MRS. CELESTA ANN HICKOK.—Among the honored and esteemed pioneer women of San Joaquin County the name of Mrs. Celesta Ann Hickok brings to mind the days of '49, the year her parents arrived in California and located at Sutter's Fort, where two days later our subject was born; thus she is the first child born at that historic place. Her birth occurred on July 6, 1849, and she was the eldest child of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Twitchell, the father a native of Ohio and his wife, formerly Irene Hopper, a native of Kentucky. Grandmother Hannah (Moore) Hopper, born in Ireland, lived to be 110 years old. She came to Kentucky when fifteen; was there married to William Hopper, who lived to be 105. They are both buried at San Juan. On the paternal side, Grandfather Joshua Twitchell lacked two months of reaching 100 years, and his wife, Ursula (Knight) Twitchell reached 101. They also are buried at San Juan. The party crossed the plains in a covered wagon, drawn by a pair of cows and a yoke of oxen and they passed the winter of '48 and '49 at Salt Lake City and on July 4, 1849, arrived at the south entrance of Sutter's Fort. When the miners learned of the birth of the little babe they were eager to see her and soon began to gather in large numbers. Of course they wanted to christen her, but the mother said her name was to be Celesta Ann; however, the miners always called her "California Flower." In 1864 the family came to San Juan and there they made their home, both passing away in Paso Robles.

The first marriage of Celesta Ann Twitchell occurred at Santa Cruz when she was fifteen years old and united her with William A. Stowell, also an early pioneer of California, who followed teaming and blacksmithing. He then removed to the San Juan Valley, near Hollister, and there the greater part of her life was spent and there her nine children were born: William L. and George D., of Fresno; Ellen, Mrs. James Rardin, of Centralia, Wash.; Franklin, deceased; Seth M. and Henry, of Rocklin; Fred B., of Stockton; Hattie, Mrs. George Marshall, of Berkeley; and Nettie, Mrs. Henry Jones, also of Rocklin. There are twenty-four grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren, the eldest of whom is now fifteen years old.

Subsequent to the demise of Mr. Cowell on June 8, 1908, she was married to William Hickok, a native of Pennsylvania, born April 13, 1846, a son of Noah and Eliza (Pratt) Hickok, both natives of Pennsylvania. Noah Hickok crossed the plains in 1852; four yoke of oxen hitched to a prairie schooner hauled the supplies, a span of horses hitched to a wagon and a riding horse completed the outfit. The span of horses arrived in fine condition and were sold at Sacramento for $600. Mr. Hickok first settled at Cold Springs, Cal., where he mined for a time; then in 1857 took up 160 acres of Government land seven miles north of Stockton on the Lower Sacramento Road and plied his trade of blacksmith at Woodbridge; the house where they lived is still standing. William Hickok is one of six children, himself and brother, Sylvender, being the only two living today.

The former worked on ranches and learned the blacksmith trade with his father until he was twenty-one years old, when he set out to earn his own way following his trade in various parts of the state. When he was fifteen years old he worked in the grocery store of Mark Lawson and delivered groceries to every house in Stockton. In 1903 he gave up blacksmithing and engaged in farming and dairying at Dos Palos, later at Turlock, and still later Paso Robles. In 1910 he purchased the Dorling ranch of thirty acres near French Camp and brought his stock from Paso Robles. He always raised a fine herd of Guernsey cattle and was successful in all that he undertook. In 1917 he sold his ranch and retired to pass the remainder of his days in rest and quiet and Mr. and Mrs. Hickok now reside at Stockton, 816 East Clay Street.

In 1864 Mr. Hickok enlisted in the Eighth California Infantry, which later became heavy artillery and was stationed at Fort Point, San Francisco harbor. He is a member of Hartford Post, G. A. R., Lodi, and Mrs. Hickok is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps and the Ladies of the G. A. R. Mr. Hickok is the father of nine children by two former marriages, all of whom are living, as follows: Nellie; Howard, of Salinas; Ella, Mrs. Jane O'Hare, of Palo Alto; Fred, of Salinas; Ada, Mrs. Davlin; Stella Hickok, Mrs. Lena Griffin, Walter and Viola, all of San Francisco. In the '49 parade held at Sacramento in May, 1922, Mr. and Mrs. Hickok occupied a prominent place and received much attention, for they are truly pioneers. On July 22, 1922, to enjoy a family reunion at her residence at 816 East Clay Street, her eight children, fifteen grandchildren, five great-grandchildren, and other relatives, gathered for the occasion.

