since he came to this locality some nineteen years ago. He was born near Karlstad, Sweden, January 30, 1871, a son of Peter and Marie (Olson) Nelson, the former born in 1819 and the latter in 1828, both natives of Sweden. There were eight children in the family, of whom Otto is the youngest. He attended the public schools in his native country and at the age of fourteen years was confirmed in the Lutheran Church, continuing in that faith to the present day. When Mr. Peterson started out for himself, he served an apprenticeship for four years and learned thoroughly the carpenter's trade. In 1892, at twenty-one years of age, he left home for America, arriving in New York on April 9, of that year. He did not linger long in the metropolis but removed to Lakeside, Mich., where he found employment on the Manistee & Northeastern Railroad as a carpenter and after three years was made foreman in the shops, remaining with this company for eleven years, when he came to the West, where he stopped first at Los Angeles, then went to Stockton, and from Stockton to Escalon, then a railroad station with one store, two saloons, and a schoolhouse. He invested in a twenty-acre tract of land, a portion of the Jones estate, where the family made their home.

While residing in Michigan, Mr. Peterson was married in 1893 to Miss Anna Larson, a native of Sweden, who had come to Michigan with a party of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson are the parents of seven children: Albert was appointed postmaster of Escalon, August 15, 1919, by President Wilson, and efficiently filled the position until he resigned the office in July, 1922, to enter the grocery business. On September 1, 1917, he was married to Miss Anna C. Vilen and they have a daughter, Evelyn, and a son, Albert. Carl, who served in the World War in the A. E. F. in France, is in the oil business at Parlier; Hedwig, Mrs. William Brennan, of Escalon, has three children, William, Richard, and Dorothy; Hazel, Theodore, Isabel, and Renold, are all at home with subject at Escalon. In 1912 Mr. Peterson became the secretary of the Swedish Colonization Society at Escalon and filled the position with much credit until the disbandment of the organization. He has been a strong advocate and co-worker in the cause of irrigation and better school facilities, and as a member of the Escalon high school board spent considerable time in the interests of the Escalon Union high school, which completed an $85,000 building in March, 1922. He is a member of the Escalon Commercial Club and in 1917 gave much time to the South San Joaquin County Fair Association and was also instrumental in the organization of the First State Bank of Escalon in 1910, of which he is a trustee. Mr. Peterson has completed his second residence in the Kern addition to Escalon, having sold the first to the Standard Oil Company; he also owns two ranches adjacent to Escalon, besides valuable property within the town limits. In 1920 he became the junior partner in the firm of Carlson & Peterson, engaged in real estate and insurance business and the partnership has been productive of much good to both and in service to the general public. For some years he served as deacon in the Lutheran Church at Escalon and has always contributed liberally to public and private charities.

ERNEST POWELL.—A native son of California who is in charge of Victory Park, Stockton, is Ernest Powell, born at Santa Rosa, Sonoma County, February 22, 1885, a son of R. C. and Serelda (Baker) Powell, who came to California and located in Sonoma County, where they followed farming until 1887, when they removed to Stockton. The father was a musician and a fine violinist and favored the people with dance music and also taught music. After moving to Stockton he continued his profession until his death, soon after coming to Stockton. The mother, who gave her best efforts to rearing her family, is still living. Of the nine children born of this union there are four living, of whom Ernest is the youngest. He was reared in Stockton, where he completed the grammar schools, after which he went to work, entering the employ of Charles L. Powell, proprietor of Commercial Hotel, Angels Camp. Later he was in the employ of a cigar store.

On January 5, 1920, he entered the employ of the park department, and is now in charge of Victory Park. His residence is at 1023 North Pilgrim Place, where he makes a comfortable home for his mother, now almost eighty years old and still hale and hearty. He is independent in party politics, preferring to vote for the man rather than party.

BENEDETTO RATTO.—Eminent among the sturdy pioneers whose lives posterity will ever be thankful for, and whose memory will be kept green and honored, was the late Benedetto Ratto, who was born at Upechelli, in the province of Genoa, Italy, on February 6, 1837, and left home at the early age of thirteen, reaching New York City after a thousand adventures, decidedly a stranger in a strange land. He walked on foot to Boston, and when near that city, met by chance a friend, a fellow-countryman, and together they started to work on a farm. Benedetto received as his share the meager sum of $8.00 per month and his board, and small as was this wage, he managed to save some money, and as early as 1860 to come out to California.

His brother Joseph, who had preceded him to the Golden State, was then farming near Placerville, and there Benedetto joined him; but soon afterward the two brothers came into San Francisco. Benedetto bought a small river boat, which he further formed into a kind of ark, and there he lived, on the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers. After that, he engaged as a market-fisherman, and going into the Delta regions, operated as a market-fur trapper. So skilful was he that it is said he alone held the record for trapping beaver and otter in the Delta; and he had several experiences in recovering the bodies of people who had been drowned, when he delivered them if possible, to relatives, by whom he was generally amply rewarded. Trappers' Slough in the San Joaquin Delta was named by a party of engineers and surveyors in honor of Mr. Ratto's accomplishments there, for probably no other trapper was ever better known from the Squaw Valley in the north, to King's River in the south.

In many ways, Mr. Ratto was a remarkable man. He was gifted with a wonderful memory, and his ability to relate vividly his early experiences was the delight of all privileged to hear him. He also seemed to have special capacity for the handling of Chinese laborers, and on this account he was frequently employed for superintending of large ranches and other estates and building levees with wheelbarrows and shovels, where the Mongolians were at work. His ark was always to be seen on the channels and sloughs, and when he was in Stockton it was generally at Lindsey Point. One day Captain Weber, who was a very good friend, called him aside and advising him to rear his children in town and be a citizen there, said, "Ben, I want you to have a home here, and if you will build I will give you the deed to a lot in Weber Tract;" and this was agreed upon. Accordingly, on January 3, 1881, the deed was recorded in Mrs. Ratto's name, Lot 4, Block Q, west of Center Street, and this is the present home-place of the daughter, Mrs. Bava, but is a part of the Ratto estate.

Mrs. Ratto was Miss Catherine Valerga, a native of Genoa, Italy, where she was born in 1854. On March 15, 1905, she breathed her last, thirty-three years after she had arrived in Stockton from Italy, where she was married the same year. Eleven children were born to the estimable couple, but only four grew to maturity: Richard Peter, Matilda, who is the wife of Ralph Vignolo; Clorinda, the wife of Santino Bava; and Benjamin.

The residence was completed in 1882, at 226 South Van Buren Street, and the family then moved from the Ark to this home. Their children attended the Franklin school. A staunch Republican, and a broad-minded citizen, Mr. Ratto was ever ready to pull with his neighbors, in more non-partisan fashion, for whatever seemed best for the community. Mr. Ratto acquired, eventually, much property in Stockton, and at the time of his death, May 11, 1922, owned four lots and five residences. He had spent his declining years in his home where, for almost eight years, he was cared for tenderly by his daughter, Mrs. Clorinda Bava. He was a resigned sufferer, and very brave to the last. He was known as a man of stern character, determined in his own mind and therefore usually holding fast to his own ideas; but he had a beautiful philosophy of life, and merely carried out that philosophy nobly and consistently in his own living. Stockton and San Joaquin County lost, in his death, one of their most efficient pioneer builders, and one who was valued and honored while he lived. His remains were placed beside those of his devoted wife in the family plot in the Catholic Cemetery.

ROBERT PROUD.—A successful rancher and the ditch tender of twenty-four miles of canal for the upper division of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District in San Joaquin County, Robert Proud has become well and favorably known in the Manteca section. He was born at Bingley, Lancashire, Eng., June 7, 1869, the son of Matthew and Elizabeth Proud, the former still living in England, but the latter died in August, 1922. Robert received a good education and learned the trade of textile worker in his native land, being employed in woolen mills until he became an expert weaver. In 1891 he left home and came to America, traveling on the Etruria to New York; soon he located in Lawrence, Mass., and easily found work in the woolen mills of that section and spent eighteen years at the trade. It was while there that Mr. Proud became an American citizen in 1898; and he was president of the Sons of St. George and exalted chief ranger of the A. O. F. In many ways he showed his loyalty to his adopted country and gained a host of friends.

In 1908 Mr. Proud decided to come West and after his arrival here he worked in the Stockton Woolen Mills for a year. In 1909 he had made a purchase of twenty acres of raw land in the Summer Home district in San Joaquin County, improved the same with good buildings and put the land in alfalfa and has since operated a dairy ranch. From 1909 to 1912 he was employed as a pumper in the Kern River oil fields and then came back to take up his ranch duties and became ditch tender and ever since has qualified for his responsible position to the satisfaction of all concerned.

On November 28, 1891, Mr. Proud was married to Miss Margaret Ellen Holmes Duerden, a friend of his boyhood, and she has shared with him the trials and joys of life in the United States. They had two children: Charles Richard died in England while Mrs. Proud was visiting there. The other is Richard T., who has been manager of the home ranch since 1918. Mrs. Proud's parents were Charles and Alice Duerden, the latter living at Methuen, Mass., and the former died in 1900 in England. Richard T. is an Odd Fellow and belongs to the local Farm Bureau, as does his father. In 1896 Mrs. Proud made a visit of several months in England, and again in 1900 she made a trip to her native land. Mr. Proud made two trips, in 1897 and in 1902, and also enjoyed renewing acquaintances with old friends. Mr. Proud and family are Republicans and are ardent boosters for San Joaquin County.

ANTONE J. RATTO.—An enterprising California merchant who well deserves the enviable patronage with which his efforts to serve the community have been rewarded, is Antone J. Ratto, the popular dealer in staple and fancy groceries, as well as various kinds of provisions, at 1329 East Church Street. A native son, proud of his association with the adopted land of his parents, he was born on June 24, 1893, in Stockton, the eldest son of the late G. B. and Patrina Ratto, natives of Genoa, who had come to California in the early eighties. They were pioneer farmers on Roberts Island, where Mr. Ratto owned a ranch of 275 acres and for many years farmed extensively. Mrs. Ratto passed away in Stockton in 1913, and four years later Mr. Ratto closed his eyes to the scenes of a world he had worked to make better, leaving his estate to his four children, among whom our subject is the eldest.

The latter had been closely associated with his father in the management of the farm, and continued to direct the operations necessary there until the estate was disposed of in 1921, when he moved to Stockton. Eighteen months ago he invested in his present store, and from the first he has so prospered there that he is about to expand his business, and move closer to the business district. Through practical acquaintance with the conditions of the trade, the wants of his customers, and the means of meeting their legitimate demands, Mr. Ratto is making a success in this field.

A Republican in matters of national moment, but a broad-minded nonpartisan when it comes to supporting the best men and the best measures for the locality in which he lives and prospers, Mr. Ratto has served on the election board on Roberts Island for several terms, and is as popular in civic endeavor as he is in trade. He is a member of the Stockton Druids.

JOHN J. RATTO.—A very successful rancher long identified with the Delta, and one who has fully done his part to advance the territory, is John J. Ratto, the grain-farmer, who was born on June 6, 1882, on the upper division of Roberts Island. His father was Joseph Ratto, a native of Genoa, Italy, who came out to California about 1854, and located in the Delta district, where he took up farming. He married Miss Angelo Valargo, a native of Venice, who came to California in the early sixties; they were blessed with a family of ten children, of whom John J. was the eldest, and therefore the one upon whom many responsibilities devolved. Mrs. Ratto, beloved by a wide circle, now resides at Stockton.

Fortunately for John, he had a good common schooling; so that when, in his seventeenth year, his father died, and he was face to face with serious duties, he was better able to cope with the problems and hard work before him. Farming early became his chief enterprise, and it has since remained so. More and more he has made a specialty of beans, produce and grain, cultivating in time as many as 2,000 acres in the Delta district. Of late years, he has contented himself with farming only 700 acres, double-cropping the land. His home place is eight miles north of Tracy, on the Grant Line Canal.

At Stockton, July 6, 1902, Mr. Ratto was married to Miss Margaret Silva, a native of Oakland, where she was born on June 4, 1887; and their union has been blessed with the birth of five children: Lena, Florence, Rose, Ralph, and John, Jr. Mr. Ratto is a Republican, and being public-spirited, he is serving his community well as a trustee of the Naglee school.

CHARLES D. ROSS.—Prominent among the progressive farmers of the Delta district is Charles D. Ross, who has fifteen very choice acres on the Upper Roberts Island, devoted to vineyard purposes and the raising of high-grade poultry. He was born in Martinsburgh, W. Va., on October 15, 1886, the son of John H. and Mary Ann (Tyson) Ross, the youngest in a family of ten children, his father, J. H. Ross, being a blacksmith and an expert wheelwright who, true to his convictions as to the great political questions of the day, had served as a soldier in the Confederate Army. Our subject grew up amid comfortable home advantages, and at the age of seventeen worked in the paper-mill at Davis, W. Va., starting at $1.50 per day; at the end of two years he was paid six dollars per day, pretty good wages for that time. When twenty-one years of age he enlisted in the U. S. Army at Fort Hancock, N. J., and after twenty days of training he was sent to Fort Slocum, when he was despatched to the Philippines for active service in the Spanish-American War. His journey to his foreign destination was most interesting and profitable, for he first crossed the Atlantic and then the Mediterranean, through the Suez Canal and across the Indian Ocean, with many stop-over permits, all of which he availed himself, finding Malta, in particular, so attractive that he spent three days there, and the company of which he was a member were entertained in first-class fashion by the Royal Guards as well as the British populace. He also spent four days at Gibraltar, and three days at Alexandria, with side-trips into Egypt, so that this was decidedly an educational trip, never to be forgotten, although, because of a terrible epidemic at Suez, the company was not allowed to land. In the government service, at Manila, Mr. Ross helped to mount several 12 and 16-inch guns, which are still in use. He served his country well, and received his honorable discharge, which he very much cherishes, certifying as it does to his having maintained a high standard of efficiency. On returning to the United States, he re-enlisted and served as sergeant at Fort Scott, and eight months later he was with Captain Murphy in the 65th Coast Artillery, and at the end of the term of service he received a second honorable discharge with all credentials.

At San Francisco, on August 15, 1915, Mr. Ross was married to Miss Mary C. Holst, a native of San Francisco and the daughter of the late J. D. Holst, a prominent pioneer merchant of that city, whose widow is now Mrs. Mary C. Porteous. A brother, D. H. Holst, is in the registry department of the San Francisco post office. One child blessed this union: Laura Lee. Mr. Ross came into San Joaquin County in 1917, and then bought his ranch; but he also owns desirable real estate in San Francisco, and with Mrs. Ross has done what he could to advance the development of the Delta region.

JESSE C. SADDLEMIRE.—The student of history cannot carry his investigations far into the annals of central California and San Joaquin County without learning of the close connection of the Saddlemire family with the development of agriculture. A worthy representative of this family is Jesse C. Saddlemire, a prominent rancher and stockman. He was born on his father's ranch on January 8, 1880, and was schooled in the Willow district school, which since 1905 has been known as the Tracy school. Rufus Saddlemire, his father, was born in Schenectady, N. Y., in 1832, and was the recipient of a good education, at the same time learning the hard work of a farm life before starting West. Leaving New York on a sailing vessel, the party came around Cape Horn and reached San Francisco early in 1850. Leaving soon thereafter for the mines, Mr. Saddlemire located at Chinese Camp, and was at the town of Sonora for a short time; and for nearly two years he prospected and mined for the yellow metal. He profitably spent the early part of 1852 in San Mateo County, on a vegetable ranch, marketing his product in San Francisco. In the late fall of 1852 he removed to San Joaquin County and settled on a ranch. The country was then infested with wild beasts of forest and canyon, which were a menace and hindrance to the early settlers. There was also much trouble with the Indians and Mexicans; but the true pioneer spirit of Rufus Saddlemire conquered all obstacles, and he settled on 160 acres of choice bottom land, eighty acres of which is still in the family. The patent deed to the 160 acres received from the government is a cherished possession of the son. Rufus Saddlemire served as a deputy sheriff of the county under Tom Cunningham during the nineties. He married Miss Helen Beverly, a native of California, who passed away at the family home on January 11, 1893. During the month of April, 1921, a disastrous fire occurred, destroying the old residence, which contained records and books, together with many valuable heirlooms, the collection of a lifetime. The lumber for this house was brought overland by wagon from San Francisco. The house had stood all through the years, a comfortable and well-preserved home.

Two sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Saddlemire: Jesse C., of this review, and George R., who is married and resides in San Francisco. Jesse C. Saddlemire and his father have farmed together for years, and have witnessed the remarkable growth and prosperity of the West Side section, their farm being now within a stone's throw of the city limits of Tracy. Rufus Saddlemire is now past ninety years of age, and seventy years of his life have been spent on his ranch at Tracy, where he enjoys the esteem of the entire community. He and his son, Jesse C. Saddlemire, have always been loyal supporters of the great irrigation project that has made Tracy and the surrounding country what it is today, a community with inviting homes and great business opportunities. Jesse C. Saddlemire was married on July 15, 1922, to Mrs. Martha E. Newman, a daughter of Charles W.

and Caroline Layman Bartels, both born and reared in Germany, whence they brought their family, consisting of Mrs. Saddlemire, then only two years old, and an older brother, Albert, who died and was buried at sea.

DAVID SALFIELD.—For a number of years David Salfeld has occupied a conspicuous place among the leading business men of San Joaquin County, and as president of the Eldorado Land Company, owners of the subdivision known as Eldorado Heights, he has been an important factor in the prosperity and development of this section of the city. In 1893 an enterprising group of citizens purchased 140 acres of land which at that time was a grain field and the highest point of land in the city. The Eldorado Land Company was formed, and in 1912 this tract of land was subdivided and up to the present time there have been 120 residences built in this subdivision costing $4,000 and up. The company own their own wells and pumping plant, all streets are paved and sewers connected, and ornamental trees are being planted. Mr. Salfeld donated a portion of the land on which the North schoolhouse was built in 1916, a building of four rooms; and in 1923 additions were added to make it sixteen rooms, to take care of the growing population. The Eldorado Land Company has reserved thirty acres on the west on Alpine Street for extra fine residences; this street leads into the grounds of the new College of the Pacific. Mr. Salfeld's activities in building and developing this tract of land have been of lasting benefit to the city of Stockton.

Mr. Salfeld was born in Keyesport, Ill., April 25, 1861, and while still a young child was taken by his parents to St. Louis, Mo., where he remained until he was six years old; then he was taken to Germany where he began his education and where he took up the study of architecture in the best schools of that country. In 1880, when he was nineteen years old, he returned to America and came direct to San Francisco, where he entered the employ of Wright & Saunders, pioneer architects of the Bay City, as a draftsman. In 1886 the supervisors of San Joaquin County advertised for plans for a new court house and Mr. Salfeld received $400 as the second prize. In 1889 Mr. Salfeld submitted plans for the new county jail, at the time Tom Cunningham was sheriff of the county, and they were accepted and he was awarded the contract to erect the jail at a cost of $65,000; later he submitted plans for the county hospital, again receiving the second prize.

Mr. Salfeld realizing the great future of the city of Stockton removed there in 1915 and began his activity in building and improving Eldorado Heights, which is the pride of the city. He is the owner of 118 lots opposite the San Joaquin County fair grounds on Sharp Lane which will be improved with residences when the car line is extended. Every wise man has a hobby and Mr. Salfeld's is his eighty-acre dairy ranch four miles southeast of Escalon in the South San Joaquin Irrigation District, where he has one of the best herds of registered Holstein-Fresian cattle in the state. He has erected modern dairy barns and has forty registered cows, and he is particularly proud of a young bull, whose dam produced thirty-three pounds of butter in one week, or the equivalent of four and a half pounds daily.

The marriage of Mr. Salfeld united him with Miss Rose Hund, a native of San Francisco, and they are the parents of two sons: August and Carl D., both successful building contractors, under the firm name of Salfield Bros., who own their own planing mill and who have erected the residences in Eldorado Heights. Mr. Salfield practiced his profession of architect in San Francisco for many years and designed and erected three or four hundred buildings, including the Granada Hotel and many other fine hotels and apartment houses. He was a member of the San Francisco Association of Architects and was an architect of high standing in the city. In 1906 he designed and built the Elks' building in Stockton, one of the best buildings in the city. The great state of California owes much of its prosperity to such enterprising men as Mr. Salfield, whose reliability in business, loyalty in citizenship and trustworthiness in private life have won for him the confidence and respect of his community. Fraternally, Mr. Salfield is affiliated with the Masons.

FRANCIS H. SAUNDERS, D. V. M.—A young man of energy and enterprise, who has made a place for himself in the professional circles of Stockton is Francis H. Saunders, D. V. M., who is conducting a hospital at 336 East Lafayette Street with pronounced success. He was born on his father's ranch on Roberts Island, San Joaquin County, Cal., June 3, 1897, a son of Ira E. and Elizabeth (Watson) Saunders, natives of Rhode Island and California, respectively.

Ira Saunders was born at Central Falls, R. I., in 1848, his parents being Moses and Eliza (Sprague) Saunders, also natives of that state, and in the maternal line Ira Saunders was of Scotch descent. In the year 1851, Moses Saunders, the grandfather of our subject, came to California via Panama. He engaged in gold mining in Calaveras County, where he died in 1877. In 1857, when a mere boy, Ira Saunders came with his mother and other members of the family to California, also via Panama; they made their way direct to Calaveras County where they joined the husband and father. There Ira grew to manhood and attended the public schools of that county. He engaged in mining and sheep raising in the early days, but in 1886 he settled on the San Joaquin River, the portion of the county known as Roberts Island, where he purchased 230 acres of farming land; he drained the swamp land and otherwise improved the ranch with farm buildings, dairy barns, etc. On December 24, 1882, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Watson, a daughter of David Watson, and seven children were born to them: Addie V., Elizabeth A., Ira E., David G., Moses R., Francis H., and Lolita. Fraternally he was a member of Mineral Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Copperopolis, Cal., and in politics was a Republican; he also served as clerk of the board of trustees of the Fairchild school district. He passed away in 1912, his wife surviving him until 1917, when she too passed away. The home ranch on Roberts Island is still in the possession of the family, and is operated by the older brothers of our subject.

Francis H. Saunders began his education in the grammar school of Stockton, then attended the Stockton high school for three years, at the end of which time he entered the San Francisco Veterinary College where he remained one year, then entered the Washington State College, from which he was graduated in 1921. He enlisted and remained in service three months during the World War. In 1922 he formed a partnership with C. L. Wrinkle and they conduct a veterinary hospital at 336 East Lafayette Street, Stockton. He is a member of the San Joaquin County Veterinary Association, the Stockton Kiwanis Club, the Whitman Lodge, No. 49, F. & A. M., at Pullman, Wash., and Pacific Parlor No. 10, N. S. G. W., of San Francisco. He is honorary member of the Veterinary College Fraternity, Alpha Psi.

LOUIS F. SANGUINETTI.—A public-spirited citizen of the Peters district of San Joaquin County is Louis F. Sanguinetti, who devotes his energies to stock and grain farming, his ranch being two miles east of Peters. He was born near Stockton, August 7, 1882, the youngest son of Angelo and Giovanna (Zignego) Sanguinetti, and was only one year old when his parents settled on the ranch, a portion of which he now owns and on which he makes his home. He received his education at the Everett district school in the neighborhood of his home, and as is usual with farm-reared boys, at an early age was taught to work. When his father passed away in 1916, he was fitted to continue the extensive farming activities. Angelo Sanguinetti was a man of sterling worth to his community and his death caused sincere regret, for he was an advocate of all progressive movements; two years later, in July, 1918, the mother passed away. Louis F. received 640 acres as his portion of the home place, which he has continued to farm to grain and on which he also raises fine stock.

On September 1, 1911, at Stockton, Mr. Sanguinetti was united in marriage with Miss Louisa K. Delucchi, a native of San Francisco, Cal., a daughter of Antone Delucchi, a California pioneer. Two brothers of Mrs. Sanguinetti, Joseph and Antone, reside in Stockton. In 1917 Mr. Sanguinetti entered into partnership with Emilio Barrera, a native of Piedmonte, Italy, born May 18, 1893. He came to California in 1910 and has continuously followed ranching since. Mr. Barrera entered the service of the U. S. Army on November 2, 1917, and served in the A. E. F. as a first class private in the 1st Division, 2nd Signal Corps; he was sent to France and saw active service in ten battles, and also served with the Army of Occupation at Coblenz; he returned to the United States and was honorably discharged in August, 1919. The partnership of Mr. Sanguinetti and Mr. Barrera has been productive of mutual benefit and the extensive and successful grain and stock operations carried on have been proof of the richness of the soil and ideal climatic conditions of the Peters district. Mr. Sanguinetti is a member of the N. S. G. W. and the B. P. O. Elks, No. 218, of Stockton.

H. B. O. SCHEFFEL.—A representative farmer of the Peters section of San Joaquin County, is H. B. O. Scheffel, whose residence in the county dates from 1883, and since 1891 he has resided on his present home place of fifty acres eleven miles east of Stockton on the Copperopolis Road. He was born in the province of Saxony, Germany, September 14, 1857, and received a good public school education; in 1881, he left Germany for America, and upon his arrival spent a few months at St. Louis, Mo.; then he began to work his way westward, stopping in Utah, where he rode the range until 1883, when he came to Stockton, Cal.

At Stockton, in 1891, occurred the marriage of Mr. Scheffel and Mrs. Sarah Ellen (Webb) Leonhardt, widow of C. H. Leonhardt. - Mrs. Scheffel is a native daughter of California, born near Linden, March 28, 1859, a daughter of William Golden Webb, who came across the plains to California in 1854, where he located near Bellota, then called Fisher's Bridge, and engaged in farming until his death on March 24, 1871, survived by fifteen children, of whom Mrs. Scheffel is the fifth. Mrs. Scheffel's mother passed away in 1907, aged seventy-two years. By her first marriage, Mrs. Scheffel had three children: Louena died at the age of sixteen years; Frances Mabel is the widow of W. C. Waite and she has one son residing at Richmond, Cal.; she is a past noble grand in the Rebekah Lodge; Glen E. has a wife and three children, and they reside near Peters.

Mr. and Mrs. Scheffel are the parents of six children: Richard O. died in infancy; Walter Vernon owns a twenty-acre ranch near Peters and is associated with his brother in farming; Amelia Violet is a graduate of the Western Normal School and at the present time is in training at the Merritt Hospital in Oakland; Lewis G. has a wife and one child and they reside in Stockton; Hugo William enlisted and served three months in the Merchant Marine during the World War and is now a rancher on fifteen acres near Peters; Archie Lester is a machinist for the Holt Manufacturing Company at Stockton. The same year that Mr. Scheffel was married, he purchased fifty acres near Peters and eleven miles east of Stockton, where he has since engaged in farming. Thirty-one years ago Mr. Scheffel became a member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge at Linden, and Mrs. Scheffel is prominent in the Rebekahs there. Mr. Scheffel has given his loyal support to the school system of the county and for four years served as trustee of the Everett school district. Mr. and Mrs. Scheffel have many warm personal friends in the community where they have spent so many years.

JOHN B. SEELMEIER.—A merchant whose progressive ideals and enterprising moves make him well deserve the success attending his various undertakings is John B. Seelmeier, the proprietor of the Brandt Ferry Store on Roberts Island, and owner of five choice acres not far away. He was born in Holstein, Germany, on September 22, 1846, and in 1869 came out to America, sailing from Hamburg on the steamer Broser, arriving in New York City after twenty-one days on the Atlantic on the fourteenth of March. For a while he worked in the coal-fields of New Jersey, and then he went to Kansas and took up farm-labor at one dollar per day. In 1884 he arrived in San Francisco, where he worked in the construction of the great sea-wall, laboring at that job for a couple of years. His brother-in-law, Captain Tanck, owned two bay schooners, and used them for hauling freight, and joining him in the business, he was in that field of activity for the next six years.

In 1890, he came to Roberts Island and bought five acres at Brandt's Ferry, on the San Joaquin River, and entered the employ of C. H. W. Brandt as ferryman, and for ten years he managed the ferry at the point; and when the bridge was completed in 1900, he bought the store and lumber business at the present site, and as a proprietor enjoying the good-will of everyone, he has continued to live there and prosper ever since. He was made a citizen of the United States by Judge Budd, at Stockton.

At Hoboken, N. J., in 1871, Mr. Seelmeier was married to Miss Augusta Brandt, a native of Germany, where she was born in 1849, and who had come to America in 1870; and this good woman passed away at her home on March 25, 1919, leaving behind an enviable name for cooperation in whatever was worthy of support.

KORNELIUS H. SIEMEN.—A vineyardist who realizes exceptionally good results through progressive enterprise and untiring industry, is Kornelius H. Siemen, a native of Osil Kiel, Siberia, where he was born on October 22, 1875, the son of Heinrich and Maria (Johnson) Siemen. His father was a farmer, and there were eight children in the family: Heinrich, Jr., was the eldest; and then came John, Jacob, Maria, Katherina, Anna, while the youngest was Kornelius, of our review. Another child, who died, was also called Anna.

Kornelius Siemen attended the grammar school, but when he was fourteen years of age, he had the great misfortune to lose his parents, and since that time he has made his own way. He went to work in a dry-goods store, and also worked on farms, and at all kinds of hard work, gradually getting ahead, and by November 11, 1902, was in a position to set up his own household. He married Kathrina Dick, born in southern Russia, and their union has been blessed with the birth of four children: Henry, Kornelius, John and Katie.

On August 2, 1913, Mr. Siemen landed in New York. He came on directly to California, and at Berenda farmed for one and a half years. Coming then to Lodi, he took a job for Beckman, Welch & Thompson, as floor-walker, which he kept for three years. After that he opened the Siemen Groceries in Lodi, which he ran successfully for a year and a half. Selling out, he bought the ranch of fifteen acres upon which he now lives. He had ten acres of Zinfandel grapes, and five acres of Tokay grapes, and he obtains excellent irrigation by means of electric motor power and a four-inch pump. He moved onto this ranch in December, 1921, and since then has rapidly developed the land. He now has one of the best tracts of productive acreage in the vicinity, operated according to the latest methods.

CHARLES H. SHEPHERD.—A popular and useful official in San Joaquin County is Charles H. Shepherd, bridge tender on the Grant Line Canal, about seven miles north of Tracy. Mr. Shepherd is the brother of George W. Shepherd, the county jailer at Stockton. He was born on November 14, 1858, in San Joaquin County, twelve miles from Stockton, at the old Shepherd Ferry, now known as Mossdale, in memory of Captain Moss. His father was Major James Albert Shepherd, who settled in this state in 1850, and soon after established the Shepherd's Ferry on the San Joaquin River—an enterprise that soon proved most profitable, as there were no other ferries this side of tidewater, and bridges were unheard of for many years, and many Argonauts found there a comfortable and safe crossing on their way to the southern mines. James A. Shepherd was born in Kentucky of Scotch-Irish parentage. When a young man only nineteen years old he crossed the great plains with an ox team and located in this county, where he owned at one time thousands of acres of land in the environs of his ferry.

When Charles H. Shepherd was nine years old the family removed to Elk Grove, Nev.; and on their return to this county, in 1876, Mr. Shepherd founded the railroad hotel at Lathrop, and Charles worked there for nearly thirty years, finally becoming manager. In 1885, Major Shepherd was elected supervisor; and in that important office he served for sixteen consecutive years, until his death in 1902. He was always a good judge of horse-flesh, and the family became widely known as owners of fine saddle and harness horses. He had married Miss Martha Isbel, who crossed the plains from Kentucky with her parents in 1849, and located at Beliside, her father being Levy Isbel, who established the Eagle Hotel at Stockton, the first American house in that city.

The eldest of nine children born to Major and Mrs. Shepherd, both of whom are now deceased, Charles Shepherd received a good common-school education at Lathrop, and then spent some six years on the range in Nevada, and engaged in stockraising. He was married at Lathrop to Miss Alice Lampson, a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Lampson of Sonora, and to them were born two children, Roy L. Shepherd and Gladys, who is now Mrs. Wicks, of Los Angeles, and the mother of two sons. Mr. Shepherd was married a second time at San Jose, Cal., to Miss Florence McIntyre, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. McIntyre, both prominent pioneers of the county. Her father, formerly exalted ruler of the Elks, passed away in September, 1921. Mrs. Shepherd was born at Sutter Creek and was reared in Stockton. She is now the sole survivor of that family. Her maternal grandfather, Hicks by name, was a partner of Kit Carson, and roamed the West before the day of Fremont. In May, 1914, Mr. Shepherd was appointed tender of the large drawbridge at the Grant Line Canal, seven miles north of Tracy; and here, in a comfortable home by the canal, he and his wife have resided ever since.

CHARLES R. SMITH.—On the list of agriculturists in the Escalon section of San Joaquin County appears the name of Charles R. Smith, who resides on his home place of 136 acres situated about eighteen miles southeast of Stockton, being a portion of the 500-acre tract of land purchased by his father in 1874. He was born at Scottsville, Cal., April 18, 1859, the youngest son of the late Charles Edward and Isabelle (Robertson) Smith, the former a native of Maine and the latter of Canada. The mother of our subject accompanied her parents to California via Panama in 1853 and settled in Amador County. Charles Edward Smith crossed the plains in 1853 to California in search of gold. Arriving in California he, too, settled in Amador County, and there he met and married Miss Robertson; then he moved to Washington, Cal., where he worked as a miner and also engaged in stockraising. Later the family removed to San Joaquin County, where the father bought the property of Captain McQuien, consisting of eighty acres located near Woodbridge on which is a natural lake known as Smith Lake. In 1874 he acquired 500 acres of land about eighteen miles southeast of Stockton, which he farmed to grain, but the family always made their home on the ranch near Woodbridge. The father passed away at the age of seventy-two years.

On September 28, 1898, at Woodbridge, Charles R. Smith was married to Miss Caroline Matthews, born at Pine Grove, Cal., September 26, 1875, a daughter of Dan S. Matthews, a native of Indiana who later moved to Illinois and from there came to California in 1874. Mr. Matthews was a freighter from Whitmore's Mill, Amador County, to Sacramento for many years; later he removed to San Joaquin County and engaged in farming on Roberts Island for a number of years. He passed away at Sacramento in 1915. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are the parents of eight children: Helen M. is a graduate of the Western Normal School in Stockton and the Stockton Commercial College, and during the World War served for eighteen months in the office of the War Risk Bureau in Washington, D. C.; she is now holding a fine position in Stockton; Isabelle C.; Charles H.; Albert M.; Cyril W.; Philip E.; Estella N.; and Janice. Helen and Isabelle Smith are members of Stockton Parlor, N. D. G. W., and Charles H. is a member of the De Molay Order in Stockton. Mr. Smith is a Mason and Mrs. Smith and two of their daughters are members of the Eastern Star Lodge. Mr. Smith has devoted much of his time to the advancement of educational matters and is now serving as a director of the Escalon Union high school. His political support is given to the Republican party and he has always taken an active part in community interests.

DAVID H. SMITH.—For the past two years David H. Smith has occupied the position of principal of the Weber school in Stockton and has demonstrated his ability to advance the standard of education in a marked degree. He is a native son of California, born at Los Banos, Merced County, June 8, 1896, a son of Oscar and Amy (Hunt) Smith, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Minnesota. The paternal grandfather of our subject, Samuel Smith, crossed the plains to California via the Salt Lake route in 1851, unmolested by the Indians, although the party in advance and the one following had been cruelly massacred by them. Grandfather Smith settled near Merced and farmed there, and resided there until his death, January 5, 1923, at the advanced age of nearly ninety.

Oscar Smith, the father of our subject, is living retired on his ranch in Merced County. Eight children were born to them: Clarence is a contractor in San Jose, Cal.; Letha, now Mrs. D. A. Allen of Newman; Ruth is Mrs. Carroll of Merced; Jesse resides in Los Banos; during the World War he entered the aviation corps and was a flyer at Kelly Field, then was transferred to England, and later to France, serving as a sergeant; David H., the subject of this sketch; Wesley was an aviation student at the University of California and at the time of his examination he was the third highest among 500 men; he was sent to Rockwell Field where he became a flyer and was commissioned second lieutenant, but was held in the United States as an aviation instructor; he drove the De Haviland mail plane across the United States and is now inspector of mail planes in New York City; he is also a student of music in that city; Blythe is Mrs. Hancock of Los Banos; Lyle resides in San Jose and was in the infantry during the World War. David H. Smith began his education at the Los Banos grammar school then was graduated from the high school of that place in 1912, and then entered San Jose State Normal where he was graduated in 1914; he then spent one year at the University of California, after which he went to Fallon, Nev., where he taught for one year.

On November 3, 1917, at Fallon, Nev., Mr. Smith was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude Iva Drumm, a native of Santa Cruz, Cal., daughter of Andrew D. and Luella (Kirkbride) Drumm, natives of Indiana and Illinois, respectively. Andrew D. Drumm came to California in 1894 and followed contracting and carpentering at Redwood City; at the time of the gold excitement in Nevada he removed to Tonopah where he conducted a large dairy ranch. Four children were born to them: Margaret, Andrew, Mrs. Gertrude Smith, and Herman. Returning to California in 1917 Mr. Smith became the vice principal of the Jackson school in Stockton where he remained for six months, then entered upon his duties as vice principal of the Weber school, and in 1921 was appointed principal. Four years ago he purchased his home at 1203 North East Street, where he resides with his wife and two children, David H., Jr., and Randolph K.

HARRY SIGELKOFF.—Among the dairies of San Joaquin County supplying pure and wholesome milk to the residents of Lodi is that owned and conducted by Harry Sigelkoff. A native of New Jersey he was born at Woodbridge on December 15, 1876, a son of John Henry and Anna Louise Sigelkoff, the former a native of Germany who came to the United States when a young man and engaged in farming. In April, 1889, the family removed to California, settling in San Joaquin County, where the father purchased five acres three miles southwest of Lodi. Harry Sigelkoff is the third eldest in a family of six children, the others being Anna, Mrs. George B. Marshall, of Oakland; Ebba, deceased; Frank E., of Escalon; Sigrid, Mrs. W. C. Housken, of Thornton; and Arthur A., of Oakland. The father passed away in July, 1909, on the home ranch at the age of sixty-five, while the mother makes her home in Oakland and is about eighty years old.

Harry Sigelkoff attended school in his native state until the family came West to California, and here he attended school in Lodi, meanwhile assisting his father with the ranch work. He now leases the home place from his mother where he conducts his dairy along sanitary and modern lines, the whole ranch being devoted to the raising of alfalfa. Mr. Sigelkoff is a Republican in politics, and a staunch friend of local progress in all directions.

WILLIAM H. SNYDER.—An enterprising, highly progressive and experienced horticulturist, whose efforts to advance husbandry in California along both scientific and eminently practical lines have met with success, is William H. Snyder, who possesses some thirty-two acres of choice San Joaquin County land about five miles from Stockton, on the Waterloo Road. A native of the great Empire State, Mr. Snyder was born just east of Buffalo, in Erie County, on January 18, 1859, the son of Phillip and Katherine (Nature) Snyder, both natives of Germany, the former having been born in 1802 in Hesse-Darmstadt. In 1833 the father crossed the Atlantic on a sailing vessel which was buffeted by storm and several times driven back, taking six months to make the trip; he had served an apprenticeship as wheelwright in the Fatherland, and knew that trade well when he reached America and was compelled to look out for himself. He made his way "out West," as it was then known, and settled in Wyoming County, N. Y., where he bought Government land; but after a short time, convinced that better prospects for settlers were offered in Erie County he sold out and moved thither.

Phillip Snyder bought 100 acres of land, in Wales township, along a creek, on which was a lumber mill, which he ran for two years, when it was burned; and William H. Snyder well remembers the family catastrophe, although he was then only two years of age; he saw it burn to the ground, and the fact that he can now recall it vividly is a good illustration of what is known to be scientifically possible, that one may remember well the details of the earliest years, when the impressions of later times are less real. Mr. Snyder rebuilt the mill and there for several years engaged in the manufacture of lumber.

The first marriage of Phillip Snyder united him with Miss Elizabeth Nature, and she died in Germany the mother of three children: George, Phillip and Elizabeth. In 1832 he married for his second wife Katherine Nature, a sister of his first wife, and the following year with his three children set sail for America. The children born of the second union are: Christ, Katherine, Charles, Frank, Lena, John D., Fred, William H. and Louisa. Phillip Snyder was eighty-two years, five months and eleven days old when he died.

When William H. Snyder was sixteen his mother died and at the age of seventeen his father turned over the sawmill to him and he carried on operations for six years with gratifying success. He is a natural mechanic and easily adapts himself to any line of mechanical work. He came to California in 1889 as a tourist, then went back East to get his family, returning to the West and locating in Idaho, nine miles east of Moscow. He left there in 1892 and located in San Joaquin County, Cal., bought some land and began development of it, and ever since then has been a resident here. He was married on January 19, 1879, to Miss Katherine Bender, a native of Wyoming County, N. Y., and they had eleven children: William P. of Lodi; Mrs. Lillian Mahan of Vallejo; Mrs. Louise Rosell of Stockton; Mrs. Hattie Haywards of Oakland; Mrs. Elsie Kell of San Joaquin County; L. R. Snyder of Sacramento; Mrs. Hazel Foss of San Jose; Mrs. Irene Cole of Stockton; Earl L. and Elmer are running the home ranch; and Margery. After many years of hard and productive labor Mr. Snyder is now living retired to recuperate and enjoy a well earned rest.

HARRY S. TODMAN.—An experienced, influential man of public affairs, whose family have had an interesting association with the history of the Golden State, is Harry S. Todman, the owner of one of the finest peach orchards at Clements. He was born at Oakland, Cal., in December, 1866, the son of John H. and Viola A. (Pomeroy) Todman, his father being a native of England who came out to America when a young man and settled at Victoria, in Prince Edward Island. While still a young man John Todman entered the United States and came West to Nevada, and in 1854 he came on to California. In Nevada he had mined with the Comstock Company; and on reaching California he settled for a while at Oakland, and then took up mining in various parts of the Western States. While prospecting on the Colorado River, near Yuma, Ariz., he was drowned in 1886. Mrs. Todman then removed to Stockton; and there she died, about twenty years ago, at the age of fifty years.

Harry Todman profited by the public school advantages of San Francisco, and for three years attended Valencia grammar school; and when fourteen years of age he started out for himself. In San Francisco he learned the paint and wall-paper trade, and after that he worked as a journeyman in San Francisco. In 1889 he came to Stockton and engaged in his trade on Market, near Sutter Street, where he maintained also a supply shop for painters and paper-hangers. His place of business was in the Union Block.

Ten years ago he sold out and purchased thirty acres of the old Athearn ranch, about one mile northeast of Clements, on the Mokelumne River, where he has a fine orchard devoted to peach-culture, known as El Nido Ranch. There is a first-class pumping plant in the orchard, pumping direct from the Mokelumne River, and from this supply the land is irrigated. He has a twelve-inch stream, and a gas engine of fifteen-horsepower.

At Stockton, on July 28, 1889, Mr. Todman was married to Miss Cora Hitchcock, a native of Canton, Miss., and the daughter of Charles N. and Sarah Elizabeth (Tatum) Hitchcock, in whose family were four children: Florence, now Mrs. Hamsber, of Acampo; William and Joseph, who died young; and Cora, now the devoted wife of Mr. Todman. Mr. and Mrs. Todman have the distinction of being the first couple to have been married by the Rev. Mr. Sink in Stockton. Mrs. Todman's father, Charles N. Hitchcock, was a machinist, who brought her to Oakland when she was three years old. Later, he removed to Stockton, where in 1919 he died at the age of eighty-two; his devoted wife had died three years before, aged seventy-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock removed to Stockton when Cora was ten years old, and there she attended the grammar and the high school. Her father was a native of New York State, who had moved to Wisconsin prior to the Civil War. He joined the Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry and was a first lieutenant; and he served in the Army of the Mississippi and sustained several severe wounds. After the war was over, he went to Mississippi to claim for his bride a lady he had met while fighting in the South; her parents were plantation owners, and of course were allied with the Confederacy. Two children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Todman: Jessie, now Mrs. E. P. Kayser, of Oakland; and Edna, Mrs. E. W. Drury, of Stockton. Mr. Todman is a Democrat, and served as an aide-de-camp on the staff of Governor George H. Stoneman. His only sister, Josephine M. Todman, an attorney-at-law, was executive secretary for fifteen years in the office of Governor Budd. Broad-minded, of many-sided interests, Mr. Todman has served on the Board of Directors of the Humane Society at Stockton. He is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, Elks, and belongs to several other orders.

WALTER H. TEMPLETON.—Twenty-two years ago Walter H. Templeton came to Stockton and engaged in teaming and contract hauling, which he has followed to the present time; he now owns two trucks and is so dependable that he has all the work he can attend to. He was born in Colfax County, Nebr., April 14, 1872, a son of Charles S. and Anna (De Long) Templeton, both natives of Ohio. The father, Charles S. Templeton, and family came to California in 1880 and located at Watsonville. He is a Civil War veteran and is now at the Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, Cal. All the education that Walter H. Templeton received was gained in the public schools of Watsonville. While still a young boy he worked with threshing gangs in Salinas Valley. In 1900 he located in Stockton where he began his teaming and hauling.

On March 23, 1898, at Salinas, Cal., Mr. Templeton was married to Mrs. Elizabeth Seiffert, a native of Stockton, a daughter of Lorenz and Lena (Fetter) Seiffert. Two children have been born of this union: Charles S., who married Miss Votz, born in Stockton; and Ruth Augusta. Mr. Templeton is a deputy constable of Stockton and in politics casts his vote for the man best fitted for office regardless of party lines. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World of Stockton. Mr. Templeton and his family reside in their own home at 1303 E. Lindsay Street, Stockton.

REESE B. THOMPSON.—The owner of a splendid ranch of 350 acres, eighty acres of which is in Tokay grapes and eighty acres more ready to set to the same variety, is Reese B. Thompson, the son of an early settler of California. He was born in Sacramento County, six miles east of Galt, near Dry Creek, on June 13, 1891, a son of James Henry and Lavissa (Smith) Thompson, both natives of Virginia, who came to California in 1876. They were the parents of eleven children, namely: Mary, now Mrs. Conner of Wilton, Cal.; Edgar H., of Lodi; C. W., of Acampo; C. R., of Stockton; Reese B., of this sketch; Josephine, Mrs. J. H. Chapdelaine, of Lodi; Florence, Mrs. Galt of Stockton; Walter; and Reba, Bessie and James, the last three deceased.

Reese B. Thompson attended the Alabama district school in Sacramento County and completed his education with a commercial course at Stockton. When sixteen years of age, he started working in a store in Lodi, and later he worked in a store at Stockton. Then he went to Woodbridge, San Joaquin County, and rented the Huron ranch of seventy acres, which occupied him for three years, after which he purchased the Russell ranch of 350 acres, where he now resides. When Mr. Thompson purchased this ranch it was grain land. He immediately set about to prepare the land for grape cuttings, and now has eighty acres in young vineyard and eighty more acres ready for planting; he also contemplates putting in thirty acres to cherries and twenty acres to prunes. There is a splendid irrigation system on the ranch, consisting of a No. 2 turbine direct-drive Sterling motor-driven pump. He has also constructed two new barns on his ranch.

On Thanksgiving Day, 1916, Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Lucile Chapdelaine, a native of Minnesota, and a daughter of Alex and Antonette Chapdelaine, residents of Woodbridge, San Joaquin County, for the past twenty-five years, where they own a vineyard. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are the parents of three children: Reese, Jr., Cathleen, and John Alexis.

TODA BROTHERS.—Prominent among the business men of Farmington are the Toda brothers, proprietors of Toda Bros.' Store. The safe policy which they inaugurated in their business career has secured for them a patronage which makes the volume of business transacted of considerable magnitude. L. A. Toda, the senior partner of the firm, was born at Farmington, June 13, 1883, while his brother, J. D. Toda, was born on April 26, 1890, at the same place. Both boys were educated at the Shady Grove school, L. A. Toda completing his education in 1899 and J. D. Toda in 1906. The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Toda, are still living at Fosteria, Calaveras County. The father was an active business man, farmer, stockman and butcher in Farmington from 1875 to 1907, when he removed to Calaveras County. He was born in Denmark and came to San Francisco in 1859, being first-mate on a sailing vessel around the Horn. He was married at Mokelumne Hill, Calaveras County, to Miss Nellie Schrock, born in Texas, who came with her parents across the Isthmus in 1853. Her father, Lewis Schrock, was born in Pennsylvania, and her mother was Susan Holman, born in Texas, and there married to Lewis Schrock, one of California's earliest gold miners. He made his first trip to California in 1847, and served two terms in the California Legislature in its early days. Mrs. Julius Toda as a child, was in the early fifties the only white child between Mokelumne Hill and Stockton.

In 1902 L. A. Toda entered the retail butcher shop of his father, Julius Toda, pioneer butcher of Farmington, and was associated with him until 1911. In 1907, J. D. Toda began clerking in the store of R. M. Buckman, where he remained until 1911, when the two brothers decided to go into business for themselves. They purchased the Buckman store in 1911, which is now known as the Toda Bros.' Store, and they have been so successful that they are supplying farmers ten miles in each direction from Farmington. They carry a full line of staple and fancy groceries, dry goods, hardware, automobile supplies, and both young men are popular in business circles, the duties and responsibilities of the management being equally divided, J. D. Toda having complete charge of the inside management while his brother, L. A. Toda, attends to the outside work and represents the firm in an official capacity in other ways.

The marriage of L. A. Toda on March 31, 1913, united him with Miss Lois A. Tarr of Lodi, daughter of John and Claudia (Kelley) Tarr, pioneer farmers and both now deceased. One child has been born of this union, Robert. Mrs. Toda is a member of the Rebekah Lodge at Farmington.

On June 9, 1912, J. D. Toda was married to Miss Pauline Summers, daughter of George R. and Elizabeth (Holden) Summers, pioneers of California, now ranchers near Valley Home, in San Joaquin County. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Toda: Jack S. and Betty Ellen. Mrs. J. D. Toda is also active in the Farmington Lodge of Rebekahs. The firm of Toda Bros. are members of the Retail Grocers' Association of California, and fraternally both are members of Valley Lodge, No. 135, F. & A. M., of Linden, and of Farmington Lodge, No. 296, I. O. O. F., J. D. Toda having served as noble grand, and also as deputy registration clerk of his district since 1912. In matters of citizenship both brothers are progressive and take a helpful part in promoting the prosperity of the county and especially the Farmington district which has been their home all their lives and where they are numbered among the representative citizens.

FRANK R. CAPURRO.—An interesting Stocktonian is Frank R. Capurro, who was born in that city on April 27, 1864, the son of Joseph and Maria Capurro, both natives of Italy. The father, who was highly esteemed by all who knew and had dealings with him, is deceased, but the mother, the center of a devoted circle, is still living at the age of seventy-nine. She resides in the old home on East Sonora Street, which has been the residence of the family for over fifty years. Joseph Capurro and his brother Manuel sailed around Cape Horn from Italy in 1851, and when they reached Stockton they engaged in furnishing mules for the hauling of supplies to the southern mines. Their corrals and stables covered a whole block, for they had from 2,000 to 3,000 mules in service, and for years did a flourishing trade. In later years the father was foreman for Marcus De Blaineville, who conducted a warehouse and commercial business on the water-front.

Frank R. Capurro attended the Lafayette and Franklin schools, and at the age of sixteen learned the trade of a barber, which he has followed ever since. He opened his first shop thirty-eight years ago with Jack Carter as a partner, on Center Street, opposite the Russ House; and such has been his standing in the community as a reliable citizen that for a number of years he has acted as interpreter in the Superior Courts of San Joaquin County as well as Police Court and the District Attorney's office.

When Mr. Capurro married he chose for his bride Miss Lizzie Cotter, a native daughter, born in Stockton, and a member of a well-known pioneer family. Mr. and Mrs. Capurro enjoy an enviable popularity.

MRS. JENNIE (SPROTT) CLEMENTS.—Prominent among the most interesting factors in the history of romantic California must be rated the lives of such genuine and worthy pioneers as the late Thomas Clements, who passed away in 1893, and his estimable companion who so admirably sustains his standards in the old Clements home, in whose honor the town of Clements was named. Thomas Clements was a well-known and prominent citizen of San Joaquin County, where he took up his abode in 1872, settling upon the ranch which is yet occupied by his widow. He was born in County Armagh, Ireland, on the Glenview Farm, December 18, 1837, his parents being John and Mary (Lester) Clements, who were also natives of the north of Ireland. In the place of his nativity he was reared, obtaining his education there in its public schools, and in 1857, when twenty years of age, he migrated to America, making his way direct to California. For a number of years he resided in Amador County, and remained there until his removal to San Joaquin County in 1872.

On April 15, 1868, Mr. Clements was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Sprott, also a native of the north of Ireland, her birthplace being Banbridge, County Down, and her natal day being September 21, 1841. She is a daughter of Thomas and Jennie Sprott, likewise natives of the north of Ireland. When a girl of six years she was brought to New York City by a married sister, with whom she resided until after she attained womanhood, leaving the East for California in 1864. Mr. and Mrs. Clements were the parents of seven children.

Thomas Clements always carried on agricultural pursuits, and prospered in his undertakings, investing extensively in fine lands. His Amador County ranch contained 585 acres and is still in the possession of his estate. The property lies south of Ione and is used for grazing land. The ranch at Clements contains 1,400 acres of land under cultivation, and was the first to be planted to hops in the northeast part of San Joaquin County; these Mr. Clements prepared and sold to the San Francisco and Eastern markets. He also engaged in diversified farming and planted a fifteen-acre almond orchard. The entire ranch is characterized by an air of neatness and thrift, indicative of the spirit of the former owner, who justly ranked with the leading agriculturists of central California.

In 1882 the village of Clements was laid out and named in his honor, that being the year in which the railroad was constructed through this part of the country. He took a deep interest in the upbuilding and progress of the town and was a friend to the cause of education, donating the brick with which the two-story school building was constructed. He was also the founder of the Presbyterian Church at Clements, attended its services, and contributed liberally to its support. He also gave generously to churches of other denominations, and in fact was a supporter of many measures which contributed to the general good along material, social, intellectual and moral lines. His political allegiance was given to the Republican party. Fraternally he was a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Scotch-Irish Society of San Francisco. Mrs. Clements still resides upon the ranch, and has a fine home, the result of her husband's industry and enterprise. She is a member of the Congregational Church at Lockeford, and counts her friends by the score in the county, where she has made her home for the past fifty years.

WILLIAM J. TODA.—An enterprising business man, as well as a native son, of Farmington, is William J. Toda, who is the proprietor of the Farmington Meat Market, sanitary and modern in every particular. In 1920, at a cost of $5,000, Mr. Toda installed an up-to-date refrigerating system with a capacity of three tons per day. He was born at Farmington, March 4, 1882, the eldest son of Julius and Nellie (Schrock) Toda, natives of Germany and Texas, respectively. William J. Toda began his education in the Shady Grove district school for two years; then while living with his maternal grandparents he attended the Paloma district school near Fosteria, Calaveras County, until his seventeenth year. He then became interested in mining in Calaveras County and spent the following twelve years prospecting and placer mining, with considerable success; meantime his father had been carrying on the stock business and meat market at Farmington. In 1910 William J. and his brother, L. A. Toda, entered into a partnership to carry on a retail meat business, which was conducted for two years, when the business was closed out on account of the illness of the latter. William J. Toda then returned to the mines, where he spent six months, then returned to Farmington and in 1914 he opened the meat market on his own account, and in 1920 improved his business with modern equipment run by electricity. Mr. Toda owns the property where his slaughter house is located on the Sonora Road and many improvements are under way for the betterment of this branch of the business. Mr. Toda formerly ran a meat route covering a territory of fifty miles, but this has recently been discontinued.

Mr. Toda's marriage occurred in Farmington, which united him with Miss Zana Gwin, a native of Kansas, a daughter of John and Jennie Gwin, now residing in Berkeley, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Toda are the parents of one son, Gwin Toda, a pupil at the Shady Grove district school. The family reside in Farmington in their comfortable residence and Mr. Toda is a member of the local Farm Bureau.

HARVEY J. CORELL.—An enterprising and progressive native son, who is making a decided success of viticulture and horticulture in the San Joaquin Valley, is Harvey J. Corell, who was born on March 2, 1878, on his father's ranch, about five and a half miles east of Acampo. His father and mother, William and Emily (Thompson) Corell, are both natives of Virginia, and came to California in 1875. William Corell was a stockman. Upon locating in San Joaquin County he purchased 200 acres of land and rented 260 acres more, on which he raised grain and stock. He and his wife are the parents of seven children, namely: Helen, now Mrs. W. S. Montgomery, of Lockeford; Mary, Mrs. Platt Smith; James, residing in the Hawaiian Islands; Oscar, living in Lodi; Harvey J., of this sketch; and Henry and Emma, both deceased. Both father and mother are still living in Lodi, their ages being eighty-five and seventy-nine years, respectively.

Harvey J. Corell began his education in the Brunswick school, but while still a young lad started to make his own way. Going to San Francisco, he obtained employment as night clerk at the Southern Pacific Hospital, where he worked for two years. About this time his father divided his property among his children, and Harvey Corell received thirty-five acres as his portion. He then purchased forty acres of open land from his brother, on which he planted a fourteen-acre almond orchard; this latter property he has recently sold.

The marriage of Mr. Corell occurred in Sacramento on May 28, 1907, and united him with Miss Anna Brandt, born near Clements, Cal., a daughter of Louis and Anna (Bowman) Brandt, whose sketch will be found in this volume. Mrs. Corell is one of a family of nine children. She and Mr. Corell are the parents of six children: Mildred, Naomi, Calvin, Florence, Louis William, and Helen Jane.

JOHN R. CLOW.—For the past twelve years John R. Clow has proven his worth to the community as deputy county assessor; and meanwhile his activities along agricultural lines have aided materially in the growth and development of the locality in which he has resided for the past fifteen years. A native of Missouri, he was born in Jasper County on April 25, 1860, the son of Benjamin Franklin and Rachael (Sutherland) Clow, pioneers of Indiana who removed to Missouri and settled in Jasper County in early days, and there farmed. The father, Benjamin F. Clow, lost his life in the Civil War when John R. was a child of two years. Some time later, the mother married a Mr. Stacks, a native of Kansas and also a farmer by occupation. The family started overland to California by the northern route; but learning of the terrible Custer massacre in the Black Hills, they turned back and took the southern route, the trip consuming four months and seventeen days. Settling on Dry Creek near Elliott, Mr. Stacks rented a place for the first two years; then he took up 160 acres of government land, proved up on it and then disposed of it and moved to Oregon, locating at Mitchell, Crook County. For many years Mr. Stacks conducted a sawmill at Mitchell; and when he disposed of it the family removed to Watsonville, Santa Cruz County. There Mr. Stacks passed away in 1917.

John R. Clow had very little opportunity to attend school; since he was seventeen years of age he has "hoed his own row," working for wages at whatever he could find to do, until he was married. He learned the stone-carving business, and for a number of years worked at his trade in Stockton; he worked also in sawmills, in the mines, and hauled logs for the Pleasant Valley Lumber Company.

The marriage of Mr. Clow occurred in Stockton on October 17, 1881, and united him with Miss Abigail Stacks, a native of Jasper County, Mo., and a daughter of Willis Stacks, who removed from Illinois to Missouri. The young people went to live on the old Thorp ranch northeast of Clements, and farmed this 240-acre grain ranch for the next two years. Fifteen years ago they settled in the Elliott district, where Mr. Clow has ninety acres, twenty acres of which is in vineyard and eight acres in almonds. Mr. and Mrs. Clow are the parents of seven children, as follows: Etta Melza, deceased; Cora Elva, now Mrs. Sestrem, of Watsonville; Walter Henry, a resident of Lemoore and the father of two children, Darwin and Willette; Homer Alfred, of Tracy, who is married and has two children, George and Vira Jane; Jessie Myrtle, Mrs. Prout of Oakland; Georgia May, Mrs. Gray of Sacramento, and the mother of one child, Virginia Clow; and Ida Vera, Mrs. Grimes of Galt, who has one son, Jimmie. Mr. Clow and his family are members of the Christian Church. Politically he is a Republican. In the capacity of deputy county assessor, he has been conscientious and thorough in the performance of his duty for the past twelve years; and the community is indebted to him for his efforts in the support of measures and movements looking to the prosperity and development of the county.

ALVA B. CONDY.—Representing the third generation of the Condy family in California, Alva B. Condy can well take pride in his heritage as a native son of the Golden State. His parents are James H. and Lillian (Burres) Condy, and the father, who was born in Philadelphia, came here with his mother in 1869, to join his father, James Condy, who had come to Stockton two years previously, a fuller account of their family history being given in the sketch of James A. Condy, elsewhere in this volume.

Alva B. Condy was born at Gilroy, Santa Clara County, June 30, 1885, and later, when the father removed to Angels Camp, Calaveras County, he attended school there. At the age of sixteen he started to work for the Utica Mining Company and for two years was a fireman, and twelve years was hoisting engineer. Coming to Stockton he entered the employ of the Monarch Foundry Company in January, 1916, and in the six years he was with them he held various positions, among them assistant furnace man, in charge of the electric furnace. In November, 1922, Mr. Condy purchased the grocery business of J. A. Hulbert, at 1248 South Sutter Street, and assisted by his capable wife he is meeting with splendid success in this new line of work. This store has been established for about ten years and enjoys a good patronage, which is increasing through the business policy of its new owners.

At Stockton on December 22, 1917, Mr. Condy was married to Mrs. Jessie (McLane) Tanner, a native of Arkansas and the daughter of Andrew T. McLane. They are the parents of a son, Lester. By Mrs. Condy's first marriage she had one daughter, Jessie Ruth Tanner. Mr. Condy is a stockholder in the Monarch Foundry Company and is the owner of valuable real estate in Stockton. Fraternally he is a member of the Foresters of America, of which he became past chief ranger in 1914.

GEORGE REIMCHE.—A vineyardist of San Joaquin County who is engaged in the cultivation and further development of his five-acre vineyard near Lodi is George Reimche. He was born at Akaterina, Slav, in South Russia, on July 22, 1855, a son of Peter and Margaret (Laugert) Reimche, both natives also of Russia. They were the parents of ten children, George Reimche being the only son living in California. He has three sisters in North Dakota. The father was a farmer in his native land, and passed away at the age of fifty-six; the mother lived to be sixty years of age.

George Reimche was raised on a farm on the Island of Crem and was educated in the public schools. On September 18, 1873, he was married to Miss Sophia Bechthold, a native of Russia, the daughter of Christ and Carry (Delk) Bechthold. When Mr. Reimche first started to work for himself, he had a small place which he farmed; then he bought about 175 acres in Crem, Russia, which he farmed until he came to the United States. Arriving in the United States in 1893 with his wife and seven children, he bought 160 acres of land in South Dakota, between Parkstown and Menno; later he sold this and went to Marion County, Kans., and bought a home in a colony where the land remained the property of the colony and the house was owned by the individual. Here he remained two years, when he sold his interest and went to Alberta, Canada, and took up a claim for 320 acres. This move proved very disastrous for him. For two consecutive years there were no crops, and Mr. Reimche lost all his savings and his land besides. In 1910 he came to California and bought a five-acre vineyard about three miles east of Lodi. This place he has improved with a comfortable house and suitable farm buildings. Mr. and Mrs. Reimche are the parents of nine children: John, a rancher near Lodi; Christ, in North Dakota; Elizabeth, at home; Henry, of Lodi; George, in Canada; Lottie, who was Mrs. Boschee, and who died in Canada, leaving six children, of whom the youngest, Viola Lottie, resides with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Reimche; and Lydia, Mrs. Jacob Wagemann; Carrie, Mrs. Fred Wagemann; and Mrs. Kate Wagemann, all of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Reimche have twenty-six grandchildren. Mr. Reimche became an American citizen while residing in South Dakota.

WILLIAM JAMES REYNOLDS.—Among the pioneer families of San Joaquin County is that which now finds a representative in William James Reynolds, who have ever borne their part in the building up and development of the county, and all members of the family have been citizens of progress and liberal ideas upon all subjects. He was born near Lathrop, March 31, 1863, on what was known as the Howell Ranch, which adjoined the Elkhorn Ranch, so called from the fact that many elk horns were found on the ranch in early days of pioneer development. William James Reynolds is the eldest son of Richard Reynolds, born in Indiana, March 20, 1833. His parents migrated to Wisconsin, and there their son was reared and schooled. He married Miss Elizabeth Hall, a native of Grant County, Wis., a daughter of William and Priscilla (Warfield) Hall, the former born near Bowling Green, Ky., and the latter in Missouri, and they crossed the plains to California in 1861. Richard Reynolds purchased 160 acres in the environs of East Union, near Lathrop, and the ranch was a well-known landmark of the county. The father passed away in 1915, the mother surviving him until February, 1922.

William James Reynolds received his education in the East Union district schools, then worked on his father's ranch until 1891, when he went to the mines in Mariposa County. He mined and prospected in Fresno, El Dorado, Plumas and Sierra counties for a period of fifteen years, and in 1910 returned to this county, where he has since been employed as towerman for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at French Camp.

The marriage of Mr. Reynolds occurred at Merced, which united him with Miss Annie E. Jack, a daughter of William Jack and a granddaughter of Captain Moss, all prominent in pioneer circles of Stockton's early history. William Jack married Elizabeth A. De Laney, who came to California in 1863. Mrs. Reynolds was born at Stockton, but reared and schooled at French Camp. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds are the parents of seven children: Annie Elizabeth; Rose M.; Eldridge R.; Edna and Ella are twins; John E.; and William J., Jr. Both Mr. Reynolds and his wife have a wide acquaintance in San Joaquin County, and Mrs. Reynolds takes an active part in civic affairs at French Camp.

FRANK REICHMUTH.—Among the prosperous and enterprising representatives of the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County is Frank Reichmuth and on his fine estate on Lincoln Highway in the vicinity of Lathrop he has given ample evidence of his progressive spirit and up-to-date methods. He was born in Canton Schwyz, Switzerland, March 8, 1884, a son of Joseph and Louisa (Stucker) Reichmuth, both natives of Switzerland and both are now deceased.

Frank Reichmuth had the opportunity only for a limited education, not being able to attend school after his tenth birthday. In 1904 he bade farewell to his native land, taking passage from Havre, France, on the S. S. Britannia for New York, the trip covering a period of nine days. His brother, Joseph, had preceded him to this country and is now a well-to-do and prominent dairy farmer of the Salinas Valley. From New York he proceeded to San Francisco, where he worked for two years driving a retail milk wagon; then he established his own retail milk route and within four years had built up a business that required two wagons, which covered the territory as far as South San Francisco. Disposing of his business at a good profit in 1910, he removed to Knightsen and for the following year and a half conducted his first dairy business with a marked degree of success. He then had a splendid opportunity to sell his business, and then located in San Joaquin County on the Oakwood stock farm, nine miles southwest of Stockton, where he was employed as foreman. One year later he purchased a share in the business with Joseph Fassler, and in 1916 they had a herd of 300 milch cows and 450 head of other stock, and the partnership continued until 1918, when Mr. Reichmuth conducted the ranch on his own account, and in 1921 he purchased 170 acres of the original Oakwood stock farm. The same year he purchased the Thomas Thomsen home place, a landmark of early days, consisting of 205 acres, but he has since disposed of ninety acres of this ranch and the balance is being rapidly developed into vineyard and alfalfa fields. Mr. Reichmuth has spent considerable money in substantial improvements and has developed a splendid irrigation system. A reservoir containing 1,000,000 gallons of water has been constructed, the water being distributed to the land by gravity flow through concrete pipes. In 1912 Mr. Reichmuth visited his native land, and upon returning to the United States spent two months in traveling from state to state, in all visiting twenty-four states. In 1921 Mr. Reichmuth again returned to his native land, and was married to Miss Hilda Gyr, daughter of J. Gyr, a prominent and wealthy merchant of Canton Schwyz. They are the parents of a baby girl, Cleo, born at Lathrop. Mr. Reichmuth is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce at Lathrop and he enjoys the confidence and esteem of his neighbors and friends. He came to America empty-handed, but taking advantage of the splendid opportunities offered he has worked his way steadily upward to prosperity.

SYDNEY W. REYNOLDS.—A foremost business man and a successful rancher, Sydney W. Reynolds is a native of San Joaquin County and a son of the well-known and prominent pioneer, Edward Reynolds. Mr. Reynolds is the proprietor of the Big Store in Ripon and his agricultural activities are carried on east of Ripon, where he owns 125 acres devoted to grapes and olives, and also owns eighty acres of the Reynolds homestead in the East Union district of the county. It is needless to say that Mr. Reynolds has been unusually successful in his career, and not only have his diligent efforts rewarded him in material circumstances, but he has also acquired a position of esteem and public worth among his fellow-citizens and business associates. He was born in the East Union district of San Joaquin County on his father's ranch, June 25, 1877, a son of Edward and Saluda (Campbell) Reynolds, both natives of Wisconsin. Edward Reynolds was born in 1844 and was nine years old when his parents started across the plains to California, members of a party under Captain Cutler Salmon, the emigrant train reaching California in October, 1853. Edward Reynolds was educated in the district school, the school being built on a portion of his father's ranch. In young manhood he returned to Wisconsin for his bride, Miss Saluda Campbell, where they were married, and immediately returned to California and their home in San Joaquin County, where they became prominent factors in the growth and progress of the community.

Sydney W. Reynolds received a good education in the East Union district school and in 1896 was graduated from the York Business College. He grew up on his father's ranch and at an early age showed natural business ability. While still in his teens he was put in charge of the cream station at Cowell switch, which is now the thriving town of Manteca, where for two years he conducted this branch of the San Joaquin Creamery. The business grew rapidly, as did the surrounding country, and at the present time Manteca is the center of one of the richest dairy sections of California. Mr. Reynolds then went to Weiser, Idaho, where he worked as a clerk in the postoffice; six months later he went to Kansas City, Mo., where he entered the employ of the street car company; however, he soon became dissatisfied in the Middle West and returned to California, and was employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company on the western division, remaining for a year and a half. About this time, in partnership with his brother, Edwin M., he purchased the store of Eastman & McKee in Lathrop, and after a partnership of four years our subject bought his brother's share and successfully conducted the business for another year, when he sold out to J. H. Southwell. In 1908 Mr. Reynolds and F. E. McKee made a trip to Ripon with the idea in mind of opening a store, and the result was that they purchased the store of Yaple & Company, the pioneer store of south San Joaquin County, the business having been carried on for forty years. Under the new management, the business grew rapidly. In September, 1916, Mr. McKee passed away, his interest in the store being retained by his widow and daughter. The store building has been completely remodeled into a modern and attractive establishment and the interior redecorated. The company carries a complete line of dry goods, ready-to-wear women's and men's apparel, fancy and staple groceries, fruits and vegetables.

Mr. Reynold's first marriage, which occurred in Stockton in 1901, united him with Miss Mabel S. Fisher, a daughter of John Fisher, pioneer of San Joaquin County. One daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds, Eleanor Lucile. Mrs. Reynolds passed away in 1910. In April, 1913, Mr. Reynolds was married to Miss Bird J. Garrett, youngest daughter of William Garrett, deceased, a pioneer resident of Ripon and prominent as a Calaveras mining expert. Mr. Reynolds has never missed an opportunity to support all movements and measures for the progress and development of the Ripon section. He is vice-president of the First National Bank, a prominent member of the County Fair Association board, the Ripon Merchants Association, and since 1906 has been a member of the I. O. O. F. of Ripon.

RIPON HOSPITAL.—With but one thought in mind, the greatest good to the greatest number, Dr. N. B. Gould in 1920 established the Ripon Hospital, an institution that has increased in usefulness with each passing year. This institution is located one mile west of Ripon on the Ripon Road and is the former residence of Thomas Hughes, which has been completely remodeled at a cost of $20,000, with the most modern and up-to-date surgical department of any hospital in this section of the county. Beautiful and spacious grounds surround the buildings and the thirteen acres included in the hospital property is devoted to the raising of fruits, vegetables and poultry for use in the hospital; besides there are tested dairy cows that furnish milk and butter for the patrons of the institution. Paul L. Ness, a pharmacist of Ripon, is associated with Doctor Gould in this worthy undertaking. The efficiency with which the work of the hospital is carried on and the manner in which the patients are cared for were due to the capability of the head nurse, the late Mrs. Whitney, formerly of St. Helena, Napa County, who died in 1921, whose position was then taken by her sister, Miss Etta Evans, who came from the Emergency Hospital, Salt Lake City. Miss Evans has a corps of six able assistants, and the hospital is a model of sanitation and cleanliness, and the patient entering this hospital is assured of the most kindly and best of professional treatment. Those competent to speak with authority assert that Doctor Gould's knowledge of materia medica and surgery, backed by a broad general fund of information in every sphere of thought, bespeak for him many years of professional usefulness, and as head physician and surgeon of the Ripon Hospital he has found his greatest field for service to his fellow-man. Associated with Dr. Gould since 1919, is Dr. R. W. Brace, who was lately discharged from the army after overseas service as an army surgeon in France with the commission of major. He is a specialist in X-ray and a very successful practitioner.

RIPON UNION HIGH SCHOOL.—In midsummer, 1910, when the old Ripon Board of Trade was young and full of enthusiasm, and its members casting about for something to do for the town and community, two citizens, meeting at the postoffice, one said to the other: "Why can't we have a high school here?" The other replied promptly and confidently, "We can, if we go after it." So a plan of campaign was talked over, and in a very short time a petition was drawn up and circulated, and after a sufficient number of signatures were secured, an election was held in August, a high school board was elected and the Ripon Union high school district was organized and ready for business in just one month. This broke all previous records for speed in such matters in San Joaquin County and is a good example of community boosting. The school was opened on September 1 in Odd Fellows Hall, rented for the purpose, with one teacher and fourteen students. Another teacher was added just after the holidays in 1911. Odd Fellows hall being a very unsatisfactory place to conduct the school, the board called a bond election for the purpose of buying and building a suitable high school building to cost $22,500, part of which was to be rented to the Ripon grammar school, as that school at that time was in need of better quarters. The election was held on April 22, 1911, but failed to carry, and this same proposition was put up to the voters of the district a second time, on June 1, 1911, and also failed to carry.

During this year a holding committee was formed to acquire and hold land for the schools, and said committee, being backed by the people and the bank, built a temporary high school building, and school was opened in that building at the commencement of the fall term, September 1, 1911, the high school board renting the place from the holding committee, and adding a room and a teacher as the growth of the school required, until 1916, when the building contained five rooms and five teachers were employed. The rent paid to the holding committee having reached a sum sufficient to pay the cost of the building and grounds, the property was deeded to the high school district. Also at this time, it appearing to the board that the time was ripe for a new and modern building, so imperatively necessary, that the board decided to call and did call the third bond election, which was held on June 1, 1916. It is to the credit of the high school board and the progressive spirit and generosity of the people that the election was successful, and bonds for $27,000 were voted and sold, and the building was started in August, 1916. It is a beautiful, modern, up-to-date building that will stand as a monument to the progressive spirit and enterprise of the people and an inspiration to the youth of the land to aspire to higher and better things. The Ripon high school is generally recognized for its ability and thoroughness and its graduates are admitted direct to the State University.

CURTIS M. ROBBINS.—Well known in the newspaper and real estate fields, in both of which he has made an outstanding success, Curtis M. Robbins is now connected with the firm of Hodgkins & Barnett, pioneer dealers in real estate of Stockton. A native son of this city, Mr. Robbins was born on August 6, 1891, his parents being Henry E. and Mary T. (Marshall) Robbins, the latter a native of California. The father, who was born in Utah in 1852, came to Stockton when a young man; he was a brickmason by trade and later he became a brick and cement contractor, erecting many of the business buildings in Stockton, among them the Hubbard, occupied by Lauxen & Catts furniture store, the brick extension to the Sampson Iron Works, the first Fair Oaks school, the Santa Fe depot, and many others, continuing in this line until his death in 1908, survived by his wife and four children: Mabel C., a resident of Stockton, but who has been teaching in Honolulu; Estelle, the wife of Reed D. Bush, of El Dorado, Kans.; Percy, deceased, and Curtis M., of this sketch. Henry E. Robbins was prominent in Masonry, being a member of Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M., of which he was master in 1887, high priest in 1884 of Stockton Chapter, No. 28, R. A. M., and a Knight Templar.

The youngest of his family, Curtis M. Robbins attended the Lafayette school and graduated from the Stockton high school in the class of 1911. He soon entered the advertising department of the Stockton Mail, and later with William E. Schei he published The Voice, a weekly paper. He then was with the advertising department of the Stockton Record until he enlisted for service in the U. S. Navy during the World War. He was stationed at Mare Island as a first-class yeoman, and after the war he returned to Stockton and resumed his duties on the Record. His success as a salesman there brought him to the attention of Hodgkins & Barnett, one of the old established real estate firms of Stockton, and he was offered a post with them, which he accepted, taking up his work in April, 1920, and he has been most successful in his operations in the realty business.

Mr. Robbins was married at Stockton to Miss Louise Fanning, a native daughter of San Joaquin County, and they have a son, Richard Marshall Robbins. Like his father, Mr. Robbins is active in Masonic circles, and is a member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 68, F. & A. M., is venerable master of Stockton Lodge of Perfection, A. A. S. R., belongs to Ben Ali Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. at Sacramento, the Anteros Club, and is a director of the Kiwanis Club.

HENRY P. RONKENDORF.—Born on December 25, 1880, Henry P. Ronkendorf first saw the light on Roberts Island, the son of Peter and Catherine (Schlutter) Ronkendorf, whose life stories are narrated elsewhere in this historical work. He attended the public schools, was graduated from York's Academy, and in 1900 entered the University of California. Three years later he left college to take a position in mining at Hodson's, in Tuolumne County, and there he spent some fourteen months in practical mining engineering. In 1904, he left California for Germany to enter the famous Mining Academy, founded in 1765, at Freiberg, and in November, 1910, after successfully finishing the prescribed course in engineering, received the M. E. degree.

On his return to the United States, he prepared actively to take up his professional work, and was due to go on an expedition to Mexico, in December, 1910, the object of the organizers being to develop the copper mines of Old Sonora; but on account of the unstable government then in charge in that country, the plan was given up. Since then, Mr. Ronkendorf has remained at home with his aged parents, and for the past twelve years he has made a reputation for himself as a successful Delta rancher. He is a member of the Farmers' Exchange Bureau of California, and in 1921 and 1922 all his farm products were successfully marketed through that agency at Oakland.

Mr. Ronkendorf has long been known for his ability as a marksman, his skill having been developed in his youth, and probably this has had much to do with the final organization, in a most successful manner, of the Roberts Island Rifle Club, which is affiliated with the National Rifle Association of America. In 1917, Peter Ronkendorf gave the land for the erection of a club house, and in 1917 and 1921, a modern indoor and outdoor range was completed there, four miles from Stockton. The annual shoots are held, as always, in the Club's ranges, for the Roberts Island Rifle Club are now the proud possessors of the most complete indoor and outdoor range of any in the state of California, if not in the West. After having served as secretary, for ten consecutive years, Henry Ronkendorf resigned, in 1922; but he has been retained as a member of the board of directors. As a member of the rifle team of 1920, our subject attended the national match in the East, and he was one of the boys that helped to bring the championship back to the Golden State.

PETER RONKENDORF.—An experienced, successful California farmer, Peter Ronkendorf is the proprietor of some 278 acres on Roberts Island, the eldest, in fact, of Delta pioneer farmers still living in that part of San Joaquin County. He has endured and survived four terrible floods, the first overwhelming him in 1880, the second in 1884, the third two years later, and the last in 1893, when it was hoped the land would no more be inundated. Due to serious breaks in the levee, the entire middle division of Roberts Island was submerged, and each of the three latest floods swept away practically everything our subject had, save his home and personal effects.

Peter Ronkendorf was born in Holstein, Germany, on January 12, 1842, the son of Peter and Olga (Abel) Ronkendorf, both natives of Holstein and prominent and well-to-do agriculturalists. There were five children in the family, Joachin, Ann, Elizabeth, Maria and Peter. His country has always been famous for its schools, hence he received a good training. His common-sense schooling was such as to direct his attention to agriculture, and he early went to work on the farm, remaining at home, helping his parents until he was twenty-seven years of age. Then he decided to break away, not only from his home, but from his native land, and so sailed from Hamburg on the S. S. "Teutonia," reaching New York on October 15, 1869, after a tempestuous voyage of fifteen days. A fellow-traveler on this journey was the late Henry Lehman, who also came to California and for forty years was a neighbor in San Joaquin County. Young Ronkendorf first went to Illinois, where he remained for seven months; and when he pushed on to the greater West, he traveled over the newly-constructed Union and Central Pacific railroads, arriving in the Golden State on July 7, 1870.

While in San Francisco, he was stricken with typhoid fever, from which he did not recover for several months. Then he heard of a chance for a young man on a tract of land in the Delta of San Joaquin County, owned by Henry Frewert, who was willing to sell at reasonable terms. He reached this county in December of the following year, and here he has since lived, toiled and prospered. In 1888, he bought 125 acres from the Glasgow Land Company, having previously carried on market-gardening for a few years with Henry Lehman, but that partnership was dissolved in 1878; and thereafter he added to his holdings, so that by 1893 he owned his 278 choice Delta acres. The home place was originally settled by Henry Frewert, who had lived in a cabin on the bank of the river.

From the start, Mr. Ronkendorf had a hard, uphill pull, but by perseverance, he finally won out, despite the hazards of early Delta ranching. He well remembers the time when he made trips to Stockton in rowboats across the flooded wastes, embarking from his very door; but as soon as the water receded, he drove his team on the top of the levee to French Camp, paying a toll for the use of that road going into Stockton. As far back as 1879, he used the Studebaker wagons, and he still has one of the original vehicles, which has given such satisfaction through all the intervening busy years. He laid out the park about his comfortable home and planted the beautiful trees which have since grown to enormous size—among them twin fan palm trees, now over seventy feet in height, and many tall Italian cypress trees. In 1886, Mr. Ronkendorf set out a plot of ground and planted shade-trees, since called Riverside Park; and this place has long been famous as a picnic grounds. Public-spirited to a high degree, Mr. Ronkendorf, in 1893, on the completion of the highway bridge at this point, donated the land needed for the section of the county road.

In 1875, Peter Ronkendorf returned to Germany and visited his parents and old friends, and then came back in the following year. In January, 1880, he made a more extended visit to Germany, and while there he was married to Miss Catherine Schlutter, a native of Holstein, who was born on March 22, 1858, and the happy couple came to California; they were blessed with the birth of two children, Henry P. and Anna Catherine. Mrs. Ronkendorf passed away on January 12, 1902, at the home place, her death causing a void which her devoted husband feels never can be filled. His daughter has remained faithful to her father, in recent years caring for him as only a faithful daughter can. After demonstrating his peculiar ability in Delta farming for years, Mr. Ronkendorf in 1910 relinquished active control of his affairs, in favor of his son, who now operates the ranch.

CARL F. ANDERSON.—The identification of Carl F. Anderson with the business interests and substantial development of California dates from 1900, and with the city of Stockton since 1915, where he has been engaged in building operations. He was born in southern Sweden, July 13, 1869, and as soon as he was able to use a hammer and saw, began to learn the carpenter trade from his father. At eighteen years of age, he left home for America, first locating in Kansas City, where he followed his trade, then to Chicago. Next he went to Michigan and worked in the sawmills in that state; then he followed his trade in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Dakota, and at odd times worked in the harvest field. In 1896 he went to Texas, where on July 13, 1897, he was married to Miss Annie M. Erickson, also a native of Sweden. Mr. Anderson experienced the discomforts of the disastrous flood in Galveston, and aided in reconstruction work until his removal to California in the spring of 1900. He settled in Stockton, where he worked for Joe Herald in building operations for five years; then he removed to Berkeley, this state, where he conducted a stair building shop for nine years.

In 1915 Mr. Anderson returned to Stockton, where he has since been actively engaged in contracting and building. He has specialized in designing and building his own houses and then putting them up for sale. He owns several lots in the Yosemite Lake subdivision, where he will build bungalows to be sold after completion. He erected the Kent flats at Sixth and Sutter streets; a modern flat building on West Poplar street near Commerce; he also erected a residence for the real estate firm of Albertson & Drais. Mr. Anderson finds no difficulty in disposing of his residences as fast as they are completed, for they are not only artistic in appearance, but are models of convenience and comfort.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have become the parents of two children, Ethel and Clarence C. Miss Ethel Anderson is one of the talented contralto singers of Stockton and is well known in the musical circles of that city. She studied vocal music in Stockton with Mrs. M. R. Green and during the winter of 1921-1922 was in New York City, where she studied with Madame Garrigue. While in New York City, Miss Anderson was soloist in the Reform Church, and upon her return to Stockton, she was soloist in the Grace Methodist Church, and at the present time is soloist in the Presbyterian Church in Stockton. She has given recitals at the Philomathean Club House in Stockton, and her beautiful voice has been heard on many occasions in concert work in Stockton and other cities of the valley. Mr. Anderson is classed among the enterprising, progressive and influential citizens of Stockton, where he is well known, commanding confidence and respect by reason of his reliability in business, his loyalty in citizenship, and his trustworthiness in private life. Mrs. Anderson passed away February 24, 1923.

JOHN J. BRENNAN.—A well-earned success has been the reward of John J. Brennan, and it has come about entirely through his own efforts and in the face of handicaps that might have easily discouraged one of less stability of character. A native of Ireland, Mr. Brennan was born January 12, 1862, and in 1881, when nineteen years old, he landed in New York. His first work there was as a clerk in a grocery store, and then for a number of years he worked on the Third Avenue line of the New York Elevated Railroad. While a resident of the metropolis he was married to Miss Maria Gilboy, and in 1906 he brought her and their five sons, ranging from five to sixteen years, to Tracy in the hope of benefiting her health. After only ten months' residence here she passed away, leaving him with the responsibility of rearing and caring for the five children.

For a time Mr. Brennan worked in the baggage and freight department of the Southern Pacific Railroad at Tracy, but after his wife's death he went to Stockton, where for the next four years he was connected with the street department of the city, under Oscar Wright, the superintendent of streets. He then ran a grocery at Fair Oaks a short time, and in 1908 bought the grocery store and building at Center and Jackson streets. This he conducted a number of years with splendid success, later turning it over to his son, Frank Brennan, who is now in charge. Mr. Brennan now has another store at 317 South Stanislaus street. Coming to California with only $140, he has indeed made the most of his opportunities and is now rated in Dun and Bradstreet from $10,000 to $20,000. Successful in his business ventures, he has invested his profits in real estate and is now the owner of the California Bakery building and has erected an apartment house adjoining; he also owns valuable Richmond property. Mr. Brennan is the father of five sons who grew to maturity: Harry; William; Joseph P., who died at Stockton while serving in the Commissary Department, U. S. A.; Frank and Edward.

FRED E. GOODELL, D. D. S.—A native son of Stockton who has early in life established himself in the professional life of the city of his birth is Dr. Fred E. Goodell, who was born here on August 27, 1899. He is the son of Frank E. and Rowena (Wollam) Goodell, the former a native of Calaveras County, while Mrs. Goodell was born in Columbus, Ohio. The family has made their home here for many years and Mr. Goodell is head of the pioneer hardware firm of Ruhl, Goodell & Company.

Fred E. Goodell attended the Weber, El Dorado and Washington schools in his youth and graduated from the Stockton high school in the class of 1917. Deciding to take up the profession of dentistry, he entered the affiliated college of the University of California, at San Francisco, finishing its four years' course in 1921, when he was graduated with the degree of D. D. S. He then spent one year in Mt. Zion Hospital, San Francisco, gaining a valuable practical experience in his professional work, and being a close student, profited well by every opportunity opened to him to increase his knowledge of his chosen work. In September, 1922, he returned to his native city and opened his offices in the Commercial Bank Building, and through his skill and scientific knowledge he is already well established in his practice.

HOWARD L. BUTTS.—Numbered among Stockton's prominent business men, Howard L. Butts is the proprietor of one of the leading shoe stores of the city, well deserving the large patronage his efficient business methods and courteous policy toward his customers have brought him. A native of New York, Mr. Butts was born in Delaware County, December 13, 1879, and his early schooling was obtained in his native state. In 1897 he came to Stockton to make his home with his uncle, Howard Malcom Fanning, one of Stockton's prominent pioneer residents who came to California in 1850, a sketch of his life being given on another page of this work.

Continuing his schooling here, Mr. Butts graduated from the Stockton high school in the class of 1900, and then entered the employ of John Garwood, a pioneer shoe dealer of Stockton, now a resident of San Francisco, who was in partnership with George Langridge in the early days, starting in business for himself in 1888. Mr. Butts learned the business thoroughly under this experienced shoe man, continuing until the fall of 1903, when he returned East, and through the recommendation of Mr. Garwood he secured a position in the establishment of James McCreery & Company, one of New York's leading stores. After only four weeks as a salesman, Mr. Butts was promoted to the head of the shoe department, and he remained with this company until 1909, when he returned to California. The Sorosis Shoe Company had just placed their line of ladies' shoes with the D. Samuels Lace House on O'Farrell street, San Francisco, and Mr. Butts was offered the position of manager of the shoe department, and being anxious to return to California, he accepted the position. He continued there for six months and then was prevailed upon by his former employer, Mr. Garwood, to return to Stockton and take charge of his store, and soon after coming here he purchased the business. Since then many improvements have been made in the store; a new, modern front, one of the most attractive on the street, has been installed, and the business has grown steadily year by year, the highest class of shoes for men and women being carried.

He has one son, Robert Calvin Butts, attending the Stockton public schools. For many years Mr. Butts has been a member of the Elks, joining Stockton Lodge, No. 218, in 1901. He is also a member of the Yosemite Club, the Rotary Club, Chamber of Commerce, Merchants Association and the Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers Association.

HENRY GUSTAVSON.—On the list of prosperous citizens of San Jose stands the name of Henry Gustavson, who for more than a quarter of a century has been engaged in the useful profession of patternmaker. A native of Stockholm, Sweden, he was born August 7, 1875, a son of John August and Clara Matilda (Bonnvier) Gustavson, the father being a native of Stockholm, and the mother a native of France. The father, John August, a man of rare ability and genius, was for many years the cabinetmaker for King Oscar of Sweden; a brother, Kastman, is the king's gardener; another brother, Carlson, was for many years chief of police of Stockholm, and is now the commodore of the Stockholm Yacht Club. The paternal grandfather of Henry Gustavson was Gustave Felt, who came to America in 1854, settling first in Chicago; later he drove an ox-team from Chicago to Galesville, Wis., where he was engaged in farming. The maternal grandfather was a Frenchman who served under Napoleon, and who was condemned to exile for a minor offense. He made his way to Sweden, after many narrow escapes, taking with him eight potatoes; upon his arrival, he planted them, and raised the first potatoes ever raised in Sweden. The family of Henry Gustavson left their native land of Sweden when he was less than a year old, landing in Chicago April 7, 1876. Here Henry attended the public schools; but at the age of nine years he entered the employ of the McEwen Manufacturing Company as an apprentice to learn the trade of patternmaker and woodcarver. During the year of 1890, the family removed to San Jose, where the parents lived until they passed away, the father living to be seventy-five and the mother sixty-eight. Here Henry Gustavson was employed first by the Pacific Manufacturing Company; later he was employed by the Bean Spray Pump Company, and for ten years made all the patterns for this company, making the first pattern for the celebrated Bean Spray Pump, the motor and all appurtenances. Realizing the necessity and advisability of establishing his own business, during the year of 1897 he opened his own pattern-making establishment. His business prospered from its inception, and enjoyed a large patronage. Among his clients may be mentioned the Western Well Works, for whom he did $5,000 worth of work during 1920; and he also worked extensively for the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, the San Jose Water Works, the Nash, Engelhardt, Silva Manufacturing Company, and many other prominent business firms of San Jose. His shop was equipped with the most modern machinery and appliances for pattern-making and wood-carving, and employed nine men for this work. Mr. Gustavson disposed of his business interests in San Jose on October 1, 1921, and being importuned to come to Lodi and become connected with the Superior Iron Works, as the patternmaker, he bought a block of its stock and has ever since made his home at Lodi, giving his best efforts to the company in the manufacture of their excellent line of deep-well and turbine pumps and general irrigation machinery.

Mr. Gustavson is a genius in his chosen line of work, a master mechanic. While experience has been the largest factor in his mechanical education, he holds a diploma from the International Correspondence School of Scranton, Pa., whose course in mechanical drawing he successfully completed. He is endowed with great inventive force and executive ability, a man of fine physique and an alert mind, which serves to place him in the forefront of the patternmakers of California. Fraternally, Mr. Gustavson is a member of the Vasa Ordenen, a Swedish order; and also of the Knights of Pythias, the Maccabees, and the dramatic order of the Knights of Khorassan.

JESSE HARDY.—For the past twenty-eight years Jesse Hardy has been a resident of California and since March 1, 1902, has been identified with the Holt Manufacturing Company in Stockton, where, through the exercise of his native talents and acquired ability, he has risen to the head of the engineering record department of this well-known and prosperous concern. He was born in New York, July 11, 1875, and in his native state attended the grammar school; when his family removed to Rockeford, Ill., he entered high school, from which he was duly graduated. At nineteen years of age, 1894, he arrived in California, where he entered the California College at Oakland and in 1898 he was graduated with the degree of B. S. He then went to Calaveras County, where he taught school for three years, after which he settled in Stockton and entered the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company. He started as a draftsman and was introduced to thirty employes, only four of whom now remain with the company, Mr. Hardy being one of the four, having spent twenty years of continuous services with this company. From draftsman, Mr. Hardy was promoted to chief of the plant, then to the head of the engineering record department. During the World War he was superintendent of production, having supervision of eighty-five clerks.

Mr. Hardy has the distinction of making the drawings for the first gasoline caterpillar built at the plant, a small affair named the Pullet. Mr. Hardy is an active member of Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F. and has passed through all the chairs of the order; also a member of the Parker Encampment and Canton Ridgley. His course has been characterized by firmness of purpose, by laudable ambition and unflagging enterprise, and the uniform esteem with which he is held is given in recognition of his personal worth and ability.

EMANUEL CAPURRO.—When Emanuel Capurro passed away in 1885, San Joaquin County lost one of its oldest and most esteemed citizens, for he spent thirty-seven years within the county, and they were busy and useful ones. He was an Italian by birth, and while still a boy went to sea, which he followed until he settled in California. When he left his native land for the new world he was the captain of the sailing vessel that came via Cape Horn, a year being consumed in the voyage. Arriving in the San Francisco harbor in 1848 he went direct to Stockton when that now thriving city was a group of tents. He established a general store on the waterfront and supplied the Southern mines with merchandise of every kind, transported by pack-mules to the mines, which he followed for many years.

The marriage of Mr. Capurro occurred after reaching California and united him with Miss Apollonia Sopena, a native of Mazatlan, Mexico. They were the parents of three children: Emanuel, Mrs. Carmelitta Gambetta, and Mrs. Rose Capurro, all natives of Stockton. Mrs. Gambetta, the oldest daughter, is the oldest living native daughter in San Joaquin County. Mr. Capurro performed his part in the establishment of the great commonwealth of California under conditions by no means pleasant at all times, but his true western spirit was shown by his courage and determination to accomplish what he set out to do. He led an industrious and useful life and was held in high esteem in the city where he had resided so many years.

E. HENRY HAWKINS.—A successful vineyardist whose progressive operations have furthered the advancement in California husbandry, is E. Henry Hawkins, a native of Maricopa County, Ariz., where he was born near Phoenix, on January 13, 1897. His father, Eugene Thomas Hawkins, was a farmer who had married Miss Sophie Elizabeth Lutgerding; he is living today, and is an agriculturalist near Live Oak, in San Joaquin County. Henry Hawkins attended the grammar school in his district in Arizona, and later went to the Lodi grammar school, after his parents came to California in 1905. His parents had six children: Lena E., Erroll T., Ruby L., E. Henry, Imogene and June.

Mr. Hawkins had already gained practical experience in agriculture while working for his father, and in 1917 he began to make his own way in the world. He joined in partnership with his father and brother, Erroll T., and they rented two places southeast of Lodi, which they operated for two years. Then, at Lodi, on June 22, 1919, E. Henry Hawkins was married to Miss Hazel M. Lawry, who was born near Mokelumne Hill, in Calaveras County, the daughter of George C. and Sarah Lawry. Her father was a farmer and stockman, and he is still living today not far from Lodi, on his ranch near Harney Lane. She was reared and educated in Calaveras County, and enjoyed one year's study and training at the Lodi high school. Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins have one child, named Gerald H. After their marriage, they took a five years' lease of J. W. Wakefield's ranch, elsewhere described in this work. Mr. Hawkins is a consistent member of the Methodist Church in Lodi.

JOHN FREDERICK TONS.—Coming to America as a lad of fourteen from his home in Bremen, Germany, where he was born April 3, 1847, John Frederick Tons on reaching New York was employed for some years in the grocery store of his uncle there. In 1868 he set out on the long journey to California via Panama, and for a time he was engaged as an attendant at the State Asylum at Stockton. Later he became district agent for the Weiland Brewery of San Francisco and then for the Rainier Brewery, his territory comprising San Joaquin, Calaveras, Tuolumne and Stanislaus counties. He was connected with this line of business from 1874 to 1916 and he became one of the best-known men in the Valley, with a wide acquaintance in every section. His first location in Stockton was on Weber Avenue near Center Street and later he established his headquarters at 933 East Lafayette Street. Mr. Tons was a member of the volunteer fire department connected with the State Hospital and belonged to the Red Men, the German Order of Foresters and the Turnverein, to whose ranks his passing away on December 17, 1916, came as a distinct loss.

On May 17, 1874, Mr. Tons was married to Miss Johanna Barkhorn, who was born in Calaveras County, a member of a pioneer family there. Her father, John Barkhorn, came to California via Cape Horn in 1849 and settled at Angels Camp, Calaveras County, later becoming a resident of Stockton. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Tons: John; Edna, the wife of James Mallott of Oakland; George; Ida M., the wife of John J. Burrows of Stockton; Edward; Alma, married Elden Willis of Stockton. The eldest son, John, was born at Stockton June 7, 1881, and at the age of fifteen joined his father in business, traveling throughout this district for fifteen years. He continued his father's interests for two years after the latter's death, but since 1918 he has been manager of Gianelli's grocery at Sutter and Market streets. His marriage united him with Mrs. Bessie Travers, a native of Ireland and he is a member of the Red Men, Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E., and the Commercial Travelers Association.

KYLE H. WEAVER.—A progressive business man of Stockton, Kyle H. Weaver is the owner and proprietor of the Pennant Cleaners located at 1650 South Eldorado Street, Stockton, where he is equipped to do all kinds of cleaning and dyeing. His entire life has been spent in Stockton, where he was born May 18, 1888, a son of Myrt and Josephine (Lewis) Weaver, natives of Iowa and California, respectively. The maternal grandfather of our subject fought in the Mexican War and came to California in an early day. Myrt Weaver came to California in the early '50s with a surveying crew, crossing the plains with wagons drawn by mules. For many years he was an attendant at the Stockton State Hospital and is remembered by the old settlers of Stockton as a popular musician. This pioneer and his wife are living retired at Modesto, Cal.

Kyle H. Weaver was educated in the Jackson and Grant schools in Stockton and at the age of fifteen started to work, first in the spinning room of the Stockton Woolen Mills and later in a planing mill and then in the Stockton City Laundry. In 1908 he determined to enter business on his own account and with A. A. Mallett as a partner, he founded the Pennant Cleaners. He purchased a corner lot at 1650 South Eldorado Street and started in a small way in a shed built on the rear of the lot; four years ago he purchased his partner's interest and has since conducted the business alone. In 1923 Mr. Weaver erected a building 36x70 feet on his property, concrete and brick, making it as nearly fireproof as possible, and will be equipped with the best and most modern machinery. Two motor delivery wagons are required to take care of his business.

The marriage of Mr. Weaver united him with Miss Louise Cassinelli, a native of Jackson, Cal., and they are the parents of one son, Bob. Mr. Weaver is a member of the Exchange Club in Stockton and the National Association of Master Dyers & Cleaners.

WALTER VINCENT.—For the past twenty-four years, Walter Vincent has rendered valuable service in the employ of the Stockton Iron Works as a blacksmith; he has also been interested in agricultural pursuits and is the owner of a fine sixty-acre ranch near Colledgeville. He was born in Stockton, January 14, 1862, a son of George and Amie (Ferrier) Vincent, natives of Vermont and Scotland, respectively. George Vincent came to California in the early '50s, via Panama, and after his arrival engaged in mining at Coloma and also clerked in a grocery store there; he also mined in Nevada in the early days. Both George Vincent and his wife were well known to the citizens of Stockton in pioneer days, for they conducted a millinery store and in connection with it they were agents for sewing machines. George Vincent was an inventor of considerable ability. Among his inventions was a sewing machine run by water power; a hemmer, which has been adopted by sewing machine companies; he invented a flexible truck; also a valve used on screen doors. He worked on his inventions for twenty years and he and his wife carried on their store successfully; he was the possessor of a fine tenor voice and sang in different churches in the city. George Vincent and his wife were the parents of seven children; four grew up and three are now living; George Jr., grew to manhood and died in 1920; Walter; Clarence residing in Oakland, and Horace, bookkeeper in the Stockton Savings & Loan Bank. The mother passed away in 1871 and was survived by her husband until 1894.

Walter Vincent attended the Franklin school and the Lone Tree district school and at the youthful age of twelve began to work in a ranch near Escalon, being engaged in ranching for a number of years. When seventeen he returned to Stockton where he learned the blacksmith's trade with the Matteson-Williamson Company; then completed his trade with the Bigelow Construction Company in San Francisco continuing there for over two years. Upon returning to San Joaquin Valley he entered the employ of Walter Matteson in a machine shop at Oakdale; he then worked for the Houser Harvester Company as a blacksmith, at the time his father was bookkeeper for the company. He then worked for the Shipper Conpany and for twelve years was employed at the Globe Iron Works. In 1899 he entered the employ of the Stockton Iron Works as blacksmith and he is still employed in that position for this company.

The marriage of Mr. Vincent united him with Miss Emily Ladd, born in Stockton, a daughter of that honored pioneer, Ira W. Ladd, the ceremony taking place at the Ladd homestead on September 4, 1894. Ira W. Ladd was born in Vermont in 1837 and came to California with his brother George S., via Panama in 1852; he was a miner and at the same time was a successful stockraiser. When he located in Stockton in 1856 he engaged in freighting to the Southern mines. He became a very prominent land owner, owning 360 acres in San Joaquin County, 800 acres in Solano County. He married Miss Emily J. Sutherland in 1858, a daughter of Jacob Sutherland, well known as a pioneer, who had crossed the plains with his family in 1852. Ira W. Ladd and his good wife were the parents of five children, three of whom are now living; Lillian Isabel; Frederick G., of Coalinga; and Emily J., Mrs. Vincent. Ira W. Ladd was a trustee of the Weber school district and fraternally was a charter member of the Stockton Lodge, No. 11, I. O. O. F., the San Joaquin County Society of Pioneers and politically was a Republican. He passed away in 1915, aged seventy-seven. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Vincent; Walter Ladd, formerly with the Bank of Italy in Stockton, now with that institution in San Francisco; Helen is the wife of Clarence Richards and they reside in Stockton; and Robert is with the Stockton Paint Company. Mr. Vincent is a member of Truth Lodge, No. 55, I. O. O. F., and also of the Encampment in which he is past chief patriarch.