JOHN CHRISMAN.—Born in Pennsylvania September 30, 1831, the late John Chrisman went through the public schools of the day and then attended a private school, the Phoenixville Classical Institute, taking a mathematical and civil engineering course. He was the son of Henry and Elizabeth (Yeager) Chrisman, both natives of Pennsylvania, the old homestead being located within a few miles of historic Valley Forge, and Grandfather Chrisman, a soldier in the Continental Army, was with Washington at Valley Forge.

At the age of twenty-two, John Chrisman emigrated to Illinois where he resided four years, when he visited his old home in Pennsylvania and then returned to Illinois where he was to join an immigrant train for California. In the spring of 1859 they left Mt. Carroll, Ill., for California, seven wagons drawn by oxen comprising the train as it drew out of Mt. Carroll; among the party were the following, all of whom are now deceased: Cyrus Needham, James Fields, Judge Briggs of San Jose, William Firmin, and others. Judge Briggs served as captain of the party and John Chrisman was chosen first lieutenant. The party originally started for Pike's Peak, Colo., but after leaving Platte River, they encountered a wagon train of emigrants on their return to the East and from them they learned that gold was not to be found in sufficient quantities to warrant settling there, so the party headed toward Carson Sink, and after six months and a half the train drew into what is now French Camp in September, 1859. Mr. Chrisman and a friend by the name of Rapp went to Knights Ferry where they worked with their five yoke of oxen. Later they worked for McHenry and Brewster further down on the Stanislaus, hauling material into the mountains. Then they rented land on the Stanislaus and for two years raised corn. From the Stanislaus Mr. Chrisman transferred his activities to San Jose and for seven years farmed near Alum Rock, this during the Civil War days. He joined the regular state militia and was first lieutenant of Company E, Fifth Cavalry. In the fall of 1867 with Cyrus and Charles Needham he moved to this section, and bought 200 acres just east of town, now known as the P. P. Schmidt place, on which he erected a small house, hauling the lumber from San Jose. In those days there was nothing better than a trail, and no towns between Livermore and Stockton.

Mr. Chrisman was always a staunch Republican, and a great admirer of President Lincoln, voting for him in 1860 and in 1864, and in politics was numbered among the leaders in San Joaquin County. For years he was a member of the Republican County Central Committee, and a school trustee of the Banta district, and after the change in district boundaries, was for many years trustee of Willow district which later became the Tracy district. He was a pillar in the Presbyterian Church, was active in establishing the present church in Tracy and for years was a member of its board of trustees. When old age necessitated his retirement he presented his resignation, but instead of accepting it the trustees made him an honorary member for life.

Mr. Chrisman was united in marriage in Santa Clara with Miss Ruth A. Hobson, and they were the parents of two children, Ruth A. and Elizabeth L. She passed away in 1869 and in 1873 he was married to Mrs. Savilla L. (Needham) Hatfield, a sister of Cyrus Needham, a member of the party crossing the plains with Mr. Chrisman, and one son, John C., was born to this union. Mrs. Chrisman was born in Vermont in 1846 and accompanied her parents to Illinois in 1852. Coming to California in 1869, she rode on the first train of the Central Pacific to traverse the western division into the San Joaquin County. On September 30, 1921, Mr. Chrisman was honored by his fellow-citizens upon the occasion of his ninetieth anniversary, taking him by surprise and remembering him kindly with presents and other marks of their respect. His death occurred May 23, 1922. Mrs. Christmas continues to live at the old home in Tracy.

JACOB PRESTON SARGENT, M. D.—Among the many notable families who have lived in San Joaquin County, perhaps no one was more widely or favorably known than the Sargents, and Dr. Jacob Preston Sargent was a worthy representative of this pioneer family. A native Californian, he was born on the old Sargent ranch in San Joaquin County, June 8, 1863, the son of Roswell C. Sargent, more familiarly known as Ross Sargent. The father was born in New Hampshire in 1821 and descended from sturdy New England stock. His earlier years were spent on the home farm, and when eighteen years of age he moved to Boston, where for a short period he worked for wages, afterward engaging in the milk business with his brother, J. P. Sargent. In 1847 he went to Chicago and was the pioneer ice merchant of that city. This enterprise he conducted for about two years, and in 1849, in company with his two brothers, J. L. and J. P. Sargent, he started overland for California, arriving on October 13, 1849. For a year and a half they engaged in mining, merchandising and teaming in Placerville, but in 1851 came to San Joaquin County, preempted land and started farming. From that time he began increasing his holdings by purchase and by reclamation of the rich overflowed land so that he became one of the largest landholders in the county, his holdings reaching in the neighborhood of 25,000 acres. Mr. Sargent used up-to-date methods in farming and was notably successful. He invested heavily in different manufacturing enterprises in the county and also in city property in Stockton. As the years passed, these holdings have grown enormously in value, and at the time of his death, June 15, 1902, he left an extremely valuable estate. Mr. Sargent was popular with all classes of people. He was an unassuming man and always showed great consideration for the rights of other people. Liberal and charitable to almost an excess, it is not strange that his death caused genuine sorrow in the homes of a large percentage of the people who knew and honored him. Mr. Sargent left two children, Jacob Preston, the subject of this sketch, and Mrs. F. N. Vail, of San Francisco.

Jacob Preston Sargent began his education in the district school in the vicinity of his home until fourteen years of age, after which he went for three years to St. Matthew's Hall at San Mateo, and for the two succeeding years to a private institution in Napa Valley. After this he attended for about six months at the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge. He then commenced attendance on medical lectures at Cooper Medical College, San Francisco, remaining two years. In the latter part of 1884 he commenced at Bellevue Medical College, New York, and was graduated there May 4, 1886. He practiced in the out-door department of Bellevue Hospital until the latter part of that year, when he returned to California. After practicing about three months in San Francisco, he went back to the ranch, and devoted his entire attention to the management of the estate, the large interests absorbing most of his time. At this time, the Sargent ranch consists of 3,700 acres, of which 183 acres are in vineyard, 1,000 acres devoted to grain raising, 2,000 acres in pasture and some in alfalfa. The vineyard is under the Stockton-Mokelumne irrigation system.

On November 14, 1889, Dr. Sargent was married at San Francisco to Miss Bettie Falk, a native of New York. Dr. Sargent passed away June 7, 1921. Highly esteemed among his many friends for his social nature and genial disposition, he formed strong friendships by his deference for the opinions of others and his kindly consideration.

ELDRIDGE L. REYNOLDS.—Among the old settlers of San Joaquin County Eldridge L. Reynolds ranks well to the fore, for he arrived with his parents in 1854, and almost continuously since that time has employed his energies in farming and stock-raising near Manteca. He has been successful, and as a citizen he ranks very high in the county. He was born in Grant County, Wis., December 2, 1844, the youngest son of James and Martha (Ramsey) Reynolds, natives of Kentucky, who crossed the plains to California in 1853 and in the fall of 1854 settled in San Joaquin County. The father, James Reynolds, paid $1.25 per acre for his ranch. He located on what is known as Sand Plains near the present location of the East Union Church and cemetery two miles northwest of Manteca. The first house built by James Reynolds was made of shakes, cut by hand, near Placerville, and were hauled by team to the ranch. Four sons are now living: David R., whose sketch will be found in this history; Eldridge L., our subject, and Edward are twins; and James A. resides at Capitola. Both parents are deceased, the mother reaching the advanced age of ninety-five years.