CLARENCE VAN TIL.—Among the more recent acquisitions to the contracting and building industry of the Ripon section of San Joaquin County, is Clarence Van Til, who located in this section of the county in 1919, where he purchased a ranch and other valuable real estate. He was born in Gronigen, Holland, June 18, 1891, a son of Ite Van Til, a native of the same place and a farmer all his lifetime. The family, consisting of father, mother, seven girls and two boys, left their native land in 1903 and arrived at Grand Rapids, Mich., April 15, the same year. In the fall of 1903 the father and two sons located on a farm near Ellsworth, Mich., where the family resided for a number of years. Clarence was denied the privilege of attending school but a short time, but the knowledge gained by experience, has proved of inestimable value to him in subsequent years. At eighteen years of age he left home and became an apprentice to learn the carpenter's trade at Holland, Mich., where he worked for one year; then he worked for a contractor for fifteen months, receiving for his work one dollar per day, but out of this saved enough money to return to his home on a visit. In 1911 he went to Grand Rapids, Mich., where he worked at his trade for two years. With the money that he was able to save from his two years work, he removed to Denver, Colo., but one year later returned to Grand Rapids, where he did his first contract work, erecting five residences for J. Van Polen, who later became his father-in-law. Our subject's mother passed away at the family home at Ellsworth, Mich., during February, 1905.

On April 5, 1917, at Denver, Colo., Mr. Van Til was married to Miss Sena Van Polen, born September 7, 1890, in Feerwerd, province of Gronigen, Holland, a daughter of Jacob and Margaret (Jongsma) Van Polen, both natives of Friesland, Holland. Jacob Van Polen was a successful merchant in Grand Rapids for twenty-five years. Mr. and Mrs. Van Til are the parents of one daughter, Gertrude Nellie born at Ripon, July 16, 1920. Mr. Van Til continued his contract work in Colorado until his removal to California in 1919, working in Denver, Seibert and Cope, Colo., where he erected many residences and some business blocks. In Cope, Colo., he erected the bank building and a $10,000 residence for the president of the bank; he also improved a small ranch in the vicinity of Seibert, Colo. He then sold his property in Colorado and removed to California, locating at Ripon and during his three years residence in this section has been active in building. Some of the buildings which he has erected are the Calla district school building, costing $14,000; the Riverbank school costing $24,000; the New Hope and Thornton school buildings. In 1922, Mr. Van Til was awarded the contract for the San Joaquin County Fair Grounds Association, the construction work amounting to $64,000. Mr. Van Til's partner in his contracting work is L. Ubels, who has been doing contracting and building work in San Joaquin County for the past four years. Mr. Van Til has erected a fine residence in Ripon, where he resides with his wife and daughter, and the family are active members of the Christian Reform Church.

LAFE WARD.—A well-to-do rancher of the Elliott district of San Joaquin County, who has won his success entirely through his own industry and enterprise, is Lafe Ward. He was born at Beverly, W. Va., on December 9, 1868, a son of Abraham and Lucinda Ward. Grandfather Ward was a plantation owner in Virginia, and an early settler. In 1874, the father, Abraham Ward, started across the plains by the southern route through Texas, and arriving in California settled at Colledgeville, San Joaquin County, and there leased about 700 acres of land, which he farmed to grain. The father passed away in 1903, sixty-three years old, and the mother in 1921, at the age of eighty years.

For a number of years Mr. Ward rented various ranches, among them being the Northrup ranch, now conducted by John D. Sowles, whose sketch is found in this volume. He spent a few years a quarter of a mile east of the Elliott schoolhouse; and then rented the Henderson ranch, known as section seven, consisting of 420 acres of land, on which Mr. Ward raised grain and stock. He then purchased 480 acres one-half mile north of the Elliott school, and also farms forty acres belonging to his mother; besides he rents a half-section of land on Dry Creek, making a total of over 800 acres that he successfully farms. Mr. Ward is the father of three children, James B., Tyrell, and Bessie, residing at Sacramento. James B. and Tyrell are in partnership with their father in running the ranches, on which they maintain about 200 head of cattle and operate a dairy of sixty cows. Mr. Ward has made extensive improvements in the way of modern buildings and equipment for handling his business. He has twelve head of work horses, but does much of his plowing, harrowing, planting, etc., with a tractor.

James B. Ward, the eldest son, was born in San Joaquin County on July 29, 1894, attended the district school, and finished his education with a business course in Heald's Business College at Sacramento. On November 2, 1917, he entered the service of his country and was sent to Camp Lewis, where he remained but two days, when he was placed in the 116th Signal Corps of the 41st Division and sent to Camp Mills, and later to Camp Merritt, N. J. While at Camp Merritt, he was taken ill and could not go to France with the original outfit, but was placed in the 161st Ambulance Corps, and on January 11, 1918, was sent to France via Liverpool, Southampton and La Havre. During April of 1918 his company went to the front with the French at St. Die and served in the drive on Frappell on the Strassburg front. Later he was sent to Nancy and Point Mousson on the Mouselle River and was in the second Argonne offensive, being near Sedan, France, when the armistice was signed. He then returned to Verennes, and went thence to Mallory where he remained for one month; and then came to Montigny, where he was stationed for four months. Returning to the United States via Marseilles, he landed in New York City on May 9, 1919, after having been on the water twenty-one days. Coming immediately to San Francisco, Cal., he was mustered out at the Presidio on May 29, 1919, honorably discharged, and returned to his home in San Joaquin County. The marriage of James B. Ward occurred in Stockton on April 14, 1920, and united him with Garnet Loker, a native of Nebraska, and a daughter of Victor and Sophie Loker. Her parents came to California while Garnet was a small girl, and her father was section boss for many years for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Mr. and Mrs. James B. Ward have one son, James B., Jr., born on his father's birthday, July 29, 1922.

Tyrell Ward was also born in San Joaquin County, on November 25, 1896, and attended the district schools of the county, finishing with a commercial course at Heald's Business College in Sacramento. His marriage occurred in Sacramento on July 20, 1921, and united him with Miss Tina Daniels, a native of Elk Grove, Cal., a daughter of Robert and Mina (Noble) Daniels, her father a native of Ireland, who came to California many years ago, where he has since farmed to advantage. Mr. and Mrs. Tyrell Ward have one child, Robert La Fayette, born June 26, 1922. In politics, Mr. Ward and his two sons are Democrats. Fraternally, Mr. Ward belongs to the Elks; and he and his two sons belong to the Eagles of Lodi.

DAVID D. WERNER.—A progressive and successful vineyardist, who lives near Kenefick Station, on the traction line, about five miles northeast of Acampo, is David D. Werner, a native of Hutchinson County, S. D., where he was born on January 12, 1884. His father, Fred Werner, was a native of Russia who came out to South Dakota, preempted and homesteaded land and raised grain, and married Miss Elizabeth Reising, also a native of Russia, who had likewise come to South Dakota. They had twelve children, of whom nine are living today: Mary, John, Abraham, David, Adam, Sarah, Emmett, Fred, (deceased), Fred (the ninth-born, also deceased), Katherine, Miriam, and Leona.

David Werner was educated in the grammar schools of Hutchinson County and remained at home until he was of age, when, in 1905, he came out to California. On February 9, 1906, he married Miss Katherine Baumbach, the daughter of George and Charlotte (Delek) Baumbach, substantial farmer-folks, who took up homestead and preemption land. One of their daughters, Mrs. Werner's sister, married John Beechold. Both Mr. and Mrs. Baumbach are living in Canada today. In 1906 Mr. Werner bought twenty acres on the traction line near Kenefick Station, ten acres of which are in vineyard, and ten in open farmland, well irrigated by means of a six-horse-power motor and a three-inch pump. Mr. Werner farms according to the latest methods with excellent results. Mr. and Mrs. Werner have five children: Ernest, Fred, Clarence, Viola and Dorothy. Mr. Werner belongs to the Church of God at Lodi.

R. R. WILCOX.—Although twenty-three years have passed since the death of R. R. Wilcox, the memory of his long years of honorable, upright life and kindly nature is cherished by those who knew him, and his name is inscribed high on the roll of California's esteemed citizens. He was a native of Rhode Island and in that state was reared and educated to young manhood, when he left his native state for Kansas where he homesteaded a tract of land and engaged in general farming.

Mr. Wilcox was married while residing in Kansas to Mrs. Julia (Summers) Titman, the widow of John Titman, a prominent and successful farmer and stockman, who passed away in early life survived by his widow and five daughters. Mrs. Wilcox was born in Indiana in 1848 and accompanied her parents to Iowa, where she married Mr. Titman. Mr. and Mrs. Wilcox were the parents of two children, Mrs. Mary Thoman Agien, whose sketch also appears in this history, and Mrs. Annie Morgan of Stockton. In 1880, the Wilcox family came to California and visited at the home of their relatives, Frederick by name, at Ripon; three years later Mr. Wilcox located on a ranch near Taylor's Ferry on the Stanislaus River, where he farmed successfully until his death in 1899. He was classed among the enterprising, progressive and influential citizens of his locality and could be relied upon to support any movement for the advancement and development of county or state. Mrs. Wilcox survived her husband until 1914, when she passed away at Lathrop.

PETER ZORNIG.—A rancher and dairyman of the Lodi section of the San Joaquin Valley who is making a success of his undertaking by the labor of his hands is Peter Zornig, who like many successful men began with small capital. He was born in Hamburg, Germany, May 14, 1882, a son of Michael and Katherine Zornig. The father, a brickmason, came to the United States when Peter was a child of four years and first settled in Clinton, Iowa, but remained there but a short time when he removed to California and settled at Franklin. He and his wife are the parents of two children, Peter, and Anna, Mrs. J. W. Wilson, living at Elk Grove, Cal.

Peter Zornig received a grammar school education in the schools of Franklin, Cal., and remained under the parental roof until he was twenty-one years old, when he established a livery stable business in Sacramento which he conducted for five years, then sold it and removed to Placerville, where he was engaged in the livery business, but remained there but a short time when he returned to Sacramento County and took up dairying on the home place with his father.

On June 18, 1913, Mr. Zornig was married in Lodi to Miss Meta H. Lange, a daughter of John and Mary (Ahrents) Lange. She was born at Woodbridge, Cal., and received her education at the Henderson school. Her parents were both natives of Germany, who came to California in 1881 and settled at Woodbridge where they reared a family of seven children: Emma, William, Herman, Meta H., Albert, John, and Marie, Mrs. Jacob Kurtz. Her father passed away at the age of forty-two and the mother at the age of sixty-two years. Mrs. Zornig inherited twenty-five acres from her father's estate, located on Kettleman Lane one mile south of Lodi and on this ranch the young married couple took up their abode. Mr. Zornig planted fifteen acres to alfalfa and has a ten-acre vineyard of Mission grapes. On this ranch, Mr. Zornig runs a dairy of twenty cows and has one of the most up-to-date dairy barns in the county, being well equipped with modern machinery and sanitary in every particular. In politics, Mr. Zornig supports the best men and measures, that he considers best for all the people and the county. Mr. and Mrs. Zornig are members of the German Lutheran Church of Lodi. Mr. Zornig has a strong attachment for the land of his adoption, and is thoroughly American in thought and spirit.

ANDREW SOLA.—An honored citizen of his community for many years, Andrew Sola is entitled to a place in the annals of San Joaquin County history. The Sola home place consists of 312 acres ten miles east of Stockton on the Copperopolis Road, which is ably managed by Mrs. Sola since her husband's death assisted by her sons. He was born in Cuneo, Italy, November 30, 1849, a son of Andrew and Dominica (Aleman) Sola, natives of Italy, where they engaged in farming and where they reared twelve children. Andrew received a good education in the public schools of Italy and he was thirty years of age when he left that country in 1879. His brother Battista had come to California in 1875 and had located at Lodi, where he worked on a grain ranch. After several years Andrew was joined by his brothers, Peter and Louis, and the three located on Government land near Pixley, Tulare County.

In Stockton, on December 28, 1883, Mr. Sola was united in marriage with Miss Theresa Brondetta, born in Cuneo, Italy, a daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Cecardi) Brondetta. Mrs. Sola received a good education in the Sisters Convent in her native province. Before Andrew Sola had started for California he had obtained her promise to become his wife and it was planned that when he was settled and in better circumstances she should join him, so in 1883 she left home with a party of friends, among whom was her brother John, now deceased, and they arrived in Stockton, December 23, 1883. Mr. Sola was there to meet her and they were soon married. Nine children were born to them: Mary is the wife of John Panetto and they have seven children; Andrew, a rancher on the home place; Elizabeth, Mrs. James Panero, has two children; Josephine, Mrs. Samuel Casteline, residing in Stockton; Joseph is a partner in the home place; he married Miss Anna Sanguinetti, a daughter of Andrew Sanguinetti; Theresa is a graduate of the Western Normal School and follows her profession in the schools of San Joaquin County, where for the past six years she has been principal of the Everett school; Anna is Mrs. Marion Galli of Stockton; Lucy died in infancy;

William is also a partner on the home ranch. Mr. Sola pioneered in grain farming in Tulare County, where he spent fourteen successful years. He then sold his grain ranch and moved to Kern County, near Bakersfield, where he rented land for one year. He took up his residence in San Joaquin County in 1899 and located on Roberts Island, where he engaged in grain farming for three years; then in 1902 he moved to a ranch near Peters and farmed for some years. After a long illness, he passed away, November 5, 1907, mourned by the entire community. Mrs. Sola took up the responsibility of the management of the estate left by her husband and has demonstrated her ability to do so, having had the cooperation of her children through all the years. Having sold their land in Tulare County in 1913, Mrs. Sola purchased the Swan ranch of 312 acres on the Copperopolis Road, ten miles east of Stockton, where fine crops of wheat are raised each season; Mrs. Sola also owns a twenty-acre vineyard ten miles from Stockton on the Sonora Road, which has been developed by her sons.

JAMES M. STEVENSON.—Among the well known and respected citizens of the Escalon district of San Joaquin County is James M. Stevenson, a man whose history furnishes a splendid example of what may be accomplished through well directed effort. He was born at Metamora, Mich., April 27, 1873, and was only nine years old when he was thrown on his own resources; however, he got a chance to go to school until he was twelve years old and by so doing received a fair education. He learned the riveter's trade and found work in the shipyards and also worked at his trade in the coal mines at Bay City, where he remained for eleven years.

On September 30, 1894, Mr. Stevenson was united in marriage with Miss Eliza J. Clark, a daughter of Samuel S. and Eliza (Lockwood) Clark, the former a native of Scotland, and the latter of Michigan. Samuel S. Clark came to Michigan from his native land in the early '60s, where he was married to Miss Lockwood. Mr. and Mrs. Stevenson are the parents of nine children, only three of whom now survive: Floyd L.; Samuel Grant; and John Mortimer. The two latter are ranchers in San Joaquin County, while Floyd L. is a member of the firm of Maynard & Stevenson, paper hangers and painters, Stockton, Cal. When Mr. Stevenson came to California he located at Stockton, where he conducted a furniture business for three years. Disposing of it, he farmed in the Kingman district near Lodi, then located in Escalon in 1914. Mr. Stevenson encountered many discouraging things in his agricultural activities, but with true western spirit he let nothing turn him aside from his purpose and in the end has won a place for himself among the successful ranchers of his locality. He farmed seventy acres in the Irwin addition to Escalon besides conducting an alfalfa and dairy ranch. He has devoted much time to the San Joaquin County Fair Association and much credit is due him for the fine Escalon exhibits at the county fairs. Fraternally he is active in lodge circles, retaining his membership in Ivy Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Bay City, Mich. Since his location at Escalon Mr. Stevenson has made many warm personal friends, has established a reputation as an excellent agriculturist, and is a valued citizen.

MRS. MARY SULLIVAN.—A native daughter of San Joaquin County who was born and reared on a farm and who is now engaged in raising grapes, is Mrs. Mary Sullivan. She was born August 11, 1863, a daughter of that old pioneer Patrick Brennan, a native of Ireland, who came to California and settled near Atlanta in the early '60s, where he engaged in grain farming on a large scale. Miss Brennan attended the public school in the Van Allen district of San Joaquin County and while still a young girl went to Hanford and lived with her brother, William J. Brennan who was, at that time, the proprietor of the Hanford Water Works.

On October 18, 1889, Miss Brennan was married in San Francisco to Daniel J. Sullivan, born at Milwaukee, Wis., October 26, 1861, who when seven years of age was brought by his parents to California where they settled in San Francisco. Daniel J. Sullivan grew up and received his education in the schools of Milwaukee and San Francisco. Twenty-nine years ago he became identified with the San Francisco Ice & Cold Storage Company and for some twenty-five years filled the position of foreman. Four years ago he resigned his position to engage in ranching. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan are the parents of two children: Margaret, born in San Francisco, is the widow of Edward Carter, a distinguished member of the San Francisco fire department who died of influenza November 5, 1918; William was born in San Francisco in 1891 and resides at home with his parents, taking an active part in the ranching work. The forty-five-acre ranch has been planted to alfalfa and the vineyard planted in 1921 shows ninety-five per cent of live, healthy vines. The ranch is located four miles west of Escalon on the French Camp Road and has been brought to a high state of cultivation. Mr. Sullivan has been a member of the W. O. W. for the past twenty-two years. The success that has attended the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan is well merited, because they have labored conscientiously and at all times have been generous in their dealings with their fellowmen.

ALEX T. DARAK.—A native of far-off Turkey. Alex T. Darak has had a life filled with interest and adventure, especially in the days of his youth. He was born at Diarbekr, Turkey, on the River Tigris, on August 31, 1866, and was fortunate in attending Euphrates College at Kharput, an American College established there by the Congregational Church. Here he received the A. B. degree in 1885, and subsequent to his graduation he taught school in Kurdistan and in Trebizond, on the Black Sea, this covering a period of five years. He and his brother Joseph wrote a book dealing with Mohammedanism, and as this got them into trouble with the authorities, Mr. Darak was obliged to flee from the country to save his life. He took refuge on a French steamer and was hidden in the captain's cabin and taken to Marseilles. He reached New York February 29, 1892, and here started to work with an oriental rug concern, and in 1895 he became manager of the oriental rug department of the Bloomingdale Bros. Department Store, at Fifty-ninth Street and Third Avenue, dealing in oriental rugs, and two years later he opened a business of his own at Sixth Avenue and Eleventh Street, where he had a large clientele among the wealthy New Yorkers, as he carried an exclusive line of fine oriental rugs which he imported.

In 1906 Mr. Darak sold out his business and in the spring of 1907 he came to Kingsburg, Fresno County, Cal., and bought a forty-acre vineyard and fruit ranch, which has since been the family home. In 1920 Mr. Darak opened up his place of business in Stockton at 314 Channel Street, handling oriental rugs and making fluff rugs and rag carpets, and in September, 1922, moved to his present quarters, 420 East Channel Street, where he manufactures fluff or rag rugs and repairs all makes of rugs and particularly oriental rugs. It was while in New York he found it necessary to master the repairing of oriental rugs, so as to please his artistic patrons; so he is today prepared to cater to the most artistic tastes of his Stockton clientele.

His marriage at Brooklyn, N. Y., October 12, 1895, united him with Miss Arousiag Shaljian, born in Constantinople and a graduate of the American College there. They have three daughters, all graduates of the Kingsburg high school. Elizabeth K. is the wife of Z. P. Malcon, a graduate of Stanford, and now manager of a 450 acre ranch and vineyard in Tulare County; Beatrice, who graduated at Pomona College in piano and pipe organ, is teaching music at Fresno and Kingsburg; Dora Susan is now attending Heald's Business College. Mr. Darak, who became a citizen of his adopted land soon after arriving here, is a thorough American and a wide reader and student. He was made a Mason in Roonie Lodge, No. 746, A. F. & A. M., afterwards demitting to Lodge 294 at Kingsburg.

ROLAND E. DOAN.—The pioneer families of the Golden State find a worthy representative in San Joaquin County in Roland E. Doan, a successful business man of the city of Stockton, who has done much to promote business activity and prosperity in this city, and in community affairs has been very influential. He was born in Stockton, Cal., January 9, 1892, a son of Charles E. and Catherine (Maurer) Doan, both natives of California. Grandfather Lattimar E. Doan, born in Michigan, came across the plains to California in an early day and engaged in the lumber business in El Dorado and Nevada counties. Charles E. Doan located in Stockton in 1881 and was associated with his brother, L. E. Doan, in several enterprises. Ten years later Charles E. Doan removed to Seattle, where he became a reporter in the U. S. land office and the Washington courts; later he returned to Stockton and with a partner established the Gas City Business College, which he operated until 1901, when the business was sold and Mr. Doan became reporter of the Superior Court. There are two children, Roland E., the subject of this sketch, and Mrs. Irma Parks. Mr. Doan is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Stockton.

Roland E. Doan attended the Washington and Fremont schools in Stockton and was graduated in 1910 from the Stockton high school. While attending high school he was secretary and treasurer of the student body and a member of the football team; then he entered the University of California in the College of Commerce department and during the year that he attended was a member of the Sigma Nu fraternity. Upon his return to Stockton he entered the automobile tire business with W. A. Walsh as partner, the firm name being Doan & Walsh; later he purchased his partner's interest and organized the Doan Auto Supply Company. At the beginning of the World War he sold his business and entered the service of his country, enlisting in the California National Guard in 1917 as a private, later being advanced to corporal; soon thereafter he was called into the regular army and joined the Coast Artillery at Fort Winfield Scott. He was sent to the officers' training camp at Fort Monroe, Va., where he received a commission as second lieutenant of artillery. He was then placed in charge of the work for the coast defenses in the personnel department, there being 10,000 men under his supervision. While he was engaged in this work he was transferred to the adjutant general's department and advanced to the rank of first lieutenant and still later to the rank of captain. He was discharged at the close of the war and is now a member of the officers' reserve corps, U.S.A., assigned as brigade adjutant 188th Artillery 19th Corps, with headquarters at San Francisco. After his discharge, Mr. Doan became assistant to the general manager of the Lucey Manufacturing Corporation at Pittsburg, Pa., where he remained eight months, then returned to Stockton and on March 12, 1921, established the R. E. Doan Company, dealers in sporting goods, located in large and commodious quarters in the Elks Building at the corner of Weber Avenue and Sutter Street. This company carries one of the largest and most complete stocks of sporting equipment in the state and has built up a paying business which is steadily increasing. Mr. Doan is president and manager of the company, L. E. Doan is vice-president and C. F. Kuhl is secretary and treasurer.

The marriage of Mr. Doan occurred January 18, 1919, which united him with Miss Norma M. Harrison, a native of San Francisco, and they have one daughter, Barbara Jean. Before entering the war Mr. Doan was a director in the Stockton Chamber of Commerce. He is a member of the Yosemite Club, the Stockton Golf and Country Club, and Elks, and a member of the executive committee of the Karl Ross Post of the American Legion and chairman of the finance committee of same.

RUFINO ECHANDI.—A successful stock raiser of San Joaquin County is Rufino Echandi, who is a native of far away Spain, where he was born in Navarro, November 16, 1890, a son of Francisco and Micaela Echandi, both natives of Navarro, where they are successful farmers and stockraisers. They were blessed with a family of eight children, of whom Rufino is the eldest. A sister and two brothers have also come to California and made their home here.

Rufino Echandi was reared to habits of industry and frugality and from a small lad helped his parents on the farm and with the stock. However, his education was not neglected and he regularly attended the local schools of his native district. When he arrived at the age of eighteen years he concluded to come to California and, following his decision, came immediately to Stockton in the spring of 1909, being the first of his family to come to California. Arriving here, he went to work for Firmin Etcheverria, a sheep grower, and continued with him for three years, during which time he learned sheep raising as done in California. After this he went to Elko, Nev., where he spent a year working for a sheep grower, and then determined to start for himself. He had saved some money and in partnership with Pete Etundain purchased a flock of 1900 sheep and ranged them in Nevada for three years, increasing their band. They then returned to San Joaquin and sold their flocks and dissolved partnership.

Taking his brother Thomas into partnership, he purchased 1500 head of sheep, ranging them in the valley and mountains; the band grew till he ran 3000 head. In 1921, however, he sold the flock and dissolved partnership.

Mr. Echandi was married in Stockton, being united with Miss Modesta Olava, also a native of Spain, and they have been blessed with one child, Lucile. Mr. Echandi is very much interested in the great San Joaquin Valley and likes this country and does not regret that he decided to cast in his lot with the great and growing West. A Republican in politics, fraternally he is a member of the Loyal Order of Moose.

JULIUS EICHENBERGER.—A resident of Stockton for more than a quarter of a century, Julius Eichenberger has done his part toward the building up of this thriving city, and as a partner in the decorating firm of Gibson & Eichenberger, he is well known in its business circles. A native of Switzerland, he was born there March 28, 1873, the son of Emile and Anna (Bernier) Eichenberger, both of whom have passed away, survived by five children. In 1886 the family came to the United States and settled at Selma, Fresno County, Cal., where the father engaged in farming, later removing to the Fowler neighborhood.

Julius Eichenberger attended the public schools of Fresno County, meanwhile helping with the farm work, and at the age of thirteen was following a plow on the home farm. In 1888 he started to learn the painter's trade with C. P. Finger of Selma and later was with George Slight of Hanford. For a year he worked in San Mateo and came to Stockton in 1895, where he was with Joe Badger and John Quinn, then formed a partnership with George Vincent, which was later dissolved. The next twelve years he spent as foreman for L. A. Danner and in 1914 he entered into partnership as Gibson & Eichenberger, and as painters and decorators they have taken a leading place in their line of work in Stockton.

In 1899, Mr. Eichenberger was married to Miss Caroline L. Peri, who came to California with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. Peri, when she was three years old, her father being well known among Stockton's early residents. Mr. and Mrs. Eichenberger are the parents of four children: Juliet is the wife of Paul Rossi and they have two children; Theodore L. is with the American Carton Company at Stockton; Richard is a bookkeeper with the Sacramento and San Joaquin Bank; the youngest of the family is Carroll Norman. Since 1900 Mr. Eichenberger has been a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood and he also belongs to the Fidelity Society.

C. C. EKENBERG.—Prominent among the progressive and successful men of affairs in San Joaquin County is C. C. Ekenberg, the well-known contractor of Tracy, who was born at San Francisco on July 6, 1869, and in October of that same year was brought to this valley by his parents, William and Mary (Ferris) Ekenberg. William Ekenberg was a native of Sweden, who came to California in 1851 and became a longshoreman in the Bay district; and he also worked at carpentering until he came here, when he took up Government land near Mohr's Landing, and proved up on the same, while the home was maintained near Bethany. Mrs. Ekenberg was born of Scotch parentage, in Belfast, Ireland, and came out to California, via Cape Horn, with her parents in 1849, when she was only twelve years old. She is now Mrs. Collins, and resides at 525 Clay Street, Stockton.

Our subject received a good common school education, and on reaching his majority, took up carpentering and building as a business at Tracy, and since 1892, with the exception of a period of eighteen months, he has made Tracy his headquarters, and so successful has he been that no small portion of the modern buildings in town have been erected under his supervision. He has always taken a live interest in the issues of the day; but while an active and an influential Democrat, has never aspired to public office, and has refused proffers of nomination, when made from time to time.

In 1900, Mr. Ekenberg married Mrs. Daisy E. Shields, nee Lingenfeltzer, who already had one son, Edwin Shields; and they have had two children to gladden their wedded life. Walter Ekenberg is the elder, and Floyd the younger. Mr. Ekenberg is a charter member of Byron Parlor, N. S. G. W., and has been active in the work of that lodge for the past thirty-two years.

MARK M. LEICHTER.—With a long and successful experience in connection with the theatrical industry, Mark M. Leichter has demonstrated his executive ability as manager of the State Theater at Stockton, owned by Sam Harris and Irving C. Ackerman, long connected with the theatrical world in the West. In 1908 they started the Wigwam theater in San Francisco. Later they took over the Republic and following that the Hippodrome in Los Angeles. In a short time they annexed houses in Seattle, Portland, Sacramento, Stockton, Oakland, Fresno, Long Beach, and Salt Lake. Their success has been noteworthy and it is a well-known fact that every theater they handled proved a big money maker. At present Ackerman & Harris are operating the Palace-Hip, Seattle; the Hippodrome, Portland; the State and Hippodrome, Sacramento; the State, Stockton; the Casino, Hippodrome and Century, San Francisco; the State, Oakland; the Hippodrome, Fresno; and the State, Salt Lake. They are booking their vaudeville in several smaller houses in the West.

Mark M. Leichter was born on January 29, 1884, at San Francisco, and there he attended the public schools and the Humboldt high school. In company with his father he became connected with a moving picture theater at Third Avenue and Eighteenth Street, New York, and next they ran the Clinton Street Theater there. In 1907 they opened the Hippodrome Theater in Jersey City with vaudeville and pictures, and from that they established a circuit throughout the state in the large cities. Returning to San Francisco, Mr. Leichter opened the Rex Theater on Polk Street in that city.

In 1916 Mark M. Leichter opened the Strand Theater on Market Street, San Francisco, for Sid Grauman, as a picture house, and in 1917 he came to Stockton and opened the Hippodrome Theater for Ackerman & Harris. Under his efficient management the theater was a financial success and then Mr. Leichter retired from the theatrical business for two years. On November 17 he again entered the field in Stockton, opening Loew's State Theater, now the State Theater, owned by Ackerman & Harris. This was formerly the Yosemite Theater and was remodeled at a large expenditure into a modern, up-to-date playhouse, for pictures and vaudeville, and again Mr. Leichter's ability has made it a paying enterprise.

At San Francisco, on October 31, 1909, Mr. Leichter was married to Miss Sibel Cohen, a native daughter of that city, and they have two sons, Newton Sterling and Mortimer Elliott, both born in San Francisco. Mr. Leichter is a member of Doric Lodge No. 216, F. & A. M. of San Francisco; the Scottish Rite bodies there, and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S.; he also belongs to the Yosemite Club, the Lions Club and the Sciots of Stockton. He is one of Stockton's ardent boosters, a live wire in every way, and when he returned to take over the management of the State Theater he received a hearty welcome from his many friends here.

GEORGE LE FEBER.—A successful viticulturist of the Lodi district is George Le Feber, who was born on January 6, 1866, in Milwaukee, Wis., where he was reared and educated. For many years he followed the dairy business near where he was born. During the year 1904 he came to California and settled first in Fresno, where he remained for two years; then, in the fall of 1906, he came to Lodi. His first real estate purchase was thirty acres, bought from Dr. S. R. Arthur; and one year later he added twenty-four acres, making a total of fifty-four acres. His ranch is about evenly divided between orchard and vineyard, his orchard being of assorted fruits, peaches, plums and almonds, and his vineyard being entirely devoted to the Tokay variety of grapes. He has improved his ranch with a modern system of irrigation, with a fine pumping plant which produces an ample supply of water for all irrigation purposes, thus enabling him to bring his property to a high state of productiveness.

The marriage of Mr. Le Feber united him with Miss Daisy M. Dana, a native of Wisconsin, and they are the parents of four children: Georgia S. and H. Lucile, both graduates of the State Normal School located at San Jose, and both teaching in the public schools of Lodi; and Lloyd D. and Francis Elizabeth, students in the public schools of Lodi. Mr. Le Feber has been actively identified with the educational affairs of his community for many years, serving as a member of the Lodi grammar school board of trustees for six years and now serving his eighth year as a member of the Lodi public library board. Fraternally, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen.

ALFONSE FARETTI.—Among the Swiss-American residents of San Joaquin County, who have been successful as farmers and stockraisers, is Alfonse Faretto, the owner of a fine 140-acre dairy ranch and young vineyard, four and a half miles southwest of Lodi on Kettleman Lane. He was born in Canton Ticino, Switzerland, October 3, 1871, a son of Jerome and Concordia Faretto, both native of the same country. Jerome Faretto was a painter by trade, who plied his trade throughout the country and who made frequent visits to Paris, where he was engaged at his trade. There were three children in the family—John, who died at the age of forty-two; Mrs. Cornelia Rosselli, who lives in Switzerland, and Aliense. The father died at the age of seventy years, the mother is still living in her native land.

At the age of nineteen Alfonse Faretto had finished his schooling and set out for the United States, coming direct to California, where he found employment on a dairy ranch at Guadalupe, where he remained for three years; then he went to Stockton and purchased cows and continued in the dairy business, supplying the residents of Stockton daily with milk for three years; he then removed his dairy to Ione, Cal., where he operated a dairy for twelve years, adding to his herd from time to time until he had forty cows. He then removed to the old Castle place on the French Camp Road, which he rented two years. He then came to the Lafayette district of San Joaquin County, where he bought 160 acres in 1917, twenty acres of which was in producing vineyard, sixty acres in unimproved land and the balance in alfalfa. In 1921 he sold the twenty-acre vineyard, leaving 140 acres, twenty-five acres of which he has set to young vineyard and he also has seventy-five acres in alfalfa; his ranch is irrigated by two pumping plants. His political allegiance is given to the Republican party.

MALCOLM LEA.—Among the younger generation of vineyardists in San Joaquin County who are demonstrating their aptitude for viticulture is Malcolm Lea, the owner of fifteen acres south of Victor. He is a native of Cleveland, Tenn., born July 27, 1898, a son of John G. and Mamie (Hunton) Lea. His father, John G. Lea, was a merchant of Cleveland and came out to California when Malcolm was a boy of nine years. The family settled in Lodi and remained there until a few years ago, when his parents removed to Sacramento, where the father conducts a mercantile business. Malcolm is the fifth of a family of six children, as follows: Ruth, Mary, Grace, Robert (deceased), Malcolm, and James.

Malcolm Lea attended the Lodi schools, which afforded him a good working education; and at the age of nineteen he took his first job with the Superior Manufacturing Company of Lodi, where he worked for two years. Saving his money, he invested it in a five-acre tract of land south of Victor, and in the fall of 1921 purchased an additional ten acres. He is now improving this with buildings, and has set seven acres to grapes and seven acres to almonds, which within a few years will insure him a good income.

The marriage of Mr. Lea occurred in Lodi on October 1, 1921, and united him with Miss Martha Nies, a native of South Dakota, and a daughter of Henry and Christina Nies. Mrs. Lea accompanied her parents to Lodi when she was a small girl, and there received her education. Mr. Lea manifests a public-spirited interest in the well-being of his community.

BERT LEWIS, SR.—"A man who contributed to the success of a wide variety of public activities and as one of the organizers and for several years the president of the Stockton Merchants Association, Bert Lewis not only aided in protecting and promoting the business interests of every merchant and manufacturer in Stockton, but he helped to build a greater Stockton." This was made public by one of the prominent men of Stockton at the time of the death of our subject and typifies the man in every detail. Bert Lewis was for many years among the leading merchants of Stockton and the name of his establishment is a familiar one to nearly the whole population of San Joaquin County, thousands being familiar with the signs "Outfitter from Lad to Dad" posted all over the principal thoroughfares leading into Stockton. A native son of the Golden State, Bert Lewis was born at Cold Springs, near the historic town of Columbia, in Tuolumne County, on February 21, 1865, a son of Daniel J. and Mattie A. (Sawyer) Lewis, natives of Providence, R. I. and Maine, respectively. The elder Lewis came out to California in the late fifties, via the Isthmus of Panama, and located in Tuolumne County, where he followed mining and teaming; later he conducted a general store, in partnership with a brother. In 1870 he removed to Stockton and entered the employ of Gerlach & Hodgkins, butchers; and in time he conducted a shop of his own, known as the California Market, at the corner of California and Church streets. He was welcomed everywhere as "Honest Dan" and his word was as good as his bond. He died in Stockton in 1902. The mother is still living, in Oakland.

The oldest child in the family, Bert Lewis attended the public schools of Stockton, then began his mercantile career as a clerk in the dry goods store of Block & Company; next he was with the Hickman Dry Goods Company, and then with the George Chalmers Company, also dealers in dry goods. Mr. Lewis then went to Los Angeles to broaden his experience and there learned the custom tailoring business with Poheim, the tailor. After five years in the southland he returned to Stockton to manage a branch tailor shop for Poheim, who conducted a chain of fourteen stores throughout the state. After a time Mr. Lewis bought the business and conducted it with a partner, under the name of Lewis & Heffernan. Selling out his interest later on, Mr. Lewis, with W. E. Johnson as a partner, purchased the clothing company of Walker & Keagle on East Main Street, in the store formerly occupied by Block & Company, where he had previously clerked, and where he found the same store fixtures he had used as a boy. He and his partner conducted the business as a men's clothing and furnishing store for sixteen years, and later he bought out his partner and carried on the business alone under the firm name of the Bert Lewis Clothing Company. In 1919 he moved to the present location of the store, where the floor space is more than doubled and where he built up one of the most reliable and successful clothing businesses in this part of the San Joaquin Valley. His trade here increased steadily in pace with the growth of the city and his prosperity was so marked that he was enabled to purchase the two-story brick block in which the business is located.

Mr. Lewis was twice married, his first wife being Miss Alice Bauer, by whom he had two sons: Bert Lewis, Jr., who was associated with his father in business and succeeded to it upon his death. He is the father of a son, Bert Lewis III. The second son, Sydney, died aged four years. His second wife was Miss Waneta Riley, and she survives him. Mr. Lewis was a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and for several years was lecturing knight; he was also a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.; and a member and past president of the Yosemite Club. In earlier years Mr. Lewis conducted the New Year's celebration, which was held in Stockton on New Year's Eve. Genial and of a social nature, Bert Lewis had a host of friends; by nature a fun-maker, he was always in demand as an interlocutor in amateur minstrel shows and at the time of Stockton's first big street fair, he officiated as King Pin of the carnival. He passed away Thursday, February 15, 1923, surrounded by his family and a number of intimate friends.

MRS. ONEY (KERRICK) MERCER.—The subject of this sketch was born June 23, 1853, on the Platte River while her parents, Harrison and Oney (Stubblefield) Kerrick, were en route to California via the Sonora route. Harrison Kerrick was born in Kentucky and from there removed to Missouri. In 1851 he came to California and mined in Tuolumne County near Chinese Camp, returning to Missouri in 1852, and in 1853 brought his family to California; the paternal grandfather and grandmother of our subject were also members of the party. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Kerrick: James, Mary Ann, now Mrs. Walrod, who resides in Stockton; and our subject. Mrs. Kerrick passed away at the birth of her youngest child, the subject of this sketch. Harrison Kerrick resided near Jamestown, Cal., and engaged in ranching and teaming from Sonora to Stockton; later he removed to San Joaquin County and farmed a quarter section of land near Stockton. He passed away at the age of seventy years. After the death of her mother, our subject was reared in the home of her grandparents. She received her education in the Colledgeville district school, with a two years' course at the Catholic school in Stockton.

On March 20, 1876, Miss Kerrick was married to Charles Alexander Mercer, born at Greenville, Tenn. Charles Alexander Mercer came to California in 1874 and owned a ranch of a quarter section near Colledgeville, where he took his bride and there they resided for twelve years; they then removed to Tulare County, settling near Hanford, where they remained but a short time, then came back to San Joaquin County, where Mr. Mercer died in 1911. Five children were born to them: Frank H. is married and has three children—Frank, Jr., Dorothy, and John; Etta, Mrs. Bourland resides in Woodland and they are the parents of three children—Clarence, Alice and Percy; Mrs. Effie Walker resides in Sonora and has three children—Luella, Ruth, and Leslie; Mrs. Lulu Cowell resides in Oakland and has one son—Stanley Kerrick Cowell; Merle Leslie is a seafaring man. Mr. Mercer was a Democrat in politics; he was nineteen years old when he enlisted on January 27, 1863, in Company A, 4th Regiment, Tennessee Infantry, being honorably discharged August 2, 1865. He was a member of the G. A. R., and his wife is a member of the Relief Corps and the auxiliary to the Pioneers of California.

W. H. MILLER.—A well-known citizen and successful merchant of Lathrop, W. H. Miller has advanced step by step until he has built up a successful and lucrative business, and he may be called a self-made man in the best sense of that term. He was born at Eureka, Kans., January 17, 1871, a son of Eli and Mary M. (Gray) Miller. The father was born December 19, 1823, in Indiana, and at the outbreak of the Civil War migrated to Kansas and there became an extensive landowner and farmed to grain and stock. He married Mary M. Gray, born May 2, 1845, in New York, who removed to Illinois in 1860. On July 3, 1873, Eli Miller was killed by lightning while going from his home to the village of Eureka. On October 12, 1876, the mother was married again, to Jacob Curtis at Eureka, Kans., and she is now a resident of Truro, Iowa.

W. H. Miller had but little chance for an education for he was thrown on his own resources at the age of fourteen years. Being particularly fond of athletics he specialized in foot racing and for two years, 1891 and 1892, as a professional sprinter was second only to his chum, Jesse Russell, who held the Central States championship and in consequence toured the states of Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri and Texas, attending fairs and celebrations and meeting all contestants and they succeeded in winning nearly every race. Another boyhood chum, Louis Ball, was the owner of two fast running horses, "Burnt Foot" and "Grasshopper." The three boys traveled from place to place, and they made much money and also spent it just as freely. Mr. Miller recalls two races, one at Winfield, Kans., and the other at Gray Horse, Indian Territory, both state fair celebrations, where they won in the foot races and the horse races. In 1893, Mr. Miller gave up his profession for a trip to San Francisco to attend the Midwinter Fair and on his way stopped off to visit his sister, Mrs. H. F. Wilcox. His finances being at a low ebb, he concluded to find employment on a ranch, and soon went to work for J. C. Gerlach, where he continued for one season, then he worked on the Hughes ranch, near Ripon, and the season of 1894 sowed grain on the lands where now stands the town of Ripon.

The marriage of Mr. Miller occurred May 7, 1895, and united him with Miss Wilma Clara Wilcox, a native of Council Bluffs, Iowa, born March 28, 1879, a daughter of Robert Riley and Julia Ann (Summers) Wilcox, who came to California in 1886 and located near Ripon. Her father passed away November 25, 1904, and her mother at Lathrop in 1915. In 1895 Mr. and Mrs. Miller moved to Ridgway, Colo., where he followed brick and stone mason work for a few months and in January, 1896, they returned to Kansas, locating at Eureka, where for two years he engaged in farming; then in 1898 they returned to Lathrop, Cal., which has been their home ever since. Mr. Miller purchased twenty acres of the H. W. Cowell subdivision and was the first rancher to develop a portion of this subdivision. Four years were spent on this place, when he had a good opportunity to sell, receiving a good profit for his hard work; he then went to work on the Goodwin ranch. The following year he purchased 140 acres, which he developed and then sold, making a good profit. Fourteen years ago Mr. Miller purchased the general merchandise business of J. A. Bell at Lathrop. Through the years the business has steadily grown until he now does $30,000 worth of business each year. In 1919 he erected his present building, two stories with store below and apartments above; he also has other desirable income property in Lathrop. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are the parents of five children: Hiram E., deceased; Velma; Byrl W.; Ivan Donald; Floyd Loyal. For two years Mr. Miller was the president of the Chamber of Commerce at Lathrop and Mrs. Miller is active in the affairs of the W. C. T. U. In politics Mr. Miller is a Democrat and fraternally is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America. In his work in California he has prospered and has accumulated a fine property, owing to his own well directed efforts and the assistance of his devoted wife, who has indeed been a faithful helpmate and counselor to him.

FRANK LEE MILLER.—How much a young man may accomplish of what is worth while, if only he directs his energies and expends his time in the proper way, is admirably illustrated in the case of Frank Lee Miller, a viticulturist of Youngstown, San Joaquin County, Cal. He was born in Tulare County, Cal., near Porterville, on October 7, 1893, the son of R. B. and Della Mac (Groves) Miller. The father, who was born in Tennessee, passed away when Frank Miller was a small lad.

Frank Lee Miller began his education in the public schools of Porterville, and when his mother located in Woodbridge, San Joaquin County, he attended the Lodi schools and then finished his education with a commercial course at Heald's Business College, at Stockton. His mother, who was born at Farmington, San Joaquin County, Cal., still lives at Woodbridge and owns forty-eight acres of old vines.

The marriage of Mr. Miller occurred in Stockton on January 26, 1917, and united him with Miss Edith Hester Buck, a daughter of Charles Buck, whose biography appears in this work. She received her education in the Houston school. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are the parents of one daughter, Edith. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Miller purchased a thirty-five acre vineyard in the vicinity of Youngstown, thirty acres of which is in Tokay, and the balance in Zinfandel and Burgess grapes. Mr. Miller has improved his property with a fine irrigating system, having piped the water to every part of the vineyard. Besides looking after his vineyard and matters pertaining to it, he is an independent fruit buyer, selling through the Pacific Fruit Exchange and the Woodbridge Fruit Company; and his efforts in obtaining good prices for the producer are appreciated by the farmers of the locality.

DENNIS MORAN.—A native of Ireland, Dennis Moran has nevertheless been an American to all intents and purposes during his entire life, for he was only about one year old when brought by his parents to the United States. He was born on January 7, 1860, a son of John and Mary (Sullivan) Moran, also natives of Ireland, who on arriving in the United States settled at Fitchburg, Mass.

Dennis Moran attended school in Fitchburg until he was eighteen years old, when he left home to make his own way in the world. First going to the Pan Handle country in Texas, near Amarillo, he rode the range for two years. Next he went on horseback to Nebraska to a point south of Fort Robinson on Running Water Creek, and remained there for one season; then continuing on horseback to Julesburg, Colo., he engaged in the cattle business there for three years. Returning to Nebraska, he was not satisfied to remain there, and soon hit the trail for the country around Cheyenne, Wyo., where he engaged in the cattle business for the next four years. Again he returned to Nebraska, and for ten years followed the stock business on the White River.

The marriage of Mr. Moran occurred at Crawford, Neb., on November 19, 1889, and united him with Miss Sadie Losce, a native of Indiana. She was of old American stock dating back to the Revolutionary War, and also had two uncles that were in the Civil War. When she was a young girl her parents removed to Iowa and settled near Des Moines, and there she was reared and educated. Her father was a farmer in Iowa and died in Des Moines at the age of thirty-one; and when the family removed to Nebraska they continued in agricultural pursuits. After his marriage, Mr. Moran went to South Dakota and located near Bellefourche, where he became a well-known stockman, his herd averaging about 500 head; and he continued in this business for ten years. Then the family removed to British Columbia, but remained there only a few weeks, and then to Lodi, during the year of 1911. He first purchased ten acres in vineyard east of Lodi on the East Pine Street extension, and this has been his home place ever since; he has installed a pumping plant with a four-inch pump driven by a ten-horsepower motor. From time to time he has added to his real estate holdings, until he now has fifty-seven acres, mostly in vineyards. Mr. and Mrs. Moran are the parents of one son, Walter, whose sketch will be found also in this volume.

HENRY B. MUNSON.—A prosperous farmer and stockman who resides in the vicinity of French Camp is Henry B. Munson and he has been eminently successful as regards material affairs, likewise is he prominent and of broad spirit concerning the larger community affairs and the questions and interests of the world about him. He is classed as one of the representative men of San Joaquin County, and has been tested and proved a man of capability and worth in various relations of a busy life. He was born on the old Laudenbach ranch near Ripon, October 6, 1876, a son of A. B. Munson, a native of Maine, who came to California via Cape Horn on a small sailing vessel in 1850. He is now living retired at his home, 628 North Sierra Nevada Street, Stockton.

Henry B. Munson was reared on his father's farm and began his education in the Castle and Barefield schools. In 1884 his parents removed to Turlock, where they conducted the Fountain Hotel for one year. After two years at Turlock, Mr. Munson returned to the ranch on the French Camp Road near French Camp, where he remained until 1894, when he moved to Stockton and became associated with his father in contract construction of roads and pavements in Stockton. While the father was the head of the business, yet our subject took actual charge as construction foreman when but nineteen years of age. In 1905, A. B. Munson obtained the Government contract to build the retaining wall on the north side of the Yuba River, from Deguerre Point to Marysville, which work was successfully completed in 1907. He also had charge of the construction of the Orland Irrigation project from 1907 to 1909. The contract for the construction of the retaining wall on the Yuba River required three years to complete and is a permanent example of the kind of work done by this firm for the U. S. Government; also many of the subdivisions of Stockton have been improved with pavements and street work done by this company. The firm discontinued business in 1915.

The marriage of Mr. Munson, which occurred in December, 1910, united him with Miss Mabel B. Du Bois, who was born near Hurley, N. Y., and came to California in the early part of 1910. She is the daughter of Peter and Lillian (North) Du Bois, both natives of New York, and they are now residing at Kingston, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Munson have two children, Marian D. and Harold David. For the past twenty years Mr. Munson has been a member of the Odd Fellows and also of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. In politics he is a Republican and is known as a citizen of high principles. Mr. Munson is now located at French Camp, where he is engaged in buying and selling livestock throughout San Joaquin County.

NEWTON WALTER MAHAFFEY.—A very enterprising citizen of Stockton who is connected with manufacturing interests that assist in the upbuilding of Stockton is Newton Walter Mahaffey, who was born at Stanford, McLean County, Ill., June 15, 1864. His father, Jonas L. Mahaffey, traced his ancestry back to the Revolutionary War. Great-great-grandfather Mahaffey was a soldier in that struggle and served as one of Washington's body guard. A family tradition handed down tells of how by his keen perception and quick action Mr. Mahaffey at one time saved the General from capture by a traitorous plan. Jonas L. Mahaffey was engaged in farming and also had a grist and sawmill when the Civil War came on. Nevertheless he enlisted, serving as fifer with the colors. The mother of our subject was Christiana Price, who afterwards married Joseph T. Rees and now lives in Stockton.

Newton was her first born, being brought up on the farm in Butler County, Iowa. When he was eleven years of age he removed to Kansas with his mother and stepfather, where they located on a homestead in McPherson County, and there he pioneered it, assisting in breaking the raw prairie where they improved three different quarter sections of land. After completing the district school he entered Lindsborg College, continuing his studies until within three months of graduation, when he had a serious spell of typhoid fever which prevented his graduation that year. After this he continued on the home farm until his marriage in McPherson, March 18, 1891, when he was united with Miss Mary Gibson, who was born at Sandy Hill, Washington County, N. Y., a daughter of Daniel Joslyn and Mary Ellen (Horsley) Gibson, natives respectively of Vermont and Montreal, Canada. The Gibson family are an old New England family who were pioneers of Vermont, while the Horsley family is an old and prominent English family, traced back to the tenth century. Grandfather Horsley emigrated from England to Montreal, where he died in middle life leaving a widow and thirteen children, and she came to Sandy Hill, N. Y.

Daniel Joslyn Gibson was a mason and builder. On the outbreak of the Civil War he was a widower with three children, nevertheless he volunteered his services and enlisted in Company I, 16th Regiment Heavy Artillery, New York Volunteers, serving until the close of the war. After the war he married Miss Horsley and he continued the building business, moving to Clyde, N. Y., where he resided until he died at the age of ninety-two years. The mother passed away at the age of eighty-two years.

Mary Gibson graduated from the Clyde, N. Y., high school, after which she engaged in teaching in Wayne County, N. Y. She had a sister, Mrs. Smith Babcock, living at McPherson, Kans., and came out on a visit and it was there she met Newton Mahaffey and their acquaintance resulted in the marriage. Wishing to cast in their lot with the Golden State the young couple came to California in October, 1891. Mrs. Mahaffey had an uncle, John Horsley, who had come to California as a '49er and was a pioneer in Amador County, where he built the Silver Lake Road, as well as several other early toll roads. After spending several months in Amador County Mr. Mahaffey came to Stockton, where he assisted in building the electric road. In the fall of 1892 they located at Burson, Calaveras County, and there engaged in farming for a while until he entered the life insurance field, representing the Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Company, in which he met with excellent success. However, in 1899, he located in Stockton, where he engaged in contracting and for many years has specialized in contract roof painting. Having made a study of the best ingredients necessary to make the most desirable roof paint he has originated a formula and is engaged in manufacturing Mahaffey's cement roof paint, which has become popular and in general use throughout this section of California, and he has the largest business as roofing contractor in this county. He resides at 1346 East Market Street with his family and this place is also the headquarters for his business.

Mr. Mahaffey has been interested in mining for many years, owning the Hose mine in Plumas County, a quartz mine with a five-stamp mill. He also has the Maypole mine at Mokelumne Hill. He is also interested in the McCree Petroleum Corporation, operating at Tulsa, Okla., a successful oil company.

Mr. and Mrs. Mahaffey's union has been blessed with five children: Frank and Harry are twins; the former was with the postoffice department in San Francisco during the war and is now assisting Mr. Mahaffey in his business; Harry is with the Standard Oil Company. He enlisted in the U. S. Marine Corps and served overseas during the World War. During this time he qualified as an expert rifleman. Ruth is a graduate of Stockton high school and the Western Normal and was engaged in teaching in her home city for seven years. She was very prominent in campfire work, serving as campfire guardian and playground director. She is now the wife of Prof. A. W. Dowden, who served in the Medical Corps during the World War. They reside in Los Angeles, where Mr. Dowden is physical director at the Southern Branch, University of California. Walter and William are attending Stockton high school. Mr. Mahaffey is a member of the Sons of Veterans, while with the same patriotic zeal his wife is a member of Colonel Roosevelt Circle, Ladies of the G. A. R.

CHRISTIAN C. ABERSOLD.—A prominent and favorably known stock and grain farmer of the Mossdale district of San Joaquin County is Christian C. Abersold, who owns and operates successfully a fine ranch of ninety acres, which is devoted to raising grain, alfalfa and also a small dairy is conducted. A native of Switzerland, he was born in Canton Berne, February 14, 1864, and at the age of two years accompanied his parents, Gottlieb and Elizabeth (Leman) Abersold, to America where they settled near Winesburg, Ohio, in 1856. The father was a thrifty man and was soon the owner of a farm near Beach City, Ohio, where a family of twelve children were reared, nine of whom are living at present. Both parents have passed away.

Christian C. Abersold received a good education in the schools of Ohio and the practical experience and knowledge received on his father's farm was a valuable asset when he started out for himself. He and his older brother John came to this county in 1885 and went to work on the ranch of P. G. Sharp. John Abersold passed away in July, 1887. Mr. Abersold, our subject, remained on the ranch and soon became foreman, and two years later rented the stock and ranch, farming the land to wheat. He then rented the J. W. Graves ranch near Lathrop, where he farmed for a year, then moved to the Billy Johnson Live Oak Stock Farm, conducting same until 1898, when he rented the Clapp ranch and after one season there removed to the Boice place, from which he moved to Lathrop taking over the Lathrop Hotel in the fall of 1903, which he conducted for five years with fine success. He then sold his interests and purchased his present farm of ninety acres near the San Joaquin River bridge at Mossdale, and this has been his home ever since, on which he has erected a comfortable residence and fine outbuildings. This ranch is farmed to grain and alfalfa and Mr. Abersold conducts a small dairy. He has been caretaker of the highway bridge for a number of years.

The marriage of Mr. Abersold at Vernalis, San Joaquin County, on November 10, 1897, united him with Miss Myrtle P. Graves, a daughter of Mrs. Eliza A. Graves, widow of Newton H. Graves. She was born near Lathrop, June 1, 1879, and attended the East Union school and when about fourteen years old removed with her parents to the West Side. They are the parents of ten children, eight of whom are living: Alfred Newton married Miss Loretta Long and they reside at Stockton; Orpha Irene, deceased; Selma C. is Mrs. Henry Hartman, and they have one child, Henry, Jr.; Ida Myrtle, deceased; Charles Franklin; William Vance; Pearl Elizabeth; Frank Ernest; Mary B.; and Ruby G. Mr. Abersold is a Republican in politics and for fourteen consecutive years he has served as trustee of the Mossdale school. Mrs. Abersold has taken a prominent part in the civic and educational affairs of her locality, serving as treasurer of the Parent Teachers' Association of the Eighth district and in April, 1922, was elected president of the association. Mr. Abersold became an American citizen while residing in Ohio and he has never regretted that he cast in his lot with the citizens of the Golden State.

JOHN L. ABSHIRE.—An enterprising member of the agricultural class may be found in John L. Abshire, who is the owner of a fine ten-acre apricot and almond orchard situated on the Thornton Road, San Joaquin County. He was born at Forestville, Cal., August 20, 1870, his parents being John and Anna (Toney) Abshire. John Abshire was a native of Virginia who crossed the plains to California in 1863, settling first at Woodland, and later moving to Sonoma County. He married Miss Anna Toney, a native of Illinois, in the East, and the young couple came across the plains by prairie schooner and ox-teams. Ten children were born to them: Maggie, Alice, Sarah, John L., Andrew, May, living; and Margaret, James, Jane and Bell, deceased. The father lived to be sixty-four years old, and the mother, sixty-two.

At the age of twelve years, John L. Abshire began to contribute to the needs of the family support, and what education he received was obtained in the grammar school of Woodland. He remained at home with his parents until their decease. Removing to Fresno County, he worked for wages for five subsequent years; then returned to Woodland, where he met and married his wife, who was Miss Emma Smith. She is the sixth child born to Dr. Andrew M. C. and Cordelia Laurana (Kellogg) Smith, natives of Ohio and

New York, respectively. Her father was a graduate of Pendleton Medical College, located at Pendleton, Ohio, and came to California with ox-team in 1849; later he returned to his native state, and when he returned to California he came around Cape Horn. He married Miss Kellogg, a member of an old New York family. This branch of the Kellogg family was represented in America by four brothers, who came over from Scotland in Colonial days. Great-grandfather Kellogg was a veteran of the Revolutionary War, and Grandfather Kellogg fought in the War of 1812, while her father fought in the Mexican War of 1846-48, in the 2nd Ohio Infantry, Company E. Her mother was thirteen years old when her parents came to California, and she was the eleventh woman in Yreka, Cal. The marriage of her father and mother is the second one recorded in Siskiyou County. The father prospected for gold in the early days and practiced his profession. In those days the name Yreka was spelled with a "W" instead of a "Y." The town received the name from the yells of the Indians as they surrounded the mining camp, yelling "Wi-ree-ka." Dr. Smith was one of the organizers of St. John Lodge No. 37, F. & A. M., in Yreka, and rose to a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. He retired from practice and spent his last years with Mr. and Mrs. Abshire at Lodi. He passed away at the age of seventy-eight, while the mother passed away at Lodi at the age of sixty-four from the effects of an accident. They had ten children: Rozella, deceased; Maretta, deceased; Nettie; Clarence; Ensign, deceased; Emma; Warren; William, deceased; Clayton, deceased; and Albert.

Emma Smith was born in Orofino, Siskiyou County, where she was reared and attended the public schools. She then moved to Woodland with her parents, and soon afterwards married Mr. Abshire. Shortly after their marriage, Mr. Abshire moved to San Joaquin County, six miles southeast of Clements, where he engaged in raising bronze turkeys, which occupied his attention for five years; then he removed to Lodi and rented a forty-acre fruit ranch two miles south of Lodi on the Cherokee Road, where he farmed for the following fifteen years; then he moved to his present place on Thornton Road, a short distance from Woodbridge, a part of the Wilhoit ranch. This place is improved with a good house and orchard, which is irrigated by a five-inch pump. Mr. and Mrs. Abshire are the parents of two capable and interesting daughters: Leone Laurana, a graduate of Stockton College of Commerce, is a bookkeeper in Stockton; and Rozella Lucile is also a graduate of Stockton College of Commerce, and is a notary public and stenographer in Lodi. In politics, both Mr. and Mrs. Abshire are Democrats, and they are also members of the Congregational Church at Lodi.

FRED C. ALLEN.—A straightforward citizen who feels a keen interest in all that pertains to the rapid and permanent development of San Joaquin County is Fred C. Allen, the well-known rancher residing east of Lockeford. He was born at Gorham, Maine on January 25, 1868, a son of Hosea Roscoe and Eleanor C. (Thoms) Allen. The father, Hosea R. Allen, served in the 17th Regiment Volunteer Artillery of Maine, serving throughout the Civil War in the Army of the Potomac. After eighteen months of service he was disabled and was transferred and drove an ambulance; then he tried his hand at cooking, and finally was detailed for hospital service, where he worked until he became so weak he was a subject for the hospital himself. In 1883 he came to California, and the same year returned to Maine. In 1884 he brought his whole family to the Coast and settled four miles north of Lockeford in Elliott township, where he purchased 160 acres of grain land. There he passed away at the age of seventy years, while the mother lived to be eighty years of age.

Fred C. Allen attended school at North Bridgetown and later at the Fryberg Academy until he came to California. He was then sixteen years of age and started out for himself. He and his brother, W. S. Allen, who had come to California in 1880, leased about 800 acres and farmed to grain; then Mr. Allen moved to a portion of the old Megerle ranch, now the property of Charles F. Smith, and leased it for six years. Again the brothers entered into partnership and bought 200 acres of land adjoining Lockeford on the east; this was grain land and the brothers developed a fifty-acre vineyard, which they afterwards sold. A property settlement was then made and his brother received fifty acres, thus leaving our subject 100 acres, which is his home place at the present time. He also owns 160 acres south of Clements. Mr. Allen has a ten-acre vineyard and a number of acres in alfalfa. Some five years ago the old house was burned to the ground and he has substituted a fine story-and-a-half modern structure to take its place.

Mr. Allen's marriage in Lockeford, on December 22, 1894, united him with Miss Ora Viola Hatch, a daughter of Forest R. and Charlofine Hatch. Mrs. Allen was born in Glens Falls, N. Y., and came to California with her parents when a young girl, receiving her education in the schools of Lockeford. Her father, Forest R. Hatch, was a volunteer in the New York Infantry and served three years of the Civil War; later he engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Allen are the parents of five children: Roscoe Forest; Clifton Le Roy; Fred D.; Flora Viola; and Alice Viola, deceased. In national politics, Mr. Allen is a Republican and fraternally he is a past grand of the I. O. O. F. Lodge of Lockeford.

K. G. BAUMBACH.—Numbered among the successful viticulturists of the Lodi district of San Joaquin County, K. G. Baumbach shows careful supervision and progressive methods in the care of his fine seventy-two-acre vineyard and orchard located on the Woodbridge Road north of Lodi. He was born in the rural district near Krem, South Russia, on March 6, 1872, the son of George and Charlotte (Delk) Baumbach, both parents natives of South Russia who came to America and located in South Dakota, where they homesteaded land and there both parents passed away.

K. G. Baumbach spent his boyhood on his father's farm working during vacation periods and attending the public school in Hutchinson County during the winter months until he was twenty-two years old, when he started out for himself by buying a half-section of grain land adjacent to his father's farm. His marriage occurred at Menno, in 1893, uniting him with Miss Margaret Maas, born at Krem, South Russia, the daughter of Gottlieb and Magdalena Maas, both natives of South Russia who came to the United States and settled in South Dakota when their daughter was a young girl. In 1905 Mr. Baumbach sold his property in South Dakota and came to California, and began ranching. He has owned different places, some of which he improved to vineyard and then sold. He now owns an eight and three-fourths-acre vineyard in South Hutchins, where he resides with his family. Mr. and Mrs. Baumbach are the parents of eleven children: John, Ludvig, Magdalena, Mathilda, Margaret, Martha, Fred, Ruby, Otto, Benjamin, and Phillip. In politics he is a Democrat, and the family are members of the Seventh Day Adventist Church of Lodi.

AUSTIN HOWARD BEECHER.—A young man connected with the park department of Stockton, Austin Howard Beecher was born near Stockton, November 21, 1888. His father, John L. Beecher, is also a native son, being born in San Joaquin County about sixty-seven years ago. Grandfather John L. Beecher, a native of Connecticut, crossed the plains in the early gold rush. Following mining for a short time he later engaged in teaming and freighting, having his headquarters in Stockton. He hauled provisions to the mines on the Mother Lode and on the return trips came through Knights Ferry. When he quit teaming he settled on his large ranch where he resided until he died.

His son, John L., was a successful rancher until he retired and now makes his home in Stockton. He served as a member of the California Legislature. In his younger days he had made several trips back to Massachusetts and on one of these he was married to Miss Cora Gibson, a native of that state who had spent his boyhood on the home ranch, attending the full enjoyment of the delightful California climate.

Austin Howard, the youngest of their five children, spent his boyhood on the home ranch, attending the local public schools. When seventeen years old he struck out for himself and for a time followed ranching, and then came to Stockton where he was employed until 1920, when he was appointed to a position in the Park Department of Stockton, and now has charge of Fremont Park.

Mr. Beecher was married in Stockton to Miss Margaret Ida Sheehan, who was born near Stockton, a daughter of Timothy and Margaret Sheehan, early settlers of this county, her father being engaged in the hotel business. Mrs. Beecher is a graduate of St. Mary's Academy, where she majored in vocal music. Possessing a fine soprano voice she sings at churches and in concerts and has delighted audiences with her singing. Mr. Beecher is a member of the Loyal Order of Moose.

JOHN A. BENDER.—Since 1903 John A. Bender has been residing in the Lodi section of San Joaquin County and is the owner of a forty-acre vineyard five miles south of Lodi. He was born in Menno, S. D., August 11, 1885, a son of John K. and Christina (Bender) Bender. John K. Bender was a farmer in his native land of Russia, having been born near the city of Odessa. In 1903 the family came to California and located in the vicinity of Lodi where the father purchased a twenty-acre vineyard on Cherokee Lane; later he sold this ranch and removed to Lodi, where he passed away in 1916, and the mother passed away in 1906. They were the parents of four children: Charles C.; John A., our subject; Margaret, Mrs. Henry Bender; and Bertha, Mrs. Rudolph Rode, both living in the Henderson district.

John A. Bender received a grammar school education in Menno, S. D., and assisted his father with the ranch work until he was twenty-one years old, when he bought 160 acres on the Elliott road north of Lockeford, where he engaged in farming for six or seven years; on this quarter section of land he set out a vineyard of twenty-five acres; later he sold his ranch and bought the place where he now resides, which is situated about four miles south of Lodi; this ranch contains forty acres, one-half of which is in alfalfa and the remaining half is set to vineyard; there are two irrigating plants on his ranch, one with a five-inch pump with a twelve-horsepower motor and the other with a six-inch pump with a fifteen-horsepower motor; Mr. Bender has also remodeled the house into a comfortable and modern residence.

On October 28, 1906, in Lodi, occurred the marriage of Mr. Bender, which united him with Miss Pauline Schenkenberger, a native of South Dakota, born near Scotland, a daughter of John and Louise (Barrett) Schenkenberger. Mrs. Bender received her education in her native state and accompanied her parents to California about twenty-five years ago and here her father engaged in farming in the vicinity of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Bender are the parents of nine children: Herbert, Thelma, John, Jr., Roberta, Roy, Robert, Alfred, Raymond, and Willard. Mr. Bender is a Republican in politics and the family are identified with the German Reformed Church.

THEODORE C. BENDER.—A thoroughly progressive and up-to-date practitioner of dental surgery, Theodore C. Bender is also interested in viticulture, owning a fine twenty-acre vineyard. He was born near Menno, S. D., October 22, 1892, a son of Charles J. and Elizabeth (Ulmer) Bender, represented elsewhere in this history. Theodore C. attended grammar school two years in South Dakota, then the family removed to Lodi where they remained for about five months, then the father bought a 400-acre ranch north of Woodbridge, where he still resides.

Theodore C. Bender completed his grammar schooling in the Woodbridge school; then attended the Lodi high school, from which he graduated with the class of 1913; then entered the University of California and was graduated from the Affiliated College in San Francisco with the class of 1916, with the degree of D. D. S. Returning to Lodi he opened an office in the Friedberger-Blodgett Building, where his offices are equipped for the most modern and most scientific methods known to dental surgery, and he has steadily built up a fine practice. During the late war Mr. Bender entered the service of his country and was sent to Vancouver Barracks, where he remained for three months and was honorably discharged.

On February 9, 1919, at Lodi, Dr. Bender was united in marriage with Miss Edna Jungeblut, a native of Nebraska and a daughter of F. J. and Marie (Stark) Jungeblut. About seventeen years ago Mrs. Bender accompanied her parents to Lodi and she attended the Salem school. Her father was a graduate of the Princeton Theological College at Princeton, N. J., and was a minister of the German Reformed Church. Dr. Bender's father deeded him a forty-acre tract of land, twenty acres of which has been set to grapes which are now a year old; the balance of twenty acres is grain land; he has installed a pumping plant with a five-inch pump driven by a fifteen-horsepower motor. Dr. and Mrs. Bender are the parents of one daughter, Elinor Bernice. They make their home at 315 West Oak Street, Lodi, and they are members of the German Reformed Church. Dr. Bender is a member of the Masonic Lodge and also the Knights of Pythias of Lodi, and in politics is a Republican.

ALBERT BOYD.—Among the worthy men who have done what they could to make California more prosperous and a better place to abide in during his half century of residence within the confines of the state is Albert Boyd, who was born in St. Boyer, thirty miles from Montreal, Canada, November 4, 1854, being descended from one of the splendid old Canadian families who trace their lineage back to France and Scotland. He lived in a farming community and learned the rudiments of agriculture while he attended the public schools. When fifteen years of age he migrated to Burlington, N. Y., where for two years he was employed on railroad construction work. When he reached the age of seventeen he resolved to come to California, so in 1872 we find him in Marin County, where he was employed in the woods near Fort Ross, continuing for a period of twenty-two months, when he removed to San Francisco and began learning the blacksmith trade. He did not like the city so in a few years he removed to Hayward, where he worked at blacksmithing for one year, and thence to Dublin, where he completed his trade. It was in that town in 1879 that Mr. Boyd was married to Miss Mary Campbell, who was born in San Lorenzo, Cal., a daughter of William Campbell, a '49er and prominent pioneer in Alameda County.

After seven years at Dublin he purchased a blacksmith shop at Greenfield, near Livermore, which he ran for three years; selling out in 1883 he came to Stockton where he worked as a blacksmith for Benjamin Holt for a period of ten years, and then moved to Jenny Lind, where he ran a blacksmith business of his own for three years. He then returned to Stockton and again worked for Benjamin Holt. This time he continued for eight years as a blacksmith, when he again went to Turlock and for two years ran a shop of his own, and then moved to Atlanta, San Joaquin County, and purchased a blacksmith shop, where he did a successful business for three years. Selling out, he came back to Stockton and again worked for the Holt Manufacturing Company, but only remained two months, and then went to Valley Springs, Calaveras County, purchased a shop and engaged in general blacksmithing for eight months, when he disposed of it and again took his old place with Mr. Holt and continued steadily with them as a blacksmith for ten years, until he was retired on a pension, favorably known as one of their oldest and most trusted employees. He knew the Holts personally and found them fine men, and on the other hand the Holts spoke of him as a valuable and reliable man.

Mr. Boyd was bereaved of his faithful wife in 1915, a woman deeply mourned by her family and friends, and her taking away left a void in the family. Mr. and Mrs. Boyd were the parents of eight children: William, deceased; Oliver is a blacksmith with the Holt Manufacturing Company; Arthur, Walter, Annie and Elmer, all deceased; Harold is a popular baseball player with the National League; and Lottie, who is a bookkeeper, also presides over her father's home.

Mrs. Boyd was a member of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, while Mr. Boyd is popular in the K. O. T. M., and politically is a strong Republican.

FRANK BREITENBUCHER.—An industrious rancher is Frank Breitenbuecher, now the owner of 740 acres of fine farm-land four miles to the south and two miles to the east of Clements. He is a native son, who first saw the light near Stockton, in San Joaquin County, on May 23, 1867. His father, Christopher Breitenbuecher, came to California when he was twenty-two years old, and engaged in teaming out of Stockton. He later went to farming, and took up government land, but never proved up on it. He died at the age of fifty-nine years, while his devoted wife lived to be sixty-two. Their family, in the order of their birth, are as follows: C. A., J. C., and H. W. Breitenbuecher, the elder brothers; Frank, our subject; Alex; Clara, Mrs. F. M. Rowe; and E. E. Breitenbuecher.

Frank grew up on the home farm about thirteen miles due east of Stockton, and attended the old Enterprise school. With his four brothers he farmed for years a ranch of 3,000 acres in the Grant school district, in San Joaquin County. About twenty years ago he started to farm by himself; and since then he has been cultivating from 1,600 to 1,800 acres of grain land. He bought 740 acres, and the balance he leased; and today he owns about 1,000 acres. On the farm of 740 acres, about seven miles southeast of Clements, he built a home and added other improvements in the shape of excellent farm buildings. This home was erected about six years after he had married, at Stockton, on April 22, 1902, Miss Harriet Cottrell, a native of San Joaquin County and the daughter of Isaac and Anna Cottrell. One son has blessed this union, Warren Breitenbuecher.

Frank Breitenbuecher has engaged in the stock business in a small way, and he also has about 150 head of sheep. He is a patriot, through and through, and during the late World War served as one of the captains in the Liberty Loan bond drive in the eastern section of the county. He is a Republican, but always and foremost a free American. He belongs to the Clements Lodge of Odd Fellows, in which he is a past grand, and he is also a member of the Lodi Encampment of Odd Fellows, and with his wife a member of the Rebekahs.

FERNANDO CHRISTESEN.—A citizen of more than usual importance is Fernando Christesen, marshal and superintendent of streets of Lodi. His official service is always faithfully and promptly performed, and he is as loyal to the welfare of his community as he is to his private business interests. He is a native of Franklin, Cal., where he was born March 30, 1874, a son of Robert and Lena Christesen. His father, Robert Christesen, was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and in 1868 arrived in California on a sailing vessel. He settled in Sacramento County and farmed a large acreage to grain. Mr. and Mrs. Christesen had eight children: Louis A., of Galt; Mrs. Lena Walthers; Fernando; Mrs. Mary Mehl; Mrs. Tessie Krumb; Mrs. Emma Ehardt; Robert, of Bruceville; and Henry. The father died at the age of sixty-seven and the mother at seventy years of age, she passing away at Lodi.

Fernando Christesen attended the common school and the Sacramento Institute and worked with his father on the ranch until he was eighteen, then struck out for himself and was variously employed in different places until 1897, when he was employed on the ranch of Mrs. Anna Powers. The following year he was in Eastern Oregon and in 1899 came back to California and started to learn the trade of machinist with the Holt Manufacturing Company, but he did not stay long as he entered the employ of the San Francisco and San Joaquin Valley Railroad (now the Santa Fe). In 1901 he formed a partnership with Ed Powers to engage in the vineyard business near Lodi, where they also raised melons; later they extended their operations to Manteca where they continued the melon industry. This partnership continued until 1912. In the meantime Mr. Christesen had bought thirty acres of land, part of a stubble field, located on Terminus Road about three and one-half miles from Lodi, which he set to vines and where he erected a suitable home and installed a pumping plant. He made this his home until 1920, when he sold out and moved into Lodi. In 1904 he had purchased 240 acres of his father's ranch at Bruceville, leasing it for grain raising; later he sold off eighty acres and in 1920 disposed of the balance. On April 15, 1922, Mr. Christesen was appointed city marshal and superintendent of streets of Lodi, and how well he has administered his official duties is well known to the citizens of that thriving city.

On August 28, 1902, at Lodi, occurred the marriage that united Mr. Christesen with Miss Estelle Powers, born in Lodi, daughter of John and Anna Powers, of Missouri and California, respectively. Of this union of Mr. and Mrs. Christesen three children have been born: Madeline Fern, Edna Mae and Leland Fernando. In politics Mr. Christesen supports the best men and measures that he believes will be best suited to the public good. He served as a trustee of the Henderson school while living on his ranch and was a deputy assessor under Cy Moreing four years. Fraternally, he is a member of the Woodmen of the World and of the Lodi Aerie of Eagles, No. 848.

GEORGE J. CHRISTY.—A representative rancher of San Joaquin County is George J. Christy, who resides on the hill to the south of Clements. He was born in San Joaquin County, on the old Christy ranch, one mile east of Clements, on January 22, 1870, the son of James Christy, who was born near Dublin, Ireland, and married Miss Mary Carroll, a native of Louth, also in Ireland.

James Christy left home at the age of fourteen, came out to America, and settled for a while in New Jersey. When the news of the discovery of gold in California electrified the world he was among the first to sail around the Horn to San Francisco, in 1849, and almost immediately went into Amador County, near Volcano, and later removed to Property Bar and Lancha Plana. He had odd and interesting associations, and for a while was thrown in with James Fair, afterwards Senator, as a fellow-miner. In 1855 he came to the Clements district and bought 160 acres of land, and later he added to his holdings. He bought out Thomas Wylie, and in all had 560 acres, where he raised grain and stock. James Christy sent East for his fiancee, and they were married on her arrival at Lancha Plana. She and the wife of Captain Messenger were the only white women in the mines. With James Christy, Joseph and Thomas Burns came to California from Ireland; and they also left New York for California together. Mr. Christy died at the age of seventy-four, and Mrs. Christy in her fifty-fourth year. William, the eldest of their children, was born in Lancha Plana, and died ten years ago; James passed away when he was young; Eliza is a Sister at Notre Dame, in Iowa; Philip was named after Gen. Phil Sheridan, under whom two uncles, his father's and mother's brothers, fought in the Civil War; Mary died at the age of twelve; George J. is the subject of this review; Celia has become Mrs. Freidburger, of Madera; Martha died in 1920; she enlisted as a Red Cross nurse for service in the World War, was vaccinated, and after four years of suffering died from the effect of the serum used.

George J. Christy farmed with his father on the 560-acre grain farm; they also leased 400 acres of grain and grazing land, for they used to have 100 head of cattle. At Lodi, on December 27, 1900, Mr. Christy was married to Miss Jennie Brandt, born at French Camp, the daughter of Louis R. Brandt, whose life-story is elsewhere given in this work. She had attended the Brandt school, so called in honor of her family. After their marriage they lived at Clements and helped to run the old Christy home farm. In 1902 they came into possession of 110 acres of the old Dougherty-Gillies ranch. There they built a fine home and otherwise improved the place, erecting the best of farm buildings. This property adjoins Clements on the south and is a slightly place, located on a height of land known as Christy Hill. He also bought a quarter-section of road land, three miles south of Clements, where he engaged in farming and stock-raising. Two sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Christy: Carroll E. and George Darroll.

EDWIN CHANDLER GOODRICH.—Possessed of the qualities that make for success in life, Edwin Chandler Goodrich had taken a place among the prosperous horticulturists of San Joaquin County. Mr. Goodrich was born near Volcano, Amador County, on May 30, 1871, the son of Chandler Baker and Jemima (Hill) Goodrich. The father was a blacksmith by trade, but after arriving in California he mined at Volcano for awhile, but soon took up his trade at the mines. There were two children in the family: Doney H. and Edwin Chandler, the subject of this sketch. After his mother's death his father married Martha Whitehead, and they had two children: Melford P.; and Addie May, who married Jesse McCargar and is now deceased.

Edwin Chandler Goodrich began his schooling at Volcano, and when he was ten years old his parents removed to Geyserville, Sonoma County, where he completed his education. When he was eighteen years of age, he went to San Francisco and took up plumbing and sheet metal work under George H. Fay, remaining with him for three years; he then went into business for himself, but continued only one year, when he removed to Nevada and worked in the mines at Dayton, continuing for only a short time. Upon returning to California he entered into partnership with his brothers and together they conducted a planing mill at Healdsburg for seven years. Then the business was sold and for the next three years Mr. Goodrich turned his attention to ranching at Kenwood, Sonoma County; then he went to Vacaville and became foreman of the Frank H. Buck ranch of 2,000 acres. Mr. Goodrich was then sent to the Elliott district of San Joaquin County in the interests of the Buck Company, and later purchased a twenty-acre ranch from W. Herrick; later buying ten acres adjoining, making a total of thirty acres, twenty acres of which is in orchard and alfalfa and the balance devoted to the raising of grain. At the present time, Mr. Goodrich is the foreman of the Roberts ranch, a fifty-acre vineyard, on which he makes his home.

The marriage of Mr. Goodrich occurred in Santa Rosa, on July 3, 1898, and united him with Miss Elizabeth Cummings, born on a ranch about five miles from Geyserville, a daughter of Eli and Mary (Johns) Cummings, early pioneers of California who were engaged in sheep-raising, having from 1,500 to 2,000 head at one time. Her mother passed away in 1918 and her father in 1921, both in Sonoma County. She received her education in the Geyserville public schools. They are the parents of one son, Edwin Russell Goodrich. Mr. Goodrich is a Republican in politics and fraternally is a member of the W. O. W. of Santa Rosa.

JOSEPH LESLIE RODGERS.—Five and one-half miles east of the town of Acampo is the ranch owned by Joseph Leslie Rodgers, consisting of eighteen acres planted to vineyard interset with almond trees, which has been brought to a high state of cultivation. He was born at Jenny Lind, Calaveras County, Cal., on March 25, 1895, a son of Albert F. and Sarah (Jourdan) Rodgers. Albert F. Rodgers is also a native of Jenny Lind, and was born on August 23, 1859, the son of Joseph A. and Margaret Ann (Milliken) Rodgers, both natives of Holland. Grandfather Rodgers came around the Horn to California in 1852, followed by Grandmother Rodgers two years later. Albert F. Rodgers preempted a quarter-section of land near Jenny Lind, which was sold in 1909; then he purchased a twenty-seven-acre vineyard near Dougherty Station, which he still owns and on which he resides a portion of the time. Albert F. Rodgers' first marriage occurred in the fall of 1884 and united him with Miss Lilly Dustin, who passed away two years later. His second marriage occurred in 1889, and united him with Miss Sarah Jourdan, a native of Williamson County, Ill., who came to California in 1887 with an aunt and uncle. They were the parents of four children: Bethel, deceased; Emile; Joseph Leslie, our subject; and Ross, deceased.

Joseph Leslie Rodgers began his education in the schools of Jenny Lind and finished at the Lodi high school. After leaving school he accompanied his aunt to Illinois where he remained over two years working in the coal mines at Johnson City, Williamson County, doing all kinds of work, from driving mules to digging coal; he then returned to California and went to work for the Earl Fruit Company and since that time has been employed by a number of fruit companies on the coast.

The marriage of Mr. Rodgers occurred on February 14, 1917, and united him with Miss Erma Mac Smith, born in San Francisco, a daughter of Henry H. and Anna R. Smith. Miss Smith was taken by her parents to Nevada when a small child and the family remained there for six years; then they returned to California and were in Sacramento for a time, then in Napa, Cal., the daughter attending school in all the above cities. Mr. and Mrs. Rodgers had one child, who died in infancy. In 1919 Mr. Rodgers became the owner of the beautiful vineyard interset with almond trees, which he expects to graft to plums. Politically he is a Republican and fraternally he is identified with the Eagles of Lodi. The present residence of the family is near Youngstown on the Acampo-Lockeford highway.

JOHN J. STRIEFF.—A thoroughly wide-awake, progressive young dairyman, who is to be found in the front ranks of the successful California agriculturists, is John J. Strieff, who was born on Dry Creek, about four miles east of Galt, in San Joaquin County, on February 1, 1900, the son of Henry and Mary Ann Strieff, the former a native of the Canton Glaras, in Switzerland, while the latter came from Canton Urie. Mr. Strieff reached California some forty years ago, when he was about thirty years of age, but Mrs. Strieff first saw the Promised Land of the West in her eighteenth year. He bought forty acres near the Elliott schoolhouse, and their children attended the grammar school at Galt. The worthy Swiss couple had nine children in their family. Henry, the eldest, is now deceased; Jacob is at Oroville; Fred is in San Francisco; Peter is with his father on the ranch; John is the subject of this sketch; Harry C. is associated with John; Anna married David Gustafson of Hood City; and Edward and Elizabeth, the youngest in the order of birth, are both deceased. Mrs. Strieff died in September, 1921, but Mr. Strieff is still living, at the fine old age of seventy, honored of all men, as Mrs. Strieff was beloved by those who knew her.

John Strieff and his brother Harry, during the last two years, engaged extensively in dairying; they have a dairy ranch of 600 acres on Dry Creek, about one mile north of the Elliott schoolhouse, where there are seventy-five acres in alfalfa and the rest in grain and ordinary pasture. They have fifty head of cattle, and are doing well. They follow scientific methods, have the most up-to-date apparatus, and have created and conscientiously maintain one of the most sanitary dairies in the county. Meanwhile, along with their busy industrial lives, they take a live interest in the political issues of the day, Mr. Strieff being a good, stand-pat Republican, but a fine, non-partisan "booster" for the locality in which he lives and thrives.

JOHN P. TRIOLO.—Business enterprise finds a stalwart exponent in the person of John P. Triolo, whose progressive spirit and determination have won for him a prominent position in the business circles of Stockton. Mr. Triolo was born in Chicago, Ill., on February 21, 1880, and grew to manhood and was educated in that city. He then entered the employ of Porter Brothers, fruit packers and shippers, and became their European manager; and during the ten years he was employed by them he made seven round trips to Mediterranean ports. In 1905 he came to California in the interest of the same company, locating at Los Angeles, where he remained for six years.

In 1911 Mr. Triolo came to Stockton and went into partnership with Louis Calestini in a general real estate and insurance business under the firm name of Triolo & Calestini. Their operations covered a large territory, and besides conducting a most successful real estate business, they erected business blocks and residences, selling them at a profit, and in this way built up a lucrative business. Their popularity and success as realtors is demonstrated by the fact that in many instances they sold the same property twice. They consummated the sale of the Bronx Hotel, the Masonic Temple building, and the Hodgkin block on Weber Avenue. Vacant property has also received their attention, as they sold 200 lots in the business district, on which business blocks have been erected.

Many dairy and fruit ranches were also developed and sold by them. At one time they were the owners of a seventy-acre dairy on the Calaveras River near Linden, which supported one of the best herds of Holstein cows in the county. Recently, Mr. Calestini withdrew from the firm and is now doing business under the firm name of the Louis Calestini Real Estate Company.

The marriage of Mr. Triolo united him with a native daughter of California, Miss Harriet Long, and they are the parents of four children: Ellen, Charles, John and Daniel. A man of force and ability, he has ever believed in constructive measures, and he stands high in the community.

JOSIAH TOMLINSON.—A dependable citizen of the Elliott district is Josiah Tomlinson, who has attained to his present position after many years spent in varied lines of endeavor. A native of Pennsylvania, he was born at Wrightstown, Bucks County, on June 6, 1852, a son of Josiah and Mary (Croasdale) Tomlinson, both natives of Pennsylvania, of English and Scotch descent, respectively. The father was a farmer by occupation and young Josiah had the advantage of a fair education in the Quaker schools of his native state, which were the only schools in the vicinity in which he lived. Remaining at home with his parents until he was twenty-one years old, Josiah Tomlinson then came to California where he remained for five years; then removed to Goldendale, Wash., and engaged in the building and planing mill business, which he continued until his marriage.

The marriage of Mr. Tomlinson occurred at Summerville, Oregon, on June 15, 1881, and united him with Miss Amelia B. Koontz, a native of Malaga, Monroe County, Ohio, a daughter of William and Mary A. (Berry) Koontz. Her father, William Koontz, came to the Northwest in 1871 and was a pioneer missionary minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and he was instrumental in establishing many congregations throughout Oregon and Washington. After his marriage, Mr. Tomlinson removed to Tacoma, Wash., and engaged in building contracting for five years; he then went to Pendleton, Ore., and there built and conducted a planing mill for the next thirteen years; then removed to Oakland, Cal., and engaged in the building business for the following ten years, making his home on Lynde Street. In 1912, the family removed to San Joaquin County and purchased forty acres of land, one and one-half miles south of the Elliott school house, and he has since been engaged in the fruit and poultry business. When Mr. Tomlinson purchased his property it was a grain field; he has built his residence and developed a twelve-acre peach, prune, almond, and plum orchard, and fifteen acres has been set to Zinfandel and Mission grapes; besides he has a modernly equipped poultry house, having at the present time 625 laying hens, which are yielding him a good income for his labor. Mr. and Mrs. Tomlinson are the parents of four children: Raymond lives at Benicia; Orcine is Mrs. W. M. Hession of Oakland and has two daughters, Wilma and Eva; Harry resides at Alameda; Eva is Mrs. C. W. Russell of Sacramento and she has three children, Ruth Harriet, Phillip R. and Clyde R. For several years Mrs. Tomlinson has served the locality as a school trustee, being clerk of the board; in politics he is a Republican. He is a member of the Neighbors of Woodcraft of Fruitvale, Cal.

WILLIAM LESLIE McDONALD.—Among the prosperous and enterprising ranchers of the Woodbridge section of San Joaquin County is William Leslie McDonald, who has made his home in California since 1872, coming from his native country of Canada. He was born at West Lake, Ontario, Canada, June 22, 1854, a son of Amos and Almira (White) McDonald. The father was of Scotch descent, and the mother was from an old New England family. The McDonald side of the house can be traced back 400 years to the Macdonald clan of Scotland. There were nine children in the family; Daniel, deceased; Gilbert resides at San Martin, Cal.; Minard, deceased; Mary, Mrs. Blankenship of Richmond, Cal.; Celestia, deceased; William L.; Euphemia Miller, and Perry and Ella, deceased. The father lived to be seventy-three years old, while the mother passed away at the age of fifty-nine years. When William Leslie took out his citizenship papers, his name was written McDonald by the officer making his application and he retained that spelling instead of MacDonalD.

William Leslie acquired a public school education in Canada and when almost eighteen years old came to the United States and direct to California, arriving May 8, 1872, settling at Novato, Marin County, Cal., where he remained eight months; then he removed to Sierra County where he spent almost four years in the mines; a great part of the time was spent at the Great North American mine, then Oak Ranch and Ball Mountain mines. Mr. McDonald took out his first citizenship papers at Downieville, Cal., and completed his American citizenship at San Rafael, Cal. In 1877 he gave up mining and returned to Novato, Cal., where he rented a portion of Senator Long's ranch, known as the Black Point Farm where he ran a dairy of 125 cows for seven years; then when the Long ranch was sold he removed to Oakland and engaged in the retail milk business for a year and a half, then sold out and settled in San Joaquin County. Mr. McDonald first purchased ten acres of the Thomas Pope ranch on the Thornton Road, then later bought eighteen acres of the same tract. This land was pasture and stubble and Mr. McDonald set twenty-one acres to Zinfandel grapes and he also has a small orchard and some alfalfa; he has also improved the place with good farm buildings.

On December 25, 1880, at Petaluma, Cal., Mr. McDonald was married to Miss Alice Hayden, a native of Plover, Wis., and daughter of Amaziah and Amanda (Young) Hayden, both natives of Corinna, Maine. Her father was a sawmill man by trade and moved from Maine to Wisconsin in the frontier days of that state. In 1864 he brought his family over the plains with an ox-team during the time of the Sioux uprising, and in six months to a day he settled in Marin County. Here Alice Hayden received her education in the public schools. Later she moved to San Joaquin County where both parents passed away, the father being ninety-eight and the mother eighty-six years old. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald have one son, Scott McDonald, born in Novato but educated in the schools of Stockton, who married Miss Clara Woods, a twin sister of Clarence L. Woods, who is also represented in this history; they have two children, Clarence Leslie and Alice Arline. Scott McDonald has charge of and operates the home place. In politics, Mr. McDonald is a Republican and fraternally is a member of Charter Oak Lodge of Stockton and the Knights of Pythias and Mrs. McDonald is a member of the Pythian Sisters, and in their lives they exemplify the beneficent spirit of these fraternities, which are based upon kindness and brotherly helpfulness.

HUGH EDWARD TAYLOR.—California a half century ago was known only as a mining state, but in more recent years its splendid agricultural and horticultural resources have awakened the attention of the entire world and the products of its orchards and vineyards are sent to all parts of this country and to many foreign lands. Hugh Edward Taylor is among those engaged in the raising of grapes in San Joaquin County, located about a mile east of Lodi, where he has ten acres devoted entirely to the cultivation of the Tokay grape. He was born at New Market, Ontario, Canada, on August 9, 1855, the son of Abraham Lange and Sarah June (Coreyll) Taylor. Abraham Taylor, his father, was a farmer and lumber merchant in the vicinity of New Market, where Hugh Edward received his education in the district schools. After finishing his schooling, he remained at home with his parents, assisting his father in his business and with his farm work until 1877, when he was married, on Christmas eve, at New Market, to Miss Elizabeth Thomson, a native of Hamilton. She is the daughter of George and Sophie Thomson, natives of Scotland and England, respectively, the latter being reared in Scotland, where the father was a shoe merchant. Their daughter was educated in the district school and finished in the high school of Hamilton. After his marriage, Mr. Taylor removed to the territory of Dakota, where he engaged in farming. He filed on a pre-emption and a tree claim and later took a homestead, becoming owner of 480 acres devoted to grain. The farm was located thirty-five miles northwest of Grand Forks, in the Red River Valley, N. D. He also acquired land by purchase in Saskatchewan, Canada. Removing from North Dakota, in 1906 Mr. Taylor came to California and settled at Lodi, and soon after sold his Dakota farm. His property is located on the extension of East Pine street, about a mile from Lodi, and consists of ten acres in vineyard; Mr. Taylor installed a pumping plant with a four-inch pump and a seven horse-power motor. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are the parents of two children: Austin Lange resides near Spokane, Wash.; and Glen Osborne lives near Medford, Ore. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally a member of the Independent Order of Foresters, and with his family is a member of the Congregational Church.

LUTHER C. WALLING.—Well known as a vineyardist and agriculturalist, Luther C. Walling has been a resident of San Joaquin County for the past twenty-six years, since he purchased his present home, consisting of fifteen acres, on Cherokee Lane, some three and a half miles south of Lodi. He has been a successful manager and has gained an excellent reputation for both quantity and quality of products. He was born on a ranch south of Turlock, Cal., on January 14, 1871, a son of Andrew and Jennie Martha (Penter) Walling. The father, Andrew Walling, came to California in an early day and engaged in grain farming. He passed away when Luther C. was a child of two years. The mother is still living, residing in Oakland.

Luther C. Walling was reared by relatives and attended school at Placerville, Cal., until he was fifteen years old, when he started to make his own way in the world, working on farms and doing teaming work. He settled at Franklin, Cal., and worked there for a number of years at farm work; then he rambled over various parts of California until 1896, when he settled in the Live Oak district of San Joaquin County and there purchased fifteen acres of unimproved land on Cherokee Lane, just south of the Live Oak schoolhouse. On this land he set out a vineyard and developed an irrigation system. He also bought fifteen acres on the Dayton Road, set out in vineyard, then sold it. Mrs. Walling owns twenty-four acres of the old McCoy place, on the Eight-mile Road; one-half of it was set to vineyard by her father, the balance being unimproved.

The marriage of Mr. Walling occurred on November 16, 1904, on the old McCoy ranch in the Live Oak district, which united him with Miss Alice McCoy, a native Californian, a daughter of Daniel and Adelia (Dayton) McCoy, natives of Lincoln County, Ill., and Michigan, respectively. In 1858 Daniel McCoy left his native state for the West. Arriving on the coast he stopped for a short time in Oregon, then came to California and engaged in mining at Sonora and later teamed from Stockton and Sonora to the mines; then he removed to San Joaquin County, where he bought a quarter-section of land on Cherokee Lane, eight miles north of Stockton, and engaged in grain farming. Mrs. Walling received her education in the Davis school district north of Stockton. There were six children born to this pioneer couple: Ella, Mrs. Sprague, resides at Raymond, Cal.; Ann, Mrs. David Bunch, resides in Los Angeles; Alice, Mrs. Walling; Rowland Henry resides in Woodbridge; Louis is deceased; and Bel'e, Mrs. Hearn. The last days of Mr. and Mrs. McCoy were spent in Stockton, where Mr. McCoy passed away at the age of seventy-three, and his wife was sixty-odd years old when she died. For the past twenty-five years Mr. Walling has been a member of the Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W. During his long residence in San Joaquin County he has formed a wide acquaintance and he has also gained creditable success, and by perseverance and determination has gained a place among the substantial agriculturalists of the community.

FRED WENZELBURGER.—A very wide-awake, progressive and prosperous young rancher, who always has something to show for his scientific theories and his practical devices and methods, representing the "last word" in agricultural science, is Fred Wenzelburger, who was born on the old home ranch of his father, about six miles to the southeast of Clements, on July 30, 1892, the son of Chris and Mary (Cordova) Wenzelburger, whose interesting life-story is given in greater detail elsewhere in this work. His father first saw the light in the famous old city of Wittenberg, in Germany, in 1870, and twenty years later married into one of the old established Portuguese-American families, enviably associated with the history of Northern California.

Fred attended the Brandt school, and later pursued the excellent courses in business training at the Heald's commercial college at Stockton. Thus well-equipped, he started out for himself when eighteen years of age, and then took up the trade of a machinist, and in harvesting time he worked with threshing outfits. He was in the service of Shedd & Hannah, at Tracy, and after that worked for the Harris Manufacturing Company at Stockton, joining their staff in the construction department.

At the Linn Rancho, about two miles east of his own home, on February 17, 1915, he was married to Miss Oleta Linn, who was born near Clements, and is the daughter of Daniel and Carrie (Weber) Linn. Her father came to California in early days, and lived for years on the Walter McGary Rancho, two miles east of Lockeford, until he moved to a place about four miles southeast of Clements. Here he purchased 320 acres, and her father still owns the ranch today. Mr. and Mrs. Wenzelburger live on their place of 320 acres, upon which he erected a bungalow and farm buildings. Mrs. Wenzelburger received her education at the Grant and Brandt country school and the Stockton Commercial College.

Mr. Wenzelburger first bought 160 acres of land adjoining the Linn ranch. They have eight head of mules and two head of horses, and prefer the power thus derived to that of the tractor. Mr. Wenzelburger takes great pride in both his farm land and in his working of it, and constantly endeavors to raise his standards. At the same time, he takes a live interest in what is going on in the world about him; and, as a good Republican, but what is better still, a broad-minded American, he contributes to making the world a better place in which to live.

CHRIS WENZELBURGER.—An enterprising, experienced and very successful rancher, and one who obtains the best results in the raising of both grain and stock, is Chris Wenzelburger, who lives about six miles to the southeast of Clements. He was born in Wittenberg, Germany, on January 25, 1870, the son of Chris and Carry (Fisher) Wenzelburger,—the former a baker by trade who came to California at the age of twenty-one, voyaging around the Horn in a sailing vessel which made the trip in eighty-eight days. Our subject was one of six children. Mary is married and as Mrs. Gunder she is living in the state of Washington. Chris was the second in the order of birth. Paul is on the Chahales River in Washington. Kate is Mrs. Gohrman of San Francisco, her husband being a druggist at the corner of Market and Valencia streets. William is at Othello, Wash.; and Vera is Mrs. Mohrmann and lives at Driad, Wash. Mr. Wenzelburger, the father, lived to be eighty-eight years old, and passed away at his home in Washington, and Mrs. Wenzelburger died at their ranch home on the Chahales River in Washington, at the age of eighty-two. In 1880, Chris Wenzelburger, Sr., had settled on a half-section south of the present home of our subject, on land called the Mokelumne Grant, southeast of the well-known Round Timbers Rancho taken up by J. Wright Johnson. At that time, the land was thickly settled, and there was a rancher on every quarter-section. When the railroad company was given each odd-numbered section of land, the farmers became discouraged, and rather than pay the company a second time for the land, they moved out of the county, thus depopulating that section of the country. The Brandt school, for example, came to have only fifty pupils, while now it is discontinued. In 1893 Mr. Wenzelburger lost out on his land, and went north to Washington, where he bought a ranch on the Chahales River, living there until he died.

Chris Wenzelburger, Jr., attended the Brandt school, and on September 18, 1891, married Miss Mary Cordoza, a native of Sonoma County, and the daughter of Antone and Hulda (Drew) Cordoza. Her father was a native of Portugal, who came to the United States when he was sixteen years old. He settled in Sonoma County, and there farmed for ten years; and then moved to Stone Corral, in Calaveras County, where he lived for forty years. Five daughters were born to this worthy couple. Belle, who became Mrs. Thomas, lived at La Fevre, and died there of pneumonia. Mary is the accomplished wife of our subject. Elsie has become a San Franciscan, and Lillian, Mrs. Brandt, and Genevia, Mrs. Peterson, both live in the Bay City.

After his marriage, Mr. Wenzelburger rented and farmed land for about ten years, but he saw that he was not getting ahead in that way, so he purchased 400 acres of land about six miles to the southeast of Clements, and built a fine farm home there, and put in many improvements; and since that time he has purchased additional land adjoining his original ranch, until now he owns some 2,400 acres of fine land. Although this is suited mostly for general farming, he also uses it to some extent for the raising of stock, of which he has 250 head, young and old, on the ranch, while he has sixteen head of work-horses. His main crops are barley and oats. The one son born to Mr. and Mrs. Wenzelburger, named Fred, is also successfully farming near his father's home place.

Mr. Wenzelburger is a member of the Modern Woodmen, at Clements, and he is a stand-pat Republican. But he is first, last, and all the time, an American, and, as such, is vitally and enthusiastically interested in the welfare of the country at large, and the prosperity of the district in which he lives, operates and thrives.

CLARENCE L. WOODS.—An enterprising rancher who devotes his energies to the cultivation and raising of grapes is Clarence L. Woods, his vineyard being located four and a half miles northwest of Woodbridge, and containing twenty-four acres. He was born on the old Samuel Woods ranch near Woodbridge, in the northern part of San Joaquin County, August 31, 1883, a son of Samuel and Francis Arline (Plummer) Woods, natives of Missouri and Iowa, respectively. Samuel Woods was born at Hannibal, Mo., July 14, 1841, and was a son of Samuel M. and Elizabeth (Leffler) Woods, the former a native of Virginia and of Scotch extraction, and the latter a native of Pennsylvania of German stock. When the father, Samuel Woods, was ten years old, in 1852, the family left Missouri and after a trip across the plains lasting some six months arrived in California; thus the grandfather of our subject became a typical California pioneer. During the winter of 1853 he conducted the old-time Western Hotel at Stockton, and in 1856 was proprietor of the hotel at Pleasant Grove, and from 1857 until his death, in 1880, he was engaged in ranching on the old Samuel M. Woods ranch near Woodbridge. The father became the owner of the old homestead ranch, consisting of 320 acres, devoted to grain and stock-raising, of which forty acres was in vineyard. Samuel Woods married Miss Francis Arline Plummer, and they were the parents of four children: Clarence L., of this review; his twin sister, Clara, the wife of Scott McDonald; Mrs. Rita Borden of San Jose; Evelyn, Mrs. W. H. Sparling of Capitola, Cal. The father passed away March 16, 1915, and the mother on April 10, 1922.

Clarence L. Woods received his education at the Ray district school of San Joaquin County, which was supplemented with a course at the Stockton Business College. In 1909 he started out for himself and began work as a machinist with the Western Pacific Railroad Company in Stockton, and also worked for them in the shops at Oakland and Sacramento for four years; then for six years he was employed on the construction of the County and State highways as roller-man; then in 1919 he settled on his present ranch four miles northwest of Woodbridge, consisting of twenty-four acres, which was planted to grapes of the Tokay, Black Prince and Zinfandel varieties, now in full bearing.

On October 23, 1915, at Oakland, Mr. Woods was married to Miss Edna Anglin, also a native of California, born at Pittville, Shasta County, and a daughter of Elmer E. and Margaret Susan (Baker) Anglin, the former a native of Oregon, and the latter of Pennsylvania. Grandfather Joshua Thomas Anglin was a native of Tennessee and a veteran of the Mexican and Indian wars. He left home at the age of fourteen and joined the army, and never returned to his home in Tennessee, but migrated westward. About seventy years ago he settled in the Hood River country of Oregon; in 1866 he moved to California and farmed at Dixon; later he moved to Shasta County, where he died. Mrs. Woods is one of four children: Willard resides at Ione, Cal.; May, Mrs. Richardson, a resident of Westwood; Mrs. Edna Woods; Tracy resides at Ione. Mrs. Woods received her education in the grammar schools of Shasta County, and when eighteen years old came to Stockton, where she entered the Western Normal, and then became a teacher. She taught one year at Red Bluff, Cal., then two years at Coalinga, Cal., and two years at the Ray school in San Joaquin County, where she met and married Mr. Woods. They are the parents of three children: Samuel, Margaret and Edith Elizabeth. Mr. and Mrs. Woods are Democrats and Mrs. Woods is a member of the school board of the Ray district.

GEORGE MASON BANCROFT.—An energetic citizen of Woodbridge, to whom the community is much indebted, particularly for its fine new school-house, which was built under his supervision as clerk of the school board, is George Mason Bancroft, who was born in Caledonia County, Vt., on September 23, 1876. The family of his father, Parker Bancroft, dates back to colonial days; the great historian, George Bancroft, being a cousin. Parker Bancroft married Miss Mary Ann Morrison, whose family are associated with some of the most interesting annals of Maine. He was a merchant, who died while they were living in New Hampshire, when George was only three years old; and as Mrs. Bancroft also passed away there, the lad had to get his education as best he could. At first he worked on farms in Vermont and New Hampshire, and later took work at the Groton, Vt. Mills. In 1899 he came to California, and to Acampo. Near there he labored for awhile as a ranch hand; and then, going to San Francisco, took a job with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, in the maintenance of way department, covering the line from Ashland, Ore., to El Paso, Tex., on all parts of the Western Division.

He spent twenty-three years with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company.

Notwithstanding these necessary migrations and temporary residences elsewhere, Mr. Bancroft has always made his home at Woodbridge since he came here. In 1903 he bought a vineyard of fifteen acres, and later acquired a vineyard of twenty acres south of Woodbridge, both of which are finely irrigated.

At Woodbridge, on June 15, 1902, Mr. Bancroft was married to Miss Flora May Shinn, a native of that town, and the daughter of H. D. and Emma Shinn. Her father was an honored pioneer of the state. Mrs. Bancroft completed her education at the San Joaquin Valley College, where she was a proficient student. Three children have blessed their union: Raymond Ellwood, now aged eighteen; Elizabeth, aged thirteen; and Clarence, aged ten. Mr. Bancroft is a Republican in matters of national political import. He is at present clerk of the school board of the Woodbridge district, and has had direct supervision of the building of the new school, at a cost of about $60,000, designed to accommodate 200 or more pupils. It is modern in every respect, and will be thoroughly up-to-date in its equipment. Mr. Bancroft is a Mason, belonging to the Woodbridge Lodge, and is also a member of the Odd Fellow Lodge and Encampment at Lodi, and has gone through all the chairs of the lodge. Mrs. Bancroft shares her husband's popularity; and they are untiring in their efforts to better the social life of their community.

EDWARD H. BARBER.—Edward H. Barber, who for the past seventeen years has been a justice of the peace of Union Township, has been a staunch advocate of better schools and a director of the Galt Union high school since 1912. He was born in Summer Hill, Cayuga, N. Y., December 26, 1867, a son of George H. and Caroline (Potter) Barber. The father was a farmer by occupation, who brought his family to California in the fall of 1874 and first farmed on the old Stevenson ranch near Stockton, where he remained for one year; then removed to Sebastopol, Sonoma County, where he bought ninety acres at fifty-five dollars per acre near the town limits. After paying a few hundred dollars on this ranch, he became discouraged and gave it up and removed with his family to Taison, San Joaquin County. The Sebastopol ranch is now within the city limits of that town, and is very valuable property. The father rented the R. B. Thompson dairy, which he conducted for two years, then purchased 100 acres 2½ miles northwest of Thornton, which is a portion of the property now owned and operated by our subject and his brother, George L. Barber. There were three children in the family: Edward H., our subject, being the eldest; George L., and Grace, Mrs. Beavis, residing in Detroit, Mich. The father passed away in 1907, aged seventy-seven, and the mother was fifty-one when she died.

Edward H. Barber began his schooling in the old five-mile school out of Stockton, where he went for one year; then he had a year's schooling at Sebastopol, two years at the Ray district school in San Joaquin County, and the balance of his grammar school education in the New Hope district school. Edward H. and his brother, George L., are equal partners in their ranching operations. They have added to their holdings until they now own 425 acres of fine land on the Mokelumne River, 2½ miles northwest of Thornton, which is devoted to raising beans, grain and general farming, and the brothers each conduct a dairy.

The marriage of Mr. Barber occurred on June 11, 1896, in Stockton, which united him with Miss Ada Marion Villette, a native of Hancock County, Mississippi, and a daughter of Henry and Ada (Breedlove) Villette. Her maternal grandfather was a Confederate soldier who died from the effects of exposure during the Civil War. Her mother was twice married, the first time to Harry Villette, who died in Louisiana. In 1886 Mrs. Villette and their only child, Ada Marion, came to California and settled in Stockton. Here her mother was married in 1887 to Henry Harrington, a harnessmaker. Her mother died in Thornton.

Mr. and Mrs. Barber are the parents of four children: Helen, Paul, Florence and Ada. Paul Barber recently married Miss May Culver of Stockton and at the present they make their home on the ranch and assist in its development. In 1904 Mr. Barber became a trustee of Reclamation District No. 348, embracing an acreage of 10,000 acres, and since 1906 has been justice of the peace for Union Township; he is also a member of the Thornton Farm Bureau, and since the founding of the Galt Union high school he has served as a director of same. In politics Mr. Barber is a staunch Republican, and Mrs. Barber is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Barber brothers also own 100 acres in the Yaqui River Valley, in the State of Sonora, Mexico, which is leased and which caused them considerable trouble during the recent revolution.

ARTHUR EMMETT GORDON.—A successful vineyardist is Arthur Emmett Gordon, a native of Wyandotte County, Kansas, now residing about two miles north of Acampo. In the historic Centennial Year of 1876, on December 28, he entered the family of M. A. and Belle (Llyons) Gordon, the son of a stock and cattle-man, who was also a merchant and a farmer. The family removed to Kokomo, Colo., where his father built the first sawmill in that region. Later they removed to Bellevue, Idaho, in which locality his father engaged in stock-raising. He then moved northwest to Portland, Ore., and there the family lived between seven and eight years, finally migrating south and landing at Woodbridge. Here the lad attended the Lodi high school. Mr. Gordon lived to be seventy-three years old, survived by his wife, who is still alive at the age of sixty-five. Eight children made up the family of this worthy couple. Bert, the eldest, is deceased; Arthur Emmett was the second-born; and then came Harry, Frank, Grace, Vera, Phillip and Ruth.

In 1895 Arthur Emmett Gordon began to clerk for M. B. Henderson & Son, of Stockton; and later he was bookkeeper for Messrs. Hammond and Yardley, also of that city, with whom he remained seven years. He then bought an interest in C. B. Thompson's grocery, in Stockton, and after two years of experience with it, purchased the entire business, and conducted it until 1917, when he sold out.

Previous to selling his business, he had purchased some thirty acres of open land two miles north of Acampo, where he set out a vineyard, and in 1917 he traded his residence in Stockton for fifteen acres of vineyard, adjoining his first place. One-quarter of this area he has devoted to orcharding, and the entire tract is well irrigated. He built a small home on his ranch, into which he moved in 1917.

At Lodi, on June 3, 1903, Mr. Gordon married Miss Amy Geffroy, a native of Lodi and the daughter of Thomas and Hannah (Hammond) Geffroy. She attended the Lodi schools. Her father has passed away, but her mother is still alive. Her father and mother, of good Boston stock, came to California in early days, and her father raised sheep near Lockeford, in San Joaquin County. Later he moved to Lodi, and there Miss Amy was graduated with honors from the Lodi high school. Five children have blessed the union. Dorothy and Kenneth are students in the Lodi high school; Neil and Joyce are pupils in the grammar school; and Barbara is the youngest. Mr. Gordon is a Republican, and a member of Charity Lodge, I. O. O. F., in which he is a past-grand.

PHILLIP J. GOEHRING.—A successful vineyardist who is residing on his fifty-acre vineyard home, located a mile and a half southeast of Victor, is Phillip J. Goehring, a self-made man, whose success has come to him entirely through his own labor and carefully directed efforts. He was born in McIntosh County, N. D., on July 9, 1892, a son of John and Elizabeth (Bertsch) Goehring, the former coming to America from Neudorf, South Russia, his birthplace, and the latter a native of Bergdorf, South Russia. His father passed away in North Dakota about twenty years ago, while the mother still resides there. They were the parents of eight children: John, Jacob, Christina and Fred, Gottlieb, Phillip J., our subject, Maggie and Martin.

The education of Phillip J. Goehring was limited to about five months, and he was obliged to assume his share of the farm work. Shortly after becoming of age, he began to earn his own way, and went to Idaho, where he homesteaded 320 acres of land, on which he raised grain and stock, for four years.

Mr. Goehring's first marriage occurred while living in Idaho, on February 4, 1914, and united him with Miss Martha Bertsch, a native of South Russia, a daughter of Henry Bertsch. She passed away in 1916 in Idaho. In January, 1917, Mr. Goehring made a trip to Lodi, Cal., where he was married to Miss Christine Knoll, born in Russia, a daughter of Jacob Knoll. Her father came to California about fifteen years ago from South Dakota and settled at Victor, where he purchased a vineyard and had added to it from time to time until he is now one of the wealthiest citizens of San Joaquin County. After their marriage the young couple returned to Mr. Knoll's ranch in Idaho and continued farming until the early fall of 1917, when they returned to Lodi to locate. He traded his ranch for ten acres, his present vineyard home, and since then he has added by purchase 30 acres more, and Mrs. Goehring received a gift of ten acres from her father,—all devoted to vineyard and alfalfa. In April, of 1921, Mr. Goehring purchased forty-nine acres at the intersection of the Cherokee and Lockeford roads, which was an old almond orchard, with the exception of ten acres in prunes. Mr. Goehring decided to take out all the almond trees and planted vines, but left the prune orchard. Soon after buying this tract, he sold five acres for $2,000 per acre, which left forty-four acres, thirty of which are planted to Tokay grapes.

So now he owns and operates ninety-four acres. Mr. and Mrs. Goehring are the parents of five children: Emma, Reuben, Levi; Elsie and Elmer are twins. He is a Republican in politics; he and his family are members of the First German Baptist Church in Lodi.

JOHN B. GOTELLI.—A farmer and vineyardist residing five miles north of Stockton on Cherokee Lane is John B. Gotelli, who is a native son of the Golden State and has made his permanent home in San Joaquin County for the past eighteen years. He was born in San Francisco, March 10, 1889, a son of Antonio and Maria (Camicha) Gotelli, both natives of Italy, born near Parma. Antonio Gotelli came to California in 1883, and in San Francisco in 1888, he married Miss Maria Camicha; later he became an extensive truck gardener in the Mission district of San Francisco, where he bought and rented tracts of land for that purpose. He had several partners in the business and they regularly employed thirty men in the cultivation, gathering and marketing of vegetables. In the wholesaling and retailing of produce they used many teams and wagons. Selling out his holdings in San Francisco, in 1904 the family came to Stockton, and Antonio Gotelli took the contract of planting 150 acres of the old Charles M. Weber Grant to vineyard, the compensation for his labor to be seventy-five acres of this 150-acre tract of land; this ranch is under the Stockton-Mokelumne irrigation ditch. After cultivating the vineyard for five years, he obtained title as per agreement to seventy-five acres from Miss Julia H. Weber. He continued to run the place until 1914, when he rented it to his son, John B., and retired to his home at 929 North Ophir street, Stockton, where he passed away October 22, 1920, aged 62 years. He was a man who had done much to build up the horticultural interests in California. When he came to America, he was in debt $125.00. He worked in a vegetable garden for 33 months at $25.00 a month, and during all this time did not leave the ranch to go to town. He saved his money and paid his honest debts, and continuing by industry and frugality he was able at the end of five years to purchase an interest in vegetable gardens. Afterwards increasing his interest, he demonstrated his ability as a business man and in time became the manager, after which the business grew rapidly so that the partners received as dividends 300 per cent more than formerly. He was a man of much native ability and diplomacy and kept the partners together for nine years. While he was manager, the business ran along smoothly, but after he sold out dissensions arose and in less than a year all of the rest of the partners disposed of their business.

In Italy while a young man Mr. Gotelli served 33 months in an Alpine regiment in the Italian army, being stationed on the border, and during all this time he was never disciplined. His widow survives him at the age of fifty-five. There are eight children in the family, of whom John B., our subject, is the eldest; Mary is Mrs. Nave, and she resides in San Francisco; A. Nathaniel; Joseph, Frederick and Louis reside in Stockton; Jennie is Mrs. Virgil Azzaro, traveling in Europe, and Hazel lives at home. John B. Gotelli received his education in the San Francisco grammar schools and accompanied his parents to Stockton, San Joaquin County, January 7, 1905. On his arrival here he assisted his father in his vineyard enterprise, continuing with him until 1914. He leased the vineyard, and since then he has engaged in viticulture. On the death of his father, John B. became the administrator and now manages the estate. He is also interested in other properties, including both ranch and city real estate.

On January 3, 1915, in Stockton, Mr. Gotelli was married to Miss Louise S. Figone, a native of Stockton, and a daughter of John and Louise (Marengo) Figone, both parents natives of Genoa, Italy. Her father was an early settler in San Joaquin County and farmed for a number of years on the islands; he now lives in Stockton and is a glassblower for the Stockton Glass Factory. There are four children in the Figone family: Jennie, Mrs. Rossi, resides in Stockton; Theresa, Mrs. A. Nathaniel Gotelli; Louise S., Mrs. John B. Gotelli; Frank resides at Stockton. In 1915 Mr. Gotelli replaced the old house his father had placed on the ranch many years ago with a modern residence on their beautiful seventy-five acre vineyard of Tokay, Black Prince and Mission grapes. He is a Republican in politics and is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and also a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., while Mrs. Gotelli is a member of Joaquin Parlor No. 5, N. D. G. W. His brother, Nathaniel, married Miss Theresa Figone, a sister of Mrs. Gotelli. Mr. and Mrs. Gotelli have always been upright and honorable and enjoy the respect and confidence of their many friends in San Joaquin County.

AUGUST HANSEN.—A very industrious, progressive and successful orchardist is August Hansen, who was born at Stepping, in Holstein, Denmark, on June 6, 1869, the son of John and Magdalena (Sorensen) Hansen, highly-esteemed citizens of that prosperous country. His father was a farmer, but he was also for many years postmaster at Stepping. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen had seven children, among whom August was the eldest; the others being John, Anna, Magdalena, and Doris, and two deceased.

August attended the excellent public schools of Denmark, and when sixteen started to learn the creamery trade. A year later, he came out to America. He first went to Nevada, and for five years worked for one man at Carson City; and then, moving farther west to California, he settled at Santa Rosa and took out his final citizenship papers in Sonoma County. He purchased forty acres near Santa Rosa, devoted to grapes and prunes, and some apples and peaches, and after five years in Sonoma County, he sold out and came to San Joaquin County, where he bought fifteen acres of open land in the Elliott section, about one mile to the south and one mile to the east of the old Elliott schoolhouse. There he set six acres out to almonds, and built a comfortable, attractive home, and also all the necessary farm out-buildings. Two years ago he added ten acres to his holdings, making twenty-five acres in his fine ranch tract, not a bad showing, surely, for one who came to San Joaquin County only seven years ago.

At Santa Rosa, on May 1, 1892, Mr. Hansen was married to Miss Christina Jepsen, who came from the vicinity of his Danish birthplace, and is the daughter of Mathias and Gertrude Jepsen. She attended the adjoining school to which Mr. Hansen in his boyhood had been sent, and she came to California three years prior to the date of her marriage. Three children were born from their fortunate union. Dorothy is married to Harry Graham at Port Costa; Pauline also lives at Port Costa; and Mabel is attending the University of Iowa. Mrs. Hansen passed away at Reno, Nev., in 1902, beloved and mourned by all who knew her.

At the present time, Mr. Hansen is foreman of the famous Henderson Ranch on Dry Creek, north of Elliott, a fine estate belonging to J. E. Finnell of Sacramento; a tract of 436 acres, being set out to vineyard and orchard, and at present operated very successfully under Mr. Hansen's experienced guidance as a dairy ranch. Mr. Hansen spent two years farming in Nevada, near Reno, just after he moved from Santa Rosa, so that he came from Nevada to San Joaquin County. While living at Reno, he served as a school trustee, and belonged to the I. O. O. F. He is a Republican.

MRS. EMILY M. HARRIS.—An esteemed lady long resident in Stockton, whose accomplishments in the management of her estate have entitled her to the confidence and esteem of her fellow-citizens, is Mrs. Emily M. Harris, now living at 111 North Tuxedo street. As Emily M. Dees, she was the popular daughter of Daniel R. Dees, an overseer of Arkansas plantations, having been born in Sebastian County, on Saint Valentine's Day, 1852; her mother was Lucy Allison before her marriage.

In 1857, Daniel Dees crossed the great plains bound for California, and after arriving, he settled for awhile at Petaluma, where he bought a ranch, a part of an old Spanish grant, and looked forward to making his home there; but when the grant-holders contested the title, he lost all he had invested. He then migrated from place to place for awhile, and finally settled at Carson City, Nev., where he became a mine superintendent. He passed away there.

Partly as a result of these migrations, Emily Dees went to school in various places; and if she fared none too well because of such changes in her schools and programs, she at least came to know a good number and an interesting variety of teachers. There were nine children besides herself in her parents' family, but only four are living today. Allison D. and Joel D. are in Nevada; Lewis is in Los Angeles; and Emily, or Mrs. Harris, is the subject of our interesting story.

On May 6, 1867, Emily was married at Marysville to Edward Harris, who had been born in Indiana on September 15, 1841. His parents were John and Lucinda Harris, and their forebears may be traced back through the pioneer days of the Hoosier State to good old Revolutionary stock. As a young man, in 1859 Edward Harris made the journey overland across the plains, remaining only until the breaking out of the Civil War, when, being patriotic to the core, he returned East by the Pony Express, and on his arrival at his old home he enlisted in Company D., 5th Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, serving throughout the war in General Sherman's cavalry in the Georgia campaign and on the march to the sea. He was captured and as a prisoner was sent to Andersonville. After the great struggle was over, he returned to California and set up his household gods for two years on the old Messick Rancho near Marysville. He and his good wife then removed to Stockton, and he farmed for many years in the Delta lands, Roberts Island, carrying on his operations of grain-raising extensively. On March 9, 1917, he passed away, an honored member of the Rawlins Post of the Grand Army of the Republic.

For the last thirty-seven years, Mrs. Harris has made her home in Stockton, and five children have added to her earthly pleasures. Jean has become Mrs. James Gianelli; Lucy is a teacher; William is at Clements; Edward F. is of Stockton; and Gay is Mrs. Youdall, of the same city. There are now nine grandchildren. Mrs. Gianelli is the mother of Norma and Jack; William's daughter is named Emily Martha; Lowell and Jean are the two children of Edward F. Harris; and Gay Youdall's four children are named Leonard Harris, Harris Hugh, Edward Dees, and Peter Gaylen.

GEORGE COURTRIGHT.—One of the well-known and respected citizens of Lodi is George Courtright, a man who throughout his active business life has been prominently identified with agricultural interests. He was born near Bodega Corners, Sonoma County, Cal., on February 26, 1858, a son of John P. and Pernina (Frowe) Courtright, both parents natives of Illinois. The father crossed the plains in 1851 and spent two years in the mines, when he returned to Illinois and married Miss Pernina Frowe and returned immediately to California settling at Ione, where he engaged in mining for about four years; then removed to Sonoma County. In 1864 the family returned to Ione. The father spent many years going from place to place, mining and prospecting until his death at the age of seventy-five years. Besides the subject of this sketch there were Clark and Anna Courtright. The mother passed away at the age of sixty-nine years.

George Courtright was thrown upon his own resources at the tender age of ten years, when he worked for wages and helped to support his mother. As he grew older he saved his money and in time bought land until finally he had accumulated 520 acres near Jackson, Amador County, which was mostly devoted to raising hay; he also raised from seventy-five to 120 head of stock with from fifteen to twenty head of horses. The place had mineral deposits of gold, copper and chrome, but Mr. Courtright, outside of mining chrome ore during the war, engaged in farming and stockraising.

The marriage of Mr. Courtright occurred on November 13, 1900, at Reno, Nev., and united him with Miss Lida Brick, a native of Alameda, Cal. She was a babe in arms when her parents died and was reared by adopted parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Brick. Her adopted father was a jeweler by trade and moved about considerably, so that Mrs. Courtright as she grew up attended school at Alameda, Oakland, Napa and various places in Colorado. Mr. and Mrs. Courtright are the parents of two children: Norma, Mrs. Coleman, of Los Angeles; and Martha L. They made their home on the ranch at Ione until 1919 when they sold it and removed to Lodi where Mr. Courtright bought three acres in the Barnhart tract on Stockton Street; here he erected four houses, the family occupying one, while the other three are rented. In national politics Mr. Courtright is a Republican, and fraternally is a member of the Odd Fellows, belonging to Truth Lodge of Stockton since 1892, and with his wife and daughter is a member of the Rebekahs; he is also a member of the N. S. G. W. at Jackson, Cal.

WILLIAM HARVEY CROSWHITE.—Well known in the business circles of Lodi is William Harvey Crowwhite, an efficient and capable optometrist who also engages in the manufacture of optical goods. A native of Washington, he was born at Goldendale July 28, 1893, a son of George P. and Jennie (Barrick) Crowwhite. The father was born in New York, where he was reared and educated, and after reaching young manhood engaged in farming; he married Miss Jennie Barrick, a native of Missouri, and they were the parents of three children, of whom William Harvey is the eldest, the others being Ernest and George, Jr. When William Harvey was a small boy of six years his parents removed to San Francisco, where the father engaged in the produce business, and there the parents still reside. William Harvey attended the old Richmond district grammar school and the San Francisco Y. M. C. A. high school, then entered the College of Optometry, from which he was graduated in 1914. Before his graduation he was associated with F. A. Hardy and the California Optical Company, retailers and wholesalers of optical supplies. Mr. Crowwhite then opened his own business in San Francisco and continued for three years.

The marriage of Mr. Crowwhite in San Francisco, on February 3, 1915, united him with Miss Bessie Kenny, a native of the Bay city, and daughter of W. R. and Eliza T. Kenny. W. R. Kenny came to California in an early day and engaged in the contracting and building business. Her mother and father are now living at Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Crowwhite are the parents of one daughter, Olive Marie. In 1920 Mr. Crowwhite came to Lodi where he established offices for the practice of optometry and the manufacture of optical goods. Mr. Crowwhite gives his support to the Republican party and is active in fraternal circles, being a member of the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World, and a past patron of the O. E. S., of which his wife is also a member.

AUGUST FRED DEGENER.—A practical farmer of the Lafayette Hall district of San Joaquin County is August Fred Degener who is the owner of a fine twenty-five acre ranch five miles west of Lodi. He was born in Bremen, Germany, December 21, 1880, a son of Fredrick and Caroline Degener, both born and reared in Germany. When our subject was a year old his parents came to America and settled at Baltimore, Md., where the father plied his trade of shoemaker and ran a store. He passed away when August was six years old; then the mother moved to San Francisco, where she made her home and worked until she married John C. Blohm, and they moved to Stockton in 1892.

August Fred Degener received his education in the grammar schools of San Francisco, Redwood City and Stockton, and resided with his mother until he was fourteen years old when he concluded to quit school and go to work for himself. For five years he worked for wages on the ranches in the vicinity of Stockton. With his earnings he then bought fifteen acres on the lower Sacramento Road which he developed, setting ten acres to vines, and he still owns that property; in 1905 he purchased twenty-five acres of stubble land one-half mile north of Lafayette Hall and immediately set about to improve it. Ten acres is set to vineyard, one acre to orchard, and the balance is grain land; it is further improved with a good set of buildings. On one of his places he has a four-inch pump and a seven and a half-horsepower motor for irrigation and the other place is under the Woodbridge-Mokelumne irrigation ditch.

On May 20, 1915, at Lodi, Mr. Degener was married to Miss Getha Mac Fowler, a daughter of Charles and Catherine Fowler; the father is a prominent magistrate of Kingman, Kans., and is serving as city commissioner of that city; he also conducts a poultry farm in that locality. Mr. and Mrs. Degener are the parents of one daughter, Caroline Catherine. In politics Mr. Degener is a Republican and fraternally is a charter member of Hermann Sons of Lodi. During his long residence in San Joaquin County he has acquired a wide circle of acquaintances and by perseverance and determination has gained a place among the substantial agriculturists of his community.

DAVID FINKBOHNER.—A farmer and stock-raiser, who is also a native son of San Joaquin County, is David Finkbohner, who for the past fifteen years has been in partnership with his brother in conducting a 260-acre grain and stock ranch situated seven miles northwest of Stockton on Telegraph Road. He was born in Stockton, July 10, 1873, a son of Jacob and Barbara (Kuhn) Finkbohner. His parents were born in Germany, married in the East, and crossed the plains to California. They were early settlers of San Joaquin County, and their nine children, six of whom are living, were as follows: George, residing in Stockton; Barbara, of Oakland; Charles, of Stockton; Sophia Estelle, of Santa Cruz; Frank and Benjamin, both deceased; Fred, in Oakland; William, deceased; and David, of this sketch.

David Finkbohner was a young lad when his parents died, and he was reared by an aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Kuhn, in Salt Springs Valley, Calaveras County, where he attended school. At seventeen years of age he began to make his own way, working for wages on various ranches throughout California until 1907, when he returned to San Joaquin County and went into partnership with his brother in ranching. They are engaged in raising grain and stock, and also have a Tokay vineyard on the ranch.

On July 13, 1905, at Jamestown, Cal., Mr. Finkbohner was married to Mrs. Ella (Gann) Hendsch, a native of Salt Spring Valley, Calaveras County, and a daughter of Andrew Jackson and Frances Ellen (Rountree) Gann, the former a native of Tennessee, who came across the plains with ox teams in 1860, and joined his two brothers, who had previously settled in California. Jack Gann, as he was known, first settled at Farmington, where he engaged in the stock business. He moved to Calaveras about 1874. Mrs. Finkbohner has one sister, Emma, now Mrs. August May, residing at Angels Camp. The mother was born in Wisconsin and passed away at the age of thirty-six. Subsequently, Mr. Gann was married to Miss Ida Bence, by whom he had four children: William, Edith, Bell (Mrs. Charles Pope, residing in Turlock), and May, deceased at the age of fifteen years. Jack Gann passed away at the age of sixty-two, while his widow is still living at 303 East Arcade Street, Stockton. By her former marriage, Mrs. Finkbohner had one son, Henry Hendsch, who resides in Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Finkbohner are the parents of two children, Frank Edmund and Doris. Mr.

Finkbohner, while residing in Calaveras County, was school trustee of the Hodson school for many years, and he is now serving as one of the directors of the Elkhorn school district.

HENRY A. FISCHER.—Born in New York City, August 14, 1855, Henry A. Fischer has been a resident of California since he was two years of age. He is a son of Gotlob and Margaret Fischer, natives of Bavaria, Germany, who emigrated to New York City. In 1857 Mr. Fischer brought his wife and little son Henry to California, coming via the Isthmus of Panama route to San Francisco. He was a basketmaker by trade. In 1860, however, he located in Peach Tree Valley, sixty miles south of Gilroy, where he followed sheepraising until 1863; then he changed his range to Hunting Hollow and Gilroy Hot Springs. However, the dry season of 1864 caused him a very heavy loss and he moved back to San Francisco. He and his wife resided there until their death.

Henry, the eldest of their six children, received a good education in the public schools in San Francisco. When eighteen years old he quit school to go to work in a shoe factory and learning the manufacture of shoes he worked for different concerns. In 1879 he removed to Calaveras County and there followed mining and prospecting until 1889, when he located in Stockton, where he worked at the carpenter trade. He then spent eight years with the Street Railway Company in Stockton, after which he worked for his son, who was a member of the firm of The Fischer Marble and Tile Company, continuing with him for some years, until in 1920 he entered the employ of the park department of the street department of the city, and is now in charge of Liberty Park, a position he is filling acceptably and well.

Mr. Fischer owns a comfortable residence at 1314 East Sonora Street, where he resides with his family. He was married in Calaveras County, Cal., to Miss Mary R. Prince, a native of that county, a daughter of B. R. Prince, one of the early settlers of Calaveras County. Mr. Fischer was bereaved of his faithful wife in December, 1920, a woman who was much loved and deeply mourned by her family and friends. Their union had been blessed with two children, H. P. Fischer and Mrs. Ethel V. Wykoff, both residing in Stockton. Mr. Fischer is to all intents and purposes a native son, for California is the scene of his first recollections, as he came here a little child of two years, so practically all of his life has been passed within the borders of the Golden State. He is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood. His religious affiliation is with the Episcopal Church and politically he is a Democrat.

JOSEPH L. FOCACCI.—A well-known native son of San Joaquin County who is residing on the ranch where he was born is Joseph L. Focacci, a successful carpenter and farmer. He was born on his father's ranch at Lodi, Cal., March 17, 1885, a son of John and Mary Focacci, both natives of Northern Italy. In 1879 John Focacci left his native country and came to the United States and direct to California and worked for a year in San Francisco, then came to Lodi, where he purchased four and a half acres in the Ayers tract; later he purchased eleven acres across the road from his home place; and his sons added another eleven acres, which was later sold to the city of Lodi and the Emerson schoolhouse now stands on a portion of

it. Six children were born to this pioneer couple: Columbia, Mrs. Chris Denevi, resides in Lodi; John lives in Galt, Cal.; Mathew is a merchant in Lodi; Joseph L. is the subject of this sketch; Louis and Charles. The father was an employee of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Lodi and was fifty-five years old when he passed away in 1899. The mother is now sixty-nine years old and resides on the ranch purchased by her husband in 1880.

Joseph L. Focacci received his education at the district school near his home and when young in years received valuable lessons in agriculture, assisting his father on the home place. He learned the trade of carpenter and has followed his trade for many years in Lodi, where he is well known for his reliability and industry. He is a Republican in politics and he makes his home with his mother at 429 West Lockeford Avenue, Lodi. The family is well known in the community where the family home has so long been maintained and Mr. Focacci has contributed to the material development and substantial upbuilding of his portion of the state.

GEORGE R. GARRETSON.—An early settler who has seen much of California grow from a wilderness and who is, therefore, a natural lover of the Golden State, is George R. Garretson, a resident of San Joaquin County for the past thirty-seven years. He was born at Bedford, Pa., on April 28, 1845, a son of Aaron and Hannah (Miller) Garretson, both natives of Pennsylvania, whose ancestors were pioneers of that state, all engaged in farming pursuits. His father passed away in 1848 and George grew up on the home farm, the youngest in a family of ten children. The mother lived to be ninety-two years old.

George R. attended the district schools of the county and grew to young manhood on the farm. At the outbreak of the Civil War he volunteered for services in Company H, 55th Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry; later he served in Company G, 101st Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and was a member of the Army of the Potomac. He served under Generals Grant and Butler, and during April, 1862, was at Yorktown under General McClellan. On September 29, 1864, he was wounded at Chapin's Farm, near Richmond, and was sent to Fortress Monroe and then to New York; then was granted a furlough to go home to Iowa, whither his mother and family had removed and settled near Cedar Rapids. He left New York with twenty-five cents in his pocket for Iowa on furlough, during which time he had the great privilege of casting his first vote for Lincoln in 1864; he then returned to his regiment and was at Appomatox Court House when Lee surrendered; he was also in the Battle of Williamsburg and the Seven Days' Battle. During September of 1865 he was discharged at Richmond and was mustered out of service at Harrisburg, Pa., where he had enlisted. Returning to his home in Iowa he remained there until December 28, 1869, when he was married to Miss Lavinia C. Lanning, a native of Ohio, a daughter of Martin Lanning, who had removed to Iowa when she was two years old. Martin Lanning became an extensive farmer of Iowa.

After their marriage the young people removed to Phillips County, Kans., and preempted a quarter-section of land; later he bought a section of school land, his entire farm holdings amounting to about 800 acres. Here he engaged in general farming and stockraising for five years, during which time he conducted a butcher shop in Phillipsburg. In 1874 he made a trip to California, but it was not until 1885 that he brought his family to reside permanently in the Golden State. He first settled at Woodbridge, remaining there for one and a half years, when he settled in Lockeford, where he has continuously resided. He purchased a twenty-acre ranch about one mile from Lockeford on the Stockton road, on which he raises alfalfa and stock. Twenty-six years ago he was elected justice of the peace of Lockeford and has served in that capacity ever since to the entire satisfaction of the people of the community. During his tenure of office he has received eight notarial commissions from eight different California governors. His years of active service as an official have been the most enjoyable of his life and his duties have been performed with a faithfulness and thoroughness characteristic of all his actions. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Garretson: Elveda, Mrs. Hevey of Brentwood, has one son, Edward, a teacher at Stanford University; Lulu is Mrs. Reynolds, of Los Angeles; Rolla Lee is principal of the Lafayette grammar school in Stockton. Mr. Garretson as a Republican has taken an active interest in national politics, and has always worked hard for civic improvements. Fraternally he is a member of the Masonic order of Lodi.

CLAUDE ELMO FORE.—A young and enterprising farmer of the Lafayette district of San Joaquin County may be found in Claude Elmo Fore, who is successfully farming a forty-acre tract of land on the Sargent Road, four miles west of Lodi. He was born at Clements, September 18, 1890, a son of Millard Henry and Eliza Demoretta (Miner) Fore, both natives of Missouri, whose sketch will be found elsewhere in this history.

Claude Elmo Fore attended the Woodbridge school for one year; then his parents moved to Clements and he attended the Athearn school for two years; then the family removed to Butte County, where they farmed 2,250 acres of land near Biggs, and here he finished his education. In 1904 the family moved back to Woodbridge, where they have since resided. The father passed away in 1909, while the mother is still living on her ten-acre ranch two miles west of Lodi on the Kelly Road. At twenty-one years of age Claude Elmo Fore left home to make his own way, and for five years was employed in the shipping department of the Holt Manufacturing Company at Stockton. He then returned to Lodi, and on June 6, 1916, was married to Miss Nellie Agnes Posey, a native of San Joaquin County, daughter of John M. Posey, also represented in this history. Mrs. Fore attended the Turner district school and was later graduated from the Lodi high school. Mr. and Mrs. Fore are the parents of three children: Claude Elmo, Jr., Burdette Marion, and Dorothy Lorraine.

Since his marriage Mr. Fore has had charge of the forty-acre vineyard belonging to his father-in-law, and since 1918 has resided on the ranch. He is a Democrat in his political affiliations, and fraternally is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and of Jefferson Lodge No. 98, I. O. O. F., Woodbridge. While in the employ of the Holt Company and residing in Stockton, he became a charter member of Battery C., National Guard of California, serving a term of three years, till mustered out. Public progress, as manifested in material, educational and social advancement, is a matter of deep interest to him and he gives earnest support to every measure which he believes will contribute to the general good.

JOHN W. FARSCHON.—For a third of a century John W. Farschon has been a resident of Ripon and for the past twenty-eight years has conducted a blacksmith shop in this thriving town. In all his relations with his fellowmen he has been so straightforward and reliable that he commands in high degree their respect and confidence. He was born in Chicago, Ill., July 29, 1870, the youngest son of Sebastian and Catherine (Chambers) Farschon, natives of France and Ireland, respectively. Sebastian Farschon was born in Alsace-Lorraine, France, and in young manhood served in the French army until 1860, when he came to America and settled in Illinois. He married Miss Catherine Chambers, a native of County Mayo, Ireland, who had preceded her future husband to America, but who had at first settled in Canada, later removing to Illinois. They were the parents of five children and in 1877 the family removed to Kendall County, Texas. After a residence of ten years in Texas the father passed away and the mother brought her family to California, locating at Selma, and there John W., our subject, worked at the blacksmith's trade, which he had learned while living in Texas. In 1889 the family located in Ripon where the mother now resides, and where has been the family home for thirty-three years.

John W. Farschon first located in Westley and bought a half interest in a business there, but remained only a short time when he returned to Ripon and opened a blacksmith shop which he conducted for twenty-eight years. Through the years Mr. Farschon has been an eyewitness to the wonderful development of the Ripon section of San Joaquin County and has taken no small part in its advancement. He has supported men and measures that, in his best judgment, would be most beneficial to the community's welfare. He has served as a school trustee and is a staunch friend of the best educational facilities and in politics is a Republican.

The marriage of Mr. Farschon occurred at Ripon and united him with Miss Blanche Irene Nutt, and they are the parents of two children: Alice F., who is now Mrs. Percy Buchanan, resides in Folsom, Sacramento County, and they have three sons: Stanley, Robert, and William. Orville Farschon, a machinist, also lives at Folsom.

ANDREW GOMES.—A well-known citizen of San Joaquin County, where he has lived for almost fifty years, is Andrew Gomes, who resides on his thirty-four-acre ranch eight miles southwest of Lodi, where he is engaged in raising alfalfa and stock. He was born in San Jose, Cal., November 27, 1862, a son of Joseph and Lillian Gomes. Joseph Gomes was born in Chihuahua, Mexico, and came to California when a young man, settling at San Jose, where he engaged in farming pursuits; later the family removed to Vallejo, Cal.

Andrew Gomes attended the grammar school in San Jose and left home when he was thirteen years old and came to Lodi, where he worked on various ranches in that vicinity for a number of years. His marriage on December 23, 1897, at Lodi, united him with Miss Charlotte Leetzow, born on her father's ranch six miles west of Lodi, a daughter of the pioneers Gottfried and Mary Leetzow. Gottfried Leetzow came to the Turner district of San Joaquin County in an early day where he acquired valuable land and engaged in general farming. Mrs. Gomes is the eldest of a family of three children, the others being Bertha, Mrs. Spenker, residing in Lodi, and Max Leetzow, also residing in Lodi.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Gomes removed to the Waterloo district of San Joaquin County, where Mr. Gomes bought two acres for a home place. He was in the employ of the Wagner Meat Company of Stockton, where he remained for twenty-one years. At the end of this time he purchased his present ranch of thirty-four acres eight miles southwest of Lodi, which is devoted to the raising of alfalfa and on which he runs about forty head of stock; he has also built a small house on his ranch where the family reside. Some years before he bought his home place he had acquired forty acres on the highway four miles south of Kingdon. Mr. and Mrs. Gomes are the parents of three children: Fred, Nora and Verna. In politics Mr. Gomes is a Republican and through his honorable business dealings he has won the entire confidence of his fellow-citizens.

JOSEPH HARA.—A native son of California, Joseph Hara was born at Half Moon Bay, San Mateo County, March 19, 1871. His father, S. Hara, a native of Chile, was a pioneer of California, coming hither at the time of the great gold rush in 1850. For a time he followed mining and then located at Half Moon Bay. He married Josephine Garcia, who was born in Santa Clara County. The parents spent their last days in Stockton. They had a family of six children, of whom Joseph is the fourth. He was reared on the farm in San Mateo County, receiving his education in the local public schools.

In 1891 he accompanied his parents to San Joaquin County, leasing land on Union Island. They were reasonably successful at farming but they had three different floods on the island, so lost heavily each time. In 1907 Joseph Hara located in Stockton where he drove a team for Mr. Moran until 1910, when he entered the Department of Public Works of the city of Stockton under the superintendent of streets until 1914, when he was transferred to the park department. He has been in charge of Constitution Park since June, 1914, and takes great pride in its beautification and keeping it in clean and sanitary condition.

Mr. Hara was married in Stockton, being united with Miss Edith Wilson, who was born in San Francisco, and they make their home on North Pilgrim Street, with their only child, Ramona. Mr. Hara is a member of the U. P. E. C. and the Red Men, while politically he is a Democrat.

ALPHEUS M. HILL.—For the past quarter of a century Alpheus M. Hill has been a resident of California and for the past thirteen years has lived on his home place on South School Street just outside of the city limits of Lodi, which consists of two acres. He was born in Kent County, Mich., on June 22, 1862, a son of Albert C. Hill, a general farmer in Michigan. Our subject had the misfortune to lose his mother when he was two weeks old and he was one of five children, the others being, Herbert Henry, Ada, deceased, Ida May and Mattie D. The family finally settled in Shiawassee County, Mich., and what lit-education our subject received was obtained in the winter months in the district schools of that county. He assisted his father in the cultivation and development of his farm until he was twenty-five years old, when in 1888 he came to California. He settled in San Luis Obispo County about twenty miles east of Paso Robles, where he took up a homestead and a preemption, proving up on a half-section of Government land. Here he engaged in stockraising and farming for eight years, when he sold out and removed to San Joaquin County. About thirteen years ago he purchased his present home place of two acres on South School Street, on which he built a good residence. About the same time he and a partner bought thirty acres of bare land on Walnut Avenue one and a half miles southwest of Lodi, and this they set to vineyard; one year later his partner sold his interest and Mr. Hill became owner of the entire tract but he now has eight acres, which is in twenty-two-year-old Tokay grapes, there also being a good irrigating plant on the place, which insures a good crop of fine fruit each season.

On December 19, 1900, at Lodi, Mr. Hill was married to Miss Jessie Ray Chappell, a native daughter, born in Lodi, and a daughter of Henry and Salinda A. Chappell. Henry Chappell came to California in 1852 and for a short time engaged in mining, then farmed in the Lodi section, and Mrs. Hill received her education in the Salem school at Lodi and spent one year in the Lodi high school. Fraternaly Mr. Hill is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World of Lodi, and in politics is a Republican. When he located here there were but two places on the street, grain fields surrounded the town and South School Street had just been opened.

RAY L. JACOBS.—When Ray L. Jacobs was a lad of twelve years he came with his parents to Lodi, Cal., where he has since continuously resided and since 1911 has been successfully engaged in viticulture on his well-improved ten-acre ranch west of Woodbridge. He was born in Sauk County, Wis., July 21, 1888, a son of G. C. and E. E. (Post) Jacobs. The father was a veterinary surgeon, and after his removal to Lodi he successfully practiced his profession for many years and was a familiar figure in Lodi and vicinity. There were three children in the family, Ray L. being the eldest; the others are Etta, and a third child who died in infancy.

Ray L. Jacobs continued his education in the Lodi grammar school and remained at home with his parents until 1911, when he was married to Miss Ida Boucha, on January 29. She is the daughter of Lewis and Melvina Boucha, and she first saw the light of day on her father's ranch, about two miles west of Woodbridge, in the same house where she and her husband now reside. She is one of seven children and received her education in the Woodbridge grammar school. Mr. Jacobs' home place consists of ten acres, most of which is in bearing Tokay vineyard, with about one acre in wine grapes. There are also a number of Royal Ann cherry trees on the place, for family use. Mr. Jacobs is fortunate in owning a property that does not have to be irrigated, for the water level is but six feet below the surface; thus the moisture reaches the roots of the vines and makes them large, healthy and very productive. Politically he is an advocate of Republican principles, believing the platform of the party contains the best elements of good government; and fraternaly he is connected with the Eagle Aerie No. 848, of Lodi. There has been nothing sensational in his life record, but his entire career has been marked by steady progress that has resulted from diligence and perseverance.

JAMES GARFIELD KERR.—The enterprising proprietor of the harness shop in Lockeford, James Garfield Kerr, is a man whose force of character and determination have overcome many obstacles in reaping the success in life that is deservedly his. He was born in Lockeford, Cal., on July 30, 1880, a son of John Crawford and Eliza Ann (Stacy) Kerr. The father, John Crawford Kerr, came to California via Panama in 1851, and his first stay in Lockeford covered the short period of about six months; he then made a trip into Idaho, but returned to Lockeford in 1852, where he went to work for Mr. Athearn on the River place and later worked for Captain Holman. He then purchased a large piece of land in partnership with B. F. Langford on the south side of the Mokelumne River just west of Lockeford; later this property was divided and John C. Kerr took the upper 328 acres. This piece is now the property of N. H. Locke, whose sketch is also in this volume. John C. Kerr ran a threshing machine from 1867 until 1886; he also owned 160 acres in Calaveras County above West Point, and at Blue Mountain he controlled 1,700 acres of range land and had from 300 to 400 head of cattle on the ranch. There were four children in the family: James Garfield; John Alexander resides at Corcoran; Harriett Elizabeth died in 1920; and Joseph Thompson died in 1915. John C. Kerr was extensively engaged in stockraising and operated a dairy ranch for many years; he also raised large quantities of potatoes on the rich bottom land. He passed away in 1909 at the age of seventy-seven years. Mrs. Kerr died in 1919.

James Garfield Kerr was educated in the grammar school of Lockeford and when he was sixteen years old started out for himself and decided to learn the harnessmaker's trade. He served his apprenticeship in Lockeford for one year and the balance of it at Valley Springs; for eighteen months he worked for Van Voorhies & Company in Sacramento, then opened a shop of his own at Valley Springs, which he ran until 1904, when he located in Lockeford and engaged in dairying with his father until his father passed away. In 1911 he opened a harness shop in Lockeford, which he has continued to the present and has worked up a fine trade, all work being of the best grade and fully guaranteed.

The marriage of Mr. Kerr occurred at Valley Springs, Cal., on March 12, 1902, and united him with Miss Ella McCann, a native of Sacramento, Cal., a daughter of James and Julia (O'Hare) McCann. The father of Mrs. Kerr came to California from Canada in 1887, and after living in Sacramento for some time removed to Campo Seco, where Mrs. Kerr received her education. They are the parents of two sons, William and Raymond. Politically, Mr. Kerr is a Republican, and fraternaly is a member of Progressive Lodge No. 134, I. O. O. F., of Lockeford and is past grand; a member of the Vesper Lodge No. 94, Knights of Pythias of Lockeford and is past chancellor of that order. Mrs. Kerr is past noble grand of the Rebekah Lodge of Lockeford and is also a member of the Pythian Sisters and of the Native Daughters. Mr. Kerr is also identified with the Woodmen of the World of Stockton.

ABRAHAM KLINK.—Since 1893, Abraham Klink has resided continuously in San Joaquin County, where he worked on different ranches until 1904, when he purchased his present ranch of twenty-five acres four and a half miles west of Lodi. He is a native of Bavaria, Germany, born December 2, 1864, a son of Adam and Philipina (May) Klink. They were the parents of six children: Katie, at home in Germany; Philipina, Mrs. H. F. Beckman of Lodi; Abraham; Lena, deceased; Elizabeth, Mrs. Coyer, deceased; and George, a blacksmith residing in Germany. The father passed away in Germany in 1872; the mother still lives in that country.

Abraham received a good education, and when in his seventeenth year left home and came to America, where he became a cowboy, riding the range through Idaho, Nevada, Oregon and Wyoming. In 1881 he made his first trip to California, working for wages as a cowboy until 1896, during which time he drove cattle on the trail across the plains five different times. In 1893 he settled in San Joaquin County, where he worked for wages on various ranches throughout the county; then in 1904 he invested his savings in twenty-five acres of unimproved land about one-half mile north of Lafayette Hall; fifteen acres of this ranch he has set to vineyard and also has a small orchard. He has built a new house and there are other farm buildings on the place. Mr. Klink is a good judge of horses and for a number of years was engaged in buying and selling horses; he also teamed to the mines from Grizzly Flat to Stockton and Sacramento. He has never regretted his change of residence from the old world to the new, for he has found opportunities here whereby he has prospered and has gained a good home and the favorable regard of many friends.

CHARLES KNUDSEN.—A resident of California since 1895, Charles Knudsen was born on the Isle of Fyen, Denmark, on May 30, 1869, a son of Knud Lars and Eda Knudsen. The father was born in Upsi, Schleswig, Germany; later removing to Denmark, he became a prominent educator, and the greater portion of his life was spent in instructing the young of his native country. He reached the ripe old age of eighty-two, the mother living to be the same age. They were the parents of six children: August; Marie resides in San Francisco; Ida; Charles; Sophie and Helga.

Charles received a good education in the grammar schools of his native land, and at the age of twenty-two he came to the United States, going at once to Nebraska; in 1895 he came to Lockeford, San Joaquin County, Cal., and has since resided there. He secured work on the ranch of Dr. Barbour, where he remained for two years caring for an eighty-acre orchard; he then continued working for wages on various ranches until he had acquired a fund of useful knowledge regarding agriculture, then he rented eighty acres of land near Lockeford, which he farmed for several years. He then purchased twenty acres of open land about two miles from Lockeford on the Stockton Highway, thirteen acres of which he set to vineyard, being among the first to plant vines in this district.

The marriage of Mr. Knudsen occurred in the city of Stockton and united him with Miss Helen Bosson. Mrs. Knudsen is a native of Schleswig, Germany, and her father was one of the first soldiers drafted into the army in 1871 and lost his life in that war. She attended school in her native land, and when she was seventeen years old came to Iowa alone, remaining there about eight months; then removed to Nebraska, where she remained four months; then to California in 1886. She remained three years, then returned to Nebraska, and later came again to California. They are the parents of two sons: Lawrence is a bookkeeper with the Standard Oil Company at Lodi. During the late war he enlisted in the Marines and was sent to the Island of Guam, where he served for three years; then was released for reserve duty. He married Miss Bernice Brierly of Lodi. Arthur Knudsen is a student of dentistry in the University of California Dental College in San Francisco. Politically Mr. Knudsen is a Democrat.

ISAAC G. KRIEGER.—The owner and proprietor of a fine, modern garage at Lodi, Isaac G. Krieger has the agency for the Ford and Lincoln automobiles for Northern San Joaquin County. He is a progressive, enterprising and thoroughly up-to-date man of affairs, especially in his chosen line. He was born in Hastings, Neb., March 11, 1883, a son of George and Elizabeth (Miller) Krieger. The father was a stockraiser on a large scale. When Isaac was a small boy, the family removed to Kansas, where he attended grammar and high schools and later the Southern Normal College in Oklahoma. Isaac G. and a sister, Rachael, were the only children of this worthy couple. Both parents reside near Lodi at the present time. The family removed to Hitchcock, Okla., when Isaac G. was a young man, and during the eighteen years of his residence there he became a prominent and highly esteemed citizen, serving as mayor of the city, director of the school board, and during the World War was chairman of the Liberty Loan drive committee, as well as the chairman of the county Council of Defense. For eleven years, Mr. Krieger conducted a grain, insurance and mercantile business; then he went into the automobile business, owning and operating stores in four different places in Oklahoma, one at Fairview, one at Watonga, one at Hitchcock and one at Okcene.

The marriage of Mr. Krieger occurred at Hitchcock, Okla., on February 8, 1907, and united him with Miss Matilda Weitz, a native of that city, a daughter of G. B. Weitz, a machinist by trade, who is now deceased. Her mother is still living. There are six children in the family: Reuben, Manuel, Otto, Charles T., Andrew, and Matilda. Mrs. Krieger, Mr. and Mrs. Krieger are the parents of three children, Woodrow, Isaac Glen, Jr., and Thelma, and the family reside on South Cherokee street, Lodi. In 1919, Mr. Krieger removed with his family to Glendale, Cal., where he purchased a sixty-acre vineyard, but later sold it and removed to Lodi, where he soon established an agency for the Maxwell, Chalmers and Overland automobiles; then he purchased the automobile business of Mr. Seebe, which he has converted into a modern automobile house, having a floor space of 90x150 feet for the display of Ford and Lincoln automobiles, and his business is steadily assuming very satisfactory proportions. He is a Republican and a member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church in Lodi.

JACOB KURTZ.—Classed with the representative horticulturists of San Joaquin County, Jacob Kurtz was born in Bon Homme County, S. D., October 10, 1888, a son of Henry and Helen (Unruh) Kurtz. Henry Kurtz was born and reared in Germany, where he learned the harness-maker's trade. In young manhood he came to the United States and settled in South Dakota, where he homesteaded land. There he married and reared a family of eleven children, our subject being the fifth in order of birth. In 1903 he brought his family to California, and settling in San Joaquin County, he bought a ten-acre ranch near Woodbridge, where he resided until his death at the age of sixty-seven years. The mother is alive and resides in Lodi at the present time. Following are the names of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Kurtz: Henry, living in Montana; Carrie, Mrs. Geo. Moran, a widow, residing in Stockton; Edward, of Lodi; Anna, Mrs. Wm. Ditton of Fowler, Ind.; Jacob, the subject of this review; Mary, Mrs. G. A. Brown of Rio Vista, Cal.; Ruth, Mrs. Wm. Stitt of Stockton; Bertha, Mrs. Thomas Churchill of Yreka, Cal.; Albert, of Palo Alto; Herman, of Lodi; and Minnie, of Lodi.

Jacob Kurtz began his education in South Dakota, and after coming to California attended the Woodbridge public school. From youth up he has known no other business activity than general farming and fruit raising, and has gained a very large degree of success in this line.

The marriage of Mr. Kurtz occurred May 19, 1919, at Modesto, Cal., and united him with Miss Marie G. Lange, born in Lodi, Cal., and a daughter of John Lange. Her father was a farmer who owned a tract of land southeast of Lodi in the Beckman tract, and Mrs. Kurtz received her education in the Lodi grammar school and the Stockton Business College. Mrs. Kurtz is one of a family of seven children: William, Herman, Meta, now Mrs. Zomig of Lodi; Albert, John, Emma (deceased), and Marie G. Seven years ago, Mr. Kurtz bought his present place of sixty acres near Woodbridge, on which there is an apricot orchard of ten acres, six-year-old trees, well cared for and heavy producers; the balance of the land is in bearing vineyard. The ranch is under the Stockton-Mokelumne irrigation system. Mr. Kurtz has further improved his property with a fine modern bungalow. In politics he is a Republican, and with his wife he belongs to the Lutheran Church of Lodi.

THOMAS LANE.—A representative ranchman of San Joaquin County, prominent among the most successful stockmen in California, is Thomas Lane, a native son proud of his association with the Golden State, who was born near Kelseyville, Lake County, on October 8, 1875, the son of William and Anna (Rich) Lane, the former a native of England, who had the hardihood to come to California as a forty-niner, first going into the mines in Nevada County. He later came into Lake County and took up government land, acquiring 160 acres, which he used for the raising of stock. It thus happened that, under the careful guidance of his father, our subject thoroughly learned the stock business, while and after attending the Lake County schools.

When Thomas was fourteen years of age, his father removed to Amador County, where he bought a quarter-section of land; and Thomas finished his schooling at Ione. The lad remained at home with his parents until they passed away—both at Ione, and both at the age of sixty-two—and then he went to work for Charles Swift, who was the largest rancher on Dry Creek, having some land in San Joaquin County, and some in Sacramento County. There he remained for seventeen years; and when he left the Swift service, he was the head man on the rancho. Mr. Swift raised grain, stock, mules, etc., all extensively; and during this time, Thomas Lane learned the butcher's trade, and for a couple of years he was government instructor at the Preston school.

He then settled at Clements, leasing the ranch of sixty-three acres owned by George Chrisman, and he also farmed the Gillies Ranch, due east of Clements. In addition, for a number of years, he cultivated over 100 acres of vineyard, although at the present time he has only twenty-five acres of vineyard, leased from Gillies, the vineyard lying at the edge of Clements on the east. Just now, Mr. Lane has leased 150 acres of land near Clements of Mr. Magee, and he has a pasture and range-land of 800 acres leased near Comanche. He engages in the stock business, and runs about 100 head of cattle in Calaveras County. Three years ago, he bought twenty-four acres, due east of Clements, and put down a well 514 feet deep, and lately his pump tested out to throw 1,200 gallons a minute for irrigation purposes. This is the first deep well ever sunk with success in the Athearn district. He has built a barn on this ranch, and as soon as possible he intends to erect there a commodious, comfortable and attractive home. His pump, by the way, is driven with electricity, and this is only one of many modern appliances of this up-to-date ranch.

At Sacramento, on January 16, 1904, Mr. Lane was married to Miss Anna Hodges, a native of Santa Cruz, Cal., and the daughter of J. S. and Helen E. (Hackett) Hodges. Mr. Hodges was born in Franklin County, Mo., on September 15, 1850, the son of Daniel and Frances Marian (Vance) Hodges, who set out for California with the old-time ox-team. Mrs. Hodges died of cholera on the way, in 1852, breathing her last along the River Platte. Not less than sixty-five of the train perished en route. This train consisted of about seventy-five wagons, and six months were required for the emigrants to cross the great plains. At first Daniel Hodges settled for awhile on the Calaveras River, and then went to Ventura County, later removing to Mariposa County, and there he engaged in quartz mining for four or five years. He then went to Volcano, in Amador County, and mined for one year. Quitting the mines, he went to Santa Cruz, where he farmed for awhile. Later, he went north to Jackson County, Ore., and for twenty years farmed there, dying at the ripe old age of seventy-six. Mrs. Lane's father had left home when he was ten years old, and did not go on to Oregon, remaining in California instead, and going to work on ranches. Later he moved to Paso de Robles, and there took up cattle-raising; he had about 150 head of cattle, and continued in that locality and field of industry about twelve years. When he sold out, he went into Santa Cruz County and conducted a dairy of thirty head of cows for five years, just three miles out of Santa Cruz City. He next came to Clements, and he has since lived here. Mrs. Lane's mother, Helen E. Hackett, was a daughter of George and Martha Hackett. She was born in Ohio, and came out to California via the Isthmus route in the sixties, and in California, in 1875, she was married. Four children were granted this worthy couple. Anna L. is Mrs. Lane; Samuel Percy is in Oregon; George Francis is in Clements; and Edwin Putnam is in Sacramento. Mrs. Lane attended the Athearn school in Clements.

Mr. Lane is also a breeder of Percheron draft horses; and he was also once in the grain, stock and timber business. When he started to work for Mr. Swift, he drove a sixteen-horse team from Stockton to the mountains, hauling general provisions, and he worked for seventy-five cents a day, and for long hours, in the beginning. He also teamed through Placerville, Sonora, and elsewhere, and saw much of the interesting life there in those days. Two children, Eldred and Kenneth, now listen to his tales. He has no party affiliations, but keeps himself free and independent in political activity. He belongs to no lodge, and is content to apply the Golden Rule whenever he can in his dealings with his fellow-men. San Joaquin County may well be proud of such substantial citizens as Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Lane.

ROBERT A. LIVINGSTON.—A successful contracting plumber is Robert A. Livingston, the only plumber of Lockeford, pleasantly identified with the town for almost a decade. A native Californian, he was born in Hollister, February 29, 1884, and reared on his father's ranch near there. His parents, John and Rebecca (Higgins) Livingston, came to California in the early seventies from Nova Scotia, the birthplace of the father. Settling at Hollister, John Livingston acquired 160 acres, which he farmed to grain; later he removed to Tracy, and there leased a large grain farm. Six children were born to them: Collie; Benjamin; Robert A.; John; Lulu; and Cora.

Robert A. Livingston attended the Tracy school until he was fourteen years old, when he was thrown on his own resources. Deciding to learn the plumbing and sheet metal trade, he went to Newman, Cal., and there worked under Mr. Schanks; he also had the opportunity of attending school there. After working in Newman for one year, he returned to Tracy and was employed by Mr. Breman until 1902, when he located in Lockeford, where he worked for C. A. Bacon for a number of years until he opened his own shop. He draws his trade from the northeastern part of San Joaquin County and has built up a fine business.

In June, 1911, at Lockeford, Mr. Livingston was married to Miss Maude Flanders, born on the old home place near Lockeford, her parents being Clarence L. and Margaret (Bryant) Flanders. Her father was born in Wisconsin in the vicinity of Milwaukee, on December 6, 1847, the son of Luther and Vilura Flanders. In 1851, when he was four years old, he was brought by his parents to California via the Isthmus of Panama, and from there via the

S. S. Tennessee to San Francisco. Upon arriving in San Francisco, the family proceeded to Sacramento County, where the father leased land in the vicinity of Walnut Grove; later, in 1860, the family moved to a tract of land four miles east of Lockeford and bought 280 acres of land; this land was thickly covered with trees and underbrush so dense that a rabbit could not be seen ten feet away, and as many as 1,000 cords of wood were cut from each acre of land in clearing. Those were pioneer days when all the grain was harvested with the old-time cradle. Luther Flanders lived to be eighty-two years old, while his wife passed away at the age of seventy-six. Clarence L. Flanders still owns the old home place purchased by his father. In July, 1869, he married Miss Margaret Bryant, a daughter of James G. and Ann Bryant, and they are the parents of two daughters, Maude, Mrs. Robert A. Livingston; and Dollie, Mrs. H. W. Francis of Sacramento. Mrs. Livingston received her education in the Athearn school district at Clements. Politically Mr. Livingston is a staunch Republican. He owns the building where he lives and where he maintains his plumbing shop, and he and his wife enjoy the esteem and respect of the entire community.

GEORGE WASHINGTON LLOYD.—As a worthy representative of one of the early California pioneer families, George Washington Lloyd is one of the highly respected farmers and citizens of San Joaquin County. The family is of Scotch-Irish origin, first represented in America by Thomas Lloyd, the grandfather of our subject, who settled in Rhode Island in an early day. He married Miss Rosa McLaughlin, also a native of Ireland, and she and her husband removed from Rhode Island to Massachusetts, where they both died. George Washington Lloyd was born in San Joaquin County on the Lloyd ranch west of Lodi, August 12, 1877, a son of Robert Lloyd. Robert Lloyd was reared on his father's farm in Massachusetts, remaining at home until he was twenty-one years old. In 1854 he came to California, via Panama, sailing from New York and landing at San Francisco on April 13, 1854. The following two years he spent in mining, and during the year 1856 he settled in San Joaquin County and took up a quarter-section of land near Lafayette, which is now the home place of his widow and son, George W. This land was covered with a dense growth of trees, but by hard work the father cleared enough land to plant the first crop in the fall of 1857, and the following year he commenced a general farming business. He came to own 333 acres, and was busy in improving and developing it, later selling off all but sixty acres, which he owned at the time of his death, November 19, 1906. On October 14, 1873, he was married in Stockton to Miss Susan B. Murray, a native of Tipton, Iowa, daughter of Edward and Jane (Boyd) Murray, both natives of Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd were the parents of four children. Three grew up and are living: Gertrude, George Washington, our subject; and Lucretia G. The mother resides with our subject on the old home place where she first went as a bride in 1873. Mrs. Lloyd lost her mother when still very young. She lived on the home ranch till ten years of age. The home farm was sold and she began shifting for herself. She received her education in the public school. In 1873 she made a trip to California, coming to Mokelumne Station, where her sister, Mrs. Jane Herren, and also two brothers, William and Hugh Murray, were living.

George Washington Lloyd began his education at the Turner district school in the vicinity of his home, and later attended the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge. His earliest recollections are of the old home farm, where he was reared and where he has always lived. His practical training in agriculture has been the means of making him one of the most successful viticulturalists in his section of the county. The ranch has been developed to vineyard of table and wine grapes, irrigated by two pumping plants with four-inch pumps and seven-and-a-half-horse-power motors; and in his cultivation and developing of the property he uses both tractors and horses. The first house was built by the father in 1857 and has since been remodeled into a comfortable and commodious residence. In politics Mr. Lloyd is a Republican. He is public-spirited and favors everything to improve his district and elevate society, and he has made a wide acquaintance in the county of his nativity and is well-known as a representative agriculturalist.

GEORGE T. MacGARVA.—A successful dairy farmer of San Joaquin County, George T. MacGarva has resided here since 1908. A man of industry and enterprise, he has worked his way to a front rank among the thrifty and able farmers of his adopted country. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, on September 1, 1870, a son of Samuel and Jane (MacMorland) MacGarva. His father owned and operated a grocery store in Glasgow, and he was the father of nine children: Quinten; John; Ellen; William; George, our subject; David; Samuel; Jane; and Margaret.

George T. MacGarva received a grammar school education in his native land, and when he was fifteen years old he started to work in a grocery store. He was thrifty and economical, and as soon as he had accumulated enough money, he went into the grocery business for himself in a small way in Glasgow. His business grew and prospered, and when he sold out after being in business for ten years, he had a flourishing trade. He then engaged in the dairy business for five years.

On March 31, 1892, in Glasgow, Mr. MacGarva was married to Miss Margaret Cameron, a native of Glasgow, a daughter of Alexander and Anna (Drysdale) Cameron, farmers of Scotland. Mrs. MacGarva is the only daughter and was educated in the Glasgow schools. They are the parents of two children: Anna is Mrs. John Ross and she has three children—George, John and Margaret; they reside in Glasgow, Scotland; George MacGarva resides in Canada. He entered the Canadian army and was in the thick of the fighting during the late war. He had been in France six months when he was wounded, but fully recovered, when he was more severely wounded and was in a hospital for over a year. He served as a sergeant and after his discharge was put on the Canadian Secret Service, where he is employed at the present time.

Mr. MacGarva went to Canada from Scotland and took up a homestead in Alberta, which he proved up on and lived on until 1903, when he came to San Francisco and was employed for the following four years by the Standard Oil Company. During the year of 1908 he came to his present ranch, about five miles south of Lockeford, where he purchased twenty acres and engaged in the dairy and egg-producing business. He has ten cows and has worked up a private dairy products route in Stockton, where he disposes of his farm products at retail. He has built a comfortable house and he is well equipped to handle his dairy and poultry business in a first-class manner. Mr. MacGarva is a life member of the Masonic order of Glasgow, Scotland, being a member of the Royal Arch there, and in politics is a Republican.

SERAPHIN MARCEAU.—A continuous resident of San Joaquin County for the past forty-seven years, Seraphin Marceau has been a participant in the growth and development of the county during that period. He was born on his father's farm in the rural district of Sainte Anne, near Quebec, Canada, on March 25, 1855, a son of Christopher and Mary (Desonia) Marceau of French descent, who settled in Canada in an early day. There were eight children in the family: Phillip; Louis; Onisim; Napoleon; Seraphim, our subject; Adolphus; Mary; and Etucan.

As a boy, Seraphin Marceau attended the public school, and when he reached the age of fifteen years he served an apprenticeship for three years learning the carpenter's trade. After completing his apprenticeship he worked there for three years as a journeyman carpenter, and in 1876 came to Stockton, Cal.; he followed his trade and did contracting and building in a small way in the vicinity of Waterloo, which occupied him until 1878, when he engaged in the liquor business there; later when he removed to Clements he went into the hotel business and continued there for eight years, when he sold his business and located in Lockeford in 1890, where he has been in business from that time to the present.

The marriage of Mr. Marceau occurred at Clements, Cal., on February 23, 1886, and united him with Miss Allie C. Fox, a native of Comanche, Cal., a daughter of James Fox, a grain farmer who came to California in an early day and settled at Comanche, and there Mrs. Marceau received her education. They are the parents of one son, Dan V. Marceau. Politically Mr. Marceau is a Democrat and fraternally is a member of the Knights of Columbus of Stockton.

FRED LEO MARCHAND.—A native Californian, Fred Leo Marchand was born near the present site of the thriving town of Newman, October 25, 1879, a son of Leo and Johanna (Jeschke) Marchand, both natives of Prussia. The father left the home for America before the outbreak of the Civil War and in 1861 enlisted for service in the U. S. Navy, serving for over three years, and was discharged in Pensacola, Fla. In 1869 he arrived in San Francisco and soon after removed to San Joaquin Valley, locating in the grain country near Newman, where he engaged in farming. There were five children in the family: Fred Leo, the subject of this sketch; Anna, deceased; William J. resides at Stockton; Lilly, Mrs. H. A. Davidson, residing in Stockton; and Charles J. resides in Los Angeles. The father passed away in 1920 at the age of eighty-three and the mother was seventy-one when she died.

Fred Leo was a child of one year when his parents removed to Stockton, where his father worked in the lumber business, and later conducted a dairy for fourteen years, and in that city Fred Leo received his education. When he was fourteen years old he learned the harness-makers' trade and for thirteen years was associated with C. Rodder. Fifteen years ago he removed to Lodi, where he opened a shop of his own. As the automobile increased in importance and popularity, Mr. Marchand added the line of auto trimming, which has well-nigh done away with his harness business; he now owns his own building, 40x100 feet, and conducts a thriving business.

On November 26, 1908, in Lodi, the marriage of Mr. Marchand united him with Miss Grace Roulette, born in Sainte Genevieve, Mo., a daughter of J. T. and Emma Roulette, who had three children: Addie, Mrs. Banta, resides in Richmond; Lawrence T. resides in Plumas County; and Mrs. Marchand. The mother passed away in May, 1922, and the father is a farmer in the Lodi vicinity. Mr. and Mrs. Marchand are the parents of two children, Uvon Catherine and Fred Leo, Jr. Besides his harness and auto trimming business Mr. Marchand owns fifteen acres in vineyard three miles from Lodi. He is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the N. S. G. W. and is past president of the Lodi Parlor; he is also a member of the Eagles and the Foresters of Stockton, and has passed through the chairs of the latter. Mr. Marchand believes in the uninterrupted prosperity and development of Lodi and environs and he is deeply interested in all that pertains to the welfare and progress of his locality, and is a typical western citizen.

MASON HOSPITAL OF LODI.—Among the institutions of San Joaquin County caring for the sick and unfortunate residents of Lodi and vicinity is the Mason Hospital of Lodi, which is conducted by Mrs. Thirza M. Cole and her sister, Mrs. Nellie B. Yates, joint owners of this institution. Mrs. Cole was born at Greeley, Colo., and received her education in the grammar and normal schools of Colorado; she then took up nursing at the Salida, Colo., Red Cross Hospital, and in 1911 finished the course and became a registered nurse. She was then superintendent of the hospital at Salida, Colo., four years, when she came to California and engaged in general nursing practice in Lodi, with the exception of one year spent at Fresno. During the influenza epidemic, Mrs. Cole was put in charge of the work to control the epidemic at the Mason Hospital.

In 1921, Mrs. Cole purchased the hospital from Mr. Slauson, and since acquiring it she has remodeled and equipped the same. New beds, bedding, rugs and other necessary equipment have replaced the old and it is now modern in every respect, as well as sanitary in every particular. The hospital will accommodate fifteen patients and it is filled to capacity most of the time. Her sister, Mrs. Yates, is part owner and assists Mrs. Cole in conducting the institution. The hospital is equipped with a modern operating room for all kinds of surgical cases and also for maternity cases; it is a branch of the Emergency County Hospital at Stockton. Mrs. Cole is thoroughly competent to handle the most intricate of surgical cases; and her humane side is her most outstanding characteristic, and the patients of the Mason Hospital find in her a most considerate as well as efficient nurse and friend.

NELSON QUENELL.—Among the prosperous farmers and dairymen of the New Hope school district of San Joaquin County is Nelson Quenell, who conducts a dairy of forty cows on an eighty-acre ranch seven miles northwest of Woodbridge. A native of Alexandria, Ontario, Canada, he was born October 24, 1864, a son of Donald and Anna (Carter) Quenell, both natives of Canada, and farmers all their lives. The father, who was of French descent, passed away at the age of ninety-four, and the mother, of Scotch descent, at the age of seventy-two, while the grandfather, Donald Quenell, lived to be 102 years old. Donald and Anna Quenell were the parents of six children: John, deceased; Agnes; Alexander, deceased; Margaret, deceased; Richard, deceased; and Nelson, of this review.

Nelson Quenell received a grammar-school education, and when he was sixteen years of age ran away from home. He made his way to Port Arthur on Thunder Bay, at the head of Lake Superior, and worked on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad; for five years he worked his way westward, to Regina, and then left the company and came to British Columbia. He was married in North Dakota, at St. Thomas, and again went to work on the Canadian Pacific, continuing till the spring of 1886, when he returned to St. Thomas, and located a homestead of 160-acres of land near Langdon, N. D., proved up on it and remained there for five years. Here Mr. Quenell took out his first citizenship papers; he received his final papers in Stockton, Cal. In 1890, he removed to Palmero, Cal., where he found employment on the Southern Pacific Railroad for a short time; then he came to Stockton and worked for Angus McKinnon, the building contractor, for five years, and during that time helped to put in the concrete work on El Dorado Street on the water front. He was then employed as engineer on the pile driver on Grand Island, until 1904. He then began farming, first for five years on Grand Island, and then at New Hope Landing for another five years. He was engaged in dairying until November, 1922, at which time he sold out and located in Woodbridge, where he is now engaged in merchandising.

On August 24, 1885, in North Dakota, Mr. Quenell was married to Miss Mary McLean, a daughter of Angus and Isabelle (McKinnon) McLean, the former a native of the Highlands of Scotland. Her father left Scotland and settled near Toronto, Canada, where he farmed until his death at the age of fifty years. The mother, also born in Scotland, passed away recently at the age of seventy-four. They were the parents of nine children who grew up: Flora, Mary (Mrs. Quenell), Catherine, Christine, Annie, Sarah, Margaret, Daniel, and Isabelle, who is a trained nurse living in San Francisco. Mary McLean was born near Paisley, Canada, where she was educated in the public school. Mr. and Mrs. Quenell have a family of eight children: John M., in Los Angeles; Angus, at Thornton; Agnes, Mrs. Maher, of Sacramento; Catherine, Mrs. Henry Thompson, of Thornton; Edna, Mrs. George Woods, of Los Angeles; Ethel, Mrs. Edison, of Woodbridge; Rena, Mrs. Edward Beckwith, of Sacramento; and Roy, at home. They are also raising a nephew named Morman Hall, and have taken care of him since he was a baby. He is now seventeen years old and they are educating him as their own child. There are four grandchildren. John Quenell has two children, Robert Nelson and Dorothy; Mrs. Ethel Edison has one daughter, Elizabeth; and Angus Quenell has one daughter, Ethel Marian. For four years, Mr. Quenell was school trustee on Grand Island; for six years he served as school trustee of the New Hope School in Thornton district; and then for one year he served on the school board of the Ray district. Fraternally, he is a member of the Knights of Pythias, No. 106, of Sacramento; and Mrs. Quenell was a member of the Cortland Lodge of Pythian Sisters until the lodge was disbanded.

MRS. HATTIE E. RATHBUN.—For thirty-eight years Mrs. Hattie E. Rathbun has been numbered among the citizens of the Golden State, and for the past thirty-two years has resided in San Joaquin County; during which time her husband Charles W. Rathbun was actively connected with the educational affairs of the county. She was born at Fox Lake, Dodge County, Wis., a daughter of Benjamin Franklin and Olivia (Dale) Gibbs, both natives of New York, early settlers of Wisconsin. When our subject was five years old her parents removed to Mason City, Iowa, where she was reared and educated. There were five children in the family: H. L., resides at Calistoga, Cal.; Eugene, deceased; Benjamin, resides in Council Bluffs, Iowa; Hattie E. Rathbun, the subject of this sketch; and Elizabeth. The father passed away at the age of eighty-seven and the mother at the age of sixty-seven.

On September 25, 1881 at Mason City, Iowa, occurred the marriage of Miss Hattie E. Gibbs and Charles Wilbur Rathbun, a native of Sparta, Wis., born November 30, 1858, a son of Eldridge and Lydia (Osborne) Rathbun, both natives of New York, who removed to Wisconsin in frontier days. When Charles W. was eleven years old the family removed to Mason City, Iowa. Eldridge Rathbun was a veteran of the Civil War and lost his life in the service of his country during that conflict. Charles W. received a fine education in the schools of Iowa and after graduation was engaged in teaching until 1884, when the family removed to California, settling in Calistoga, where he was engaged in teaching for five years; then they removed to Inyo County, where he taught in the Big Pine and Lone Pine schools. In 1890 they came to Lodi and for a number of years Mr. Rathbun taught at the Turner and Franklin district schools. On account of failing health Mr. Rathbun was obliged to give up his chosen profession and took up carpentering and contracting in Lodi, which he followed until his death, August 11, 1911. Mr. Rathbun was a Republican in politics and fraternally was a member of the Knights of Pythias, the Woodmen of the World and the Maccabees of Lodi.

Mr. and Mrs. Rathbun were the parents of seven children: Mary E., is a teacher in the Lodi schools; Eldridge, resides in Lodi, as does Mrs. Nora Brown; Percy D., is employed in the postoffice at Lodi; Elizabeth, Mrs. Jensen, resides in Loomis, Cal.; Dorothy and Phillip W., are at home. The family reside at 125 North Hutchins St., Lodi, in the home built by the husband and father sixteen years ago. Mrs. Rathbun is a member of the Ladies of the G. A. R., of Lodi.

EDWARD ANDREW REID.—Well known for his connection with the business interests of Lodi, Edward Andrew Reid is the popular proprietor of the Perrin Hotel on South Sacramento Street. He became a citizen of Lodi in 1920, and has ever since been closely identified with the commercial and civic growth of that town. He was born in Redding, Cal., October 6, 1878, a son of Edward Alexander and Artie (Salnave) Reid. The father was born in Alabama, and crossed the plains to California in 1849 and worked awhile in the mines; then he farmed a section of land where he raised cattle and hogs; later he sold his ranch and went into the livery business in Redding, which he continued until his death at the age of seventy-seven years. The mother was a New Yorker by birth and is still living at the age of eighty-four years. Edward Andrew is the only child of this pioneer couple and his education was gained in the public schools of Redding and later on in a business college in Oakland. After his school days were over, he assisted his father in the livery business in Redding and when his father died in 1902 he continued the business until he built a garage, which he conducted for two years when he sold out and removed to Sacramento, where he became the proprietor of two hotels, one on Seventh and I streets and the other on Fourteenth and J streets.

While residing in Sacramento Mr. Reid was married to Miss Ada Haskin, born at Granby, Mo., a daughter of N. W. and Martha Haskin. Mrs. Reid was four years old when her parents removed to California and settled at Nevada City, where her father worked in the mines and where she received her education. She is the eldest in a family of five children, the others being, Thomas, Mrs. Marie Apperson, Mrs. Ethel Gardner, and Mathew, who died in 1921. Mr. and Mrs. Reid have an adopted daughter, Ruth. In February, 1920, Mr. Reid removed to Lodi and leased the Hotel Imperial. This he operated until January 1, 1921, when he entered into a five year lease for the modern, forty-five-room Perrin Hotel, located on South Sacramento Street, where he is meeting with deserved success. Mr. Reid is a Republican in politics and fraternally is affiliated with the Odd Fellows at Redding; he is a past grand of that lodge and is past president of the Encampment at Redding; he is also a member of the N. S. G. W.

FREEMAN J. MATTICE.—Among those interested in agriculture and stockraising in San Joaquin County, Freeman J. Mattice resides on his thirty-acre ranch, five miles southwest of Lodi. He was born at Volcano, Amador County, Cal., March 27, 1866, a son of Simon Peter and Agnes (Stockton) Mattice. The father was born in Cornwall, Canada, and first came to California in 1852 across the plains and mined in Amador County for four years. He returned to his Canadian home and was married to Miss Agnes Stockton, returning with his wife to California the same year via Panama. He mined one year at Placerville, then removed to Volcano, where he mined with moderate success. Mr. and Mrs. Mattice were the parents of nine children: Emma is Mrs. Joe McKindley at Acampo; William, George, and Charles are deceased; Arthur, Freeman J. of this sketch; Mrs. Leona Wilson, deceased; Chester R. of Acampo, and Edward of Lodi. The father passed away at Volcano at the age of seventy-two; and in 1887 the mother with some of her children moved to Florin, Cal., then farmed on the Consumnes; then in 1896 she came to San Joaquin County and lived here until her death, passing away at Acampo at the age of eighty-three.

Freeman J. Mattice received his education in the grammar schools of Volcano and since he was twenty years old has made his own way. He first worked as a ranch hand, then leased a farm in Sacramento County in the Lee school district near Florin, which he ran for four years when he located on the Consumnes River; then in 1900 moved to Sheldon and in 1908 removed to Clements, where for ten years he was in charge of the Irvin ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Mattice in Amador County occurred June 20, 1893, which united him with Miss Lilly May Clark, a native of Nebraska, daughter of B. A. and Margaret Clark. She is one of a family of fourteen and when she was sixteen years old came with her parents to California and settled in Amador County, where her father engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Mattice are the parents of six children: George died at the age of twenty-five; Gladys is Mrs. Oren Nevins, and the mother of three children, Robert, Ralph and Naomi; Willis makes his home with his parents; Harvey lives near Lodi; Margaret and Vernon are at home. In 1918, Mr. Mattice removed to the Henderson school district of San Joaquin County, where he had bought thirty acres in 1917, which is devoted to raising alfalfa and he also has a small dairy. Mr. Mattice served on the Sheldon school board, and is a member of Clements Lodge No. 355, I. O. O. F. at Clements, of which he is a past grand. Mr. and Mrs. Mattice both belong to the Rebekahs at Clements, in which Mrs. Mattice is a past noble grand.

EDWARD G. McCausland.—A well known citizen of Lodi, where he has resided since 1911, Edward G. McCausland is an enterprising agriculturist and business man. He was born in Lexington, Mo., April 20, 1893, a son of Ernest M. and Jennie (Goode) McCausland. The father was a merchant for many years in Lexington; later he became a member of the working force of the New York Life Insurance Company. Two sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. McCausland, Edward G., of this sketch, and Harold. The family left Missouri for California in 1911 and settled in Lodi, where the father passed away at the age of sixty years, while the mother is still living and resides in Lodi.

Edward G. McCausland had the advantage of a good education, first in St. Joseph's grammar school, then was graduated from the Stockton High School and in 1916 was graduated from Stanford University, where he took a course in journalism. Following his graduation from Stanford University he entered the employ of the New York Life Insurance Company and remained with that company until his country called him. He entered the service in November, 1917, and was sent to Camp Lewis in the 166th Depot Brigade and was a member of the third officers' training camp at Camp Lewis; later he was transferred to the 316th Military Police of the 91st Division and was sent overseas, where he took part in four major engagements, namely, St. Mihiel, Argonne, Lyse-Scheldt and the attack on Audenarde. After the war he was stationed at La Ferte-Bernard, the embarkation area of France. In 1919 he returned to the United States and the same year was honorably discharged from the service at the Presidio with the rank of corporal. Upon his return to Lodi he engaged in the real estate business and is also the owner of 120 acres of land in Madera County about fourteen miles south of Merced on the Merced-Los Banos Highway; he also owns forty acres on Harney Lane in the vicinity of Lodi. He is a Democrat in politics and a member of the American Legion of Lodi; and is a member of the Christian church in Lodi.

HENRY F. MERRILL.—Among the vineyardists who is devoting his energies to this branch of agriculture is Henry F. Merrill, who resides on a ten-acre vineyard southeast of Lodi. He was born in Campo Seco, Calaveras County, Cal., on May 13, 1887, and is a typical Western man, possessing the energy, determination, and enterprise which have been the dominant factors in the upbuilding of the Pacific coast country. He is the son of Douglass and Anna Virginia (Whitaker) Merrill, natives of New York and California, respectively. The father came to California in an early day and was a building contractor in Lodi and the mother came to California with her parents in 1861 and also settled in San Joaquin County. They had four children: Mamie Adaline, Mrs. C. C. Wright; Nellie, Mrs. Howard Gillespie; Henry F., and Joseph F.

Henry F. Merrill attended grammar school at Campo Seco, Lodi, Lockeford and Live Oak, and in November of 1909 was married at Stockton to Miss Emma Vollbrecht, a daughter of William and Anna Vollbrecht, her father a native of Germany who came to America with his parents when three years old. Mrs. Vollbrecht is one of twelve children. Her father is deceased, but her mother still lives in Iowa. Mr. Merrill is a lather by trade and was engaged throughout San Joaquin County until November, 1920, when he came to the Lodi section and purchased his vineyard on which he has since resided. The ranch is irrigated by a four-inch pump which supplies ample water. Mr. and Mrs. Merrill are the parents of three children: Emily, Bernice and Lowell, and in politics he is a Democrat.

W. J. RICHTER.—An able craftsman, successful business man, and progressive, public-spirited citizen, is W. J. Richter, owner and proprietor of the leading plumbing and tinning establishment at Ripon, Cal. He is a native son, having been born at San Francisco, April 23, 1884. His parents are J. L. and Maria (Peterson) Richter, who both reside with W. J. Richter on a ten-acre ranch on the state highway, near Ripon. Both parents were born in the year 1854, the father being a native of New Jersey, while the mother was born in Denmark. The father came with his parents to California in 1864 via the Isthmus, landing in San Francisco. There he grew up and learned the metal-worker's trade, of which he was a pioneer in the Bay City. Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Richter were married in California, and were the parents of three children: Clarence, who works in the post-office at Alameda; a second child, who died in infancy; and W. J. Richter, of this review.

W. J. Richter grew up in Alameda City, where he attended the public schools; and when he had finished the grammar school, he entered upon a four-year apprenticeship, serving out his time with W. F. Schulte, a plumber and tinner of Alameda. He then entered upon his trade, his first employment being with George Lahr, in Oakland. Going to San Francisco, he there worked at his trade as a plumber and tinsmith. From there he came to Ripon, and went to work for Davis Brothers. After working for four years in their employ, in 1920 he bought out their tinning and plumbing department, and two years ago he moved into his present commodious quarters in the John Manson block on Stockton Street.

Mr. Richter's marriage occurred in 1909, uniting him with Miss Mildred Bonnell, of Oakland, who was born in Illinois, and came to California with her parents when a young girl. He is a prominent member of the Odd Fellows, at present noble grand of Mt. Horeb Lodge, at Ripon, and is also a member of Alameda Parlor, No. 47, N. S. G. W.

CHARLOTTE SCOTT.—A worthy citizen of San Joaquin County who has resided here since 1912 is Mrs. Charlotte Scott, widow of Mark Scott, who passed away six years ago on their home place of fifteen acres three miles south of Lodi. In maidenhood, Mrs. Scott was Miss Charlotte Scarrow, a native of Toronto, Canada, born June 6, 1859, a daughter of James and Abigail (Nelson) Scarrow. Both parents were natives of England and while a young man James Scarrow settled in Canada, where he followed his trade of carpenter. Mrs. Scott is the third in a family of ten children and the only one residing in California. The other members of the family are, Elizabeth residing at Calgary, Canada; Alma resides at Creemore, Canada; Mary at Toronto; Emma; Nelson is a teacher in the University of Toronto; Ellen resides at Creemore; George at Manitoba; Alice resides in Saskatchewan; Charles is also a resident of Canada. Both parents lived to be about sixty-five years old. Mrs. Scott received her education in the grammar and high schools of Ontario, Canada.

On August 14, 1882, at Sault Sainte Marie, Mich., Miss Scarrow was married to Mark Scott, a native of Montreal, Canada, a son of John and Jane Scott. Mr. Scott received his education in the grammar and high schools of Montreal and was one of nine children: Mary, Anna, Isaac, Jane, William, John, Mark and Marion, twins, and Robert. Mr. Scott learned the carpenter trade and worked at it until his marriage, then he engaged in farming for six and a half years in Canada; the family then removed to Sault Sainte Marie, Mich., where they farmed for the following seven years; then they removed to Mitchell, S. D., where they bought a quarter-section of land in that vicinity and farmed for six and a half years. The family then returned to Michigan and engaged in the dairy business for a number of years. Seventeen years ago the family removed to the state of Washington and settled at College Place, near Walla Walla, where they had an apple and cherry ranch until 1912, when they came to California and purchased a fifteen-acre ranch under the Stockton-Mokelumne irrigation ditch three miles south of Lodi. Ten acres of this ranch is in a Tokay vineyard and the remaining four acres in an orchard of peaches, plums and cherries. Mr. Scott was not long permitted to enjoy California, for he passed away four years after taking up his residence in San Joaquin County. Mr. and Mrs. Scott were the parents of eight children: Mrs. Abbie Woodhall, Mrs. Fannie Roberts, and Mrs. Elizabeth Flower, all residing in Walla Walla, Wash.; Lottie resides at home;

Fred lives in Los Angeles; Wesley resides in Berkeley; Alma lives on the old home place, and Russel is at home with his mother. Four years ago Mrs. Scott moved to Lodi and makes her residence at 215 Tokay Street. She is a Republican in politics and an active member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church of Lodi.

EDMUND C. SCHNAIDT.—Among the younger generation of business men in Lodi, and a recent addition to business circles, is Edmund C. Schnaidt who, on August 3, 1922, purchased the drug store owned by the late Robert L. Graham, who established it some forty years ago and for thirty-eight years was located on the corner of Elm and Sacramento Streets. He was born in Menno, S. D., June 17, 1899, a son of Christopher and Mary (Hoff) Schnaidt. Grandfather Schnaidt was a prominent factor in the development of the Dakotas and at the time that the territory was divided into two states, he was a congressman; he was also chairman of the state board of charities and corrections of South Dakota.

In 1901 Edmund C. Schnaidt came with his parents to Lodi, where the father engaged in the real estate and insurance business, which he conducted until his death by drowning at Stockton on January 2, 1916; the mother passed away in 1904. Edmund C. started his education in the grammar schools of Lodi, then entered the high school and after three years in high school enlisted in the Navy, becoming pharmacist mate on U. S. S. Plattsburg. He then was employed by Mr. Weihe, where he received practical experience in the drug business; he then entered the University of California and was graduated with the class of 1922. Returning to Lodi he again entered the drug store of Mr. Weihe, but remained there only a short time, when he bought the Robert L. Graham business and he is readjusting the stock into an up-to-date establishment; he also has a branch of the United Cigar Company.

On August 19, 1921, in San Francisco, Mr. Schnaidt was united in marriage with Miss Mae Belle Cooper, a native of Fort Madison, Iowa, a daughter of Murdock and Gwendolyue Cooper. In 1912 the family came to California and settled in San Francisco, where the father worked for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Mrs. Schnaidt was educated in the grammar, high school and Heald's Business College in Sacramento and for three years before her marriage was a stenographer in the Anglo-London & Paris National Bank in San Francisco. Mr. Schnaidt is a Republican in politics and is deeply interested in community affairs.

JOHN SCHENKENBERGER.—For almost a quarter of a century, John Schenkenberger has lived in the Lodi district of San Joaquin County, eighteen years being spent on a nineteen-acre ranch, three miles southwest of Lodi on the Lincoln Highway, which he developed to vineyard and later sold. He was born in South Russia not far from Odessa, June 28, 1854, a son of John W. and Christina Schenkenberger, both natives of Russia. When he was nineteen years old, his parents left their native country for America and settled at Yankton, S. D., where the father farmed until his death at the age of sixty-six, the mother surviving until she was sixty-eight years old. They were the parents of nine children: Jacob, Charles and Michael are deceased; Clara, John Phillip, Katherina, Peter and Adam are living.

John Schenkenberger received his education in the public schools of Russia and when he came to America with his parents in 1873, he assisted his father in farming until he was old enough to homestead a tract of land of his own near Yankton, S. D. In December, 1878, he was married to Miss Louisa Berreth, also a native of Southern Russia, born in the same vicinity as her husband. She is the daughter of Michael Berreth and the youngest of a family of five children; Conrad, Katherina, Michael, Jacob and Louisa, the mother passing away when she was a small girl. Mr. and Mrs. Schenkenberger lived on their homestead until 1889, when they removed to Hutchinson County and rented a farm near Menno, where they remained until 1898 when they came to California and settled at Lodi. Here Mr. Schenkenberger purchased nineteen acres of unimproved land three miles southwest of Lodi on the Lincoln Highway, which he gradually developed to vineyard which he farmed until 1916 when he sold out and removed to the Barnhart tract near Lodi and remained there until they moved to their present home located at 215 West Walnut Street, where Mr. Schenkenberger is living retired from active business cares.

Mr. and Mrs. Schenkenberger are the parents of ten children: Louise, deceased; Amelia, Mrs. Lange, residing in North Dakota; Lydia, Mrs. Stoddard, resides in Fresno; John and Henry reside in Lodi; Pauline, Mrs. J. A. Bender, resides in Lodi; Jacob served in the 363rd Regiment, 91st Division overseas, was wounded in the battle of the Argonne, resides in Lodi; Sarah, Mrs. W. A. Moore, resides in Lodi; Samuel resides in Lodi; Bertha, Mrs. Fred Hoff, resides in Lodi. Mr. Schenkenberger has been actively interested in the affairs of his locality and served as trustee of the Henderson school district for one term. He favors the Republican platform and so casts his vote. The family are members of the German Reformed Church in Lodi.

MISS ESTELLA M. SMITH.—Among the prominent women of Northern San Joaquin County, Miss Estella M. Smith has for many years been esteemed as a substantial resident of her community and factor for good and progress in religious, moral and social circles. Since 1885 she has been a resident on her beautiful estate of thirty acres situated near Woodbridge on the Lodi-Woodbridge Road at Smith's Lake. She first saw the light of day at Jackson, Amador County, and is a daughter of Charles Edward and Isabelle (Robertson) Smith, the former a native of Kennebunk Port, Me., and the latter born near Toronto, Canada. The father crossed the plains in an ox-team train to California in 1853 and the mother came about the same time via the Panama route. The father engaged in mining at Jackson for a few years, then followed farming until 1874 when he went to Sacramento County remaining there for one year; then in 1875 he located at Woodbridge where he purchased eighty acres on the south bank of the Mokelumne River. On this ranch is located what is known as Smith's Lake, a small body of water covering about fifteen acres surrounded by large oak trees. Charles E. Smith purchased this ranch from Capt. McQueen and owned it a few years when he sold it and removed to Escalon where he lived and farmed for seven years; then returned to Lodi and bought back his original place and lived upon it until his death in 1902, at the age of seventy-two years, while the mother passed away in 1900, at the age of fifty-eight. The eighty acres was originally heavily wooded and only a portion of it was cleared when Mr. Smith purchased it and during his lifetime he cleared the balance and planted it to vineyard; in 1885 he built a fine residence on his place. He was school trustee and was a member of Woodbridge Lodge of Masons. This worthy couple had four children, three living, Miss Smith being the youngest.

Estella M. Smith received her education in the Woodbridge grammar school and San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge, where she was graduated in 1893 with degree B. S. She grew up on her father's farm which has enabled her to continue the cultivation and care of a portion of the old homestead. Fifty acres of the original tract has been sold, so that Miss Smith now owns and operates thirty acres all in full-bearing vineyard. She is most progressive in her methods of farming and her labors and supervision have been attended with excellent results. As her father was a staunch Republican so Miss Smith votes. Her father was also a strong and active member of the Woodbridge Masonic Lodge and Miss Smith is past matron of Woodbridge Chapter No. 118 of the Eastern Star Lodge at Woodbridge. She is a Presbyterian in religion and her mother was one of the early members of Woodbridge Presbyterian Church. Her life has been characterized by unflagging industry and it is upon this foundation that she has builded her present prosperity.

OTTO SPENKER.—A prosperous agriculturist and viticulturist of San Joaquin County, Otto Spenker belongs to one of the well known old-time Californian families who were early settlers of this locality. His home estate, situated three and a half miles west of Lodi on the Kelly Road, consists of 640 acres. He was born on his father's ranch, which he now owns, June 22, 1871, his parents being Joseph and Anna (Schliemann) Spenker. The father was born in the province of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, in 1834. He grew to manhood in Germany, and at the age of twenty, in 1854, took passage at Hamburg on a sailing vessel which twenty-eight days later landed him in New York City. During the several subsequent years he employed himself in several of the southern and western states, and for two years was in Stephenson County, Ill. From Freeport, Ill., in 1859 he started for California, joining a train consisting of eighteen wagons and driving an ox-team across the plains. They arrived in this state about the middle of September, and for a short time after his arrival he was engaged in mining gold. Then for several years he was in the employ of others in ranching in San Joaquin County, and in the fall of 1864 he began business in that line for himself, locating on a place about eight miles north of Stockton. He continued there until the fall of 1872, when he settled on the ranch near Woodbridge where he carried on his agricultural operations until his death. In 1870 Mr. Spenker was married to Miss Anna Schliemann, a native of Schleswig-Holstein, Germany. By this union there were two children, Otto and Jessie, the wife of Henry C. Beckman. Both parents were members of the German Lutheran Church in Lodi. The father passed away in 1916 at the age of eighty-three, and the mother resides on the old home place with her son, our subject.

Otto Spenker attended the grammar school at Woodbridge, finishing at the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge, taking a three years' course and graduating in 1889. From youth up he was successfully identified with his father in extensive farming pursuits. His father owned 1000 acres of land along the Mokelumne River, a portion of which was heavily timbered and much of this was cleared and put under cultivation. Mr. Spenker now owns 640 acres, seventy of which is in vineyard, sixty acres in alfalfa and the balance general farming land; the entire ranch is under the Stockton-Mokelumne irrigation system. He is a director in the First National Bank of Lodi and a stockholder in the Lodi Investment Company. In 1907 he erected a fine residence on his property, where he now resides with his mother.

LOUIS F. STABELL.—One mile west of Clements is located the 100-acre ranch owned by Louis F. Stabell, an energetic farmer of good business qualifications. He was born in Alsace near Strasbourg on May 11, 1862, the son of Frank and Caroline Stabell, farmers of their native country. Louis F. Stabell is one of a family of four children, but the only one residing in California. In 1880, Mr. Stabell came to the United States and worked for wages for five years in New York, or until he came to California. Arriving in California, he stopped for a short time in Sacramento. Going then to San Joaquin County, he worked as foreman for James Brown on his dairy ranch and remained there for the following fifteen years. He then went to Terminous and purchased a sixty-acre tract of land, and in the meantime owned and operated the Terminous store and hotel for sixteen years, when he sold his interests and located at Clements and purchased the place where he has since resided. His place consists of 100 acres one mile west of Clements which was a barley field in 1918, but which Mr. Stabell has patiently and intelligently brought to a high state of cultivation. He has eighteen acres in vineyard, a family orchard and twelve acres in alfalfa. Mr. Stabell is a man that is never idle, is never satisfied unless he is helping to increase the yield of the soil, thus aiding materially in the progress of the community.

Mr. Stabell's marriage in San Francisco on November 7, 1892, united him with Miss Ceciline Gorman, a native of Quebec, Canada. Mrs. Stabell came to California in 1889 in company with a brother. Mr. and Mrs. Stabell are the parents of two children: Paul L. and Viola. In national politics a Republican, Mr. Stabell readily aids all measures that are for the upbuilding and development of the community where he has made his home for the past thirty-seven years.

CLARENCE B. TENNYSON, D. D. S.—Activity and energy in business affairs will do more to advance a man in his financial standing than the influence of friends or the assistance that comes through inheritance. In America the man is held in highest esteem who has builded his success upon the foundation of his own energy, capable management and keen discrimination. Such a one is Clarence B. Tennyson, the popular and successful dental surgeon of Lodi, Cal. He was born at Three Rivers, Mich., April 8, 1876, a son of Daniel D. and Lilly (Benham) Tennyson, natives of England and Michigan, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Tennyson are the parents of three children, Dr. H. A. Tennyson, Clarenence B. of this sketch, and J. B., in the postal service in San Jose. The father is a Government land attorney in San Jose, where he located when our subject was a young lad.

Clarence B. began his education in the grammar school of San Jose and after his graduation from the San Jose high school he entered the Dental Department of the University of California, remaining a student there for two years. He then entered the office of Thomas Morfield, D. D. S., in San Francisco, where he was employed for one year, and then finished his dental studies at the College of Physicians and Surgeons at San Francisco, from whence he graduated with the degree of D. D. S. with the class of 1899. He remained in San Francisco for a year engaged in the practice of his profession, then in 1900 removed to Lodi where he has steadily built up a fine practice; he has well-appointed offices in the Hale Building on West Pine Street, and he employs the best scientific methods known to dental surgery.

On December 11, 1897, in San Francisco, Dr. Tennyson was married to Miss Jeannette Hamilton, born in San Jose, Cal., a daughter of W. C. Hamilton, an early settler of San Jose, Cal., who was born in the North of Ireland, while the mother was a native of Ohio. Dr. and Mrs. Tennyson are the parents of two children: Vivian Barbara and Alfred H. and they reside at 303 North School Street, Lodi. In politics Dr. Tennyson is a Republican and fraternally is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and with his family is a member of the Congregational Church of Lodi.

WILLIAM HENRY THOMPSON.—Among the prosperous and progressive agriculturists and viticulturists of San Joaquin County, is William Henry Thompson, now living retired, but still interested in that most attractive industry, grape culture. He was born on his father's ranch in San Joaquin County about two miles south of Lodi on August 10, 1873, a son of James Edward and Angeline (Pope) Thompson. The father, James E. Thompson, was born in Arkansas in 1839 and when he was twenty-one years old he started across the plains with his parents. They came with an ox-team train consisting of twenty-eight wagons, arriving in California in 1861, and their first stopping place was Woodbridge. The father mined at Copperopolis in the early days; later coming to the Lodi district he bought a ranch three and a half miles from Lodi in the Alpine school district and it was in this school that our subject received his education; he is one of a family of five children, namely, John, Katherine, Mrs. Goodwin of Lodi; William Henry; Amelia, residing in Alameda; Bert died at the age of thirteen. The father acquired 240 acres of land in the Lodi section and set five acres to vineyard and two acres to an almond orchard. Before his death, he sold his entire property and removed to Lodi where he passed away at the age of seventy-seven years; the mother still lives in Lodi at the age of seventy-five years.

William Henry Thompson was occupied assisting his father in the management of the home ranch until he was twenty-eight years old, then he bought fifteen acres on the Lockeford Road two and a half miles east of Lodi; nine acres he set to Zinfandel grapes and five acres to Tokay grapes and he built a comfortable house on the place with good farm buildings. He was married at Stockton on November 11, 1903, to Miss Lulu Beckman, born on the same ranch and in the same house as her husband, a daughter of William and Sophie (Fox) Beckman, born in Germany and Sonora, Cal., respectively. William Beckman came to California when about sixteen years old, locating at Lodi where he married Sophia Fox, a daughter of John and Minnie (Hackie) Fox, pioneers of Sonora, Cal. William Beckman died on his farm and his widow now resides in Lodi. They had six children: Lulu, Mrs. Thompson; Mrs. Emma Tucker of Fresno; Albert of Stockton; Edith resides with her mother; Charles and Eugene of Lodi; the latter served overseas in the 91st Division.

Mr. and Mrs. Thompson lived on their ranch for eight years after their marriage, then sold it and bought a house and lot on Cherokee Lane east of Lodi. About six years ago he purchased a residence in Lodi and moved to town and in 1920 he bought six lots on the corner of Sargent Road and Quimby Avenue and has erected an oil service station and store on the corner and has it leased. Mr. Thompson has an eight-year lease on a twenty-five acre Tokay vineyard just north of the corner of Stockton and Almond Avenue one and a half miles south of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are the parents of three children: Verda Bernice, William Edward and Vernon Henry, and in politics both are Republicans. Mr. Thompson is a member of the Maccabees of Lodi and Mrs. Thompson is a member of Lodi Parlor, N. D. G. W., and also of the auxiliary to the American Legion and W. R. C., and both are members of the Lodi Methodist Episcopal Church.

MELVILLE R. HOWLAND.—A representative successful viticulturist of San Joaquin County, Melville R. Howland resides on his home place of seven acres southeast of Lodi. He was born at Lathrop, Cal., on October 1, 1893, a son of Oliver M. and Joanna (Remington) Howland. Oliver M. Howland was also born at Lathrop, where his father had settled in 1851, having crossed the plains to California that year. There were four children in the family: Humphrey B., Melville R., Aubrey O. and Gertrude. The father passed away at the age of fifty-one and the mother now resides in Stockton, Cal.

Melville R. Howland began his education in Stockton, whither his parents had moved when he was two years old; later the family moved to Santa Cruz and he attended the Santa Cruz high school. He then took up civil engineering and was employed by various companies throughout the state; then for six years he worked for the city of Stockton as a civil engineer. His marriage occurred at Lodi on September 1, 1917, and united him with Miss Ruth Brown, a daughter of William C. and Emma McSherry Brown. The father is a native of San Joaquin County and is a member of the well-known realty firm of Ashley & Brown. The most recent engineering work done by Mr. Howland was in reclamation work in the No. 2020 Reclamation District lying in the northeastern part of the county, but now devotes most of his time and energies to the cultivation and further development of his 140-acre Tokay vineyard at Escalon. This vineyard is under the South San Joaquin County Irrigation Ditch and Mr. Howland has ample water for irrigating purposes. On his home place of seven acres he has built a modern bungalow and has installed a pumping plant. In politics he is a Democrat and fraternally is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and is a past president of the latter order.