Eldridge L. Reynolds received his education in the district school near his home and his teachers were ex-senator Samuel Meyer and Judge Woodard. At the time of his father's death he received 240 acres as his share of the estate and for forty-two years he farmed and improved the property, his principal crops being grain, which yielded from thirty-five to forty bushels to the acre in early days. On his ranch he erected a $2,500 residence and $1,100 barn; he also planted orange trees and a vineyard of table grapes. He became well known for his high grade Holstein cattle and for his fine draft horses of the Clydesdale breed, and mules. Mr. Reynolds and his twin brother ran a threshing outfit in the valley for a number of years and became well acquainted in the county, and they also farmed together 1,000 acres of grain land on the west side, which produced in one year 10,500 sacks of wheat.

The marriage of Mr. Reynolds occurred on September 9, 1869, and united him with Miss Annie Campbell, a native of Wisconsin, one of his school-mates in that state, and his twin brother, Edward, married her sister. She and her sister came via Panama, stopping first in Nevada and a year later coming to San Joaquin County. She passed away March 25, 1911, an active member of the Brethren Church. As a youth Mr. Reynolds shot antelope and elk on the plains and grizzly bears were often seen in the mountains. Having sold his ranch in 1908, he is now living retired at his home, 920 South California Street, Stockton, enjoying the fruits of a life spent in useful and honorable toil and he has a very large circle of friends in this portion of California. In the earlier days he was an active member of the Grange in the East Union District.

CAPTAIN GEORGE H. MELONE.—The name of Capt. George H. Melone is a familiar one to nearly every citizen of Stockton which is not only his birthplace but has been his residence during his entire life, and he is honored and esteemed for the worthy part that he has taken in the various activities of the county. He was born in Stockton, Cal., October 28, 1869, the eldest of four living sons born to George W. and Eliza C. (Davis) Melone, both natives of Missouri. George W. Melone left his native state and crossed the plains to California in 1851 and located in Stockton where he established a general merchandise store, which he conducted for many years and at the same time was a successful auctioneer. For about two years he was the owner and proprietor of the Plaza store on Montgomery Street, San Francisco, in the days when the waters of San Francisco Bay came up to his back door, before the filling in of lower Market Street. He married Miss Eliza C. Davis, a daughter of J. M. Davis, a well-known California pioneer who crossed the plains in an early day. Seven sons and two daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Melone: Russell S. died at the age of forty-two; Joseph died in infancy; George H., of this sketch; Alice H. died at twenty-three; Gilbert S., of the firm of Melone & Perry of Stockton; Walter died when fourteen years old; Mabel died when twelve years old; Otis is a motorman on Stockton Electric Railway; Edward D., with the Sperry Flour Company in Stockton. George W. Melone was a Democrat in politics and fraternally was a member of Charity Lodge, I. O. O. F., and Centennial Lodge, K. P.

George H. Melone received a good education in the public schools of Stockton and his spare time was spent with his father helping in the store and was thus occupied until he was twenty-four years old, when he took a position as watchman on the passenger steamer Mary Garrett. He then became captain of the Victory, a vessel in the reclamation service. The reclamation of the Delta lands was begun in 1898 by John Hurd. Mr. Melone was the superintendent of the dredger pumps of the River Land and Reclamation Company and as such occupied a prominent place in the reclaiming of these lands. After eleven years of reclamation work he entered the employ of the California Navigation & Improvement Company as captain of the J. R. McDonald. At that time this company owned and operated two passenger steamers, three tow-boats and nine barges. Captain Melone then became pilot on the passenger steamer J. D. Peters and in December, 1920, became captain of the T. C. Walker.

The marriage of Captain Melone united him with Miss Lottie Muller, born in Stockton, a daughter of Daniel Muller, a hotel keeper of early days in Stockton. Mrs. Melone's maternal grandfather was Adam Schimmelpfennig, a native of Germany who came around the Horn to California and settled in Stockton in an early day. He was an accomplished musician, and was a member of Stockton's first bands. He bought a block of land from Captain Weber extending from Main Street to Weber Avenue and from Ophir to Sierra Nevada, the deed being signed by Capt. Weber himself. At time of purchase this land was in the country, but it is now a fine residence section of Stockton. Captain and Mrs. Melone are the parents of one daughter, Alice L. Fraternally Captain Melone is a member of the Stockton Elks.