CHARLES DE CARLI.—A native son, born in Stockton, April 13, 1872, Charles De Carli is the son of Charles De Carli, who was born in Canton Ticino, Switzerland. Having been left an orphan he came to Stockton, Cal., when twelve years of age and was in the employ of Antonio Galgini's fish market where he learned the business so that later on he started a business of his own as a dealer in fish, poultry and eggs, being located on Weber Avenue.

Here he continued in business and was on the high road to success when he was stricken in death from small pox at the age of thirty-two years, having already accumulated considerable property. He had married a native daughter of San Joaquin County, a Miss Isadora Versallo, whose parents were California pioneers, and she passed away at the age of forty-two years, leaving two children, Charles of this review and William Tell.

On completing the grammar school, Charles became a clerk in the grocery store of Granville Bros., continuing with them for twenty-five years, becoming one of their most valued employees. Resigning his position in 1916, he entered the employ of the city as janitor of Franklin school, the Board of Education having sent for him to accept the place, as it was an exceptionally difficult place to fill. However, he discharged his duties satisfactorily for four years and then was transferred to the street department and soon afterwards to the park department, and he is now in charge of Columbus Park. Mr. De Carli's marriage occurred in Merced County, where he was united with Rosa A. Vacaro of that county, and they have one daughter, Mrs. Madeline Christy of Stockton. Mr. De Carli is prominent fraternally, being a member and treasurer of Iroquois Tribe of Red Men and has served as secretary and treasurer of the board of relief of the Red Men for this district for the past ten years. He is also a member of the Independent Order of Eagles, having been a member of its board of trustees. The U. P. E. C. also number him among its members. He has been active as a Republican, having served about twenty years as a member of the Republican County Central Committee.

HARVEY A. GOODMAN.—The farming interests of San Joaquin County find a worthy representative in Harvey A. Goodman, who makes his home on his eighteen-acre vineyard on the Quimby Road in the Lodi section of the county. His has been a successful career and one which indicates the opportunities that are open to young men of determination, ambition and diligence. He was born at Sycamore, Ill., on June 1, 1852, a son of Henry and Lizzette (Brown) Goodman, and is one of two children, the other being a sister, Francilia. When our subject was a small lad of two years, the family removed to Chatfield, Minn., and here his father homesteaded eighty acres of land; later he purchased thirty-five acres in the same vicinity and engaged in farming.

Harvey A. Goodman received his education in the grammar and high school of Chatfield, Minn., and on Christmas Eve, 1874, was married to Miss Jennie A. Robinson, a native of the same part of Illinois as her husband, and a daughter of Joseph Robinson, a farmer who moved to Olmsted County, Minn., where he lived a few years, then moved to Anoka, the same state, where he passed away. Mrs. Goodman's mother died in California at the age of ninety-four years. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Goodman purchased a 120-acre farm and engaged in grain raising for three years, then disposed of the farm at a good profit. He then removed to Grand Forks, N. D., where he homesteaded a tract of land and later took up a timber claim and still later added a quarter section to what he already had, by purchase; this land he farmed for twenty years, from 1874 until 1895, when he sold out and removed to Lodi, Cal. He still owns a timber claim in Aitkin County, Minn., consisting of eighty acres.

Upon settling at Lodi, Mr. Goodman bought eighty acres of grain land and immediately set about to improve it, planting thirteen acres to vineyard, the vines being now twelve years old, and five acres devoted to orchard, alfalfa and building space; he also erected a comfortable residence and has installed a pumping plant. One acre of the orchard is in full-bearing cherries and one acre in young trees. Mr. and Mrs. Goodman are the parents of four children: Minerva, a practicing physician at Stockton; Etta; Roy A., owner and proprietor of Goodman's Groceries at Lodi, and Alice, Mrs. Burnett, of Stockton. Mr. Goodman and a daughter jointly own ten acres just off of Kettleman Lane one mile south of Lodi; seven and one-half acres is in Tokay grapes and the balance Empress, all full bearing. While residing in Dakota, Mr. Goodman was supervisor of Inkster township and for three years was township assessor and three years township treasurer. Politically he is a Republican and fraternally a member of the Foresters of America, and with his family is a member of the Congregational Church of Lodi.

CHARLES W. COFFELT.—A resident of California since 1891, Charles W. Coffelt was born near Monticello, Piatt County, Ill., February 22, 1861. His father, George W. Coffelt, a native of Indiana, came of an old Eastern family. He married Mary Nasalwoods of Indiana. They were farmers and removed to Piatt County, Ill., and later to Kansas, purchasing prairie land in Bourbon County and improved a farm and there the parents passed away. Of their seven children five are living, our subject and his brother, I. Newton, being the only ones in California.

From the age of four years Charles W. was reared on the Kansas farm and attended the local schools. When he started for himself he worked in the coal mines for a time, then in a nursery. He made a trip back to Illinois and was married in Piatt County in 1884 to Miss Ella Haltorn, born in that county, and they engaged in farming in Linn County, Kansas. In September, 1891, they came to Stockton, where for a time Mr. Coffelt was employed at ranching. Later he was employed at the Clark Sanitarium, where he had charge of the stock and the grounds over a period of seven years. He then was for three years with the Naumkeg Bakery until he became an employee of the City Park Commission. He was in charge of Weber Park for three years and then Independent Park for six months, and then transferred to Liberty Park, where he had charge for three years, and since the spring of 1915 he has had charge of Independent Park. He built a residence at 129 East Clay, where he resides with his family. His union has been blessed with two children: Curtis F. and Mrs. Hazel D. Duff, both residing in Stockton and each has a child. Mr. Coffelt is a liberal and kindhearted man and he and his wife are highly esteemed by all who know them. He is a member of Truth Lodge of Odd Fellows and the Junior Order A. O. U. M., and with his wife is a member of Daughters of America.

ROBERT W. HANNA.—A native of Missouri, Robert W. Hanna was born at Forsyth, Taney County, March 10, 1848. His father, Dr. John G. Hanna, was born in Indiana, where he married Miss Salina J. Hopkins, a native of Ohio. They removed to Missouri and later to Madrid, Boone County, Iowa, where they were farmers. Mr. Hanna volunteered his services for the Civil War and enlisted in Company A, 10th Iowa Volunteer Infantry, being commissioned a first lieutenant. He was mustered out at the close of the war and then studied medicine. Removing to Sumner County, Kansas, he practiced medicine, later removing to Linn County, the same state, and followed his profession until his death. His widow afterwards came to Stockton and spent her last days with her son, Robert W., who was the youngest of her three children, two of whom are living. He attended school in Iowa and also in Sumner County, Kansas.

Mr. Hanna was married at Wellington, Kansas, to Miss Alice Evelyn Reardon, born in Bowling Green, Ind., a daughter of John and Margaret (Mitchell) Reardon, natives of Indiana and Ohio, respectively; the mother having been born in the same town as General Grant. John Reardon died in 1852 and the widow, with her two little girls removed to Boone, Iowa, accompanying her father to that place, and there she engaged in the millinery business, reared and educated her children. Later she removed to Napoleon, Kans., where she engaged in business until her death. Alice Evelyn, the youngest of her two daughters, received a good education in the public schools.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Hanna farmed in Sumner County, Kans., until 1872, then came to Modesto, Calif., and after farming there for four years, returned to Sumner County, Kans., and there in 1876 they homesteaded 160 acres of land which they improved from the raw prairie and engaged in raising wheat, for five years, then sold out and made a trip to Colorado, and returning to Kansas engaged in farming in Linn County. They always had a desire to return to California, and as their son had come hither in 1900, they came out to Stockton in 1902. For five years he was in the Numkeg Bakery and then ranched until he entered the employ of the Stockton Electric Railway in 1909, as caretaker and manager of Oak Park, and when the city purchased the park he and his wife were requested to remain in charge. Since then the city has added a zoo and Mr. and Mrs. Hanna are caring for the animals and birds, studying their habits as well as the preparation of their food; a part of the park has been developed as picnic playgrounds and some as tourist camp grounds, and has become very popular.

Mr. and Mrs. Hanna have been blessed with three children: William is with the Holt Manufacturing Company; George in the employ of the Rural Cemetery; Gertrude is Mrs. Meek of Oklahoma. Mr. Hanna is a member of the Order of Railway Employees and Mrs. Hanna is chaplain of the local W. R. C., and both are staunch Republicans.

GEORGE W. HEMPHILL.—A representative of the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County, who is also a native son of California, is George W. Hemphill, who was born and reared on the old Hemphill ranch west of Lodi on the Sargent Road. His birth occurred April 6, 1891, and he is a son of Edward H. and Lena (Walkmeister) Hemphill, natives of Iowa and Switzerland, respectively. Originally the Hemphills came from Ireland to the United States and settled in Ohio. Grandfather John Hemphill was a veteran of the Civil War, and was with General Sherman on the famous march to the sea. Grandfather Hemphill came to California in 1866 in search of a milder climate than that of Iowa, and the following year brought his family to San Joaquin County, where he had bought 160 acres. He added to this until he owned 640 acres, a portion of which is still owned by Edward H. Hemphill, the father of our subject. Two of his daughters also own their portions. The mother passed away in January, 1911, while the father resides at the present time in Lodi. They had three children, of whom two grew up. George W. Hemphill is the youngest of them. He received his early education at the Lafayette public school, then entered the Lodi high school. After his school days were over he assisted his father on the home ranch. He leased the home place of 185 acres and for eight years ran it, doing general farming. Since 1921 his brother, John Lester, is operating half of it and our subject is farming the balance.

The marriage of Mr. Hemphill occurred on November 11, 1914, at Stockton, and united him with Miss Ethel Geirmann, a native of Walnut Grove, Cal., daughter of Charles and Amanda (Kelly) Geirmann. Her mother was born at Michigan Bar, Cal., and came to San Joaquin County with her father, where she was reared and educated in the Henderson district school. Her parents are living at Woodbridge, where Mr. Geirmann conducts the blacksmith shop. In politics Mr. Hemphill is a Republican, and fraternally he is affiliated with Woodbridge Lodge, No. 131, F. & A. M., with the Sciots, No. 5, of Stockton, and with his wife is a member of Woodbridge Chapter, No. 118, O. E. S. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias of Lodi. The Hemphill name is a highly honored one in this part of California, and its bearers have proved themselves worthy of esteem in every relation of life.

JOHN LESTER HEMPHILL.—Many years have passed since the family to which John Lester Hemphill belongs became identified with the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County. Its members have been active in its progress and development, and our subject, too, since old enough to hold a plow, has done his share toward the development of this section of the state. He was born on the old Hemphill ranch, located about five miles west of Lodi on the Sargent Road, May 11, 1888, the youngest of two sons of Edward H. and Lena (Walkmeister) Hemphill, the former a native of Linn County, Iowa, and the latter of Canton Berne, Switzerland. The Hemphill family originally came from Ireland and settled in Ohio, but when grandfather John Hemphill was twenty-one years old he removed to Linn County, Iowa, and was living there when the Civil War broke out. He served under Sherman and was in the celebrated march to the sea, at which time he lost his health. At the close of the war he was mustered out of service and returned to his home in Iowa. In 1866 he came to California for his health, and finding this climate a congenial one, in 1857 he brought his family here and located in San Joaquin County, where he bought a ranch of 160 acres, now the home place of our subject. He married Miss Elizabeth Thompson, a native of Pennsylvania, and they were the parents of four children, of whom the father of our subject was the eldest. Grandfather Hemphill owned a section of land at the time of his death in 1885, and became a very successful farmer. Of the old Hemphill ranch, the father still owns 160 acres, and twenty-five more adjoining, of which fifty-two acres is in vineyard; and our subject leases the place from his father and resides there. The father is still living and resides in Lodi, but the mother passed away in January, 1911.

John Lester Hemphill received a grammar school education in the schools of Lodi. On July 27, 1911, at Sacramento, Cal., he was married to Miss Adele Jones, born west of Woodbridge on the old Jones ranch. Her father, Thomas Jones, a native of Wales, was a pioneer of California; and her mother, Amelia (Bishopberger) Jones, was a daughter of a very early pioneer of California, who came from Switzerland. Both parents are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Hemphill are the parents of five sons: Maurice, Elwin, Delbert, Donald, and Wesley. In 1911, Mr. Hemphill began work as a helper in old Lodi Garage, and learned automobile repairing. In 1913 he went to Woodland, where he was a mechanic in Allen's Garage and later Meier's Garage. In 1915 he removed to Sacramento, where he started business as a member of the firm of R. A. Meier Reo Company, located at 1308 K Street, handling Reo cars. In 1917 he sold out and entered the employ of the State Highway Company, where he had charge, as foreman of maintenance of the Ford ears at 34th and R Streets. He continued there until 1921, when he resigned to return home and engage in ranching. In politics he is a Republican.

FRED HOFF.—An honored Californian who has made agriculture his lifelong pursuit is Fred Hoff, who, since 1917, has made his home on his choice estate of 300 acres, about five and a half miles southwest of Lodi on the Lincoln Highway. Mr. Hoff is a man of great enterprise and industry and he has been engaged in steady and worthy endeavor ever since boyhood. He was born at Menno, S. D., October 25, 1883, a son of Jacob and Charlotte Hoff, the former a farmer in South Dakota, who died three months before our subject was born. There were two other children in the family, Mary, deceased, and Eva, Mrs. Chris Suesse. Subsequently the mother married William Hieb and reared a large family.

Fred Hoff had little opportunity to secure an education, for he was a lad of only eight years when he was obliged to begin earning his own living, working for his board and clothes. In 1896, his stepfather brought the family to California and Fred worked on a ranch about a mile and a half east of Lodi, but this job was of short duration; he then worked three months for Mr. Hogan on Cherokee Lane, receiving twenty dollars per month, then he went to Galt, Cal., where he worked for Gallagher Bros. for two years, when he returned to Lodi and was employed on the grain and stock ranch of John Emde, southwest of Lodi.

On January 1, 1905, in Lodi, Mr. Hoff was married to Miss Bertha Schenkenberger, a native of Scotland.

S. D., a daughter of John and Louise (Barrett) Schenkenberger, both natives of South Russia. John Schenkenberger came to California in 1898 from Dakota and both parents are now living in Lodi. They reared a family of eleven children: Louise died at the age of forty-two; Amelia, Mrs. Lange, resides in North Dakota; Lydia, Mrs. Stoddard, resides in Fresno; Bertha, Mrs. Hoff; John and Henry reside in Lodi; Pauline, Mrs. John A. Bender, resides in Lodi; Christine, Mrs. Hieb, resides in Oakland; Jacob W. resides in Lodi; Sarah, Mrs. W. A. Moore, resides in Lodi, and Samuel. Mr. Hoff's first purchase of land was a fourteen acre tract southeast of Lodi on Kettleman Lane; this he set to vineyard and in 1909 sold it and bought forty acres in the Victor section, which he set to orchard and vineyard, then sold it and moved to the Barnhart tract on Kettleman Lane, where he leased a tract of land for a year; later he rented the McMurtry ranch of eighty acres and the Beatty and Earl ranches of 100 acres each, and farmed them six years. In 1917 he purchased the Earl ranch and after holding it for one year sold it. In 1920 he had 260 acres in tomatoes which made him a loss of $18,000. In 1921 he purchased 200 acres of the Mettler ranch, five and a half miles southwest of Lodi on the Lincoln Highway, where he now resides. He leveled the ranch for irrigation and put in three pumping plants, and has set the entire 200 acres to Tokay and Zinfandel grapes. That same year he bought the Beatty ranch of 100 acres, leveled it and set it to Tokays. Mr. Hoff has helped various farmers during harvest time for the past twenty-five years and for the past four years has done contract harvesting with a Holt twenty-foot harvester and a forty-five horsepower Holt caterpillar engine. About 1904 he began operating a hay-baler and still continues that work. He does contract leveling, ditching and road work, working fifty head of mules and twenty head of horses, besides tractors, and has as high as thirty men on his payroll. For a number of years he was among the largest vineyardists of this section, controlling a large acreage. He has set out about 1500 acres to vines and trees under contract in the last twenty years. He has a lease on 600 acres of tule land which he farms to grain. On the 100-acre vineyard he had under lease before the price of grapes went up, he pulled the vines out, much to his regret and loss; recently he has reset this 100 acres to young vines. He markets his fruit through the Pacific Fruit Exchange. Mr. and Mrs. Hoff are the parents of seven children: Vera, Henrietta, Viola, Earl, Walter, Edwin, and Donald. Fraternaly he is a member of the Eagles of Lodi and in politics is a Republican.

MAXWELL H. CUSICK.—A successful stock-raiser, Maxwell H. Cusick owns and conducts a thirty-two acre ranch, where he breeds pure Holstein dairy cattle and Duroc-Jersey hogs. He was born near Rochester, Monroe County, N. Y., on May 9, 1862, a son of James Maxwell and Mary E. (Wellman) Cusick, the former a native of Monroe County, N. Y., and the latter of Albany Co., N. Y. When Maxwell H. Cusick was a little over four years old, he was taken by his parents to Minnesota where they settled near Owatonna, Steele County, where he first attended school. The father, James Maxwell Cusick, bought school land in Minnesota and lived there until 1897, when he came to Southern California. There were eight children in the family: Morris resides at Fullerton, Cal.; Maxwell of this review; George lives at Byron, Cal.; Mary resides in Rochester, Minn.; Emma lives at Geneva, Minn.; Augusta lives in Man-kato, Minn.; Henrietta, deceased; Jessie resides in Los Angeles, Cal. The father passed away at Whittier, Cal., at the age of ninety-five years. Mrs. Cusick lived to reach her ninety-first year. This worthy couple lived together for almost sixty-five years.

When Maxwell H. Cusick was seventeen years of age, he left home and began teaching school in Minnesota and attended the Academy, teaching between times to support himself. In 1887 he attended Madison University (now Colgate University), Hamilton, N. Y., and in 1891 finished at the University of Rochester, N. Y. He then entered the ministry of the Baptist Church at St. Charles and Granite Falls, Minn.; and later was minister at Rose and Walworth, N. Y. Giving up the ministry, he engaged in farming near Rochester, N. Y., for seven years, and in 1903 sold his real estate there and came to California, settling at La Habra, where he continued his farming operations until 1908. Removing to Oregon, he homesteaded a ranch on the Rogue River, which he proved up on and later sold on account of his wife's health. The family then moved to Santa Rosa, Cal., and in 1914, Mrs. Cusick passed away. They were the parents of six children. Milton resides in Stockton. He served as second lieutenant of infantry during the World War, trained troops in the United States, then was sent to Europe and was there when the armistice was signed; he remained there during the winter and was sent to Edinburgh University at Edinburgh, where he took an agricultural course for four months, then returned to the United States. Mary lives at Stockton; James and Roy live at Ripon; James served as a sergeant in the air service, as a mechanic, spending two years in Europe, then returned to the United States and received his discharge; Henrietta lives in Stockton; and Ida is at home.

After Mrs. Cusick's death, the family came to San Joaquin County to the present home about one mile east of Harmony Grove schoolhouse, where Mr. Cusick purchased thirty-two acres of land and where he maintains his herd of pure-bred Holstein cattle and Duroc-Jersey hogs. In politics, he is a Republican, and while residing in Oregon was justice of the peace of his township.

OLIVER C. CUTTS.—A progressive, prosperous rancher, whose methods and results would afford a theme for profitable study, is Oliver C. Cutts, the owner of some choice Delta farms about nine miles to the southwest of Stockton, in the Middle Division of Roberts Isle, just off Tracy Road. He was born in Rio Vista on the 25th of November, 1868, his father being Henry Harrison Cutts, a native of the Empire State, who came out to California in the early fifties, and as the owner of a river boat undertook the transportation of freight and passengers from Rio Vista to Sacramento. After a while, he sold the boat and conducted a hotel at Rio Vista. He also had a rancho off Steamboat Slough, and there he passed away, near Walnut Grove, in 1871, survived by his wife—who was Mary P. Odell before her marriage—and three sons. In 1872, on May 2, the widow was remarried to Benson D. Beckley, who proved both a considerate stepfather and a devoted husband. Mrs. Cutts-Beckley was born in Michigan, on June 1, 1848, and with her parents crossed the great plains with ox teams, about 1854, to California, where they settled on land on the Sacramento River, near the capital. Grandfather Odell was an early pioneer of Walnut Grove, and had a farm in early days, the center of which is now the site of the Libby-McNeil-Libby plant. The old home, a large, pretentious red brick house, can be seen today in passing along the Sacramento River, standing out as a silent monument to the foresight and grit, as well as the taste, of the man who built it. The city of Walnut Grove is located on a portion of the Odell ranch, but the pioneer—as is so often the case—did not reap the benefit of his struggle for success, that benefit having fallen to later comers. Benson D. Beckley was born in Dayton, Ohio, and came West with his parents in the early fifties; they settled in Sacramento County, where they reared their six children, and where the old home is today. He served as a member of the state militia, founded by Governor Stanford in 1861, and was among those who helped preserve peace and order among both the Indians and the natives. He carried the United States mail by pack-horse from Fort Yuma to Fort McDowell, and later as a stage driver between Walnut Grove and Sacramento City. He died on August 10, 1918, at a venerable age, breathing his last in the Soldiers' Home at Napa.

Among the most satisfying recollections of our subject is the fact that he always stood by his parents, sending them, after leaving home, what money he could, to help keep up the home, as those were hard years for the farmers on the Sacramento Delta. In 1886, he came into San Joaquin County and worked on the Odell ranch near Lathrop. Later he found employment on the J. M. Blankenship ranch near French Camp. Each winter he returned to his home in Sacramento County, and there he remained after 1889. The year previous, he entered the Delta on Roberts Island, and he has ever since been identified with its development, first as a farm hand, then as a foreman on a large tract of land, and finally as the owner of two fine ranches. The first was purchased in 1901, and embraced forty acres; and to that he added by subsequent purchases, so that now he has ninety acres in the home place, and eighty acres nearby.

On January 21, 1910, Mr. Cutts received a clear title to a claim in Calaveras County, including 160 acres; but due to priority mining claims, this property was segregated, and now he owns only ninety-two acres; but it is valuable range land, and the patent was signed by President Taft. In 1912, however, Mr. Cutts suffered severe loss in the destruction of his home by fire, but two years later he rebuilt his residence, erecting a far handsomer and more comfortable home than before.

As early as April 25, 1899, Mr. Cutts had married, at Stockton, Miss Sarah Etta Brown, the daughter of George W. and Mary (White) Brown, natives of Illinois and Arkansas, respectively. When they were children of nine years and two years, respectively, they crossed the plains with their parents in an ox-team train, being nine months en route. The family friendship thus formed continued after the arrival in California, and in due time the young folks were married. The paternal grandparents settled near Stockton, where they spent the remainder of their lives. The maternal grandparents, the Whites, settled in Calaveras County, and when the Copperopolis Mine was opened, they opened the first boarding-house. Later on, Mr. White was engaged in freighting, but soon purchased a farm near Stockton, where he became one of the progressive farmers. Selling out, he removed to Texas, after raising a family of thirteen children. In Texas, he became a large farmer and stockman, continuing active until his death in 1917, at the age of ninety-eight, his wife having passed away fifteen years previously. Mr. White was a decided optimist and a public-spirited man, and his was a very interesting and worthy career.

George W. Brown was a very progressive farmer at Collegeville, where he owned about a thousand acres of land, and farmed other ranches besides. He also ran a stationary thresher all over the county, and was well and favorably known. He finally discontinued operating on such a large scale, and thereafter devoted his time to general farming on his ranch. Mr. Brown was a Democrat, and was prominent in county conventions and committees. He died at Lathrop, in 1907. His widow still lives and is the mother of ten children, all living, of whom Mrs. Cutts is the fourth in order of birth. She was born at Collegeville and received her education in the public school of the Wildwood district.

Mr. and Mrs. Cutts are the parents of four children: Veva G., a graduate of the Stockton High School, the wife of Joe M. Davis, of Lodi, and the mother of one child; Ora Mae, also a graduate of the Stockton High School, and now the stenographer for the R. E. Doan Company; Cecil R., attending the Stockton High School; and Robert O., in grammar school. In 1922, Mr. Cutts moved into Stockton, in order to provide better educational facilities for his children. He has always been a strong advocate of farming by irrigation, and spends most of his time looking after his ranch.

A Republican in respect to his preference for party standards, Mr. Cutts heartily supported all the Liberty Loans and Red Cross work. As a member of Charity Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Stockton, he helps along its benevolent work in whatever way he can. He takes a very live interest in the cause of education, and has been clerk of the board of trustees of Fairchild School for the past twenty years, interesting himself particularly in child-welfare work.

JOSEPH F. MERRILL.—Among the younger generation of ranchers in San Joaquin County is Joseph F. Merrill, a native son, who is a prosperous and enterprising agriculturist and vineyardist residing about three miles southeast of Lodi on Harney Lane. He was born at Lodi, California, on January 11, 1895, a son of Eugene and Anna Virginia (Whitaker) Merrill, the former a native of New York and the latter of California. The father came to California in an early day and was a building contractor and farmer and built many homes in Lodi and vicinity. The mother is the daughter of F. M. and M. J. Whitaker, natives of Kentucky and Arkansas, respectively. Grandmother Whitaker came to California with her parents in 1861, and they purchased a home in San Joaquin County. In 1865 Grandmother Whitaker purchased property and in order to obtain a clear title had to pay for it twice. Grandfather Whitaker came to California in 1854 and was a blacksmith by occupation, but followed farming later in life. He passed away in 1876 at the age of forty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Merrill had four children:

Mamie Adaline, Mrs. C. C. Wright of Chowchilla; Nellie, Mrs. Howard Gillespie; Henry F. of Lodi and Joseph F. The mother inherited fifty acres of the old Whitaker homestead and from time to time portions have been sold off until she now owns twenty acres, which her son Joseph F. leases and on which he resides.

Joseph F. Merrill received his education in the Live Oak and Alpine district schools of San Joaquin County and became well versed in agricultural pursuits in his youth. On September 1, 1917, he entered the U. S. Army and was sent to Camp Lewis in the 363rd Infantry, where he trained for one year; then was transferred to Camp Fremont and while there was taken ill and was placed in a casual camp of convalescent soldiers, where he remained for six months and was then discharged November 30, 1918.

At Stockton on October 7, 1919, Mr. Merrill was married to Miss Florence Margaret Bucknell, also a native of California, a daughter of Frank and Georgia Bucknell, both natives of the Golden State whose families were early pioneers. Mr. and Mrs. Merrill are the parents of three children: Margaret Virginia, Joseph Eugene, and Helen Elaine. Mr. Merrill owns ten acres on Harney Lane near where he resides, two acres of which is in peaches and almonds and five acres in young vines, and it is Mr. Merrill's intention to build a modern house on this place. He is a Republican in politics and a member of the American Legion of Lodi.

JOHN MARTIN MILLER.—John M. Miller was born in the province of Würtemberg, Germany, near Tübingen, on June 13, 1861, a son of John and Judith (Foell) Miller. His father, John Miller, was an expert locksmith who lived and died in his native country of Germany. The mother also died there. Of their fourteen children John M. was the seventh. He received a good education in the schools of Germany, and when he was fourteen years old learned the baker's trade in the town of Moessingen. He followed his trade for two years in his home city. In February, 1879, he came to Hoboken, N. J., but soon made his way to Albany, N. Y., where he was employed at the butcher trade until 1881, when he came to California. He was employed on the Dos Palos ranch of Miller & Lux, beginning as a general farm laborer; later, for nearly ten years, he was a sub-foreman on the large ranch. He then went to San Francisco for a short time, and then to Madera, Madera County, Cal., where he bought and conducted a bakery business. At the end of one year he disposed of his business and went to Brazil, South America, in 1893, where he spent the next two years. In 1896 he returned to California and leased a ranch near Bellota, engaging in dairying and farming. In 1904 he purchased his ranch of eighty-seven acres, four and one-half miles east of Lodi, which he improved in part to vineyard and orchard. In April, 1922, he sold the ranch and located in Lodi, where he resides with his family. He also owns a ten-acre vineyard near Woodbridge which he cares for and operates.

On June 15, 1898, at The Dalles, Oregon, Mr. Miller was married to Miss Emma Mack, also a native of Germany, born near Heilbronn, Würtemberg, a daughter of Theodore and Lena (K'ooz) Mack. Her father, Theodore Mack, died when she was a small girl, and her mother married again, and Mrs. Miller was reared by her grandparents. She came to America and to The Dalles, Ore., when she was sixteen years old, and lived there for seven years, or until she was married. There were five children in her family, of whom she is the oldest, the others being Anna, Josephine, Bertha and Otto. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are the parents of three children. Lena is a graduate nurse from St. Joseph's Hospital at Stockton; Grace, a graduate of Heald's Business College, is a stenographer and resides in Stockton; Otto is at home. Since their marriage they have resided continuously in San Joaquin County. Improvements made by Mr. Miller include a fine irrigating system, pumping the water from a small lake on his ranch to irrigate his vineyard. As soon as possible, after arriving in California, Mr. Miller took out his citizenship papers in Fresno County, and his loyalty as an American citizen has never been questioned. In national politics he is a Republican. He was trustee of Victor School District, and with his wife is a member of St. Peter's German Lutheran Church in Lodi.

EUGENE F. NICKEL.—An enterprising citizen of Lodi Eugene F. Nickel is the owner of an apartment house located at 17½ West Elm Street. He was born at Frankfort on the Oder in the province of Brandenburg, Germany, August 8, 1868, a son of Rudolph and Augusta (Beiga) Nickel, both natives of Germany. There were six children in the family. Richard resides at Acton, Cal.; Olga, deceased; Hedwig, Mrs. Hilpert, resides in Leavenworth, Kans.; Eliza, Mrs. Julius Woock, resides in Lodi; Bruno, deceased; Eugene F. is the subject of this sketch. The father passed away at the age of fifty-five, the mother surviving until she was seventy-one years old.

Eugene F. Nickel received his education in the schools of Germany, and in 1885 accompanied his parents to the United States and settled in Leavenworth, Kans., where he worked for his brother-in-law, Theodore Hilpert, in his grocery store, for two years. In 1887, with his mother and brother Richard, he moved to California and settled at Acton. Here he homesteaded a tract of land, but was later forced to relinquish his claim to it. His residence at Acton covered a period of seventeen years, during which time he engaged in mining and was road supervisor and mine recorder of the Cedar mining district. In 1904 Mr. Nickel came to Lodi, where he found employment with the Lodi Wine Company. He then established a wholesale and retail wine business of his own in Lodi, which he successfully conducted, shipping to the East until 1912, when he sold out and opened a dry goods store at 17 and 19 West Elm Street, which he conducted for two years.

On January 4, 1909, at Los Angeles, Mr. Nickel was married to Miss Anna Schulte, a native of Wilmington, Cal., a daughter of August and Dorothy (Lembke) Schulte, the former a native of Westphalia and the latter of Mason County, Iowa. Mrs. Nickel's maternal grandfather, Jacob Lembke, a native of Germany, came to California in an early day and settled at Wilmington, where he acquired valuable property holdings. Mrs. Nickel is the eldest of a family of seven children, the others being Fred, John, Mrs. Ida Gallagher, Mrs. Irene Scheen and Wilford, all residents of Lodi, and George, deceased at the age of six months. Her father is deceased, but the mother is still living in Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Nickel are the parents of four children, Theodore, Carl, Eugene and Herbert, and an adopted daughter, Agnes. After Mr. Nickel sold his dry goods business he erected the Nickel Block, a two-story brick and reinforced concrete building, 40x170 feet, at 17 and 19 West Elm Street, with stores below and apartments above. In politics Mr. Nickel is a Republican. Fraternally he is a member of the Sons of Hermann Lodge of Lodi, and is a past president and trustee of the Grand Lodge of California. Mrs. Nickel is a member of the Parent-Teachers Association. The family are members of the Lutheran Church of Lodi.

THOMPSON MARION MOORE.—A native son of California, Thompson Marion Moore has been identified in a practical manner with agricultural pursuits during all his active career, and resides four miles west of Lodi on a portion of his father's ranch. He was born near Escalon, San Joaquin County, on his father's ranch, October 15, 1893, a son of James L. and Ora (Carmichael) Moore, both natives of Georgia, whose forbears were plantation owners in early days. James L. Moore came to California thirty-two years ago and first settled near Oakdale, where he remained for a year, then came to San Joaquin County and farmed near Escalon for two years. He then removed to the Lafayette district of San Joaquin County, where he bought a ranch three miles west of Lodi on the Sargent Road, where he still resides. This ranch was unimproved at the time of purchase and Mr. Moore has developed the entire forty acres to orchard and vineyard, which is now producing abundant crops each season.

Thompson Marion Moore received his education at the Lafayette grammar school, meanwhile receiving practical lessons in viticulture and horticulture, which have proved of lasting benefit. He worked on his father's ranch until he was twenty years old, then started out for himself and worked on different ranches until 1921, when he purchased twenty acres four miles southwest of Lodi on Kettleman Lane, which he has set to Tokay grapes. He has also installed a pumping plant which furnishes ample water for irrigation.

On March 18, 1916, Mr. Moore was married in Stockton to Miss Martha Peightal, born in Johnstown, Pa., a daughter of Samuel A. and Minnie (Hunter) Peightal. In 1910 her family removed to Lodi, and since 1914 her father has been identified with the Henderson Hardware Company of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Moore are the parents of three children: Marion, Ralph, who died July 5, 1922, aged three years, and Ruth. Mr. Moore built his residence south of his father's house on a portion of the latter's ranch, and there the family resides. Mr. Moore is a Democrat in politics.

MRS. ELLA THEW OWENS.—For the past twenty years Mrs. Ella Thew Owens has been an esteemed resident of San Joaquin County, and has borne her full share of the duties and responsibilities that have been the lot of successful Californians from the early days to the present. She was born in Marion County, Ohio, and is the daughter of Joseph and Mary S. (Shepherd) Thew, natives of Lincolnshire and Somersetshire, England, respectively. The father was a shoemaker by trade, and when our subject was six years old her parents moved to Logan County, Ind., and there her father conducted a shoe store for a number of years, then engaged in farming. In the spring of 1876 the family moved to Oxford, Kans., and here the father passed away in 1883 at the age of sixty-three years, the mother surviving him until she was eighty-one, when she passed away while on a visit in California. They were the parents of eight children: Mary Ellen and Charles, deceased; Olive Ann resides in Wellington, Kans.; John Wesley, deceased; Francis Henry of Sawtelle, Cal.; Mrs. Ella Owens; Elizabeth lives at Decatur, Mich., and William Arthur at Conway Springs, Kans.

At Belle Plaine, Kans., on March 10, 1884, Miss Ella Thew was married to David Fletcher Owens, a native of Currensville, Pa., born on April 4, 1860, a son of Moses Spencer Owens. His mother passed away when he was born, while the father was engaged in mining in Pennsylvania. Mr. Owens was the Methodist minister at Belle Plaine, Kans., and also ministered to two other charges in the neighborhood. He took an active part in Sunday school affairs and religious and educational matters in general, and was a force for good and uplift in every community where he worked. On account of failing health and the loss of his voice, he was obliged to give up the ministry. He went into the real estate business, but later opened a grocery store at Kingman, Kans., and here Mrs. Owens proved herself to be a woman of great business acumen. In 1893 they removed to the Cherokee strip in Oklahoma, and there homesteaded a quarter-section of land near Lahoma, where they lived for eight years. In 1902 they sold the place and moved to Lodi, Cal., where they purchased the sixteen-acre ranch on which our subject now resides. This place is located on Louie Avenue, just outside the city limits of Lodi. At the time of purchase the land was in an orchard, but this was soon pulled out and a vineyard of Tokay grapes planted.

Mr. and Mrs. Owens were the parents of two children: Mabel Thew, Mrs. Froehnert, with whom her mother makes her home; William Thew, who married Miss Bessie May Fish; they have two children—Alice and Donald—and he is in the fruit business at Lodi. In November, 1918, Mr. Froehnert, Mrs. Owens' son-in-law, built a modern residence on her place and there Mr. and Mrs. Owens made their home. For five years Mr. Owens was superintendent of the Congregational Sunday school at Lodi, and by his diligence and geniality built up the school and during the five years never missed being in his place as superintendent. He passed away on February 10, 1919, mourned by his family and a large circle of friends and acquaintances. He was a Mason, and a Republican in politics, as is also Mrs. Owens, who carries on the good work and influence of her late husband. Mrs. Owens is a member of the Congregational Church at Lodi.

CHARLES E. PERRYMAN.—A native son who has great faith in the fruit industry and agricultural development of San Joaquin County is Charles E. Perryman, who is now engaged in horticulture and viticulture in San Joaquin County and is aiding in making this great valley one of the most prosperous farming districts in the State of California. He was born at Linden, Cal., September 19, 1876, a son of John and Nancy F. (Potter) Perryman, natives of Ohio and Missouri, respectively, old settlers of San Joaquin County, where the father engaged in farming and stockraising. There were three children in the family: Laura, who resides at home; Charles, our subject, and Walter John. The father met a violent death, by being kicked by a horse, at the age of thirty-five years, while the mother resides in Stockton at the present time, aged seventy-two years.

When Charles E. was seven years old, the family moved to Stockton and his early education was received in the grammar and high schools of that city; later he attended the York College. He followed the mercantile business until he became owner and editor of the Lodi Herald, for five years. Next he was the proprietor of a wholesale and retail cigar and tobacco store in Lodi. Afterwards he became a traveling salesman for a Louisville, Ky., distillery, his territory being the State of California. In 1917 he bought a fifteen-acre ranch about one and three-quarters miles west of Woodbridge on the Thornton Road. Eight and one-half acres is in vineyard and the balance in orchard, and the irrigating is done by a four-inch pump driven by a seven horsepower motor.

Mr. Perryman's first marriage in Lodi united him with Miss Eva Dougherty, a native of San Joaquin County, daughter of John and Jennie Dougherty, and they were the parents of one daughter, Dorothy Lucile, attending Mills College at Oakland. The union proved unhappy and they were divorced. On June 3, 1913, occurred the second marriage of Mr. Perryman, uniting him with Miss Nellie Helen Nichols, born at Oakland, Cal., daughter of W. W. and Julia (Lemp) Nichols. The father was a native of Ohio and came to California in 1847. He was a stockman, and ran a hotel and teamed in the early days from Elko and Reno, Nev., to Oakland. He had a horse ranch, raising draft and standard horses, which were sold from his headquarters in Oakland, on San Pablo and Twenty-second Streets. He settled at the mines and ran a restaurant, which proved very successful. Later he purchased a residence in Oakland, where he made his home. He acquired 11,000 acres of land at Eureka, Nev., and teamed to and from the mines in that state, and dealt extensively in cattle and grain. He met a violent death, when in falling from a load he was kicked by a horse, on his Nevada ranch in 1892, after which the property was sold. In 1880 Mr. Nichols had bought an acre of land on Twenty-third and San Pablo Streets, Oakland, which his heirs still own. His widow now resides at Albany, Cal. There were eight children in the family: Louis, deceased; Jennie, Mrs. O. M. Robinson of San Francisco; Mary, Mrs. Frank Agello of Santa Cruz; Nellie, Mrs. Perryman; Florence, residing at Oakland; Julia, Mrs. R. Duttko of San Francisco; Sarah, deceased; and William of Oakland. Mrs. Perryman attended the Durant school and later the Field Seminary at Oakland. Mr. and Mrs. Perryman had one son, Charles, Jr., who died at the age of two years and four months. In his political views Mr. Perryman is an earnest Republican, doing all in his power to promote the interests of his party and keeping well informed on the questions and issues of the day. For the past twenty-five years he has been a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E.

LOUIS M. FIRPO.—An enterprising young business man of Stockton, whose genial manner has won for him a host of friends in business and social circles, is Louis M. Firpo, the capable manager of the New York Hotel in Stockton. He was born in the Province of Genoa, Italy, March 23, 1892, a son of August and Carrie (Firpo) Firpo, both natives of the same country. August Firpo came to Stockton about thirty years ago and first found employment in the vegetable gardens around Stockton; later, with L. Bacigalupi he engaged in the hotel business on South Eldorado Street, which he followed for a number of years with marked success, and during those years built the Marconi Hotel at the corner of Lafayette and Eldorado streets. Besides Louis M., our subject, there is a daughter Mary, in the family.

The education of Louis M. Firpo was obtained in the public schools of Stockton and his business training began as a clerk in a clothing store, then for a time he clerked in a cigar store. He entered the service of his country during the World War and was sent to Washington, D. C., for training, and in July, 1918, went overseas as a member of replacement squad attached to the 80th Division in France, 305th Engineers, and saw active service in France until the signing of the armistice, his overseas service covering a period of eleven months.

Mr. Firpo's marriage united him with Miss Louise Leonardini, a native daughter of Stockton, Cal. In June, 1922, August Firpo purchased the New York Hotel, located at 44 South Aurora Street, which was refurnished and refitted in every detail, so that it now ranks among the best appointed hotels in the city. This hostelry consists of ninety rooms and is well equipped and modern, and father and son are equally interested and responsible for its management. Fraternal August M. Firpo is a member of the Foresters, the Druids and the Stockton Italian Club, while the son, Louis M., is a member of the Druids, the Karl Ross Post of the American Legion and the Stockton Italian Club.

FORTY-NINE DRUG COMPANY, INC.—For over seventy-three years, dating back to the "days of '49," the corner of East Main and El Dorado streets, Stockton, has been the site of a drug store, hence the historical appropriateness of the name of the pharmacy now located there, linking the past with the present. It was founded in the year of the great gold rush by E. S. Holden, and was the first drug store in Northern California, if not in the state. A small, two-story building occupied the site at that time, which in later years was replaced by the present structure. The business later came into the possession of I. D. Holden, a son of the founder, and his old safe, with a picture of the store painted on the front, still stands in the rear of the store, having been in use for fifty years. The present proprietors of the drug store, Charles R. Chase and Arthur C. Brown, both came into the store as delivery boys and on November 1, 1919, they entered into partnership and purchased the business, which has prospered greatly under their expert management.

Charles Robert Chase was born at San Francisco, June 2, 1887, and when three years of age was brought to Stockton by his parents. Here he attended the public schools and when about fifteen years old he started to work for the Holden Drug Company as a delivery boy, and was later a registered pharmacist with the company. During the World War he enlisted in the Medical Corps, U. S. A., serving for eleven months in the United States and a year in France. His marriage united him with Miss Clara Miner, a native daughter of Porterville, Cal., and they are the parents of a son, Charles Robert Chase, Jr. Mr. Chase is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and of Karl Ross Post, American Legion.

A native of Seattle, Wash., Arthur C. Brown was born there on May 11, 1891, but since he was four years old he has been a resident of Stockton. About fifteen years ago he went to work for the Holden Drug Company as a delivery boy, then became a registered pharmacist, continuing in this position until he became one of the proprietors of the business. He married Miss Maud Twitchings, who was born in New York City, and they have a son, Arthur C. Brown, Jr. In fraternal life Mr. Brown is a member of Delta Lodge, F. & A. M., the Sciots, and the Kiwanis Club.

JOHN J. GAMBETTA.—A pioneer of 1855, the late John J. Gambetta was a far-seeing and enterprising citizen of Stockton until his death in 1899. He was born in the suburbs of Genoa, Italy, March 5, 1847, his parents being Joseph and Marianna (Croza) Gambetta. In 1855 the family came to the United States, their route being an unusual one, and taking them via Gibraltar, Carthegena, Acapulco, across the Isthmus of Panama, and thence to San Francisco on the steamer Golden Gate. He was reared and educated in Stockton and worked in various stores in that city; later he worked for Captain Weber selling his real estate and followed that business for many years. Mr. Gambetta established a general store at the corner of Market and Eldorado streets and as business increased he established four more similar stores throughout the city. He owned and platted the first subdivision put on the market in Stockton, located on East Street between Lafayette and Market streets; he also had the Northern addition and the Fair Oaks subdivision. Mr. Gambetta was a firm believer in the great future of Stockton and from early days believed that Stockton would eventually become a great city. He was an advocate and a supporter of the deep water to the sea project many years ago, realizing the importance of the best shipping facilities to be had. Mr. Gambetta was an inventor of marked ability, being the inventor of the first motor-cycle, which was under construction at the time of his death; he also invented a motor-boat engine and a self-locking nut for carriages and wagons.

On April 10, 1872, in Stockton, occurred the marriage of Mr. Gambetta, which united him with Miss Carmelitta Capurro, a native of Stockton, and they were the parents of five children: Blendina is Mrs. A. C. White, John Francis, Mrs. Eugenia Sievers, Adella, the wife of Harry D. White, and Pauline Gambetta, all residing in Stockton except John F. Mr. Gambetta was elected coroner of San Joaquin County, and served one term. In 1886 he was elected public administrator of the county and was re-elected to that office again in 1888. Fraternally he was a member of Stockton Lodge, I. O. O. F. and Charter Oak Lodge, Knights of Pythias, and he held a prominent place in the councils of the Democratic party.

ALTON GARSIDE.—A San Joaquin County rancher of prominence living to the north of the Galt-Elliott road, between the Cherokee Lane road and the state highway, about eight miles north of Lodi, is Alton Garside, born in Jones County, Iowa, on April 28, 1883, the son of J. F. and Rosalie S. (Bill) Garside. Grandfather Garside was a native of England, and came to the United States when only ten years of age, settling in Ohio. The father, J. F. Garside, was born in Jackson County, Iowa, the grandfather having moved to the Hawkeye State in frontier days, where the family were farmers. Alton Garside was the fourth-born child and eldest son in a family of eight children born to his parents. J. F. Garside was married in Wyoming, Iowa, on December 28, 1881, to Miss Rosalie S. Bill. She was born at Wyoming, Iowa and was a daughter of Sedley C. Bill and Miriam (Fawcett) Bill. Grandfather Bill was a New Yorker, who came to Iowa and homesteaded land in early days. Grandmother Fawcett and his wife both died in Ohio. He had three sons who came to California in the early days, one of whom returned to the East and died there. Two, William and Richard, remained in California.

Richard Fawcett went into the mines in the gold-rush days and met with moderate success. He came across the plains in the Argonaut year of 1849, accompanied by William. They started out with a company of people, but later withdrew from the company and came on by themselves. They did not fare as well, however, as they had anticipated, and little by little lost their effects until they had only a mule left between them. Necessity compelled them to dispose of even this, and as a result they had to make their way into California on foot. William Fawcett became a teaming contractor. He did hauling throughout the San Joaquin Valley and the mountain camps, but did not go into the mines. He made three trips across the plains, and returned with horses and stock to California. Later, William and Richard Fawcett came down into the Dry Creek country. William acquired 200 acres near Galt, in San Joaquin County, on the south side of Dry Creek; and Richard acquired 120 acres directly north of his brother, in Sacramento County, just across Dry Creek. Later Richard sold out his 120 acres to his brother William, and the 320 acres thus acquired became the home place of William Fawcett. William Fawcett had also acquired other land before his death, and became quite an extensive landowner. Upon his death he willed the 200 acres of his ranch lying in San Joaquin County to his two sisters (who had married brothers), Miriam A. (Fawcett) Bill and Mary A. (Fawcett) Bill; and Grandfather Sedley C. Bill then bought out the portion of this estate belonging to his wife's sister, which finally brought the 200 acres into the possession of Sedley C. Bill. His daughter, Rosalie S. (Bill) Garside, Alton Garside's mother, was the fourth child in a family of seven children. She has a brother, George S. Bill, who married Miss Kate Todd, as his first wife, who became the mother of three sons. He is living on sixty acres of the old Fawcett ranch. This George S. Bill had three children: B. S. Bill, B. H. Bill, and Sedley C., who was killed by a runaway team when he was very small.

J. F. Garside, after his marriage in 1881, went to Cheyenne County, Neb., and took up a tree claim, and also homesteaded government land, getting altogether a half-section. He lived five and a half years in Nebraska, and then came to Galt and settled on the ranch of eighty acres upon which they now reside, on a part of the Fawcett estate decided to the mother of Alton Garside. Of this eighty acres, Alton Garside owns twenty, while his mother retains sixty acres. Ten of the eighty acres are irrigated abundantly by means of a pumping plant. Alton Garside is the eldest of a family of three children: Alton, Gladys M., and Fern, all living at home with their parents.

GEORGE H. GIBSON.—A resident of Stockton for more than forty years, during his busy life as one of the foremost interior and exterior decorators here, George H. Gibson has still found time to take a public-spirited interest in civic and educational affairs. A native son of the Golden State, he was born at San Jose, February 5, 1868. His father, Dr. William Gibson, a native of Pennsylvania, crossed the plains to California in about 1851, coming on horseback with comrades. He was a graduate of William and Mary College and of a medical school, receiving the M. D. degree. He practiced medicine at San Jose until the breaking out of the Civil War, when he returned to his home in Hornsburg, Pa., and was commissioned a surgeon in a Pennsylvania regiment. After the war he was married at Chicago in 1867 to Lucy M. Blanchard, born in Boston, Mass., who was teaching music in Chicago at the time of her marriage. He brought his bride via the Isthmus of Panama to San Jose and there engaged in the practice of medicine until he retired, passing away while on a visit at Santa Rosa. Mrs. Gibson survived him until 1917, when she was fatally injured by a motorcycle at Alameda.

The eldest of five children, all boys, George H. Gibson was only eight years old when his father died. He went to school in San Jose until he was twelve years old, then came to Stockton to learn the painter's trade with Badger Bros., and later he was with James Kidd and then with Stoetzer & Bender. In the early days he worked on the George Sperry home, the Bours residence, the old Odd Fellows block, the Shippee Bank, the Hart & Thrift Grocery and many other of the older buildings. About sixteen years ago Mr. Gibson formed a partnership with Claude Stewart, this continuing until Mr. Stewart died, then nine years ago he joined forces with Julius Eichenberger, under the name of Gibson & Eichenberger. This firm has done some of the best work in Stockton, among which the following may be named: Smith & Lang Building, Yost & Dohrmann Building, St. Agnes Academy, the A. E. Gianelli residence, all the beautiful mahogany finish, tapestry hangings, etc., in the Wong Jew home, one of the finest residences in Stockton, any many other of the best residences here. In Tracy they decorated the new Odd Fellows Building and the Bank of Tracy.

Mr. Gibson's marriage united him with Miss Mary Polfer, a native of Kansas, and they have four sons. Howard A. and Clair A. are assisting their father in business, while Louis S. and George B. are attending the Stockton high school. Howard was in Company H, 12th U. S. Infantry, for fourteen months during the World War and Clair was in the aviation section of the U. S. Army, for twenty-three months, being stationed in Texas. The family make their home on a ten-acre chicken ranch near French Camp and Mrs. Gibson has shown much ability in its management, having an average of 500 laying hens. A lifelong Democrat, Mr. Gibson has been a member of the Democratic County Central Committee, serving as its chairman for one year. He was elected a member of the Stockton Board of Education in 1914, and served on this board until 1918. It was during his term of office that many of the new school buildings were erected, the El Dorado, the Lottie Grunsky, the Hazelton and the new Weber school. In early days Mr. Gibson was a member of the old Stockton Guard, which later became a unit of the California National Guard, as Company A, Sixth Regiment, under Captain Eugene Lehe. In 1894 this company was called to Dunsuir, Cal., to quell a strike riot of the railroad men. Mr. Gibson is a member of the Woodmen of the World and the Red Men, having occupied all the chairs of the latter order.

CHARLES W. GAWNE.—A valuable grain farm of 800 acres, located some thirteen miles southeast of Stockton on the Mariposa road, is the property of Charles W. Gawne, who has made his residence in San Francisco for the past forty years, and for the past twenty-five years has been active in the import and export business there. He now makes his home at 1224 Hyde Street, and is living retired from active business cares. He is a native Californian, having been born at Shasta, March 6, 1860, a son of John and Mercer (Burns) Gawne, California pioneers of 1850. John Gawne was born on the Isle of Man, England, and was but a lad when he came to New York. He was energetic and enterprising, and got along well in the new country. In young manhood he was married to a native daughter, of White Plains, N. Y.; and soon thereafter the young couple came to California and settled in Shasta County, where the wife passed away in 1865, survived by three children, of whom Charles W. Gawne is the eldest, and the only survivor. For many years John Gawne conducted a flour mill in Shasta and supplied the mines in that vicinity. In the early seventies he removed to Stockton and in partnership with Mr. Moore established the Stockton Lumber Yards, which he conducted for fifteen years. He also established the Stockton Navigation Company, and owned and operated the first large river power-boats; he also owned the Stockton Warehouse Company, and by his enterprise and good management acquired large tracts of land, owning at the time of his death 2,200 acres of choice wheat land thirteen miles southeast of Stockton on the Mariposa road. John Gawne always stood for progress and improvement, and was one of the representative men of the county. After his death 1,400 acres of his real estate in San Joaquin County was sold to the Stockton Improvement Company; the balance of 800 acres is still in the possession of our subject, who leases it from year to year for the purpose of raising grain.

Charles W. Gawne received a fine education, including a business course, at Eastman's College in Poughkeepsie, N. Y. In 1877 he entered the employ of the Moore & Gawne Lumber Yards, where he remained for two years, and at the same time managed his father's warehouse. In 1882 he removed to San Francisco, where he has since resided and for the past twenty-five years has been in the import and export business with marked success.

The marriage of Mr. Gawne occurred in Oregon in 1885, uniting him with Miss A. C. Young, a daughter of Robert and Teresa Young, pioneers of San Joaquin County. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Gawne. Delsie, a graduate of the University of California, class of 1916, is now head of the department of Bacteriology in the Zion Hospital, San Francisco. Beatrice, also a graduate of the University of California, class of 1916, is librarian at Salinas, Cal. During the World War Mr. Gawne returned to Stockton and personally conducted his large wheat ranch, raising large crops which he disposed of to the Government. He is widely and favorably known in San Joaquin County.

BORCHERT H. VON GLAHN.—Known throughout San Joaquin County, not only for his successful participation in practical agriculture, but also for his untiring efforts in the support of all worthy movements for the development and prosperity of the county, B. H. von Glahn, a native son of Stockton, Cal., born August 14, 1859, resides in the Van Allen school district, nineteen miles southeast of Stockton on a portion of his father's ranch, originally taken up as government land in the '50s. He is the eldest son of Christopher von Glahn, one of the earliest settlers of Stockton and a pioneer farmer of the Van Allen district. Christopher von Glahn arrived in California in 1855, with his wife and daughter, coming from New York City via the Isthmus of Panama, and from San Francisco they proceeded directly to Stockton, where they resided until 1859. In that year they settled on the ranch, on the French Camp Road near Atlanta, which has ever since been the family home. Here Christopher von Glahn took up Government land, being among the first settlers to arrive for permanent residence in this vicinity. He was a hard worker and an able manager, and at his death he left an estate of 640 acres with all its valuable improvements, one of the landmarks in southern San Joaquin County. Christopher von Glahn was born near Bremerhaven, Germany, September 26, 1824, being the son of Frederick W. and Anna von Glahn, also natives of Germany. He was reared to young manhood and was equipped with a fair education before leaving his native land. He was twenty years old when, in 1844, he emigrated to America. He embarked on a sailing vessel at Bremerhaven, and was sixty days in getting to New York City, where he was engaged in the grocery business until he set out for California in 1855. He was married in New York City in May, 1852, to Miss Catherine Boschen, who was born July 2, 1827, also near Bremerhaven, being the daughter of Henry and Katherine (Muhler) Boschen, both natives of Germany. Mrs. von Glahn had emigrated to America in 1848 and she and her husband had a happy married life extending over more than forty years. Seven children were born to them: William Henry, died in infancy; Catharine M., resides in Stockton; Anna C., is the wife of Anderson Allen, a biographical mention of whom may be found elsewhere in this volume; Borchert Hinrich, the subject of this sketch; Frederick William is a prosperous rancher in the Van Allen district; Henrietta R., Mrs. J. R. Hitchcock, resides at San Francisco; Rev. Christopher H. von Glahn, D.D., is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Paterson, N. J. Christopher von Glahn took much interest in the progress and welfare of his community and served for several years as a trustee of the Van Allen school district, and for a portion of the time was clerk of the board. He was Republican in politics and a member of the Atlanta Methodist Church, where for several years he served as steward. On February 16, 1896, he surrendered the duties of life and passed on to his reward at the age of seventy-two years, his wife surviving him until 1911.

Borchert H. von Glahn received a good education in the Van Allen district school, and has been in contact with the practical affairs of life since an early age. His marriage occurred on Christmas Eve, 1884, and united him with Miss Georgie M. Farrow, a native of Maine, a daughter of George Farrow, who lost his life in the Civil War; her mother, whose maiden name was Delilah Sherman, passed away at Lathrop, Cal., in January, 1892. Six children have blessed the home of Mr. and Mrs. von Glahn: E. Gertrude, a graduate of the San Jose Normal School, followed the profession of teacher five years and is now the wife of C. A. Moore, residing at Modesto; Lila C., is Mrs. A. F. Landon and resides in the Van Allen district; Anna L., a graduate of the College of the Pacific and a post-graduate of Stanford University, is now the wife of G. A. Cowan, city editor of the Chico Enterprise; Delmar resides in Stockton; George F. is at home and assists in the operation of the ranch; while Genevieve is a stenographer in the office of Levinsky and Jones, attorneys-at-law, Stockton, Cal. Soon after the death of Christopher von Glahn his estate was divided among his children and B. H. received 106 acres as his share and on this ranch he makes his home. He has been very successful in his farming pursuits and in 1909 he erected a comfortable and commodious residence and his orchard of apricots and peaches and his vineyard of Tokay grapes reward him for his labor in large profits. Mr. von Glahn has served for a number of years as trustee of the Van Allen school district and in politics he is a Republican. His sons, Delmar and George F., are members of Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W. Mr. Von Glahn has been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since he was eighteen years old and for more than twenty years held the office of superintendent of Sunday School in that church at various places, namely, Atlanta, Oakdale, Lone Tree, and Escalon, being at present a trustee and an active member of the church at Escalon. As was his father before him, he is public-spirited in all matters of local interest, and during his long residence in the county has made himself a factor for progress and advancement in all lines.

RUSSELL T. WORDEN.—A pioneer of Stockton who has been a resident of the city for more than fifty years and has seen the place grow from a small town intersected with sloughs and swamp roads, where teams and wagons bogged down during the rainy season, into a large city teeming with manufactories and large modern business blocks as well as beautiful parks and paved streets, a delight alike to residents and tourists, Russell Worden was born in Keithsburg, Mercer County, Ill., May 4, 1846, a son of Joseph J. and Sophia (Brown) Worden, natives of New York and Ohio, respectively. They were married in the latter state and in 1832 went to Mercer County, Ill., where Joseph Worden purchased Government land and improved a farm. Being a wagon maker, he opened a wagon shop in Keithsburg and was the pioneer wagon maker in that region and followed that business until he retired. After his wife died he removed to St. Louis, Mo., where he spent his remaining days. The worthy pioneer couple had five boys and two girls, of whom Russell was the fourth. Two of his brothers served in the Civil War, Chas. C. in the 9th Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Henry B. in the 102nd Illinois Infantry.

Russell Worden was educated in the local public schools and when sixteen years of age he and a comrade ran away from home to enlist in the Civil War. They arrived in Davenport, where a cavalry regiment was being recruited but seeing the cavalry exercises on the steep hills around that old inland town, he felt he could not do that sort of rough riding, so he returned home. His father, on learning of his experiences said: "My son, if you are determined to go to war, enlist right at home so your own state gets the credit for your enlistment." So in June, 1863, he joined Company A, 30th Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and was in the Georgia campaign under General Sherman, taking part in the battles of Resaca, Dallas, Dalton, Snake Creek, Peach Tree Creek, Buzzard's Roost, Kenesaw Mountain and Atlanta, after which he went with Sherman's army on his march to the sea and was a part of the big army that surrounded and caused the surrender of General Lee. Mr. Worden took part in the Grand Review in Washington. Returning to Springfield, Ill., he was mustered out in the fall of 1865.

After the war he was the manager of a warehouse in his native place until 1872, when he determined to locate in California and came to Stockton in the spring of that year. He became a clerk in the grocery store of Hart & Thrift on Sutter and Weber Avenue, continuing with them steadily for twenty years. Next he clerked for Southworth & Gratten, grocers, about three years, when he again clerked for Mr. Thrift, who was then in business alone, until he sold out. Mr. Worden then again clerked for Southworth & Gratten for about three years until he decided to engage in the retail milk business in Stockton. He established a dairy and had a successful milk route, running two delivery wagons, for eight years until he sold out in 1912, since which time he has been in the employ of the Santa Fe railroad, and he resides with his family at 825 East Second Street, Stockton. In San Francisco Mr. Worden was united in marriage with Mrs. Leonora Johnson, who was born at Redwood City, and they have been blessed with one child Gwynne, who is a graduate of the Stockton Business College. Mr. Worden is a charter member of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R., in which he served as senior vice-commander. Mrs. Worden is an active member of Rawlins Post No. 29, W. R. C., of which she is past president. In political views Mr. Worden is a Democrat.

ROBT. GEORGIA WILLIAMS.—A native son of California, Robert Georgia Williams was born August 19, 1864, at the old family home six miles north of Stockton, on the Lower Sacramento Road, where he now resides with his family. His parents were Elnathan Gavett and Mary Ann Delilah (Landrum) Williams.

Mr. Williams was educated in the public schools and graduated in the Stockton Business College and Normal Institute. October 18, 1899, he was married to Miss Mollie Jane Swartz of Terre Haute, Indiana. Three children, Raymond Gavett, Leroy Robert, and Ruth Delilah Williams are the result of this union. Raymond lost his life with the influenza when in his twenty-first year. Leroy married Miss Beth Blain of Stockton, and Ruth is a senior in the Stockton high school. Mr. Williams is a farmer and fruit grower by occupation. He is a past master of Woodbridge Lodge, No. 131, F. & A. M., also a member of Stockton Chapter, R. A. M. Both he and his wife are members of the Eastern Star and of the First Congregational Church of Stockton.

In the year 1769 John Williams was living on Northern Neck, near Richmond, Va. He was the ancestor of Robt. G. Williams. Research made recently revealed the record of his owning land and of his signing the protest against the "Stamp Act." He came from a Welsh family in Maryland, and it seems possible that his father was a brother of Joseph Williams, the father of Gen. Otho Holland Williams of Revolutionary fame. John Williams of Richmond died about the year 1823 aged ninety-five. He had three sons by a first marriage, Joseph, Mordecai, and Benjamin. Benjamin was lost in the war of 1812. Mordecai and Joseph moved to Broadtop, Pa., where Joseph was married to Mary Evans, who was born January 27, 1775. Joseph was born near Richmond, Va., May 15, 1769. He lived at Broadtop until 1814, when he moved to Mansfield, Ohio, where he owned the land which is the present site of the city and was in the banking business. On arriving at Mansfield, then a small village, he, with his wife and seven sons, moved into the old block-house which still stands in the City Park at Mansfield. The mother cleaned the blood from the floor, as there had been fighting. The town was then threatened by a band of British and Indians, who on hearing of the treaty of peace decamped.

Joseph Williams moved to Batesville, Ark., in the year 1838, with three of his sons, Miles, Septimus and Robert. He died there February, 1840. Robert died in Batesville, leaving five children, Mary Ellen (Moore), Amanda (Debnam), John R., Chas. W., and Sarah (Moore). These children all came to Stockton with their Uncles Miles and Septimus, and their families in 1853. They are all well known. John R. was a prominent druggist and Charles was once mayor of Stockton. "Uncle" Septimus was one of the first supervisors of San Joaquin County.

The other four sons of Joseph who remained and reared families and died in Ohio were Amos, John, Thomas and Aaron. Amos had two daughters. John had five children, Joseph, Christy, Miles, John Quigley and Myra. These brothers were college classmates of Dr. Harding, father of the President. John Q. taught school in Bloominggrove, Ohio, where President Harding, then a small boy, was a student. Thomas left four children, all deceased. Aaron had two sons and two daughters.

Miles Williams, the grandfather of Robt. G. Williams, was born September 26, 1801, and was the father of thirteen children, Alfred E., Cyrus A., Elnathan G., William Curry, John E., Eliza S. (Spooner), Sarah E. (Spooner), Amanda A., Emmer, Anna, Mary J., R. F., and Malinda A. (White). Miles, with his wife and children and brother Septimus left Batesville, Ark., in the Moore train, in April, 1853, for California, where they arrived October 23, 1853, just six months and two days of tedious travel by ox team. Joseph Williams (son of John) left Bloominggrove, Ohio, April 18, 1853, traveled down the Mississippi to Arkansas and started May 1 to overtake the Moore train, which he did July 1, 1853, at the Platte River. Their route extended northwest to Cherry Creek. They camped where Denver now stands. From this point they traveled northward into Yellowstone Park, crossed the summit to the head waters of the Humboldt River and traveled down that river to the sink and Walker River. The Sierra Nevada Mountains were crossed near Castle Peak in Mono County and Sonora.

Elnathan G. Williams, father of Robt. G. Williams, was then a lad of fifteen years of age. He walked and drove one of the ox teams of the family conveyance all of the way. A diary of the trip describes the plains as swarming with buffaloes. It speaks of letting the wagons down steep inclines with ropes; of wagons overturned in a river; finding a dead man in the road; using willows for hay; Indians stealing stock; describes a geyser of the Yellowstone; and petrified bones. They paid forty cents per pound for flour, forty cents for bacon, thirty-five cents for sugar. Sonora is described as having a rough, drinking, gambling, mixed population, talking, quarrelling and dancing. Six days were consumed from Sonora to Stockton. Less than ten miles was a day's drive. Through many perils this family followed civilization across the continent. Their movement westward consumed eighty-four years until their homes were established in California.

Elnathan G. Williams married Mary Ann Delilah Landrum in 1863. Five children, all living, were the result of this marriage. Robert Georgia, Noah Vesper, Mary Etta (Moore), Elizabeth Jane (Cook), and Eugene Bloom. Mrs. Williams came with her parents from Georgia in 1861, traveling by ox team. She died in 1899 aged sixty years. The Landrum families in the United States, so far as known, are all descended from two brothers who emigrated from Scotland to Virginia and South Carolina about 1750. A number of them still live in and around their old home near Spartanburg, S. C., which was a part of the battlegrounds of the Revolution in which members of the family took part.

The history of the Williams family began to be written when the Roman legions arrived in England in the year A. D. 55. Through the institution of heraldry in England and Wales, an unbroken record of the generations of the family from this date and ending with individuals now living, has been preserved. Genealogists agree that the greater number of families of the name in England and America owe their origin to this source.

Many famous characters in the history of England and America are of this ancestry. One remarkable genealogical record is that of Oliver Cromwell, whose correct name was Williams. Richard Williams, great grandfather of Cromwell, assumed the name of Cromwell in order to inherit the estate of his maternal uncle, Thomas Cromwell, Secretary of State, under Henry VIII. According to Burke's genealogy he is supposed to be descended from Carradoc of Glamorgan, Wales, who was a son of Brutus, the first king of the Britons.

Robert Williams was the father of Cromwell and James Williams of Northampton, Mass., was the grandson of Oliver Cromwell and the father of Timothy Williams, chairman of the "Boston Tea Party." James Williams was also the great-grandfather of Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Paine, author of the "Age of Reason." Roger Williams was also a friend and relative of Cromwell. Other relatives of Cromwell in America were Robert Williams, who came to Long Island in 1653, and a Rev. Williams of Hadley, Mass., who was a cousin of Cromwell. He secreted the Judges Goffe and Whalley of Charles I and protected them for many years.

Jonathan Williams, said to be one of the most brilliant of the name, was a nephew of Benjamin Franklin, and resembled him in manner and talents. When Franklin went to France and induced that country to send her armies to the rescue of the colonies, Jonathan was his private secretary.

William Williams, signer of the Declaration of Independence, is wrongly placed by Burke as a cousin of Franklin. He was a descendant of Robert Williams, who came to Roxbury, Mass., in 1638. He lived 100 years and is the ancestor of a great number of the noted men and statesmen of the United States.

The name of Williams is probably of German origin, and exists with them in its purest form "Wilhelm," meaning something like "strong warrior." With the movement of the Franks westward it was carried to France and Normandy, and with the conquest, to England and Wales. The use of the plural or possessive form of Williams as a surname, came into vogue in Wales after the visit of William of Normandy to the country, which took place in A. D. 1081. Different descendants of the reigning princes of Wales assumed the name and became the ancestors of the numerous families of the name in England and Wales. The history and genealogy of these people are well preserved, and date authentically back to the time of the Roman occupation of the island. Their assumption of the name of Williams took place at a period when the custom of using surnames as a means of indicating lineal descent was being substituted for the primitive nomenclature of the Celtic races. From the period of the Romans to the conquest of Wales by Edward, Wales was ruled with varied success by the princes who were descended from Rhodra the Great, who was king of all Wales in A. D. 850. Occasionally, one of these more resourceful than the others would unite the country and become ruler. Owain Gynedd and Llywelyn the Great were of these.

Rhodra Mawr had several sons. Two of these live in history: Anarawd, as the ancestor of the rulers of North Wales, and also of generations now known as Williams, and the other, Cadell, the ancestor of the rulers of South Wales, and the Tudor family of England and the Stuarts of Scotland. Owain Gynedd, ruler over all Wales, was of the ninth generation from Rhodra the Great. He married twice. The second time to Christina, his cousin, who was of the seventh generation from Cadell. Sir John Wynn, who died in 1553, and who wrote a history of his family, was of the fourteenth generation from Gynedd, and was founder of the family of Williams-Wynn.

Marchud ap (son of) Cynan, Lord of Abergeleu, lived in 850, and was the father of Edneyfed Vychan, a powerful noble who married twice, first to the daughter of a lord of Anglesey (Mon). This marriage was the ancestry of the Lloyds. He married secondly, Gwenlian, daughter of Lord Rhys of South Wales, who was of the ninth generation from Cadell. This marriage was the ancestry of Owain Tudor, who married Queen Catherine of France, widow of Henry V, and founder of the royal house of Tudor. From this union descended Henry VII, second removed and father of Henry VIII, Margaret and Mary. Henry VIII was father of Queen Elizabeth, last of the Tudors. Margaret married James of Scotland and was grandmother of Mary Queen of Scots.

A descendant in the fifteenth removed, of Edneyfed Vychan, by his first marriage, assumed the name of William Williams. The female ancestor of this line was the daughter of the brother of Owain Gynedd, who was the ancestor of the Williams-Wynns.

Of the ancestry previous to the time of Rhodra, the record is not so clear, but both Rhodra and Marchud were descended of a long line of regal ancestors. Marchud ap Cynan is said to be descended from Brutus, first king of the Britons, who ruled B. C. 1100.

CHARLES W. HOAG.—A native son of California, who is now being substantially rewarded for many years of active work in the culture of grapes, is Charles W. Hoag, born in Lake County on February 6, 1894, a son of Charles and Anna (Shaver) Hoag. The father, Charles Hoag, was born in Iowa, came to California during the year 1862, and settled near Yuba City, where he took up a homestead; later he removed to Lake County, and Charles W. Hoag received his education in the district schools of that county. The family removed to Chico, Cal., remained there for one year, and then located in Lodi, where the father bought a twenty-acre vineyard near the town. Twelve years ago he sold this property and purchased 160 acres near Bellota, Cal.; later this property was sold to one of his sons, who now runs it. Mr. and Mrs. Hoag were the parents of ten children: Lilly, Rose, Daisy, Victor, Myrtle, Amiel, Violet, Charles W. (of this review), Esther, and Delia.

At the age of nineteen years, Charles W. Hoag began to make his own way in the world, working for wages as a farm hand for the next two years, when he purchased eleven acres in vineyard near Victor; later he sold this property and bought twenty-five acres planted to almonds, which he has recently removed preparatory to setting out grape cuttings. A comfortable and modern residence is nearing completion. Mr. Hoag also owns a ten-acre vineyard set to Tokay grapes. The ranches are equipped with pumping plants for irrigation. He has recently purchased a tract of 160 acres at Chowchilla, upon which he is now planting thirty-five acres of peaches and thirty-five acres of grapes. Mr. Hoag is also in partnership with J. J. Schmiedt in a seventy-acre vineyard east of Victor.

The marriage of Mr. Hoag occurred in Oakland on December 26, 1920, and united him with Miss Wally Poser, born in Perham, Ottertail County, Minn., a daughter of Carl and Francis (Horn) Poser. Her father died when she was eight years old. The mother resides at Lodi. They were the parents of eight children, Mrs. Hoag being the sixth in order of birth. Politically, Mr. Hoag is a Republican; and fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen and the Red Men.

K. PETER HOLM.—A well-known citizen of San Joaquin County who was a continuous resident of the county for forty years, was K. Peter Holm, who was born at Hasla, Bornholm, Denmark, December 22, 1862, a son of Peter and Karen (Due) Holm, both natives of the same province in Denmark. Grandfather Due was a man of fine character and was well known in his locality, where he reared nine children, Karen, the mother of our subject, being the second eldest. Peter Holm, the father of our subject, was a successful leather merchant and was also the manufacturer of shoes in his native country. Two sons, who grew up, were born to this couple, our subject and F. Julius, the postmaster and merchant at Avena, Cal. The father passed away in 1889 at the age of sixty-nine, and the mother also passed away that same year.

K. Peter Holm received his education in the public schools of his native land and at the age of thirteen was confirmed in the Lutheran Church. In 1882 he got the consent of his parents to accompany his cousin, Jens Hansen, to America. They boarded a vessel bound for Glasgow, Scotland, and from there took a vessel bound for New York, completing the voyage in eleven days. On the sixteenth of May, 1882, they arrived in Stockton and the next day Mr. Holm got a job on the Henry Minge farm near Atlanta, sixteen miles southeast of Stockton. He knew nothing of the English language, but applied himself to the task of learning it, and within a few months was talking like an old-timer; later he worked for his uncle, Esper Due, who came to San Joaquin County in the early '50s. About 1895 he leased land from his former employer, Henry Minge, and farmed for about twelve years, then for three years had the P. G. Chalmer ranch near Avena, then for six years he farmed the Munson ranch of 320 acres, raising the largest quantities of barley ever produced on that ranch. For some years he was superintendent of the Guernsey Grain Company warehouse at Atlanta and handled the greater part of the grain raised in that section. After his retirement in 1917 he purchased a lot in Atlanta and erected a modern bungalow on it, where he has since made his home. He received his U. S. citizenship papers at Stockton and was a Republican, serving on the election boards of his district. He was a liberal contributor to all worthy causes and was deeply interested in all that tends to promote the social, intellectual and moral welfare of the community. Mr. Holm died in December, 1922.

JOHN R. HUMPHREYS.—A man of scholarly attainments, ambitious and capable, John R. Humphreys is carrying on a most successful work as one of the owners and principal of the Stockton College of Commerce. He is eminently qualified for the important work in which he is engaged, the greater part of his life having been given to educational work of one character or another. He was born in Honaker, Va., March 7, 1867, the son of Ward C. and Nancy J. (Jackson) Humphreys, both of whom were also natives of Virginia. John R. grew up on the parental farm in the South, attending the public schools in the neighborhood during his boyhood, and later becoming a student in the Old Dominion College of Honaker. When only sixteen years old, Mr. Humphreys was installed as teacher in the public schools of his native town, filling this position for three years. At the end of this time, in 1886, he went to Greenup, Ky., teaching in the public schools there for six years, and then until 1895 he was associated with a lumber firm. Mr. Humphreys had become interested in the reports of the West, so in 1895 he set out for Washington, but after remaining one week came south to California, locating at Hanford, where for seven months he was employed on a ranch and also in a packing house. On New Year's day, 1896, Mr. Humphreys arrived in Stockton, where he has since continuously resided. Having determined to resume educational work he refreshed his mind by taking a four months' course in the Stockton Business College, reviewing his school work. Six months later, June 1, 1896, he became a teacher in the same school and remained there until August 1, 1901, as a teacher in the normal department. In September of that year, in partnership with T. H. Wolfenbargar, now deceased, he purchased the plant of the old Gas City Business College, which had not been in operation for one year, and he also took over their lease of the old location, in the Salz-Bours building, on Hunter Street. The new proprietors opened their business, shorthand and normal school September 30, 1901, with a corps of three teachers and an attendance of three pupils for the first day, at the end of the first year having an enrollment of forty pupils. The school was incorporated under the name Western School of Commerce and Mr. Humphreys became president. In 1909 the commercial department of the school was sold to Heald's Business College, the Western School of Commerce being devoted entirely to normal work. In 1917 Mr. Humphreys became associated with A. V. Faight in Heald's Business College and in 1920 purchased a half interest in the business and the name was changed to the Stockton College of Commerce. This college is a direct successor of the Stockton Business College and the Western School of Commerce and has an unbroken history back to 1874, the founding of the first business college in Stockton. A very large percentage of the leading business and professional men of Stockton have received their business training in this institution. Since Mr. Faight and Mr. Humphreys have been associated in the Stockton College of Commerce they have given their best to place the school on a high educational plane.

On August 30, 1899, at Michigan Bluff, Placer County, Cal., Mr. Humphreys was married to Miss Lena Mannelin, a native of that county, and four children have been born to them: Mary V., Jean, John, Jr., and Elizabeth. Mr. Humphreys was elected a member of the Stockton board of education in 1920, and in January, 1923, was elected its president; fraternally he is a past grand of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F.; past master Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M.; is a member of the Royal Arch Chapter; and of the Woodmen of the World and Sciots; and is also a past patron of the O. E. S., of which his wife is also a member. His contribution to educational affairs on the Pacific Coast has brought him to the forefront as an educator, and to his untiring efforts are due the popularity and high standard of excellence attained by the Stockton College of Commerce.

GEORGE W. JACOBS.—Numbered among the promoters of the substantial upbuilding and progress of California is George W. Jacobs, one of the leading bridge building contractors of the state. He was born and reared at Hartland, Mich., his birth having occurred March 12, 1863. His education was obtained in the public schools of Hartland and at the age of seventeen he left his home for Wisconsin and found work in the lumber camps of that state; then he went to Minnesota and engaged in well boring in La Crescent; then he went to St. Paul, Minn., and there did his first bridge building work. His first work was on the construction of the Seventh Street bridge from St. Paul to West St. Paul, a fine piece of engineering work, the bridge being 2,785 feet long and 205 feet high. Following this, in 1888, he came to the Pacific Coast and first located at Spokane Falls, Wash., and was employed in the construction of the Washington Water Power Works. He worked on the first bridge over Monroe Street; then he received the contract for building two bridges over the Kootsac River at Seattle. Mr. Jacobs removed to San Francisco in 1894, where he was employed by the San Francisco Bridge Company, who had the contract for building the foundation for the Ferry building at the foot of Market Street; he also had charge, as foreman, of the construction of the first cylinder wharf in San Francisco.

During the period of nine years of his connection with construction work for the San Francisco Bridge Company he had the opportunity of overseeing extensive operations in bridge building and other large construction work. He then joined the forces of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and was put in charge of the bridge construction in the Los Angeles division and remained with this company for four years, when he located in Stockton, where he entered the employ of the Clark & Henery Construction Company. He built steel tanks for the Benicia Water Company, also tanks at Antioch and Burlingame, and a drawbridge over the Sacramento River at Kechival Landing. He then organized his own company, the George W. Jacobs Company, and among his most outstanding work has been the building of bulkheads. He has, in fact, constructed a majority of the bulkheads along the Stockton Channel. Recently Mr. Jacobs built a bulkhead for the Western Pacific Railroad Company. After the earthquake Mr. Jacobs spent ten months in San Francisco engaged in wrecking work.

The marriage of Mr. Jacobs united him with Miss Kathryn Manion, a native of Grass Valley, Cal., whose father, a pioneer of California, came from Ireland by way of Panama in 1852. Fraternally Mr. Jacobs is identified with the Knights of Pythias, the Knights of Khorassan, the Woodmen of the World, and the Moose of Stockton.

THEOPOLD KIRSCHENMANN.—An industrious rancher and self-made man, Theopold Kirschenmann is the owner of thirty-three and a half acres northwest of Christian Colony, San Joaquin County, Cal., twenty-four acres of which is in vineyard, two acres in pears and the balance in open land around the house and outbuildings. He was born in South Russia on January 30, 1886, a son of Theopold and Magdalena Kirschenmann, both natives of Russia, where they reared a family of five children. The father passed away in his native land at the age of fifty-four years, and the mother at the age of forty-one years. Their five children are as follows: Christ, Christina, Magdalena, Theopold, of this sketch, and Fred.

Opportunities for an education were very meager in Russia, and consequently Theopold Kirschenmann received very little schooling. At the age of nineteen he left his native country for the New World, arriving at Lodi, Cal., on December 16, 1905. He began work on the ranch of John Mettler, south of Lodi about two and one-half miles, remaining there for three years; and then he worked on various ranches throughout the county until he rented eighty acres, five acres of which was in grapes and the balance grain land. This he farmed for two years, and then leased the forty-one-acre ranch owned by Mr. Hartman west of Acampo and ran this for four years. In the spring of 1921, Mr. Kirschenmann purchased thirteen and one-half acres northwest of the Christian Colony, and a short time later bought a twenty-acre tract in the same vicinity, which is yielding him a fine income. Mr. Kirschenmann is a well driller by trade, and when he can be spared from his ranch work he takes his well drilling outfit to all parts of the county, thus adding to his income materially.

Mr. Kirschenmann's marriage occurred at Sacramento on November 10, 1909, and united him with Miss Elizabeth Becker, a native of Eureka, S. D.

and a daughter of John and Katherina Becker, residing at Victor Station, San Joaquin County, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Theopold Kirschenmann are the parents of eight children: Fred, Theopold, Bertha, Rudolph, Edwin, Emma, John, and Katherine.

JOHN DANIEL LAGGAS.—One of the old-time residents of Stockton is John Daniel Laggas, who is also a veteran of the Civil War. He was born in Poros, Greece, September 26, 1842. His father Daniel was a sailor, as were all of his sons, the father having been a boatswain in the Grecian Navy. John D. is the third-born of five children and the only one in California. He attended the local school in his native place and when fourteen years of age, as was the custom with the young men in that seaport town, he went to sea, following the life of a sailor until he came to the port of New York, January 23, 1865, when he volunteered and enlisted in the United States Navy, for which he has come to have a great admiration. He served on the gunboats Periwinkle and Stepping Stone and the monitor Miantonomah, in which he crossed the Atlantic to different foreign ports in Russia, France, Spain, Italy, England, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Belgium and saw all the kings and queens of Europe, except in Turkey and Greece, which they did not visit. On his return to the United States he went on the receiving ship Potomac, from which he was honorably discharged as petty officer in January, 1868.

Mr. Laggas then came on the clipper ship Davy Crockett around Cape Horn to San Francisco, arriving that same year. He then ran on the Golden Age from San Francisco to Panama until he came to Sacramento, where he was steaming between the capital city and Red Bluff for several years, becoming mate. In 1879 he came to Stockton and continued steaming and was pilot with the California Navigation Company, Hamilton & Gray Company, and Cornwall, Brooks & Peters Company, continuing until 1921, when his ill health necessitated his retiring, and now resides with his family at 1115 South Center Street, a place he built in 1880.

Mr. Laggas' marriage occurred in Sacramento, January 20, 1875, when he was united with Miss Mary Sexton, born in Michigan Bar, Sacramento County, a daughter of Charles and Margaret (Fulton) Sexton. Her father crossed the plains in an ox-team train in 1850, arriving in California September 9 of that year, the day California was admitted into the Union. He followed carpentering and helped build the dome as well as to place the ball on top of the dome of the capitol building. He died in 1914 aged eighty-seven. Mrs. Sexton crossed the plains in 1852. She was the mother of eight children, all living up till 1922, when one of her sons died. Mrs. Laggas was the oldest of the family, receiving her education in the Sacramento public schools. Mr. and Mrs. Laggas had five children, as follows: Mrs. Ellen Tucker of Stockton; Mrs. Florence Jameson of Berkeley; Andrew died at the age of four and a half years in 1884; Jessie is Mrs. Seppi of Stockton, and Alice, also Mrs. Seppi, died at twenty-three years of age, in 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Laggas have seven grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Mr. Laggas is a member of San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M.; Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F., and with his wife is a member of the Rebekahs. He is a member of the Foresters and of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R., while Mrs. Laggas is a member of Rawlins Post No. 20, W. R. C. He is a staunch Republican and is proud of having cast his first vote for General Grant, as well as having had the honor of shaking hands with President Lincoln.

HERMAN ANTHONY LANGE.—Twenty-two years ago Herman Anthony Lange cast in his lot with the Californians and has never had any occasion to regret this decision. Depending upon his own resources from an early age he has steadily advanced until he is now the owner of a fine twenty-five-acre ranch, located four miles southwest of Lodi on Kettleman Lane, one-half of which is devoted to vineyard and the other half to raising alfalfa. He was born at Grand Island, Neb., March 16, 1882, a son of Henry and Katherine (Hake) Lange, both parents natives of Indiana. Henry Lange was a woodsman by trade and on September 27, 1861, he enlisted in Company K, 27th Indiana Volunteer Infantry, where he served for three years. He was in eight major engagements during the Civil War, including the Battle of Gettysburg, and he was twice wounded. During his service he contracted scurvy, from which he never fully recovered. There were nine children in the family: Anna and Mrs. Elizabeth Engles are deceased; Mrs. Margaret Roche now residing in Sacramento; Joseph B. of Sacramento; Mrs. Mary Specht of Sacramento; John William lives in Marysville; Herman A., the subject of this sketch; Harry C. lives at Marysville; and Katherine, the widow of F. A. Zimmers, resides in North Platte, Neb.

Herman A. Lange received but little education, for he was obliged to walk five miles through the cold and sleet to school, and when eleven years old he started to earn his own way, his first job being to herd cattle on the plains of Nebraska. At the age of seventeen he went to Colorado and worked for a year at Boulder and then in 1900, with his brother John, came to California and worked for a year in the fruit at Roseville; then the brothers went to Sacramento and worked for a year for Castle Brothers. He then made a visit to his old home in Nebraska, remaining during the summer, and returned to California in the fall with his brother Harry, this time settling in Sacramento. Here they found employment with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, where Herman A. served an apprenticeship as a machinist. Completing his apprenticeship he then worked for the Moran Ship Building Company at Seattle for a year; then returned to Sacramento, where he took a course in a business college. He then became operator at the power station for the Pacific Gas & Electric Company at Sacramento; later he went to Bremerton, Wash., where he was employed as an electrician and helped to rewire the battleships Tennessee, Colorado and Pennsylvania. Once more he visited his old home in Nebraska and from there went to Schenectady, N. Y., where he worked in the testing department of the General Electric Company; next he went to New York City, where he had charge of the testing department for the Third Avenue Railway Company, and then went to Toronto, Canada, and found employment with the Buick-McLaughlin Automobile Company. Returning to California he helped lay 6,000,000 feet of conduit with wires in the city of Sacramento. He then returned East and was employed by the Hudson Motor Company at Detroit.

On August 7, 1911, at Sault Sainte Marie, Mich., Mr. Lange was married to Miss Esther Florence Thibault, born in Bay City, Mich., a daughter of William and Virginia (Beneteau) Thibault, natives of France and Canada, respectively, who came to the United States when young. William Thibault was captain of the E. K. Roberts, one of the first passenger steamers on the lakes, running between Detroit and Bay City. He passed away leaving his wife and four children; subsequently the mother married again and became the mother of six children by her second husband Mrs. Lange is the third of her father's children, who were as follows: William, Vollie, deceased, Mrs. Lange, and Francis. Mrs. Lange received her education in the schools of Sault Sainte Marie, Mich., and after finishing school taught for two years; then began the study of nursing and was in training at the time of her marriage to Mr. Lange. Mr. and Mrs. Lange are the parents of four children: Beatrice E., Florence B., Glenn A., and Virginia M. Again returning to California, Mr. Lange conducted a dairy for three years on the Cosumnes River in Sacramento County; in 1915 he became superintendent of the Henderson ranch on Dry Creek in San Joaquin County, where he remained for a year when he purchased his present place of twenty-five acres. He improved the ranch with a good house, set out twelve and a half acres to vineyard and planted the balance to alfalfa. Mr. Lange is a member of the Knights of Columbus of Lodi, while Mrs. Lange is a member of the Y. L. I. of Lodi and also conducts a branch of the San Joaquin County free library.

GEORGE L. POTTER.—A wide-awake, efficient and very popular representative of the banking fraternity of San Joaquin County is George L. Potter, to whose experience and enterprise much of the success of the Loan Department of the Commercial and Savings Bank of Stockton may well be ascribed. He was born on his father's ranch, fifteen miles east of that city, on February 14, 1883, the son of Seth W. and Mary A. (Kiel) Potter, both natives of Wisconsin, and both still living. His father located in San Joaquin County in 1871, and there went to work on various ranches. Later he found employment in the Minor Blacksmith Shop at Atlanta, and after awhile he bought the establishment. Later still he purchased 320 acres of land which he farmed to grain for many years. He still resides on fifty acres, a part of the old home ranch. Twelve children were born on the home-place, and nine are still in the enjoyment of life. Mary C. has become Mrs. C. A. Hedges. Charles Wilbur and George L. come next. Clara E. is the wife of R. A. Cooke, of Tulare County. Hattie E. is Mrs. E. Gall, of Milton. Seth N. is with the Sperry Flour Company at Stockton. Fred K. is farming the home ranch. Laura A. is the wife of Ed Lloyd of San Francisco, and Dwight S. is a student at the University of California.

George Potter attended the Zinc House, now the Atlanta School, and after working on the home ranch, he became foreman of Frank South's ranch near Clovis, in Fresno County, a tract of 2,000 acres given up to the cultivation of grain. At the end of four years he located in Fresno and learned the glazier's trade, in the Madera Planing Mill, and in time he became the head glazier. Coming to Stockton, he pursued a course of study at the Western School of Commerce, and later he enjoyed a course in salesmanship under the direction of the Sheldon Correspondence School at Chicago. Then he entered the real estate firm of Dietrich & Leistner, taking charge of the rent department, and later he went in for sales management, having charge of the subdivisions, Burkett Acres, Bour's Park, Brookside, Ripon Colony, the Potter Tract, the Escalon Colony Tract, The Oaks Subdivision, and the North Oaks Division. After having given eleven years to real estate development with this company, he accepted an offer, in September, 1918, from the Commercial & Savings Bank of Stockton to take charge of their loan department; and he has served in that capacity ever since.

At Stockton, in 1921, Mr. Potter married Violet Y. Rushing, a native of Tuolumne County, and their home is blessed by two children of Mr. Potter by a former marriage,—Leroy D. and Galen D. Mr. Potter belongs to the Yosemite Club, and to the Woodmen of the World; and he is a member of Lodge No. 218 of the Elks at Stockton.

AUGUSTUS PURDY.—A vineyardist who has found in farming and viticulture his best sphere of action and the source of his greatest prosperity, is Augustus Purdy, the owner of a fifteen-acre vineyard three miles east of Lodi. He was born near Middletown, Orange County, N. Y., on June 2, 1861, a son of Isaac and Julia (Miller) Purdy, descendants of an old New York family. Isaac Purdy was a carpenter, and also farmed on a small scale in New York. There were eight children in the family, as follows: Amelia, deceased; George, deceased; Nancy, deceased; Hattie, Mrs. Wilson, of Middletown; Augustus of this review; Emma, Mrs. A. Lozier, of Middletown; Libby, Mrs. Simon Bates, of Middletown; and Ella, Mrs. Kindred, of Stockton. The father lived to be sixty-seven and the mother eighty years old.

Augustus Purdy received his education in the public school, and helped in the support of his family until he was twenty years old, when he left the parental home to look out for himself. He found employment with the New York, Ontario & Western Railroad, and was foreman for a portion of the road on the east slope of the Shawangunk Mountains. Many times it was necessary to rout the men out at night to work on the road, to protect it from the torrential rain storms. Here Mr. Purdy worked for ten years, but was then obliged to resign on account of his health.

On December 4, 1886, at Washingtonville, Orange County, N. Y., Mr. Purdy was united in marriage to Miss Jennie Bouton, also a native of New York, born near Washingtonville, and a daughter of Shubal and Charlotte (McElroy) Bouton. Her father was a stonemason by trade. He died in 1874. She was third in a family of four children of this union, the others being Isaac, of New York, and Rebecca, deceased, and Mrs. Mary Frathes. Mrs. Purdy was educated in the public school at Washingtonville and at Newburgh on the Hudson. After Mr. Purdy resigned from his railroad work he rented a 150-acre farm, near Middletown, which he operated for one year. He then sold out his equipment and went to work for the railroad company in the machine shop, but was obliged to give this up also. Then he went to Cornwall on the Hudson and worked for the Orrs Mills poultry farm, where he remained for one year, after which he worked one year for Mr. Stillman, the New York millionaire. Next he ran an exclusive boarding house and summer resort on Storm King Mountain, and also ran a livery stable in connection with this. In 1905 he came to California and invested his savings in a ten-acre tract of land which was only a stubblefield, lying east of Lodi about two and a half miles. This he has developed into a fine Tokay vineyard, and has added another five-acre piece adjoining; he has built a good house and put in a good irrigation system with a four-inch pump and a ten-horse-power motor. Mr. and Mrs. Purdy are the parents of one son, Carlos A., born in Lodi, who is assisting his parents. Fraternaly, Mr. Purdy was affiliated with the Red Men, No. 103, of Bloomingburg, N. Y. In politics he is a Republican.

CHARLES RASCH.—Among the prosperous and successful vineyardists of the Lodi section is Charles Rasch, who has been a resident of the county since 1903. He was born in Metz, France, on September 27, 1861, a son of Peter and Tilly (Loupe) Rasch, and is the sixth in a family of thirteen children. The father, Peter Rasch, expert machinist, lived to be seventy-eight years old, and the mother lived to be seventy-seven.

Charles Rasch received a grammar school education, and at the age of eighteen came to the United States, locating in Pittsburgh, Pa., and there served an apprenticeship of three years with the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and altogether worked about six years in Pittsburgh. He then went to St. Louis and worked in the railroad shops of the Chicago and Alton Railroad for one year, when he went to Omaha, Neb., and there worked for a time for the Union Pacific Railroad; he then removed to Cincinnati, and was employed by the Burlington & Ohio Railroad for over a year. Returning to Pittsburgh for a short visit he then went to Brainerd, Minn., and went to work in the shops of the Northern Pacific, where he remained for the next sixteen years; he was then transferred to Livingston, Mont., where he worked for the same company, and again transferred to Tacoma, Wash., where he spent one year. He then quit the machinist's trade and returned to Minnesota, where he bought eighty acres near Deerwood. He cleared the land and lived on it for the next five years, when he sold out and came to California in the fall of 1903 and settled near Lodi. Here he purchased thirty acres of vineyard; as it was maturing, he sought employment elsewhere. He went to New Mexico and worked for a time in the Santa Fe shops at Albuquerque as a locomotive machinist. During the strike of 1905 he was thrown out of employment and returned to California, going direct to Sacramento, where he worked for about three years in the Southern Pacific shops. At this time he settled on his thirty-acre vineyard and built a house and barn on it, where he lived for about twelve years, when he sold it and bought a three-acre vineyard two and a half miles southeast of Lodi on Harney Lane. He built a residence and put in an irrigation system, and he and his family have resided there ever since.

The marriage of Mr. Rasch occurred in Minnesota in April, 1885, and united him with Miss Tilly Hoving, a native of Sweden and a daughter of Andrew Hoving. Her father came to the United States when she was a small child and settled in Michigan, where he mined and later farmed a homestead, and there Mrs. Rasch received her education. They were the parents of three children: Arthur C. Rasch, a merchant at Stockton, is married and has two children, Margery and Geraldine; Violet, a twin of Arthur C., died at six months; and Geraldine died when about ten years of age. In politics Mr. Rasch is a strong Republican and during his residence in Deerwood served one term as constable, and was also township assessor for one term.

ORA REED.—An enterprising and progressive business man, Ora Reed conducts a modern blacksmith and machine shop at 112 East Pine street, where he is ably and conscientiously serving his patrons. He has been a resident of California since 1892 and of Lodi for the past four years, and he has found this locality not only an ideal place from the standpoint of climate, but also as offering excellent business opportunities, and as a recruit from the Middle West he has thoroughly identified himself with the life and activities of this country. He was born in Cherokee County, Kans., March 7, 1884, a son of Thomas Jefferson and Ida Elizabeth (Tackett) Reed, natives of Joplin, Mo., and Iowa, respectively. Grandfather Tackett was a corporal during the Civil War under General Grant in the Army of the Cumberland; he passed away after the close of the war from pneumonia. Grandfather Reed also was a veteran of the Civil War and lived to be sixty years old, passing away in San Jose, Cal. The father was a lead miner and removed from Missouri, his native state, to Kansas, where our subject was born. There are seven children in the family: Jessie, Ora, the subject of this sketch; Ethel, Goldie, Geneva, Ray, and John. In 1892 the family removed to California and settled at Fresno, where the father engaged in farming.

Ora Reed attended grammar school in Fresno and at twenty years of age was apprenticed to learn the blacksmith's trade, which took him five years; then he worked at his trade in various places until 1918, when he came to Lodi, where he began to work for Mr. Pimm, and in 1921 purchased the business, which he has since conducted. In 1921 the firm became Reed & Classon. On November 17, 1906, Mr. Reed was married to Miss Lena R. Hedges, born in Lake County, Cal., a daughter of C. C. and Nancy Hedges. Her father was a farmer in the Dinuba section of Tulare County, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Reed have one child, Erna. Mr. Reed is a Democrat in politics and fraternaly belongs to the Odd Fellows and the Red Men of Lodi, and is past sagem of the latter order.

JOHN REIMCHE.—Among the excellent vineyards in the Lodi section of San Joaquin County is that owned by John Reimche, whose fifteen-acre vineyard lies three miles from Lodi on the Kettleman Lane. He is a native of Krem, South Russia, being born on August 7, 1878, a son of George and Sophie (Bechthold) Reimche, also natives of Russia. Grandfather Peter Reimche was a Russian by birth and a farmer in his native country, and his son, George, followed in his footsteps and engaged in agricultural pursuits in Russia until he removed to the United States in 1893. He first settled in South Dakota, later removed to Kansas, and still later to Alberta, Canada, and engaged in farming in each locality. It was not until 1910 that he came to California and settled in San Joaquin County, where he bought and improved a five-acre vineyard three miles east of Lodi. John Reimche, our subject, is the eldest of his nine children, and in 1893 accompanied his parents to the United States, settling in Hutchinson County, S. D., where he assisted his father with the farm work for five years.

On December 20, 1898, Mr. Reimche was married to Miss Lena Baumbach, a daughter of George and Lottie (Delck) Baumbach, the parents of eight children, as follows: Conrad; George; Jacob; David; Elizabeth; Mrs. Lena Reimche; Lydia and Katherine. Her father, George Baumbach, died at the age of seventy-four and the mother at forty-eight years of age. The same year of his marriage, Mr. Reimche bought eighty acres from his father-in-law and continued to farm until 1907, when he removed to California and settled on a twenty-acre vineyard near Lodi, which he had purchased. He built a house on this place and put it in fine condition, then sold it; he then bought a ten-acre vineyard on Kettleman Lane and built a house and outbuildings, also installed an irrigation system; later he bought a five-acre vineyard on Hogan Lane. Mr. and Mrs. Reimche are the parents of four children: Bertha, deceased; Ida, Hilda, and Albon. In politics Mr. Reimche is a Republican and in religious faith a member of the Church of God.

BATTISTA RIBA.—A retired San Joaquin County farmer who has accomplished his success by hard work and consistent living is Battista Riba, who makes his home at 138 East Sonora street, Stockton. He was born in the province of Cuneo, Italy, November 11, 1849, a son of Antonio and Teresa (Ferrargo) Riba, both natives of Cuneo. The ancestors of our subject are of French descent, and settled in Italy many generations ago. Battista Riba grew up on his father's farm in Italy and was accustomed to hard work. In 1881 he arrived in America, one of a party of twelve who went to Lincoln, Neb., but did not remain. The party left directly for San Francisco, and from there Mr. Riba went to Cloverdale, where he began clearing land and planting vineyard for a large company; this is one of the earliest vineyards planted in California. Later he removed to Bakersfield and engaged in the dairy business for a short time. In 1882 he arrived in Stockton and rented a sixty-acre vineyard; his products brought a good price and for three years he was rewarded with good profits from his hard work. In 1886 he made a six-months trip to his old home in Italy, and upon his return to California settled at Delano, where he homesteaded land, which he later sold and then removed to Tulare, where he engaged in the stock business for the following ten years. In 1902 he farmed near Ripon and Bellota. He also owns a ranch of 640 acres near Farmington. Selling the Delano ranch, he invested the proceeds in city property located at 138 East Sonora street, Stockton.

Mr. Riba was married in 1879 in Italy to Miss Anna Capolino, a native of Cuneo, born in 1863, and who accompanied her brother to America. Three children were born to them. Vincent has a wife and two children and is a rancher at Peters; Mary Ann is the wife of O. J. Galassi, and they have two living children; Bert married Miss Anna Campodonico and they reside in Stockton, where he is employed with the I. X. L. Clothiers. Mrs. Riba passed away at the family home July 4, 1916. In 1888 Mr. Riba received his United States citizenship papers and has since voted the Republican ticket.

GORDON L. BENEDICT.—A resident of Lodi since his fourth year, Gordon L. Benedict has been identified with its activities since his school days were over, and has contributed much to its commercial progress through his association with the fruit packing industry, now being a partner in the firm of Pope & Benedict. A native son, Mr. Benedict was born at Burson, Calaveras County, November 20, 1890, the son of George L. and Katie Benedict, the former a native of New York, Mrs. Benedict being a native daughter of Humboldt County. The father located in the Lodi district in 1894, and there followed farming until his death, Mrs. Benedict also having passed away.

Mr. and Mrs. George L. Benedict were the parents of two children, William and Gordon L., of this sketch. After attending the Salem grammar school at Lodi, he completed his schooling at the Lodi Union high school, and in 1909 started in the fruit packing business with the San Joaquin County Table Grape Growers' Association at Lodi, learning all branches of the business, later becoming assistant secretary of the company. In 1920 he formed a partnership with Demas R. Pope, as Pope & Benedict, representing the E. J. Foley Company of Fresno as district agents, and in 1920 they shipped out 319 cars of fruit and grapes. In January, 1921, this firm became the representative of the T. H. Pepper Company for the Lodi district, one of the largest fruit packing firms operating in the San Joaquin Valley, and since then they have built up a rapidly increasing business. In addition to his activities as a member of this firm, Mr. Benedict is secretary of the Lodi Shippers' League.

Mr. Benedict's marriage, which occurred at Stockton, united him with Miss Ruth E. Hunt, who was born in Sacramento, Cal., the daughter of W. A. and Villa Hunt, and they make their home at 241 South Hutchins Street, Lodi. Prominent in the fraternal life of the community, Mr. Benedict is secretary of the Fraternal Order of Eagles of Lodi, a member of the Stockton Elks, and of Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., and with Mrs. Benedict is a member of the Eastern Star.

CORNELIUS CLARK.—Since an early period in the development of California, Cornelius Clark has resided within the borders of the Golden State, and is now an esteemed resident of San Joaquin County. He is a native of Lawrence County, Ohio, born on August 18, 1853, a son of Wilson and Margaret Ann (Hereford) Clark, the father a direct descendant of Abraham Clark, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, while the mother was the daughter of General John Hereford, who served under General Washington. The family of Herefords were originally from Herefordshire, England, and are descendants of the early Norman kings. Grandfather John Hereford was twice married and was the father of two large families. Mrs. Margaret Ann Clark was the youngest of the second set of children and died at the age of forty-five years, while the father, Wilson Clark, lived to be eighty-seven years old. There were six children in their family: Anon Barnes, John A., Mary, Cornelius, the subject of this review, Sarah E. and Charles.

Cornelius Clark received his education in the public schools of his native state and came to California in 1881, first settling at Petaluma, where he remained until 1898, when he came to Lodi and purchased ten acres of land on the corner of Wyandotte Avenue and Cherokee Lane, a portion of the Larson subdivision, where he was the first settler and built the first house on the tract; later he sold this to his brother and bought another ten acres farther east on Wyandotte Avenue, and here he built a house and resides at the present time.

The marriage of Mr. Clark occurred on August 18, 1904, and united him with Mrs. Mary J. (Woodruff) Lee, a daughter of Jackson and Lila (Roberts) Woodruff. Mrs. Clark is a native of Adams County, Ill. On April 27, 1864, she started to California in a train of emigrants and drove an ox-team across the plains, coming via the Salt Lake route and on November 5 of that year arrived in California. Soon after arrival, her husband, Mr. Lee, was taken ill and they returned East and remained there until his death in 1900. Returning to California she was married to Mr. Clark. Besides his agricultural activities, Mr. Clark is engaged in the egg production business, having several hundred laying hens and pullets, and is a member of the Poultry Breeders' Association and also of the Farm Bureau.

CHARLES ABERSOLD.—Well known for his connection with the business interests of the town of Mossdale, San Joaquin County, Charles Abersold is the proprietor and half owner of a store and garage, located on the Lincoln Highway, which has proven a most successful venture, for he operates a lunch room in connection with his store; also the long distance telephone station. His partner, S. Mauro, is in charge of the garage, while Charles Abersold looks after the store and lunch room. He was born near Beach City, Ohio, March 27, 1875, and received a good grammar school education. After leaving school he worked for the Eagle Machine Shop at Bucyrus, Ohio, and later was employed in the railroad shops in the same city. In November, 1904, Mr. Abersold came to California, direct to Lathrop, where his brother, C. C. Abersold, whose sketch also appears in this work, had settled ten years previous. C. C. Abersold first engaged in the hotel business at Lathrop and Charles worked in his employ there as a clerk for five years. After a trip back East he returned to Lathrop and again worked in the hotel, after which he was employed on the Stockton division of the Western Pacific Railroad. From 1914 to 1917 he ran the gas station and store at the San Joaquin bridge, which he sold out in 1917, and, in 1918, in partnership with S. Mauro, established his present business, which has been a success financially and a boon to the travelers on the highway. In politics Mr. Abersold is a Republican and he is the owner of considerable stock in the Coast Tire & Rubber Company of Oakland. His usefulness in affairs and his energy and ambition give him a broad and bright outlook for the future.

JAMES LEONARD ALLEN.—The owner of an alfalfa ranch comprising 162 acres on Muller Road, Roberts Island, James Leonard Allen was born near Hannibal, Mo., April 27, 1867, a son of William H. and Catherine (Triplet) Allen, both natives of Missouri. The grandparents on both sides were pioneers of Marion County, Mo., coming there in the early days and homesteading the virgin soil, the Allen family, of German ancestry, coming from Kentucky, while the Triplets were of Scotch descent and early settlers of Virginia. James L. remained on the home farm until he was twenty-two, when he went to the lumber camps of Puget Sound, Wash., and eastern Oregon, remaining there until 1890, when he embarked for San Francisco, coming directly from there to Turlock, where he first found employment with the Turlock Irrigation District, then went to work on the Hickman ranch at Hickman for one season. The following four years were spent as foreman on the large Patterson ranch on the Merced River. In 1895 Mr. Allen bought a tract of 240 acres near Snelling and by subsequent purchase added to it until he had 720 acres which he devoted to grain farming, meeting with success. He continued here until 1912, when he had an opportunity to dispose of his holdings at a good profit. He then removed to Merced and leased the Central Hotel, conducting it for two years. In 1914 he came with his family to Roberts Island and purchased the tract of land that is now his home. At the time of his purchase the prospect was far from attractive, but through careful planning and hard work, he now has the ranch in alfalfa and under irrigation. Mr. Allen markets his hay independently and over a period of six years he has received from $12 to $25 per ton. Mr. Allen's ranch is in the Woods Irrigation District and he has taken an active part in its development.

Mr. Allen's marriage, which occurred at Snelling, Cal., November 30, 1902, united him with Miss Elizabeth Grubb, a native of Madisonville, Monroe County, Tennessee, and the daughter of Daniel H. and Sarah (Carson) Grubb, honored pioneers who were for many years residents of Snelling. Mr. and Mrs. Allen are the parents of one son, Lorin C. Allen, attending Stockton College of Commerce.

WILLIAM C. ALLEN.—It would be impossible to estimate the wealth that has been added to San Joaquin County through the development of irrigation, and so to those men who have been instrumental in the working out and installation of economical irrigation systems much credit is due. Among them may be numbered William C. Allen, of Lodi, who for many years has been engaged in this line of work. Descended from California pioneers, associated with Stockton from its earliest days, Mr. Allen is a native son of that city, his parents being Charles C. H. and Harriet (Morton) Allen, the former a native of Boston, Mass., while Mrs. Allen was born in California; her mother, Mrs. Catherine Morton, having come to Stockton with Captain Weber's party, thus being among the first white women there. The father, who came to Stockton when it was but a village, was for many years before his death associated with the Holden Drug Company.

Three children were born to this honored couple: Mrs. Katie Kemp of Lodi, Cornelius Allen of Oakland, and William C. Allen of this sketch. After finishing his education in the public schools of Stockton he learned the plumber's trade with E. A. Whale in Stockton, later conducting a fruit store on Market Street there. He then went to San Francisco where he worked at his trade with Mangrum & Otter, going from there to Lodi, where for nine years he was associated with the plumbing department of Henderson Bros. Much of his work has been the installation of pumps and engines for irrigation, his experience covering a wide field in this line, so that he is an expert in irrigation matters.

About four years ago Mr. Allen became agent for the Krogh deep well pump and the Crocker-Wheeler motor, and since then he has installed more than 400 of these pumps in the Lodi district. A first-class pump which has given complete satisfaction, the Krogh deep well turbine pump is designed to be placed in bored or drilled wells without the use of pits. The pump is located down in the well at such a depth that the impellers are submerged when the pump is idle, so that it is self priming, and one type has a tube surrounding and enclosing the shaft and bearings, protecting them from contact with heavy gravel and coarse material carried in the water. Mr. Allen has made pump installations on the ranches of C. F. Woodruff, Earl Fruit Company, Claude Van Gilder, Louis Sanguinetti, Ed Hutchins, J. S. Stuckenbruck, Charles Buck and the Western Fruit Company ranch at Galt, all of whom can give testimony to the expert quality of Mr. Allen's workmanship.

Mr. Allen's marriage, which occurred at San Francisco, June 2, 1909, united him with Miss Eleanor Huber, the daughter of August and Frances (Harriet) Huber. Her father was a business man in San Francisco and her parents died there. Mrs. Allen was educated at St. Vincent's Convent in San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Allen are the parents of two sons, Albert and Noel Allen.

JOHN ANGERINA.—Since 1885 John Angerina has been identified with the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County and the residents of Stockton are particularly indebted to him for the fine fruit and produce which he has delivered to them for many years. He was born at Montemurro, near Potenza, Italy, November 21, 1864, a son of Antone and Catherine (Aliena) Angerina, both natives of the same place and both are now deceased. An older brother of our subject was a soldier in the national army of Italy. At nineteen years of age John Angerina decided to try his fortune in America, so left family, friends and native country for the New World and located in New York, where he spent two years. In 1885 he left for the West and settling in San Joaquin County found employment on a ranch near Ripon, where he remained for four years, and purchased seven and a half acres near French Camp with his savings. Within the next eight years he was able to buy out the interest of his partner in this tract of land so that he is now sole owner of it. He devotes all of his attention to the production of fruits and vegetables, for which he finds a ready and profitable sale, owing to their superior quality.

The marriage of Mr. Angerina occurred at Stockton in January, 1897, and united him with Miss Vincenza Amadola, also a native of Italy, born in the vicinity of Milan, who came to Stockton, Cal., with her parents, where they still reside. They are the parents of seven children: Catherine, Mrs. Joe Russo, has two sons and resides in Stockton; Antone; Louis served four and a half years in the U. S. Army; John, George, Thomas, and Theresa. The family are identified with the Catholic Church at Stockton and fraternally Mr. Angerina is a member of the S. E. S. of Stockton. He has systematically developed his ranch until it is a model of neatness, the main reason for the quality and quantity of the products of his orchard and garden. Recently he erected a comfortable residence on the ranch, which enhances its value and where the family reside in comfort. He has never had occasion to regret his determination to seek a home in America, for he found good business opportunities here of which he took advantage, and as the years have passed his labors have been crowned with success.

VIRGIL ANTONINI.—An experienced and successful rancher, Virgil Antonini is a native of the Province of Genoa, where he was born at Castiglione, Italy, November 17, 1891, the son of Giabotta B. and Carlotta Antonini, both of whom are still living in that sunny southland. Four children made up the family, Virgil being the eldest; his sister Louisa has come to reside in California, while Henry and Anna have remained in Italy. Virgil's father was a road supervisor, and he made sure that the lad enjoyed the best of grammar school advantages in his native land. At the age of eighteen he came out to the United States, and was fortunate in early making his way to the Pacific Coast, where he soon found in California all the essentials of a Golden State. Reaching Stockton, he took up farm labor, and for about ten years worked for wages. He was industrious and also thrifty, and when he could, he joined a partner and purchased his present ranch of twenty-two acres. This ranch has peaches, cherries and grapes, all choice fruit, and is amply irrigated. His partner is Dr. J. V. Craviotto, the ranch being under the direction of Mr. Antonini. They believe that they own one of the finest farms of the size in San Joaquin County, and they purpose to so develop it that it shall stand in the front rank of California acreage.

At Stockton, on October 3, 1917, Mr. Antonini was married to Miss Rosie Capurro, a native daughter, having been born at Fair Oaks, a suburb of Stockton. Her parents were Frank and Mary (Repotta) Capurro, her father having been a native of Italy who had come out to California about twenty-five years ago, when he settled at Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Capurro had four children, and among these our subject's wife was the second in the order of birth. Mary, now Mrs. Pagano, was the eldest, while Matilda, who became Mrs. Leandro, was the third. The youngest child was named Carrie. Two children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Antonini: Louis and Raymond. Mr. Antonini belongs to the Italian-American lodge called Giardenieri, and he is a member of the Moose of Stockton.

GEORGE L. BARBER.—A well-known citizen and prominent agriculturist of northern San Joaquin County is George L. Barber, who is an equal partner with his brother, Edward H. Barber, in a valuable ranch of 425 acres three miles northwest of Thornton, devoted to general farming and dairying. He was born in Summer Hill, N. Y., January 22, 1870, a son of George H. and Catherine (Potter) Barber, the former a native of New York, of English descent, who served in an Illinois Regiment in the Civil War. At the age of four years George L. Barber accompanied his parents to Stockton, Cal. Here the father remained for a year. He then tried farming in Sonoma County for one year, and then returned to San Joaquin County, where he eventually purchased 100 acres of land three miles northwest of Thornton, a portion of the present holdings of the Barber brothers. Both parents are now deceased. The father died in 1907 at the age of seventy-seven, and the mother was fifty-five when she passed away.

The education of George L. Barber was begun in the district schools of California. When he was thirteen years old, he returned to New York and lived with his mother's people at Utica, where he attended the grammar school. Later he entered the Geneseo State Normal School. After teaching school for a year, in 1890 he returned to California, to the home ranch, which is now equally owned by himself and his brother, Edward H. Barber.

The marriage of Mr. Barber occurred on May 4, 1903, uniting him with Miss May Chamberlain, a native of Oregon, and a daughter of Henry K. and Lucy (Levitt) Chamberlain, natives of Illinois and Massachusetts, respectively, and both from families of Revolutionary stock. Her father was a farmer by occupation, who came to Oregon and took up government land, and later went into the sawmill business. When Mrs. Barber was two years old, her mother died; and five years later her father was killed, leaving a family of eleven children, seven of whom are now deceased and four living. Those living are: Lucy, Mrs. Sherman Alford, of Stockton; Nettie, Mrs. George Alford, of Mountain View; Emma, Mrs. Ralph Snell, of Mountain View; and May, Mrs. Barber. Annie, now deceased, was Mrs. Hansen, of Fresno. Mr. and Mrs. Barber are the parents of four children: James Henry, Edward L., Phillip Sherman, and Robert L. Mr. Barber has served as trustee of the New Hope school district.

ARLINGTON CAFETERIA.—Known throughout Central California as the "House of Good Eats" the Arlington Cafeteria has been built up into a prosperous business by Henry Burk and his associates. Since 1912 Mr. Burk has given his entire time and attention to building up an institution that reflects much credit to his abilities as a manager and to the city of Stockton where such an establishment is appreciated. Henry Burk was born near Frankfort-on-Main, Germany, December 12, 1874, and came to the United States when a young lad, arriving at Chicago on July 22, 1889, where he had a brother engaged in the produce business. Henry worked for this brother ten years and mastered every detail of the produce business. He made a decided change when he came West and engaged in the hotel business in Spokane, Wash., which he continued until he came to San Francisco and once more engaged in the produce business. After spending two years in Lovelocks, Nev., Mr. Burk came to Stockton on November 19, 1912, and with C. G. Berlin as a partner, bought the Arlington Cafeteria from F. A. Parker, who had established the business a year previous.

When the new management took over the business they had a patronage of from 600 to 700 people; this has more than doubled as from 1,400 to 1,500 people are served daily at this location. The space occupied by the cafeteria has been enlarged several times and each time modern methods and equipment were added to bring everything up to the highest standard and simplify labor. The management manufacture their own ice; have their own bakery; have installed a modern heating system for winter, and have a cooling system for summer, fresh air being circulated every few minutes by what is known as the Wash Air System; have installed two Crescent dishwashers with a capacity of 4,000 dishes per hour, and after being washed all dishes are sterilized in water at a temperature of 150 degrees. Fifty people are employed and it takes the entire output of a 120-cow dairy to supply milk and cream, and 1,000 hens for the eggs that are used daily. Only the very best the market affords is served to the patrons of this ideal eating place and every courtesy is shown by owner, management and employees. The public is cordially invited to inspect the kitchen where every sanitary device is found to prepare and care for the food consumed by the patrons of the Arlington Cafeteria.

In January, 1918, George W. Burk, a nephew of Henry Burk, bought an interest in the business. He was born in Chicago, in June, 1890, and received his schooling and business training in that city and it was there he became a Mason. After acquiring his interest he easily mastered the details of the cafeteria business and demonstrated his fitness in the management of various departments. He is a member of the Stockton Elks and the Rotary Club. Charles A. Schroeder is the assistant manager and since 1919 has shown himself a very capable man in caring for the responsibilities that are thrust upon him. On July 1, 1920, Henry Burk purchased the interest of Mr. Berlin and with the hearty co-operation of George W. Burk and Charles A. Schroeder carries on one of the important enterprises of Stockton.

In 1895 Henry Burk's parents came from Germany to make their home in the United States. His father died on June 22, 1914, in Stockton, and now his mother, aged eighty-two years, is living in contentment at the home of her son Henry at Stockton. While living at Spokane, Wash., Mr. Burk was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Brown, a native of Minnesota, and she shares with him the esteem of a large circle of friends. After an absence of many years, Henry Burk made an extended European trip, his travels taking him to many places of historical interest in Europe, as well as in America.

FRED BAERWALD.—Classed with the enterprising and progressive business men of Lodi is Fred Baerwald, the proprietor of a grocery store located at 427 East Locust Street, where he has built up a good paying business. He was born in Vohlinien, Russia, February 16, 1861, a son of Ludwig and Anna Baerwald, both natives of Russia. Ludwig Baerwald was a school teacher in his native country and was the father of seven children by his first wife, Anna Baerwald: Samuel, Fred, and Henry grew up; while John, Martin and Edward all died while small children; the seventh died at birth, when the mother also passed away. Subsequently the father married the second time and there were eleven children in the second family: Adolph, Ernst, August, Reinhardt, Emil, Reinhold, deceased, Edward, deceased, Amelia, Otilia, Agatha, and Mary, deceased. The father passed away at the age of fifty-three.

Fred Baerwald attended grammar school in Russia and after finishing the grade work continued his studies until he received a teacher's certificate to teach in the grammar schools of Vohlinien, where he taught the German and Russian languages for three years. At the age of twenty-one years he entered the Russian army, serving from 1882 until 1888 as a doctor's aide in the hospital department; later he became a druggist in the military hospital. After his discharge from the army he again taught school for seven years, until 1895, when he came to the United States, setting in Towner County, N. D., where he homesteaded a quarter-section of Government land; this he farmed for ten years when he sold it and bought a half-section of land in the same county; this was located near Egeland and he farmed this until 1919 when he sold out and moved to Bonners Ferry, Idaho, and engaged in farming on a 160-acre ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Baerwald occurred on October 20, 1888, in Vohlinien, Russia, which united him with Miss Emelia Lange, a native of the same place, a daughter of Reinhold and Wilhelmina Lange. Her father was a teacher and a merchant in Vohlinien and was a soldier in the Russian army during the Turkish War of 1877. Mr. and Mrs. Baerwald are the parents of thirteen children: Elfrieda, Mrs. L. Klebaum, resides in Egeland, N. D.; Mrs. Martha Ide resides at Braham, Minn.; Meta, Mrs. A. Klebaum, resides at Egeland, N. D.; Mrs. Selma Filter and Mrs. Hertha Heath reside in Lodi; Mrs. Ella Peterson resides at Bonners Ferry, Idaho; Mrs. Alma Nystrom resides in Idaho; Irene, Gertrude, Rosamond, Ehrhard, and Alfred all reside in Lodi; the next to the oldest child, Reinhold, is deceased. The family's residence in Idaho was of only six months' duration, when they came to Lodi in October, 1920. At that time he purchased a ten-acre vineyard in Madera County devoted to Thompson seedless grapes and alfalfa, which he only held for a year, and in December, 1921, purchased a grocery store at 427 East Locust Street. In politics, Mr. Baerwald is a Republican and he and his family are members of the Lutheran Church of Lodi.

ULRICH BARDILL.—The country of Switzerland has given to America many substantial citizens and among those in San Joaquin County is Ulrich Bardill, who owns a half interest in a fine fifty-acre ranch four and a half miles north of Stockton on Cherokee Lane Road, which is devoted to the raising of fruit, consisting of peaches, cherries and grapes. Canton Graubunden, Switzerland, was his birthplace and the date of his birth, December 29, 1872, his parents being Christ and Eva (Schmidt) Bardill. There are six children in the family: Christ, Ulrich, our subject, Peter, Mary, Celia, and Christina, all of whom are still in Switzerland with the exception of the subject of this sketch. The father was a farmer in his native land and lived to be eighty-eight years old, the mother passing away at the age of eighty-five. Ulrich received a good education in the excellent national schools of Switzerland, and at seventeen years of age came to California and found work at Redwood City in a Swiss-Italian vineyard of 110 acres; then he went to Monterey County and worked a number of years on dairy ranches at Salinas and Monterey. From there he went to San Francisco; then he removed to Eureka, Cal., where he was employed in a dairy. In 1902 he came to San Joaquin County where he bought a fifteen-acre tract of bare land, four and a half miles north of Stockton on Cherokee Lane Road. He leveled this ranch, checked it and planted it to alfalfa. This was probably the first alfalfa grown in this section and the experiment proved a success. Later he purchased twenty-three acres adjoining and then in partnership with Mr. Orogone bought another fifteen acres. In 1919 he plowed up the alfalfa and planted the land to an orchard of peaches and cherries and also set out a vineyard, which he irrigates with two pumping plants. Mr.

Bardill has also improved his ranch with a house and other necessary farm buildings. He is interested in all that pertains to the upbuilding of the locality and feels that he made a wise choice when he determined to make his home here, where he has improved the opportunities that have led to success.

JOHN LYMAN BENNETT.—An enterprising man, the owner of a quarter-section of land eight miles northwest of Stockton on Telegraph Road, John Lyman Bennett has during his twenty-seven years of residence on the ranch made substantial improvements and has just set out a vineyard as well as built a residence and made other improvements. He was born at Poplar Grove, Boone County, Ill., March 31, 1869, a son of Highland Lyman and Ellen (Coleman) Bennett. The father died when John L. was a child, and leaving his native state, he and his mother went to Iowa and then to Dundee, Canada, where his mother taught school, receiving fifteen dollars per month for her work. In this way the two worked their way to California, and in 1875 finally arrived in the Golden State and Mrs. Bennett became a teacher in the San Joaquin County schools, teaching at the Lafayette school one year and the Elkhorn district school two years. Here she was married a second time to T. F. Waller and they engaged in farming in this district until their death. John Lyman received his education in the public schools. From a youth he assisted on the ranch and at the age of twelve years he was driving a six-horse team; later on he was able to buy a place of his own, which consisted of twenty acres, where he raised grain and hogs. In 1895 he purchased his present ranch of 160 acres on the Telegraph Road, known as the old Feimster ranch and by hard work and economy has developed it into a well-improved and highly cultivated tract of land, the rich fields returning to him golden harvests as a reward for his care and cultivation.

Mr. Bennett's marriage occurred in Stockton on November 6, 1897, uniting him with Miss Margaret Walkmeister, born in Switzerland, who came to California with her parents, George and Elizabeth Walkmeister. Mrs. Bennett passed away on July 10, 1918, leaving three children, Lyman F., Neva E. and Erma Ruth. Fraternally Mr. Bennett is a member of the Red Men of Stockton, and politically he is a Republican.

EUGENE G. BENDER.—An enterprising, successful vineyardist, whose scientific methods have enabled him to attain exceptional results, is Eugene G. Bender, a resident of San Joaquin County, about two and one-half miles northwest of Acampo. He was born in Menno, S. D., on July 12, 1897, the son of C. J. Bender, whose life-story is written in another part of this historical work.

Eugene Bender was a lad when his father removed, with his family, to California, and he attended school at Lodi and Woodbridge, and there, as well as home, got such help of real, practical value that, when only sixteen, he was able to set out and make his own way in the world. He was offered a clerkship in a grocery and stuck faithfully at that work for three years. Then he took up mechanics and for a year worked in a garage at Lodi.

At Stockton, on April 5, 1916, Mr. Bender was married to Miss May McLachlan, a native of Lodi, and the daughter of E. B. and Anna McLachlan, whose parents came from Canada to California forty years ago. Her father, who was of Scotch descent, has passed away; but her mother is still living in Lodi; she had four children: Francis, the eldest, died in 1918; William served in the late World War, and made the supreme sacrifice, after terrible sufferings as the result of being gassed; Leo lives at Lodi; and May is Mrs. Eugene G. Bender. She was educated in the Lodi grammar school.

For four years after his marriage Eugene Bender leased and operated his father's ranch of 400 acres, and then his father moved upon it. Our subject, however, retained, through a special lease, fifty acres; twenty are in a vineyard, and twenty in the open land; while on a tract of ten acres, which includes a vineyard of two and one-half acres, the balance open land, he has built a modern bungalow.

One child, Francis, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Bender, who are untiring in their own cooperation for better school and other facilities for the community generally. In national politics an enthusiastic Republican, Mr. Bender never allows political partisanship to interfere with loyal local support.

JAMES W. BLAIR.—The proprietor of the only exclusive battery plant in Lodi, James W. Blair has built up a most successful business. He was born at Salt Springs, Mo., on March 22, 1892, and was reared there on the home farm until the age of ten years, the family coming to Lodi to make their home in 1902. Here he attended the public schools, and later the Acampo school, and then learned the plumbing trade with Henderson Bros. and A. P. Krumb of Lodi, following this line of work for five years, and then was with Feuton Wright in his bicycle shop. A battery charging plant was included in this business, and this Mr. Blair bought, going into business for himself at 23 West Pine Street.

During the World War Mr. Blair entered the U. S. service, leaving the business in charge of his wife. He trained at Camp Fremont and sailed for Siberia in the fall of 1918, attached to the 31st U. S. Infantry, where he saw a year of service. Returning to Lodi, he occupied the new battery plant built for him by H. T. Mason at 109 North School Street, one of the most modern establishments of its kind in the state, the brick building 50 by 90 feet being especially equipped for an up-to-date battery charging plant. He is the agent for the popular Willard battery, and gives service in all makes of batteries, and being an expert in this line his business has grown very rapidly. When he started in business in his small shop on West Pine Street, he was charging six batteries at a time; this number has increased to a capacity of 125, with an average of twenty new jobs coming in daily.

On November 24, 1917, Mr. Blair was married to Miss Laura Mason, the daughter of H. T. Mason, a prominent vineyardist and fruit shipper of Lodi, and one daughter has been born to them, Dorothy May. Mrs. Blair, who is a graduate of the Lodi high school, is prominent in the Woman's Auxiliary of the American Legion and the Native Daughters of the Golden West. Unusually capable in business, she took charge of her husband's business during his absence in the U. S. service, and not only kept it going but increased its volume. Standing high among Lodi's progressive young business men, Mr. Blair is a member of the Lodi Business Men's Club, the Knights of Pythias, and the American Legion.

JOHN L. BERNADICOU.—An energetic and successful business man of Stockton is John L. Bernadicou who conducts a French hand laundry at 828 North El Dorado Street. His birth occurred in Arette, Basses-Pyrenees, December 3, 1874, a son of Pierre and Marie (Hayet) Bernadicou, both natives of that place. There were nine children in the family: Valentine, Bernard, Grat, John Louis, our subject, Marie Theresa, Madaline, Marie Louise, and the two younger children who died in infancy. The father lived to be eighty-four years old and the mother seventy-one. John L. Bernadicou received a public school education, then spent three years in the French army in the 24th Field Artillery; he then went to Paris and worked for one year and spent one year at Nojentsur-Marne. In June, 1899, he arrived in Stockton where he worked for his brother in the French Hand Laundry at 140 South California Street, later at 224 East Fremont Street; he then purchased the business and three years ago he erected the modern building at 828 North El Dorado Street, where he has successfully conducted his business with gratifying results.

In France in October, 1898, Mr. Bernadicou was united in marriage with Miss Madaline Pashur, a daughter of John and Anna Pashur, and they are the parents of four children: Paul was born in France and entered the U. S. Army in December, 1917, enlisting at Angel Island; he was placed in the 2nd Field Artillery and trained three months at the Presidio, San Francisco; then four months at Camp Fremont; then to Fort Sill, Okla.; and in November, 1918, was sent to France, where he remained until July, 1919, when he was returned to the United States and discharged at Fort Lee, Va., as a first-class private; Alfred, Francis and Anna were all born in the United States.

STEPHEN N. BLEWETT.—A representative of the legal profession, whose efforts have always been used for the advancement of his locality is Stephen N. Blewett, the junior member of the law firm of Webster, Webster & Blewett, patent and corporation attorneys in Stockton. He was born at St. Ives, Cornwall, England, on January 4, 1890, and at the age of thirteen years left his home for the United States and came to Stockton to reside with his uncle, Richard Noall, one of the pioneer building contractors of Stockton.

Stephen N. pursued his education in the Stockton grammar school and was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1910. During his junior and senior years at high school, he was class president, and was also president of the debating club for two years. The spare moments during his four year high school course were devoted to the study of law in the office of Joshua B. Webster, and on July 17, 1911, one year after his graduation from high school, he was admitted to the bar and became a member of the firm of Webster, Webster & Blewett.

The marriage of Mr. Blewett united him with Miss Bess Simard, a native of Stockton and a member of a pioneer family. Mr. and Mrs. Blewett are the parents of three sons: Robert N., Stephen E., and Richard E. Fraternally Mr. Blewett is a member of Scottish Rite Consistory, San Joaquin Lodge, No. 19, F. & A. M. and of the Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Oakland; a member of the Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F., and has passed through all the chairs, and is past district deputy of this district; he also belongs to the Encampment and Canton, and to the Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. During the World War he was one of the Four-Minute men and his efforts were given unstintedly to the cause for which we fought. His activities in community matters are most pronounced and his influence and support are given freely to all improvements tending to the good of the city and county.

HERMANN BLOHM.—The manager of an excellent ranch of 160 acres located nine miles west of Lodi is Hermann Blohm, who is successfully engaged in raising fruit and in general farming, having sixty-five acres in vineyard. He is a native of Mecklenburg, Germany, born May 9, 1886, his parents being William C. and Fredericka (Spencer) Blohm, both natives of Germany. The father came to California in 1893 and settled first in Lake County, where he resided for two years, then came to Lodi and settled on the ranch now occupied by our subject. There were but two children in the family, Hermann and Freda, Mrs. R. T. Stokes, who resides on the home ranch with her mother and brother. The father passed away in 1917, aged fifty-seven years.

Hermann Blohm was educated in the Woodbridge and Turner district schools and spent the days of his boyhood and youth on his father's ranch. He has always been engaged in general farming and the raising of fruit, and today is the manager of the 160 acres purchased by his father in 1900, which he helped his father to improve, and now owned by his mother. The last elk seen in Elkhorn Township were seen under an oak tree, still standing, on the ranch owned by Mrs. Blohm, and the old stage road between Stockton and Sacramento ran through this ranch. Sixty-five acres of the ranch is in productive vineyard, fifteen acres in alfalfa, and the balance is devoted to pasture; the land is irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch. He is systematic, methodical, practical and progressive in all his methods, and the ranch with all its equipments is in keeping with modern ideas of fruit-growing and general farming. The ranch is further improved with a fine house, blacksmith shop and other farm buildings. Mr. Blohm and his father were among the organizers of and Hermann is a trustee of the Sycamore drainage district; he was one of the organizers and the present secretary of the Sycamore Rural Telephone Line. His political allegiance is given to the Republican party.

ARTHUR L. BOARD.—One of the comparatively recent additions to the business circles of Lodi is Arthur L. Board, who since 1918 has been the local manager of the Western States Gas and Electric Company, and whose business ability has resulted in a steady growth to the present volume of business done by this company. He was born near Oakdale, Cal., October 5, 1884, a son of Robert and Harriet Board. Robert Board crossed the plains with an ox team from Callaway County, Mo., and settled first at the Seventeen Mile Bar in Calaveras County. Our subject's mother was a native of California, whose father was a very early settler in the Golden State. There was a family of six children: Robert H.; Arthur L., the subject of this sketch; Mabel; Florence, now Mrs. Winfred Weber; Fred and Vesta, the two latter deceased. Arthur L. is the only member of the family residing in Lodi; the others all reside in Stockton.

Arthur L. Board was educated in the grammar schools of Calaveras and Tulare counties. When he was fourteen years old his family settled in Visalia; and he was fortunate in attending the schools in Visalia, where he attended for three years. Then he began to work for himself at anything he could get to do, doing mostly farm work. Next he went to the Imperial Valley, when that portion of California was in the early stages of its wonderful development, and there he engaged in general farming near El Centro for two years. Twelve years ago he began working for the Mount Whitney Power & Electric Company, and he remained with the company for nine years, his headquarters being at Visalia. Then, in March, 1918, he located in Stockton and began to work for the Western States Gas & Electric Company. On August 1, 1918, he was transferred to Lodi, where he became the local manager of the company.

The marriage of Mr. Board occurred in Fresno on January 30, 1916, uniting him with Miss Ida Olive Bailey, born in Madera, Cal., a daughter of Horace and Emma Bailey. Horace Bailey was a pioneer of California, and for many years engaged in the transfer business. He is now deceased. The mother is still living in Madera. Mrs. Board began her education in the grammar schools in Madera. She entered the San Jose State Normal, from which she was graduated, and then taught school for ten years in the Lowell school, Fresno, until her marriage. She was so well liked that the board of education asked her to continue teaching; but she declined, preferring to devote her time to her home. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Board: James Arthur, Mabel Jeanette, and Florence Nadine. Mr. Board is the owner of valuable real estate in Stockton and Richmond. A Republican in politics, he favors the men and measures supported by that party. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Lodi Lions Club.

JAMES F. BOWMAN.—For a number of years James F. Bowman was identified with the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County; but in May, 1922, he disposed of his vineyard in the Live Oak district and became the proprietor of the Imperial Hotel at Lodi, where he now makes his home. He has made a general success of his undertakings, and is known throughout this section of the county as a substantial man of affairs. He was born at Des Moines, Iowa, on January 19, 1866, a son of John and Jane Bowman, who were the parents of eight children, as follows: Elizabeth, James F., Sarah, Clara, Caroline, Anna, John, and Wallace.

James F. Bowman received his education in the public schools of Iowa. When he was seventeen years old he began to make his own way. Going to Texas, he drove cattle on the trail at Dallas. From Texas he went to Montana and there became a cowboy. Later he went into the horse-raising business on the plains near Cheyenne, Wyo. He soon had 100 head of horses, which ranged over the government land. Later he took them to the Powder River country in Montana, where he had a ranch near Buffalo, and there in time he had a herd of 1,000 head, including fine draft horses, saddle horses, and drivers. He remained in Montana about thirty years and then drove his horses into the Dakotas, where he sold them to farmers. After that he came to California and settled at Lodi in 1916. At first he ran a ten-acre alfalfa ranch near Lodi, for one year; then he purchased a ten-acre prune orchard on the Acampo-Lockeford road east of Youngstown, which he kept for one year. Next he bought a ten-acre Tokay vineyard and almond orchard three miles northwest of Lockeford. This he later disposed of, and purchased twenty-six acres six miles east of Lodi, east of the Live Oak schoolhouse. Fourteen acres of this ranch was planted to vineyard and the balance was unimproved; he further improved the ranch with a good pumping plant, insuring the proper cultivation of the land and vineyard. In May, 1922, he disposed of his ranch and purchased the Imperial Hotel at Lodi, and this is his present residence.

Mr. Bowman's first marriage occurred in British Columbia in 1896, and united him with Miss Lucy Dallas, a native of British Columbia. She passed away eight years ago. His second marriage, on October 18, 1916, at Spokane, Wash., united him with Mrs. Anna R. (Campbell) Sogrodneck, a daughter of James and Anna Campbell. She was born at Ludington, Mich., and received her education in the grammar and high schools of that city. She married Frank Sogrodneck, an employee of the Great Northern Railroad Company at Superior, Wis. He passed away fifteen years ago, leaving her with two sons, Joseph Gordon and Francis Keith, both of whom have taken the name of Bowman. Mr. Bowman is a Democrat in politics, and in many ways has manifested his interest in the affairs of his community.

EMIL BRAIDA.—Numbered among the enterprising and progressive citizens of Lodi is Emil Braid, the owner of an apartment house located at 217 East Lockeford Avenue and a twenty-two acre vineyard and cherry orchard just south of Youngstown. Viewed from a financial standpoint his career has been a success, for he started without capital. Realizing, however, that labor is the basis of all prosperity he has worked persistently and earnestly during the greater part of his business career at his trade of mosaic and tile laying, his agricultural pursuits occupying more recent years. He was born near Beaver Falls, Pa., June 20, 1885, a son of John and Madaline Braid, parents of eight children. The father, John Braid, was a stonemason by trade who left Pennsylvania in 1893 for California, coming direct to San Francisco, where he followed his trade until his death at the age of fifty-nine. The mother was fifty-two when she passed away.

Emil Braid attended the Lincoln grammar school in San Francisco and as soon as he was old enough was apprenticed to learn the mosaic and tile laying trade in San Francisco, which he mastered and followed for a number of years in that city.

On November 11, 1920, in Stockton, occurred the marriage of Mr. Braid, which united him with Mrs. Lila (Ehrhart) Laughton, born in Amador County, Cal., a daughter of Thomas Ehrhart. Mr. and Mrs. Braid then moved to Youngstown, where he purchased twenty-two acres set to vineyard and cherries. In 1921 Mr. Braid purchased a large residence on East Lockeford Avenue, Lodi, which he has transformed into an apartment house containing sixteen apartments, thoroughly modern in every particular, and here Mr. Braid and his family make their home. They are the parents of two daughters, Hazel and Vera. In politics he is a Republican, and fraternally is a member of the Neighbors of Woodcraft.

ELMER E. CADY.—A native son of California and the son of a pioneer of the gold days, Elmer E. Cady has succeeded in the cattle and sheep business to a profitable degree. Born on May 2, 1867, at Stone Corral, Calaveras County, Cal., Mr. Cady is the son of Addison and Bridget (McNamee) Cady, the father a native of Massachusetts who walked across the Isthmus of Panama and arrived in California in the spring of 1850. He first engaged in mining in Calaveras County; then engaged in the hotel business in Pleasant Valley, near Jenny Lind, for a few years, then sold out and located at Stone Corral and ran a hotel and butcher shop. In those days this section of the country was wild and unsettled where Indians and wild animals abounded in plenty. About 1875 the father moved across the county line into San Joaquin County and bought 300 acres of land at Bellota; this he improved by building a residence, barns, corrals and fences and engaged in farming pursuits until his death in 1907. The Cady ranch was a landmark for many years in that section and among the very first to be developed in the Bellota district. Mr. and Mrs. Addison Cady were the parents of ten children, five of whom are living: Addison resides at Linden; Elmer E.; Frank is a farmer near Linden; Charles resides in Waterloo; Mrs. Julia Welch lives at Sacramento.

Elmer E. Cady attended school in the Bellota district and at the age of fifteen went to work on the Prather ranch near Linden, where he spent seventeen years, when he established himself in the sheep business and has been engaged in raising sheep and cattle ever since, his present partner being Charles H. Harold of Stockton. Both of the partners own ranches near Bellota, where they carry on their sheep industry, Mr. Cady owning 1,000 acres, a portion of the Gen. Douglass ranch, of which 160 acres is fine rich bottom land, which he farms. Mr. Cady was one of the organizers of the Central California Wool Growers' Association and is a member of the executive committee of the Stockton branch; he is also a member of the California Cattlemen's Association.

The marriage of Mr. Cady in Stockton, October 3, 1900, united him with Miss Elizabeth A. McDonald, a native of Stockton and the daughter of Patrick McDonald, a pioneer blacksmith who married Miss Margaret Fennell. Mr. and Mrs. Cady are the parents of one son, Elmer E., Jr., a graduate of the Stockton high school with the class of 1920. Fraternally, Mr. Cady is a member of the Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and the Knights of Columbus.

CHARLES P. FENLEY.—Among the younger generation of business men in Stockton is Charles P. Fenley, the proprietor of an electrical store, located at 29 North Sutter Street, where he carries a full line of electrical supplies and fixtures of all kinds; he also does contracting in all branches of electrical work. He was born in the rural district of Jackson County Mo., on March 15, 1894. When he was six years old the family moved to Page County, Iowa, and settled on the old home place of his paternal grandfather. What schooling Charles P. received was in the district schools and when a small lad he began to work as a farm hand; when he was nine years old he milked twelve cows daily and when he was ten years old he followed a plow and at fourteen he did a man's work in the hay field. His family then moved to Fort Morgan, Colo., where they raised grain; later they removed to Kimball, Nebr., and there his father engaged in the livery stable business. It was in Kimball that our subject gained his first lessons in the electrical business, starting as a lineman with a ground gang with the Bell Telephone Company, which was laying a transcontinental line from Nebraska to Wyoming. During 1912 his family removed to California and settled in Stockton and during the same year our subject joined them; later he went to Oakland, and found employment with the Union Iron Works in the electrical bureau of the marine department; he then was employed by the S. & O. Terminal Railroad in Oakland in the electrical department; then went to Modesto and worked for the electrical contractor, Jack Nightingale, and during his three years' stay gained valuable experience in his line; he also spent some time in Arizona and Texas following his trade. On June 20, 1920, he purchased the old established business of Gould & Johns at 119 South California Street, Stockton, and built up a good business, until it outgrew the quarters, when he removed to a new building at 129 North Sutter Street.

Mr. Fenley's marriage united him with Miss Mary Weber, a native of Fresno, Cal. She is a fine business woman and has been the manager of the Stockton branch of Reich & Liever of San Francisco for the past five years; and for eight years she was associated with the Wonder store of Stockton. Both Mr. and Mrs. Fenley are held in high esteem in the community and are doing their share toward the progress and upbuilding of the locality they have selected for their permanent home.

PETER FILIPPINI.—Since 1900, Peter Filippini has been an enterprising and prosperous California citizen, and in partnership with his brother, Osvaldo, is the proprietor of the Filippini dairy farm fourteen miles east of Stockton on the Sonora Road, where they own 100 acres, sixty-five acres of which is devoted to raising alfalfa, besides maintaining a dairy herd of ninety choice Holstein cattle. This is the largest dairy in this section of the county, and the Filippini brothers have proven a success along this line. Peter Filippini was born in August, 1883, and his brother Osvaldo, July 29, 1884. They are both natives of Switzerland, sons of Peter and Camelia (Baffa) Filippini, also natives of Switzerland. In 1900, our subject left his home in Switzerland and came to California, and two years later his mother and three brothers, Osvaldo, John and Frank, followed. Another brother, Joe Filippini, came to California in 1892, and for the past fifteen years has been a state guard at San Quentin prison. The father passed away in Switzerland about twenty-five years ago.

Arriving in California, Peter Filippini found work on a large dairy in Marin County, where he worked for eight years. While residing there he received his United States citizenship, and through the years his loyalty to his adopted country has never been brought in question. In June, 1914, the oldest son of the family died, and soon after Mr. Filippini purchased his property from the widow; and as has been stated above, a successful dairy is conducted on this ranch, a credit to the locality and a source of fine profit to its owners.

Mr. Filippini is a Republican in politics and a progressive citizen of more than ordinary activity in supporting measures for the prosperity and advancement of the Farmington district. Both brothers are men of honorable principles and upright dealings.

C. H. FINK.—Interesting as a successful, retired vineyardist, C. H. Fink, of 401 West Walnut Street, Lodi, is able to look back upon an honorable association not only with one of the most important industries in the Golden State, which he himself did so much to forward, but with one of the most promising of California towns. He was born in Sheboygan County, Wisconsin, on July 25, 1859, and on the 28th of May, 1873, he with his parents left for California.

The family located in Stanislaus County, near Crow's Landing, and there the father and five sons became large land-owners and also extensive growers of grain, farming together as many as 2,400 acres, and continuing in this partnership for thirty-three years, all of the sons being still living, and most of them still farming in Stanislaus County. This land which Mr. Fink farmed was bought for ten dollars an acre, and it is now worth $300 per acre. In 1888, barley sold for fifty-four cents per bushel, and wheat at eighty-five cents, and this will afford a clue as to the farmers' rewards in some years.

Tired of farming a large ranch, however, C. H. Fink and his younger brother, in the fall of 1905, came to Lodi and bought a ranch of fifty-six acres. They planted thirty acres to Tokays, and later four acres to cherries and alfalfa. Their first crop was valued at $1,000, and their ranch cost them $9,000, or about $160 per acre. This they farmed until December 17, 1920, when they sold it at a handsome profit and retired. They had made their home upon the ranch, and naturally during their residence there had greatly improved the property, in part by the introduction of water from the Lodi District Pumping Plant, and partly by the erection of houses, etc. Mr. Fink was married at Crow's Landing to Miss Emma Hirsch, born in Wisconsin, and she died at Lodi, May 13, 1907. They had three children, Della and Stella, twin sisters, and Vernon. His second marriage, in Lodi, united him with Miss Esther M. Hirsch, a native of Wisconsin. The family attend the Seventh Day Adventist Church, of which Mr. Fink has been a member for thirty-three years, in excellent standing. Mr. and Mrs. Fink and their family have always enjoyed the esteem of a wide circle of devoted friends, and the confidence of business and financial leaders who have been familiar with their dependable methods, and their high standards of patriotic citizenship.

C. W. FORBES.—Prominent among the most highly-esteemed citizens of Manteca may well be numbered C. W. Forbes, who has been a popular resident of the live town since October, 1918, having there, with M. A. Forbes, built up the extensive corporation called the Manteca Telephone and Telegraph Company. Mr. Forbes was born on a farm in Wayne County, New York, in 1871, and as a boy enjoyed the advantages of a good common-school education. When sixteen years of age he entered the employ of the Bell Telephone Company of New York State, after which he gradually worked up from lineman to be general manager of a private telegraph and telephone company at Chicago.

In 1909 he went into Mexico, to the State of Sonora, where he pioneered in the development of the Sonora Telephone Company, with their headquarters at Hermosillo; and in this venture Mrs. Forbes was a partner throughout the nine years required for expanding the extensive business; and during their stay there they became intimately and pleasantly associated with prominent Mexican families, including that of the present President Obregon. Before coming to California, however, Mr. Forbes sold his entire interest, on account of the unsettled state of affairs there.

In 1916 he reached the Golden State, and since that time he has built up a business consisting of five hundred and thirty phones within a radius of three miles from Manteca to a territory fully seven miles in length with a steady growth from six suburban lines in 1918 to twenty-two lines in 1922, while the long-distance service has more than tripled in this period. From an investment of $6,000, the volume of business has so increased as to call for an investment of some $40,000—which speaks for itself.

Mr. Forbes is a live wire in the Chamber of Commerce, and equally so in the newly-organized Lions Club, of which he is chairman of the executive committee. He is also a most welcome member of the Masonic lodges.

FRANK FRANCESCONI.—A well-known citizen and prosperous business man of Stockton, Frank Francesconi is the owner and proprietor of a grocery and soft drink establishment located at 204 West Main Street. He has lived in this state since 1903, and during these nineteen years has gained an honorable and substantial place for himself in the business life of the city of Stockton. He was born in Lucca, Italy, July 6, 1880, where his father, Guiseppi Francesconi, was engaged in general contracting; he had married Carolina Marsili, and they had six children, of whom Frank is the oldest. He received his education in the local schools, after which he assisted his father until twenty-three years old. Then in 1903 he came to the United States and settled in Portland, Ore., where he remained for one year, working for wages; then he removed to San Francisco and worked there until 1906, when he settled in Stockton and found employment in the cannery of the California Fruit Association, now the California Packing Corporation. His first independent business venture was the purchase of the Hotel De Italia, at the corner of El Dorado and Lafayette streets, which he conducted for three years with success; then he purchased the Roma Liquor store on South El Dorado Street, with Dave Battilana and A. Massi as partners. After seven years in this business he sold out his interest and bought a building on the corner of Pilgrim and Hazelton streets, and there he and his wife conducted a grocery store for a number of years. In 1921 he was burned out and he immediately rebuilt the corner with store and flats at a cost of $15,000, which he now rents. About four years ago he bought his present place of business at 204 West Main Street; and here, in conjunction with his grocery store, he conducts a soft drinks parlor.

The marriage of Mr. Francesconi united him with Miss Theresa Mori, a native of Jackson, Cal., and they are the parents of one son, Joseph. In 1913 Mr. Francesconi and his family visited the old home in Italy, the trip covering a period of eleven months. Mr. Francesconi in partnership with Nick Copello, G. B. Garibotto and G. B. Puppo have just completed a $60,000 apartment house located at the corner of California and Lafayette streets. Mr. Francesconi also owns other valuable real estate, including two residences at Hazelton and Pilgrim streets. Coming to the West early in manhood and with very little capital he has taken advantage of his opportunities and has met with gratifying success. Fraternally he is a member of the Italian Club, the Eagles and Moose of Stockton.

HENRY SIDNEY FRENCH.—As field inspector of the grading, packing and standardization of fruit shipments for the Woodbridge Fruit Company, Henry Sidney French has demonstrated his enterprise and capability and his expert knowledge along this line is the means of putting on the market a better quality of fruit, thus enabling the company to command better prices and the public to receive better fruit. He was born at Sunol, Cal., November 19, 1883, a son of Henry Lathrop and Carrie (Ballard) French, the former a native of Fayette, Iowa, and the latter of Niles, Mich. Henry Lathrop French was an educator and taught in various places throughout the East and in the early sixties came to California, and at San Jose, April 28, 1881, was married. In 1890 he removed with his family to Corvallis, Ore., and engaged in the orchard business until his death at the age of fifty-two years, June 20, 1910. There were ten children in the family: Margaret resides in Portland, Ore.; Henry Sidney, the subject of this sketch; James resides at Dallas, Ore.; Charles A. is a graduate of the Agricultural College of the University of Oregon and at present is a Lieut.-Colonel in the Regular Army stationed in Honolulu; Anna, deceased; Frank L. resides in the state of Washington; Phoebe, Mrs. George Steffey, also resides in Washington; Ernest L. is a contractor and builder in Lodi; Susan, Mrs. Carl Moore, resides in Portland, Ore.; and Louis Van Roe resides in San Jose, Cal. The mother resides in Lodi.

Henry Sidney French began his education in the grammar school in Corvallis, and after finishing the grade work entered the high school, majoring in horticultural lines, then entered the agricultural school; however, before finishing, he took up display advertising, using the natural farm products to make the picture displays. In 1905 he was awarded the blue ribbon for his display at the Lewis and Clark Exposition at Portland, Ore., and he has the record of six blue ribbons for seven years running for the best county displays in that state.

On January 11, 1912, at Corvallis, Ore., Mr. French was married to Miss Angel Marie Jacobsen, born in Chicago and daughter of Peter Jacobsen, a native of Denmark. Peter Jacobsen left his native country for America and settled in Chicago, where he conducted a store for many years, then removed to Jackson, Minn., where he became a farmer, also had extensive city interests; he is now living retired at Lodi. Previous to her marriage, Mrs. French was head fitter in a large dressmaking establishment in Chicago, and while on a visit to her aunt, who lives in Corvallis, Ore., met Mr. French. They are the parents of four children: Marie Carolyn, Henry Sidney, Jr., Richard Lathrop and Robert Howard. Immediately after his marriage Mr. French took charge of a large fruit and dairy ranch on the Willamette River, where he remained for one year; then he became the inspector for the Willamette Valley Fruit Growers' Association for a period of three years; at the same time having charge of the Marion County exhibits at the state fairs. He was then employed by the Government as investigator in the Bureau of Markets of the Western Department, covering the northwest territory, which position he held for one year; in the fall of 1918 he removed to Sacramento, Cal., and became associated with the California Fruit Exchange; then he was sent to Lodi as assistant manager for this organization. In 1919 he went into the brokerage business and the year following became associated with J. M. Posey in the real estate business, the firm being known as Posey, French & Company; this partnership only lasted eight months, when Mr. French became deputy county assessor for the Lodi district of the county. In the fall of 1921 he was deputized as a horticultural inspector under Mr. Ladd of Stockton; then he became field inspector for the Woodbridge Fruit Company, to which position he devotes all his time and energy. At the same time he continues as deputy county assessor. The family reside at 130 North Cordier Street, Lodi.

JOSEPH LARRANAGA.—The owner and proprietor of the Taft Clothing Store located on South Hunter Street, Stockton, Joseph Larranaga is one of the city's progressive young business men. His advancement in the business world has been through his own efforts, and today he is enjoying a merited success. He was born in the Pyrenees Mountains of Spain on September 20, 1888, this portion of Spain being known as the sheep country on account of the thousands of sheep raised and pastured in the hill country. At the age of nineteen years, Mr. Larranaga left his native country and worked for about a year as a laborer on the Panama Canal. In 1908 he arrived in San Francisco and from there went to Klamath Falls, Ore., where he was engaged in construction work for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; later he returned to California and worked for the Standard Oil Company at Richmond. On account of impaired health he gave up his position and went to Nevada where he worked as a sheep herder until 1911, when he again returned to California and direct to Stockton, where he herded sheep for F. Samnario, remaining in his employ for a year. He then found employment with L. Bacigalupi, proprietor of the Taft Clothing Company, and on July 1, 1922, became one of the owners, his partner being Bacilio Aldunate. They have a large and commodious store building on South Hunter Street and carry a full and complete line of men's clothing, the business steadily increasing in volume month by month.

The marriage of Mr. Larranaga united him with Miss Pilar Aldunate, also a native of Spain, and they are the parents of two children, Trinidad and Marie Beatrice. Fraternaly Mr. Larranaga is a member of the Improved Order of Red Men and the Spanish Benevolent Association of San Francisco. In matters of public concern he is progressive and is the supporter of any movements which benefit the community.

ROBERT LAUDENBACH.—A representative San Joaquin County rancher whose steady, substantial success has marked the progress of agriculture in this favored section is Robert Laudenbach, who was born near Atlanta, in San Joaquin County, on October 24, 1872, the son of Henry and Barbara (Becker) Laundenbach. His father was born in Hesse-Castle, Germany, as was his mother, who came from Gravenhausen, in the Rhine section of Germany what was called Rhein Beyern; the former was an emigrant to the United States in 1852, when he crossed the ocean, came inland to Kentucky, and settled at Louisville. There, being a cooper, he worked at his trade for a short time, and then he came to St. Louis, Mo., proceeding from there to New Orleans, where he again worked at his trade.

In 1854, Henry Laudenbach, stirred by the reports from the new gold country, came on to California, by way of the Isthmian route, landing at San Francisco; and from there he went directly to the mines on the Sacramento River, and at Placerville, following mining for the next four years. He then came into San Joaquin County in 1858 and settled at Atlanta, and he purchased a half-section of very sandy soil, which he farmed until 1875, when he sold out and moved to a point northeast of Stockton. There he settled what was known as the Murray ranch, of 200 acres, which he leased for eight years. He next purchased the ranch where our subject now resides, locally called the old Nelson rancho, situate four miles from Stockton on the Waterloo Road, and consisting of 300 acres, which he farmed for many years, or up to the time of his death in 1912, aged eighty-one years. Of these original 300 acres, 100 have been sold off, and the balance has been so divided that our subject now owns ninety acres, which are devoted to grain farming.

Six children made up the family of Mr. and Mrs. Laudenbach, and Mary, the present Mrs. Renner, was the eldest in the group and lives in Stockton. Fred and George are in Stockton; Robert, Eda and Henry W. The mother died in 1898. Robert attended the grammar school of the August district, where he had a solid preparation for the duties of life. Except for four years spent on a grain farm of 240 acres located farther out, on the Linden Road, he has always lived on the old place, which has a house which was there when his father moved onto the farm, and which is said to be at least fifty years old. Mr. Laudenbach finds his social pleasures largely in the congenial circle of Iroquois Tribe No. 35 of the Red Men of Stockton. He has been twelve years a trustee of the August school district; independent in politics, he tries to vote only for the best men and the most approved measures.

J. LOUIS PERRIN.—A valuable farmstead of seventy-seven acres, situated about six miles southwest of Lodi, is the property of J. Louis Perrin, who is extensively and successfully engaged in viticulture and seed growing. Mr. Perrin is thoroughly progressive and up-to-date in his agricultural enterprises, and is considered among the prosperous and influential men in the San Joaquin Valley. He was born in Bottineau County, N. D., March 2, 1893, a son of Henry and Mary (Cota) Perrin, the former a native of Quebec, Canada, and the latter of Massachusetts.

J. Louis Perrin, the second eldest in a family of twelve children, received his first schooling in the district schools of his native county and was eleven years of age when his parents removed to Mountain Home, Idaho, and he continued his studies there during their two years' residence. The family then removed to Lodi in 1906, where the father bought a thirty-acre tract of land and our subject attended the Salem and Emerson schools in Lodi. Louis helped his father run the ranch until 1912, when he leased the Brack vineyard, which he still operates.

On November 3, 1915, in Lodi, Mr. Perrin was married to Miss Mary C. Bround, a daughter of Jacob and Johannah (Stewart) Bround. Mrs. Perrin was born in Morrow County, Ore., but received her education in the Salem and Lafayette schools of Lodi. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Perrin resided on the 160-acre Bround ranch, known as the Stratton ranch, which Mr. Bround purchased prior to his demise. In 1920 Mr. Perrin purchased a seventy-seven-acre ranch south of Kingdon, twenty-seven acres of which is set to grapes of the Tokay, Mission and Zinfandel varieties. The balance of this ranch is operated by him as a seed farm, on which was a fine stand of vegetable seeds in 1922. Mr. Perrin is a Republican, and fraternally he is identified with the Modern Woodmen of America at Lodi.

FRED GRIEVES PERROTT.—A member of the Lodi Union high school board, who is highly esteemed because of his pronounced stand in favor of better facilities for popular education, is Fred Grievess Perrott, the vineyardist of Woodbridge, who has eighty acres of fine land. He was born on the home ranch in 1866, the son of John Perrott, a native of London, England, who had married Miss Anne Jane Grievess, a native of Massachusetts. Although born in England, his father was really of Irish descent, and coming to California in the famous year of the Argonauts, he went to the mines along the Mokelumne River. He had reached California by way of the Isthmus Route but, having returned East, he came out to California again about 1853, this time traversing the great plains. Soon after their arrival here, the eldest son, James, was born, now residing at Stockton. George, the second in the family of eight, died when he was thirty-seven years old. John lives at Lodi; Ellen passed away in her twelfth year; Belle is now Mrs. Leckebusch, and lives on the old home ranch; Frank lives at Woodbridge; our subject was the seventh child; Emma has become Mrs. Smith of Oroville.

Fred Perrott attended the grammar school at Woodbridge, and then went to the San Joaquin Valley College at the same place. After his school days were over, Mr. Perrott took work with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. He spent two years at Hanford and two years at Lodi, and there he was assistant agent.

At Woodland, on October 25, 1895, Mr. Perrott was married to Miss Mamie Bourland, who was born near Stockton, the daughter of F. L. and Emma Bourland, both early settlers in California. Mrs. Perrott had also attended the San Joaquin Valley College. After their fortunate marriage, Mr. Perrott leased his father's ranch for a short time, until his father divided that part of his estate among his several children, when our subject received some eighty acres as his share. About 1905 his mother died, and four years later the elder Mr. Perrott followed his devoted wife to the grave, aged seventy-five years. These eighty inherited acres were devoted to wheat, but Mr. Perrott gradually converted the land to vineyard purposes, all under irrigation. A Republican in national political affairs, Mr. Perrott has been on the Lodi Union high school board since the new high school was built in 1912. From 1911 to 1919 he served under J. W. Moore as deputy county assessor for the Woodbridge district.

Mr. and Mrs. Perrott have a family of three children, Margaret, Mildred and Fred. He is a member and a past grand of Woodbridge Lodge No. 98, I. O. O. F., and his father was also an Odd Fellow, and in 1879 served as the noble grand of the lodge. Mr. Perrott was made a Mason in Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, of which he is a past master. He belongs to the Rebekahs, and Mrs. Perrott also is an active member, and of the Eastern Star, and is a past noble grand of the Rebekah Lodge. Mr. Perrott years ago enjoyed popularity as a professional baseball player, and as one of the pioneers of the national game, he will go down in history. From 1885 to 1890 he played professional baseball and in 1890 was pitcher for the Stockton club of the California League. That year Sacramento won the pennant, the clubs of Oakland, San Francisco, Sacramento and Stockton making up the organization.

OSELLUS POOL.—An excellent representative of the agricultural element and the public-spirited citizenship of San Joaquin County is found in Osellus Pool, who has been a resident of the Lodi section since 1904. He was born at Williamsburg, Ohio, on November 25, 1862, a son of John and Sarah (Allen) Pool, natives of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, respectively. The father, John Pool, was a farmer in Ohio and passed away in 1915, at the age of eighty-two years, and in 1919 the mother passed away. They were the parents of eight children, Osellus being the second.

Osellus Pool in boyhood was obliged to assist with the farm work, consequently had little opportunity to attend school. When he was twenty years old he went to Franklin County, Neb., where he worked for wages for a number of years. He then rented a quarter-section of land for a year, and decided to purchase it.

At Upland, Neb., on November 24, 1887, Mr. Pool was united in marriage with Miss Cora B. Griswold, a native of Towanda, Pa., and the eldest of the four children of Charles A. and Martha M. (Arnont) Griswold, natives of New York and Pennsylvania. Her father was a veteran of the Civil War, having served in the Ninth Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and he and his wife are residents of Lodi. Cora Griswold is the eldest of a family of four children. Mrs. Pool received her education in the Franklin County, Neb., schools and was reared on a farm in that vicinity. Mr. and Mrs. Pool resided in Nebraska seventeen years, during which time he farmed his quarter section and was active in the development of his district, where he was a school director for many years. They are the parents of eight children: Rosa Belle died December 2, 1908, at the age of twenty years; Carrie M., Mrs. J. E. Baker of Lodi, has two sons—Robert and Harold; Edith G., Mrs. Dr. W. C. Adams, of Oakland had three children—Clarice, deceased, Walter, Jr., and Doris; Frances A., Mrs. Lawrence F. Hosmer of Lodi; Robert E., Charles A., deceased; Edna B., the wife of Alvin H. Pelton, and Allen G., at home with his parents. Robert Pool enlisted on May 3, 1917, in the U. S. Navy and from May until February was at Goat Island; then was sent to the University of Minnesota and attended the Hospital Corps School at Minneapolis; then was sent to Norfolk, Va., and placed on the transport Martha Washington, later transferred to the transport Arcadia. He made eleven trips across the Atlantic Ocean as a member of the hospital corps of the transport. At one time, during the influenza epidemic, there were 400 cases of the disease on board the ship. He was discharged as a pharmacist's mate, first class.

Arriving in California in 1904, Osellus Pool purchased twenty acres just off the Kettleman Lane, about two miles southeast of Lodi, ten acres of which was in vineyard and the balance unimproved. He set six acres to vineyard, one acre to alfalfa, one acre to orchard, and the balance was used for building space. Here he erected a fine, two-story house and ample outbuildings, and has installed a fine irrigation system. Mr. Pool has always been most keenly interested in educational affairs; he and his wife are both staunch Republicans and are active members of the Congregational Church of Lodi.

CHARLES A. POSEY.—As a representative of the best interests of San Joaquin County from the standpoint of public-spirited citizenship and useful activity in agricultural affairs, Charles A. Posey is well known and esteemed in his community. He is a native son of San Joaquin County, having been born west of Lodi on the old Dunbar ranch, known today as the Posey ranch. His parents, John M. and Lena Posey, are also represented in this work. Charles A. attended the Turner district school and the Lodi high school. His first experience at farming on his own responsibility was when he leased a portion of his father's place, which he farmed for five years; then in partnership with his father, he purchased a forty-acre vineyard. In 1920 he built a fine, modern residence on his ranch, which is located seven miles west of Lodi.

On January 1, 1912, Mr. Posey was married to Miss Norma Stannard, also a native of San Joaquin County, a daughter of H. B. and May (Carlton) Stannard. Her father conducted a stationery store in Lodi until his death two years ago; her mother is still living, and she has one sister, Mildred. Mrs. Posey received her education in the grammar and high schools of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Posey are the parents of two sons, Charles De Force and James Carlton. Mr. Posey was employed by the Earl Fruit Company for one year, then became identified with the Posey Land Company of Lodi in the buying and selling of lands throughout Central California. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the N. S. G. W. of Lodi. Having spent his entire life in this locality, he is well known and is popular with many friends, because he has displayed in his life the qualities which command regard.

JOHN EVERT POSEY.—A substantial citizen and prosperous farmer of the younger generation, John Evert Posey is a practical and successful man of affairs. He was born on his father's ranch six miles west of Lodi, Cal., August 3, 1897, a son of John M. and Lena M. (Stimpson) Posey, worthy pioneers of San Joaquin County. John Evert Posey received his education in the Turner district school and the Lodi high school, and his earliest recollections are of the old home farm, where he was trained in the work of the ranch, thus fitting him for the responsibilities that came to him later. He has always been in partnership with his father in the extensive ranch holdings; one forty-acre ranch about seven miles from Lodi on the Harshner Road has been set to young vineyard, and Mr. Posey resides on a fifty-acre ranch on the same road, which is a producing vineyard, intersert with plums, cherries and pears; this ranch has two pumping plants, while the forty-acre ranch is under the Stockton-Mokelumne irrigation system. In October, 1918, he entered the U. S. Army and was sent to Fort Rosecrans, at San Diego, Cal., serving in the 25th Coast Artillery Corps until his discharge, December 21, 1918.

On April 23, 1919, at Lodi, Mr. Posey was married to Miss Myrtle Rond, a daughter of Nick and Jessie Rond. She was two years old when her parents came to California, and she received her education at the Ray district school in the vicinity of her father's farm in San Joaquin County. Her father is a well-to-do farmer on the Sargent Road west of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Posey are the parents of one child, Genesee. Mr. Posey is a public-spirited citizen, a friend of schools and all enterprises for the public good, and has been able to make his influence felt for progress in all his relations with business and civic affairs; and in politics he is a Republican.

RALPH J. POST.—For the past two years Ralph J. Post has been assistant manager of the Woodbridge Fruit Company, and has been so capable in this position that the business of the company has been continuously growing. Mr. Post is also actively interested in grape culture, owning twenty-five acres in San Joaquin County and forty acres near Herald, Sacramento County, the entire acreage being devoted to vineyard. He was born in San Joaquin County on his father's ranch east of Stockton on the Copperopolis Road, November 25, 1892, a son of Frank H. and Cora Belle (Ralph) Post, both natives of California. His paternal grandfather came to California as early as 1848. The father passed away at the age of fifty years, while the mother is still living.

Ralph J. Post attended the Live Oak district school, the Salem school in Lodi and the Stockton high school; later he took a business course in Stockton, and at the age of eighteen years he became a paying teller in the First National Bank of Lodi, where he remained for seven years. He then resigned to become cashier of the Bank of Galt, a position he filled with efficiency for two years. He then purchased his twenty-five-acre ranch, which is in young vineyard, and both this and his forty-acre vineyard in Sacramento County are well irrigated. Mr. Post is a member of the Rio-Oso Fruit Company, with headquarters at Wheatland, Cal., and acts as secretary of the company; he is also a stockholder in the Citizens National Bank of Lodi.

On November 11, 1914, in Lodi, Mr. Post was married to Miss Eugenia Villingner, born at Covina, Cal., a daughter of Asa and Martha (Kaiser) Villingner. Her father was born on a sailing vessel en route to California around the Horn in the early days. Mr. Post is a Republican in politics and fraternally belongs to the Masonic Lodge in Lodi, the Commandery at Stockton, also the Royal Arch of that city and Ben Ali Temple at Sacramento. Mr. and Mrs. Post are the parents of one daughter, Isabelle. Mr. Post is an excellent business man, and has gained for himself a handsome competence, which places him among the community's substantial residents.

LOUIS J. CHAPPUIS.—For the past fifteen years Louis J. Chappuis has resided on his ranch three miles southeast of Lodi on Kettleman Lane, which consists of twelve and one-half acres devoted to vineyard. He was born in Perry County, Mo., on November 23, 1853, the sixth in a family of nine children born to John C. and Louisa Chappuis. In 1862 the family removed from Missouri to Rice County, Minn., where the father engaged in farming near the town of Faribault, and in the grammar schools of that place Louis J. received his education. During twenty-seven years of his life he remained at home with his parents and the practical knowledge of agriculture he gained has been of great value to him in grape culture.

In 1880 Mr. Chappuis went into the Red River country and homesteaded a tract of land in Polk County, Mo.; however, he longed for his old associations of home and friends, and sold his homestead rights and moved back to Faribault, where he purchased sixty acres on which he raised grain and ran a dairy, and there his marriage occurred on January 9, 1889, which united him with Miss Mary J. Chapdelaine, a native of Faribault, and a daughter of Francis and Philistie Chapdelaine. Success crowned the industry of Mr. Chappuis and in 1907, when he decided to remove to California, he had sufficient means to purchase a home place of twelve and one-half acres, which was set to young vineyard; later he bought thirteen and a half acres, a little south of his home place, which was also set to young vineyard, and Mr. Chappuis has further improved the places with an irrigation system by which he has an abundance of water for the cultivation of his vineyards. Mr. and Mrs. Chappuis are the parents of eight children: John C., an engineer in the Stockton Paper Mills, died July 2, 1922; Nellie is Mrs. Eugene Beckman of Lodi; Peter, Alexander, Albert and George; Dollie, Mrs. Vernon Pope, lives in Lodi, and Henry is at home. In politics Mr. Chappuis is a Republican, and fraternally is a member of the Modern Woodmen of Lodi. He and his family are members of the Catholic Church. Peter and Albert served about a year in the army, but before they saw active field duty, the armistice was signed.

PETER SARGENTI.—A successful vineyardist and orchardist, from Canton Ticino, Switzerland, is Peter Sargenti, who is ranching about two miles north of Acampo, off the Cherokee Lane road. He was born at Magadino on February 12, 1872, the son of Paul and Theresa (Macagni) Sargenti, industrious, honest and progressive farmer folks, who were blessed with eight children, four sons and four daughters. Peter had a good education, so that when he was seventeen, and ready to push out into the world, he was well prepared. He not only came to the United States, but he luckily pushed on to California, and settled at San Rafael, in Marin County, in 1889, where he worked for two years on a dairy farm. He then spent seven years in dairy work, at Half Moon Bay, in San Mateo County, and after that he went to Solano County, where he was in dairying for four or five years. In 1903 he returned to Switzerland for five months, enjoying again the scenes in the republic so familiar to him, but also glad to get back to the Golden State.

On his return he settled in Contra Costa County, at Knightsen, and there he had a fine dairy of his own, continuing to operate it for two and one-half years. Then he came to Holt Station, Roberts Island, in San Joaquin County, and for three years was foreman of a dairy there. He then removed to Banta, running a dairy for four and one-half years; and from Banta he moved to his present location, where he bought thirty-two acres. This ranch has thirteen acres of vineyard, eight acres of orchard, and eight acres of alfalfa; and there is a small dairy on his present ranch. He has developed the orchard of prunes, peaches and cherries and the alfalfa there.

At Suisun, on July 5, 1904, Mr. Sargenti was married to Miss Ernestine Madonna, who was born in Solano County, near Suisun, the daughter of Paul and Theresa (Piezzoni) Madonna, both born in Intragna, Ticino, Switzerland. Her father was a dairy farmer, who came to California in 1872, and settled in Solano County, where he was married. He lived to be seventy-one years old, and died in 1909. Her mother is still alive, residing on a ranch south of Lodi. Ernestine was sent for a while to the schools in Half Moon Bay, and then, when her parents moved back to Suisun, she finished her studies there. They have one son, Peter, who is attending the Lodi high school, class of 1925. Mr. Sargenti is a Republican, and is a good "booster" for the locality in which he lives and thrives.

ALFRED R. STROTHER.—A native son of whom Californians may well be proud is Alfred R. Strother, the progressive and very successful dairy-farmer, living three and one-half miles northwest of Lodi. He was born in Stanislaus County, not far from Salida and about half a mile from the old Dale ranch, on June 22, 1881, the son of William E. and Ella (Feagan) Strother; his father was a pioneer of California, who came here from Missouri and settled in the Salida district, where Alfred went to school. The worthy couple were blessed with seven children, among whom Anna was the eldest, and Bertha, Robert, William and Ella the next youngest. Then came the subject of our story; and after him the youngest, Ora. William Strother, the father, was a grain farmer, and few knew better what could be produced under the favoring agricultural conditions of the Golden State.

In 1900 Alfred Strother left his home, and ever since he has made his own way. When he came to the vicinity of Lodi he worked on ranches; and near Acampo he was married to Miss Gertrude Hartman, the ceremony occurring on the 25th of October, 1910. She was born in Kulm, N. D., the daughter of Joseph Hartman, the well-known vineyardist, whose life story is elsewhere given in this work; and there she was educated. Both her father and mother (who was Miss Caroline Relinger before her marriage) favored her home as well as her school education.

Mr. Strother purchased a ranch of twenty-five acres about three and one-half miles northwest of Acampo, and there he has one of the best-appointed and most up-to-date, sanitary dairies to be found anywhere in the county. He has pastures of alfalfa on his ranch and the milk he delivers has the richest of cream. He also has his own irrigation plant and he has improved his farm in many ways, including the erection of various buildings. He has lived on this ranch for the past seven years; and he formerly ran a ranch of 400 acres owned by Mr. Bender, his neighbor. This ranch he conducted for four years, prior to its being taken charge of by Mr. Bender's son.

Five children make up the family of Mr. and Mrs. Strother: Ella, Ora, Evelyn, Alfred, and Grace. Mr. Strother is an independent in politics, and a good "booster" in his community.

F. H. TAYLOR.—An enterprising addition to Stockton's business circles is F. H. Taylor, manager of the Stockton Milk Company, who in the short space of two years has been instrumental in building up a splendid business. Mr. Taylor was born at Oakland, Cal., February 6, 1898, and after attending the public schools until twelve years old, went to work delivering milk on his bicycle for the Walnut Grove Creamery of Oakland, owned by Burroughs Brothers, now one of the largest creameries of the Bay district, distributing about 5,500 gallons of milk daily. Gaining a thorough knowledge of this line of work while in their employ, Mr. Taylor came to Stockton in 1921 to start a milk business of his own. He solicited for three days before he obtained his first customer, but once established, the business grew rapidly and he is now the manager of the best-equipped pasteurized milk plants in Central California. The Stockton Milk Company was organized in 1921 as the Taylor Milk Company and in 1922 the name was changed to the Stockton Milk Company and incorporated for $100,000. The president is B. R. Burroughs, and F. H. Taylor is manager.

The new cement and brick building occupied by the Stockton Milk Company was erected at the corner of Union and Oak streets at a cost of $10,000 and opened its doors for business on October 28, 1922. The milk inspector on a recent visit pronounced it the best equipped plant in the state. It has an excellent system of ventilation, a complete pasteurizing plant where the milk is heated to 142 degrees and cooled almost instantly, and an automatic filler and capper for the bottles, with an hourly capacity of 1,200 bottles. The company manufactures its own ice, and another special feature is the direct motor shafting, doing away with insanitary belts. Mr. Taylor is deserving of great credit for the rapid establishment of this business and the company now serves more individual customers than any other dairy in the city.

PETER J. WALLACE.—A progressive business man of Stockton whose success is entirely due to his own perseverance and industry is Peter J. Wallace, the owner and proprietor of the Golden West Laundry located at 501 North Sierra Nevada Street. He was born in Greece, August 5, 1890, and while still a young boy was left an orphan. When he was seventeen years old he started for the United States and when he arrived in New York City he had very little money in his pockets; he secured work in the factory of the American Tobacco Company. From New York he went to Newburyport, Mass., where he worked in a cotton mill and a shoe factory; then he went to Milwaukee, Wis., where he worked as a core maker in an iron foundry; then to Kiel, Wis., and worked in a furniture factory. Four years were consumed from the time he landed in New York City until he arrived in California. He found employment in the Golden Eagle Hotel in Sacramento for a time; then to San Francisco in the employ of the Golden State Baking Company for three and a half years and in May, 1916, he arrived in Stockton. He purchased a small laundry at 317 East Street and built up a fine profitable business; later he bought a lot on Sierra Nevada Street, where he erected a building for a new laundry and he now enjoys a very lucrative business; he specializes in family washings and four delivery wagons are required to take care of the business. When he started in business on East Street, three people handled the work, as now Mr. Wallace employs twenty people; he has installed modern laundry machinery and as his business expands he intends to erect a larger plant on his property.

The marriage of Mr. Wallace occurred in San Francisco and united him with Miss Lena Stack, a native of New Mexico, and they are the parents of one son, Frank, born in San Francisco. Mr. Wallace is an active member of the Woodmen of the World, being a member of the drill team and treasurer of same.

LOUIS BRONICH.—When Louis Bronich was a young man of twenty-two years of age, he came to California to join his brother, M. M. Bronich, who had arrived in the Golden State in 1891. Mr. Bronich was a young man, vigorous in mind and body, but his worldly possessions lay in what the future years, by his diligence and thrift, would bring him. He was born in Dalmatia, now Jugo-Slavia, on October 2, 1876, a son of M. M. Borovinich, (as the name was spelled in Dalmatia) a well-to-do, retired farmer, living in Dalmatia, at the age of eighty-two.

Louis Bronich was reared on his father's farm in Dalmatia, and attended the public schools of his district. He lived in his native country until 1898, when he made the decisive move of his life by coming to America and direct to Stockton, California, whither his brother had preceded him by a number of years. For two years before leaving his native country, he was a soldier in the Austrian army, and was advanced to the rank of sergeant. At the end of his service, he was commended highly for his splendid discipline and character during his term of service. Arriving in San Joaquin County, he went into partnership with his brother and farmed the Delta lands on Union Island, where they put in six successful years; meanwhile Louis attended night school and learned to speak and write the English language, and in a few years he was able to start out for himself in farming pursuits.

At Stockton, in August, 1907, Mr. Bronich was married to Miss Mary Deranga, a daughter of Antone Deranga and his wife, Mrs. Ella Deranga, both born and reared in Dalmatia, and there passed away. Mrs. Bronich was born in Grudda, Dalmatia, August 16, 1883, and in August, 1906, came to Stockton, where she met her future husband. The first five years of their married life were spent on Union Island, and in 1912 the family moved to the Ramsay ranch near Lathrop, where they remained for three years, when the family moved to the Rossi River ranch. Mr. Bronich, however, was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labor, for in 1918 he was stricken with influenza and he passed away on January 1 of that year. He had always enjoyed the best of health and his untimely passing was a severe blow to his immediate family. Mr. and Mrs. Bronich were the parents of four children: Pauline, born on Union Island, is a pupil in the Mossdale school; Nellie was born in Stockton, and also attends the Mossdale school; Mary died in infancy; and Martin was born on the river ranch. Mrs. Bronich is a woman of splendid business capabilities and is successfully managing her ranch and at the same time rearing and educating her three children. Mr. Bronich became an American citizen in San Joaquin County, and voted the Republican ticket from that time on.

L. R. HALL.—The owner of a fine and well improved ranch located fourteen miles southeast of Stockton is L. R. Hall, who is a representative of the best agricultural interests of San Joaquin County. He was born on his father's farm, where he now resides and which is known as the Wildwood farm, January 28, 1873, the eldest son of Geo. S. and Julia (White) Hall, both natives of Missouri. Grandfather Samuel Hall, in company with C. H. Morrow, conducted a party of emigrants to California in 1859. The emigrant train was made up of ten wagons drawn by oxen and mules, and besides there were 750 head of cattle, mostly cows, which they drove overland. Six months were consumed in the journey, arriving in the fall of 1859. Geo. S. Hall, the father of our subject, and another boy, were left at the Calaveras big trees in charge of the cattle, as there was an abundance of grazing in the meadows. The emigrant train continued on their journey toward Stockton, but finally settled near Byrneville on the Stanislaus River, now known as the Monroe Ranch. There were no fences nor roads in those early pioneer days, only cattle trails, and after resting the cattle for six weeks, G. S. Hall and his comrade drove them on to the Monroe Ranch. The final lap of the journey was not without many interesting incidents, the most notable being the meeting of several grizzly bears while herding the cattle at the big trees. Grandfather Hall leased a portion of the Blue Tent Ranch, two miles east of where Escalon now stands; and he ran a tavern on the French Camp Road, which he conducted for several years, until they moved away from there.

George S. Hall returned to Missouri and there married Miss Julia White and brought her to California on an overland train. The young married couple settled on a half section of land fourteen miles southeast of Stockton when there were but three families in a radius of six miles. On this ranch their two children, L. R., our subject, and his brother, Geo. D. Hall, of Stockton, were born and reared. Geo. S. Hall, the father, gave a portion of his land for the Wildwood school, which still stands. He was a man of fine character and stood for the best along all lines of progress. In the early days he engaged in freighting and owned a number of outfits, but his principal occupation was wheat raising and stock business; he owned a fine stock range in the hills in east San Joaquin County, but this was disposed of some time before his death. The mother passed away in 1916, the father surviving until 1918.

L. R. Hall attended the Wildwood school on his father's ranch and from early youth was set to work at farm work. Since reaching his teens he has been closely associated with his father in farming the home ranch. After the death of the father, the Wildwood ranch was equally divided between L. R. Hall and his brother, each receiving 160 acres, but as his brother resides in Stockton, our subject is farming the whole 320 acres. Mr. Hall is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 128, B. P. O. E., and the Modern Woodmen of America at Escalon, and is a Republican in his political views. From 1911 to 1920 he served as deputy county assessor for the Escalon district of San Joaquin County. He has contributed to public progress through his co-operation in many movements advanced for the public good, and has made for himself a position among influential men in San Joaquin County.

CLARENCE E. HARRIS.—A wide-awake and successful business man who has become an important factor in his field of trade and its contribution to local commercial activity, is Clarence E. Harris, the accommodating proprietor of the popular Lyric Candy Store, at 114 North Sutter Street, and well known as commander of the Spanish-American War Veterans. He was born in Stockton on August 20, 1881, the son of Andrew Jackson and Lillian (Gay) Harris, the former a native of Illinois, who is still alive in Stockton. He was a handy man with tools and could skillfully do almost any work where his services might be needed. Miss Gay was born in Placerville, her father having come from New York State to California in 1858 and settled at that place. Grandfather Gay was a merchant in New York, in the old days when it meant something to be a figure in the store-keeping circles of the Empire State.

Clarence completed the grammar school and when he was about sixteen he entered the U. S. Navy as landsman, enlisting at Mare Island. He was sent out to sea on the Charlestown, the ship that was wrecked and sank to the bottom of the ocean, in the vicinity of the Philippine Islands, about twenty-five miles offshore from an unpopulated island. The survivors rowed to the island and lived for fifteen days there before being picked up by the Helena, from which vessel our subject was transferred to the Monterey. Somewhat later, he was assigned to the battleship Oregon, upon which he went to the Orient, and while in the Gulf of Pechili, that vessel was wrecked, and he was returned home on the Solas. The Oregon had been sent to the Orient on account of the Boxer troubles; but never reached there. At Mare Island, in 1901, Mr. Harris was honorably discharged.

Returning to Stockton, he worked for three years for the City Street Car Company, and then he became a clerk in a wholesale and retail candy business owned by Cook Reyner at Stockton. He next bought out their retail department at 915 East Main Street, a shop that was then known as The Purity; but after one year and a half he sold out, and went to Nevada, where he worked as overseer for C. H. Mott for a year. He then returned to Stockton, but going to the Bay region, tried his hand at various things at Oakland. In 1919, he returned to Stockton and with O. O. Farnsworth, formed a partnership for the manufacture and sale of candy. They opened two places of business, one at 114 North Sutter Street, called The Lyric, and the other at 3 South California Street. In November, 1920, he bought out Mr. Farnsworth; and selling the place at 3 South California Street, he retained the Lyric, where he still manufactures a large variety of first-class confectionery.

At Stockton, on September 14, 1902, Mr. Harris was married to Miss Martha Jane Fann, who was born at Tehachepi, the daughter of James and Jane Fann, who came to California in 1876 and became pioneer farmers in the Tehachepi region. There were five older children in their family, and they bore the names of Louis, Ed., Dan, Jack and Estella. Having lost her mother at birth, Martha Jane was reared by Mrs. Alice Carey, who cared for her education in Stockton. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Harris, Alice Jennie and Elma Lillian. In national politics Mr. Harris is a Republican; but in local affairs he supports all accredited movements and candidates deemed best for the locality. He is a member of the Spanish War Veterans, and in 1918-19 and 1921 and 1922, he was the commander of the Stockton Post. As a Mason, he belongs to San Joaquin Lodge No. 19. He is also a member of the Woodmen of the World, and he is on the advisory board of the Volunteers of America.

TIMOTHY JOHN HARRISON.—A well-known pioneer family of San Joaquin County is that of the Harrisons, now represented by Timothy John Harrison, who has been a resident here all his life. He was born on the Calaveras River in the Moore school district, San Joaquin County, November 12, 1862, and is the fourth in a family of ten children born to David and Mary E. (Winner) Harrison, natives of Virginia and Iowa, respectively. Two of the family were born in Iowa before they started across the plains to California and while enroute their third child was born, and was named Nevada. At that time the entire belongings of the Harrison family were carried in one covered wagon. The family arrived in California in the fall of 1860, after an eight month' trip and settled on the Calaveras River. In 1863 the father bought 160 acres of land in the Waterloo district; later he acquired 280 acres, part of the old Sam Foreman ranch in the Linden district, on which he settled and farmed. He was a man of fine character and a friend of education, serving as school trustee in his district. Both parents lived to a good old age, the father passing away in 1908, his wife having preceded him three years. Five of their ten children now survive.

Timothy J. Harrison, the fourth oldest, obtained his education in the public schools of San Joaquin County and from the time he was old enough he helped his father with the ranch work until his nineteenth year, when he decided to learn a trade, that of miller. For the next ten years he was employed at Ione with the Bloomington Mills; then with the Farmers Union Milling Company in Stockton for eight years. Resigning, he went to Colfax, where he had charge of a great-uncle's estate of 100 acres and then came to Linden to make his home.

The marriage of Mr. Harrison, at Linden, united him with Miss Gipsy Cox, daughter of William H. Cox, a pioneer farmer at Linden. Mrs. Harrison passed away ten years after their marriage. In 1914, Mr. Harrison was married the second time to Mrs. Amber (Whitcomb) Sawyer, a native of Vermont, a daughter of the late Charles Whitcomb. Her mother is a resident of Linden and the owner of an orchard. Mr. Harrison owns forty acres of the old homestead near Linden, where he has made fine improvements and where he raises alfalfa and conducts a dairy; he also owns desirable real estate in Stockton. He is an active member of the local Farm Bureau and in politics is a Democrat.

MRS. MELINDA C. HILD.—A native daughter with great admiration for the land of gold and sunshine is Mrs. Melinda C. Hild, who was born at Sonora, May 23, 1856, a daughter of Mark and Susan Hughes, natives of Ireland. Her father learned the blacksmith trade in Scotland. While still in his latter teens he came to Baltimore, Md., and there met and married Miss Susan Hughes, who had come with an aunt when a girl to the metropolis on the Chesapeake Bay and there she grew to womanhood, receiving an excellent education. In 1850 Mark Hughes came around Cape Horn on a sailer, and after a six months trip he landed in San Francisco. He found his way to the Southern mines, locating at Sonora. In 1852 his wife and their first born joined him, having made the journey via Panama. Mr. Hughes established himself in the blacksmith business in Sonora and continued until Cleveland was elected president, when he was appointed master mechanic at Mare Island, but his health was not robust so could not accept and was then appointed postmaster at Sonora, a position he filled ably until the close of his term, when he lived retired until his death. His wife had preceded him many years before, having passed on in 1875.

This worthy pioneer couple were blessed with five children, Melinda being the third oldest and the only one now living. Her education was completed at Mrs. Cooper's Academy, Sonora, and there she grew to womanhood. She had an aunt residing in Virginia City and while visiting her she met Mr. Charles Hild, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage in 1875. Mr. Hild was born in Alsace-Lorraine of the prominent family of Von Hild, but his father dropped the title. Charles came to New York City, when a boy of ten years and there received his education in the public schools. In 1872 he came to California and was a successful traveling salesman for barbers' supplies, traveling over different portions of the state until his death in San Francisco in December 1894. Mr. and Mrs. Hild had five children. Susan is Mrs. Pardee of Merced; Josephine is Mrs. Scally; William is an electrician; Maud is Mrs. Kennedy, of Stockton; Pearl is dead. In 1897 Mrs. Hild purchased the residence in Stockton, where she has since resided, surrounded by her children and numerous friends. She is not only a native daughter but is now one of the pioneers of the state. She is a member of St. Gertrude's Church and politically, like her pioneer father, she is a Democrat.

JOSEPH P. CUNDELL.—A business man of practical and progressive ideas, the late Joseph P. Cundell was well equipped by years of experience in the dairy business and took an active interest along these lines in San Joaquin County as the manager of the Stockton Dairy Product Distributing Company, a branch of the California Central Creamery Company. He was born in Butler County, Kans., on March 24, 1885, on his father's farm, where he remained until he was eighteen years of age; then he found employment with R. H. Hazlett of Eldorado, Kans., a large breeder of thoroughbred Hereford cattle; after three years he removed to Independence, Mo., and entered the employ of Gudgeon & Simpson, the leading breeders of thoroughbred Hereford cattle in the United States, and was in charge of 1,000 head of cattle. In 1911, he removed to Honolulu and became the manager for an 80,000-acre cattle and sheep ranch. In 1915, he located in San Joaquin County and purchased fifty acres of the old Salmon ranch on the French Camp Road near Stockton. This he developed into a first-class dairy and alfalfa ranch, having a herd of thirty milk cows. He was a member of the advisory committee of the Milk Producers Association of Central California, Stockton branch, and in the summer of 1921 was made manager of the local Stockton branch, established some four years ago. As a member of the executive committee of the dairy department of the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau, Mr. Cundell contributed progressive plans and ideas that are the products of thorough study and experience, and he is considered an authority on the subject of milk products, and dairy management.

Mr. Cundell's marriage united him with Miss Ethel Higinbotham, a native of Kansas, and they were the parents of four children: Lois and Ruth are twins, born in Honolulu; Robert and Karma are native Californians. Fraternaly he was a member of the Masonic Blue Lodge No. 181, of Lenora, Kans. Mr. Cundell passed away on August 26, 1922, at the Dameron Hospital in Stockton and was buried in Park View Cemetery.

CHARLES G. DELMEGE.—Among the ranchers of San Joaquin County who, by strict attention to business have been able to retire from active work, is Charles G. Delmege of Stockton. He was born in Bristol, Kendall County, Ill., on November 22, 1846, and at the age of seventeen, in company with two schoolmates, ran away from home and enlisted for service in the Civil War; he also had two brothers who served in the army, one enlisting in 1861, and all served in the same company. On February 10, 1864, he enlisted under Capt. F. W. Sowerby in Company H of the Ninth Illinois Cavalry in command of Col. A. G. Brackett, with General Hatch as division commander, the brigade known as Hatch's cavalry. Three days after joining his regiment he was under fire with the Army of the Tennessee, being engaged against Forrest until ordered to cross the river to fight General Hood's army. The only two battles he was in were Franklin and Nashville. While engaged against Hood the army was under command of Gen. Schofield; later was under Gen. Thomas; although in active service all the time, he came out without a scratch. His service continued until October 31, 1865, when he was mustered out, and then returned to his home in Illinois. In 1867, removing to Iowa, he bought a farm near Afton, consisting of eighty acres; his father and one of his brothers also owned farms in that location. He spent twelve years on his place, which was devoted to the raising of grain, then he removed to Denver, Colo., and became interested in politics. He was appointed by the mayor and served four years as a member of the police department, and then for two years was city jailer. On account of a change in administration Mr. Delmege left the employ of the police department, and at the current election worked for a particular candidate for county sheriff, who was elected and who, in appreciation for services rendered, appointed Mr. Delmege county jailer, serving two years. Trading his Denver property for a farm, he then went to Boulder, Colo., farming near there for four years, then resided in Boulder for two years. In the fall of 1899 he was sent to Des Moines as state agent for the Anchor Mutual Fire Insurance Company, being appointed by his brother, who was president of the company; then he was in the lumber business for two years at Larimore, Iowa, and was also interested in the real estate business there. From Iowa he removed to Knox, N. D., and went into the real estate business, and while residing there took up government land, which he farmed for four years; then in 1906 he came to California and bought a ten-acre tract of land at Manteca, which he planted to wine grapes. While his vines were maturing he conducted a poultry business, and after twelve years sold out and moved to Stockton, where he has since resided.

The marriage of Mr. Delmege occurred at Afton, Iowa, on November 8, 1870, and united him with Miss Amanda Keating, a native of Ohio, and they are the parents of two sons: Clarence A., of Sheridan, Wyo., is married and has three girls, one of whom has a daughter; and Louie J. is married and lives at Manteca. Mr. Delmege is past commander of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R., of Stockton, while Mrs. Delmege is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Ladies' Circle of the G. A. R., and during the World War was an active Red Cross worker. Both Mr. and Mrs. Delmege attend the Christian Science Church of Stockton.

JAY P. COWEN.—A native of Illinois, Jay P. Cowen has been a resident of California since his seventh year. He was born at Quincy, January 7, 1872, and in 1879 came with his parents to Oakland, Cal., where he received his education. At the age of sixteen he started to learn the baker's trade with Bowles & Wilson at San Jose, and from that time he has been engaged in this business. He first worked in different parts of the state, then in 1907 located in Tracy and opened a bakery of his own, on a capital of $150, which he had borrowed. Later he came to Stockton, built an oven and conducted the Independent Bakery on Fair Oaks avenue, and when he sold this out in 1917 he went to Vacaville, and then to Chico; in each he had a bakery. On his return to Stockton in the fall of 1919, he bought out the Polly Ann Bakery, and here he has built up a splendid business, both wholesale and retail; he has made many improvements in the plant, installing modern machinery, and now has a capacity of 3,000 loaves per day, his products being very popular.

At San Francisco, Mr. Cowen was married to Mrs. Susie (Tripp) Brown, born in Massachusetts, and they are the parents of five children: Harold L., who was born in San Jose, October 26, 1891, attended the Fremont and Lafayette schools at Stockton, after the family removed here. He first went to work as a clerk in Hall Bros. grocery, then was with his father in the bakery, and since 1919 he has been a partner in the business. Ralph and Ray, twins, are also associated with their father; the two youngest members of the family are Sadie and Grace. Mr. Cowen is a member of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants Association, and in every way tries to aid all movements for the building up of the city and county in which he has spent the greater and successful portion of his business career.

LOUIS DE FERRARI.—Among the progressive pioneer merchants of Stockton in Louis De Ferrari, who was born near Genoa, Italy, on August 18, 1848, and at the age of four years was brought to America by his parents, who located in New York City. There Louis attended school and learned the trade of shoemaker, which occupied his time until August 20, 1868, when he arrived in San Francisco and plied his trade there for the next five years. During February of 1873 he removed to Stockton and opened a shop of his own on Center Street; later he worked for John Feley as shoemaker, then became interested in a restaurant on Weber avenue near Eldorado street, these various occupations covering a period of four years. In 1877 he became the proprietor of the American Exchange Hotel on Center street and in 1880 bought the southeast corner of Center and Lafayette streets and erected the Garibaldi Hotel; with his wife he conducted this hotel until 1893, when he sold the business, but retained the building. For the next sixteen years he was engaged in various kinds of business, in which he prospered. In 1909 a partnership was formed with John Ghiglieri and together they purchased the clothing store owned by Joe Capurro, now called the Plaza Clothing Store, at the corner of Main and Eldorado streets. The business has steadily increased under their management until it has reached a satisfactory and lucrative stage.

Mr. De Ferrari's marriage united him on January 29, 1871, in San Francisco, to Miss Catherine Carasasa, a native of Italy, and they became the parents of two daughters: Eda is the wife of John Ghiglieri and they have two children, Louis and Elvina; Elvina De Ferrari, the other daughter, passed away at the age of twenty-four years. The happy couple celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary on January 29, 1921, surrounded by their family and friends. In 1875, Mr. De Ferrari joined the old Volunteer Fire Department and was, for many years, a member of the Eureka Engine company; he is now a member of the Exempt Firemen's Association. Fraternally he is a member of the Italian branch of the Foresters of America, Stockton Lodge of Odd Fellows, and the Druids.

ELBERT ALLEN COVELL.—Prominent among the well-to-do citizens of Woodbridge is Elbert Allen Covell, a native of San Leandro, Alameda County, where he was born on February 5, 1874. His father, Allen T. Covell, came to California in 1856 from New York state; he was a carpenter by trade, but like thousands of others at that time, he joined the rush to the mines. He did not follow mining long, however, but turned to civil engineering, and in 1876 removed to Fresno County, where he helped to lay out and establish the Washington Irrigated Colony. In 1888, he came to Woodbridge, where he acquired land, which in time he set out as a vineyard. Allen T. Covell lived to be eighty-two years old; his devoted wife, who was Mary Elizabeth Sherwin before her marriage, reached her sixtieth year. They had four children, three boys and a girl.

Elbert Allen Covell attended the Woodbridge common school, and afterwards was a student at the San Joaquin Valley College. When he was old enough to do so, he took up farm work, taking charge of a portion of the vineyard which his father had set out; while his brother, George F., also took over a part of the vineyard ranch. The whole property consisted of 160 acres. Today Mr. Covell owns thirty choice acres set out to Tokay grapes, west of the town, and this trim little farm is well irrigated. He and his brother together own a ranch of 270 acres in Stanislaus County, between Salida and Modesto, mostly set out to vineyard.

At Stockton, on August 3, 1904, Mr. Covell was married to Miss Florence McMurtry, the daughter of Lewis C. McMurtry. She was born in Gold Hill, Nev. Her father, a well-known hotel man, came to Woodbridge when she was a little girl, and here she was reared and educated. Mr. Covell was made a Mason in Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, F. & A. M., of which he is a past master. He is a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., San Francisco; and with his wife he is a member of Woodbridge Chapter No. 118, O. E. S., of which he is a past patron and Mrs. Covell is a past matron. In 1922 Mr. and Mrs. Covell made a four-month trip to Europe, visiting England, Scotland and the Continent.

LOUIE J. DELMEGE.—A pioneer merchant who has had much to do with the development of important commercial and realty interests in San Joaquin County is Louie J. Delmege, of the Delmege Realty Company at Manteca. He was born in Denver, Colo., on September 30, 1886, and grew up to enjoy a good common school and business education acquired while he lived in Colorado, Iowa and North Dakota, prior to coming to California. He was assistant station agent at Knox, N. D., and it was there that he saw some stray copies of the Sunset Magazine and read of the superior attractions of the Golden State. In 1905 he removed with his family to the Coast, and immediately invested in a ranch two and one-half miles east of Manteca, which he later developed into a fine vineyard. Forty dollars per acre was considered very reasonable in those days for raw land, but today that type of farm-tract cannot be bought for less than $400 per acre, due for the most part to the productivity resulting from irrigation. Mr. Delmege has never lost a whit of his enthusiastic devotion to Manteca, which he characterizes as the one city in this valley which is four-sided,—that is, it is bounded on all sides by fertile lands and highly-productive ranches.

One of the first important events in the early history of Manteca was the establishing of "The Toggery," a first-class men's furnishing store on Yosemite avenue, stocked and opened by Mr. Delmege, who had a partner, J. J. Rawleigh. They began in 1909, and were active and successful together for nine years, or until 1918, when Mr. Delmege disposed of his share of the concern. The following year he established the Delmege Realty Company, with an office at the corner of Vine and Yosemite streets. There he conducts a real estate and insurance business, operating strictly according to modern business methods. He has important interests in various real estate and ranch-holdings in or near Manteca; is a member of the State Realty Board of California; and belongs to the Chamber of Commerce of Manteca, in which he is also a live wire.

At Stockton, in 1911, Mr. Delmege was married to Miss Jessie Ruby, the accomplished daughter of Mrs. H. E. Ruby, who now resides at Manteca, at the home of her daughter. Mr. Delmege is a Republican, and a member of the Modern Woodmen of America.

HERMAN O. PARKINSON.—As the live wire librarian of the Stockton public library, H. O. Parkinson has waked up many people to the fact that a library isn't meant only for book-worms, and he has shown them that real, red-blooded folks can make more money and get more joy out of life through books. He was born in Taunton, Mass., on February 3, 1891, and as a lad attended the public schools at Waltham, Mass.; later he was graduated from Dartmouth College with a degree of A. B. with the class of 1913. After his graduation he then attended the New York State Library School at Albany; then became an assistant in the public library at Brooklyn, N. Y., and occupied the same position in the Newark, N. J. public library.

During September of 1920 he was appointed to the position of librarian of the Stockton public library and by efficient supervision he has increased the circulation for the year 1921-22 over the preceding year 86,000 volumes. He has also introduced better methods of charging books and magazines, and has taken off the restriction on the number that can be borrowed at one time, and no longer requires that an adult have a guarantor in order to secure a card. He is president of the Fifth District, including ten counties, of the California Library Association.

The marriage of Mr. Parkinson united him with Miss Constance Dyer. During the World War Mr. Parkinson joined the ambulance corps attached to the French army and saw service overseas for eighteen months. Both Mr. and Mrs. Parkinson are active members of the Congregational Church of Stockton, and his fine tenor voice is heard to advantage in the church choir. He is a member of the Rotary Club of Stockton and is the editor of the little monthly paper of that organization, the Stocktarian. Mr. Parkinson's favorite sport is handball, and instead of poring over books most of the time, as many people imagine a librarian does, he hustles over to the Y. M. C. A. after work and makes some of the "boys" step around the handball court at a rapid rate.

JAMES L. PEARSON.—A native son of California, James L. Pearson was thrown upon his own resources when only thirteen years of age, and through the years has overcome many obstacles and discouragements, until he now occupies the responsible position of superintendent of the Charles Lamb estate of 1,330 acres, two miles west of Thornton. He was born at Fort Jones, Cal., September 21, 1884, a son of James and Rosetta (Bramson) Pearson. His father served during the Civil War in the Ninth Kansas Cavalry; and in 1866 he came to California, first settling in Shasta County, where he operated a saw-mill. Later he removed to Siskiyou County, where he purchased a stock ranch; and at one time he owned 2,000 acres of range land, and was an extensive stock owner. When James L. Pearson was a young lad, he had the misfortune to lose his mother, and subsequently his father married again. James L. is one of a family of seven children: Joseph, Alice, Thomas, Lincoln, James L., David, and Frank, the last two being deceased. The father also reared a family by his second wife. He lived to be seventy years old.

James L. Pearson was denied the privilege of a thorough education; but practical experience is a thorough teacher, whose lessons are never to be forgotten, and the success and prosperity that Mr. Pearson is enjoying have been acquired through his own efforts. He worked for wages on various ranches near Stockton and Lodi, and then became superintendent of the Charles Lamb estate, which is a grain and bean farm of 1,330 acres, two miles west of Thornton, owned by Mrs. Mary Lamb of Stockton.

The marriage of Mr. Pearson occurred at Stockton, on February 26, 1904, and united him with Miss Minnie Peck, born at Acampo, Cal., a daughter of Nathaniel and Mary Peck. Her father was a native of Texas, who crossed the plains to California with an ox-team in the early days and settled at Acampo, where he farmed in the Telegraph school district; and there his daughter, Minnie, received her education. Mr. and Mrs. Pearson are the parents of two children, Rosie Mae, deceased, and James Richard. Mr. Pearson is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West.

JOHN WESLEY PLATT.—A public official representing with exceptional ability the Federal Government in San Joaquin County is John Wesley Platt, the postmaster at Manteca, who was appointed by President Harding on October 3, 1921, although he had been acting postmaster ever since the twenty-fourth of the preceding February. He was born at Berlin, Pa., on November 8, 1890, and in that town enjoyed the best educational advantages, being graduated from the Berlin high school in 1907. In September of the same year he entered Ashland University, at Ashland, Ohio, and for three years pursued the classical-divinity courses, when, for a while, his studies were interrupted. As a result, he did not graduate until 1912, when he received his B. E. degree, and was duly ordained in the Brethren Church. He had already taken up teaching, and he was occupied as pastor of the Brethren Church at Cone-maugh, Cambria County, Pa., the next three years.

He next received a call from the Lathrop and Ripon charge in San Joaquin County, California, and early in 1913 came out to the Golden State. Two years ago he resigned this charge to devote himself entirely to the Manteca charge, which during the past nine years has grown steadily from a very small group of followers in the Brethren Church, and which for a while held its meetings in the grammar school building, or in such other places as could be conveniently secured. In November, 1921, the church was completed at Manteca, thanks to a large degree to Mrs. Nancy J. Salmon and Mrs. Emma Carlon, both venerable ladies of this county. The Sunday school, too, has grown steadily in proportion to the church, fortunate in continuing to have Mrs. Elliott as the superintendent. The pioneer church work to be done in this district has indicated an unworked field, and our subject has been only too glad to assist in the good cause.

Rev. John Wesley Platt has been active as a public servant, and he has witnessed the steady development of the educational, social and economic life of the people. He was elected pastor of the Brethren Church at Manteca in January, 1919, and besides carrying on the work of his vocation, he has also become very active in local civic and business affairs. In 1914 he was employed as a rural mail carrier, when the postoffice was occupying a small room in the Wiggins Hotel, now known as the Manteca Hotel; but three years later he resigned that position to become resident agent of the Great Republic Life Insurance Company. At the earnest solicitation of a goodly number of his fellow-citizens, Mr. Platt resumed postal work in February, 1921; and since then, under his able direction, the Manteca postoffice has entered the group of the second class, and has come to be housed in a modern, spacious building on Vine street. Mr. Platt also owns real estate and residence property in Manteca, for which he finds ready rental.