CHARLES F. CAMPBELL.—For the past thirty-three years Charles F. Campbell has occupied a conspicuous place among the leading business men of San Joaquin County and with one exception has been the longest in his line, that of the shoe business. He was born in San Francisco, Cal., September 15, 1872, his parents being George W. and Mary A. (Grace) Campbell, natives of Maine and Ireland, respectively. Charles F., the subject of this sketch, is the fourth of six children, the others being George H., who died at thirty-nine years, was well known in Stockton business circles; Florilla, John P., Mrs. Ella Spurr, and Mrs. Grace Myers. George W. Campbell came to California in 1849 and the following year settled in Stockton, where he engaged in teaming to Tuolumne County; then he located in San Francisco where he conducted a butcher business. Returning to Stockton in 1877 he engaged in teaming and draying for a number of years. He was an Odd Fellow and a member of the Volunteer Firemen. Both parents are now deceased. When the family returned to Stockton, Charles F. Campbell was five years old, so that practically his entire life has been spent within the confines of San Joaquin County. He attended the Franklin, the old South, now the Jackson, and the old Lafayette schools. At ten years of age he began to clerk in a cigar store after school hours and during vacation, first for King & Sequera, at the corner of Hunter Street and Weber Avenue; later in Smith's cigar store on South Center Street; also for Miles Pearman and the Mekow cigar store on Center Street. At seventeen years of age he was a clerk in the store of Arndt & Gumpert at 181 El Dorado Street. Thirty-three years ago he entered the shoe business in Stockton, his first employer being John Garwood and for twenty years the store was located at 324 East Main Street. On August 1, 1909, he organized the Campbell & Gealey Shoe Company with R. W. Gealey as partner; later Mr. Gealey sold his interest to his brother, J. W. Gealey. The first store was located at 309 East Main Street and four years ago it was moved to 339 East Main Street. Campbell & Gealey are leaders in their line and year by year have gained prestige, always keeping their stock up-to-date and carrying only the best lines of shoes manufactured.

On April 23, 1901, Mr. Campbell was married to Miss Annie E. Donegan, born in Jacksonville, Ore., and they are the parents of five children: Charles F., Jr., Hubert G., Kenneth E., Margaret and Florilla A. Mr. Campbell is one of the organizers of the Stockton Midway Oil Company whose field is in Kern County, and is secretary and treasurer of the company. He is a charter member of the Stockton Knights of Columbus and was grand knight for one term and for the past twelve years has been financial secretary; he has also been a delegate to the grand lodge; he is a member of the Young Men's Institute, has passed through all the chairs of that organization, and belongs to the Stockton Progressive Business Men's Club.

REDWOOD W. FISHER.—A lifelong resident of San Joaquin County, who as a farmer and dairyman has been very successful and attained a place of prominence in his locality is Redwood W. Fisher, the owner of a fine dairy ranch four miles west of Ripon. He was born near Lathrop, Cal., August 25, 1889, the second son of William R. and Jennie (White) Fisher.

A pioneer rancher, William R. Fisher was born in Providence, R. I., in 1847, and about 1862 came to California and located in San Joaquin County, where he and his brother, Morton C. Fisher, were active in the reclamation work on Roberts Island during the early days. There were three children in the family, all of whom survive the parents: John White Fisher resides in San Francisco and is associated with the Fiske Rubber Company; Redwood W. is the subject of this sketch; and Mrs. Percy Hollingsworth Burns resides in Berkeley, Cal. The father passed away at the Fisher home in Stockton, February, 1917, and the mother survived until April 9, 1922, when she died, leaving a large estate, of which our subject is administrator.

Redwood W. Fisher was reared and educated in Stockton, where he attended the El Dorado school. He took up the study of the clarinet and at eight years of age became a member of the Stockton boys' band, under the leadership of E. B. Condy; later he became a professional musician and followed it for fifteen years in Stockton and vicinity.