John Wesley Platt's paternal ancestors were of German birth, and as such they joined the early settlers of Philadelphia. On his mother's side, the Johns family were of Scotch-Irish extraction, and were living in Pennsylvania at the time of the Revolutionary War. He himself was the eldest of thirteen children, ten of whom still survive. He was married at Ashland, Ohio, in 1909, to Miss Harriette Mathews, the only daughter of George B. Mathews, a pioneer of Ripon, and at that time a student at the University of Ashland, having been born near Ripon; and three children have blessed their union, Leland W., Enid R., and Alvar Bryce.

Just how important in the status of public officials in San Joaquin County Mr. Platt is, may be judged from the growing importance of the town which he serves. In 1910, Manteca had only eighty inhabitants; but since the introduction of irrigation and the consequent development of the country around the town, its progress has been rapid, as is evidenced by the fact that at Christmas, 1915, the population was 350, a year later, 570, and on May 1, 1917, there were close to 1,000 souls here. Located on the main line of the Southern Pacific railway and on the main San Joaquin Valley branch line of the Western Pacific railway, Manteca is the office town of the South San Joaquin Irrigation district of 71,000 acres and is the center of a body of 40,000 acres of deep, rich, sandy loam soil under the most dependable and efficient irrigation system in America. It has thus become the "payroll town," and an ever-increasing postal business is daily transacted in the institution now directed by Mr. Platt, owing in part to the creameries, canneries and packing houses.

CALIFORNIA PLATING WORKS.—One of the steadily expanding institutions of the Gateway City to the San Joaquin Valley is the California Plating Works, located at 148 West Fremont Street, Stockton. This industry was established in 1910 by William A. Miller, who came to Stockton after years of experience in the plating trade throughout the United States, attracted by the many manufacturing and industrial plants established in that city, which demonstrated that a substantial field existed for wide-awake enterprises. Today Mr. Miller has one of the most modernly-equipped plating works in California.

Mr. Miller was born in Iowa on March 13, 1882, but was reared in Omaha, Neb., where his parents removed when he was a young child, and in that city he received his education. Early in life he learned the trade of plater, then he was with the Darby Manufacturing Company in Council Bluffs, Iowa; then was employed with the Solar Manufacturing Company of Chicago, one of the largest plating plants in the United States and widely known all over the country. He then came West and found employment with Z. O. Parmalee Company of Los Angeles and Sidney A. Clark of San Francisco. He then became superintendent of construction and installed the plating for the Salt Lake Electric Company. Thus his years of experience have made him an expert in his line of work. When he established his plating shop in Stockton it was the only plant of its kind in the San Joaquin Valley. His business has steadily grown until he was obliged to erect a larger plant at 148 West Fremont Street, which is strictly modern in every detail and is the only plating plant between Sacramento and Fresno. His plant is fully equipped to do all kinds of plating, silver, gold, bronze, steel, copper, and brass; also oxidized work and all kinds of color work. He also does jobbing work, such as automobile headlights, bumpers, reflectors; plates the silverware for restaurants and does all the gold and silver plating and polishing for the Stockton jewelers. He did the interior work in the Commercial & Savings Bank and the Stockton City Bank and the Oakdale Bank, and all the metal plating on the engines and tractors of the Holt Manufacturing Company for their exhibit at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco.

When he started his business in Stockton plating was new to the people and the hardware and plumbing companies carried no stock of nickel plated goods, most of the fixtures being made of brass.

The marriage of Mr. Miller united him with Miss Edna Erstad, a native of Ripon, and they have one daughter, Mary Ann. Fraternally Mr. Miller is a member of the Morning Star Blue Lodge of Masons and the Stockton Rotary Club.

HOWARD A. CAMPION.—As director of part-time and continuation schools of Stockton, Howard A. Campion is doing an outstanding work; he is the representative of the University of California in vocational teacher-training in San Joaquin County and at the present time is also training a group of expert mechanics for machine shop and automobile teaching. He was born in Rice County, Minn., July 31, 1894, a son of John A. and Nellie Marie (Carney) Campion, both natives of Wisconsin. John A. Campion followed farming and later was in business in Faribault, Minn. In 1920 he located in Stockton and opened a grocery business on North Eldorado Street, where he and his son Neil conduct a profitable business.

Howard A. Campion attended grammar school at Faribault, then entered the high school at the same place; then he taught school for one year, after which he entered the Stout Institute at Menomonie Wis., where he took a two years normal course; then for a time he worked at practical drafting in Stanley, Wis. He came West to Boise, Idaho, where he taught school for two years. In 1916 he removed to Stockton and became a mechanical drawing teacher and the following year became the supervisor of drafting in the Stockton high school; then in 1918 he became the assistant director of vocational education in the Stockton schools. In 1919 he was elected director of the part-time, and continuation school in Stockton which has an enrollment of over 400 students who work part of the day and attend school the balance of the time. The entire top floor of the Harris Building at 517 East Market Street is devoted to this school. Mr. Campion also has charge of certain classes at the high school and the prevocational building in Stockton.

On November 22, 1918, Mr. Campion was united in marriage with Miss Gertrude Hildebrand, born in Indianapolis, Ind., daughter of Mac and Jane (McClenathan) Hildebrand. Mac Hildebrand brought his family to California fourteen years ago and first resided at Riverside, then came to Stockton where he was in business until his death, January 7, 1923. There are eight children in the Hildebrand family; Lee, Ada, Lon, Mrs. Gertrude Campion, Eva, Don, Austin and Kathleen. Mrs. Campion received her education in the grammar schools of Indianapolis and Riverside and finished at the Stockton high school. In politics, Mr. Campion is a Democrat and fraternally is a member of Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, as well as Stockton Council, No. 1311, Knights of Columbus, having passed through the chairs of the latter organization; he is president of the Stockton Kiwanis Club; he is also a member of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce and the American Legion. On October 21, 1917, he entered the World War and was sent to Camp Lewis and placed in the 363rd Infantry Headquarters Company and was commissioned corporal. While training at Camp Lewis he had the misfortune to severely injure his foot and in March, 1918 he received his honorable discharge from the service. Mr. and Mrs. Campion are the parents of one daughter, Jane Marie, and the family resides at 935 North Madison Street, Stockton.

E. W. DEVINE.—A vineyardist, who, while evolving something scientific and helping to advance California agriculture, has also produced one of the show-places of San Joaquin County, is E. W. Devine, who resides two miles southeast of Acampo. He was born in Springfield, Mo., on May 10, 1873, the son of William M. Devine, a native of County Kildare, Ireland, who had married Miss Sarah Limbaugh, a native of Alabama. At the outbreak of the Civil War, Mr. Devine enlisted in the Confederate Army; and when he was denied a furlough to return home and see his mother, who was critically ill, he took French leave and joined her, and on account of subsequent unjust treatment, eventually left the Confederate army and joined the Union forces, and served for the balance of the war in the army of the Mississippi. Previous to the outbreak of hostilities, he had removed to Arkansas, but during the war his mother moved back into Missouri, and so his parents had to go through the terrible days of guerrilla warfare.

Of the children born to the worthy couple, E. W. Devine first saw the light in the Iron State, the sisters and brothers being Margaret, Gillson, William M., Jr., Alice and Bell, and Mack, the one younger than our subject. The latter attended the common schools in Missouri, and then went to business college. His father died when the boy was five years old, and he lived then with his mother and an uncle. These conditions led him to push out into the world when he was seventeen years old, and commence to make a way for himself. He worked for wages until he was married, on June 23, 1898, at Springfield, Mo., when he became the husband of Miss Ella Cossins, born near Springfield, the daughter of D. C. and Theresa Cossins. Her father was a farmer; and although she was one of a large family, she enjoyed all the educational advantages afforded near Springfield.

After their marriage, Mr. Devine engaged in the ice business; and for three years he was also stone sawyer. In 1905, he came to McCloud, California, and for three years was foreman for the McCloud Railroad Co. In 1908, he returned to Springfield, Mo., and remained there for a year. Then, in 1909, he came back to Lodi, and for five years he worked for the Lodi Soda Works. In 1915 he was employed by Mason Bros. at Lodi, and then he bought a small ranch, of five acres of vineyard, on Walnut Avenue. He had this place for only a short time, then sold it and bought a vineyard ranch of twenty acres about three miles north of Woodbridge. He sold this after a year, and then purchased a vineyard tract of fifteen acres west of Woodbridge, where he lived until January, 1921, when he sold that place and purchased the fifteen acres on which he now resides about two and one-quarter miles southeast of Acampo. This ranch, half of which is in Tokay grapes, and half in Mission, is well irrigated, the water being conducted through concrete pipes. Mr. Devine also leases two vineyards which he operates, besides his home ranch—one, a tract of twenty acres north of Acampo, and one a seven-acre vineyard southwest of Lodi.

Four children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Devine. Naomi has married, and is Mrs. Charles Morris of Lodi; Leslie is at home; Blanche is a stenographer at Tulsa, Okla.; and Clifford is at home. A Democrat in matters of national political import, Mr. Devine has always been a broad-minded, efficient local booster, a good citizen, neighbor, and friend; and for a short time, while he was living at Fort Smith, Ark., he served as a deputy sheriff. He is a member of the lodge of Odd Fellows at Walnut Grove, Mo.; of the Lodi lodges of the Redmen and the Modern Woodmen of America; and also belongs to the Court of Honor at Walnut Grove.

OTTO DIETZ.—Twenty-seven years ago Otto Dietz purchased his present ranch of twenty-six acres located one mile northwest of Thornton, which he has developed into one of the finest alfalfa ranches in the vicinity. He was born at Steinheim, near Geissen, in Hessen Darmstadt, Germany, July 15, 1869, a son of Kaspar and Elizabeth (Eickle) Dietz. His father was a brick mason by trade, and lived to be eighty-five years old; the mother still lives in the old country at the age of eighty-eight. Otto is the youngest of a family of four children; William is deceased, and the other two are Bertha and Henry.

Otto Dietz was educated in the public school and the business college of his native country, and was reared to help on his father's farm. At twenty-one years of age he learned the brick mason's trade, which he followed until 1892, when he came to the United States and direct to California, settling at Tracy. He found work on a ranch for a year and a half, and then removed to the New Hope section, where he has since remained. When he purchased his ranch of twenty-six acres, in 1896, it was covered with the natural growth of brush and tules, which Mr. Dietz cleared away, and leveled and planted the land to alfalfa; and today his ranch is classed among the most productive in that section. Besides erecting a good, comfortable house and other necessary buildings, he has installed a six-inch pump equipped with a ten-horse-power motor and has piped the place with twelve-inch concrete pipes for irrigation. On this ranch he runs a dairy of twenty-five Holstein cows.

On April 26, 1891, in Germany, Mr. Dietz was married to Miss Bertha Kroell, also a native of Steinheim, Germany, a daughter of George and Margaret (Mumbir) Kroell. Her parents were farmers, and reared a family of eight children: George, Ferdinand, Elizabeth, Anna, Gustave, Grace, Eliza and Bertha, now Mrs. Dietz. Mr. and Mrs. Dietz are the parents of two children: Laura, Mrs. Doty of Elk Grove; and Alma, employed in Stockton. There are two grandchildren, Margaret and Wilbur Doty. Mr. Dietz is a staunch American citizen, and he and his wife are members of the Lutheran Church at Lodi.

PIETRO PASQUALE CAMOZZI.—An upright and honorable citizen, and a thorough and industrious agriculturist, Pietro Pasquale Camozzi operates a fine ranch of 260 acres six miles southeast of Stockton on the Mariposa Road, a portion of which is a fine producing vineyard. He was born at Lugano, Canton Ticino, Switzerland, September 15, 1872, the only son of Caesar Camozzi, born in 1820, a native of the same province and a prosperous farmer, who died in 1901, when eighty-one years old. He married Miss Rosie Boscacci, also born in the province of Ticino in 1823; she died about 1890. There were seven children in the family of whom only two survive, Jane, Mrs. Valentine Camozzi on the old home, is the mother of eight children, three of whom are in California; and Pietro P., the subject of this sketch. At eleven years of age Pietro Camozzi left his family home in Switzerland in company with his friends, the Chaparoni brothers now of San Francisco, and they sailed from Havre, France, on the La France, arriving in California in March, 1883. His first job was with the Globe Brass Foundry Company and he received fifty cents per day for his work and out of this mere pittance he had to pay his board and lodging; however, later on he was given an increase from time to time. His ability and steadiness being recognized, he was receiving $2.50 per day before he had reached the age of fifteen years. On account of the fumes in the brass foundry he was obliged to give up his work, so he obtained work on a ranch in the San Joaquin Valley and in 1887 he located in Stockton. During the following eight years he worked steadily on ranches and was able to save sufficient money to purchase the live stock and implements on the F. J. Galgani ranch. It is fine productive land and which he has now farmed for twenty-one years. He raises large quantities of wheat and hay besides fine quality of grapes, especially of the Black Prince variety, which has gained him prizes at the county fair. He set this vineyard out, cared for it and it is now a good producer.

The marriage of Mr. Camozzi occurred in December, 1901, which united him with Miss Josephine Gardella, born in Stockton, a daughter of Stephen and Mary Gardella, pioneer market gardeners of South Stockton. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Camozzi, Stephen, Rosie and Eileen. In 1892 Mr. Camozzi received his final U. S. citizenship papers at Stockton and a more loyal American citizen is hard to find. He owns twenty shares in the San Joaquin Wharf and Warehouse Company at Stockton and has such confidence in the future of San Joaquin County as a viticulture section that he intends to set more acres to vineyard in the near future. He is a Republican in politics.

PATRICK DOYLE.—An enterprising dairy farmer of San Joaquin County is Patrick Doyle, born in County Wexford, Ireland, June 21, 1871, a son of Dan and Helen (Murphy) Doyle. The father was a horse-trainer by trade. The son, Patrick, was only nine years old at the time of his father's death. The mother is still living at the old home in Ireland, at an advanced age. They were the parents of seven children: William, Ellen, James, Patrick, Jack, Statia, and Margaret.

When Patrick Doyle was ten years old he began to make his own way in the world, working on farms in his native country. In 1888 he came to the United States, and at first went to Buffalo, N. Y., where he learned the plumber's trade. After working at his trade for two years, he went to South Dakota and there helped in the building of the railroad at Custer, which occupied him for six months; then he went to Omaha, Neb., and found employment in a rock quarry. In 1892 he came to California and was employed on a dairy ranch on the Sacramento River, where he remained for twenty-seven years, until 1919, when he settled in San Joaquin County, at Thornton. It was then he bought his 117 acres of open land; and here he now has thirty-three acres in alfalfa and a dairy of twenty-five cows. He has been successful in his undertakings, for he has utilized his opportunities as they have crossed his path.

In June, 1898, in Sacramento, Mr. Doyle was married to Miss Kate Mernor, a native of County Wexford, Ireland, a daughter of John and Alice Mernor. While still a young girl, Kate Mernor left home and went to London, England, where she made her own living for twelve years. She then came to California, and here met and married Mr. Doyle. They are the parents of seven children; Jack and Dan are managing an 800-acre grain ranch in Yolo County; Edward, Cecil, and George are deceased; and James and Alice are living at home with their parents. A self-made man in the truest sense of the word, Mr. Doyle owes his advancement entirely to his own efforts. He is deeply interested in all that pertains to the welfare and progress of San Joaquin County.

WILLIAM M. EDWARDS.—An industrious, straightforward business man who has been rewarded with an enviable success, is William M. Edwards, for nearly four decades a Californian by adoption, and second to none in his loyalty to the Golden State. He was born in Mitchellville, Polk County, Iowa, on October 8, 1870. While still a small boy, his parents removed to Des Moines and there he was reared and educated in the public schools, until the family removed to California in 1886, when our subject attended the Washington grammar school in Stockton. After leaving school he was employed in the carriage factory of M. P. Henderson & Son and learned the trade of trimmer and upholsterer and worked for them for four years; then he went to San Francisco and followed his trade for one year. In 1896 he returned to Stockton and was employed as a mechanic by W. O. Bigelow, who supplied carriage trimmings, and later he was the foreman for the same company, remaining with them for nine years. In February, 1914, he opened a small shop at 129 East Miner Avenue; later a larger and more commodious store was built for him, and he started to repair automobile tops, but very soon he branched out into making automobile tops, tailored seat covers, cushions, curtains, carpets, etc. His business has increased seven-fold within the last five years, and on account of his years of experience in his line he draws his customers from Calaveras and Contra Costa counties, as well as from San Joaquin County. All the workmen he employs are qualified to do first class work and he enjoys an ever increasing patronage.

The marriage of Mr. Edwards united him with Miss Isabelle Lemue, a native of Nevada County, and they are the parents of seven children. Mrs. Edwards is now deceased. Mr. Edwards has never failed to do his part as a public-spirited citizen and many are the projects that he has boosted that have helped to make San Joaquin County one of the best known localities in California.

JACOB PETER ENGEL.—Since 1911, Jacob Peter Engel has been actively engaged in agricultural pursuits in the vicinity of Woodbridge, San Joaquin County, and for the past nine years he has been on the Burton Towne ranch, where he is now foreman of the field men. He was born at Crown Point, Ind., October 18, 1873, his parents being Joseph and Margaret Engel, both deceased. Mr. Engel was left to shift for himself while still a young lad and his education consisted of a schooling in the Indiana grammar schools.

On June 8, 1898, at Milwaukee, Wis., Mr. Engel was united in marriage with Miss Mary Theresa

Maier, a native of that city and a daughter of Andrew and Catherine Maier. Her parents were pioneers of Milwaukee, where Mr. Maier owned and conducted a bakery for thirty-five years. They had ten children: Carrie, deceased; William, of Harshaw, Wis.; Christ, of Hollister, Cal.; Andrew, of San Mateo, Cal.; Antone, of Milwaukee, Wis.; Adam, also of Harshaw; John, also of Hollister; Mary Theresa, Mrs. Engel; George, also of Milwaukee; and Philipina. The father died at the age of sixty-seven, and the mother at sixty-four. Mrs. Engel received her education at the old Ninth Ward School in Milwaukee, Wis. Mr. and Mrs. Engel are the parents of six children: Florence, Mrs. Savio; Joseph, deceased at the age of three and a half years; and Jacob, Laura, Gilbert, and Douglas. The family resided in Milwaukee until 1905, when they removed to California, arriving in Hollister on July 15, the same year. They remained there only six months, removing thence to Newark, where Mr. Engel worked in a foundry for five years. Then he tried ranching on Dry Creek for a short time; but on November 6, 1911, removed to Woodbridge, where the family have since resided. Mr. Engel first worked for Charles Newton for two years, and then was employed on the ranch of Burton Towne, where he is at the present time foreman of field work. Mr. Engel and his wife are held in high esteem in their community.

ENTERPRISE PLANING MILL.—In these days of modern progress and building development, when there is such an insistent and increasing demand for finished building materials, it is a pleasure to do business with representative concerns that keep thoroughly abreast with the times. Such an institution is the planing mill and cabinet shop conducted by the Enterprise Planing Mill, which has been an important factor aiding building and industrial development in this richly productive community of San Joaquin County, where irrigation and good soils properly cultivated are creating wealth. The company conducts an extensive business in this territory. In their new and conveniently equipped planing mill one finds a full line of everything in building materials usually carried by a representative planing mill.

Thirteen years ago a small planing mill was started by Gregg & Son on Cherokee Street in Lodi, who conducted the business until 1921, when H. F. Silk purchased the interest of Mr. Gregg, Sr., and the firm became known as Silk & Gregg. Later George Chester Wheelock bought the interest of Ward M. Gregg and the firm became known as Silk & Wheelock. They are now doing business as the Enterprise Planing Mill, a co-partnership. By fair dealing and honest work the business grew to such an extent that larger quarters became a necessity, and their planing mill and cabinet shop was removed to 625 North Sacramento Street. Much new machinery has been installed, including planers, moulders, band saw, shaper and a specially designed trim saw built by Mr. Silk. Mr. Silk has had eighteen years' experience in the planing-mill and cabinet-making business. He is outside, getting in touch with the public and securing new business. Mr. Wheelock has been in the business for sixteen years and has charge of the office. The third member of the firm is Alfred H. Perry, who was for eighteen years foreman for the Pacific Manufacturing Company at Santa Clara, and is now in charge of this mill. The machinery and equipment of the new mill cost approximately $20,000, thus giving the plant a very large capacity. Lately an addition has been made to occupy 50x180 feet. Already it has been found that the new quarters are going to be too small, and they are looking for further space for enlarging the mill and for the storage of lumber. The firm now has twelve first class mechanics on their payroll, and only the very best of work is turned out. The Enterprise Planing Mill are loyal boosters for the rich and steadily growing communities surrounding the city of Lodi. The policy of this organization is to work along progressive lines with other representative interests for the upbuilding of the city.

MARIO TABACCO.—Coming to America as a young man with practically no capital, Mario Tabacco has won his way to success through his own efforts and is now one of the proprietors of the San Francisco Italian Paste Company. He was born near Genoa, Italy, May 30, 1878, and his early days were spent on a small farm in this mountain district. Here he remained until he was twenty-two years old, when he resolved to try his fortune in America. He reached San Francisco in 1900 and his first work was with the Italian vegetable gardens, south of San Francisco on the San Bruno Road. After three years there he learned the trade of baker in the bakery of Calarigaro Bros., and was with them for two years, then entering the employ of Sprivilo & Company of San Francisco, the largest paste manufacturers in the city. He learned all the branches of the business with them and in 1907 he came to Stockton and in company with Mr. Bacigalupi founded the San Francisco Italian Paste Company. Later Mr. Bacigalupi sold out his interest to Wm. J. Armanino, and the firm now consists of three partners, Mr. Tabacco and W. J. and L. Armanino. The first plant was at Market and Madison streets, but this burned down in 1913 and the same year they erected their modern two-story brick building at 619 E. Lafayette Street. Equipped with modern machinery, this plant is considered one of the finest in the state, and their business has grown steadily year by year. The members of the firm have great faith in the future of Stockton and have invested largely in real estate here, having recently erected a fine apartment house on South American Street.

On April 19, 1908, Mr. Tabacco was married to Miss Millie Armanino, a native of San Francisco, the daughter of Joseph Armanino, a California pioneer who for some years was engaged in gardening near San Francisco and later farmed in San Joaquin County. Mr. and Mrs. Tabacco have three daughters, Ruby, Norma and Stella.

EMANUEL TRACHIOTIS.—Since 1918 Emanuel Trachiotis has been the sole owner and proprietor of the Olympia Oyster Grotto located at 35 North El Dorado Street, Stockton, where he has built up a prosperous business and enjoys the esteem of his associates. He was born at Kranidi, Greece, November 26, 1892, a son of Demetrius and Theodora (Augrinou) Trachiotis. Both parents were born and reared in Greece and Demetrius Trachiotis is a wealthy, retired sponge merchant. At the age of fifteen Emanuel Trachiotis boarded a Greek liner at Pireaus, Greece, and after a voyage of fifteen days arrived in New York; from there he went to Canton, Ohio, but soon after left for Stockton, Cal., where his uncle, J. Despotakos-lived. Emanuel attended the Stockton high school. He began to work for his uncle in 1910, who was owner of the Olympia Oyster Grotto, and in 1918 he purchased the business and his uncle returned to his old home in Greece.

On June 5, 1922, Mr. Trachiotis was united in marriage in Greece with Miss Athanasia Eiconomou, a daughter of Constantino and Helen (Radous) Eiconomou, and the young couple returned to their Stockton home on September 1, 1922. Mr. Trachiotis received his U. S. citizenship papers and served in the Army in the cooks and bakers school as mess sergeant at San Francisco; his service covered a period of eight months and he received his honorable discharge; he is now a member of the Karl Ross Post of the American Legion in Stockton and also the W. O. W. In April, 1921, Mr. Trachiotis organized the Hellenic Mutual Society, a Greek-American fraternity, and served as its first president for one term; this society now has a membership of 120.

JOHN VERNON THOMPSON.—Since 1908 John Vernon Thompson has been actively identified with the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County, with the exception of three seasons spent in Alberta. He was born in Exeter, Ontario, December 27, 1868, a son of Smithson and Elizabeth (Wahn) Thompson, natives of Ontario and Germany respectively. The father was in the lumber business in Ontario, where he owned and conducted a sawmill until 1882, when he moved to Barnes County, N. D., where he preempted a stock and timber claim of 480 acres. There were twelve children in the family: Caroline, Mrs. James Howden, deceased; Jennie, Mrs. William Howden resides in Tacoma, Wash.; Edward resides in Sanborn, N. D.; Alfred G. resides at Lodi; Anna, Mrs. Benjamin Howden, resides at Cooperstown, N. D.; John Vernon of this sketch; Millie, Mrs. Charles Reichard resides in Lodi; Minnie P., Mrs. Wheeler, resides at Porterville, Cal.; William H. resides at Carpis, N. D.; Clara May, Mrs. William Remick, resides at Lodi; Arthur A. resides at Ontario, Cal.; and James A. in Saskatchewan. Both parents are deceased, the father at the age of seventy-four and the mother at the age of fifty-seven.

John V. Thompson had very little opportunity for an early education as their home was located in the woods and schools were scarce in that section. He was fourteen years old when his parents located in North Dakota and there he attended the grammar school; later he attended three terms at the normal and business college at Dixon, Ill. Returning to his parents' home in North Dakota he was a teacher in the grammar schools of Barnes County for four years. In 1895 he made his first purchase of land, consisting of 160 acres of wheat land in Barnes County, N. D., adding to this from time to time until he owned 700 acres; this he farmed to wheat for thirteen years when he disposed of 320 acres and removed to California, arriving on January 1, 1908. He came direct to San Joaquin County and bought a thirteen-acre ranch on Kettleman Lane south of Lodi; this ranch was in a six year old vineyard and Mr. Thompson stayed there for two years when he sold it and went back to his native country, where he took up 640 acres of script land near Brooks, Alberta; he remained there for three seasons breaking the soil and putting in crops and proved up on a half section of this land. The call of California proved too inviting, however, and in 1913 he returned to Lodi, where he established in Lodi the Variety Bazaar on Oak Street, which he conducted for three years when he disposed of it. He then purchased a business lot on School Street where he erected a store building which is leased by his successors to the Variety Bazaar.

On September 12, 1920, in Lodi, Mr. Thompson was married to Mrs. Myrtie (Green) Shattuck, born at Cambridge, Vt., a daughter of Julius Warner and Emily S. (Raymore) Green, both natives of Vermont. Her father owned a 270 acre farm in Vermont and engaged in general farming until 1908. He first came to Lodi, Cal., and since then has divided his time between his old home and his city. The mother passed away in Lodi in June, 1920. Mrs. Thompson is the eldest of a family of four children and the only daughter; her three brothers are Frank, J. W. Jr., and Pearl. Miss Myrtie Green was first married to Merton C. Shattuck on October 22, 1890, and in January 1907 they removed to California and purchased a vineyard near Lodi, but Mr. Shattuck was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labors, for he passed away in 1909. In October, 1920 Mr. Thompson purchased forty-five acres one mile north of Acampo, thirty-seven acres of which is in vineyard and eight acres in a cherry orchard, a part of the old Peter Jahant ranch. In politics, Mr. Thompson is a Republican and fraternally he was made a Mason in Sanborn Lodge, No. 14, A. F. & A. M., and is also a member of the Royal Arch of Valley City, N. D. He is now a member of Lodi Lodge. Mrs. Thompson is a past matron of Harmony Chapter, O. E. S., of East Fairfield, Vt., and is a member of the Lodi Woman's Club.

LAWRENCE L. VENTRE.—Among the enterprising business men of the younger generation may be found Lawrence L. Ventre, who is the secretary of the Monarch Foundry Company, as well as a director and stockholder. A native of Stockton, Cal., he was born on November 23, 1892, a son of Augustine and Caroline (Deveggio) Ventre, the former native of Italy and the latter of Angels Camp, Calaveras County, Cal. His father was an early settler in Stockton, locating here some forty years ago; he bought land east of town and engaged in truck farming for many years, this property now being within the city limits, and he still makes his home on a portion of this property. There are seven living children in the family.

Lawrence L. Ventre received his education in the Fair Oaks grammar school, the Stockton high school and Heald's Business College, where he took a commercial course. After finishing school, his first position was as a bookkeeper for the Cyclone Iron Works and during 1912 entered the employ of the Monarch Foundry Company, as stenographer and typist; four years later he became the secretary of the company and through good management and economy has become a stockholder and director of the company.

Mr. Ventre's marriage united him with Miss Katherine Fregulia, born in Jackson, Amador County, Cal., a descendant of a pioneer family, and they have one daughter, Lois Mae. Fraternally, Mr. Ventre is a member of the Stockton Elks, No. 218; past commander of the Maccabees; Stockton Lodge of Odd Fellows. He is a charter member of the Progressive Business Men's Club, now known as the Exchange Club, and was the seventh man to join the organization. His ideas are of a progressive nature and when called upon to support any measure for the betterment and advancement of his native city and county, he never fails to respond.

FRED H. VILLINGER.—One of the best and most representative agriculturists in San Joaquin County, is Fred H. Villinger, residing on his ranch of 165 acres west of Lodi on the Perrott Road, which has been his home and the center of his operations since 1915. He was born in Santa Ana, Orange County, Cal., May 11, 1884, a son of Leon and Mary (McCoy) Villinger, the father born in San Joaquin County, the mother in Iowa. Grandfather Villinger was a native of Germany and his wife, who was Miss Mary Perchia, was a native of France. They came to California in 1850 and settled in San Joaquin County. The father, Leon Villinger, was married to Miss Mary McCoy in 1876; and they were the parents of six children, three of whom are living: Charles L., of Lodi; Fred H., our subject; and Mrs. Edith Ray, of Clements. The father was reared on his father's farm near Lodi, and for several years after his marriage farmed about two miles south of Lodi, after which he moved to Southern California and engaged in stockraising. In 1892 he returned to his native country and began grape culture with most gratifying success. He is residing at the present time in Lodi.

Fred H. Villinger began his early education in the Santa Ana and Covina district schools; then, when his parents returned to San Joaquin County, he attended the Salem grammar school in Lodi. He is to be considered among the self-made men of the county, for he was but seventeen years old when he started to make his own way. His first position was with the J. A. Anderson Fruit Company, and he was also with the Earl Fruit Company, of Lodi; then he concluded to take up agriculture on his own account, and during the subsequent years has prospered in all branches of this industry. After improving and disposing of two different ranches, he located on his present ranch of 165 acres, six miles west of Lodi, formerly known as the Keller ranch. Sixty acres of this ranch is in bearing vineyard, and Mr. Villinger has set out a young vineyard of forty acres. There is also a twenty-four acre orchard, and the balance is in alfalfa. Mr. Villinger has further improved the ranch with a modern residence and other farm buildings; the ranch is irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch.

On June 7, 1911, in Stockton, Mr. Villinger was united in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Keller, born on the ranch where they now make their home. She is the daughter of John and Doretta (Brack) Keller, pioneers of the county. Mrs. Villinger received her education in the Turner district school and Lodi high school, and finished at Mills College, Oakland. Mr. Villinger is affiliated with Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E., and is also a member of Lodi Aerie No. 848, Fraternal Order of Eagles.

CHARLES W. VOLLBRECHT.—A valuable ranch of twenty-five acres on East Pine Street, about a mile east of Lodi is the property of Charles W. Vollbrecht, who is engaged in the culture of grapes. He was born at Riceville, Iowa, on March 26, 1890, a son of William and Anna Vollbrecht. William Vollbrecht was born in Germany and came to America with his parents when he was three years old. Charles W., our subject, is one of a family of twelve children; Martha, deceased; Herman; Amanda; Jennie; Emma is Mrs. Merrill; Minnie; Charles, our subject; Lillian; Clara; Cora; Jack and Robert. William Vollbrecht and his wife now live retired in Riceville, Iowa.

Charles W. received a grammar school education at Riceville, Iowa, and grew to manhood on his father's farm. When he was twenty-two years old he rented 440 acres (the home place) and later bought his father's stock and farm equipment, where he farmed for seven years.

The marriage of Mr. Vollbrecht occurred at Riceville on November 6, 1912, and united him with Miss Dorothy Peters, a native of Tama, Iowa, a daughter of John and Matilda (Lohrmann) Peters, a farmer of that state. There were five children in her family; Ella, Dorothy, Mrs. Vollbrecht, Elmer, Hazel and Irene. In 1918, Mr. Vollbrecht came to California and purchased seventeen and a half acres northwest of Victor, a full-bearing vineyard, and in 1919 sold this property and purchased the twenty-five acre ranch on East Pine Street, where he resides. He also owned another ranch near Lodi, but recently sold it for $2,600 per acre and now devotes his entire time to the cultivation and development of his home place. Mr. and Mrs. Vollbrecht are the parents of one son Earl. He and his family are members of the Lodi Lutheran Church and in politics he is a Republican. He enjoys the confidence of the business community and he has secured a good home and gained a comfortable competence.

GEORGE M. THURMAN.—One of the industrious, progressive and influential ranchers of the Lockeford district is George M. Thurman, who, in 1919 became the owner of 240 acres two and one-half miles southeast of Lockeford and who is keenly interested in the cultivation and development of his property. He was born at Salinas, Monterey County, April 26, 1871, the son of John and Mary (Womick) Thurman, natives of Kentucky and Missouri respectively. The father, a carpenter by trade, came to California in 1850, the year of his marriage, and the young people first settled in San Joaquin County, but only remained for a short time when they removed to Monterey County where John Thurman plied his trade. When our subject, George M. was a small boy, his parents removed to Los Nietos, now Orange County, where they remained for a number of years; then settled in Keyes Canyon, San Diego County, and were pioneers of that section. There were four children in the family, Sanford, John W., George M. our subject, and Mary.

George M. Thurman remained with his parents until he was twenty-one years of age, then went to Arizona where he homesteaded a quarter-section of land in the Yuma Valley, which he proved up on and lived there for twenty-three years, with the exception of two years that he spent in the Imperial Valley of California near Heber.

On July 26, 1892 at Valley Center, San Diego County, occurred the marriage of Mr. Thurman and Miss Mary Huckaby, born in Santa Ana, Cal., a daughter of David and Adellisa Huckaby. The Huckaby family were pioneers in California who came from Arkansas in the early days and stopped for a few years in Santa Ana, then moved to Bear Valley, San Diego County, and Mrs. Thurman received her education in the schools of Valley Center. Mr. Thurman's Arizona ranch was bottom land along the Colorado River and was entirely devoted to the raising of stock and bees; of late years cotton is being raised to advantage on it. Mr. Thurman still owns eighty acres of this ranch. In 1917, he left the Yuma Valley and settled at Buena Park, Orange County, where he farmed for two years, then purchased a twenty-five-acre ranch at Buena Park and a six-acre place near there. Two years later, or in 1919, he traded his Orange County property for 240 acres southeast of Lockeford where he has since resided with his family. Besides general farming, Mr. Thurman is equipped to do leveling and grading of land throughout the county. He has recently installed an eight-inch Byron-Jackson deep well turbine pump with a twenty-five horse-power engine, which will furnish sufficient water for irrigation purposes.

Mr. Thurman's family consists of his wife and six children: Agnes is Mrs. Horn of Buena Park and they have three children, Paul, Leona, and Harold; Mrs. Ethel Moss of Somerton, Ariz., has one son, Eugene; Ralph is married and has three children, Alta, Eva, and Dorothy; Clyde is married and has one child, Mae; Harold and Ernest are the youngest of the family. While residing in Yuma Valley, Mr. Thurman served as judge of the justice court and was also deputy sheriff for many years. He is a Democrat, and he and his family are members of the Congregational Church of Lockeford, where Mr. Thurman serves as one of the trustees of the church.

GIACOMO FREGGIARO.—A successful California rancher whose progressive enterprise and substantial and profitable results speak well for his industry and thrift is Giacomo Freggiaro, who owns about twenty choice acres on the Waterloo Road, nine miles northeast of Stockton. He came to the Waterloo district in 1915, and during the intervening years he has never regretted his choice of a permanent home.

He was born at Alessandria, in Italy, on June 13, 1885, the son of Angelo Freggiaro, who had married Miss Angela Porta; they are still living, being respectively sixty-seven and sixty-five years of age. They had five children: Pete and Giacomo, both on the Freggiaro farm, and Maria, Bambina and Rosie.

Giacomo attended the grammar school of his native Italian district, and when only sixteen years of age, had had his ambition aroused to leave both the comforts of home and the attractions of his country to cross the wide ocean in hope of finding here still more enhancing prospects. On reaching San Francisco, he made his way to Vallejo, where he worked for a short time in gardens; and then he moved over to San Mateo and, being better acquainted with California conditions, found no difficulty in getting first-class garden work there. At the end of a year, he went to Redding and put in a year in that locality, following mining in Shasta County; but, returning to San Mateo, he had a store for a year. Selling out, he went to Truckee and packed ice for the winter. He next worked for the Western Pacific Railroad, but having the misfortune to get his leg broken, he returned to Truckee and for seven years continued in the ice business. He once more tried gold-mining for two years, near Placerville, and after that sold vegetables in San Francisco for a year; and during the World's Fair, he worked for six months at the carpenter trade.

One June 8, 1914, Mr. Freggiaro was married to Miss Theresa Cabrio, who came from the same district in Italy in which he had first seen the light, and was a daughter of Vincenzo and Anosiata (Biglieri) Cabrio. Miss Cabrio had come out to California the previous year. They are the parents of two children, Angelo and Italo. After his marriage Mr. Freggiaro came to the place where he now resides and bought twenty acres of the old Dodge ranch, considered by experts very choice San Joaquin County land, devoted to cherries, peaches and grapes; and amid these well-laden trees, he has lately erected a fine bungalow. He belongs to the Giardenieri lodge of Stockton; he enjoys the esteem of all who know him.

CHARLES F. RICH.—Starting in life for himself at the age of sixteen years, Charles F. Rich now occupies a position of leadership in business circles of his community, being proprietor of the Stockton Tile Company. He was born in San Francisco, May 3, 1893, a son of Curtis W. and Mary (Wilcox) Rich, the former born in Philadelphia, Pa., and the latter in Lincoln, Nebr., where her father was one of the founders and the first peace officer. They were married at Lincoln and settled in California in the late eighties. The father died in 1897, but his widow is still living, the mother of two children, Curtis W., of San Francisco, and Charles F., whose education was acquired in the grammar schools of his native city and the high school at Redwood City. When sixteen years of age he became a wage-earner as an employe of the wholesale dry goods house of Moore & Watson of San Francisco. He next entered the employ of the Lowry & Daley Company, contractors and dealers in that city, and for six years continued in their service, during which period he gained valuable experience in connection with the tile business. He was employed on many large contracts, doing the tiling in the San Francisco City and County Hospital, a job which required twenty-two months to complete and which was the largest job of the kind west of the Mississippi River; he also worked on a number of other hospital jobs; installed the tiling and the Turkish baths in the St. Francis Hotel; in the Morsehead Apartments he installed the tiling in the swimming pool, roof garden and billiard rooms; and the mantel in the Washington Dodge residence in San Francisco, a very beautiful and artistic piece of work, an inscription in the Morse code, reading "Welcome to our Home" being set in the tiling with abalone shells. Mr. Rich also worked on many beautiful homes in Burlingame and San Mateo, Cal., and became recognized as an expert craftsman.

In March, 1916, he came to Stockton and established the Stockton Tile Company, which has since enjoyed a prosperous existence. He specializes in exterior tile decorations and did the work on the Dawson fireproof storage warehouse on North California street, the tiling being all made by hand. He also placed all of the new tiling in the Frederick Rindge residence in Stockton, one of the finest homes in the county, and executed the exterior tile decorations on the building housing the Stockton Mineral Baths, a very beautiful piece of work, which attracted much favorable attention. He put in the first exterior tile decorations in Stockton, these being on the Brueck Block on East Market street; and he was the first man in the city to install tile sinks in residences, having done much of this work. He has laid the tiling and marble work in the Masonic Building and tiling in the Merced Theatre at Merced; in a theatre at Pittsburg, Contra Costa County; and in the Lodi Theatre. He has placed the tiling in a number of vaults and mausoleums in cemeteries in San Joaquin County and has also installed a large amount of magnesite flooring, a material that hardens, becoming like wood, and having none of the coldness of stone or cement. He has installed this class of work in the halls, bathrooms and kitchens in the Tretheway Apartments, and in apartments and residences throughout the county, the United States Government school at Rough and Ready Island, and the City and County Hospital at Modesto. This material is rapidly gaining in popularity, and during September and October of 1920, Mr. Rich laid 16,000 square feet of magnesite in Stockton. He also placed the tiling in the mantel, veranda, stairway and bathrooms of the home of J. Bricchetto at Banta, in San Joaquin County. In 1922 he opened a branch business in Modesto.

Mr. Rich married Miss Louise Phoedovius, a native of San Francisco and a daughter of William P. Phoedovius, a California pioneer now living retired in that city. He was for twenty-seven years connected with the San Francisco custom house, while he also established weather and telegraph stations for the government in California, Arizona and at Pikes Peak, Colo. He is a veteran of the Indian and Civil wars and was in charge of a recruiting station at Stockton after the close of the Civil War. As an infant his wife crossed the plains to California in an immigrant train, as one of the Oatman party, which was attacked by Indians, and she was one of the few members of the party to escape with her life. Mrs. Rich was chosen the Queen's Herald of the Portola celebration, held in San Francisco in 1910 and 1912, and she is a past president of Darina Parlor of the Native Daughters of the Golden West; also past chief of the Pythian Sisters and past Pocahontas of the Daughters of Pocahontas at San Francisco.

Mr. and Mrs. Rich reside on a five-acre almond ranch on Linden Road, a mile east of Stockton. Fraternally he is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, belonging to Apollo Lodge, No. 123, of San Francisco. A self-made man, Stockton has greatly benefited through his labors, which have contributed to the adornment and improvement of the city and to its industrial expansion.

CHARLES FREDERICKSON.—An enterprising, successful firm, which enjoys the reputation of being the leaders in their line of work, is that of Frederickson Bros., the cement and brick contractors of Stockton, so worthily represented by Charles Frederickson, a native of Northern Sweden, where he was born on January 28, 1886. He was apprenticed for a couple of years at the cement-workers' trade in his native land, and there, as a mere boy, learned the trade, and learned it thoroughly. The work was then all done by hand, and hard cobblestones were used for thirty per cent of the body of the mixture, so that whoever worked at the trade there at that time had to work very hard.

In 1905 Mr. Frederickson came out to the United States, and located at Stephenson, Mich., where he worked at his trade during the summer, and then went into the woods in winter, to work at the getting out of lumber. He attended the preparatory school of the college at Big Rapids, Mich., and learned there the English language; and he was fortunate in being a student under President F. F. Farris, who is now serving his second term as governor of Michigan. In 1908 he came out to California to look around, and when he had canvassed the local situation, and had once seen Lodi, he decided to settle there, at least for a while. He worked with his brother Andrew, who had come from Sweden direct to California, and one of their first jobs was on the winery at Elk Grove. They also put up a cement block for Ed. Brackenbaker in Lodi. Then they entered business for themselves, establishing the firm of Frederickson Bros., cement and brick contractors; and have done most of the large construction work in this district. In Lodi, they erected a concrete block of three stories for H. N. Madison, and then completed a $55,000 job for the city of Lodi. Then they went to the State of Washington, where they remained for thirteen months, and worked as far north as British Columbia. On their return to California, they laid miles of sidewalks and curbs in Fresno, built at Lodi a garage for Fred Cary, and a structure for the Sacramento Gas Company. Frederickson Bros. then made their headquarters in Stockton, where they laid the foundations for the Jefferson, North, El Dorado and Lincoln Street schools, and an addition to the Stockton high school, concrete and brick work on the high school auditorium; and they also did the concrete and brick work for the McKinley and Fair Oaks schools, and the brick, concrete and tile work on the Roosevelt school. They also did work for the new buildings at the San Joaquin County Fair Grounds; and they have done all the cement work in the Wagner Leather Company buildings put up of recent years. They laid the concrete bridge on the Waterloo Road for the county, and in 1921 they had the contract for the $90,000 concrete work on the addition to the Fresno high school. They completed the tile work in the new shed of the Anderson Fruit Company at Lodi, and also a two-story brick block for Messrs. Graffique Bros.; and they erected a pumping plant at Knights Landing, and an ornate school at Denair, Stanislaus County. All in all, Messrs. Frederickson Bros. must be regarded as among the most progressive of industrial leaders hereabouts in the building up of San Joaquin County.

HERMAN RINN.—A representative type of the enterprising business men of the day is found in Herman Rinn, the capable and well-informed buyer for the American Fruit Growers, Inc., of California. He was born in Hampshire, Kane County, Ill., on October 8, 1872, the son of Henry and Margaretha (Schoch) Rinn, the former still living, and a resident of Lodi. Mrs. Rinn died in Lodi. When he was a lad of twelve years his parents removed to Fergus Falls, Minn., and there he grew to manhood and engaged in farming pursuits for over thirty years, which were years of successful achievement, bringing with them the reward of financial independence. Sixteen years ago he arrived in Lodi and soon thereafter purchased a tract of twenty acres three and a half miles southeast of the city, which was set to almonds. He immediately set about improving the farm by setting out an additional orchard and vineyard and planting some alfalfa. His first experience as a fruit buyer was with R. D. Biggs & Company of Lodi; then when T. H. Peppers entered the Lodi district, he became a buyer for them. The second year it became T. H. Peppers Co. and then Mr. Peppers became one of the organizers of the American Fruit Growers. They deal exclusively in grapes and through his years of experience and application to business, Mr. Rinn has become thoroughly informed on viticulture and is among the best known and most successful buyers in the field.

Mr. Rinn's marriage, January 9, 1902, united him with Miss Rosa Veit, a native of Germany, and they are the parents of three children, Robert, a student in the Stanford University; Paul and Ruth. Mr. Rinn is a member of Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., of the Modern Woodmen, and of the Mokelumne Club. He has never had occasion to regret his determination to come to the West, and, utilizing the opportunities here offered, has made a name and place for himself.

DAVID RISSO.—A member of the firm of Risso & Rossi, proprietors of a thriving grocery business at 2309 North California Street, Stockton, David Risso is one of the city's enterprising young business men. He was born at Stockton, February 6, 1893, the son of Joseph and Mary (Risso) Risso, both born in the vicinity of Genoa, Italy; the father is deceased, but Mrs. Risso is still living; they came to Stockton many years ago and Joseph Risso was engaged in vegetable raising with others in the Italian Gardens. Mr. and Mrs. Risso were the parents of five living children: Louis A., John, David, Mrs. Louisa Osborn and Victor.

While gaining his education, David Risso worked after school hours as a delivery boy on a milk route, and when old enough he took up ranch work on the Smith ranch on the Lower Sacramento Road. Later he worked in the wholesale store of Foppiano & So'ari, also with the Hohbs-Parsons Company, and then was fruit buyer for this district for the L. Scatina Company of Oakland. During the war Mr. Risso trained at Camp Lewis, serving for eleven months, but owing to an injury did not see active service in France. He was in the 362nd Infantry, 91st Division, and received his discharge at the Presidio, San Francisco. Previous to his war service, when only seventeen years old, he had acquired an interest in a grocery store on North California Street, and after his return from the army, with a partner, P. J. Perazo, he opened up another grocery on this street, but later Mr. Perazo sold his interest, and the present firm is Risso & Rossi, and they have built up a thriving business that is steadily increasing. Mr. Risso is also the owner of the American Fruit Market at 537 East Weber Avenue. His marriage united him with Miss Eugenia Rossi, and they have a son, David Risso, Jr. Mr. Risso keeps up his war associations by membership in Karl Ross Post, American Legion.

JULIUS RODE.—The owner of a well-improved vineyard property five miles west of Lodi on the Sargent Road is Julius Rode, whose twenty-acre ranch has been brought to a high state of productivity. He was born at Volinsk, Russia, November 1, 1854, a son of Daniel and Helen Rode. The father was a farmer in Russia, having 150 acres, which was devoted to general farming. There were thirteen children in the family, Julius being the third in order of birth. The father lived to be seventy years old and the mother died at the age of forty-six.

Julius Rode was reared and educated in his native country and there learned both the Russian and German languages, and the English alphabet. He remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-four years old, then bought a farm of his own which he operated for twenty-five years. In the late difficulty in Russia a brother and sister-in-law of Mr. Rode died from starvation in that famine-stricken country. Mr. Rode sent for his brother's two children, one of whom is married and has one child, to come to the United States, but owing to the immigration laws, they are not allowed to leave there because the quota of Russian immigrants is filled; one will leave in March, 1923; the others in December. The fare from Russia to America for the four is $1,250.

On November 26, 1878, in Russia, Mr. Rode was married to Miss Julia Friedmann, a daughter of Gustav and Augusta Friedmann, farmers in Russia. In 1902 Mr. Rode sold his property in Russia and came to America, first settling in Oklahoma, where he bought a quarter-section of land, which he farmed for three and a half years. He then sold out and came to California, first settling in San Joaquin on Dry Creek, where he purchased sixty acres on which he ran a dairy and there the family resided until 1917, when he sold his ranch and moved to Lodi. There he lived three years, then purchased his present homeplace of twenty acres, ten acres of which are in almonds, interset with a Tokay vineyard, five acres in prunes, and five acres in vineyard. In 1921, Mr. Rode erected a fine, modern bungalow on his place and has further improved it with an irrigation system. Twelve children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Rode: Gustave A.; Mrs. Emma Holfeld of Alameda; Mrs. Elsie Kramer of Oakland; Robert E. of Hayward; Mrs. Lydia Altnow of Thornton; Adolphine died in Russia; Rudolph; William H. of Oakland; Frieda died in Russia; Julius of Lodi; Erna and Reinhold are at home.

While residing near Galt, Mr. Rode was a school trustee in his locality. In politics he is a Republican, and in religious faith belongs to the Pentecostal Church at Lodi. He is proud to be a citizen of America and is a booster for San Joaquin County.

RUDOLPH E. RODE.—Coming to California in 1905, Rudolph Rode has gradually worked his way up until he ranks among the successful vineyardists of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County. He has made good use of his opportunities since arriving at manhood, and the prosperity that has come to him is from his own efforts. He was born in Volynia, Western Russia, January 29, 1892, a son of Julius and Julia (Friedmann) Rode, also natives of Russia. The father brought his family to the United States from Russia in 1902 and first settled at Orlando, Okla., where he bought a quarter-section of land on which he farmed for three years, and in 1905 brought his family to California.

Rudolph Rode went to school for a short time in Russia and when the family settled in Oklahoma he went to school for three years; then when he came to San Joaquin County, he attended the Liberty district school. Rudolph remained at home with his folks until 1912, when he went to San Francisco and there took a six months' course in a business college, then returned to Lodi, where he became a clerk for Beckman, Welch & Thompson, remaining with them for four years; he then worked for the Standard Oil Company for a year.

On February 15, 1916, in Lodi, Mr. Rode was married to Miss Bertha A. Bender, a native of Menno, S. D., and a daughter of John K. and Christina (Bender) Bender, farmer folk in their native land of Russia, who migrated to the United States in 1903, and later came to California. They were the parents of four children: Charles J.; John A.; Margaret, Mrs. Henry Bender, and Bertha, Mrs. Rode. The father passed away in 1916 and the mother in 1906 at their home in Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Rode have two children, Ruth and Donald, and the family are members of the Lutheran Church in Lodi. In 1920 Mr. Rode purchased his present ranch on the Lincoln Highway about five miles southwest of Lodi, consisting of sixty acres of grain land; here he built a fine bungalow and has fifteen acres in alfalfa, thirty-five acres in vineyard and the remaining ten acres is used for grain raising; he has a six-inch pump for irrigation, which throws sufficient water for the proper irrigation of his land.

JOHN ROHRBACH.—A vineyardist who has built his success upon the foundation of his own energy and capable management is John Rohrbach, now residing on his home ranch of twenty-two and a half acres two and one-half miles southeast of Lodi, San Joaquin County, on Kettleman Lane. A native of Southern Russia, he was born near Odessa on March 5, 1857, the eldest son of Jacob and Magdalena (Hottel) Rohrbach, both natives of Russia, although the Rohrbachs originally came from Germany. There were eight children in the family, as follows: John, our subject; William, Jacob and Fred; Margaretta Christina, Magdalena and Katherine. The father lived to be sixty-three years old and the mother seventy-five.

John Rohrbach received his education in the Russian schools, where they taught the German language, and remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-one; then spent five years in the Russian army. At Odessa on February 20, 1884, he was married to Miss Christina Frey. She is the youngest of a family of six children of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Frey, namely, Martin, John, Caroline, Barbara, Eva and Christina. After their marriage, the young people came to America and settled in Lyman County, S. D., where they homesteaded a quarter-section of land and resided for the next thirteen years.

In 1904 Mr. Rohrbach sold his interests in South Dakota and removed to California where he purchased his present home place of twenty-two and a half acres; ten acres of this tract was in an almond orchard and the balance was a grain stubble field. He set out a vineyard on the grain land, installed a pumping plant, and built a good house and other farm buildings. Mr. and Mrs. Rohrbach are the parents of one son, Fred, who is at home with his parents. In politics, Mr. Rohrbach is a Republican and in religious faith a member of the German Reformed Church of Lodi.

GILBERT McMILLAN ROSS.—An eminently experienced, successful and prosperous mining engineer, Gilbert McMillan Ross, of 444 West Poplar Street, Stockton, is a native of Northern Scotland, where he was born on January 20, 1851. He was educated in England and South Wales; and after an exceptional training in chemistry and mining engineering, he came to the United States in 1869. He traveled by way of Panama, and at length reached San Francisco; and from the Bay City he went inland to Virginia City, Nev., where he was assayer and surveyor of bullion in the mines. He was also for a year an assistant assayer in the United States mint at Carson City, Nev. From there he went to Virginia City and had charge of the handling of the bullion and of the assaying in the Big Bonanza mine, already one of the big producers. He was thus closely associated with pioneer miners of the early days in Nevada, and later had charge of mining properties, some of them owned by himself, in Nevada. Later still, on coming to California, Mr. Ross had charge of the Copperopolis Mines west of the Mother Lode, and also had charge of gold mines on the Mother Lode, in Calaveras and Amador counties. For the past fourteen years, Mr. Ross has been consulting mining and metallurgical engineer with headquarters in Stockton, and he still has valuable mining interests in both Nevada and California. He is a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers. Mr. Ross spent months of his time obtaining the data for the map of the Bret Harte trail which was issued by the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, furnishing the topographical, engineering and mining data. This map establishes the mining belts of Central California, including the Mother Lode and the gold and copper belts. Mr. Ross has also always taken an active part in civic affairs in the district in which he has lived, exerting an enviable influence by his pen and his oratory; he has contributed articles to the newspapers on mining, political economy and educational topics, and as a forceful, convincing speaker, he has participated in public meetings. He is particularly interested in the conservation of California water; and although once defeated as a candidate on the Democratic ticket for a seat in Congress, he continues to work in favor of this economic reform. He belongs to the Stockton Water Consumers' League, and to the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, where he has served on various committees.

At San Francisco, Cal., Mr. Ross was married to Miss Ellen Ward, a native of Vermont; and their union was blessed with five children, four of whom are living. Margaret has become Mrs. H. E. Zobel of Berkeley, and she has a son and a daughter and also a grandson. Mary Ethel and Ella B. are the second and third born, and John R., the youngest, is a mechanical engineer with the Holt Manufacturing Co.; he is married and has a daughter and a son.

SACCONE BROTHERS.—Designers and builders of many of the fine homes of Stockton, the five brothers comprising this firm, John C., George W., Victor, Benjamin and Leo Saccone, were all born at Oroville, Butte County, Cal. Their parents were Joseph and Angeline (Malins) Saccone, the former a native of Italy, while Mrs. Saccone was born in Germany, and each had emigrated to California when they were in their teens and were married in Oroville. The father was a farmer and died when the boys were small and the mother brought her family to Stockton in 1908. She purchased a ranch of seventy-five acres and after living on it for about two years disposed of it and purchased eleven lots on East Lindsay Street in the 1300 and 1400 block. Assisted by her sons she built twelve houses on this property and on their return from the war she gave each a home. Since that time they have built many fine homes, ranging in price from $4,000 to $10,000, and among them are the following: Three for Mr. Bacigalupi, two for Mr. Buthenuth, two for Mr. Kuhlmann; also homes for Mr. Fassler, L. S. Repetti, Mr. Moresco, E. J. Blanchard in Yosemite Terrace and Mrs. Alice M. Hopkins in Sperry's Addition and numerous others.

Victor Saccone, who looks after some of the business affairs of the firm, was born at Oroville, May 17, 1892, and completed his education in the Stockton schools and at Heald's Business College. He is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and of Karl Ross Post, American Legion. During the World war he entered the service and trained at Camp Lewis, Wash., and served overseas as mess sergeant in Battery B, 347th Field Artillery, 91st Division, being stationed in the Verdun sector. After the armistice he was stationed in Germany with the Army of Occupation and altogether served for eighteen and a half months. On his return to San Francisco he was mustered out at the Presidio, April 26, 1919, and returned home. On June 12, 1922, he was married to Miss Ethel Jury, born in Stockton. Two other of the brothers also served in the war, George W. as a mechanic in the aero squadron, building planes in England, and Benjamin as an observer in the air service, stationed at Fort Sill, Okla.

ANGELO M. FOPPIANO.—A wide-awake, progressive business man representing one of the prosperous business establishments of Stockton, is Angelo M. Foppiano, the senior member of the firm of the Foppiano & Solari Wholesale Fruit & Produce Company of Stockton, doing business at 136 North El Dorado Street. He was born in the same city on August 30, 1887, the son of Matthew and Margaret Foppiano, both natives of Italy, the former being now deceased. Mr. Foppiano early settled in Stockton, and for a while he was with the Wagner Leather Company, and later he was park superintendent. Then he farmed on the Weber Tract, and he was also head gardener at Stockton cemetery for fourteen years. He passed away in 1911, leaving an enviable record; and he is now survived by a devoted widow and four children: Angelo M., the subject of this review; David, Mrs. Norma Earl, and Mrs. Louisa Harvey.

Angelo attended the Washington School, and he also went to the County school on Linden Road, then to the El Dorado School, and after that to the Brothers' Catholic School. He followed various occupations as a young man on grain farms, in vineyards and lumber camps, and on the Stockton Railroad, and then he was gardener at the cemetery and clerk for the Horan Furniture Company. In 1910, he formed a partnership with Emil Devincenzi and opened a retail fruit and produce store, under the name of the Avenue Fruit & Produce Company, at 536 East Weber Avenue; and when his partner died, he formed a partnership with J. J. Solari, and together they continued there for four years. Then they sold the business, and in 1914 opened a wholesale fruit and produce company; and later P. Pezzi and C. Arata became partners in the same. The firm owns the Auditorium Building, a four-story brick structure on North El Dorado Street, one of the old landmarks of Stockton; and such has been the progress of this well-known wholesale establishment that both Mr. Foppiano and those associated with him may well be regarded as among the rising young business men of the city. He is the outside salesman for his firm, and he belongs to the Commercial Travelers Association.

Mr. Foppiano, in 1910, married, at Stockton, Miss Tessie Gagliardo, a native daughter, born in Calaveras County; and they have three children: Thelma, Evelyn and Arlene. Mr. Foppiano belongs to Stockton Lodge No. 218 of the Elks, and to the Iroquois Tribe of the Red Men.

AUGUST F. SALFIELD.—A popular and enterprising building contractor of Stockton is found in August F. Salfield, who is well equipped by training and experience for architectural work as well as the erecting of every kind of building. He was born in San Francisco, February 4, 1891, being the son of David Salfield, a prominent architect of the Bay City. The preliminary education of August F. Salfield was obtained in the public schools of San Francisco; then he entered the Wilmerding School of Industrial Art, where he mastered architectural drawing and valuable experience came through association with his father in the office. Believing that the way to success in any line is more easily found if one understands how to do all branches of any particular line, he entered the employ of P. Anderson and McLarren & Peterson, for the express purpose of learning the carpenter's trade; later while following his trade, he worked on a number of hotels and the Physicians and Surgeons' Building in San Francisco.

Seven years ago Mr. Salfield located in Stockton, where he formed a partnership with H. W. Johnson, the firm name being Johnson & Salfield, and their business was contracting and building, specializing in the building of bungalows. In 1918, Mr. Salfield entered the building and contracting field alone and he has erected bungalows in Eldorado Heights and Yosemite Terrace. On the 140-acre subdivision of Eldorado Heights, he has erected some fifty bungalows, all being of his own artistic designing. In January, 1923, he took his brother Carl in as a partner and they built a planing mill where they do all kinds of millwork for the construction of their buildings.

The marriage of Mr. Salfield united him with Miss Ettienne Wiedemann, a native of Seattle, Wash., and they have one son, Theodore Salfield. Besides being a member of the Stockton Builders' Exchange, Mr. Salfield is an active member of the San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M., Stockton Parlor N. S. G. W. No. 7, and the Iroquois Tribe of Red Men.

PETE SANGUINETTI.—In 1894 Pete Sanguinetti located on his fine ranch near the city of Stockton and has been successful and prosperous. His ranch of twenty acres is devoted to fruit raising. He was born at Chiavari, Province of Genoa, Italy, in June, 1869, a son of Nicholas and Julia (Lenato) Sanguinetti, both natives of Italy. There were seven children in the family; Dave, Jack, Gniseppo, Pete, the subject of this sketch; Thomas, also represented in this work; Rosa, Mrs. Steve Sanguinetti, and Mrs. Virginia Lenato, residing in Italy. Nicholas Sanguinetti was a gardener by occupation in Italy and both parents passed away there, the father when sixty-three, and the mother at the age of seventy-two years. Pete Sanguinetti had no chance to attend school, as he was obliged to work as soon as he was old enough. At the age of eighteen, in 1887, he came to California, where he worked for seven years for wages; in 1894 he rented the ranch where he now lives and the first year raised hay, then he planted it to fruit trees, peaches, cherries and plums; he also improved it with a house, where he has since resided. In partnership with his brother Thomas, he purchased forty acres, of which the above twenty acres is a part and later a division was made, each brother taking twenty acres as his share.

On April 10, 1899, in Stockton, Mr. Sanguinetti was married to Miss Maria Demicheli, a native of Genoa, Italy, a daughter of Gregory and Mary (Bianci) Demicheli. There are five children in the family; Gregory resides in Italy; Dominica resides in Stockton; Mrs. Sarah Demicheli resides in Stockton; Antonio resides in Italy, and Mrs. Sanguinetti. Her father passed away at the age of eighty-eight and her mother is still alive at the age of seventy-seven and resides in Italy. Mrs. Sanguinetti received a grammar school education in Italy and came to California alone while still a young girl. Mr. and Mrs. Sanguinetti are the parents of four children: Roy and Joseph own a twenty-acre orchard and vineyard at Linden; and Violet and Norma. The family are members of the Catholic Church. Mr. Sanguinetti owns valuable rental property in Stockton, consisting of five houses. He is a Republican in politics.

LOUIS FOPPIANO.—Possessed of the sturdy ability and enterprise native to his race, Louis Foppiano has steadily maintained his success and his fine forty-eight acre orchard and vineyard is a demonstration of his prosperity. He was born on his father's ranch northeast of Stockton, May 27, 1879, his parents being John and Katherine (Rossi) Foppiano, both born in Genoa, Italy. Sixty years ago John Foppiano settled in California and, coming hither by Panama, as was usual in those early days, spent some time in the mines, his place of operation being Angels Camp. He then settled in San Joaquin County and after his marriage in Stockton he bought twenty-two acres of land about seven miles northeast of Stockton. This he developed to orchard and vineyard and here were born to this pioneer couple their nine children: Columbus is deceased; Jennie is Mrs. Oneto and resides in Stockton; Louis is the subject of this sketch; Eugene; Victor and Henry are ranchers in Morado precinct; Edith, Amelia and Clorinda, all deceased. John Foppiano passed away May 20th, 1920, at the age of eighty-nine years, while the mother resides in Stockton. Louis Foppiano attended the Greenwood district school in the neighborhood of his home and assisted his father in the substantial improvement of the farmstead until he was twenty-six years of age.

On February 22, 1905, in Stockton, Mr. Foppiano was married to Miss Rakela Stagnaro, born in Stockton, a daughter of Angelo and Jennie (Moresco) Stagnaro. Angelo Stagnaro was a native of Genoa, Italy, who came to California in early days and engaged in mining for a time, then settled in San Joaquin County, where he farmed. There are three children in the family; Mrs. Foppiano, who is the eldest; Louise, Mrs. G. B. Leonardini; and Louis F., a plumber in Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Foppiano are the parents of three children, Edmund, Alma and Mae. After their marriage the young couple resided on the home ranch twenty months, then removed to their own place northeast of Stockton, where he built a comfortable residence and good farm buildings. Louis and his three brothers purchased a tract of land which was later divided, Louis receiving as his portion twenty-eight and a half acres, which he has improved to orchard and vineyard. He also owns a half-interest in the home ranch with one of his sisters as a partner. Some years ago Mr. Foppiano purchased a thirteen-acre vineyard adjoining his ranch on the west. Fraternally he is a member of the Stockton lodge of Red Men and in politics is a Republican.

NAT SANGUINETTI.—A practical and successful fruit grower of the Morado section of San Joaquin County is found in Nat Sanguinetti who, in partnership with his brother, owns a fine orchard home five miles northeast of Stockton, the home place of the Sanguinetti family for forty years. Nat Sanguinetti was born on this ranch, December 25, 1892, his parents being Giovanni and Anna (Sanguinetti) Sanguinetti. The father was born in Genoa, Italy, and came to California about forty years ago, where he was married to Anna Sanguinetti, a sister of Fred and Louis Sanguinetti of Lodi, who are also represented in this history. The father purchased the place where our subject now resides and developed it and lived on it until his retirement, when he moved to Stockton. Three children were born to this couple, Elena, Nat and Ralph H. Nat and his brother Ralph attended the Greenwood school and their sister finished her education in the Stockton High school. After the parents removed to Stockton Nat and his brother continued to run the home place; then in 1921 together they purchased a twenty-five-acre orchard in the Morado district eight miles from Stockton and about three miles from the old home place, both ranches being well irrigated.

The marriage of Mr. Sanguinetti occurred in Stockton on November 1, 1916, and united him with Miss Angeline Barosso, a native of Stockton, the daughter of G. and Maria Barosso. Her father came to San Joaquin County from Genoa, Italy, about thirty years ago and settled on the Waterloo Road. She received her education in the Waverly district school in the vicinity of her home. Her parents are both living. Mr. and Mrs. Sanguinetti are the parents of two children, Gladys and Loraine. Mr. Sanguinetti is a Republican in politics and is public-spirited and favors everything to improve his district.

PIETRO SANGUINETTI.—At the age of seventeen Pietro Sanguinetti left his native province in Italy and came to America and directly to Stockton, Cal., where he worked for seven years at farm labor. His finely developed twenty-acre ranch seven miles northeast of Stockton, a stubble field fifteen years ago, now is a fine orchard of cherries and peaches and a vineyard of Tokay, Cornichon, Muscat and Emperor grapes, with some apricots and plums. He was born at Chiavari, province of Genoa, Italy, on February 13, 1883, a son of Bartholomew and Rose (Sanguinetti) Sanguinetti, both natives and residents of Genoa, Italy. When a young man, the father made a trip to South America, remaining four years, but during a cholera epidemic he returned to Italy, where he has since engaged in farming. They were the parents of four children: Pietro, the subject of this sketch; Clara, Mrs. Giannone; Jennie, Mrs. Alberti, and Louise. Pietro attended the grammar school in Chiavari and was seventeen years old when he left for the United States. When he arrived in Stockton he soon found ranch work and with characteristic industry and economy was soon able to purchase land where he began to farm for himself. Eight miles northeast of Stockton he bought twenty acres of stubble field, which he has improved and which affords him a fine income. His irrigating plant at first consisted of a five-horsepower engine, but this was replaced with a five-horsepower electric motor and still later with a ten-horsepower motor which drives a four-inch pump. Mr. Sanguinetti also built a residence where he and his family reside.

On November 14, 1911, in Stockton, Mr. Sanguinetti was married to Miss Carrie Cadamartori, born on the Linden Road six miles from Stockton. She is the daughter of Jack and Rose (Molinari) Cadamartori. The former came to California from Italy about forty years ago and for seven years was lumbering in the Sierras and then purchased thirty-two acres in partnership with another man; later this ranch was divided and Mr. Cadamartori received sixteen acres as his share. In 1920 he sold his ranch and now resides in Stockton. There were five children in the family: Carrie, Mrs. Sanguinetti; Emma, Mrs. Casasa residing in Manteca; Winifred, Mrs. Joseph Gotelli, deceased; Antonio, and Irene. Mr. and Mrs. Sanguinetti are the parents of two children, Raymond and Helen; they are members of the Catholic Church and Mr. Sanguinetti is a member of the Giardenieri Lodge in Stockton.

EDWARD L. GAMBLE.—A man of strong purpose and laudable ambition, Edward L. Gamble is the capable general manager of the Tidewater-Southern Railway Company. His efforts, guided by sound judgment and keen discrimination, have been deciding factors in his success. He has steadily progressed, finding in each transition stage of his business career opportunity for a further step in advance. He was born in Lincoln, Ill., December 18, 1870, and when only three years of age was taken by his parents to the farming district of Republic County, Kans. His education was obtained in the public schools and supplemented by a course in the State University at Manhattan, from which he was graduated. In 1888 he entered the employ of the Wabash Railroad as local agent for the road at points in Illinois and Missouri and seven years was thus occupied. In the spring of 1895 he removed to Colorado, where he was employed by the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad as general agent at Glenwood Springs, later in the same capacity at Creede, and then at Telluride, in the same state. Then he was transferred to special work for the same company throughout Colorado and Utah until 1912, when he removed to Stockton, Cal., and became the agent for the Western Pacific Railroad, and later was made general agent.

On March 12, 1917, when the Western Pacific Railroad purchased the Tidewater-Southern Railroad, Mr. Gamble was made general manager of the latter in both the executive and traffic departments. The Tidewater-Southern Railroad began operations out of Stockton in 1912 and runs to Manteca, Escalon, Modesto, Turlock and Hilmar. The company operates electric cars for passenger service between Stockton and Modesto and the freight service is by steam power. In 1918 estimates were prepared to operate cars over the entire line by electricity and the estimates had been approved, when the Government took over the line on account of the war and all plans had to be deferred. In 1920 new estimates were made for electrifying the entire line, electric freight locomotives were ordered and early in 1923 a start will be made to electrify the entire system, which will be completed as soon as practicable. Already plans and specifications have been drawn to extend the line to Fresno. With this extension the railroad will pass through the rich and productive valley of the San Joaquin and through the extensive Chowchilla ranch, thus aiding in the development and prosperity of the entire valley.

Mr. Gamble has one daughter, Helena, born in Colorado. Since 1899 Mr. Gamble has been a member of the B. P. O. Elks No. 224 of Aspen, Colo.; he belongs to Glenwood Lodge No. 65, F. & A. M., at Glenwood Springs, Colo.; the Scottish Rite bodies in Stockton, San Francisco Consistory No. 1; and in Stockton is a member of the Rotary Club.

GEORGE E. GAYLORD.—As superintendent of the Stockton division of the Southern Pacific Railroad, George E. Gaylord has demonstrated his ability as an executive and has gained the good-will and esteem of all with whom he comes in contact. A native of Ohio, he was born on a farm in Delaware County. His ancestors settled in Ohio, being among the very first white people who located on the Western Reserve near Upper Sandusky, later moving to the Delaware Indian Nation, which became Delaware County, and here his father and grandfather were also born, when the establishment of a home was accompanied by many hardships and privations. Nothing daunted, however, they made the best of the opportunity and did their part to blaze the way for the future civilization. Having become used to pioneering the family moved to Red Oak, Montgomery County, Iowa, when George E. was a lad of seven, and it was in this western environment that he received his early education and grew up until he was sixteen.

The building of a railroad and its operation has a certain fascination for the boys of every generation, and George E. Gaylord was of the usual character, and at the age of sixteen began working for the Chicago and Northwestern as a clerk in the office of the storekeeper when the road was making extensions through Illinois. Later he decided he would go into the train service and he began as a fireman with that road, running out of Fremont, Neb., running through Iowa and Nebraska. He next was in the employ of the Union Pacific as a brakeman on the Rawlins and Green River division in Wyoming.

In 1888 he came to California and entered the employ of the Southern Pacific as a freight brakeman on their Western division, later was advanced to be a conductor and ran out of Oakland. During this time he ran the first train out of Mendota when the West Side line was completed. For eight years he was depot master at Oakland Pier, then he took up the duties of train master at the Oakland terminal and has seen the growth of that terminal from ten engines to over half a hundred now required to do the work at this important terminal.

On June 1, 1916, Mr. Gaylord was promoted to be assistant superintendent of the Western division at Oakland Pier, and on the first of September, 1918, he became division superintendent of the Stockton division, his jurisdiction covering 500 miles of track from Tracy to Fresno on the East and West sides of the San Joaquin Valley to Sacramento, Cal., including the Amador, Valley Springs and Merced branches. Mr. Gaylord has made a study of railroading in every department and is considered one of the most capable men in the employ of the Southern Pacific at this time and has well merited the advancement he has made.

The marriage of Mr. Gaylord united him with Miss Eva L. Hubbard, a native daughter of California, born in San Francisco, and a woman of many accomplishments. They have one son, Charles E. Gaylord, a conductor in the employ of the Southern Pacific on the Western division. Mr. Gaylord is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and a Shriner, holding membership in Aahmes Temple at Oakland; he belongs to the Knights of Pythias and Woodmen of the World; and is also a member of the National Association of Railroad Superintendents, the Pacific Coast Railway Club of San Francisco, the Athenian Club of Oakland and the Stockton Chamber of Commerce. While pursuing his duties he has taken a very active part in promoting the best interests of the road over which he has supervision as well as in furthering the growth and development of San Joaquin County, and in the December, 1920, issue of the Southern Pacific Bulletin, published by the railroad company, appears a splendid article from the pen of Mr. Gaylord setting forth the advantages of this region.

JACOB GATZERT.—A progressive business man of Lodi, who serves the public with delicious bread and pastry, is Jacob Gatzert, the enterprising proprietor of the Lodi Home Bakery, located at 41 South Sacramento Street. He was born in the Province of Hesse, near Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, on August 28, 1880, and there received his schooling. At the age of fourteen he began an apprenticeship to learn the trade of baker and became thoroughly trained for the trade he had selected for his life's work. He worked at his trade for three years in Germany, at the end of which time he concluded to cast his lot in the land of greater opportunities and at the age of twenty-three came to America, then to California in 1903, going direct to Sausalito, Marin County, where he had a brother in the bakery business. For the following three years he worked with him and in 1906 located in Lodi, at that time a small town. He purchased a half-interest in the Home Bakery from Joe Bartke and the partnership continued for two years and then he purchased his partner's interest and conducted the business as sole owner; his first shop was on Pine Street and was very small, his average output of bread being 300 loaves per day. In 1909 he bought the business block located at No. 41 South Sacramento Street and moved his bakery to this location; a brick oven was installed and as his business grew he purchased more space until his frontage is thirty-four feet and the latest improved machinery has been installed. His output of bread at the present time is 2,000 loaves per day; he ships his products to the extreme northern part of the county, besides supplying the local trade. He has installed modern equipment for bread making; the flour goes from the sifter to the mixer, then to the portable bins where the dough is weighed, then to the molding machine, which makes it into uniform loaves; then to the raising racks, then to the ovens, then to the cooling trays, then wrapped in oiled paper ready for sale. Mr. Gatzert is a member of the Stockton Bakers' Association. He owns a half-interest in a building on Elm Avenue, where for three years he conducted the Tokay Theater.

The marriage of Mr. Gatzert united him with Miss Malvina Bechtold, a native of South Dakota, and they are the parents of two children, Alfred and Clifford, both natives of Lodi. Fraternally Mr. Gatzert is a member of Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., and of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M. He has always been progressive in his ideas, and has proven his loyalty to the city of his adoption by supporting every measure for the welfare of the community.

ANGELO GIOVACCHINI.—An interesting representative of a family now well established and honored in California, is Angelo Giovacchini, proprietor of the Delta Farm on Union Island, embracing some 443 choice acres, about thirteen miles southwest of Stockton. He was born at Lanmori, near Lucca, in Italy, on a farm, January 13, 1870, the son of Gabriel and Teresa (De Ricco) Giovacchini. They were both natives of the same province, and substantial farm-owners, raising general farm products and having a vineyard where they engaged in high-grade viticulture. They had six sons, and our subject was the third in the order of birth. Gabriel Giovacchini died at the age of about thirty-eight years, but his widow lived until 1908. Angelo Giovacchini was reared on a farm and attended the public school; in 1889 he entered the national army of Italy, receiving his training in Camp Haste, near the city of Turin. He went through the four years of military life and is very glad that he had the experience, which further improved his health.

When twenty-four years old, Angelo left home for far-off America, sailing from Genoa on the steamship "Verra," one of the Red Star liners. They were eleven days out before New York was reached, and once landed, our subject made haste to start across the continent on the way to California. From San Francisco he sailed up the Sacramento River, and on April 11, 1894, he met his brother Adolph, and commenced an engagement of two years to work on a farm on Staten Island. There he started the first crop in 1896 in partnership with his brother, and they raised large quantities of beans, potatoes and barley. For twenty-four years these brothers have farmed together on the delta of the San Joaquin and Sacramento Rivers, but recently they dissolved their partnership in farm management, although they continue to own in common some very desirable Stockton real estate, including frontage, 50x100 feet on Market and Hunter streets, valuable property acquired by trade one year and a half ago. While living on the islands Mr. Giovacchini went through three floods, the last one in 1907, in which he lost his crops, house, and even his clothing, and had to start all over again.

In 1913 Mr. Giovacchini left the United States for Italy, on February 18, and while visiting his home abroad he was married to Miss Louisa De Ricco, who was born near Lucca, at Lunada, Italy, on June 22, 1893; and on October 3 he returned to Stockton together with his bride. Four children have blessed their fortunate union: Reno, who was the first-born, died in Stockton when four and one half years of age; Letta and Jerry, twins, born October 3, 1919; and Rena, born June 26, 1921. The family attend the Catholic Church, and they have always contributed liberally to charitable works under the lead of the church authorities. In politics he is a Republican. San Joaquin County may well be proud of such progressive citizens as Mr. and Mrs. Giovacchini.

ADOLPH GIOVACCHINI.—A progressive Delta farmer who well merits the success he has attained, is Adolph Giovacchini, of 919 South Eldorado Street, Stockton. He owns 262 acres on the Muller Road, Middle Roberts Island, eight miles southwest of Stockton, which was formerly a vast tract of waste swamp land, that has been reclaimed and developed into an alfalfa ranch, where our subject conducts a very profitable dairy.

Adolph Giovacchini was born at Lucca, Italy, on October 18, 1872, the son of Gabriel and Teresa (De Ricco) Giovacchini, a well-to-do vineyardist of Lucca, the fourth in the order of birth of six sons, and was reared on his father's farm. At the age of sixteen he left home to come to the New World, and arrived in California in October, 1888, having been nine days in crossing the Atlantic on the "Cham-pagnes" from Havre to New York. He did not tarry long in the metropolis, but came on direct to San Francisco, from which seaport town he made his way inland to the Delta, on the Sacramento River, and settled near Walnut Grove, where he remained for fifteen years. He commenced to farm on Staten Isle in San Joaquin County, but due to the heavy flood of 1904, he lost all, save his wife and a son, Lawrence, who is now deceased. In 1905 he removed to San Joaquin County and started on Roberts Isle, and after ten years of farming extensively he has been so successful that he has paid for his ranch and also built a fine residence at 919 South Eldorado Street in Stockton. Up to 1922 he and his brother, A. Giovacchini, were partners, but now they farm separately. His brother's life-story is given on another page. He owns a complete Best steam tractor and threshing outfit, all modern machinery to carry on farming; and he leases out the dairy to Mr. Martin, devoting his attention to his Delta land, most serviceable for the cultivation of beans, onions, wheat and barley. He has operated large areas on Union, Cooney, Rough and Ready, Staten and Elmore tracts in this county, but he has chosen to invest his savings in Roberts Isle property and Stockton real estate. Through many years of hardest labor and well-earned experience, he has gained a valuable knowledge of Delta farming, and knows the hazards in managing a Delta ranch.

At Stockton, on December 31, 1905, Mr. Giovacchini was married to Miss Alvera Simoni, a native of Lucca, Italy, who came to America when she was fifteen, accompanying her parents, Vincente and Pasquina (Pardini) Simoni. Four children have blessed the union: Lawrence, who died at the age of eleven; Teresa, who is fifteen; Herbert, thirteen; and Laura, five. Mr. and Mrs. Giovacchini are members of the Catholic Church, and contribute liberally to its benevolences.

GIOVANNI B. GOTELLI.—For the past thirty-four years Giovanni B. Gotelli has been identified with the farming interests of California, and San Joaquin County has been the scene of his labors throughout this period. For twenty-one years he has resided on his home place of ten acres in the Morado section of San Joaquin County some seven miles northeast of Stockton. His native place was the Province of Genoa, Italy, where he was born at Varese Ligure, August 2, 1874, his parents being Dominico and Pelligrini (Demotte) Gotelli, both natives of Genoa, Italy. Dominico Gotelli came to California in 1884 and worked in San Francisco for seven years, then removed to the Morado district northeast of Stockton, where he bought forty acres of stubble field, which he developed to orchard and where he passed away at the age of sixty-three years; his widow now lives near Stockton. There are five children in the family, Giovanni B., our subject, being the eldest; Antonio F. resides with his mother near Stockton; Joseph also resides with his mother; Mary, Mrs. Genetti, and Anna, Mrs. Peirano, reside in Stockton. Giovanni B. Gotelli attended school at his old home until he came to California in 1889, joining his father in San Francisco, where he had vegetable gardens, and continued with him there until 1891, when they came to Stockton, where he assisted his father with the ranch work until he was twenty-one years old, then working two years for other farmers.

In March, 1899, in San Francisco, Mr. Gotelli was married to Miss Katherine Pezzi, also a native of Genoa, Italy, a daughter of Antonio and Mary Pezzi. After his marriage, Mr. Gotelli worked for a while in the vicinity of San Francisco, then returned to Stockton and helped his father on the home place for a year. In 1901 he came to his present ranch, which was at that time bare land. Improvements were begun at once, a house was built and an orchard of peaches and cherries was planted and later an irrigation system was installed. Mrs. Gotelli passed away November 11, 1918, leaving five children: Rosie, Paulmera, Lena, Antonio and Melvina. Mr. Gotelli in October, 1922, rented his ranch and moved to his residence on Magnolia Street, Stockton. He also owns a brick building on East Main Street which is occupied by the J. C. Penney store and Mrs. Murphy's Corset Shop. He is a Republican in politics and for two terms was a trustee of the Greenwood school district.

GREEN ELECTRIC COMPANY.—The electrical supply business in Stockton is well represented by the Green Electric Company, which was organized by Alfred H. Green in March, 1920, with headquarters at 438½ East Market Street, where a selected line of electrical products are carried, each article being consistently displayed to the best advantage. A native Californian, he was born in Stockton, April 8, 1900, where he grew up and received his education at St. Mary's College in Stockton, remaining in school until he was sixteen years old, when he began to learn the electrical business. He was first employed by the Engineering & Supply Company and later the Commercial Electric Company, both of Stockton; later, he was employed by the Pacific Portland Cement Company in Solano County, then went to Porterville, where he was employed by the Ulmer Machinery Company. Deciding to engage in business as an independent electrical contractor, he returned to Stockton, where two years ago he opened his own establishment, winning marked success from the start. Among the most outstanding electrical contracts that Mr. Green has handled are the Portuguese hall, the Barrett block, C. G. Gall building, and many fine cottages and bungalows in Stockton. His patronage extends to the towns and communities around Stockton in other directions. All contracts are carried to a satisfactory completion under the personal supervision of Mr. Green.

The marriage of Mr. Green occurred in Stockton and united him with Miss Evelyn Snow, born in Stockton and a descendant of the pioneer family of that name. Fraternally, Mr. Green is affiliated with the Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W., No. 7; the Young Men's Institute, and the Modern Woodmen of the World.

FRANK T. GREEN.—A wide-awake, painstaking official of San Joaquin County whose extensive and valuable practical experience constantly enables him to render service as efficient as it is willing, is Frank T. Green, the county horticultural inspector for the Lodi district, residing at 105 North Hutchins Street, Lodi. He was born on a farm near Cambridge Junction in Lamoille County, Vt., on October 20, 1871, and as a young man followed farming in the Green Mountain state until 1896, when he went into Boston. He was then at the age of twenty-five, and he was for a while employed by the Boston Street Railroad. Returning to his native state, he took up farming for a year, and then he engaged in liverying, under such conditions, for example, that in some winters there were 150 days and more of continuous sleighing. He rented out sleighs, and did a lively business; but in time he tired of the long, severe seasons and decided to change climate. Coming to California in 1907, he settled at Lodi, and for five years he engaged in selling insurance, and then, in 1912, he was offered and accepted his present position with the County Horticultural Commission. In summer he inspects fruit and in winter he superintends the extermination of rodents, squirrels, and weeds, which handicap agriculturists. Understanding his business, he has proven a valuable assistant. While in Lamoille County, Vt., he served as a deputy sheriff, and his experience enables him at times to render aid in behalf of law and order.

In 1920, Mr. Green bought a Tokay vineyard of twenty acres which in a short time he sold at a handsome profit; and at present he owns another ranch of twenty acres northeast of Lodi, where he has seventeen acres in Tokay grapes, and three acres in Muir peaches. He was made a Mason in Waterman Lodge No. 83, A. F. & A. M. at Johnson, Vt., demitting to Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M.

MRS. ELLEN GRIFFIN.—By no means all the pioneer citizens and successful characters have been men, and to omit the part which the women played in the development and the civic progress of this western country would be indeed a serious oversight. Among such women was the late Mrs. Ellen Griffin, a pioneer of the county, who after her husband's death managed with admirable executive ability and sagacity the large ranch located about eleven miles east of Stockton on the Sonora Road. She passed to her reward on May 29, 1909, mourned by her family and a host of loving friends. She was born in County Kerry, Ireland, January 4, 1831, a daughter of Patrick and Bridget (Ford) Commins, both natives of Ireland. When she was twenty-one years old, in 1852, Ellen Commins took passage on a sailing vessel and after a long and tedious voyage of six weeks and three days she landed in New York City. There on the twelfth day of the following October, she was united in marriage with John Griffin, who was born in County Kerry, Ireland, April 29, 1829, and who had preceded his betrothed to America by only a few months. The happy couple remained in New York until early in 1856, and then once more considerations of their own material welfare separated them for a short time. In that year Mr. Griffin came out to California, and after having decided upon a suitable location in San Joaquin County, he sent for his wife. She came around by the Panama route, and from San Francisco arrived in San Joaquin County in the same year of 1856.

Mr. Griffin with keen foresight purchased in San Joaquin County 480 acres of land at the site of the present ranch, which has been the home of the Griffin family since 1856, but this tract was only the nucleus around which his diligence and fine business management built up, by subsequent purchase, a large estate of 1980 acres, some of which has been sold since his death; and the well cultivated ranch of which his daughter Anna F. Griffin is now the owner and manager still comprises 1430 acres. Mr. Griffin was a staunch Democrat in politics, and he and his wife were very public-spirited and favorable to anything pertaining to the upbuilding and welfare of their community. Mr. and Mrs. Griffin were members of the Catholic Church as were also their two daughters, Anna F. and Nellie C. The latter passed away five months after her mother, October 14, 1909. Miss Anna F. Griffin, the only survivor of the pioneer couple, is classed with the progressive, enterprising and successful agriculturists of San Joaquin County.

JOSEPH E. HALL.—A successful business man known throughout San Joaquin County for his progressive methods, is Joseph E. Hall, the managing director of Hall Bros. Company, the well-known grocers, whose place of business is at 28 North El Dorado Street. He was born on a farm in Monroe County, Mich., on February 6, 1852, the son of Thomas E. and Azuba (Eckley) Hall, both natives of Rutland, Vt., and both now deceased. The Hall family emigrated to the woods of Michigan in 1818, and Grandfather David Hall cleared away the trees from land for his seven sons, who later became Michigan farmers. They lived seventeen miles from a white family, and friendly Indians were their only neighbors.

When Joseph was fourteen years of age his folks removed to Ringwood, McHenry County, Ill., and in that place he clerked in a grocery; and from there, in 1871, when he was about nineteen, he came west to California and settled in San Joaquin County. He arrived in Stockton with fifty dollars in his pocket; and realizing that this small capital would not permit him to remain idle long, he went to work on John Moore's dairy farm, at forty dollars a month in wages and his board. Mr. Moore was a member of the grocery firm of Hammond, Moore & Yardley on East Weber Avenue, opposite the court house, at Stockton, which became Hammond & Yardley; and after young Hall had worked on the ranch for a month, Mr. Moore gave him a position as clerk in his Stockton store. For twenty years he held that position, and during that time he never drew a dollar in advance, nor had a dollar deducted from his pay for absence from the store—a record of which any man might justly be proud. In course of time, on the other hand, his wages were advanced, and during the last seven years he received $100 per month without asking for an increase.

In 1890 Mr. Hall bought the grocery of J. Pettinger at 28 North El Dorado Street, which he conducted under the name of J. E. Hall, and later he took in his two sons as partners, and then the firm was styled J. E. Hall & Sons. In 1910 he turned the business over to his sons, and the firm is now Hall Bros., and they have a branch store at 533 East Weber Avenue. In early days he erected a home on Weber Avenue, at the corner of Aurora Street, and there, where his three sons were born, he lived for many years. Mr. Hall is president of the J. C. Smith Company, which formerly owned 2,200 acres on the Lower Sacramento Road, the property of the late J. C. Smith, his wife's father; 800 acres of this property was sold to the syndicate which opened up that fashionable subdivision, Tuxedo Park, and the company gave forty acres as a donation to the College of the Pacific, for the new site of the college, still retaining almost 1,400 acres, which is leased to tenants for farming fruit and vegetables.

In 1879 Mr. Hall was married to Miss Minnie J. Smith, born in Stockton, the daughter of J. C. and Melissa (Boone) Smith, the former a pioneer and large landowner and farmer, who crossed the plains to California in 1853. Mrs. Smith was the granddaughter of Daniel Boone, the pioneer of Kentucky; she died in 1907, especially mourned in the circles of the Methodist Church, South, and the Order of Rebekahs. Three sons sprang from this union, and two are still living. Eckley B. became an Odd Fellow, and is now deceased; Clarence E. is also popular in the lodges of the Odd Fellows; and Lynwood E., who married Miss Vera Sackett, is not only an Odd Fellow, but he belongs to Lodge No. 218 of the Elks. Joseph E. Hall now owns a residence costing $10,000 on North Monroe Street. He is a Republican; and he served one term in the city council from the Third ward, and in 1888 one term as police and fire commissioner. After he turned the store over to his sons, he became active in the Chamber of Commerce, and in 1915 he gathered the exhibits from all parts of the county for the Panama Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, and also for the San Diego Fair; and for thirteen months he was in charge of the county exhibit at the Fair in San Diego. He also furnished the county exhibit for the Fair in Denver, Colo., and sent it there to be exhibited. He gathered the exhibit, placed it in shape at the State Fair in Sacramento for three years, and supervised it. He belongs to Charity Lodge of the Odd Fellows, which he joined in 1873, and he is one of only four members of that lodge now living that were members when he joined. He has passed through all the chairs, and is a member of all branches of the Odd Fellows, and has attended many meetings of the Grand Lodge.

DANIEL H. GRUBB.—Among the agriculturists who gave the best years of their life to the development of Central California's resources was the late Daniel H. Grubb, who was born near Madisonville, Tenn., September 12, 1837, a son of Darius and Sarah (Heiskell) Grubb, both natives of Virginia. Daniel H. was only eight years old when his father passed away and he continued to make his home on the farm until his marriage to Miss Sarah E. Carson, who was born at Madisonville, Tenn., October 30, 1840. At the breaking out of the Civil War, he left his farm to enlist in the Confederate army in Company G, 63rd Tennessee Volunteer Infantry. His company surrendered at the battle of Vicksburg, July 4, 1863, and he returned to his home in Tennessee. Later he became interested in the mercantile business, meeting with good success, but in 1868 he determined to seek the more promising future offered in California. Leaving New York December 28, 1868, with his wife and two children, for Aspinwall, they crossed the Isthmus of Panama and arrived in San Francisco on the "Golden State."

Mr. Grubb at first went to Stockton, then removed to Oakdale and for two years farmed in Stanislaus County. Next he spent some time in Fresno, then returned to Stanislaus County, where he farmed until 1883, when he purchased 500 acres near Snelling and became one of the well-known grain farmers of that vicinity. Here Mrs. Grubb passed away on September 6, 1902, the mother of the following children: Elizabeth D., the wife of James L. Allen; Charles F., George, James, Daniel H. and William. Mr. Grubb passed away on November 8, 1912, at the age of seventy-five, retaining his faculties unimpaired to the last.

GOTTFRIED HANDEL.—A valuable ranch of fifty-eight acres on Harney Laue, five miles southeast of Lodi, is the property of Gottfried Handel, who is engaged in both agricultural and viticultural pursuits. A native of South Dakota, he was born at Menno on May 27, 1892, a son of Gottfried and Louisa Handel. When Gottfried was ten years of age the family removed to California and settled in the vicinity of Harmony Grove school, San Joaquin County, where the father acquired a quarter-section of land. He passed away on this home ranch and the mother later became the wife of Lot Lachenmaier, a native of Southern Russia. Mr. Lachenmaier came from Russia and settled in South Dakota, being a pioneer of that section of the country. He acquired considerable land and in time became among the largest and most successful grain growers and cattle raisers in the state. He was the first merchant in Lehr, S. D., and helped to build up the community, remaining there until 1910, when he came to Lodi. His first constructive work in San Joaquin County was the starting of the town of Victor, where he built a store building and conducted a store for the convenience of the rural residents. He was one of the organizers and is now the vice-president of the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Lodi, and is an esteemed citizen of the community.

Gottfried Handel received his education in the Harmony Grove district school and until he was twenty-two years old worked on the home place. In October of 1914 he was married to Miss Bertha Wiederrich, a daughter of Jacob and Katherine Wiederrich, farmers of South Dakota. There were nine children in her father's family and Mrs. Handel is one of the three that are living today. Her brother, John R. Wiederrich, is represented in this work and is a vineyardist of the Lodi district. Bertha Wiederrich was educated in the Harmony Grove school and was reared on a ranch in that vicinity. Her father passed away when she was a small girl and she came to California with her mother, who now resides in Lodi. Mr. Handel inherited forty acres southeast of Lodi on Harney Laue, eight acres of which was in vineyard and the balance a stubble field, which he planted to vineyard and alfalfa; later he added eighteen acres, making in all fifty-eight acres. Of the eighteen acres, ten acres have been set to vineyard, while the balance of eight acres is in alfalfa; he has installed one of the largest pumping plants in the country. Mr. and Mrs. Handel are the parents of four children: Dolores Katherine, Herbert Richard, Donald Jacob and Robert Gottfried. Mr. Handel is a Republican in politics and is a member of the German Reformed Church of Lodi.

EMANUEL HANDEL.—Among the prominent and leading viticulturists of San Joaquin County is Emanuel Handel, who owns 119½ acres and operates ninety acres in vineyards and orchards located in the Lodi section of the county. He is one of the staunchest advocates of irrigation, and his labors have proved its effectiveness as an agent in agricultural activity. He is a native of Hutchinson County, S. D., where his birth occurred January 5, 1878, a son of Gottfried and Margaret Handel, both natives of southern Russia, their birthplace being near the city of Odessa. They left their native country for America and settled in South Dakota, where the father took up three claims, homestead, timber and pre-emption. When Emanuel was six years of age his mother died and his father later married again. About fifteen years ago his father passed away and the stepmother is now the wife of Lot Lachenmaier of Lodi. The schooling of Emanuel Handel consisted of a grammar school education.

In South Dakota on November 13, 1903, Mr. Handel was united in marriage with Miss Katherine Neuharth, also born in South Dakota in the vicinity of her husband's birthplace. She is the daughter of Phillip and Katherine Neuharth and her education was obtained in grammar school. Shortly after their marriage the young people came to California and settled near Lodi, where Mr. Handel purchased a sixty-five acre vineyard about five miles east of Lodi on the Kettleman Lane Road, which he has improved with a modern bungalow, garage, barns and all necessary equipment for carrying on grape culture; he also owns a half interest in a thirty-five acre vineyard east of Lodi with his brother-in-law, Mr. Neuharth. Each ranch is amply supplied with water from a four-inch pump driven by a ten horsepower motor, thus insuring the best of crops. Mr. and Mrs. Handel are the parents of ten children: Edwin Emanuel; Gideon, deceased; Gideon Benjamin; Emil Arthur; Rachina Katherine; Matilda Louisa; Lenora Pavlina; Leon Eigin; Ida Magdaline; and Viola Bertha. The family are all members of the German Reformed Church of Lodi. Mr. Handel is a Republican in his political affiliation.

GROVER C. IREY.—For the past seven years Grover C. Ireay has been a resident of Lodi and since 1921 has been associated with Lyon & Ireay, sporting goods, auto accessories, etc., and brings to the firm a thorough and practical knowledge of the business in every detail. He was born near Versailles, Mo., January 23, 1892, a son of William T. and Almira (Robertson) Ireay, natives of Pennsylvania and Missouri, respectively. There were eight children in the family: Alfa, Mrs. E. M. Paxson, resides in Fortuna, Mo.; Frank resides at Lodi; Roy resides at Lodi; Maremma resides in Lodi; Estella, deceased; J. Washington resides at Youngstown, Cal.; Grover C. is the subject of this sketch; and Cynthia. Grover C. received a grammar school education in Akinsville, Mo. When nineteen years old he was earning his own way in the world and first worked at any job he could get to do to earn a livelihood, working through the states of the Middle West, and spent a year and a half at Delhi, La.; he spent one season in the harvest field in Arkansas. He then removed to Texas and worked at harvesting, gradually working his way northward until in the fall he was in North Dakota. Returning home, he took a course in the Kansas City Automobile Machine School. During 1915 he came to California and directly to Lodi, where he worked as driver and mechanic for the City Transfer Company. During the World War he was employed at the Moore-Scott shipyards in Oakland as a driller, where he remained for a year and a half. After the war he returned to Lodi, where he established an agency for Federal trucks, which occupied him for one year. He then turned his attention to viticulture and purchased twenty acres in vineyard, three miles southwest of Lodi, but later sold it.

On September 5, 1917, Mr. Ireay was married to Miss Hazel R. Ham, born near Woodbridge, a daughter of W. J. and Anna L. Ham, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Pennsylvania. Her father, W. J. Ham, who was an attorney in Des Moines, Iowa, first married Miss Ella Ventura, who passed away leaving one child, Mathias Fenton Ham. After Mr. Ham's second marriage the family removed to California, in 1891, and Mr. Ham was one of the instructors in the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge. He passed away at about sixty years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Ireay are the parents of three children: William Harold, Charles Grover, and Robert. Mr. Ireay purchased the home of Mrs. Ham in Lodi, where the family has since resided. Mr. Ireay is a Democrat in politics, and fraternally is a member of the Modern Woodmen, and with his family is a member of the Methodist Church of Lodi.

GUS M. HANSON.—Prominent among the enterprising and successful leaders in the busy industrial life of Stockton is Gus M. Hanson, the proprietor of the Aurora Welding Works, one of the city's important concerns. Mr. Hanson was born in Helsingborg, Sweden, on January 5, 1886, and although commencing life under comfortable circumstances he was destined to leave home at the early age of nine years, since which time he has made his way alone in the world. At first he became a blacksmith's helper, and he worked in the smithy in his native country for four years. He then followed the machinist's trade in different parts of Sweden, and in his seventeenth year, in 1903, he crossed the ocean to the United States and, pushing westward, located at Wausau, Wis., where he found employment at his trade; and later he removed to Omaha, Neb. There he added an accomplishment, for he learned the locksmith trade and also became a safe expert. He was engaged by the Deright Company, and sent by them to different cities to open safes; and in that service he succeeded in opening no less than 110 safes, and thus became one of the best workmen in that field in the country. This actual ability, with its attendant reputation, brought about his removal to San Francisco, where he was in the employ of the Herman Safe Company, and afterwards of the Carey Safe Company; and while there he took up the work of welding.

In 1912, Mr. Hanson located at Lodi and entered the employ of the Lodi Machine Shop and Welding Works, conducted by Earl Van Buskirk; and two years later he formed a partnership with Van Buskirk and they opened a welding shop in Stockton under the firm name of Van Buskirk & Hanson. Later, Mr. Hanson bought out his partner and changed the firm name to the Aurora Welding Works; and he is not only the oldest welder in point of service in Stockton, but he very naturally does the largest business. The Aurora Welding Works, in fact, turn out more finished work and transact more business than all their esteemed competitors in the same line. Mr. Hanson is especially popular in Masonic circles, being a member of San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M.

Not long ago the Seventh Booster Edition of the Byron Times devoted half a page to a write-up of the Aurora Welding Works, which it pronounced one of the important institutions of Stockton operating as an industrial factor in development fields. One powerful electrical machine is devoted to electrical welding, and this features the new and important methods in vogue under Mr. Hanson's own system. A splendid acetylene welding equipment is also an exponent of the progressive mechanics observable in this establishment. A specialty is also made of handling tractor repairs, a well-equipped mechanical department being supplied for this important branch of the industry; and much casting repair work is done for industrial concerns of Stockton and Central California, the high-class efficiency of the plant having attracted much favorable comment. Quick work is made an important feature in repairs, and work on all makes of tractors, automobiles, trucks, and implements of all kinds is handled with highly satisfactory results. If a casting breaks, for example, instead of replacing it with a new one, at heavy cost and possibly great delay, it can be repaired here at nominal cost and the saving of much valuable time. Building up worn-out parts is another special feature in this wide-awake plant, bringing into play one of the really constructive departments, and means much to the owners of costly or highly-prized machinery. Everything that is weldable has its place in this well-equipped establishment so well directed by Mr. Hanson, and a prestige has been established for handling skilfully any kind of metal, with the result that the firm's trade extends into the rich San Joaquin Valley country as far as Tulare. During recent years, also, Mr. Hanson has done much special work for mining companies, and has won high standing with these great organizations.

JAMES A. HYMER.—As sales manager of the Holt Manufacturing Company of Stockton, an establishment with an international reputation, James A. Hymer is making good and becoming firmly entrenched in the business world. A native of Nebraska, he was born at Sacramento, Phelps County, on January 10, 1882, and until his twelfth year was reared and educated at Holdredge, later finishing his schooling at Lincoln. Being of a mechanical turn of mind, young Hymer became an apprentice in the locomotive shops of the C. B. & Q. Railroad at Havelock, where he began the trade of machinist, finishing his apprenticeship in the shops of the C. & S. Railroad at Denver. He continued to follow his trade as machinist, later as foreman, and still later as division foreman with the Northern Pacific Railroad. In fact he had a wide experience in the various roads of the West. Afterwards he was in the employ of coal and gold mining companies in the northwest as master mechanic.

Mr. Hymer decided to give up the branch of mechanical work he was following to take up the study of the internal combustion engines in the automobile world and in a short time he became proficient in that trend of mechanics. Being attracted to Los Angeles, he was employed in a large shop of that city. After a few years in the mechanical end of the automobile industry he concluded he could use his knowledge to very good advantage in selling machines, and going to Salt Lake City he became connected with the firm of Randall, Dodd & Company as a salesman. In spite of the fact that it was in December and that there was two feet of snow on the ground, Mr. Hymer sold three cars the first two weeks, thus meeting with success from the beginning. He remained with this company in Utah and Idaho until coming to San Francisco in 1911. Mr. Hymer soon entered the employ of Don Lee as a salesman, and under his leadership sold the Cadillac with success. From the retail department he was soon advanced to the wholesale department and remained with Don Lee four and one-half years.

While engaged in the automobile industry he made a study of the Holt Tractors, and thinking there was a greater field for advancement in that line he considered making a change; at considerable sacrifice to himself, at the time, in 1916 he became connected with the Holt Manufacturing Company as their representative in Southern California, with headquarters in Los Angeles. In a short time his prophecy came true and he met with phenomenal success in handling the tractor in that territory. His thorough mechanical training well fitted him for his work and advancement came to him when he was called to Stockton and appointed assistant sales manager on December 31, 1919; just one year from that date he was made sales manager, the position he now holds in a concern that covers half the earth with their products from the Stockton office.

At Los Angeles, in 1910, Mr. Hymer was united in marriage with Miss Eva Turner, a native of Indiana, and they have two daughters, Helen and Jane. Mr. Hymer is a charter member of University Lodge No. 394, F. & A. M., of Los Angeles, also holding membership with the Scottish Rite Consistory in Los Angeles, where he also is a member of Al Malaikah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He is a member of the Yosemite Club and the Golf and Country Club of Stockton. All in all, it will be seen that in whatever field of activity Mr. Hymer has become active he has attained to an enviable success.

JOHN K. WEBER.—Among the farmer folk who have recently become residents of the Lodi vicinity of San Joaquin County is John K. Weber, who came to the county in 1920 and purchased a ten-acre vineyard three miles west of Lodi on the Sargent Road where he resides with his family. He was born in Morristown, Minn., August 26, 1881, a son of Jacob and Louise (Oehler) Weber, early farmers of the Morristown vicinity, where the father took up a homestead and engaged in farming there for the remainder of his life. The mother also spent her last days there, passing away in 1893. This worthy couple were the parents of twelve children, nine of whom are now living: Louise; Mrs. Katie Neubauer resides at Lodi; Emma, now Mrs. J. Wagner, lives at Lodi; John K. is the subject of this sketch; Mrs. Amelia Switzenberg, lives in Morristown, Minn.; Christina lives in Morristown; Mrs. Hilda Turner resides in Lodi; Mrs. Lena Rosseau lives in Morristown; Mrs.

Alma Switzenberg also resides in Morristown; Jacob, Albert and Lena are deceased.

John K. Weber attended the grammar school at Morristown, Minn., and spent twenty-seven years of his life on his father's farm, assisting his father with the farm work from the time he was large enough to guide a plow. In January, 1909, at Morristown, Minn., he was married to Miss Bertha Schmidtke, also a native of Morristown and a schoolmate of her husband. She is the daughter of Herman and Amelia (Reiske) Schmidtke, farmers in Minnesota, and the parents of nine children. After his marriage Mr. Weber leased 360 acres in the vicinity of Morristown where he farmed until 1920, when he sold his farming equipment and came to California, locating on his present ranch. His ranch consists of ten acres of producing vineyard, well irrigated. Mr. and Mrs. Weber have six children: Alvin, Edwin, Lucile, Leona, Leslie and Edna, the two youngest being twins. The family are identified with the Lutheran Church of Lodi. Mr. Weber is a Republican.

PAUL WENCEL.—A native of Hungary who has profited greatly by coming to America and adopting this as his land, is Paul Wencel, who was born in that region now known as Czecho-Slovakia, in a picturesque town called Ratzesdorf, where he first saw the light on February 24, 1871, the son of Paul and Susana (Lechner) Wencel. His father was a farmer, and in such comfortable circumstances that he was considered well-to-do, and he was over eighty years old when he died, during the first year of the World War. His mother was also over eighty years of age when she passed away in 1918. Five children were born to this worthy couple, all of whom, in turn, were given superior and most attractive home surroundings. Matt lives at Lyons, Colo.; Mrs. Susana Gschweg has remained in Hungary; Paul is the subject of our story; Rosina is also in the old country; and Ludwig is a farmer in Brighton, Colo.

Owing to local economic conditions, Paul was able to attend school only in the winter time, for during the summer he was compelled to work hard on the farm; and he continued to help his father on his large farm until he was twenty-four years of age, when he married. On February 18, 1895, at the home of the bride, in Hungary, he was joined in matrimony with Miss Christina Gschweg, a native of the same district in which Mr. Wencel was born. Her folks were also agriculturists, and she was one of a family of six children: Michael, Ludwig and Paul are still living in the Old World; and Mrs. Paulina Praschak of Acampo, and Susana, now Mrs. Weng, in Lyons, Colo.; and Christina is Mrs. Wencel. The latter enjoyed the same limited educational advantages as her husband. On marrying, Mr. and Mrs. Wencel acquired about twelve acres of land and a spacious homestead; and there they lived from 1895 to 1908. In the meantime, in 1904, Mr. Wencel crossed the ocean to America, arriving in March, and returning to Europe in September, availing himself of the opportunity to visit his brother in Colorado. In the spring of 1908 he removed with his wife and three children to the Centennial State and also brought his father and mother; but the latter eventually returned to their native country, and there ended their days.

In 1910 Mr. Wencel came to California and settled and bought his present ranch of twenty acres, about two miles to the northwest of Acampo. The ranch was set out to Tokay, Zinfandel and Berger grapes, all excellent stock, and Mr. Wencel was not long in putting in a four-inch pumping plant, with a ten-horsepower electric motor, by which he has developed an adequate supply of good water. He has had the satisfaction of seeing his five children comfortably provided for. Paul, Christina, Fred, Daniel and Esther all have attended the Houston school; and Fred attends the Lodi high school, while Paul is assisting his father on the ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Wencel have prospered greatly in California, and the best feature of their story is that all who know them are always glad to learn of their good fortune.

G. WEYAND.—A very industrious, progressive and successful vineyardist, who well deserves his prosperity, is G. Weyand, who lives south of Youngstown. He was born in Hesse-Nassau, November 20, 1874, the son of William and Caroline (Kessler) Weyand, the former a shoemaker, who lived to be eighty-six years of age, while Mrs. Weyand passed away in her fifty-second year. The worthy couple had ten children: Emma was the oldest, then came August, Henry, Sophie, Lena, Henrietta, Caroline, and the subject of our review; and after him were Ferdinand and William.

The lad attended the grammar schools of Germany, and after that he set out to make his own way in the world. He worked in the iron mines. In 1891 he came to the United States and settled at Hillsboro, Kans., and there he worked on a farm; later he clerked in a general merchandise store for a few years, and then went into business for himself in Hillsboro. After ten years of steady success there, he came out to California and settled at Lerdo, in Kern County. He rented 107 acres from the Lerdo Land Company, and the second year there he bought forty acres, renting 300 besides; but failing to get water he let his Lerdo ranch go and came to Lodi.

He first rented a twenty-acre vineyard on Kettleman Lane, but the second year he bought a part of the Fuqua ranch, northeast of Lodi, making the purchase of Mr. Lorenz. He is at present the owner of 110 acres, in two pieces, namely: fifty acres of the Fuqua ranch and sixty acres of the ranch which he purchased from Mr. F. R. Hamsher, in March, 1921, he having sold off seven and one-half acres from the fifty-seven and one-half-acre ranch to his father-in-law, Mr. B. J. Unruh, who now resides upon it. He also sold off twenty acres from the land bought from Mr. Hamsher. Mr. Weyand is at present engaged in improving and planting his sixty acres upon which he and his family are happily domiciled.

At Hillsboro, Kans., on October 14, 1900, Mr. Weyand was married to Miss Julia Unruh, a native of Hillsboro and the daughter of B. J. and Eva (Johnson) Unruh. Her father came to Kansas a young man, as one of the first settlers in that part of the country, and homesteaded a ranch. He is now seventy-six years old, and his good wife just three years younger; and they are both still living. They had eleven children: Sarah, the eldest, is in Kansas; Minnie, Peter and David died in Russia; Eva is also in Kansas; Julia is the devoted wife of our subject; Benjamin is in Kern County, California; August in Kansas; Bena in Kern County; Samuel is at Chinook, Mont.; while Jonathan is deceased, having passed away in Colorado. Mrs. Weyand's parents came from Warsaw, Russia, to Kansas, after they had been married in Russia, and Mr. Unruh had put in hard work as a grain farmer. Mrs. Weyand attended the Hillsboro schools, as Mr. Weyand had also attended the schools in Kansas. Eventually, Mr. and Mrs. Unruh came out to California, in 1920, and settled on a part of Mr. Weyand's fifty-seven and one-half acres. Six children have been born to our subject and his worthy wife: Edna, their eldest, died in February, 1920; the others are Wallace, Clarence, Rosaline, Howard, and Grace.

Mr. Weyand took out his citizenship papers in Marion County, Kansas, and later, in Kern County, he served on the local school board.

E. T. WISNER.—An alert, energetic business man of Lodi, E. T. Wisner has been engaged in the contracting and building business since 1905. He is a native of Vicksburg, Mich., where he was born on September 21, 1877, and when a small lad his family removed to Council Grove, Kans., where he was reared and educated until he was twenty years old. His first work in construction was for the Santa Fe Railroad building bridges; he then removed to Bellingham, Wash., and worked as a carpenter and millwright and in October, 1905, arrived in San Francisco, where he was employed by the C. C. Moore Company, and was sent to Tonopah, Nev., to erect a cyanide plant and stamp mill. He returned to San Francisco during the year of the great fire and helped in the rebuilding of the city, remaining there for seven years, when he came to Lodi to work on the Union high school building, and during the eleven years of his residence he has erected hundreds of houses all over the northern part of the county, making a specialty of medium priced bungalows, although he has built garages and stores.

Mr. Wisner married Miss Sarah Handley, a native of Santa Cruz County, Cal., and they are the parents of four children, Clarence, Arthur, Lucile, and Roy. The family reside on Woodbridge Avenue, where they have a three-acre Tokay vineyard of thirteen-year-old vines. Fraternally Mr. Wisner is a member of the Woodmen of the World.

WILLIAM EARL WHEELER.—Coming to Stockton with a wide experience in construction work, William Earl Wheeler has established a name for himself for his ability in this line and is now foreman for Daniels & Green, well-known building contractors of Stockton. Mr. Wheeler was born at Toledo, Ore., February 3, 1883, but has been a resident of California since his eleventh year, coming with his parents to Oakland, where he completed his education. He began work as a carpenter with the Southern Pacific Railroad and later held a clerical position with the Contra Costa Water Company. He then became associated with the Dinwiddie Construction Company of San Francisco and worked in the erection of school buildings at Oakland as foreman of construction, for a period of six years. In 1917 he became foreman of construction on the cantonment buildings at Fort Scott and Fort McDonald, and participated in the erection of 180 buildings at North Vallejo for the U. S. Government Housing Corporation, and the laying of streets there; also in the extension of the Sperry Flour Mills at South Vallejo.

Mr. Wheeler next entered the employ of the Foundation Company of San Francisco and was foreman of construction on three large cement buildings, the largest, 100 by 260 feet, being for the Standard Oil Company at Point Richmond. He has especial reason for pride in the construction of the latter as he received a fine letter from the Standard Oil Company complimenting him on the excellence of his work. In 1921 Mr. Wheeler came to Stockton to superintend the construction of the beautiful new Masonic Temple, erected by McDonald and Kahn of San Francisco, the finest building completed in Stockton for several years. Recognizing his experience and ability in heavy construction work, Daniels and Green of Stockton secured his services as foreman on the new Presbyterian Church recently completed on North El Dorado Street, a splendid piece of work which Mr. Wheeler handled to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Mr. Wheeler's marriage, which occurred in 1905, united him with Miss Viola D. McCoon, a native of Jervis, Ore., and they have become the parents of three children: Elizabeth, Donald and Robert. The family are making their home at 1125 North Ophir Street, Stockton. In fraternal life, Mr. Wheeler is a member of Fruitvale Camp No. 483, Woodmen of the World.

HANS MADSEN.—The proprietor of the leading automobile business at Ripon, Cal., Hans Madsen is a mechanical engineer of exceptional ability, having received a most thorough training in this line in his native land of Denmark, where he was born at Stryno on December 22, 1885, a son of Claus M. and Marie (Anderson) Madsen, who still make their home at Stryno, where the father is the owner and proprietor of a flour mill. They are the parents of seven children: John, a contractor and builder at Ripon, is now on a visit to his old home in Denmark; Karen is the wife of Captain Jorgensen, a sea captain of Aarhus, Denmark; Prof. Anders Madsen is principal of the high school at Rudkjobing, Denmark; Hans, of this sketch; Bodil resides at Los Angeles; Rasmus is a grain dealer and owner of a flour mill at Fyen, Denmark; Jorgen runs the mill at home.

Hans Madsen attended the schools at Stryno and at the age of fifteen he was confirmed in the Lutheran Church. While a mere boy he worked around his father's mill and early became acquainted with the principles and actual working of complicated machinery and then entered upon a four years' apprenticeship as a machinist at Wester Aaby, and it was after this that he finished his high school and technical training, the latter at the technical school at Randis, Denmark. He was twenty-five years old when he passed his final examination as mechanical engineer, a very strict examination under government supervision, requiring approximately eight hours a day for three weeks. He also successfully passed the examination for steam engineer in the Danish Navy. Shortly after this he received a stipend from the Danish government for the purpose of foreign travel to further perfect his education, so he came to the United States in 1911, visiting leading manufacturing centers from New York to San Francisco. After about a year's travel he entered the employ of the Link-Belt Company at Chicago, Ill., as an expert locomotive crane engineer, and was with them until 1917, when he came to Ripon, Cal., where his brother, John Madsen, was located; he had visited Ripon in 1912 and being favorably impressed with the surroundings he determined then to locate here. He soon started in the garage business as an automobile repair man, and in 1919-1920 his brother, John Madsen, erected the building where the Madsen Garage has since been located. Here Mr. Madsen deals in Studebaker, Overland and Willys-Knight automobiles, besides tires, tubes, and all other auto accessories. He also maintains an up-to-date repair shop, which is at present leased and operated by I. A. Goodwin, and is the leading machine shop of Ripon.

In 1916 Mr. Madsen was married at Chicago to Miss Kristine Frederickson, a native of Denmark, and they are the parents of two children, Ella and Paul Madsen. In fraternal circles Mr. Madsen is a member of Mt. Horeb Lodge, No. 58, I. O. O. F., of Ripon, and he takes a public-spirited interest in all that concerns the welfare of the community.

FRED C. MAIER.—A successful contractor of Lodi who has prospered ever since locating here in 1908, is Fred C. Maier, a native of Russia, born in that far-off land December 31, 1869. When he was fifteen years old he came to the United States, locating in South Dakota, where for the next ten years he worked out on farms. He then filed on a homestead claim of 160 acres near Eureka, S. D., farming this for seven years before he sold it, and then bought another 160 acres near by for which he paid $925. After farming this place for four years he disposed of the land for $3,200, and the farm buildings and equipment for $2,400, a very profitable transaction.

Mr. Maier then located at Ashley, S. D., where he took up the trade of carpenter, remaining there until 1908, when he came to Lodi, and he has been busily engaged since that time as a building contractor. He has done some fine work in this vicinity, erecting houses costing from $5,000 to $20,000, among them the ranch residences of John V. Bare, Mrs. Phillips, Ed Pope and the Wock Bros., the homes of G. Krowell, John Powers, Fred Frey, Gottlieb Mettler, D. D. Mettler, John Bender, and Mr. Peete in Lodi, the Pioneer Fuel & Feed Company building and the packing house for the Farmers' Fruit Exchange in Lodi, besides a number of other fruit packing houses. His gross business in 1920 was about $100,000, leading all other contractors in Lodi in building operations for that period. On coming to Lodi he bought a two-acre tract and erected a house on it which he later sold for $3,100; the family now make their home in an attractive residence at 533 East Walnut Street.

Mr. Maier's marriage, in 1902, united him with Miss Katie Presler, like himself a native of Russia, and they have a daughter, Bertha, the wife of Theodore Eichler of Lodi. The family are members of the German Baptist Church and Mr. Maier contributed generously to the building fund for the erection of their new church edifice.

PAUL MADONNA.—A prosperous dairyman of San Joaquin County is Paul Madonna, part owner of a forty-acre dairy ranch three miles southeast of Lodi on Hogan Lane. A native Californian, he was born at Half Moon Bay on February 3, 1890, a son of Paul and Theresa (Pezzon) Madonna. The father was a native of Canton Ticino, Switzerland, and in young manhood came to California and settled at Half Moon Bay, where he owned and operated a dairy ranch; later he removed to Suisun, Solano County, and rented an 1,800-acre ranch on which he maintained about 300 head of cattle. Our subject is the second oldest in a family of seven children: Fred resides in Lodi; Mary is Mrs. Cords of Woodbridge; Emesta, Mrs. P. Sargenti of Galt; Paul; Joseph; Mrs. Ida DeCarli and Mrs. Ella Anis are both deceased. The father lived to be seventy-one years old and the mother resides on the Lodi ranch. Joseph Madonna, Paul's brother, entered the service of his country as a private on June 26, 1918, and was sent to Camp Lewis; then transferred to Camp Fremont and placed in Company F of the 62nd Infantry, 8th Division. From August to October of 1918 he remained at Camp Fremont, then was sent to Camp Mills, N. Y., and later to Camp Lee, Va., where he remained until sent back to California, where he was discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco, in 1919. He was an excellent shot and qualified as a sharpshooter.

Paul Madonna attended school in Solano County until the time of his father's death, when he and his brothers conducted the dairy. In 1915 the family removed to Lodi and purchased forty acres on Hogan Lane, which is devoted to the raising of alfalfa and a dairy of thirty-five cows is maintained, being of the Holstein and Durham breeds. Mr. Madonna was married at Suisun on September 8, 1915, to Miss Mary Baccala, a native of Birds Landing, Cal., and a daughter of Charles and Olivia Baccala, and she was educated at Benicia. Her only brother, Joseph Baccala, entered the U. S. Army as a private in June of 1918, and went into training in Arizona, where he served on an ammunition train and was sent to France where he remained for one year, then was returned to the United States and was discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco. In politics, Mr. Madonna is a Republican, and fraternally is a member of the Eagles of Lodi.

G. LORENCE MANGINI.—Ten years ago G. Lorence Mangini came to California for his permanent residence and for the past three years has been identified with agricultural pursuits in San Joaquin County. He is the owner of a thirty-acre tract of land five and a half miles from Stockton on the Upper Sacramento Road, which is entirely devoted to fruit and garden truck raising. He was born in Genoa, Italy, November 30, 1894, a son of Antonio and Louisa Mangini, both natives of Italy. Antonio Mangini came to California in an early day and went to the gold mines at Jackson, and there he passed away. When G. Lorence Mangini was seventeen years of age he came to the United States alone and worked for two years in New York, when he came on to California and worked as night watchman in Oakland for a year; he then went to Crocker, Cal., and was employed in the sugar factory until his enlistment in the U. S. Army in 1918, in Company B, of the 143rd Field Artillery, which was later transferred to the 91st Division in France and was in the reserves at the St. Mihiel drive; then they took part in the Meuse-Argonne drive, where he went over the top three different times and was twice wounded; later he was with the Allies in Belgium. Mr. Mangini was No. 1 on the cannon squad. He then returned to the United States and on June 19, 1919, was honorably discharged at the Presidio as a private, first class. Returning to Stockton he worked for the Sperry Flour Company for four months; then he rented twenty acres in the Oak Park tract where he engaged in raising vegetables. When he sold his interest he bought a home at 1437 East Oak Street, Stockton, where he worked for wages until he purchased his present place in 1922. With a partner he bought thirty acres on the Upper Sacramento Road, a few miles out from Stockton, and later, when his partner retired, he assumed his share and now is the sole owner.

On May 26, 1918, in Stockton, Mr. Mangini was married to Miss Lena Garrozola, also a native of Genoa, Italy, and a daughter of Giacomo and Mary Garrozola. Mrs. Mangini was two years old when her parents removed to California and settled near Stockton in the Fair Oaks district and she received her education in the Fair Oaks grammar school. There are seven children in the family, Mrs. Mangini being the eldest; Tony, Albina, Mary, Rosie, James and Lilly, all residing in Stockton. The parents still live in the Fair Oaks district near Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Mangini had one daughter, Louise, who died in infancy. Mr. Mangini is a member of Karl Ross Post No. 16, American Legion.

MANTECA CREAM AND BUTTER COMPANY.—Among the enterprising business concerns of San Joaquin County is the Manteca Cream and Butter Company, owned by Chris Christiansen, Floyd Richards, Peter Christiansen, and Theodore Larsen, who, by their intelligent industry, have contributed largely to the development of this section. Even before they located at Manteca the four partners had long years of valuable experience in the same field, so that their subsequent success and present prosperity are not at all surprising.

The original plant was organized in 1896 by a group of local farmers, and was conducted as a kind of skimming station, to which the neighboring ranchers were accustomed to bring their milk. For about fifteen years the station was known as Cowell's Switch, and this plant was the chief source of revenue to the ranchers, who conducted dairies and sold the cream. Following this, a small butter business was gradually being developed, and after 1918, manufacturing was carried on extensively. As a result of both natural growth and the excellent management afforded by the gentlemen named above, the well-equipped plant is now turning out seven times the volume it produced in 1918. To better facilitate the work, the company has recently added new and modern machines, and will soon be compelled to enlarge again. Manteca Butter, the copyrighted trademark, is known far and wide in the central part of the state. The company employ four men and two women, and are turning out 18,000 pounds of butter per week, necessitating a fast fleet of four trucks, continually on the go, collecting milk twice a day from the ranchers.

The two Christiansen brothers were born in the village of Fjeldso, Denmark, where they received an excellent common schooling, and in the middle of their teens took up the butter-making trade. Chris Christiansen came out to America in 1912, and located at first at San Jose; but three weeks later he established himself in the creamery trade at Bakersfield, where he remained for three years, and to that town, in 1914, his brother Peter followed. Chris is married, and has a wife and two children; and he maintains a residence in Manteca. Floyd Richards was born at Rivana, Kans., and came West to California as a young man, in 1896. He has been identified with the butter trade of this county as an expert, operating also in Kern County for over seven years; and he was associated with the Christiansen brothers prior to their removing to this county. Mr. Richards also lived in San Diego County still earlier—before migrating to San Joaquin and Kern counties; he is married and lives at Manteca. Mr. Larsen is a native of Denmark, and came to America in 1890, when he was twenty-five years old. He went to Phillips, S. D., where he became prominent as an extensive stock-breeder. In 1918 he came to Manteca and he has recently associated himself with the company.

SALVADOR MAURO.—Identified with the business interests of the town of Mossdale, San Joaquin County, Salvador Mauro, in partnership with Charles Abersold, owns and operates a garage and store on the Lincoln Highway, both young men being expert machinists and in consequence doing a successful business in their line. Salvador Mauro was born in the province of Cosenza, Italy, June 25, 1893, a son of Charles and Teresa Mauro, both natives of Italy. The father, Charles Mauro, was a shoemaker in his native country who came to Lathrop, San Joaquin County, in 1894, where he followed his trade successfully and also owned profitable vegetable gardens near Lathrop. In 1901 Salvador Mauro came to America with his mother and joined the husband and father at Lathrop. When the father passed away in 1908 the vegetable gardens were sold. The mother married again, and is now Mrs. Esposito, living at Lathrop.

Salvador Mauro received his education in the schools of Lathrop and Mossdale; then learned the machinist trade in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at Tracy. In 1918 he became construction foreman on the Western Pacific Railroad, on the Stockton Division, and was occupied for eighteen months in this capacity; later Mr. Mauro was employed as an expert machinist on the Holt caterpillar tractors in the vicinity of Lathrop and Manteca. In 1918, in partnership with Charles Abersold, he opened a garage on the Lincoln Highway where they furnish gas and oils and do all kinds of automobile repairing in a most satisfactory manner and are meeting with well-deserved success.

ROSARIO MAURO.—Among the residents who fittingly represent the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County is Rosario Mauro, a successful, public-spirited citizen. He has been located on his present ranch since 1890, where he has demonstrated thorough and up-to-date methods in his agricultural enterprises, and is considered one of the most prosperous and influential men of the San Joaquin Valley. He was born in the province of Cosenza, Italy, July 15, 1869, a son of Antonio and Angelina Mauro, who lost their lives when several villages were destroyed by a volcanic eruption and earthquake in 1871. He was cared for by friends and relatives until he could make his own way, and when he had reached the age of twenty he decided to come to America, sailing from Naples on a steamer bound for New York, where he arrived in April, 1889. From New York he went to Nova Scotia and worked on the railroad; then he went to British Columbia where he had a hard time making a living. From there he drifted down the coast to Oregon and then on to California, landing in Stockton with just enough money to pay his board and room for one week. He found a friend in Joseph Corteri, a fuel dealer, and for several years Mr. Mauro worked for him. By applying himself to his work and practicing strict economy he was able to purchase his present place of twenty acres located near the Mossdale bridge. This land was unimproved and was covered with tule and much of it was swamp land, but by hard work and painstaking persistency this property has been long since transformed into a model fruit and vegetable farm, where he has continuously resided.

On March 25, 1895, at Stockton, occurred the marriage of Mr. Mauro and Miss Giovannia Bambiana, a daughter of Carlo and Maria Bambiana of Lathrop, and all natives of the province of Cosenza, Italy. They are the parents of seven children: Angelina, deceased, survived by one child, Emma; Mary, Antoinette, Antone, Ida, Matilda, and Frank, now twelve years old. In politics Mr. Mauro is a Republican, and the family are members of the Catholic Church. Besides his home place Mr. Mauro owns valuable real estate in Tracy. He has demonstrated his business qualifications through the successful control of his agricultural interests, which have made him one of the substantial farmers of his neighborhood.

ARTHUR R. McCARTY.—A widely experienced, general contractor who has made an enviable name for himself throughout San Joaquin County and even beyond its confines, is Arthur R. McCarty, of 215 North Aurora Street, Stockton. He was born at Copperopolis, in Calaveras County, Cal., on September 10, 1886, the eldest son of Ransome Thomas McCarty, a well-known pioneer who followed stockraising and general farming until his death in 1908, aged fifty-two years, and who was esteemed as a progressive man of affairs, a patriotic citizen with the kind of neighborly, helpful feeling. Mrs. McCarty is still living and resides in Stockton, aged fifty-nine years.

Arthur McCarty is the eldest of ten children, all of whom were born in the mountains of Calaveras County; he attended the district school, and then worked on his father's farm and stock ranch. Saving up his money for a business education, he at length came to Stockton and attended the Stockton Business College; and when proficient for larger responsibility he entered the Government service as a forest ranger, riding the range from 1905 to 1909, from Lake Tahoe south to the San Joaquin River.

In 1910 he located in Stockton and entered the employ of the Clark & Henery Construction Company, starting, as one says, at the bottom of the ladder; and soon he was appointed timekeeper and located in San Mateo and Sacramento. In 1914 he became field superintendent of construction, with headquarters at Lodi, and from 1914 to 1919 he had charge of all the street paving in Lodi, except on Sacramento and West Pine streets. Coming to Stockton he superintended the paving of Weber Avenue from American Street to East Street, all of Yosemite Terrace, and all of East Market Street from Fair Oaks Avenue to the city limits. He also paved the Gambetta Addition, the east part of the town north of the Copperopolis Road, and all of the Sperry Addition and Kelly Addition. All in all, he has superintended several million square feet of paving in San Joaquin County, including the largest single job under one contract, in the city of Stockton, namely, 1,300,000 square feet of the Homestead Addition, comprising all between Sutter St. and the Southern Pacific Railroad, and South and Ninth streets. In addition to the paving he laid approximately twelve miles of curbs and gutters and sidewalks on this job; and he paved all of the tracks on Weber Avenue and South San Joaquin Street for the Central California Traction Co., and the Stockton Electric Railroad Co.

On October 1, 1920, Mr. McCarty severed his connection with the Clark & Henery Construction Company and established himself as a general contractor; and not long after he was given the Linden Revetment contract near Bellota for the county, which consisted of the pouring of several thousand cubic yards of concrete along Mormon Channel for levee protection. He did 15,000 cubic yards of excavation for the National Paper Products Company and laid nearly 100,000 square feet of concrete pavement around the Paper Mill. He constructed the culverts over McDougald Canal at Anderson Street and Church Street for the city of Stockton. He laid the gravel streets in the Bewley Suburban Acres in Lodi, and approximately four miles of gravel streets for Dietrich & Leistner in the Burkett Gardens, Stockton; and in all that he has pledged himself to do, he has never failed to maintain the highest standards, regardless of profit in the work.

Mr. McCarty is a family man with five healthy children to bless him and his good wife, who was reared in Stockton, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Sollars, natives of Oakdale and Lodi. Mr. Sollars was at one time a prominent business man in Lodi. The children are: Arthur R., Jr., Aileen June, Clarke Henery, Blendon O., and Norma Katheryn.

WILLIAM H. MENZEL.—An enterprising man of business affairs is William H. Menzel, who was born in Minnesota, having first seen the light in Lac qui Parle County, on September 16, 1887, the son of August A. and Louise Menzel. His father, a native of Wisconsin, was a farmer, and he is still living in Lodi, but his mother, esteemed and beloved by all who were privileged to know her, died in San Joaquin County in 1908.

In 1906 Mr. Menzel settled in this county at Lodi. William had attended the school of their district in Minnesota; and when eighteen years old he started to work for himself. He found employment for a short time in the steam laundry, and after that he clerked in various stores in Lodi, and in 1915 he returned to the laundry business, as a driver. He worked in this capacity for five years, and then he purchased F. R. Polenske's business, making the deal for this important establishment in August, 1920. There was another partner, a Mr. Stevens; and since his death his widow has managed her husband's affairs, being the partner now with Mr. Menzel, and contributing much toward the success of the undertaking.

At Hamburg, Minn., on May 12, 1913, Mr. Menzel was married to Miss Helena Buckentin, the daughter of Fred and Louise Buckentin, pioneer farmer folks of high standing in Minnesota, in which state she was born. Three children have blessed their union: Ewald A. F., Mildred Louise, and Ellen Emma. Mr. Menzel may well be proud of what he has accomplished for Lodi in his laundry service. Having begun very modestly he has today three auto-delivery wagons covering a territory of about twenty square miles in the Lodi vicinity; and he employs from twenty to twenty-two persons the year around. He has installed strictly modern equipment throughout since he purchased the business, including presses and tumblers, and has left no stone unturned to make his laundry most sanitary and it is widely known on account of the care taken of all the fine fabrics committed to its charge.

FRANK L. MATTEONI.—A well-known figure in Stockton's automobile circles is Frank L. Matteoni, the local dealer in Pennsylvania Vacuum Cup tires. Mr. Matteoni was born at San Bernardino, Cal., October 10, 1892, the son of A. and Josie (Ferretti) Matteoni; the former a native of Lucca, Italy, died in 1911, but Mrs. Matteoni, who was born in Chicago, Ill., is still living. The father came to California when seventeen years old from his native country where he had learned the trade of tailor and he was also a fine Italian and French cook. In 1906 he came to Stockton and purchased a section of land on Victoria Island, which he farmed and later engaged in the hotel business in Stockton. He was a member of Lodi Grove of the Druids.

Mr. and Mrs. Matteoni were the parents of four children: Frank L., Fred, Edna and Silvia. The eldest of the family, Frank L. Matteoni, attended school in Los Angeles, Bakersfield and Stockton, coming here with his parents in 1906. His first employment was with the Robinson & Clark planing mill, and then with the Totten & Brandt planing mill. The next five years were spent with E. S. Berkeley in the Tourist Garage; then when America entered the war he answered the call to arms and went to Camp Lewis, where he was assigned to the aviation corps and stationed at Vancouver, Wash., until he was discharged from the service December 20, 1918. On his return to Stockton he entered business for himself in a small shop at 240 East Miner Avenue, and later embarked in a tire business with Eric Chemnitz at 242 North San Joaquin Street, but he is now the sole proprietor. He started in with a capital of $1,000 but now has a fine paying business that is steadily growing.

Mr. Matteoni was married in Stockton in 1917 to Miss Elvira Giottonini, born in Salinas, Cal., and they have a son, Frank L., Jr. Several years ago Mr. Matteoni was well known as a ball player, pitching for the Stockton All Stars, but the strain affected his heart and he was obliged to quit. His brother, Fred Matteoni, is known as one of the cleverest shortstops in this part of the country and is now with the Sacramento team. Mr. Matteoni is a member of the Elks and the Eagles, of the Chamber of Commerce and the Kiwanis Club.

EVERTS F. MILLS.—Many years have passed since the family to which this well-known citizen belongs became identified with the interests of San Joaquin County. Its members have taken an active and prominent part in the development of this section of the state, in many ways promoting its progress and advancement, and their reputation is in no way diminished in this generation, for our subject, who is numbered among the leading horticulturists of San Joaquin County, displays in a marked degree the admirable characteristics which his name implies. The birth of Everts F. Mills occurred on the Mills ranch one and one-half miles west of Lodi on March 29, 1889, his parents being Freeman B. and Carrie C. (Ellis) Mills, both natives of San Joaquin County.

The father was born on the same ranch. Freeman B. Mills is represented on another page of this work.

Everts F. Mills began his education at the Woodbridge grammar school; then entered the Lodi high school, later was a student at the Stockton high school, and after his graduation entered the University of California, where he spent two years studying mining engineering and chemistry. Since leaving the University, his attention has been taken up with land development, being associated with his father in the development of 400 acres north of the Mokelumne River near Lockeford. He is the owner of 100 acres on the Lower Sacramento Road one and one-half miles west of Acampo, sixty acres of which is in vineyard and the balance of forty acres is devoted to orchard. This ranch is piped with concrete pipe for irrigation, and the water is obtained by means of four-inch and six-inch pumps driven by ten and twenty-horsepower motors.

The marriage of Mr. Mills occurred at Stockton on September 6, 1914, and united him with Miss Regina Smallfield, a native of Stockton, and daughter of A. A. and Sadie Smallfield. She obtained her education in the Stockton schools. Her father came to Stockton in the early days and is now manager for Austin Brothers of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Mills are the parents of three children: Albert F., Frank E., and Margaret C. Mr. Mills is interested in and a director of the Rio Oso Fruit Company of Wheatland, of which his father is president, and which is developing 900 acres of the Bear River land; and is also a director in the Woodbridge Fruit Company. In politics he is a Republican; and fraternally he is a member and past master of the Woodbridge Lodge, No. 131, F. & A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Stockton Council, R. & S. M.; Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; and Ben Ali Shrine, A. A. O. N. M. S., Sacramento; and with his wife is a member of Woodbridge Chapter 118, O. E. S., of which he is Past Patron; and California Chapter, Acacia Fraternity, Berkeley. He is also a member of the Mokelumne Club and Lions Club of Lodi, and the Woodbridge Gun Club.

CHARLES MILOSLAVICH.—A popular restaurateur of Stockton, Charles Miloslavich is the owner and proprietor of a restaurant located at 328 East Weber Street. He is a native of Dalmatia, born December 18, 1885, a son of Charles and Catherine Miloslavich. The father of our subject passed away two months before the birth of his son Charles; and the mother still makes her home in Dalmatia, now aged eighty years. Nicholas Miloslavich, a brother of our subject, was a soldier in the army of Austria and was severely wounded and has been disabled, so remained in the old home with his mother; a brother, Antone, left home for America and arrived in California in 1900; he secured employment and sent money home for the passage of Charles, and in 1901 he arrived in New York and came direct to Stockton, where he joined his brother. He soon found employment in a restaurant at fifteen dollars per month, a part of which he laid by and in 1912 he had saved enough money to buy an interest in a Weber Street cafe, and within three years time he had purchased the interests of the other partner in the business, and today is the owner of what is known as Charlie's Popular Restaurant, and has built up a prosperous business.

At Stockton in 1910 Mr. Miloslavich was married to Miss Mary L. Capitanich, a daughter of N. Capitanich, a pioneer fruit and vineyard rancher of San Joaquin County; she was born in Lead City, S. D., and was five years old when her parents removed to Stockton, Cal. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Miloslavich: Charles, Jr., Kathryn and Robert. Mr. Miloslavich owns a residence in North Crest at 647 North Baker Street; also another residence at 847 West Park Street, and desirable real estate on East Street; in 1921 he sold his Yosemite Lake property to the city of Stockton. Mr. Miloslavich belongs to the Stockton Merchants' Association and the Chamber of Commerce, and fraternally is a member of the B. P. O. Elks, No. 218, the Stockton Eagles and the Red Men.

PAUL R. MINDACH.—Although he is of German birth and parentage, Paul R. Mindach is to all intents and purposes an American-born citizen taking a keen interest in everything pertaining to the locality he has selected for his permanent home. He was born about twenty miles from Berlin, Germany, on September 20, 1864, a son of Wilhelmina Mindach. His father was a shoemaker by trade in his native country. There are two sons in the family, Paul R., our subject, and Felix.

Paul R. Mindach received a very thorough grammar school education in his native land and worked for wages until he was twenty-three years old, when he left for America. The first year after his arrival in the United States he worked in Rochester, N. Y.; then came to California, settling at Red Bluff, Tehama County, and for the following three years worked for wages; he then purchased 200 acres of grain land and farmed it for some twenty years when he sold out and came to San Joaquin County, January 1, 1913, locating on his present ranch about one and a half miles from Lockeford, containing twenty acres, thirteen acres in full-bearing vineyard and orchard. Mr. Mindach has installed a good irrigation plant on his ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Mindach in San Francisco on September 19, 1899, united him with Miss Mary Raible, a native of Wittenberg, Germany. Mrs. Mindach came to California about the same year that her husband did and settled in San Francisco. They are the parents of four children: Gertrude, Martha, Oscar, and Walter, all residing at home. In politics Mr. Mindach is a Democrat, and fraternally is a member of the Woodmen of the World, joining at Corning, but demitted to the Lodi lodge. While busy in the cultivation and care of his vineyard, Mr. Mindach looks to the welfare of his community and is a supporter of all movements that have for their goal the prosperity and development of the locality.

SAMUEL G. MIX.—The efficient superintendent and part owner of the Engineering & Foundry Company of Stockton, Samuel G. Mix is one of the city's most progressive and capable business men. His advancement in the industrial world has been through his own efforts, and today he is enjoying a richly merited success, while his future is assured. He was born at Laporte, Ind., on March 20, 1873, and was reared and educated in his native city. His vacation periods were spent in a local foundry making cores and when he was sixteen years old he learned the trade of moulder in the foundry of M. Rumley Company of Laporte. His ability was soon recognized and as he became proficient he was made general foreman of the plant. For many years he followed his trade in Indiana. In 1911 he came to Stockton to take charge of the foundry department of the Holt Manufacturing Company where he remained until 1915 when the Engineering & Foundry Company was organized with Morris Davidson president, and our subject as superintendent, and he is also a stockholder in the company. Mr. Mix brought to that company expert knowledge of all kinds of foundry work and they deal in semi-steel and gray iron castings and their plant is equipped with the most modern and approved machinery; they also manufacture gas engine equipment. Mr. Mix was one of the first on the Pacific Coast to introduce scientific metal mixing, by which process it can be determined in advance what metals are to be used to make both hard and soft iron. Before this method was known it was entirely guess work whether the iron produced would be hard or soft. Like so many others who have won prominence in their particular line of work, Mr. Mix started with all his capital in brains and energy, not in money, and has progressed by self-achievement and is now one of the best informed men in his line in Central California.

The marriage of Mr. Mix united him with Miss Bertha Kelling, a native of Laporte, Ind. In fraternal circles he is a member of the Elks of Stockton.

WILLIAM MORTENSON.—Among the more recent agriculturists of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County is William Mortenson, who permanently settled in that portion of the county in 1912 and there purchased twelve acres, which is devoted to the cultivation of grapes and berries. A native of Wisconsin, he was born in Racine County on August 1, 1865, a son of James and Karen (Olsen) Mortenson, both parents natives of Denmark, and they were the parents of twelve children: Mary, Hans, Anna and William, Julius, Ella, Lena, John, Charles, Tilly, Henry and Ferdinand. When William was four years old his parents removed to Minnesota, forty miles west of Mankato, and here the father bought a quarter-section of land on the Sioux Indian reservation. He passed away at the age of eighty-four and the mother at the age of seventy-six.

William Mortenson remained at home with the family until he was of age, then took up the carpenter's trade. Later he went to Mount Angel, Ore., where he established a sawmill which had a capacity of 10,000 feet of lumber per day. He conducted this mill from 1889 until 1912, when he sold out and came to Lodi where he purchased his present twelve-acre ranch, about one mile south of Lodi on South Stockton Street. Six acres of this ranch is in vineyard and the balance is devoted to the growing of the Cory thornless blackberry; Mr. Mortenson has also built a fine residence on this ranch as well as fine farm buildings.

The marriage of Mr. Mortenson occurred at Oregon City, Ore., on February 19, 1894, and united him with Miss Margaret Jensen, a native of Copenhagen, Denmark, a daughter of Lars P. and Mary Jensen. Her father came to the United States when she was two years old, and settled in Freeborn County, Minn., and there the daughter received her education in the public schools. There were five children in the family: George, Mrs. Margaret Mortenson, Hazel, Emma, and James. Mr. and Mrs. Mortenson are the parents of three children: Alberta, the wife of James R. Voris, of Los Angeles, and the mother of three sons; Raymond and Florence. The family are members of the Seventh Day Adventist Church of Lodi.

LOUIS MORESCO.—A native son of San Joaquin County who has been actively interested in horticulture from early youth. Louis Moresco was born on the ranch where he now makes his home on March 28, 1900, a son of Antonio and Mary Moresco, both natives of Genoa, Italy. Antonio Moresco came to California from his native country while still a young man and worked for wages until he was able, by the strictest economy, to purchase a place of his own. He bought forty-five acres on the Calaveras River north of Stockton and set it out to fruit; this was about twenty-seven years ago. There are five children in the family: Louis, the eldest, and Angeline, Ralph, Claude, and Ray. The father passed away some eleven years ago, while the mother still lives on the home place. Louis Moresco attended the August district school on the Waterloo Road and is now the manager of the Moresco estate, which consists of thirty-five acres, all of which is devoted to different kinds of fruits; the ranch having a splendid irrigation system.

The marriage of Mr. Moresco occurred in Stockton on December 9, 1921, and united him with Miss Edith Sanguinetti, born in the Waterloo district of San Joaquin County, a daughter of Benjamin and Mary Sanguinetti, both natives of Italy. Mrs. Moresco was educated in the Waterloo grammar school. Mr. Moresco has erected a comfortable and commodious bungalow residence on the ranch, where they reside. In politics he is a Republican, and fraternally is affiliated with the Eagles Lodge in Stockton.

A. PIETRO MUZIO.—Among the most successful business men of Stockton is A. Pietro Muzio, whose steady advancement toward an independent fortune was made step by step. He was born on a farm in the province of Genoa, Italy, on March 8, 1869, and among other branches of his education learned the baker's trade. During 1888 he came to America, and locating in Stockton he secured work at his trade in the French and Italian Bakery on South Hunter Street, where he worked for two years; then to San Francisco where he worked for the Liguria Bakery, where he remained until 1893, when he took a trip back to his native land, and while there married Miss Anastasia Gianelli, a sister of Joe Gianelli of Stockton. Returning to Stockton he was for the next five years employed as a clerk in the grocery store of his brother-in-law, Joe Gianelli. In 1898 Mr. Muzio purchased the French and Italian Bakery on South Hunter Street, where he had first found employment upon his arrival in Stockton. For the following fourteen years he conducted his business there with success, when he moved his bakery to his new block, which he had erected at 317 East Market Street, conducting it with increasing patronage for the next six years, when he sold out and is now living retired from business cares. The real estate holdings of Mr. Muzio are so extensive that his time is well taken up in looking after them; he has erected two business blocks in Stockton; in 1910 he erected a three-story brick block 75 by 100 feet on East Market Street, adjoining the Joe Gianelli building; in 1912 he purchased the lot at 317 East Market Street, 41 by 103 feet, and upon this site he erected a modern three-story brick block, known as the Muzio Block, the first floor occupied by stores and the two upper stories devoted to the Hotel Glenn. During 1921 Mr. Muzio made another trip to Italy to visit his mother. He is a member of the Stockton Italian Club and the Druids; he has also been a member of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce for a number of years and has done his share assisting all movements for the betterment and advancement of Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Muzio are the parents of three children: John J. is married and conducts a bakery business in Sonora, Antoinette and Antonio are students at St. Mary's College in Oakland.

GIOVANNI NELLI.—A prominent member of the Italian-American residents of Stockton, Giovanni Nelli is the senior member of the men's furnishing store of Nelli & Mazza. He was born near Florence, Italy, on December 27, 1880, where he attended the public schools, and afterwards took a commercial course. Upon reaching eighteen years of age he entered the Italian army, where he served for twenty-two months; at one time being stationed at Napoli and Salerno, where he served as a clerk in the commissary department; he then went to South America as a commercial traveler throughout Brazil and other South American countries and in 1903 arrived in the United States and located in Seattle, remaining there only six months when he located in Stockton. He entered the employ of Alfred Santini as a clerk and upon receiving word that his mother was very ill in Italy, he left and went back to his old home, where he spent eight months, after which he returned to Stockton and assumed his old position. During 1910 he formed a partnership with D. Mazza and purchased the haberdashery of R. Marguetti, located at 226 South Center Street, where a fine business has been built up; the store has been enlarged, new fixtures installed, and a complete and up-to-date line of goods is carried.

The marriage of Mr. Nelli united him with Miss Adella Peirano, a native of Sonora, Tuolumne County, Cal. Mr. Nelli has made a number of valuable real estate purchases, including an apartment house on Poplar and San Joaquin streets, his new residence at 20 East Ash Street, and another fine residence on South Sutter Street. He is a prominent member of the Italian colony of Stockton and has been the secretary and treasurer of the Stockton Italian Club since its organization. In his fraternal relations he is a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Concordia Club, of which he has been secretary for ten years, and the Italian branch of the Foresters of America, serving as secretary for ten years. He is a stockholder in the Bank of Italy. In the spring of 1921 he and his wife took a trip covering five months, to his old home in Italy, visiting the principal cities of his native country.

ABRAHAM NASMAN.—Since 1907 Abraham Nasman has been identified with agriculture in San Joaquin County, having owned an orchard and vineyard previous to the purchase of his present well-cultivated vineyard located on the corner of Central Avenue and Kettleman Lane. He was born in Harnosand, Sweden, November 11, 1862, a son of Jonas and Anna Nasman. Jonas Nasman engaged in farming in his younger days and later in life became a carpenter. There were twelve children in the family, seven of whom grew up: Carrie, Peter, Jonas (died in South America of yellow fever), Erick (died in Chicago), Abraham, the subject of this sketch; Isaac (died in Sweden), and Jacob. The father lived to be seventy-two years old, the mother died when Abraham was a lad of five years. When nine years of age he became errand boy for a tailor, and remained in his native country until 1888 when, in company with his brother Erick, he came to the United States and spent the next two years working in Philadelphia, Pa., after which the brothers went to Chicago and Abraham found work in the iron works and then learned the carpenter trade and was employed in Chicago for fourteen years.

In the fall of 1893, in Chicago, Mr. Nasman was first married to Miss Leua Roberg, also a native of Sweden. She passed away in Chicago in 1895, leaving one daughter, Florence, Mrs. Schulte, residing in Lodi. In 1899 Mr. Nasman was married to Miss Augusta Lundaberg, born in Falun, Sweden, who came to Chicago in 1884, and for many years was a nurse at the Battle Creek (Mich.) Sanitarium. For a number of years Mr. Nasman traveled for John S. Metcalf & Company of Chicago. He was a foreman in the installation of grain elevator machinery for this company and spent three years on one job at Portland, Maine; he was also at Newport News, Va., and twice was sent to Montreal, Canada. In 1904 he came to San Francisco, Cal., and engaged in carpenter work and was there at the time of the great earthquake and fire. In 1907 the family removed to San Joaquin County, where he bought an eight-acre orchard three-quarters of a mile west of Woodbridge on the New Hope Road, and here they spent nine years, when he sold out and in 1916 purchased a ranch of ten acres on the Lincoln Highway three miles southwest of Lodi; this latter ranch was in vineyard and in 1920 Mr. Nasman sold it. He then purchased 2.08 acres set to vineyard and trees on the corner of Central Avenue and Kettleman Lane, where he also raises fine chickens. Mr. Nasman is a Republican in politics and with Mrs. Nasman is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church. In 1913 Mr. and Mrs. Nasman adopted an eight-year-old boy, Fritz.

RICHARD AUGUSTUS HAWLEY.—After an interesting life, many years of which were spent in political activity, Richard Augustus Hawley is now living retired from active business cares at his home at 1211 Vernal Way, Stockton, but is ever alert to the events of the day and times. A native of England, he was born in Kent County on February 17, 1837. When he was twelve years old he came to America and settled in Rochester, N. Y., where he was reared and educated; later he removed to Delevan, Wis., where he studied dentistry; later he practiced his profession in Janesville, Wis., and remained there until the beginning of the Civil War. Near the close of the war he enlisted in the 33rd Wisconsin Infantry and served one year. In 1867 he removed to Nebraska, the same year that that state was admitted to the Union. Here he took up a homestead of 160 acres, proved up on it and engaged in farming; later he bought and shipped grain with headquarters at Brownsville, Neb., and was thus engaged for ten years; he also served as justice of the peace. During this time he became an ardent advocate of prohibition; he established prohibition headquarters for the state of Nebraska in Lincoln; he was twice nominated for the governor of Nebraska on the Prohibition ticket and once for congressman in the Bryan district. He lived near and was a personal friend of William Jennings Bryan. In 1884 he was mayor of Tecumseh, Neb. He traveled throughout the state speaking for the Prohibition movement. He is proud of the fact that all the movements he worked for and advocated have been adopted and he has lived to see them all become laws, among them being prohibition, the open ballot, equal suffrage and the initiative and referendum. After the close of the Civil War he was sergeant-major at Camp Randall, Neb., and became a member of the Union League, before the Grand Army of the Republic was formed. He has been a member of G. A. R. Posts in Nebraska and is past-commander of Rawlins Post, Stockton, and at the present time is patriotic instructor. While a resident of Nebraska he took up the study of law in the State University, but did not complete the course. He removed to Stockton in 1908 and for six years engaged in the manufacture of potato chips.

The marriage of Mr. Hawley occurred in Wisconsin in 1859 and united him with Miss Elizabeth J. Warner and they are the parents of six children: Will W. is the general manager of a 52,000-acre farm in Nebraska; Mrs. Rodie H. Clark resides at Venice, Cal.; Mrs. Weltha Fawcett resides at Galt, Calif.; Frank L. is manager for the Loman, Hanford Company of Seattle; Mrs. Maude H. Porter resides at Seattle, Wash.; and Harry H. is an engineer, residing in Fresno. Mr. Hawley has been identified with the Christian Church since 1859 and he is an elder of the church in Stockton. Since 1867 he has been affiliated with the Masonic order; he is an honorary member of the Redmen; also an honorary member of the Spanish War Veterans. In 1916 Mr. Hawley was a candidate for mayor of Stockton. He has witnessed much of the development of Stockton and vicinity, and is a man of forceful personality, and his mental and moral characteristics have won him the confidence and esteem of the entire community.

CHARLES E. HENCMANN.—Among the energetic business men of Stockton Charles E. Hencmann occupies a position well to the front in commercial circles, and as cashier of the Sperry Flour Company is showing his ability and efficiency. He was born in Stockton on July 3, 1880. His father Charles was born in Texas and came to Stockton with his parents when he was one year of age. His paternal grandfather, William Hencmann, was one of the first blacksmiths in Stockton and carried on the business for many years there, being succeeded by his son Charles. The father, Charles Hencmann, married Miss Mary Fitzgerald, a native of Tuolumne County, Cal., a descendant of a pioneer family, and there are six living children in the family: Charles E.; John; Mrs. Margaret Allegretti; Mrs. Edith Nunley; Harold, and Mrs. Bernice Smith. The father, who died in 1920, was a member of the Knights of Pythias of Stockton, and the Exempt Firemen; his widow is still living.

Charles E. attended the Washington, Fremont and Jefferson schools and at the age of eighteen entered the employ of the Stockton Lumber Company as outside man and during this time attended night school where he took a course in accounting. Later when he entered the Sperry Flour Company he started in the germea department; then in the cereal department; next he entered the general office as shipping clerk, then was advanced to billing clerk, then to the grain desk and then to his present position of cashier, which he is filling with satisfaction to his employers.

Mr. Hencmann's marriage united him with Miss Della Schultze, a native of Stockton, and they are the parents of one son, Evan Charles. Fraternally Mr. Hencmann is a member of the Stockton Lodge of Red Men, in which he is past sacheem. A young man of admirable qualities, he contributes his support to general progress and improvement as well as to individual success.

JOHN W. HERZOG.—A native of the Duchy of Baden, Germany, where he was born on January 16, 1870, John W. Herzog has become, through his foresight, progressive enterprise and enviable industry, one of the successful, influential and desirable citizens of Acampo. His father, Frederick Herzog, was a shoemaker by trade, and the father of three children—our subject, Mary and Felix; he and his wife, who was Amelia Stephom before her marriage, did the best they could for the education of their small family, and John was able to attend school in Germany.

In 1888 he came to the United States and California, and settled at Franklin, in Sacramento County; and for about twelve years he worked for wages as a farm-laborer. He then leased about 125 acres near this place and ran a dairy; and removing to Arno, in Sacramento County, he conducted a dairy on about 700 acres under a lease. He farmed successfully there, using only the most modern of appliances and up-to-date methods, until he came to his present location, a portion of the old Fawcett ranch, the history of which is given in the Fawcett story, in another part of this historical work. Eventually, he bought sixty acres of the Fawcett Ranch, fourteen of which he has in alfalfa; and there he conducts a small dairy.

At Sacramento, in December, 1900, Mr. Herzog was married to Miss Cynthia Lauchert, who was born in Germany near the scene of Mr. Herzog's birth, and came to the United States with her parents when she was five years old. Her parents were August and Cynthia Lauchert, and her father was also a dairy farmer. Growing up in the Golden State, she attended the schools of Sacramento County, and so early imbibed the American spirit. Mr. Herzog, who is a Republican, and his good wife are enthusiastic Americans, their admiration of things in the Old World in no wise interfering with their appreciation of the land of their adoption. Mr. Herzog belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, being affiliated with Franklin lodge.

JOSEPH H. HILL.—A representative viticulturist of the Ripon section of San Joaquin County, among the most prosperous farming districts in California, is Joseph H. Hill, the general manager of the Hilldale Vineyard, located near Ripon. He was born at Honey Grove, Texas, July 24, 1884, a son of Jesse W. and Mary (Gunter) Hill, both natives of Tennessee, who migrated to Texas in 1880. Jesse W. Hill became an extensive land owner in Texas and was a citizen of more than ordinary degree of public spirit and personal worth. He and his good wife reared six sons and one daughter who, with the husband and father, survive Mrs. Hill, who passed away in Melrose, Texas, in 1908. After spending about fifteen years riding the range, Joseph H. Hill engaged in rice raising and met with fine success in this new industry, for four successive years. In 1908 he left his father's ranch and went to Fort Worth, Texas, and was employed in the Armour packing plant there and was soon promoted to division superintendent of the plant, where he remained until 1918, when he resigned his position to come to California.

On October 9, 1909, at Fort Worth, Texas, Mr. Hill was married to Miss Evelyn Stegall, also a native of Honey Grove, a daughter of J. Q. and Virginia (Moore) Stegall, of Scotch-Irish descent, but born and reared in Tennessee. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hill, Harold, Austin and Carl. Jesse W. Hill, the father of our subject, preceded his son to California where he purchased 171 acres of grain land; later 121 acres was sold to Chas. H. Segerstrom who is developing it to vineyard known as the Hilldale Vineyard of which Mr. Hill is the manager and where the most modern methods and equipment are used. In politics Mr. Hill is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the Ripon Mt. Horeb Lodge of Odd Fellows No. 58, and the Encampment of Modesto. He is numbered among the thoroughly practical and successful fruit-growers of San Joaquin County, and commands the uniform confidence and respect of the business community in which he makes his home and he can be counted upon to support all measures for the advancement of the Ripon district.

F. JULIUS HOLM.—The proprietor of a general merchandise store at Avena Station, San Joaquin County, F. Julius Holm is also postmaster at Ellisworth, Cal., and ticket agent for the Santa Fe Railroad Company at the same place since 1898 and he has filled all three positions creditably and efficiently. He was born at Hasle on the Island of Bornholm, Denmark, February 14, 1858, and received his education in the public schools of his native place. Early in life he began to earn his own living and entered a larger store at Rona, Denmark, as a clerk where he worked in the daytime and attended commercial school at night for five years. At the age of twenty-one years he entered the army of his country where he served for eighteen months. Returning to civilian life he became the manager of the store where he had formerly clerked, remaining until he was twenty-five years old. He then returned to Hasle to be with his parents and there established a general merchandise store which he conducted for the following eight years and during this time his parents both passed away. In 1891 Mr. Holm came to California with the intention of returning to his native land, but after a visit to his uncle, Esper H. Due, who was living near Atlanta on a large farm, he liked the country and the people and decided to make California his permanent home and so engaged in farm work near Atlanta for seven years. He received his citizenship papers in 1896. In 1898 he purchased the first building erected in Avena from W. B. Buckman where he established his store, and his business has so increased that he supplies the ranchers for a radius of six miles. Mr. Holm petitioned for a postoffice at Ellisworth and on April 1, 1901, received the appointment as postmaster from Postmaster General Smith under President McKinley, and is postmaster still. In October, 1897, the first Santa Fe train passed through Avena and this station was among the first to receive shipments of grapes and hay in ear lots; for ten years Mr. Holm conducted a shipping station for the San Joaquin and Stockton creameries. Mr. Holm is an ardent advocate of good roads and the splendid roads of the locality are, in a great measure, due to his untiring efforts.

JOHN HOLMAN.—The success achieved by John Holman has been the result entirely of his own efforts, for he came to California with nothing but courage, energy and determination as the foundation for the competency he hoped to win. A native of Illinois, he was born at Bloomington on July 4, 1873, a son of David and Anna (Langevin) Holman. His parents were both born in Alsace, coming from Millhausen on the Rhine, where the father was engaged in the cabinetmaking business. Coming to America when a young man, David Holman enlisted in the Eighth Ohio Volunteers and served throughout the Civil War. After the close of the war he settled in Illinois and engaged in farming on a quarter section of land he had purchased. There were three children in the family, John, the subject of this review, Dorothy, and Minnie.

John Holman attended the public school at Bloomington, Ill., and when he was fourteen years old went to Vandalia, Ill., and there learned the harness trade which occupied him for three years. In 1894 he decided to change his environment from the East to the West and upon his arrival in California located in Santa Cruz County where he was employed for the next twelve years.

On December 24, 1904, Mr. Holman was married to Miss Margaret Krauter, born near Strasbourg at Balbron in Alsace, a daughter of Michael and Selina Krauter, both parents natives of Alsace, where they engaged in farming. Mrs. Holman came to Santa Cruz when she was eighteen years old and there her marriage occurred. They are the parents of one son, John Jr., at home with his parents. In 1913 the family came to San Joaquin County where they purchased fifteen acres five and a half miles east of Lodi, which has recently been set to vineyard and a pumping plant has been installed. Politically he is a Republican and fraternally a member of the W. O. W. of Lodi and the Loyal Order of Moose of Lodi.

BENJAMIN F. HOWELL.—At the age of four years Benjamin F. Howell accompanied his parents to California, where his education was received in the public schools of Oakland and there took his first job when he was sixteen years old with the Great American Tea Company. He was born in Nevada, Mo., June 22, 1871, the eldest son of William J. and Narcissa (Moore) Howell, both natives of Missouri. William J. Howell was a butcher by trade, who came to California in 1875 and settled in Mono County where he conducted a wholesale and retail butcher business. He spent fourteen years in California, then returned to Nevada, Mo., where he passed away at the age of sixty-six years; his wife still lives there. Five children were born to them: Benjamin F.; Respino died in 1922; William J. resides in Pueblo, Col.; May E. is Mrs. Wm. Bailey, residing at Lees Summit, Mo.; Georgia is deceased. Benjamin F. Howell accompanied his parents to Missouri in 1889 and while there learned the butcher and the carpenter trades, both of which he followed.

On May 1, 1892, in Nevada, Mo., Mr. Howell was first married to Miss Iva Murray, born in Nevada, Mo., a daughter of Joseph Murray. Two children were born of this union, Vivian and Wanda. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Howell was married to Mrs. Emma Clyne, the widow of Charles Clyne and the daughter of J. B. Adams. She had two sons by her first marriage, Ralph and Earl Clyne. In 1913 Mr. Howell brought his family to California and located at Stockton where he has since resided and where he has followed both the butcher and carpenter trades. In 1918 the family home at 1727 South Stanislaus Avenue was purchased. In politics he is a Democrat and fraternally belongs to the Moose and Yeoman lodges of Stockton.

FRED LEVY.—A man of varied talents, Fred Levy has won success in the mining fields of Alaska and in business circles of Stockton he is well known as the proprietor of Barker's Bakery, located at 325 South San Joaquin Street. A native of England, he was born in Liverpool, August 13, 1878, and as a young man made his way to Alaska, where he spent sixteen years in mining, operating from Dawson to Fairbanks and Ophir, and also continuing his activities along that line in the Caribou country of British Columbia. His labors were rewarded with success and he is still the owner of valuable mining claims in Alaska. While in that country he invented and patented a new style of tractor with square wheels, especially adapted for soft ground, to be used in cultivating rice fields and boggy lands. This can be manufactured in any size and his brother-in-law, Charles A. Murdock, assisted Mr. Levy in perfecting the invention, which is a most practicable and valuable one.

On May 25, 1917, Mr. Levy arrived in Stockton and has since made his home in this city. He purchased the Barker Bakery, an old established concern, and has greatly improved the plant, installing the most modern equipment, and is conducting one of the leading shops of the city. He sells bread and pastry of various kinds, keeping everything about his establishment scrupulously neat and clean, and the purity and wholesomeness of his products have created for them a large demand.

Mr. Levy married Miss Frances Holman, a native of Wallace, Calaveras County, Cal., and a member of one of the pioneer families of the state. He is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants & Manufacturers Association and fraternally he is identified with the San Joaquin Lodge of Masons and the Loyal Order of Moose. Since coming to Stockton he has thoroughly identified his interests with those of the city, which has greatly benefited through his activities, and he is enthusiastic in his exploitation of its resources and attractions.

THOMAS DAVID LEWIS.—Widely and favorably known among successful contractors throughout San Joaquin County, Thomas David Lewis, now one of the oldest in his line of business, is kept steadily busy as a builder, never wanting for the next commission in up-to-date constructing and designing work. He was born in Bachellor Valley, Stanislaus County, on November 23, 1864, the son of William Lewis, a native of Ireland who came around the Horn in pioneer days and located in Stanislaus County, where he took up farming. He married Lucy Peachey, born in England, who came to California via Panama. When a boy, Thomas Lewis attended the district schools, starting to work on the home ranch when he was a lad of thirteen.

In 1883, at the age of nineteen, he came to Stockton, and the following year he became an apprentice to the carpenter's trade under the pioneer contractor,

R. R. Reibenstein. In 1896, he established himself as a contractor in building and this line of work he is still following with success. His product has always been of the highest order, and in recent years he has specialized in the installation of new storefronts in the business districts. Among notable undertakings, for example, he erected the Elks Building, the Ruhl-Goodell Block, the Branch Block, the Flat-Iron Building, and the Gummer Building, as well as the first Fair Oaks School, the Wilhoit Block, the Wonder Store, the Philson Hotel, and other edifices which have helped to enrich and to adorn the city. He has also built many fine private residences, including the homes of George F. Hudson, Harry King, A. E. Gianelli, George Dickerson, Albert Morath, and two for Carl Ortman.

Mr. Lewis married Miss Carrie Case, at Stockton, in 1885, and they have been blessed in the birth of five children. Lottie, Mrs. Vilhauer of Stockton, is the eldest; William is a clerk in the Stockton Saving & Loan Bank; Annie is the third-born; Olive is the wife of N. Stockwell, and they have one child, Thomas; and Everett is with Humphreys & Mathews. For over twenty years Mr. Lewis lived at No. 1320 South San Joaquin Street, but has just completed a new residence on the corner of Acacia and Edison streets, where he resides with his family.

Mr. Lewis is a member of Charity Lodge of Odd Fellows, Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E., and Woodmen of the World, as well as the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, and leaves no stone unturned to help boost the city which he is helping to build up.

MANUEL J. LIMA—Well-known in connection with dairy farming and stockraising in San Joaquin County, Manuel J. Lima makes his home three miles north of Manteca on the J. D. Maxey ranch, which is entirely devoted to his dairy. He was born on the Isle of Pico near the village of Santa Louise, Azores, April 6, 1861, the eldest son of M. J. and Rosa Lima, who were both natives of the same province. He received a good public school education in his native country where he remained until he was twenty years old, working on his father's farm and also on neighboring farms in the Azores. He left his native country, family and home and came to a new country, his first location in California being at Rodeo, where he worked as a farm laborer for fifteen dollars per month on the Toomey ranch. After three years of hard work, his employer recognized in him stability and perseverance and he was made foreman of the ranch where he remained for thirty-two years.

The marriage of Manuel Lima in April, 1893, united him with Miss Rosa Silveira, who was born in the Alhambra Valley, Contra Costa County, and they have had the following children: Manuel P., is at home; Mary, is Mrs. Joseph Machado of Wood Colony near Modesto and the mother of three children; Rosa, died when five years of age; Minnie; Anna, is Mrs. Frank Lorera of Manteca; Antone, Joseph, Eleanore, Gloria Josephine, Helen and Thomas, all at home. In 1913 Mr. Lima and family moved to a ranch near Modesto and for eight years conducted a dairy on the Doctor Fuller ranch successfully, and in December 1921 sold out and settled in San Joaquin County, where he purchased ninety-one acres, but has since sold forty-five acres, leaving forty-six acres in the home place, which he has developed into a fine dairy ranch; in 1921 he bought the J. D. Maxey dairy ranch of 100 acres near Manteca, and this he has developed into a model dairy ranch. In 1896, Mr. Lima made an extended visit to his old home, which occupied three months and on his return to California was accompanied by two brothers and one sister, all of whom are doing well in California. Forty-one years of his life have been spent in the Golden State, and his business career has been imbued with the spirit of enterprise. Since becoming an American citizen in 1892, Mr. Lima has voted the Republican ticket. He is a strong advocate of irrigation and his dairy ranches demonstrate what can be accomplished by industry and perseverance.

EMANUEL LOFFELBEIN.—A successful vineyardist, whose well-kept vineyard lies about four miles in an easterly direction from Lodi, is Emanuel Loffelbein, a native of South Russia who was born on July 12, 1868. His father, Augustus Loffelbein, was a native of Leipsig, Germany, and when he was two years old was taken by his parents to South Russia and was reared on a farm. He married Miss Barbara Stadel and they were the parents of ten children, namely: John, Jacob, Christ, Louisa, Mary, Christina, Margaret, Katherine, Emanuel and Gottlieb. The father became quite an extensive farmer in his native country and lived to be seventy-five years old, while the mother passed away at the age of fifty-five. The schooling of Emanuel Loffelbein consisted of a grammar school education and he selected for his trade that of a shoemaker, but only worked one year, when he determined on coming to the United States, and arriving he went to North Dakota and homesteaded a quarter-section of land near Pheasanton where he resided for seven years and then moved to Harvey and for the next nine years was engaged in a livery and dray business with his brother Gottlieb.

In May, 1895, at Pheasanton, N. D., occurred the marriage of Mr. Loffelbein and Miss Margaretta Schmierer, who was born in the same district as her husband in South Russia, and who is the daughter of John and Margaretta (Speidel) Schmierer. Her father was a farmer who had also removed from Germany to South Russia and he had six children, John of Lodi; Jacob of Victor; Margaretta, Mrs. Loffelbein; Christina, deceased; Magdalena and Selma. John Schmierer lives at Lodi, Cal., and is past eighty years of age.

In 1909, Mr. Loffelbein came to California, settling first at Ukiah, and there purchased a forty-three acre farm, but lived there only eight months when he sold out and came to Lodi. At first he rented different ranches, which he farmed. His first purchase was a place of twenty-one acres on Harney Lane, five acres of which was in vineyard and the balance in alfalfa. He then traded this place for his present place of twenty acres, most of which is in bearing vineyard. Three acres of the ranch are set to Zinfandel grapes, six acres to Black Prince, nine acres to Mission and the remaining two acres are in grounds surrounding the house. Mr. and Mrs. Loffelbein are the parents of eight children. Gottlieb resides in Victor. He entered the service of his country in July, 1918, and was sent to Fort McArthur and was in the mechanical department of the officers' training camp. He was taken ill while at the training camp, was in the hospital a number of months, and was discharged at Fort McArthur and returned to his home in Lodi. Samuel S. enlisted in August, 1918, and went to Camp Lewis in the Thirteenth Division as a private. He trained and remained at Camp Lewis until the armistice was signed and on February 1, 1919, was discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco. The other children are Walter, Elsie, Emil and Herbert; Elsa and Lillian are deceased. Mr. Loffelbein is a member of the Evangelical Association Church of Lodi.

G. B. LEONARDINI.—For almost a quarter of a century G. B. Leonardini has been a resident of San Joaquin County, Cal., and his industry has enabled him to overcome the difficulties and obstacles in his path and work his way steadily upward to the plane of affluence. He is a native of Italy, his birth occurring at Varese Ligure in the Province of Genoa, on July 3, 1884, a son of Lazaro and Angela (Delucchi) Leonardini and is next to the youngest in a family of eight children; Domingo, Peter, Mary, Katie, Louise, Antonio, G. B. of this sketch, and Anna deceased. Lazaro Leonardini was a farmer by occupation and lived to be seventy-three years old, passing away three years ago, and the mother lived to be seventy-three years old, passing away in 1921. At the age of fifteen years, in 1899, G. B. Leonardini came to the United States and joined his brother Domingo in Stockton; he worked for wages on various farms in the district for six years; then he leased twenty-six acres of the Salori ranch about eight miles northeast of Stockton on the Upper Sacramento Road where he raised fruit for ten years; he then bought twenty-six acres of bare land on Ashley Road and set it out to peaches, cherries, walnuts, plums and apricots; this ranch is located about six miles from Stockton and is in a productive and fast growing section of the county.

On September 4, 1907, in Stockton occurred the marriage of Mr. Leonardini and Miss Louise Stagnaro, a native daughter of Stockton, Cal., and a daughter of Angelo and Angela (Moresco) Stagnaro, also born in Varese Ligure. Angelo Stagnaro came to California about forty-five years ago from his birthplace in Genoa, Italy, where he was reared on a farm, and was married in Stockton and they engaged in fruit raising and now live retired in Stockton. There are three children in their family, Rachel, Mrs. Louis Foppiano; Louise, Mrs. Leonardini; and Louis, who lives in Stockton. Mrs. Leonardini was educated in the grammar schools of Stockton and grew to young womanhood there. Mr. and Mrs. Leonardini are the parents of three children; Ernest, Edna and Eunice. Mr. Leonardini belongs to the Giardiniere Lodge in Stockton, an Italian-American organization. In 1915 a comfortable residence was built on his ranch, where the family reside.

LODI ACADEMY.—Few institutions of learning in California have done more to help shape the destiny of the younger and fast-growing communities than has the Lodi Academy, whose excellent standing is due in part to the scholarly, thorough work of its principal and his associates. The Lodi Academy is a Christian institution operated by the Pacific Union Conference for the training of Christian workers, and Christian principles have first place in determining its policies. It was started in 1908 as a Normal institution, but several changes have been made in its organization in later years; however, there has been but one aim before the school from its founding, that young men and women should pass out of its doors fully equipped to do their part in carrying the Gospel to the world. The Academy is the joint property of the Northern California and the Central California Conferences of Seventh Day Adventists, and from these conferences and the state of Nevada students are solicited. The Academy offers the full work of the academic grades as well as training in musical, commercial and normal lines, and has a department covering the first eight grades of studies. The academy property is situated south of Lodi, and the school property comprises forty acres, about half of which is planted to Tokay grapes. Several acres are occupied by the buildings, consisting of a girls' dormitory, a boys' dormitory and the main school building, which contains the assembly hall and chapel; the remainder of the land is used for general garden purposes and the academy is supplied with water for domestic purposes and for irrigating from its own wells. From the fifteen-acre full-bearing vineyard is received a reasonable income each season, thus enabling the school to be partially self-supporting. The average enrollment of the school is about 420 students.

Elmer E. Farnsworth, principal of Lodi Academy, was born in Washington, N. H., June 2, 1865, and received his education in Lancaster Junior College, Lancaster, Mass., and in 1908 was ordained to the gospel ministry and the most of the past fifteen years has been spent as instructor in Union College, Collegeview, Neb.; Southwestern Junior College, Keene, Texas, and principal of Campion Academy at Loveland, Colo., and of Mt. Ellis Academy, Bozeman, Mont. In the month of September, 1922, he came to Lodi as principal of the academy and was re-elected for the following year.

Frederic T. Oakes, the present business manager of the academy, as well as the head of the commercial department, was born in Oakland Cal., and attended the Oakland grammar schools and later the Healdsburg and Lodi Adventist schools; he also attended the Heald's Business College at San Francisco. After his graduation from the Lodi Academy he became instructor and assistant business manager and for the last four years he has been the business head of the school. His teaching connection with the school has covered a period of thirteen years.

MANUEL A. LOPES.—Among the enterprising merchants of the Manteca section of San Joaquin County, Manuel A. Lopes was born at the seaport town of Horta, Azores Islands, March 14, 1891, the eldest son of Manuel A. and Mary (Pementel) Lopes, both residents of Horta, where his father is superintendent of the Ben Suda Lumber Yards.

Manuel A. Lopes attended the public schools of his native city and acquired a good business training in the lumber yards and also as a clerk in a general store. At eighteen years of age, he came to America and twenty days after his decision he landed in San Francisco. His first work was on a ranch in Contra Costa County, where he remained for eighteen months and then went to Gilroy and worked on the Julius Martin place for six months. He next went to Santa Cruz County, where he worked on ranches and also as a driver for the Wells Fargo office at Santa Cruz. Later he worked in the grain fields in Merced County, and while there decided to try the lumber business, returning to Santa Cruz County with this intention, but his plans were interrupted by the World War. On May 26, 1917, at Stockton, he enlisted for service in Company C, One Hundred Fifteenth Ammunition Train, Fortieth Division. In August, 1917, he arrived in France, where he was in active service for a year; then returned to the United States and on July 2, 1919 was honorably discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco. He then went to the home of his sister, Mrs. A. B. Regello, at Danville, Cal., where he remained until November, 1919, when he came to Manteca and opened a small store at what is known as Calla Corners. Within a month his store building and complete stock was destroyed by fire. He immediately began the erection of a fine store building 28x46 feet and on completion put in a stock of general merchandise and he has done exceptionally well. Since 1920, his brother-in-law, A. B. Regello, has been a partner in the business operating as Lopes & Regello and they are members of the San Joaquin County Merchants Association.

The marriage of Mr. Lopes occurred on December 29, 1920 and united him with Miss Marie Silva, who has lived in California since 1914, and both are members of the Catholic Church. They have one daughter Norma. Mr. Lopes is a member of the I. D. E. S., of Manteca and also the American Legion.

FLOYD R. LOVE.—When Floyd R. Love came to Stockton in 1911 he became an instructor in the shop work of the city schools; since that time he has so organized the work that it has steadily grown until he is now the head of this work in the high schools, elementary and prevocational schools of the city with a teaching force of nineteen and a student body of 100 who are learning useful trades. He was born at Freeport, Ill., April 17, 1885, a son of Alfred and Hattie (Wilcox) Love, natives of Illinois and New York, respectively. Four children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Love; Arthur Claude resides in Oakland; Floyd R. is the subject of this sketch; Mrs. H. C. Mallory resides in Stockton; and Vernon C. is associated with his father in Stockton. The father, Alfred Love, is engaged in the building and contracting business in Stockton.

Floyd R. Love began his education in the grammar school of Freeport, Ill., and when fourteen years of age was employed by the Henney Buggy Company, where he remained for four years, learning thoroughly the body building trade; then he worked three years with his father as a carpenter; meantime working his way through high school, paying fifty cents per night for his high school course; then entering the training school at De Kalb, completing the four years' course in three years, graduating with honors with the class of 1909; he then took one year post graduate work in the same institution. He next removed to Chicago where he entered the University of Chicago, taking a year's course, and then taught school on the South Side of Chicago for one year. In 1911 he removed to Stockton and for four years was instructor of manual training in the elementary schools of the city, then introduced the same line of work in the high schools; his experience and capabilities soon placed him at the head of this work, which has steadily grown until it is an important factor in the city schools.

The marriage of Mr. Love occurred in Stockton on December 21, 1912, which united him with Miss Edith Heard, born at Murphys, Cal., a daughter of John and Fitz Mary (Strike) Heard. John Heard was born in England and came to California in 1879 and engaged in mining at Murphys for thirty years; then he moved to Angels Camp and then to Stockton. He now conducts an apartment house at 529 North Monroe Street. There are three children in the family, Mabel, William and Mrs. Love. Mrs. Love was educated in the grammar school of Murphys, one year at the high school at Angels Camp and finished her high school work in Stockton; then she attended the Western Normal School. One son has been born to Mr. and Mrs. Love, Bob Ross. In politics Mr. Love is a Republican.

FLOYD A. LYON.—A foremost business man of Lodi, as well as a popular and enterprising citizen may be found in Floyd A. Lyon, a member of the firm of Lyon & Irey, dealers in sporting goods and auto accessories. A young man of much energy and native ability not only in private affairs but in matters of citizenship, and of recognized integrity of character, he enjoys a place of influence in his community and is one of the substantial and worthy citizens. He was born in Trumbull, Neb., February 12, 1895, a son of Alfred S. and Mabel (Wright) Lyon, natives of Missouri and Nebraska, respectively. There were six children in the family; Roy died at the age of twenty-five years; Floyd A., is the subject of this sketch; Claude, lives at Kennett, Cal.; Arlon E., lives in Stockton; Thelma; and Richard. In 1911 the family removed from Nebraska to Utah where the father engaged in contracting and building in Greenriver until 1915 when they came to Lodi, where he has since been engaged in contracting and building. Both parents reside in Lodi at the present time.

Floyd A. went to school in Nebraska and also in Greenriver, Emery County, Utah. When he began to make his own way in the world he traveled for one year as a professional musician through the Middle West and South; then came to Lodi and conducted the Spencer studio for a year. He then entered the employ of Fenton Wright, proprietor of the Wright Company. At the end of one year, in partnership with W. J. Robinson Jr., he purchased the business and the firm became known as Robinson & Lyon, dealers in sporting goods, automobile accessories and Kelly-Springfield tires. On January 1, 1922, the third partner, G. C. Irey, was taken into the business. The firm is now composed of two members, Messrs. Lyon and Irey.

On March 14, 1920, in Lodi, Cal., Mr. Lyon was united in marriage with Miss Ruby Holloway, a native of Kansas, and a daughter of E. A. and Nevada Holloway, who arrived, on April 16, 1909, in Ceres, Cal., where the father was engaged in viticulture, and while residing there Mrs. Lyon attended the high school; later the family removed to Lodi where they are living today. Mr. Lyon is a Democrat in politics and he and his wife are members of the Bethel Tabernacle Church in Lodi and he is the present choir director. Industry has been the basis of his advancement, and by his honorable business methods he has gained the respect and good will of his fellowmen.

R. E. LEVENTON.—A blacksmith who, after having conducted his own ranch-shop for twenty years, and thereby widening his experience, has become one of the most expert smiths in San Joaquin County, is R. E. Leventon, senior member of the firm of R. E. Leventon & Son, at 119 North Hogan Road, Manteca. He was born near Oleta, Amador County, on December 29, 1864, and as a boy enjoyed the educational facilities offered by the public schools of that locality. In his fourteenth year, he pushed out into the world, and he has since been thrown upon his own resources.

In 1879, therefore, he left Amador County to ride the Modoc County ranges, and on attaining his eightcenth year he entered the stock field, where he kept busily engaged for the next thirty-two years. He purchased a choice farm near Lookout, in Modoc County, and there married Miss Kate M. Brown, who was born in Yolo County, the daughter of H. S. Brown, a prominent citizen for many years supervisor, and now deceased. Three children blessed this union. H. L. Leventon has a wife and one child, and for the past fifteen years has served as superintendent of road construction in charge of the California State highway, from Sacramento to Merced. Inez is the wife of V. E. Brownell, and they have three children, and reside at Escalon, where they are engaged in ranching. E. M. Leventon has a wife and two children, and is a partner of our subject, and a member of the Lions Club of Manteca.

In 1911 Mr. Leventon leased his ranch to his brother, and removed to Modesto; and after conducting a livery there for three years, he came to Manteca. On August 29, 1914, he acquired the pioneer blacksmith shop of Walter Harrell, and he has steadily built up a large and well-paying business, and since 1918 has been operating in a new and larger building erected by himself and his son. About three years ago, he disposed of his ranch; and his interests are all now in this county. The enterprising firm of R. E. Leventon & Son do a general blacksmithing and horseshoeing business in all branches, make a specialty of acetylene welding, and are headquarters for the Oliver line of farm implements. Their shop is equipped with modern machinery, and their high standard precludes the possibility of any work being delivered in an unfinished state.

Mr. Leventon has always been distinguished for his progressive and public-spirited policies, and his fellow-citizens have never failed to appreciate these desirable qualities and attainments. He was foremost in the construction of the first rural telephone line in Modoc County, and this company today serves its patrons by means of over 150 miles of lines. He was elected city councilman of Manteca in April, 1920, and served as chairman of the health and safety committee having in charge the construction of the sewer farm, and in November, 1922, he was elected chairman or mayor. He has also done much in public and private charity work. He is a Democrat, and is a member of the Blue Lodge and Royal Arch Masons of Manteca and the Sciots of Modesto. He was one of the organizers of the Chamber of Commerce of Manteca and is a member of the executive board. He is deeply interested in the purchase of the Melones Reservoir Site and has given of his time and means to promote the proposition.

HARRIS BRENNER MUNGER.—The owner and proprietor of the meat market at Lockeford, Harris B. Munger is well known as one of the capable men in the business in this part of the county. He thoroughly understands all branches of the business, judging cattle for market purposes, butchering, and manufacturing by-products. He was born in Miami County, Ohio, on March 9, 1881, the son of Timothy and Charlotte (Brenner) Munger. Timothy Munger was a nurseryman, fruit grower and farmer in Ohio until 1890, when he brought his family to California, arriving on New Year's day and locating at Malaga, Fresno County, where he purchased a twenty-acre vineyard which he operated for twelve years; he then leased a ranch for two years at Fowler, Cal.; later he went to San Luis Obispo County and farmed near Arroyo Grande. The father lived to be seventy years of age and the mother sixty years.

Harris B. Munger was educated in the schools of Miami County, Ohio, and California. At the age of eighteen he began to make his own way in the world, first working in a warehouse in Santa Barbara; then worked for a time as baggageman for the P. C. R. R. at San Luis Obispo; next we find him in Watsonville, Cal., learning the blacksmith trade, but after two years he went to Fortuna, Humboldt County, and during the next two years learned the butcher business. Returning to San Luis Obispo County, he opened a butcher shop in a prospective oil field, but after three years he discontinued operations. He then went to Salida, Stanislaus County, and engaged in the butcher business for three years; then to Hanford for one year. His next venture was at Manteca, where he engaged in farming for two years, but his success was only nominal and in 1917, hearing of an opening at Lockeford, he immediately went there and purchased a partnership with Mr. Jett, where he has since remained. Mr. Munger and his partner purchased a twenty-acre tract about two miles south of Lockeford on which they built a slaughter-house and where they also keep their stock.

Mr. Munger's marriage occurred in Modesto on August 17, 1913, and united him with Miss Frances McLaughlin, a native of Kansas City, Mo., a daughter of William D. and May McLaughlin. Mr. McLaughlin was a contractor and builder in Kansas City and after coming to California engaged in house-moving and general contracting in Modesto, Cal. Mrs. Munger received her education in the grammar and high schools of Kansas City. They are the parents of one son, Harris B., Jr. In politics, Mr. Munger is a Republican, and fraternally is a member and past grand of the Odd Fellows of Lockeford; and at the present time he is junior warden of the Lodi Encampment.

HOWARD A. MYERS.—Born in Warren County, Ind., on December 27, 1872, Howard A. Myers is a son of Montgomery Myers, an Indiana farmer who lived to be eighty-five years of age. The mother, whose maiden name was Ellen McDade, passed away at the age of forty-six. Howard Myers was one of a large family, as follows: Alice, now in Idaho; George; Belle, now in Montana; Adeline, deceased; William, who is also in California; Martha; Perry, in Washington; Howard A. of this review; Emma; and Walter, also in Washington.

Howard A. Myers attended the Prairie Chapel district school in Warren County, and remained at home until he was of age. On March 7, 1894, he was married, at Boswell, Ind., to Miss Lily M. Felix, a native of that same vicinity, and the daughter of William and Emma Felix. There were five children in her parents' family: Mary, Joseph, Bell, Lily, and Charles.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Myers removed to White County, Ind., where with his brother Perry, Mr. Myers bought a quarter-section of land, which they farmed jointly for six years and then sold. Next the two brothers went to Oklahoma, and there bought a quarter-section of land, which they also sold after farming it for three years. Perry Myers then went to Washington; but Howard Myers came to California, settling for a while in Kern County, where he rented twenty acres of alfalfa, in the "Weed Patel" close to Bakersfield. Next he removed to Stockton, and entered the business field as a distributor of oil burners. He had a shop for two years on Market Street, and was also located on California Street.

In 1906 he removed to the northeastern section of San Joaquin County and traded his Stockton property for a quarter-section of land in the Brandt school district, about six miles southeast of Clements; and in 1919 he added to this ranch 640 acres of fine grain land, so that today he owns a section and a quarter. He has about eighty head of stock, and raises wheat, barley and oats. He also raises about 150 turkeys each season. In addition to the ranch which he owns, he also leases land, farming in all about 2,200 acres. He leases the Connelly and Jahant ranches north of Woodbridge, and also the Thompson Folger ranch of about 900 acres, and he has about 400 acres three miles to the south of his home. He uses two Yuba tractors, and has a full modern equipment of grain-farming machinery for operation on an extensive scale.

Seven children were granted to Mr. and Mrs. Myers: Minnie, Mrs. Kepple, who died at the age of twenty-two years, together with her infant child; Charles, who is at home, farming with his father; Perry, ranching for himself; Elwood, also at home, associated with his father; Mary, now Mrs. Peterson; and Elsie and Richard, still at home. Politically, Mr. Myers is a Republican.

ANGELO VICTOR LAGORIO.—Among the younger generation of horticulturists of San Joaquin County is Angelo Victor Lagorio, a native son of the county, having been born on his father's ranch on the Upper Sacramento Road, November 1, 1894. His parents, Louis and Theresa (Rossi) Lagorio, were born in Rippia, province of Genoa, Italy, came to San Joaquin County, Cal., many years ago and settled on a ranch of twenty-five acres located on the Upper Sacramento Road. At the time the father purchased this ranch it was bare land and he developed it to a splendid orchard. He did not live to enjoy the fruits of his labor, for he passed away in 1915. The mother had died in 1913. They were the parents of six children: Della, Mrs. Zepenitti, residing in Stockton; Angelo Victor, the subject of this sketch; Lenora, Mrs. Piccardo, residing in Stockton; Louis, Amerigo and Raymond. Angelo was educated in the public school of Greenwood district and assisted his father on the ranch until his death. After his father's death in 1915, he took the management of the ranch and has been ably assisted by his three younger brothers. They have since added to their holdings; they first purchased fourteen acres in 1916 in the Morado district, eight miles from Stockton, which they planted to orchard, now all in bearing fruit trees. In 1920 the brothers bought sixty-five acres near Linden, which they also set to orchard. Louis and Amerigo Lagorio live on this latter ranch and are looking after its cultivation and development in a thorough and systematic manner. Raymond and our subject live on the home place. Thus they own 104 acres, all devoted to orchard and vineyard.

On December 11, 1917, in Stockton, Mr. Lagorio was married to Miss Celia Queirolo, born in San Francisco, a daughter of Andrew and Mary (Pesonia) Queirolo. Andrew Queirolo was born at Jackson, Cal., where his father, Giovanni Queirolo, was a pio-ner in the mines. Grandfather Queirolo returned to Italy with his family and recently passed away at the age of ninety years. When Andrew Queirolo reached young manhood he returned to California and engaged in business in San Francisco until he later removed to Stockton. Mrs. Lagorio was only seven years old when her mother passed away. There are four children in the family: Josephine, Mrs. Valvano, residing in Stockton, Joseph, Mrs. Lagorio and William. Mrs. Lagorio received her education in the Fair Oaks and Fremont grammar schools and then took a course in Heald's Business College in Stockton, and after graduation worked as a stenographer for some time before she was married. Two children were born to this couple, La Verne and Angelo Victor, Jr. Mr. Lagorio entered the U. S. Army on July 1, 1918, and was sent to Los Angeles, where he entered the Manual Arts high school for a mechanical course; after four months he was sent to Fort McArthur at San Pedro; he was discharged at Fort McArthur in December, 1918. He is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7 of the N. S. G. W. and in politics is a Republican.

PIERRE LAHAIE.—As a farmer, dairyman and vineyardist, Pierre Lahaie has been very successful and now leases a ranch on the Harshner Road. He was born at Botiscon, Canada, on April 25, 1866, a son of Gaseb and Margaret (La Favre) Lahaie. There were nine children in the family, namely: Henry, Anna, Alvin, Caroline, Laura, Albert, Pierre, our subject, Merle, and Isaac. The father was a farmer in Canada and when Pierre, our subject, was two years old the family moved to the Georgian Bay district in Ontario and lived there for nine years, when they removed to Bottineau County, N. D., and there the father bought a half-section of land. He lived to be sixty-eight years old and the mother was eighty-two, when she passed away.

Pierre Lahaie received his education in the grammar school and in vacation time helped his father on the home farm, where he remained until he was twenty-seven years old. He was married at Willow City, N. D., on November 19, 1890, to Miss Emelie Marchand, a native of the same vicinity in Canada where her husband was born, a daughter of Joseph and Elsie (Carrigan) Marchand, Mrs. Lahaie being the seventh in a family of nine children, as follows: Joseph, Josephine, Zepherin, Marie, Artimese, Armidos, Emelie, Antoinette, and Arthur. When Mrs. Lahaie was thirteen years old her family removed to Bottineau County, N. D., where her father homesteaded a half section of land. Her mother passed away at the age of thirty-nine and the father is still living at the age of eighty-four.

Shortly after his marriage, Mr. Lahaie removed to Duluth, Minn., where he worked for two years; he then returned to North Dakota, where he continued as a wage earner for a couple of years, then purchased a half-section of land and devoted his attention to raising grain and cattle for nine years; then he removed to Willow City and resided there for one year, when he came to Lodi, in 1904, where he purchased a fourteen acre ranch in the Pearly tract north of Woodbridge. He set it to vineyard and being unable to make of it a paying proposition, he turned it back to the original owners. He then rented 184 acres in the Tules and ran a dairy of twenty-five cows for three years; he then went northeast of Lodi on the Dry Creek Road one-half mile east of the Elliott school house and leased 480 acres of land on which he ran a dairy of seventy cows for three years; he then returned to the country north of Woodbridge on the Lincoln Highway, known as the Benedict ranch, consisting of 380 acres, part in vineyard, and remained there for one year; then he leased 180 acres eight miles west of Lodi and for the following two years conducted a dairy and alfalfa ranch; he then moved to the Neil McClintock ranch of eighty acres and rented it for three years. On January 4, 1921, he purchased forty-four acres of land, which was in vineyard. This property he sold in May, 1922, and came back to the dairy ranch on the Harshner Road. Mr. and Mrs. Lahaie are the parents of ten children: Ernestine, Mrs. Rossini is deceased. Her husband also passed away in 1918 and they left one son, Walter, three years old, who lives with his grandfather. Eugene Lahaie married Hilda Perrin and they have two children, Genevieve and Wilbert. He enlisted in the U. S. Army, June, 1918, and was sent to San Diego, where he was assigned to an ammunition train and in February, 1919, was discharged as a private. Arthur Lahaie enlisted, at the age of nineteen, on March 20, 1917, and was sent to Camp Kearney in the field artillery; later he was transferred to the 135th Aero Squadron as mechanic and was sent to France where he became an officer's chauffeur and a messenger, besides serving as an interpreter, for being of French descent he understands and speaks the French language. He was in the front line trenches in the St. Mihiel drive and the Argonne offensive. Upon his return to the United States he served the balance of his enlistment at Fort Sill and there he was discharged in May, 1919. He has recently reenlisted and is now serving in the aviation department in the Philippines. Leo Lahaie married Miss Dorothy Bradley and has one daughter, Mary. The others are Pierre; Aldea, Mrs. Samuel Schenkenberger; Evelyn, Romeo, Edward and Velma. In politics Mr. Lahaie is a Democrat. He is a member of the Catholic Church.

EDWARD W. LATTA.—A resident of San Joaquin County, Cal., since 1911, Edward W. Latta was associated with the Lockeford Mercantile Company until 1918, when he sold his interest and established a route for the Lodi Steam Laundry, which he has successfully built up and which has been a lucrative occupation. A native of Michigan, he was born in Grand Rapids on September 29, 1876, the son of Charles and Etta (Mott) Latta, farmers in that state. Edward W. is the eldest of a family of seven children, the others being Edith, Roy, Herbert, Fred, Bertha, and Harry. Charles Latta, the father, passed away at the age of fifty-four, while the mother only reached the age of forty-six.

Edward W. Latta received a grammar school education and at the age of fifteen was thrown on his own resources, finding employment with Edgar Holsenberg, a groceryman of Grand Rapids, where he worked for eight years. At the end of eight years he purchased the business and continued for three years longer when he sold out and came to California, settling at Lockeford. He worked in a grocery store for two years, then with S. S. Strobridge and Mr. Athearn bought out the business and formed the Lockeford Mercantile Company which continued for five years, then the business was sold. In 1917 he established a route for the Lodi Steam Laundry which covered all the territory outside of Lodi; recently he has sold the portion of the route lying southeast of Lodi.

On September 5, 1908, at Grand Rapids, Mich., Mr. Latta was married to Miss Jetta Holsenberg, born at Grand Rapids, a daughter of Edgar and Rose Holsenberg. Mrs. Latta received her education in the schools of Grand Rapids and was the second in a family of three girls; Lila, Jetta, and Ida. Mr. and Mrs. Latta are the parents of one child, Virginia Rose. Politically, Mr. Latta is a Republican and fraternally belongs to the Odd Fellows of Lockeford.

KARL NEUHARTH.—Nineteen years ago, Karl Neuharth made his first trip to California and while here visited the Lodi section of San Joaquin County, for one year. He then returned to his home in South Dakota and farmed there for two years, but the lure of the Golden State, with her mild winter climate, wonderful fruits and vegetables proved too much for him, so in 1907 he came back to make San Joaquin County his permanent home. He was born near Menno, S. D., on March 2, 1876, a son of Phillip and Katherine (Fink) Neuharth, and is the third-born of thirteen children: Jacob; Elizabeth, Mrs. Geo. Hauck; Karl, our subject; Barbara, Mrs. Fred Gutmiller; Katherine, Mrs. Emanuel Handel, of Lodi; Christian; Amelia, Mrs. John Handel; Louisa, Mrs. W. Meher; Christina, Mrs. David Schorzman; Rosina, Mrs. Geo. Serr; Bertha, Mrs. A. New; Phillip; and Pauline, Mrs. Gus Maas, of Lodi. The father was a farmer in his native country of South Russia and on arriving in America settled at Menno, S. D., where he filed a homestead and timber claim for a half-section of land. The parents still reside at Menno, S. D.

Karl Neuharth received a grammar school education in South Dakota and remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-seven years old, when he bought a quarter-section of land. This land, however, proved to be poor soil and in 1903 Mr. Neuharth sold it and came to California, where he remained for one year, when he went back to South Dakota and engaged in farming for the next two years. In 1907 he returned to California to make this his permanent home and bought forty acres of land on Kettleman Lane; later he traded this for a ten-acre vineyard two miles east of Lodi on the Lockeford Road.

The marriage of Mr. Neuharth occurred at Grafton, Neb., on November 14, 1915, and united him with Miss Rosina Eckerman, a native of that state and a daughter of Peter and Margaret Eckerman, the parents of twelve children: Peter, Jacob, Henry, John, Fred, Andrew, Frederick, Regina, Mrs. John Schmidt, of Lodi; Caroline, Emma, Mrs. Rosina Neuharth, and Christina. Mrs. Neuharth received her education in the grammar school of Grafton, Neb. Her mother passed away in 1904, but her father is still living. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Neuharth removed to their ten-acre ranch, where Mr. Neuharth had built a residence, and remained there for three years, when he sold it and purchased a thirty-acre ranch on Almond Avenue, a mile south of Lodi. Of this, eighteen acres is in vineyard and the balance in an orchard of cherries, apricots and several acres in alfalfa. In the fall of 1921, in partnership with his brother-in-law, E. Handel, Mr. Neuharth bought a thirty-five acre vineyard on the Lockeford-Lodi Road two miles east of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Neuharth are the parents of four children: Vera, Ruben, Emma, and Ella; and they are members of the German Reformed Church of Lodi. In politics Mr. Neuharth is a Republican.

JOHN NAZRO.—A wide-awake young business man, John Nazro is the efficient secretary and designer of the Engineering & Foundry Company of Stockton, and has done much for the city's industrial and business development, his labors proving of direct benefit in advancing the prosperity of the state. He was born in Chicago, Ill., October 26, 1890, but as his father was a mining engineer in Colorado, his parents removed to Denver and our subject became a messenger boy and later stock boy with the Denver Dry Goods Company. He attended the Denver high school and there took mechanical drawing and shop work in connection with his other studies. In 1908 the family removed to California and located at San Jose, where John entered the San Jose high school, from which he was graduated; then attended Stanford University for two years, taking the mechanical engineering course. In company with his father, he went to Tuolumne County and followed mining engineering during 1910 and 1911; he was engineer in the construction of the concrete dam for the West Side Lumber Company. On November 1, 1911, he returned to Stockton and became draftsman for the Aurora Engine Company; then he was with the Stockton Iron Works in the same capacity. Removing to Los Angeles he became salesman for the Campbell Real Estate Company, selling orange land in San Bernardino County. Returning to Stockton he was employed as draftsman by the Holt Manufacturing Company and in 1915 entered the employ of the Engineering & Foundry Company, and assisted in designing a motor for the Harris Manufacturing Company. Later he traveled as a salesman for the same company. He then became designer and engineer for the Gieger Iron Works; then was solicited to return to the Engineering & Foundry Company as secretary and designer, which position he now holds to the entire satisfaction of his company.

The marriage of Mr. Nazro occurred at Stockton and united him with Miss Lois Stamper, a native of Stockton whose parents were pioneers, and they are the parents of two children: Nancy Louise and John Jr. Fraternaly Mr. Nazro is a member of the Stockton Elks, No. 218. He enjoys the confidence of the business community, and the high regard of his associates in social life.

CAESAR MONTANELLI.—A vigorous, enterprising and very successful rancher who has demonstrated his preference for the most progressive methods in twentieth century agriculture, is Caesar Montanelli, an Italian-American who was born near Chiavari, Italy, in the Province of Genoa, on August 24, 1873, the son of Ferdinando and Anna (Compiano) Montanelli, the former an orchardist of repute in his native country. These worthy parents did the best they could for our subject, who commenced his training in the schools of Comanche and continued his studies in San Joaquin County. In 1875, his father moved with his family to Comanche, Cal., and there started in truck gardening; and in time they had four children: Caesar, our subject; Louis; Amadeo, who served in the United States forces during the World War; Dosuline. The two youngest were born in California. The parents are now living in Stockton, both enjoying the best of health.

After a stay of five years at Comanche, the Montanellis moved to a ranch nine miles out on the Copperopolis Road, where they lived until they retired, and when Caesar was twenty-one years old, he commenced to operate for himself. He first bought five acres, nine miles out on the Copperopolis Road, adjoining his father, which he turned into a truck garden; and after twelve years here he disposed of the place. He then purchased eighty acres on the Eight-mile Road, at the corner of Jack Tone Road, all at that time open land; and later he sold off forty acres to Mr. Martin, after he had farmed the whole for two years. Still later, he split up the forty acres, retaining just half of it for himself; and on this choice tract he built a home, setting out around it an orchard of eleven acres of almonds and five acres to cherries and four acres to peaches and apricots, all well irrigated. The original eighty acres were a part of the old McDonald place.

On February 25, 1908, Mr. Montanelli was married to Miss Genevieve Costa, a native of San Francisco and the daughter of Peter and Juana (Silva) Costa, one of five children. Her mother died at the age of twenty-eight years, and her father lived to be sixty-one years old. Mr. and Mrs. Montanelli have a family of five children; and they bear the names of Joseph, Louise, Lena, Emma, and Lawrence. Mr. Montanelli is a Republican, and a loyal American, and he takes a keen interest in national as well as local questions of the day.

OTTO NEUBAUER.—A well known citizen and the owner of a productive ten-acre vineyard on Harney Lane, in the Lodi section, is Otto Neubauer, and his place is visible evidence of his enterprise and thrift. He was born in Pommern, Germany, on January 19, 1866, a son of William and Henrietta (Limberg) Neubauer, farmers of their native land. They were the parents of seven children; Otto, the subject of this sketch, being the third in order of birth.

Otto attended the excellent schools of his native land and learned the trade of blacksmith there; and on July 7, 1888, landed on American soil and went direct to Faribault, Minn., where he found employment with Henry Reinege for one year on his farm. He then moved to Superior, Wis., and worked as blacksmith in the timber camps for H. M. Stocking; later he was lumberjack for seven years; then became a cook in the camps near Superior and finally opened a restaurant there, but sold out and went back to Faribault, where he conducted a hotel and restaurant for nearly three years, when he returned to Superior and ran a restaurant for one year. He then sold his restaurant in Superior and came to California and opened a restaurant at Lodi, which he continued for four and a half years, when he sold out and moved on a thirty-acre ranch just off of Cherokee Lane, two and half miles southeast of Lodi, which he had purchased upon coming here. This place was a part of the old Ferdun ranch and was devoted to grapes, which he set out, and to alfalfa growing. He lived on this place for eleven years and then sold it and purchased the ranch of ten acres on Harney Lane where he now resides. He built a new, modern house and installed a pumping plant for irrigation with a four-inch pump driven by a ten horse-power motor.

The marriage of Mr. Neubauer occurred at Morris-town, Minn., on June 26, 1899, and united him with Miss Katie Weber, a daughter of Jacob Weber, a farmer of Morristown. Mrs. Neubauer was reared and educated in Morristown. Mr. and Mrs. Neubauer have had four children; Otto and Walter, died in infancy in Wisconsin; Mildred, died in her 13th year; Harold, died at four years. He is a Republican in politics and he and his wife are members of the German Lutheran Church of Lodi.

MANUEL T. NUNES.—An experienced dairy rancher, who has been on the Harris ranch, one mile east of Clements, since November 1919, is Manuel T. Nunes, born at St. George, in the Azores, on May 15, 1888, the son of Antone and Mary (Santos) Nunes. The father was a shoemaker by trade, who died at his native home at the age of sixty-six years. There were six children in the family: Joseph, Mary, Carry, Joanna, deceased in 1920, Manuel T., and Antone, the youngest, who was drowned.

After attending the schools in his native district, at the age of sixteen, Manuel T. Nunes came to America. Soon arriving in California, he settled for a while at Sunol, in Alameda County, where he attended school and worked for a living in vacation time. Having finished his studies, he went to San Mateo, and for three years worked for Frank Brewer on a dairy. Then, taking Antone Silva as a partner, he established himself in the dairy business, near San Mateo, and for two years they operated with forty head of milch cows. When they sold their business, Mr. Nunes helped to organize a creamery, and there, near San Mateo, he worked for a year. He then came into San Joaquin County, and together with John Home and Joseph Falco, leased the Woods ranch of 450 acres on Roberts Island. They had a dairy of 200 cows, and continued together for four years. Then, with Joseph Silva, Mr. Freitas and Mr. Serpa, he purchased 300 acres near Manteca, where they had 300 head of milch cows, but after one year he sold his share to the other partners, and took a mortgage in return. He then went to work for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, at the Alameda Pier, in Oakland, where he remained for a year. During this time, additional mortgages on the ranch had been incurred, and the dairy farm went to the creditors in such a manner that Mr. Nunes lost $11,000. With a partner, named Caton, Mr. Nunes bought back about 100 head of the cattle, and moved the herd to French Camp, where for a year and a half they leased the E. W. Borges place and conducted a dairy. Then they sold out and Mr. Nunes moved to the Ed Harris ranch, one mile to the east of Clements, and since then he has engaged in dairying in partnership with Ed Harris, of Stockton, who owns the ranch. The ranch consists of 150 acres of fine farm land, ninety acres of which is in alfalfa. They have 150 head of stock, seventy head of which are Holstein milch cows.

Mr. Nunes was married at Oakland, on December 8, 1912, to Miss Mary Freitas, a native of Flores, in the Azores Islands, and the daughter of Antone and Mary Freitas. Four children have blessed their union: Josephine, Zelma, Manuel and Marie. Mrs. Nunes' mother died sixteen years ago in Portugal, but her father is still living. She was one of six children: Antone, Mary, Veseusa, John, Joseph and Theresa, the last three now deceased. Mr. Nunes is a Democrat. He is a member of the two Portuguese lodges; the I. D. E. S., of Stockton, and the U. P. E. C., of Oakland; for the former he has served as secretary.

JOSE OYARBIDE.—A representative of the sheep growing industry who is now living retired from active business cares, Jose Oyarbide was for more than a third of a century engaged in that business and the success he attained was due to his good management and hard work. He came to Stockton from his native country with nothing but a willingness to work and a determination to succeed, which has never been lost sight of during the forty-three years of his residence in California. He was born in Basses-Pyrenees, in Southern France, July 1, 1850. His parents, Sebastian and Antoinette Oyarbide, were farmers and Jose spent his childhood on the farm and attended the local schools. He assisted his father on the farm until twenty-four years of age, when he went to sea, which he followed for a livelihood. Arriving in California from his native land in 1880, his first job was herding sheep for Messrs. Domingo and Peter Gastarubide, prominent sheepmen of Los Banos. He worked for them six years and saved his money and invested in a band of sheep of his own and began raising sheep near Los Banos, beginning with about 1000 head. He rented grazing land and at one time had as many as 2500 head of sheep, making his home in Los Banos until 1907, when he removed to Stockton, continuing his business until 1915, when he retired. In 1920 he purchased a residence at 615 North Commerce Street. He also owns a half interest in the Royal Hotel at Sonora and South Hunter streets, Stockton.

On June 6, 1892, Mr. Oyarbide was married in San Francisco to Miss Marion Oronos, born near Bigorre, France, and who came to California in 1890. One daughter has blessed this union, Mary Margaret, born in San Francisco. She attended the grammar and high schools in Stockton, then entered Heald's Business College, from which she was graduated in 1916. For the past six years she has been bookkeeper for the Monarch Foundry Company in Stockton. She is a member of the Y. L. I. in Stockton. Mr. Oyarbide has shown capability as a business man and is a prominent and influential member of the French Colony in Stockton. He has never regretted his decision to leave his native land for the Golden West, where he has made good and now enjoys the comforts gained by a well-spent life.

BYRON A. NIXON.—In these days of building progress and development, and with the increasing demand for lumber and building materials, it is a great satisfaction to do business with a firm that believes in keeping up-to-date along building lines. The Nixon Lumber Company, owned and operated by Byron A. and E. A. Nixon, is such an institution, which has been an invaluable factor in aiding building and industrial developments in Lockeford and vicinity. He was born in Van Buren County, Mich., on May 25, 1857, a son of Amos and Lucy Ann (Stocking) Nixon, both descendants of old Michigan families.

Byron A. Nixon attended the grammar schools of Van Buren County and when eighteen years of age began to make his own way in the world. His father being a farmer, he learned considerable about the agricultural business, but farming did not particularly appeal to him. From 1877 to 1878 he was in Montana and upon his return to Michigan settled in Antrim County and built the first store building in Bellaire, the county seat of Antrim County; later he engaged in the merchandise business in Bellaire, which occupied him for twelve years, when he sold out and went to Hillsdale, Mich., where he was employed by the Campbell Lumber Company, remaining with them for twelve years. Deciding to cast his lot in California, he spent one year in Santa Cruz in the real estate business; then went to Trinity County and spent a short time in the quartz mines of that county. After a short stay in Chico, Butte County, with the Diamond Match Company, he was transferred to Woodland, Cal., by the Diamond Match Company, where he remained two years; and then was with Stevens Construction Company four years. Removing to Stockton in 1914, he began work for the Hatch Lumber Company, this position occupying a period of nearly five years. In the month of September, 1918, Mr. Nixon came to Lockeford and purchased the business of the Lockeford Lumber Company, which he has built up to its present proportions. Besides handling all kinds of rough and finished lumber, he carries a full line of coal and cement.

Mr. Nixon's marriage occurred at Unadilla, Livingston County, Mich., on December 7, 1886, and united him with Miss Ethel Adora May, a native of that state and a daughter of W. J. and Lydia (Durkee) May, her father a blacksmith and farmer by occupation. Mrs. Nixon received her education in the public schools of Michigan and later was graduated from the Mancelona Normal School, after which she taught for four years previous to her marriage to Mr. Nixon. They are the parents of two children: Mrs. A. H. Meier, of Chico, has three children; Burgess A. also resides at Chico and is with the Sacramento Northern Electric Company. Politically, Mr. Nixon is a Republican and fraternally belongs to the Masons of Hillsdale, Mich., and Scottish Rite Masons of Lansing, Mich. Mr. Nixon's operations are of a constructive nature and he has given freely of his time and means toward the development of his locality.

JOHN OLSON.—Prominent among those Californians who have not only been able to retire with a comfortable competence, but have withdrawn from active participation in the affairs of life with the assurance of good will from all to whom they are known, may be mentioned John Olson, of 229 North Grant Street, Stockton. He was born in Colsum, Sweden, on the Baltic Sea, on June 17, 1838, and as a boy followed the sea, becoming a ship-carpenter. He left home when he was eighteen years of age, and sailed to England; and from there he went out to Australia as second carpenter, in that way following his father, who had mastered the same trade.

In Australia he ran away from his ship, and not long after joined a vessel bound for San Francisco, arriving at the Golden Gate in 1858. From the Bay City he pushed on inland to Greenwood Valley, Placer County, where he took up a mining claim, with a friend, and was fortunate in making money; and later he went into Placer County, and there bought a claim for $1,400 at Todd's Valley, on the American River. He worked the same, and soon took out enough to pay for it. Then he sold out and went to Washoe, Nev., during the excitement in the Comstock Lode. He took up a claim and also mined at Ophir Mill and Washoe Valley.

In 1865, he returned to the East on a trip and while there married, in that year, Miss Charlotte Flower, a native of Ohio. He resumed carpenter work in New-castle, Penn., and erected two blocks. These he sold, and came back to California. He went to Dutch Flat, in Placer County, and worked in the mines as a carpenter; and then he went on to Gold Run, in Placer County, where he took up hydraulic mining and built a sluiceway. He went to Alta, in the same county, and helped to build a sawmill; and in Oakland he worked again at his trade, removing in 1878 to Lodi, where he worked for Comstock & Clapp, in building houses. He was for three years in Red Bluff and built a flour mill.

Coming to Stockton, he bought ten acres of land in the Parker Addition, south of Stockton, and this he farmed for about twenty years, raising alfalfa, grapes, berries, etc. He paid seventy-five dollars per acre for five acres, and eighty dollars per acre for the balance; and he sold this property, some years ago, at a fair profit. While he worked in Stockton, he was in the employ of Jerry Robinson, the contractor, and he helped to erect many notable buildings, including the Yosemite Theater.

Mr. Olson has four daughters, Mrs. Maggie Lenfister, Mrs. Gran Sharck, Mrs. Mabel Matthews, and Mrs. Bessie Erickson, and there are nine grandchildren and five great-grandchildren. Mr. and Mrs. Olson also own a home on Clay Street, and they attend the Central Methodist Church.

EDWARD WITTMEIER.—Typical of the opportunities which San Joaquin County offers to men of enterprise and industry is the story of success won by Edward Wittmeier, the owner of a forty-acre ranch two miles south of Lockeford. He was born on his father's farm in the southern part of South Dakota, on August 21, 1899, a son of Simon and Christina Wittmeier. The father was born in Germany and came to America when a young man, and settled first in North Dakota, where he homesteaded a half section of land. In 1893 he sold this property and removed to South Dakota, locating in the southern part, where he bought a half section of land, residing there until his removal to California. There were ten children in the family, namely, Samuel, Fred, John, Rosie, Jacob, Henry, who lost his life in the late war in France, Christina, Edward, the subject of this sketch, Martha, and Pauline. In 1902 the father brought his family to California and settled on a half-section of land two miles south of the town of Lockeford, and engaged in grain and stock-raising with his sons until he retired and moved to the city of Lodi, where he now resides. Sam Wittmeier, the oldest son, later went to Visalia, Tulare County, and became foreman on the Kirk Company's 10,000-acre ranch, and for thirteen years retained that position. While in Visalia, he was married in 1909 to Miss Mabel Gilbert, a native of California, born in Delano, Kern County, a daughter of Dixon and Della Gilbert. In 1917, Sam Wittmeier returned to Lockeford with his family, and now farms forty acres of the old home place.

Edward Wittmeier was educated in the Grant district school, after which he devoted his entire time to helping his father on the ranch. On June 9, 1920, at Stockton, he was married to Miss Edna Ray, born two miles north of Lodi, San Joaquin County, on the Krump place, a daughter of David and Mary (Tomich) Ray. Her father, David Ray, was born on a ranch ten miles west of Lodi and comes from the old pioneer family of Rays who settled in section thirteen of Union Township. Mrs. Wittmeier was educated in the Houston and Ray grammar schools and finished with a course in the Lodi high school. They are the parents of one daughter, Lois Marie. Mr. Wittmeier, in partnership with his brothers, owns a thirty-foot header and threshing outfit, which they run each fall, cutting and harvesting grain for other farmers throughout the county. In national politics Mr. Wittmeier is a Republican, and is proud that he is a resident of California, and especially of San Joaquin County.

DOMINGO YROZ.—A successful San Joaquin County sheepman, Domingo Yroz is a native of the Basses-Pyrenees, where he was born at Lasa, on December 9, 1873, the son of John and Jennie (Ricart) Yroz, a worthy couple still living in advanced years at their comfortable and picturesque mountain home. They had four children. The eldest two, Pierre and Theresa, elected to stay at home, while the youngest two, Domingo and Pete, crossed the wide ocean in search of adventure and a still greater opportunity, and are now in Stockton.

Owing to the unfavorable economic conditions in his native country, Domingo had very little opportunity to go to school, and when only ten years old started to earn his own support. He was able, even at that tender age, to make himself useful on the home farm in caring for the sheep and stock. In young manhood, in 1894, when he was twenty years of age, he came to the United States, bringing with him a valuable experience in his line. Los Angeles was the first district in which he pitched his tent, and there he worked for two years. Then he went up to Plumas County and herded sheep for a summer. Later he went onto the Delta Islands of San Joaquin County, where he herded sheep and did various kinds of farm labor.

About twenty years ago, he started in the sheep business for himself, buying sheep, feeding them on the range, and selling them again, getting together as many as 2,000 head, running them through San Joaquin County and also among the mountains to the east. In 1915, he returned to his native home, and on August 13, he was married to Miss Florence Uritzaga, who was born in the vicinity of his home, the daughter of John and Josephine (Yorasabal) Uritzaga, farmer folk of the sturdy, old-fashioned class, who still reside at their old home. There were seven children in that family, Inez, Anastacia, Pierre, Batista, Jean and Pete all being older than Mrs. Yroz. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Yorz, Pierre and Albert. Upon returning to California after his marriage, Mr. Yorz purchased for his bride an attractive home at 420 South San Joaquin Street in Stockton. There he has resided ever since, while he has actively continued the raising of high-grade sheep.

ABRAHAM BECHTHOLD.—Viticulture forms the principal occupation of Abraham Bechthold, and the wide-awake manner in which he takes advantage of all methods and ideas tending to enhance the value of his property has had much to do with his obtaining the competence which he now enjoys. He was born near Parkston, S. D., on June 26, 1879, a son of Henry and Lottie (Baumbach) Bechthold, both natives of South Russia, who came to America and settled in South Dakota where he had three quarter-sections of land—a homestead, pre-emption and timber claim. The father passed away at the age of fifty-seven and the mother at forty-five years of age.

Abraham is one of a family of nine children and his opportunity for an education was very limited, the time when he should have been in school being occupied in helping with the farm work at home. But these duties served to make him familiar with the routine of an agriculturist, and when ready to embark on life's journey alone, he decided to follow that pursuit.

On February 20, 1904, in Tripp, S. D., Mr. Bechthold was united in marriage to Miss Matilda Wormsbecher, also a native of South Dakota, and a daughter of Henry and Katherine (Buchholtz) Wormsbecher. Her father was born in Russia and upon his arrival in the United States settled in South Dakota, where he was married. His wife came to South Dakota with her parents when a girl. They were farmers at Tripp until they retired. His daughter Matilda was reared on the farm at Tripp. After his marriage, Mr. Bechthold farmed in South Dakota until the fall of 1907, when he removed to California and settled on the ranch which he purchased and now occupies. It is located about two and one-half miles southeast of Lodi. He first bought ten acres in vineyard, planted to the varieties of Tokay, Zinfandel and Cornichon. Later he added sixteen acres located on Kettleman Lane, then ten acres on Cherokee Lane near the Union Oil Station, making a total of thirty-six acres. On each of his places Mr. Bechthold has installed pumping plants. Two years ago Mr. Bechthold erected a fine stucco residence and farm buildings on the home place. Mr. and Mrs. Bechthold are the parents of eight children: Lillie, attending Lodi High, the only one born in South Dakota; Nettie, Alexander, Julius, who died in 1917, over four years old; Arthur, Ruth, Walter and Edward. In 1913, with his family Mr. Bechthold made a trip back to South Dakota, visiting their childhood home and friends. In 1921 he and his wife again made a trip to their native state, also Minnesota and Canada. In politics Mr. Bechthold is a Republican.

JOHN A. CHAPDELAIN.—For almost a quarter of a century John A. Chapdelain has been a resident of San Joaquin County, where he is a representative of the highest ideals of citizenship and progressive enterprise. He was born at Faribault, Minn., April 7, 1888, a son of Alexander and Antoinette (Shavie) Chapdelain, both natives of the same state. The paternal grandparents were natives of Canada and Belgium, respectively, and were pioneers of Minnesota, settling among the Indians in a very early day. There were ten children in the father's family: Lucile, Mrs. Reese Thompson; Emma Grace, Mrs. A. R. Siegfried of Lodi; Louis, Mrs. Bailey; John A. of this review; James, residing at home; Olive, deceased; Joseph, deceased; and three children who died in infancy. In 1898 the father came to California and settled on his present home place, his first purchase being eighty acres, twenty-six of which were in vineyard and the balance unimproved land. From time to time he has added to his holdings, until he now owns 570 acres of land, devoted to vineyard, hay and grain.

John A. Chapdelain began his education in the Woodbridge grammar school, then entered the Lodi high school, where he remained for two years, and then for the next three years attended St. Mary's College at Oakland. From early boyhood he had helped on his father's ranch. For a number of years he has been farming independently, and now owns 290 acres of land, 140 acres of which is in orchard and vineyard. Raising fruit extensively, he markets it independently. One hundred thirty acres of his ranch is under the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch, and the balance of the land is irrigated from three seven-inch pumps driven by twenty-five horsepower motors. Mr. Chapdelain has improved his place with a good residence, located on the highway just across from his father's home.

On November 16, 1916, in Stockton, Mr. Chapdelain was married to Miss Josephine Ethel Thompson, a daughter of James Henry and Lavissa (Smith) Thompson, natives of Virginia, who came to California in 1876. Mrs. Chapdelain was born at Clay, Sacramento County, Cal., and received her education in that locality.

HOWARD B. TAYLOR.—An energetic and highly progressive rancher, who has become a successful orchardist and vineyardist, is Howard B. Taylor, of Youngstown, San Joaquin County. A native of Barron County, Ky., he was born at Glasgow on February 24, 1881, the son of Able Cain Taylor, a native of Tennessee, who had married Miss Nancy Katherine Harper, from Kentucky. A. C. Taylor was a farmer and lived to be seventy years old. He served in the Army of the Cumberland under General Bragg during the Civil War. He was wounded at Perryville, Ky., and received over thirty bullet marks, and was honored as a Confederate veteran. Mrs. Taylor is now living in Crowell, Texas, at the age of seventy-six, the beloved mother of ten children, among whom Howard was the seventh.

Howard B. Taylor received public school training in Kentucky, and when seventeen years old began to make his own way, working for wages on a farm. He left his home at this time and went to Crawfordsville, Ind., and there worked on a farm for two years. From Indiana he returned to Kentucky, where he remained a short time, and then came to Loomis, in Placer County, Cal., arriving February 3, 1900. There he took up orcharding, and stayed until 1905, working long hours at spraying the trees, receiving only $1.25 per day for his labor, and boarding himself. On September 17, 1905, he came to Lodi and was employed with the Producers Fruit Company; and in November of that year he bought the Reese Thompson ranch of forty acres, on the Davis-Terminus Road, for which he paid $100 an acre. In 1906 he developed this ranch by setting it out to grapes, and in June, of the same year, he went to Sacramento and took charge of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's stockyards, continuing there until 1909, when the yards were discontinued and he was transferred to Sparks, Nev. Here they opened a new stockyard, of which he was in charge until 1911, when he resigned and returned to Sacramento. There he was engaged as a realtor for one year, afterwards going to Reno, Nev., where he took charge of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company's stockyards for one year. In February, 1913, he returned to his ranch at Lodi, which in the meantime had been well cared for under his direction and was then in full bearing. After one year, he leased it for $1,000 a year. He then accepted a position in the shipping department with the Producers Fruit Company, at Loomis, and the Pacific Fruit Exchange, at Lodi, alternating between tree fruit and grapes. In 1915 he engaged with the Earl Fruit Company as a solicitor, where he was employed for four years. Meantime, in 1918, with Mr. E. A. Humphrey, he purchased a forty-acre ranch, a part of the old Fuqua estate adjoining Youngstown, half in peaches and half in vines. They have a pumping plant run by electricity, with a capacity of ninety miner's inches. In 1920 he located on this ranch and has since devoted his time to its cultivation and care. On November 3, 1921, he sold his original forty-acre ranch for $40,000. The same year their residence was destroyed by fire and he immediately built a handsome modern bungalow, and now has an exceedingly attractive place.

Mr. Taylor also owns one-third interest in a ranch of 188 acres near Tudor, Sutter County, which they contemplate developing to cling peaches. He also owns a one-third interest in a sixty-acre vineyard near Loomis, Placer County. He is a stockholder in the National Fruit Products Company, the Citizens National Bank of Lodi, the City Improvement Company of Lodi, and the Raven Oil & Refining Company of Utah.

At Ceres, on February 1, 1917, Mr. Taylor was married to Miss Cora Lucas, the daughter of N. C. and Caroline Lucas. Her father was an orchardist, cultivating figs near Ceres. She was born in Texas, but was reared and educated in New Mexico, where her father was a cattle-raiser. Mrs. Taylor is a cultured and refined woman and presides gracefully over their home. She is a consistent Christian woman. Three children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor: Marvin, Wilma and Virda. In 1920, Mr. Taylor with his family made a visit back to his old home in Kentucky, and also visited other points of interest in the East. After a pleasant trip they returned to their home at Lodi. Mr. Taylor belongs to the Masonic Lodge at Woodbridge, and to the Eastern Star.

WILLIAM R. STOEVEN.—A hustling blacksmith who has one of the best-equipped and most serviceable shops in all San Joaquin County, is William R. Stoeven, who was born near Livermore, in Livermore Valley, California, on August 24, 1871, the son of Reimer Stoeven, a native of Holstein, Germany, who had married Miss Katherine Schutt, a native of Germany. Reimer Stoeven came out to California in 1866, and for a year mined at Mokelumne Hill, in Calaveras County. The worthy couple are still living, in the Livermore Valley. Mr. Stoeven owns a fine grain ranch of 253 acres in Livermore Valley, and there William attended the local schools. They have four children, William, Lewis, Annetta, and Theresa.

When fourteen years of age, William R. Stoeven began working out for himself; and having learned the blacksmith trade, he has followed that line of industry. In 1909 he came to Clements and opened a shop, and there he has since carried on a general blacksmith business. He does all kinds of iron and wood work; and his many patrons generally find that when he has once undertaken to do anything, it is done in such manner that it is not necessary to do it over again.

At Livermore, on October 18, 1899, Mr. Stoeven was married to Miss Alvina J. Kruger, a native of Texas, and the daughter of Fred and Sophie Kruger. Her father came to California when she was a young maiden, and he became a farmer of note in the Liver-more Valley, where she attended the district schools. Five children were born to the worthy couple, Alvina, George, Fred, Tilly and Sophie. Mr. and Mrs. Stoeven have four children: Lawrence R., Harold George, Chester William, and Selma C. Mr. Stoeven lives in Stockton, and he commutes in traveling back and forth to this work. Lawrence is head bookkeeper for the Stockton branch of the Western Meat Company. Harold is bookkeeper for the Western States Electric Company. Chester is a horse-trainer at Stockton; and Miss Selma is with Messrs. Humphrey & Mathews, of Stockton.

Mr. Stoeven is a Republican, and a member of the Odd Fellows, at Clements, in which lodge he has passed through all the chairs. He is also a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, at Clements.

HENRY C. THIESSEN, JR.—Henry C. Thiessen, Jr., was born in Lutgen, Dortmund, Westphalia, Germany, September 1, 1887, a son of Henry and Fredericka (Sprienkemper) Thiessen, both natives of Germany, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. Henry C. is the eldest son of their family of twelve children.

Henry C. received a public school education in his native country and was fifteen years old when his parents removed to Taylorville, Ill., where he worked in the coal mines. In 1904 the family came to California, and he has followed farming, being interested with his father in a ranch of 320 acres located north of Woodbridge, as well as 188 acres in the Brack tract.

The marriage of Mr. Thiessen occurred in Oakland on May 26, 1921, which united him with Miss Ethel Tanner, born at Sutter Creek, Cal., a daughter of Charles and Anna (Cosgrove) Tanner, the former a native of McHenry County, Illinois, and the latter of Angels Camp, Cal. Her father, a veteran of the Civil War, after which he came to California, was a teamster in hauling provisions from Angels Camp, Lone and Jackson to the mines. Mrs. Thiessen was reared and educated in Sutter Creek and then taught school there; she also taught in Tulare County schools, and was teaching her second term at the Ray district school in North San Joaquin County when she was married to Mr. Thiessen. Mr. Thiessen has just completed a fine residence on his ranch, where they make their home. In politics he is a Republican. Mrs. Thiessen is a member of the Rebekahs, in which she is a past noble grand, and is a member and past president of the Native Daughters of the Golden West.

HENRY THIESSEN, SR.—Henry Thiessen, Sr., who came to this county eighteen years ago, where he has since made his home, was born in Elbing, West Prussia, near Danzig, Germany, February 3, 1863, a son of Ephraim and Louise (Mueller) Thiessen, also natives of Germany. When our subject was seven years old, his parents moved to the province of Westphalia, Germany, where the father became a laborer in the coal mines. There were eight children in the family: John, Louise, Ephraim, Henry, our subject, Karl, Martin, William and Anna.

Henry Thiessen grew up and attended the public schools, and at the age of fourteen he began working in the coal mines, working for the following sixteen years, with the exception of two years spent as a member of the infantry in the Imperial German army. At about thirty years of age he went into the hog and horse-trading business at Lutgen, Dortmund, Germany, where he also conducted a butcher shop, continuing there for ten years; then he came to the United States and settled at Taylorville, Ill., where he worked for two years in the coal mines, when in 1904 he came to California. He first located at Galt, Cal., but remained only one month; then he began work on the Thornton ranch at one dollar and twenty-five cents per day and remained six months; then rented 100 acres at Sycamore Slough, where he farmed for a year; then came to San Joaquin County and rented the old John Keller ranch of 160 acres on the Kelly Road, six miles west of Lodi. He operated this ranch and ran a dairy for eight years, when he bought the ranch on which he lives, located four and a half miles northwest of Woodbridge, containing 320 acres. Of this ranch forty-eight acres are in producing vineyard; eighty acres are in alfalfa, and the balance devoted to general farming. He also owns 188 acres on the Brack tract in the tules; he also maintains a dairy of sixty cows; ten head of horses and a forty-five-horse-power Holt tractor are used in the cultivation and development of this ranch and it is irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch. Interested with Mr. Thiessen in this ranch and farming operations are his three sons, Henry, William and Martin.

On March 28, 1887, in Westphalia, Germany, Mr. Thiessen was married to Miss Fredericka Sprienkemper, a native of Germany and a daughter of Henry and Fredericka (Kranefeldt) Sprienkemper. Her father was also a miner and there were four children in the family: Henry, Fredericka, Wilhelmina, and Lena. Her father lived to be fifty years old, while the mother passed away at the age of forty-eight. Mr. and Mrs. Thiessen have had twelve children, nine of whom are living: Henry; William; Mrs. Annie Schultz; Martin; Lena, the wife of August Wiggett; Lizzetta, Mrs. William Wiggett; Karl; Minnie, Mrs. Fred Wiggett, and Emma. In politics he is a Republican and he and his family are members of the Lutheran Church.

RALPH C. JEANNELLE.—A wide-awake, highly-progressive business man whose important industry may well be accepted as indicative of the general prosperity of Stockton, in which it is fortunately located, is Ralph C. Jeannelle, secretary and treasurer of the Peerless Milling Company, of 1040 East Church Street. A typical Hoosier, proud of his early associations, he was born at Elwood, Ind., on October 31, 1895, the son of A. N. and Marie (Phillipp) Jeannelle, both natives of France. His father was a glassmaker by trade, and followed it in Indiana; and having removed to Stockton in 1907, he was for a number of years one of the expert employees of the Stockton Glass Works. Two children sprang from the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Jeannelle: the daughter became Mrs. Ed. Hess of Stockton, while the youngest child is Ralph C. Jeannelle.

Having finished his schooling in the public institutions of Stockton, Ralph entered the employ of the Peerless Milling Company, where he was given the job of patching grain sacks and sweeping out the mill; and in time he was advanced, first to be shipping clerk, and then bookkeeper. Later he bought a fourth-interest in the business and was made secretary and treasurer; and now he owns a one-half interest.

In the year 1918, and at Stockton, Mr. Jeannelle was united in marriage with Miss Dorothy Waltz, a native of California, who shares with him his social popularity. He belongs to Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and he is also a live wire in the Anteros Club.

RENALDO J. JEFFRY.—A well-trained, experienced and conscientious attorney, who has steadily risen to prominence among the most distinguished representatives of the Bar in San Joaquin County, is Renaldo J. Jeffry, who was born at San Francisco on July 16, 1890. He was reared at Healdsburg, in Sonoma County, and attended the school's there; and in 1913 he was graduated from the University of California, with the B. L. degree, two years later receiving the degree of J. D. The same year, he was admitted to the Bar. In 1916 he began his practice in Stockton, and from the first was fortunate in making an equally favorable impression with the Bench and his numerous clients. His studious habits, leading to the fullest possible knowledge of the law; his love of justice, and high ideals; and his personal, disinterested interest in the welfare of those who come to him for advice and assistance, have contributed to his firmly establishing himself in the confidence of his clients.

At Petaluma, September 25, 1919, Mr. Jeffry was married to Miss Gladys V. Gould, a native of Stockton and the daughter of Frank Gould, a prominent Stockton attorney of early days, who later practiced law for a number of years at San Francisco, was a leader in Democratic political circles, speaker of the California House of Representatives, and also U. S. surveyor-general. He died in 1918, widely esteemed and also widely lamented. Renaldo Jeffry belongs to both the Druids and the Foresters, and he enjoys an enviable popularity in each fraternal order, and is a member of the San Joaquin County Bar Association.

FERDINAND JESCH.—A citizen of San Joaquin County who is well and favorably known is Ferdinand Jesch, a stock-buyer who travels throughout the county and purchases direct from the farmers, cattle, sheep and hogs for the markets of Stockton and other cities of the county. He is a native of East Prussia, Germany, born May 6, 1877, one of a family of nine children, seven boys and two girls. He was born and reared on a farm in his native country, and at the age of fourteen began learning the trade of butcher, which required three years of compulsory training; he followed his trade for three years and at the age of twenty was required to enter the army, where he served for two years. At twenty-five he came to the United States, and first lived at Rochester, N. Y., then in Michigan City, Ind., then at Vancouver, Wash., and Bandon, Ore., following his trade in all of these places until 1911, when, on July 6, he arrived in Stockton. He was favorably impressed with the business outlook, so established a meat business at Center and Jackson streets, called the Fulton Market; however, he soon became dissatisfied with inside work and engaged in buying and selling livestock, in which he has made a success. He has his regular customers among the ranchers of the county, from whom he purchases all kinds of livestock, which is taken to the slaughter pens at French Camp and prepared for the markets of Stockton.

The marriage of Mr. Jesch united him with Miss Margaret Eckelmann, born in Jersey City, N. J., and they are the parents of two children; Fritz A., born in Michigan City, Ind., and Charlotta, born in Vancouver, Wash., and both are students in the Stockton high school. Mr. Jesch became a United States citizen August 10, 1907, at Vancouver, Wash., and his loyalty to his adopted country has been a matter of great pride to him. Fraternally he belongs to Court Shilla Foresters; Loyal Order of Moose and Fidelity Lodge.

HARRY E. KAPLAN, M. D.—A physician of experience, ability and thorough equipment, Dr. Harry E. Kaplan has a well deserved reputation throughout San Joaquin County. He is one of the progressive members of his profession, and besides attending to his private practice is also interested in movements to advance the standard of excellence and efficiency of his fellow practitioners throughout the state.

Dr. Kaplan was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., March 17, 1893, and received his preliminary education in the grammar and high schools of New York City; later he entered the University of New York and the Bellevue Medical College of New York City, and in 1917 received his M. D. degree from Fordham University. He then entered the emergency service of the Knickerbocker Hospital in New York City; then became house surgeon at the Long Island College Hospital. During the World War he was commissioned a lieutenant of the junior grade in the medical corps of the U. S. Navy and after eleven months of service was made lieutenant of senior grade and was attached to the Naval Hospital at Brooklyn, N. Y., where he remained for another eleven months; then was at the naval training station at Pelham Bay, N. Y. He also served on the U. S. transport Troy, one of the largest transports in the navy, carrying 6,000 troops, and Dr. Kaplan made three round trips to France; later he was attached to the naval air station at Rockaway Beach, Long Island, receiving his honorable discharge on September 18, 1919.

Dr. Kaplan then came to California and was in the U. S. Public Health Service in the Marine Hospital at San Francisco, and on January 1, 1922, came to Stockton to take charge of the practice of Dr. S. F. Priestley while he was absent from the city. He is now in practice for himself, with offices in the Farmers and Merchants Bank Building, and is a member of the state and county medical societies, a member of the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States; a member of Karl Ross Post of the American Legion, and Lunetta Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars. He joined the Arcana Blue Lodge of Masons, No. 246, in New York City, of which he is still a member, and is also a member of the Sciots. He also belongs to the Iroquois Tribe, Independent Order of Red Men of Stockton, and the B'nai B'rith Lodge of Stockton.

HAMPTON JONES.—An enterprising business man, whose success and prosperity are evidenced in a modern and very attractive store located at California and Channel streets, Stockton, is Hampton Jones, the owner and proprietor of the Jones Tent and Awning Company. He was born at New Orleans, La., November 9, 1895, and his education was obtained in his native and other Southern cities. His residence in California dates from 1914, when he came to San Francisco, and after receiving his discharge from the army at the close of the World War he located in San Jose and was employed with the San Jose Awning and Tent Company, having had previous experience in this line of work in the South. It was not until 1920 that he became a resident of Stockton, where he established a tent and awning business in a small store on North Hunter street. His business grew from the start and within six months he was obliged to seek larger quarters and moved to 522 East Washington street; then lately he removed to his present store at California and Channel streets, where he has ample quarters, utilizing about 8,000 square feet. He is associated with S. L. Learner, a man of many years' experience in interior decorating, which is also a branch of this business. Mr. Jones carries a full line of canvas goods of all descriptions, fancy and patent awnings and all kinds of camp equipment, which he manufactures himself. His business is not alone confined to San Joaquin County, but extends all over the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys. He suffered a heavy loss by fire, but with no thought of discouragement he renewed his stock and continued his business. He is a member of the Merchants Association and the Stockton Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Jones enlisted in the service of his country early in the World War, and was sent to the first officers' training camp at Manila, P. I., and was the fourth to graduate from the school; he did not accept a commission at that time, but returned to the United States to join the regular army, and was commissioned second lieutenant in charge of the bayonet instructions at the Presidio, San Francisco; then he was transferred to Camp Fremont as assistant division bayonet instructor, where he remained for two years; after the armistice was signed he was post athletic officer.

The marriage of Mr. Jones in San Jose united him with Miss Estella Crow, a native of California and a descendant of the pioneer Crow family after whom Crows Landing, Stanislaus County, was named. His fraternal affiliations are with the Santa Rosa American Legion Post, San Jose Lodge No. 10, F. & A. M., Eastern Star and Sciots Club of Stockton.

WILLIAM JOSEPH JONES.—A well-known and enterprising citizen of Lodi, William Joseph Jones has for the past fifteen years been in the plumbing contracting business. He was born on his father's ranch on West Lane, Stockton, August 12, 1864, a son of William and Mary Ellen (McKenna) Jones, the former a native of Philadelphia, Pa., and the latter of New York City. In 1850 the father, William Jones, crossed the plains to California, where he worked in the mines. In 1854 he was married to a Miss Johnson in Stockton, who lived only three months after her marriage. In 1858 he returned to Philadelphia, where he was married to Miss Mary Ellen McKenna, and then came to California via Panama and settled at Stockton. The father was a wheelwright by trade, and was in business with Charles Christian on Market street until 1863, when he bought a thirteen-acre home place on West Lane. William Joseph was the eldest of a family of seven children, the others being Charles Lincoln, residing at Newman, Cal.; Bernardina, a sister at the Rio Vista Convent; Rosa, deceased at the age of two years; Rebecca Jane, Mrs. T. C. Flynn, of Stockton; Frank M., of Alameda; and a seventh child, an infant, deceased.

William Joseph Jones attended the old North, the Weber, and the Lafayette district schools. After his father bought a quarter-section of land three and a half miles southeast of Lockeford, William had charge of it until 1890, when the ranch was divided among the members of the family. From 1890 to 1907 he was employed in the general merchandise store of Mr. Bruml in Lockeford. Then he took a course in the Coyne Plumbing School in San Francisco, and afterwards was with the Putnam Hardware Company, and then with the successor, John H. Davies, seven years in all. For the past eight years he has been in the employ of Henderson Bros. Hardware Company at Lodi.

On September 27, 1892, in Lockeford, Mr. Jones was married to Miss Katherine B. Ryan, a native of Australia, and a daughter of John and Mary Ryan, both natives of Ireland, who soon after their marriage went to Australia and in 1868 came to California and settled at Lockeford, where they purchased 143 acres of grain land. There are four children in her parents' family: Katherine B., Mrs. Jones; Maggie, residing at Lockeford; Mary; and John. Mr. and Mrs. Jones are the parents of eight children: Bernard; Agnes; Irene, now Mrs. Leo Bender, of Oakland; Theresa, Mrs. Clarence Bauer, of Stockton; and Doris, Lawrence, Raphael, and Walter. Mr. Jones is fraternally affiliated with the Woodmen of the World, and is the present banker of Lodi Camp; and he also belongs to the Knights of Columbus.

ALEXANDER A. KELS.—An apt and energetic young business man of Lodi, whose success is due in part to his very thorough knowledge of the meat business, is Alexander A. Kels, the founder and proprietor of the Pacific Meat Market located at No. 200 North Sacramento street, as well as the Tokay Meat Market, No. 25 South School street. A native of Germany, he was born near Cologne, on October 3, 1884, and on October 5, 1885, he was brought by his parents to Platte County, Neb. He is a son of Peter and Charlotta (Altgeldt) Kels. They were farmers in Nebraska until 1895. Peter Kels came to Fresno, where he engaged in ranching until his death. His widow resides in Santa Rosa. Of their eight children, Alexander A. is next to the youngest, and he attended the public schools in Fresno County. After finishing the grammar school, he entered the butcher shop of Mr. Bracker to learn the butcher's trade, where he remained until 1906, when he removed to Lodi and entered the employ of Guggolz & Meehle as cutter and butcher. The following year he purchased the interest of J. C. Guggolz and the business was continued under the firm name of Meehle and Kels, which continued the Pacific Market until the death of Mr. Meehle, at which time Mr. Kels purchased his interest in the business from his widow. During 1917 he built the modern brick block, 50x125 feet, on his lot at the corner of Sacramento and Locust streets and located at No. 200 North Sacramento street. Since then his plant has become one of the most modern, up-to-date and sanitary markets in northern California; recently two cold storage rooms have been installed where meat is hung for curing; the sales room is modern, with tile floors, white enamel walls and the most modern fixtures obtainable. In 1923 he established the Tokay Market, No. 25 South School street, with a cold storage plant. They employ competent and experienced cutters and carry only the best quality of meat, and conduct both a retail and wholesale business. His abattoir is located 1¼ miles northeast of Lodi and he uses five delivery trucks in his business. He is also interested in ranching and stockraising. He owns a 50-acre vineyard, which he has improved from a stubblefield. He also owns a ranch of 160 acres on Telegraph Road and leases a thousand acres more. On his ranches he raises about 200 head of cattle. He also buys and ships cattle.

The marriage of Mr. Kels, in Lodi, united him with Miss Annie T. Handlin, a native of San Jose, Cal., and they have one daughter, Mary Laverne. Fraternally he is a member of the Woodmen of the World, the Foresters of America, the Modern Woodmen, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, No. 848, the Knights of Columbus, and the Lodi Merchants Association. He is a dependable citizen in every sense of the word and can be counted upon to do his share toward the upbuilding of his locality.

CHARLES E. KELLY.—Among the enterprising stock and dairy farmers of the Ripon district of San Joaquin County is Charles E. Kelly, who has made a success of his undertaking which places him among the substantial citizens of his locality. His ranch of 200 acres, which he has developed from a stubblefield, is located twelve miles south of Stockton on the French Camp Road. A native son, he was born in Gonzales, December 10, 1888, a son of Martin P. Kelly, an old-time resident of Monterey County. Charles E. Kelly received a good education in the public schools of San Jose and finished with a business course in Heald's Business College of that city. In 1908 he took a trip through the East which consumed about eighteen months, and on returning to this state located in San Francisco, where he was in the employ of the Union Hardware Company for a year and a half. He then went to Humboldt County, where he entered the employ of the Pacific Lumber Mills as a logger, and within a year's time he was advanced to tallyman.

Returning to his native county of Monterey, he became a range rider on his father's ranch for one year; then became a clerk for the Western Meat Packers at San Francisco, and at the end of two years, in 1912, he returned to the home ranch, which he farmed on shares for one year. He next leased land from the David Jacks estate near Soledad, and ran a dairy, selling his product to the Alpine Condensed Milk Company at Gonzales, and during the three years he was there he raised and sold several herds of Durham cattle; Mr. Kelly then purchased a ranch near Soledad, where he maintained a dairy until 1917, when he sold his property to the David Jacks estate and removed to San Joaquin County. Locating twelve miles south of Stockton on the French Camp Road, he purchased 200 acres which he has developed into a modern dairy ranch; he has planted twenty acres to vineyard and sixty acres are seeded to alfalfa.

The marriage of Mr. Kelly on June 29, 1920, united him with Miss Hattie Helen Ober, a daughter of John Ober, a pioneer of Soledad. Miss Ober was reared and educated in Monterey County and is a graduate of the Salinas high school, class of 1914. Besides his home place, which requires a great deal of attention, Mr. Kelly is interested in sheep-raising in San Benito County. Fraternally he is a member of the Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. Mr. Kelly is progressive in all things and by practical experience and self-reliance in gaining a most creditable success.

WILLIAM S. KEITH.—A representative Californian whose interesting life story is most instructive is William S. Keith, who was born at San Francisco on December 9, 1895, the son of Maynard F. and Isa (Showers) Keith, the former a native of Massachusetts and a well-known contractor in Stockton, still taking a leading part in the development of that progressive city. Mrs. Keith is a daughter of Alabama, and brought with her to the Golden State the graceful gifts for which Southern women have always been known. William S. Keith is their only child.

William was fortunate in attending the schools for which Stockton has long been eminent, for when a mere child, his parents removed to that city; and when eighteen years of age, he was well-equipped to go into the tire business. In 1918 he established a partnership with D. W. Russell, and now they have one of the recognized headquarters in a well-conducted business at the corner of Channel and San Joaquin streets, in Stockton. They handle the Goodrich tires, and they are the authorized wholesalers for all San Joaquin County of Federal tires. A business man devoted to the best interests of the district in which he is active and prospers, Mr. Keith is also a citizen most loyal to his native land. He served in the late war, entering the service of the U. S. Army on September 1, 1918, when he was sent to Angel Island as a member of the Medical Corps. He trained there for four months, and was discharged, with honorable credentials, on December 13, 1918, on account of physical exemption.

Mr. Keith has been twice married. At Stockton on June 20, 1918, he was united with Miss Lali Tackett, who was born in Iowa, her mother being Caroline Warner before her marriage. Mrs. Keith died on November 14, 1921, leaving a son, named James Franklin, to the care of her husband. On July 29, 1922, at Oakland, he took for his second wife Miss Clare Williams, who was born at Murphys, in Calaveras County, the daughter of George and Harriet Williams; her father was a prominent stockman, and resides at 209 West Magnolia Street, Stockton. Mr. Keith belongs to Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., and to the Stockton Parlor No. 7, Native Sons of the Golden West, in both of which organizations he enjoys an enviable popularity. He is also a devoted member of the Christian Church of Stockton.

THEODORE KNECHT.—Numbered among the vineyardists of San Joaquin County is Theodore Knecht, who resides on his ten-acre vineyard on Almond avenue, south of Lodi. He is a native of South Russia, his birth occurring on September 12, 1872. His parents, Ferdinand and Katherine (Malke) Knecht, both natives of Russia, engaged in farming in their native country. On June 12, 1885, when our subject was twelve years old, the family arrived in the United States and settled in Edmunds County, S. D. There were five children in the family when they arrived in Dakota as follows: Theodore, Emanuel, Lydia, Mollie, and John. Two boys, Frank and Adolph, were born in Edmunds County. At the time of their arrival in South Dakota there was little chance of making a living and they were obliged to gather straw to burn for fuel, and our subject helped his father gather the dried cattle bones on the prairie to sell so as to buy food for the family. Later the father filed on a homestead, a timber claim and a pre-emption, and there he lived until 1917, when they came to Lodi, where the parents both live.

Theodore Knecht knew nothing but hard work from the time he was old enough to handle farm tools, and his schooling in the United States covered a period of two months, but this has been greatly supplemented in later years by reading and experience. He remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-three years old, then he homesteaded a quarter section of land in the same county as his father's property, which he devoted to the raising of grain.

The marriage of Mr. Knecht occurred at Milltown, S. D., on February 14, 1896, and united him with Miss Katherine Boerge, a native of Krem, South Russia, who came to the United States when she was about sixteen years old. Mr. and Mrs. Knecht lived on their homestead until 1918, meantime adding another quarter-section of land, which is still owned by Mr. Knecht. In 1918 Mr. Knecht and children removed to Lodi, his wife having died on March 3, 1918. He bought his present ten-acre vineyard on Almond avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Knecht had five living children: Emma, Mrs. Judith of Sacramento; Mary, John, Elsie and Samuel are at home. Mrs. Knecht was a devoted wife and mother. In politics Mr. Knecht is a Republican and he attends the Seventh Day Adventist Church of Lodi.

MISS MARGARET KNOTT.—The founder and proprietor of the Royal Cleaning & Dyeing Company, organized seventeen years ago, is Miss Margaret Knott. Business was first started in a small way at the corner of Oak and Eldorado streets, and in a few months a lot was purchased on West Fremont street, where a building was erected and where the present business was established. Miss Knott was born in Germany, but had been brought to the United States by her parents, who had settled in the Upper Peninsula in Michigan, and in that state Miss Knott was reared and educated. Twenty-three years ago she came to California and located in Stockton. Seeing an opening in this city for a modern cleaning and dyeing establishment, and being skilled in that line, she determined to launch an enterprise in that line of business endeavor. So in partnership with her brother-in-law, Henry Bertolas, the present business was established in April, 1906. This company has the latest equipment in modern machinery and their work is first-class in every particular, and they have built up a large, profitable business, which is growing year by year. Henry Bertolas was a native of Austria-Hungary and came to America at the age of eighteen years, locating in Michigan; for a number of years he resided in Norway, Mich., and was postmaster of Vulcan, Mich.; he was also engaged in the wholesale and retail grocery business there. In Michigan he married Miss Elizabeth Knott, and they had eight children, six of whom are living: Henry, who served overseas at Base Hospital No. 47 in France in the World War; he is now assisting in the business; Louise is bookkeeper for the establishment; Mrs. Katherine Rohde, Mrs. Henrietta Manders, and Mrs. Mary Morse reside in San Francisco, while Karl is attending school in Stockton. Twenty-four years ago the Bertolas family located in Stockton. Mr. Bertolas died May 14, 1918, and his widow survived him until April 3, 1920. Fraternaly Mr. Bertolas belonged to the Eagles and I. O. O. F. Miss Knott is a pioneer in the cleaning and dyeing business in Stockton and her capabilities as a keen business woman have been demonstrated in the management of her affairs.

FRED T. KIRSCHENMANN.—On the roll of successful vineyardists of San Joaquin County will be found the name of Fred T. Kirschenmann, his home place lying about one mile north of Victor. His birthplace is in South Russia, near the city of Odessa, and the date of his birth is August 11, 1892. He is a son of Theobold and Magdalena (Schreiber) Kirschenmann, farmers of their native country of Russia, who were the parents of five children: Christ, Christina, Magdalena, Theobold, and Fred T.

Fred T. Kirschenmann received his education in Russia. When he was sixteen years old, he came to the United States, and to Lodi, Cal., arriving here on December 11, 1907. He worked for different farmers, mostly at viticulture, and was thus occupied until 1915, when he decided there was little to be gained by working for others. Accordingly he purchased ten acres one mile north of Victor, which is in full-bearing vines, and here he has met with gratifying success.

The marriage of Mr. Kirschenmann occurred in Lodi on November 19, 1915, and united him with Miss Emma Preszler, a daughter of George Preszler, whose sketch will be found elsewhere in this work. She was born at Menno, S. D., and came to Victor when eight years of age. She received her education in the Lockeford schools. Mr. and Mrs. Kirschenmann are the parents of one son, Leon Adam. In 1923, Mr. Kirschenmann purchased a ten-acre vineyard one mile west of his place, and Mrs. Kirschenmann received a ten-acre vineyard from her father, making them thirty acres of highly improved land. He is also leasing twenty-five acres of vines, which he also operates. A fine, modern bungalow has just been completed on their home place. Mr. Kirschenmann has brought his ranch to a high state of cultivation, and the productivity of their vineyards is enhanced by a fine irrigation system. Mr. Kirschenmann is a Republican. He and his family are members of Salem Reformed Church, of Lodi. Without special advantages at the outset of his career he has worked his way steadily upward, with determined purpose and untiring efforts.

JOHN KIRSCHENMANN.—Among the additions to the ranks of the agriculturalists of San Joaquin County is John Kirschenmann, who resides on his 160-acre ranch, four miles southwest of Lodi. He was born in Yankton County, S. D., August 24, 1875, a son of Jacob and Eva (Bender) Kirschenmann, both natives of Southern Russia who settled in South Dakota in 1873. Jacob Kirschenmann acquired 480 acres under the homestead, timber claim and pre-emption acts and besides this he also purchased additional farm land. The mother died in young womanhood, leaving the husband and father with five children: Ludwig resides at Shafter, Cal.; Christina, Mrs. George Schaffer, is deceased; Jacob resides at Yankton, S. D.; John, the subject of this sketch; Eva, Mrs. Nuss, resides in South Dakota. Subsequently the father married again and reared ten children by his second wife: Christian, Karl, Magdaline, Theopold, Edward, Emma, Eugene, Emil, Manuel, and Benjamin.

John received a grammar school education in the district schools of his native county and grew up on his father's farm, and there received a practical knowledge of agriculture. At the age of twenty-two he began farming for himself and was soon afterward, in November, 1897, married to Miss Christina Bender, a daughter of Phillip Bender, who was also a farmer in South Dakota. Mr. Kirschenmann purchased 160 acres in South Dakota, where the family lived until 1904, when he sold his property and came to California and settled on his present ranch of 160 acres. This ranch is situated on the Stockton Highway some four miles southwest of Lodi, on which there is a producing vineyard of twelve acres and the balance is used for grain and pasture. He also bought eighteen and one-half acres opposite his home ranch and thirty acres near Hawes Station and eighteen and one-half acres in vines on Cherokee Lane, near Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Kirschenmann are the parents of seven children: Henry, Theodore, Pauline, Lydia, Ella, Arthur, and Edwin; and the family are members of the German Reformed Church of Lodi. During Mr. Kirschenmann's residence in South Dakota he served as a school trustee of his district and also as a trustee in his church. He is a Republican in politics.

THOMAS F. KNUTZEN.—Prominent among the successful grocerymen who have contributed largely to making Stockton one of the very desirable homelands of the Golden State, is Thomas F. Knutzen, of the well-known Wilkes-Pearson-Knutzen Company, of 715 East Weber avenue. He was born in Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, on May 21, 1870, and after attending the fine public schools there, he left his native land and came across the great pond to the United States. He was seventeen years of age when, in 1887, he arrived in Stockton, and he was fortunate in soon securing employment in a grocery store conducted by L. Mollenhauer, at the corner of Weber and American avenues. This was one of the oldest groceries in the city, founded in 1864 by John Ducker, who carried on the business there until 1878; and from that year until 1892 it was owned and operated by Mr. Mollenhauer. The latter became especially interested in the youth, after hearing his story and learning how he had come to turn his face toward the New World. Jens Knutzen, the father, was a seafarer, who sailed around the Horn to California in his own ship; and he stayed here long enough to mine in Mariposa County, and to live some time in Stockton. Then, although he had become an American citizen, he returned to Germany, married there and never came back to California; but he advised his son to come out here, deeming California truly the Land of Promise, and so it happened that Thomas F. Knutzen also became an American citizen.

In 1892 he purchased Mr. Mollenhauer's business, which he conducted for fifteen years, when he sold out and formed a partnership with J. B. Wilkes and C. B. Pearson, styling the new firm the Wilkes-Pearson-Knutzen Company. This firm occupy a modern, two-story brick block at the corner of Stanislaus and Weber avenues, and they do both a wholesale and a retail grocery trade, being widely regarded as decidedly one of the leading grocery establishments, their growth having been rapid. By his own unaided efforts Mr. Knutzen has risen to his present enviable position, in which he is able to exert a powerful influence for the benefit of local commercial affairs.

At Stockton, in 1895, Mr. Knutzen was married to Miss Emma Siesbuettel, a native of Germany, and they have been favored with three children, all born in Stockton: William F. Knutzen is a clerk with the Standard Oil Company at Stockton; Miss Elsie is employed in the Stockton Public Library; while Ella is in school. Mr. Knutzen is a member of the Evangelical Lutheran Zion Church at Stockton.

FRED F. KOLB.—Since 1904 a resident of San Joaquin County, Fred F. Kolb was born in Saxony, Germany, September 21, 1855, the son of T. and Auralia Kolb, both natives of Germany, who came to the United States when Fred F. was a lad of fourteen, settling in Webster County, Iowa, where they purchased eighty acres and engaged in farming. There were eight children in the family, of whom Fred is the sixth. He received a good education in his native land, and after coming to Iowa with his parents, remained with them until his marriage in the spring of 1877, when he was united with Miss Augusta Will, also a native of Saxony, Germany, the daughter of Christian and Frederica Will. Her parents came to Iowa about the same time as her husband's parents and engaged in farming in the same vicinity. She is the third-born of four children. After his marriage, Mr. Kolb purchased a quarter-section of land in Webster County, Iowa, and farmed it for thirty years, and during that time was a supervisor in his township for many years and also served on the local school board. Eighteen years ago, the family came to California and purchased the six-acre home place, which is devoted to table and wine grapes, irrigated by a pumping plant. Mr. and Mrs. Kolb were the parents of six children, five of whom are living: Herman resides in Iowa; Rose, Mrs. Kugesberg; and Anna, Mrs. Kirchhof, of Iowa; Otto resides at Tracy; Leonard, at home. Mr. Kolb and his wife belong to the Lodi Lutheran Church.

THOMAS SANGUINETTI.—When Thomas Sanguinetti was twenty years old he left his native country of Italy and came direct to Stockton, Cal., where he has since continuously resided. He is the owner of 100 acres of fine land northeast of Stockton about five miles, a portion of which is in full bearing fruit trees, the balance unimproved. He was born in Genoa, Italy, December 21, 1868, his parents being Nicholas and Julia (Lenato) Sanguinetti. The father was a gardener by occupation and lived and died in Italy. At the age of eighteen, Thomas Sanguinetti left his home and came to California. Arriving in San Joaquin County he found work in the vegetable gardens on the Stefano Sanguinetti ranch; he then rented thirteen acres with two other men about five miles out from Stockton and raised vegetables; then with his brother Pete he purchased forty acres which they farmed until 1902 when a division was made, each brother taking twenty acres which was developed to an orchard of cherries, peaches and plums.

The marriage of Mr. Sanguinetti occurred February 22, 1898, in Stockton, which united him with Miss Rose Lanata, born in Italy, a daughter of Guiseppe and Theresa (Sanguinetti) Lanata. Guiseppe Lanata was a farmer in Italy and is still living at the age of eighty-five; the mother passed away at the age of seventy-seven. There were four children in the family: Rose, Virginia, Giacomo and Maria. Mrs. Sanguinetti received a grammar school education in Italy and about twenty-six years ago came to California and in Stockton met her future husband. Mr. and Mrs. Sanguinetti are the parents of three children: Julia, Mrs. Pauletti, resides in Linden; Joseph and Dave are on the home place. Mr. Sanguinetti improved his twenty-acre ranch with a good house and farm buildings and irrigation plant. Recently Mr. Sanguinetti added to his holdings eighty-three acres on the Eight-Mile Road, which is unimproved land but which he intends to develop to orchard. Mr. Sanguinetti deserves much praise for his success, for his possessions have all been acquired through his own well-directed efforts.

GEORGE E. KOSTA.—A successful hotel proprietor in the city of Stockton is found in George E. Kosta, the lessee of Hotel Glenn, located at 315 East Market street, which he conducts in a first-class manner. His birth occurred near Athens, Greece, April 15, 1880, and he is the second son of a family of nine children born to Efthimios and Helen (Papos) Kosta, well-to-do farmers and merchants in their native land of Greece. Both are now deceased. In 1908, George E. Kosta arrived in San Francisco, where he joined his brother, John, who had preceded him to the Bay City by two years. John Kosta is now a prosperous rancher near Stockton. In 1915 George E. Kosta located in Stockton and became a waiter in the Hunter Square Cafe; two years later he bought a two-thirds interest in the business, and in 1919 bought the remaining third interest; three months ago he leased this business to his nephews, George and Zacharos Kosta, and purchased a five-year lease on Hotel Glenn.

The marriage of Mr. Kosta occurred in Greece and united him with Miss Catherina Sedaris, who joined her husband in San Francisco in 1912. They are the parents of one son, Efthimios, a student in the Stockton high school. Mr. Kosta is secretary of the Greek-American Lodge of Stockton Moose, and is a liberal contributor to its benevolent work.

PROF. GEORGE E. SCHILLING.—With a reputation as an expert in agricultural and horticultural lines well established even before coming to the United States, Prof. George E. Schilling has contributed much to scientific development along these lines in California, and was formerly organizer and general manager of the Farmers Fruit Exchange of Lodi. He was born in the agricultural district of Germany on July 13, 1884, and was fortunate in an excellent education in the best schools and universities of that country. He specialized along the lines of agriculture, becoming a consulting agricultural expert.

Coming to the United States in 1911, Mr. Schilling accepted the post of teacher of agriculture in the Los Angeles, Cal. schools, and in 1916 located at Lodi, where he was manager for the Setchel Fruit Company. He is well known throughout the country as a consulting engineer in agriculture, horticulture, irrigation problems and soil fertilization, his services being frequently sought as an authority along all these lines. He was consulting engineer in irrigation and drainage projects in the Delta district of San Joaquin County. In the spring of 1921, Mr. Schilling founded the Farmers Fruit Exchange, a fruit and grape packing and shipping company, and a modern packing house was erected on North Sacramento Street, Lodi. This plant, which is 80 by 100 feet, is modern in every respect. The Farmers Fruit Exchange makes contracts with the growers, and it is the aim of the organization to thoroughly co-operate with the grower, rendering them assistance in every way to help them increase the output of their orchards and vineyards, an arrangement that should bring most profitable results to the orchardists. Mr. Schilling sold out his interests in this concern and now devotes his entire time to his profession.

Mr. Schilling's marriage united him with Miss Clara Voss, a native of Germany, her brother, William Voss, being a well known resident of Salinas, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Schilling are active members of the German Lutheran Church, and have made many friends throughout the community since making their residence here, where Mr. Schilling's exceptional capabilities have brought him recognition.

FRED G. SCHNEIDER.—Among California's native sons who have gained success and prominence along artistic lines is numbered Fred G. Schneider, proprietor of the Logan Studio of Stockton and recognized as one of the leading photographers of this part of the state. He was born in San Francisco, June 17, 1880, and when very young started out to earn a livelihood, learning the lithographing business with the Union Lithograph Company of San Francisco, while he acquired a knowledge of the art of photography with the firm of Boye & Haberich, who conducted one of the leading studios in San Francisco, and Mr. Schneider remained with them for a number of years. In 1900 he came to Stockton, becoming connected with the Logan Studio, which was established in 1896 and is one of the oldest enterprises of the kind in the city. Later Mr. Schneider was made manager of the studio and in 1913 he purchased the business, which he has since successfully conducted. His portrait work is of the highest order and he also devotes considerable attention to commercial photography, being official photographer for the Sampson Tractor Company, the California Delta Farms Company and the National Paper Products Company. He did a considerable amount of work for the Holt Manufacturing Company at the time their plant was being utilized for Government purposes and for the past few years he has done all of the illustrating for the special annual edition published by the Byron Times. He copied and reproduced in exact dimensions, from the records in the office of the county recorder, all of the plates and maps for the Stockton Abstract & Title Company and does all branches of copy work. He operates a moving picture camera and is under special contract to furnish news items for Pathé and Gaumont, while he has also taken special motion pictures to illustrate activities in the business world. He has taken bird's-eye views from airplanes and in the summer of 1920 ascended to a height of 5,750 feet with Mr. Ferris, the well known aviator. He is constantly striving to bring his work to a higher degree of perfection and is meeting with well-deserved success from both a commercial and artistic viewpoint.

Mr. Schneider married Miss Lulu Ernst, a native of Alameda, Cal., and a granddaughter of Fritz Bohemer, a prominent pioneer, who crossed the plains with ox-teams, arriving in California in 1849, at the time of the gold excitement. He engaged in freighting from Stockton to the mines in the south, and later conducted a general store at Columbia, in Tuolumne County. Mr. and Mrs. Schneider have become the parents of two sons, Fred R. and George. The former is associated with his father in business and when twenty-one years of age he joined the Delta Lodge of Masons at Stockton, of which he is serving as master, being the youngest incumbent in that office in the entire state. Mrs. Schneider is an active member of the Native Daughters of the Golden West and Mr. Schneider is identified with Stockton Parlor No. 7, Native Sons of the Golden West. He is also connected with the Improved Order of Red Men, with Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and is chief ranger of Stockton Court, No. 56, of the Foresters.

JOSEPH E. FREITAS.—Among the more recent acquisitions to the business circles of Tracy is Joseph E. Freitas, who is also a native son and a successful merchant in this thriving town. He is the senior member of the firm of Freitas & Leal, dealers in men's furnishings, shoes and general shoe repairing, with their place of business located at 135 Central Avenue. He was born in Siskiyou County, November 5, 1888, and grew up on his father's stock farm in that county, receiving his education in the public schools and by practical experience on the home farm. At twenty-two years of age he rented a ranch of 160 acres in Siskiyou County and went into the dairy business on his own account, which he operated for five years. Entering the service of his country during the war, he served in the infantry of the 26th Division; he was sent overseas and in the battle of Chateau Thierry was severely wounded in the left leg so that he was removed to a hospital in France and later brought back to the United States and placed in the Letterman Hospital in San Francisco, from which he received his honorable discharge, March 13, 1920. He then went to Salinas and established a shoe repairing business, which he operated until his removal to Tracy. In May, 1922, he formed a partnership with Joe Leal and the business has steadily increased since its inception.

The marriage of Mr. Freitas occurred at Yreka, Siskiyou County, in October, 1920, which united him with Miss Mary Silva, also a native of Siskiyou County. Mr. and Mrs. Freitas are the parents of one child, Edward Le Roy and the family are members of the Catholic Church. Fraternally he is a member of the I. D. E. S. and the Woodmen of the World, as well as the American Legion.

VICTOR JOHN FOPPIANO.—A native son of San Joaquin County who has made the best of his opportunities and today is counted among the successful farmers and fruit raisers of the county is Victor John Foppiano. He was born on the Foppiano home ranch on the Upper Sacramento Road, on September 18, 1885, a son of John and Katherine (Rossi) Foppiano, both natives of Genoa, Italy. John Foppiano was a young man when he came to California via Panama and before settling here permanently he made three trips back to his native land. He first settled at Angels Camp, where he mined for a few years; then he came to San Joaquin County and bought twenty-two acres of land seven miles northeast of Stockton; later he sold ten acres of it, retaining twelve acres, which was developed to an orchard of all kinds of fruit. He and Mrs. Foppiano were married in Stockton and nine children were born to them: Columbus, deceased; Jennie, Mrs. Oneto, lives in Stockton; Louis, Eugene, Victor, our subject, Henry, Edith, Amelia and Clorinda. The father lived to be eighty-nine years old and the mother, who lives in Stockton, is now past eighty years of age. Victor Foppiano was educated in the Greenwood district school and was of great assistance to his father in the development and cultivation of the home place.

On May 25, 1911, in Stockton, Mr. Foppiano was married to Miss Jennie Lavagnino, a native of Galt, Cal., and a daughter of John and Mary Lavagnino, both natives of Genoa, Italy. John Lavagnino came to California over forty years ago and settled on Dry Creek near the town of Galt, where he engaged in dairying and farming. He was married at Galt and there both parents are still living on the eighty-acre dairy ranch. There are five children in their family: Anna, Jennie, now Mrs. Foppiano; Stephen, Mayme and Elena. Mr. and Mrs. Foppiano are the parents of four children: Adaline, Ethel, Victor, Jr., and Ernest. In April, 1911, Mr. Foppiano purchased thirty-four acres from Julia Weber, a part of the old Weber grant, in Morado precinct, about six miles northeast of Stockton, and this he has improved to a bearing orchard of cherries, peaches, plums and grapes. It has a good irrigation system, thus insuring good crops and a fine quality of fruit. He is a Republican in politics and with his family is a member of St. Michael's Catholic Church. In 1915 he built a beautiful modern bungalow on his ranch, where he resides with his family.

FULLER LUMBER COMPANY.—One of the leading factors in the lumber and building material trade of Lodi is the Fuller Lumber Company, operated under the personal direction of Horace S. Fuller, president and manager, a lumber specialist of twenty-eight years experience, who is familiar with every detail and requirement of the trade. Extensive yards, offices and mills, the latter known as the Lodi Mill & Manufacturing Company, are maintained, where every modern convenience is offered customers. The company handles everything in lumber, rough and dressed products; building materials, shingles, mouldings, etc., in small or carload lots. Contractors and builders are offered every aid consistent with modern business methods, plans are carefully gone over and checked up, and courteous treatment is given all wants. Horace S. Fuller, president and manager of the Fuller Lumber Company, is a wide-awake booster for the upbuilding and development of Lodi and the country surrounding. He was born in Crete, Neb., June 18, 1874, a son of Horace S. and Louisa Fuller, both natives of Ohio. The father moved to Nebraska in an early day, where he engaged in the lumber business and in time owned and operated sixteen lumber yards throughout the state. In 1890 the father came to California, where he purchased a twenty-acre vineyard at Martinez, but was not content to remain in the West. He returned to Nebraska, where he had spent so many active years of his life, and lived to be seventy-one years old; the mother is still living in the Nebraska home. There were five children in their family: Emma, Mrs. Dean, resides in Chicago; Robert S. died in Lodi, January 5, 1920; Horace S. of this sketch; Jess P. resides in Wyoming and George B. resides at Santa Rosa, Cal.

Horace S. Fuller began his education in the grammar school in Crete, Neb., and finished at the Doane College of that city. In York, Neb., he was married to Miss May Harrison, a native of Springfield, Neb., daughter of George Murray and Saracita (Jackman) Harrison, both natives of Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. The father is deceased, but the mother is still living. There are three daughters in the family, Nell, Mrs. May Fuller, and Grace. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller are the parents of one son, Horace Stevens, third. In 1909 the Young Lumber Company was purchased by Horace S. Fuller and George L. Meissner and operated under the firm name of Fuller-Meissner Company and the following year, 1910, the corporate name became the Fuller Lumber Company with Robert S. Fuller as manager, who remained in this capacity until his death on January 5, 1920. After the death of Robert S. Fuller, Horace S. Fuller became president and manager of the company. Mr. Fuller is also interested with his uncle, R. P. Fuller, in a lumber business in Manteca, Cal. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Elks of St. Joseph, Mo., the Masons of Oxford, Neb., the Chapter and Commandery of York, Neb., is a thirty-second degree Mason of Stockton and belongs to the Aahmes Temple, Oakland, Cal., the Rotary Club, the order of Lumbermen known as the Hoo-Hoo lodge, being president of the Sacramento Valley division of this order; and is a member of the Central California Lumbermen's Club and the California Lumbermen's Association.

JOHN SEMENZA.—At the age of seventeen John Semenza came alone to the United States, a stranger in a strange land, with a very meager knowledge of the English language, so that his industry has brought his present prosperity. He resides on his thirteen-acre orchard six miles northeast of Stockton, which is devoted to fruit raising. He was born near Chiavari in the province of Genoa, Italy, April 1, 1867, a son of Bernardo and Maria (Filipel'i) Semenza, farmer folk who lived and died in their native land of Italy, the father passing away at the age of sixty-six and the mother at the age of forty. They were the parents of six children; William and Loren are residents of Oregon; John, the subject of this sketch; Katie, Mrs. Simaroli, resides in Alameda; Victor, and the sixth child died in infancy. After the death of his first wife, Bernardo Semenza married the second time and two children were born to this marriage, Maria and Jennie; both of them as well as their mother died in Alameda. John Semenza had two years' schooling in Italy, leaving home March 25, 1884, when seventeen years old, and came alone to the United States, arriving in San Francisco with one pound sterling. Stopping first at San Francisco he worked for wages for one year, then went to Victoria, B. C., working on railroad construction, going from there to Portland, Ore., and working with his brother for four years; then he returned to San Francisco for a short time, then went to Cloverdale, Cal. There he worked two years for the Italian Swiss winery, after which with two partners he had a vegetable ranch at Cloverdale and for eight years he carried on this business, then he returned to Portland, Ore., where he ran a vegetable garden for three years and then for one year ran a French bakery on Sixth and Harrison streets. During the next six years he divided his time between Stockton and San Francisco, then went to Sonora, where he worked for the Standard Lumber Company and later for the Union Construction Company at Vallisca. Fourteen years ago he came to Stockton and purchased his present ranch of thirteen acres six miles northeast of Stockton, which he has planted to different kinds of fruits, peaches, plums, walnuts, chestnuts, figs and apricots, the ranch being well irrigated. He is a Democrat in politics and fraternally is a member of Roma Lodge No. 147, K. P.

CHESTER GALGANI.—A native son of California who has been identified in a practical and successful manner with agricultural pursuits for many years, is Chester Galgani, located on a seventeen acre ranch on the Lodi-Lockeford road two miles east of Lodi. He was born in Sacramento, Cal., on July 2, 1883, a son of Peter A. and Mary (Ferretti) Galgani, the former a native of the province of Lucca, Italy, and the mother of Philadelphia, Pa. When the father, Peter A. Galgani, was about twenty years of age he settled at Sacramento, Cal., where he engaged in the merchandise business; he also tried his hand at farming for a short time in the county. Chester Galgani is one of a family of six children, as follows: Clara is Mrs. Albert Burbridge of San Pedro, Cal.; Alba is Mrs. T. O. Daly of San Francisco; Ella is Mrs. Holmberg of San Pedro; Chester is the subject of this sketch; Louis is a marine engineer on the S. S. Santa Barbara; Patrick is deceased. The father passed away at the age of forty-seven years, the mother is still living at the age of sixty-five and resides in Los Angeles. The mother was married the second time to Harry Sexton, a native of Ireland, and they are the parents of one daughter, Shirley, now Mrs. Laurendeau of Santa Monica.

Chester Galgani obtained his education in the grammar schools of Sacramento and Watsonville and when he was sixteen years old was thrown on his own resources; he first worked on the docks at Port Los Angeles; then worked as fireman for one year on a coastwise vessel; then for three years in his old position on the docks at Port Los Angeles; then we find him at San Pedro where he worked for five years as a teamster. About this time he homesteaded eighty acres in the Santa Monica hills which he proved up on and still owns and today it is very valuable land. He next was employed by the Santa Monica Park Company as a forest ranger, which occupied him for the next five years. During this time he was also a deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County, a state fire warden and a special Los Angeles policeman.

The marriage of Mr. Galgani occurred at Santa Monica on July 4, 1909, and united him with Miss Edna A. Matteoni, a native of San Diego, Cal., a daughter of Attilio and Josephine (Ferretti) Matteoni, who were farmers on the rich island lands of Sacramento County; later the father ran a hotel in Stockton until he purchased his ranch near Lodi. On December 18, 1917, they removed to Lodi and Mr. Galgani took charge of the Matteoni ranch of 17½ acres on the Lodi-Lockeford road; fourteen acres of which is in vineyard and the balance in cherries with ample space left for a house and outbuildings. They are the parents of three children, Gladys, Harry, and Gemma, deceased.

Mr. Galgani is proud of the service that his brothers rendered to their country during the World War. Patrick A. enlisted about two weeks after war was declared and became a member of the Grizzlies and was first sent to Camp Tanforan, then to Camp Kearny where he was in a special allotment that was immediately sent overseas. He worked at bridge construction work and just before the armistice he was severely gassed and was sent back to New York, where he died shortly after arriving on home soil. Louis Galgani joined the Naval Reserves and was put on the cruiser St. Louis and remained for 26 months. He entered the service as a second class fireman and was promoted to first class fireman and later to first class engineer; later he received his certificate as a first class engineer and he is now a marine engineer on the Santa Barbara. Mr. Galgani is a Republican in politics and fraternally is a member of the K. of C. of Lodi.

HEMAN D. SHINN.—Since a babe in arms, Heman D. Shinn has resided in San Joaquin County. He was born in Burlington County, N. J., December 8, 1853, a son of John R. and Maria A. (Doyle) Shinn, natives of New Jersey and New York, respectively. John R. Shinn first came to California in 1852, but remained only a short time before he returned to New Jersey. In 1854 he brought his wife and infant son, Heman D., out to this state by way of the Isthmus route. For a short time after his arrival he lived at Hangtown, now Placerville, where he mined for gold; but in the same year of 1854 he settled in San Joaquin County on the ranch now occupied by his son, Heman D. Shinn. The John R. Shinn ranch contains 400 acres, for which he then paid $1,000, and on which he resided until his death in 1867. Before his death he had disposed of 120 acres of the ranch, leaving a balance of 280 acres. He was a Republican in politics, and was well-known among the early settlers of San Joaquin County. Three children were born to himself and wife, of whom Heman D. is the only one living. The others were Ida M. and Denver J. Shinn. The mother lived to be eighty-two years old, passing away on the home place, where she had lived so long.

Heman D. Shinn attended the Franklin district school and the grammar school at Woodbridge, and has resided on the old Shinn ranch practically all his life. At the age of ten years he began to plow and clear the land of the heavy growth of timber; and when thirteen years old, on the death of his father, he assumed the running of the ranch with his mother. Ninety acres had been cleared when his father died, and he has since cleared the balance. His father teamed a great deal from Stockton and Sacramento to the mines, and as far as to Reno and Virginia City, Nev., so that the management of the ranch was largely left to his family. Since the father's death about thirty-seven acres have been sold, so that there are now 243 acres in the home place—eighty acres in timber bottom land, twenty-five acres in cherries, fifteen acres in pears, and the balance of 123 acres in bearing vineyard. The ranch is under the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch, but it is so well subirrigated that Mr. Shinn has little need to resort to artificial irrigation. He has piped his ranch with cement irrigation pipe, and has two six-inch pumps for irrigation in case of necessity. He has also improved the place with fine buildings, making it one of the most modern and up-to-date homes in the county. Three miles north of Clements, Mr. Shinn bought 246 acres which he and his son farm to grain. The family also own 1060 acres of timber land in Calaveras County. Mr. Shinn is a stockholder in the First National Bank of Lodi.

In Stockton, on December 8, 1874, Mr. Shinn was married to Miss Emma S. Tock, a native of Maine, and a daughter of James Tock, now deceased, who was born in Maine and became a resident of San Joaquin County. There were five children in his family: James; Elizabeth, Mrs. Russell; Sarah, Mrs. Turner, deceased; Anna, Mrs. Benson, and Emma S., Mrs. Shinn. Mr. and Mrs. Shinn are the parents of three children: Mac, Mrs. Bancroft, of Woodbridge; Elmer John, of Woodbridge, who married Gladys Healey, of Alameda; and Bessie A., Mrs. Atwell, a widow residing at home with her parents, and the mother of one child, Ruth. Mrs. Atwell is the owner of a twenty-acre producing vineyard. Mr. Shinn is a member and past grand of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Woodbridge, and with his wife is also a member of the Rebekahs, of Woodbridge.

CHARLES A. SIBECK.—A well-known citizen of the Thornton district of San Joaquin County, who is also a native son of California, is Charles A. Sibeck, the owner of a fifty-acre orchard three-quarters of a mile north of Thornton. He was born at Placerville, August 6, 1882, a son of Charles and Caroline E. (Weiss) Sibeck. The parents were natives of New York and Germany, respectively, born on May 22, 1833, and June 22, 1842. The father came to California during the gold rush of 1849, and began mining near Placerville, where he remained for about five years. Then he went to logging at Bijou, Cal., and followed this occupation for some fifteen years, after which he returned to Placerville, where he owned and operated a mill. He ran this mill for about ten years, and then bought a ranch at Elk Grove, Sacramento County, consisting of one section of grain land located three miles northeast of old Elk Grove on the Stockton road. During the time he was logging at Bijou, he acquired 1,400 acres of timber and grazing land, which he disposed of previous to his death. There were four children in the family: Caroline, deceased; Mrs. Alice Edwards, residing in San Francisco; Charles A., of this sketch, and Josephine, Mrs. Henry Allen, of Stockton. The father passed away on the Sacramento County ranch in December, 1913, at the age of eighty, and the mother died in 1911, sixty-nine years old.

Charles A. Sibeck attended the Jackson district school, in Sacramento County, and remained on the home place until his father's death. When the property was divided, he received 120 acres as his share, and his sisters inherited a like amount. Mr. Sibeck continued to improve his property until 1915, when he sold out and removed to his present fifty-acre ranch, which he purchased at the time, and where he now resides.

On February 26, 1906, in Sacramento, Mr. Sibeck was married to Miss Ethel Doty, a native daughter of California, born at Sheldon, in Sacramento County, a daughter of Jonathan C. and Lillian Jane (Traganza) Doty, the former a native of Iowa, while the latter was born in Sacramento County. Grandfather Thomas Traganza was a native of England who came to California in the early fifties. Jonathan C. Doty came to Sacramento County about 1870, and engaged in farming. In 1912 he purchased a fifty-acre ranch, which is now the home place of Mr. and Mrs. Sibeck; and here, two years later, he passed away at the age of sixty-one years. The mother now resides at Elk Grove, Cal. There were eight children in the family: Arthur; Elmer; Mabel, Mrs. N. E. Baker, of San Francisco; Ethel, Mrs. Sibeck; Frank; Robert G.; Raymond; and Harvey, who is now deceased.

Robert G. Doty, a brother of Mrs. Sibeck, was born at Sheldon, Cal., September 16, 1893, and when old enough learned the barber's trade, which he followed for three years at Woodland, Cal. He joined the state militia and entered Company F, Second California Infantry, and served five months under Captain Caldwell and Colonel Waukowski on the Mexican border, at Nogales, Ariz. He then returned to Sacramento and was discharged, and on July 6, 1917, re-enlisted at Fort Mason in the same company and same regiment. He was transferred to the 160th Regiment, Fortieth Division, and was in training for five months at Fort Mason, after which he was sent to Camp Kearney and trained there for ten months. His own regiment was sent to France, but he was retained at Camp Kearney, training raw recruits. During August, 1918, he left for France via Camp Mills, N. Y. He sailed for Liverpool, England, and thence across the Channel to La Havre, France; but his company was held in reserve and did not get to the front. In March, 1919, he returned to the United States and was discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco, with the rank of corporal. On August 10, 1920, at Sacramento, he was married to Miss Flaudie Mary Brakebill, a native of Illinois, and a daughter of Henry and Etta (Couch) Brakebill. Her father was a farmer who came to Tulare County, Cal., when she was a young girl, and there she received her education.

Mr. and Mrs. Sibeck are the parents of two children, Vernon and Audrey. Fraternaly, Mr. Sibeck is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Elk Grove, of which he is a past grand, and is also a member of the Encampment and Canton at Elk Grove, while Mrs. Sibeck is a member and past noble grand of the Rebekah Lodge of Elk Grove. Mr. Sibeck is also a member of the Galt Parlor, N. S. G. W.

HENRY SIEMERING.—Born in Nimburg, Hanover, Germany, March 7, 1874, Henry Siemering is a son of Henry and Minnie (Dohrmann) Siemering. Three months before he was born his father died, and in consequence he was reared until he was eleven years old by his grandfather, Dick Siemering. The opportunities for an education were limited, for at the age of eleven years he began to earn his own living. In 1885 he left his native country and came to America. Coming direct to San Francisco, he found work in a grocery store during the day, and at night went to school, working in this way for six years. He then moved to San Joaquin County and began working for wages on various farms in the Ray and New Hope school districts. Afterwards he rented a farm for a few years and engaged in farming on his own responsibility. With the funds he had been able to accumulate by hard labor and careful saving he then purchased a forty-acre ranch four and a half miles west of Woodbridge. At the time of purchase there was seven acres of the ranch in bearing vineyard, and Mr. Siemering has set eight more acres to vines, so that there are now fifteen acres in grapes and twenty-five acres devoted to truck gardening and general farming, including about two acres of orchard.

On September 21, 1907, Mr. Siemering was married at Sacramento to Miss Stella Williams, a native of Keokuk County, Iowa, and a daughter of John H. and Minnie (Pamplé) Williams, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Saxony, Germany. The parents came to California in 1890, and the father is now a vineyardist west of Woodbridge. Mrs. Siemering was the older of two children and the only one living. She was educated in the Woodbridge school. Mr. and Mrs. Siemering are the parents of four children: William, Lawrence, Minnie, and Francis (deceased). The home ranch is improved with an irrigation system consisting of a three-inch pump driven by a six horsepower motor.

LUVIGI SOLA.—Well known in connection with agricultural interests, especially that of grain raising, is Luvigi Sola, who for the past eleven years has been raising immense quantities of grain and whose present ranch comprises 1,045 acres, thirteen miles southeast of Stockton on the Mariposa Road. He was born at Villa Faletto, in the province of Piedmont, Italy, on October 6, 1855, a son of Andria and Domenica (Alimano) Sola, farmers in Italy and the parents of ten children, of whom Luvigi is the sixth. Luvigi Sola was twenty-five years old when he resolved to come to America, so he made his way to Havre, France, and arrived at New York on Christmas Day, 1880. Eight days later he went to Vincent, Ohio, where he remained three months and in all that time found only six days' work on a farm. In March, 1880, Mr. Sola made his way to California, where he had relatives. He went to work on a farm at seventy-five cents a day, then on railroad construction at Lockeford at one dollar per day. Five years before this, his brother Peter, accompanied by another brother, Batista, had come to California and worked on farms in the vicinity of Acampo. Batista Sola returned to Italy after three years in California, and in 1883 Peter Sola removed to Tulare, where he took up government land about two miles north of Delano in Tulare County.

On December 25, 1886, at Tulare, Peter Sola was married to Miss Lucille Zebena, born at Mosola, in Cuneo, Italy, July 1, 1868, daughter of Joseph and Marie Zebena, farmers, both now deceased. They had three children, Mrs. Sola being the youngest and the only one who came to California. Mr. and Mrs. Sola had three children: Domenica, Mrs. John Panero, has five children and is now farming the old home place at Tulare; Andrew married Miss Lucille Rae Serretti of Modesto, and they have two children and he is associated with our subject in farming; Peter is also farming with Mr. Sola. On June 5, 1894, Peter Sola passed away on the home place at Tulare. Mrs. Sola remained there after her husband's death and Luvigi Sola had also a homestead of 160 acres near Delano. Luvigi Sola received his United States citizenship papers at Visalia in 1888, and proved up on his land. In August, 1900, Luvigi Sola and Mrs. Peter Sola were married, and besides rearing his brother's three children, they have five children of their own: Louis, Joseph, Mary, Lucy, and Lawrence. Twenty-three years ago Luvigi Sola settled in San Joaquin County, locating near Lockeford and farmed the Priest ranch for three years, raising large quantities of wheat on this 1,140-acre ranch. Since then he has farmed the Wash. Tucker, the Allen and the Commins ranches. In 1911 he purchased his present ranch of 1,045 acres, formerly known as the McDougall tract. Besides farming this large acreage, he leases large tracts of land in the district which is entirely devoted to raising wheat. With the latest improved power machinery, including a Holt seventy-five horsepower tractor and a Harris gasoline combined harvester, Mr. Sola and his sons are able to do most of the work and they operate 1,500 acres in all. Mr. Sola and his family enjoy the confidence of the business community and he has found that in the West his hope of benefiting his financial condition has been realized, for here he has secured a good home and gained a comfortable competence.

THE MODEL HAT SHOP.—A thoroughly up-to-date concern, whose enterprise has also stimulated other firms, is the millinery shop located at 15 West Elm Street, Lodi, known as the Model Hat Shop, owned and operated by the Misses Elsie A. Solomon and Helen E. Todd, thoroughly experienced in designing and trimming hats. This shop was founded by Mrs. Vassar, who conducted it for eight years as a parlor millinery shop, one of the first in Lodi. It was then sold to Miss E. M. McLachlan and successfully conducted by her until it was sold to the present owners in 1919, and they have built up a fine, well-paying business. Miss Elsie A. Solomon is a San Joaquin County girl, born seven miles from Stockton on the Linden Road, a daughter of Gustave and Agnes Solomon. Gustave Solomon came to California in an early day, and for many years conducted a winery. He passed away in 1910, and her mother is now residing in Berkeley. Miss Solomon received her education in the Delphi district school, then attended the Washington school and the Stockton Commercial College in Stockton. She took up millinery work in Stockton and spent nine years in shops in San Francisco and Stockton previous to locating in Lodi.

Miss Helen E. Todd was born in Diagonal, Iowa, a daughter of Edgar P. and Laura Todd. In 1901 Miss Todd accompanied her parents to California and settled at Selma, where her father is engaged in the real estate and insurance business. Miss Todd attended the Selma grammar and high schools and learned the millinery trade in Fresno and San Francisco, and she, too, had nine years' experience before locating in Lodi.

In 1919 Misses Solomon and Todd purchased the business conducted by Miss McLachlan, and their enterprise and industry have been rewarded by increasing patronage and the Model Hat Shop is a credit to the city.

MANUEL SILVA.—As general manager of the Associated Milk Producers, with headquarters at 53 Clay Street, San Francisco, Manuel Silva is making a decided success of the undertaking, and fully ninety per cent of the milk produced in the San Joaquin Valley is handled by this company. He was born on Pico Isle, one of the group of the Azores, August 23, 1875, a son of John and Mary Conceicao (Silveira) Silva, both natives of the Isle of Pico. Manuel is one of a family of five children and was able to attend the public school in the village of Candelaria, Isle of Pico. At the age of fifteen he left the home ranch and began working as a clerk in a general merchandise store in Candelaria, helping to support the family for three and a half years.

At nineteen years of age he left his native land on board the S.S. "Peninsula," a Portuguese liner, and soon after his arrival in the United States entered the employ of the woolen mills at East Cambridge, Mass., where he was occupied for three years. Here he made the acquaintance of John Enos, and in partnership they conducted the California Hotel in Brooklyn. After one year, John Enos retired from the business and Manuel Silva successfully conducted the hotel for thirteen years, during which time he made a number of visits to his old home. His father passed away in 1896, aged sixty-five years.

Nine years ago, Mr. Silva brought his mother to Stockton, where he has built a comfortable residence for her and where he resides. His first start in the dairy business was made on Roberts Isle, where he had a small ranch in partnership with M. R. Dias, whose sketch also appears in this history. The business venture proved a success, and gradually a large business was built up and more land was added by lease. The development of the Riverside Farm has been accomplished solely by Mr. Silva, and it is with just pride that he refers to its wonderful development. In 1918 he became a director in the Associated Milk Producers of San Francisco, which has proven a success as a co-operative marketing company. In 1921 he became manager of the association, which position he still holds, being the successor of Mr. Frank Machado, its former manager. He was instrumental in the organization of the Portuguese-American Grocery Company, a wholesale and retail establishment of Stockton. Twenty-two years ago Mr. Silva received his United States citizenship papers in Brooklyn, and ever since has been a staunch Republican in politics. He is past president of the I. D. E. S. and an active member of the U. P. C. Mr. Silva makes his home with his mother in Stockton and enjoys the good-will and esteem of his business associates.

HUBERT FREDERICK SILK.—As the senior member of the firm of Silk & Wheelock, Hubert Frederick Silk is accounted one of the most successful business men of Lodi. During a brief residence in that city he has won splendid prosperity, which is an indication of superior business capacity and enterprise. His advancement has been gained through a recognition and improvement of opportunity. He has ever realized the fact that the present and not the future is the moment for action, and he has labored consistently and along safe yet progressive lines until he is numbered among the foremost representatives of business activity in the thriving city of Lodi. He was born in London, England, September 6, 1890, a son of Stephen and Hannah Silk, both natives of England, where Stephen Silk is engaged in the planing mill business. There are three children in the family, Hubert Frederick being the eldest. The others are Dorothy, Mrs. Entriknap, and Cecil Arthur.

Hubert Frederick Silk received a good education in the schools of the city of London. When a lad he assisted in his father's planing mill. In 1903 he came to Vancouver, British Columbia. He soon took a trip to Nome, Alaska, where he worked at anything he could find to do. Returning to Vancouver in 1906, he began work in the planing mills, which occupied his attention until October, 1914, when he enlisted in the Royal Canadian Air Force and was sent to Weybridge-Surrey, England. There he engaged in the manufacture of aeroplane propellers, and was thus engaged for the duration of the war. He was discharged at Vancouver in February, 1919, with the rank of sergeant. Soon after being discharged he came to San Francisco. He traveled in the West and Southwest for about a year, and then located in Stockton in 1920. Soon after, he removed to Lodi, where he purchased the interest of the senior member of the firm of Gregg & Son, who ran a planing mill on Cherokee Street, east of the Salem school. Under the efficient management of Mr. Silk, the business grew to such an extent that the mill was moved to larger quarters on Sacramento Street, the firm now being known as Enterprise Planing Mill. Here much new machinery has been installed and the mill is fully equipped to handle any kind of mill or cabinet work offered, and with the first-class mechanics employed only guaranteed work will be turned out.

On April 8, 1920, at Modesto, occurred the marriage of Mr. Silk and Miss Mary Wooldridge, a native of Lakeport, Cal., and a daughter of Lemuel and Helen Wooldridge, early California pioneers who crossed the plains with ox-teams and became ranchers in the Golden State. Mr. and Mrs. Silk are the parents of one son, Stephen, and are members of the Episcopal Church of Lodi. Mr. Silk is one of the popular and highly esteemed men of his community, and he has done his part as a good citizen and a useful factor in all public enterprises.

FRANK SORTER.—Numbered among the well-known vineyardists is Frank Sorter, who is located on a twenty-acre vineyard on Almond Avenue, south of Lodi. He was born at Dundee, Mich., in the Lake Erie country, on July 16, 1868, a son of Andrew and Martha Sorter. The father was a farmer in Michigan and lived to be fifty-three years old, and the mother reached the age of sixty-five, both passing away in that state.

When Frank Sorter was eighteen years old he left the paternal roof and started to make his own way in the world. He went to Burt County, Neb., in the spring of 1886, where he found employment on a farm and later farmed for himself. Seven years later he leased eighty acres on the Omaha Reservation, where he raised grain and corn for seven years. Next we find him on the prairie lands in Thurston County, breaking the virgin soil. In 1900 he went to Box Elder County, Utah, and bought forty acres from the Bear River Water and Irrigation Company. Here he remained seven years, and his principal crops were sugar beets, potatoes and alfalfa. On February 14, 1907, he landed at Los Molinos, Tehama County, Cal., bringing his stallion and brood mares with him from Utah. Here he purchased eighty acres of fine river bottom land for which he paid $100 per acre, and his crops were alfalfa, grain and hay. He further improved the place with a fine house, and within four years time he sold the property for $160 per acre. He then came to the San Joaquin Valley and settled in the Turlock Irrigation District, about five and a half miles northwest of Turlock, where he bought forty acres. He engaged in the breeding of fine horses and also ran a dairy, among his stock being some registered Holsteins. Mr. Sorter brought his land to a high state of cultivation, and at the end of seven years sold the place and stock at public auction. In 1918 he came to the Lodi section and purchased twenty acres in vineyard. Here he built a modern bungalow and has installed two irrigation plants.

The marriage of Mr. Sorter occurred at Dakota City, Neb., on April 10, 1893, and united him with Miss Letha Allen, a native of Mondamin, Iowa, but reared in Nebraska, the daughter of James and Nancy Allen. She is one of five children: Sena, Ella, Letha, William, and Louis. Her father was a farmer in Iowa and a pioneer in Nebraska, and there Mrs. Sorter received her education. Mr. Sorter's life has been active, useful and honorable and commands for him the esteem and confidence of his neighbors and friends.

MRS. MINNIE SPERBECK.—A lady who arrived in San Joaquin County over fifty years ago, Mrs. Minnie Sperbeck was born in Beetown, Grant County, Wisconsin. Her father, Oscar E. Hamlin, was born in Deansville, N. Y., and came out to Wisconsin when a young man, and there he married Martha J. Stephenson, a native of Terra Haute, Ind. Oscar Hamlin was a contractor and builder in Wisconsin. During the Civil War he served his country in a Wisconsin regiment. In 1872 Mr. Hamlin brought his family to Stockton, Cal., and here he followed the building business until his death. He was a member of the Masonic lodge and of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mrs. Sperbeck's mother passed away in San Francisco. Minnie Hamlin was the oldest of their nine children. Coming to Stockton in 1872, she completed the grammar school through attendance at the Old Crow schoolhouse.

At Placerville, on May 3, 1874, Minnie Hamlin was married to Andrew J. Sperbeck, who was born at Schenectady, N. Y., February 22, 1840, and came out to California, when a boy of fifteen years, in a sailing vessel around Cape Horn in 1855, landing at San Francisco. He followed mining in the Mother Lode region until he volunteered for service in the Civil War, enlisting on July 18, 1863, in Company I, 1st Regiment, California Cavalry. He served in Arizona and New Mexico until he was mustered out May 22, 1866. After the war he became a carpenter and was in partnership with O. E. Hamlin, and after his marriage Mr. Sperbeck continued in business for some years in Placerville. Mr. Hamlin moved away, but Mr. Sperbeck continued in the building business in that region until he died, June 30, 1887. He was a past master in Palmyra Lodge, F. and A. M., and a prominent G. A. R. man. He was a member of the Methodist Church.

After her husband's death, Mrs. Sperbeck sold their holdings in Placerville, and in October, 1887, she located in Stockton. She is a member of Homo Chapter, O. E. S., of Stockton, Rawlins Women's Relief Corps, and was a charter member and first chaplain of the local circle, Ladies of the G. A. R. Her deep interest in progress and protection for American industries and citizens leads her to be a staunch Republican.

MRS. MATTIE M. STEIN.—For years one of the most enthusiastic members of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, Mrs. Mattie M. Stein has been signally honored by election to high office in this organization, a fitting recognition of the zeal and interest she has displayed in furthering its commendable work, and evidence of her great popularity among its membership. A native of San Joaquin County, her birthplace was Stockton, her parents being John S. and Marie C. (Miller) Harney, honored pioneers whose biography appears elsewhere in this work. After completing her education, Mattie M. Harney was married at the residence of her parents, being united with John F. Stein, who was reared in Ohio, where he served an apprenticeship at the mercantile business. He came to California and first located in Eureka, where he was engaged in business until he removed to Lodi, where he was associated with Fredberger & Kaiser in the general merchandise business. Here his ability was appreciated and he became very popular in business affairs until he retired from business to devote his time to their vineyard. He passed away February 9, 1918, a man much mourned for his integrity and sterling worth. He was a member of the Odd Fellows and Foresters, and passed the chairs in both lodges. He also was the first treasurer of the Lodi fire department. Besides his widow he left a son, John A. Stein, a business man in Stockton, who is married and has three children. He is a Mason and is past president of Lodi Parlor, N. S. G. W. Mrs. Stein still owns the vineyard that she developed on the part of the old Harney ranch which she inherited from her father. It is now in full bearing and she has taken much pleasure in its care and development.

Mrs. Stein from the early age of eighteen has been active in the Native Daughters of the Golden West. She organized Ivy Parlor No. 88 at Lodi and was its first president, occupying that office for several terms, and was afterwards secretary for eighteen years. Four times she has been elected to office in the Grand Parlor. She was grand trustee for two years, marshal one year, and first vice president in 1921. At the meeting of the Grand Parlor at San Rafael, in June, 1922, she was elected grand president, the highest office that can be conferred in this organization. Mrs. Stein is intensely interested in her work as grand president and is faithfully giving her time to the duties of her office, visiting every Parlor in the State. She is also greatly interested in the children's agency work carried on by the Native Daughters, that has in the last twelve years placed 2600 children in homes. These homes are founded for orphans and waifs, regardless of the parentage, religion or lodge membership. Thus, the order is indeed accomplishing a long-felt want. Mrs. Stein will preside over the Grand Parlor which meets at Stockton, June 19 to 22, 1923. She has held the office of district deputy grand president of San Joaquin County. Her home city of Lodi takes just pride in her popularity and accords her a high place among its residents. She is also prominent in other organizations, being a member of the Lodi Woman's Club and corresponding secretary of the County Federation of Woman's Clubs of California. She is a member of Lodi Chapter No. 150, O. E. S., and Lodi Lodge of Rebekahs, being a past noble grand and past district deputy and ex-secretary of the latter. She is past president of Hartford Woman's Relief Corps No. 78, Lodi, and active in the patriotic work of the order.

GRANVILLE T. STOREY.—Among the energetic and far-sighted business men of Stockton may be found Granville T. Storey, the efficient manager of the Peoples Finance and Thrift Company, a loan institution of Stockton, being appointed to this office on November 8, 1921, by the board of directors. He was born in Starksville, Miss., on March 18, 1884. Later his parents removed to Texas and still later to Arkansas, where Granville T. attended the public schools and later entered the Spear-Langford Military College in Arkansas. Upon reaching young manhood, and after finishing his schooling, he returned to Dallas, Texas, and became the assistant cashier in the Santa Fe freight office, later entering the real estate and insurance business, in which line he proved his worth. In 1909 he removed to Stockton and became associated with the Lee C. Reid Real Estate Company, later establishing his own business. He then formed a partnership with J. P. Triolo, and for three years they continued in business together, when Mr. Storey became associated with the California Bean Growers Association. He was the founder of the Ford Federated Factors office in Stockton. His years of experience and careful, intelligent study of the real estate business has made him an authority on land values. He is now engaged in handling real estate and in building homes, and is meeting with his usual success. He has already erected over fifty homes in various parts of the city.

The marriage of Mr. Storey united him with Miss Eva M. Hul'én, a native of Placer County, Cal. Free from ostentation and display, he has nevertheless come to the front in connection with the business interests and public life of Stockton and San Joaquin County, and is doing much to shape public opinion and thought, his activities always contributing to progress and improvement.

SUNSET MACARONI FACTORY.—An enterprise of interest to Stocktonians is the Sunset Macaroni Factory, of 430 South American Avenue, under the able proprietorship of Messrs. Frank and David Stagnaro. The former was born near Genoa, Italy, on March 26, 1874, and as a boy was fortunate in gaining a thorough knowledge of the making of the finest kinds of macaroni. When, therefore, he came to the United States in 1889, he already had a capital with which to start in the New World on the road to success. Locating in Stockton, he attended private schools where he acquired English, and for thirteen years worked with the Stockton Woolen Mills, while for three years he was with the Holt Manufacturing Company. In 1905, in partnership with his brother David, he opened a small shop on Aurora Street, where they commenced to make macaroni, and from the beginning they turned out from 300 to 400 pounds daily. Later they removed to their present location on South American Avenue, where they erected their modern plant with a capacity of 3,000 pounds daily, and since then their trade has expanded so that their output is about 2,800 pounds daily. They manufacture thirty-four varieties of Italian paste, and their brand of Sunset Macaroni has become especially popular. They also make a fish-paste in the form of fish, which keeps its shape when cooked. Their factory, which is sanitary in every respect, is equipped with the latest machinery; and their wholesale trade is carried on throughout California, Nevada, and Oregon.

David Stagnaro was also born near Genoa, his birthday having been March 21, 1883, and he, too, came to Stockton in 1889. He pursued the courses provided in the Stockton schools, and after some experience in both the clothing and the grocery business, he entered into a partnership with his brother Frank, as stated above, and since then he has done his share in building up this well-equipped and well-conducted establishment, of which any business man might well be proud.

Frank Stagnaro is married and is the father of six children: Frank, Rilina, Margaret, John, David, and Fred. He belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, the Italian Society and the Red Men. David is also married and has one son, David P. Stagnaro. He also belongs to the Catholic Church, the Italian Society and the Red Men.

MAURICE JOSEPH BYRNES.—Coming from a pioneer family, and having for many years been very actively identified with business and official matters at Tracy, Maurice J. Byrnes is well and favorably known in southwestern San Joaquin County. At present he is the proprietor of the Byrnes Rooming House, located at the corner of Front and Sixth streets in the city of Tracy, and at the same time he owns and operates his 640-acre cattle-ranch in Stanislaus County. He is a son of Maurice Byrnes, who was one of Tracy's first settlers and served as constable for thirty-five years. The father was born in Ireland, as was also the mother, whose maiden name was Margaret Walsh. Both were young people when they came to America. They were married in the state of Connecticut and settled at New Haven, where the father became a baker. Arriving in California, they took up a homestead near Tracy. They possessed the qualities which made friends among the early settlers, and were held in highest esteem by all who knew them. Both are now deceased. Maurice Joseph is the only member of their family now left.

Maurice Joseph Byrnes was born upon the Byrnes ranch, four miles south of Tracy, on March 29, 1873. He attended the public schools, and later became a deputy constable, under his father, and was also associated with him in a business way at Tracy in early life. He soon branched out into the livery business, and for many years did a thriving business in that line in Tracy.

Mr. Byrnes' marriage occurred in Tracy, where he was united to Mrs. Ordway (nee Cross), born in the state of Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Byrnes are justly popular. Their guests receive kind and courteous attention, while their generous and public-spirited disposition has won for them a host of friends among their fellow-citizens in their home city.

FRED A. SANGUINETTI.—A native son of California, Fred A. Sanguinetti has been identified in a practical and successful manner with agricultural pursuits during all his active career. He resides on his thirty-five-acre vineyard five miles south of Lodi on Cherokee Lane. He was born north of Stockton on his father's ranch on June 20, 1871, a son of Stephen and Maria Sanguinetti, both natives of Italy, who came to California in 1860 and first settled at Stockton; then the father removed to the Waterloo district of San Joaquin County, where he purchased 175 acres of grain land and immediately set about improving it. He was among the first to set out a vineyard and orchard in that district. Fred A. is the third in a family of eight children born to his parents. The father lived to be seventy-eight years old and the mother is living, aged seventy-five years.

Fred A. Sanguinetti attended the Franklin school at Stockton; and when the family removed to the Waterloo district, he attended the Waterloo school. He assisted his father on the home place until he was twenty-nine years old, when he was united in marriage with Miss Corinda Maresco, in February, 1900. She was born at Stockton and is a daughter of Louis and Jennie Maresco, both natives of Italy. After his marriage, Mr. Sanguinetti spent one year at his father's home; then he took charge of his father's twenty-five-acre vineyard on the Eight-Mile Road out of Stockton, remaining there for two years; then he purchased his present thirty-five acres of grain land, which he set to Tokay and Zinfandel grapes. He has installed a five-inch pump with a twelve-horse-power engine for the irrigation of the vineyard, and a smaller one with a five-horse-power motor for domestic use, and has also built a house and other farm buildings on his ranch. Mr. and Mrs. Sanguinetti are the parents of two sons, Stephen and Leslie. Mr. Sanguinetti is affiliated with the Red Men of Stockton.