In April, 1913, Mr. Fisher was married to Miss Laura Inez Hutchinson, a daughter of Frank and Mary Ellen (Nutt) Hutchinson, prominent citizens of Ripon, whose sketch is also found in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher are the parents of four children: Frances Inez; William Redwood; Janette White; and Lizette Warner. Before turning his attention to ranching, Mr. Fisher was associated with his brother in running a bicycle store in Stockton, which they operated for five years. In 1914, Mr. Fisher purchased forty acres of bare land west of Ripon which he has developed into one of the best and most profitable dairy ranches in the county. Mr. Fisher is a Republican in politics and serves as a trustee of the San Joaquin school district southwest of Ripon and is counted a leader in district affairs.

MRS. ALICE LASELL HURD.—A well known resident and general agriculturist of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County, Mrs. Alice Lasell Hurd was born on the old Norton homestead, purchased in 1862 by her father. She is the daughter of Oscar O. and Maria J. (Elliott) Norton, the former a native of Schulyer County, N. Y., born January 1, 1832 and the latter a native of New Hampshire born October 8, 1836. Grandfather Willis W. Norton was also a native of New York and he was a schoolteacher and farmer; he passed away in 1884 at the age of eighty-two years, and Grandmother Norton passed away three years later at the age of eighty-three years.

Oscar O. Norton was the second oldest in a family of seven children and was reared on a farm in New York until the age of nineteen, attending school in the winter, and going two years to Starkey Seminary. When nineteen years old he went to work for himself, teaching school. In 1854 he went to Illinois, where he taught school and worked at the carpenter's trade, which he had learned in New York. In 1859 he came to California, going on a visit to his old home first, then taking passage at New York City on the steamer Star of the West; on the Pacific side he took the Golden Age, arriving in San Francisco, July 15, 1859. He came immediately to Stockton and obtained work in the harvest fields and worked until he purchased his first property from Thomas F. Smith, which was located about ten miles from Stockton and they farmed in partnership until Mr. Norton bought him out. In 1865 he bought an added eighty acres, and in 1872 eighty more, making 320 acres. His next purchase was the property, a portion of which is now the home place of Mrs. Hurd, in 1880, consisting of 160 acres. The following year, Mr. Norton, erected a handsome residence and carried on general farming, raising grain and stock and also planted about eight acres to vineyard, this being one of the first commercial vineyards in the county. He became one of the leading farmers of his locality and his home was one that attracted the attention of the passers-by.

Mr. Norton was a member of Lodi Grange, No. 92, and also of the Congregational Church at that place. On October 4, 1860, he was married to Miss Maria J. Elliott, daughter of Edmund and Sarah Elliott, who crossed the plains in 1859. The ox-team train in front of the Elliott train was burned by the Indians and many of its members came on to California with the Elliott train. Alice E., the subject of this review, and Arthur L. now residing in Southern California are the surviving members of a family of three children. The father passed away on April 28, 1909, at the age of seventy-seven years and the mother at the age of seventy-six on December 31, 1912.

Alice E. Norton attended the old red school house south of Lodi until she was thirteen years old, then to Lodi and finished her education at Mills College at Oakland. On January 1, 1885, she was married to Alvah S. Lasell, born at St. Albans, Vt., on October 26, 1856; a son of Smith and Sarah Lasell. In 1875 Mr. Lasell came to California and for six years was employed as miller with the Sperry Flour Company at Stockton; in 1888 he moved to Santa Cruz County and conducted a lumber mill between San Jose and Soquel; then as Mrs. Lasell's father became unable to handle his ranch, they moved there and conducted it until Mr. Norton's death. When the estate was divided by Mrs. Norton, Mrs. Lasell received forty-five acres with the buildings as her share. Mr. and Mrs. Lasell were the parents of one son, Lester Norton Lasell, who is residing on ten acres of the old Norton place. He married Lillian Widerey and they have three children—Donald W., Marion Alvah, and Lois Ellen. Mr. Lasell was a trustee of the Live Oak school board and was instrumental in securing the erection of the present school building; he was also an active member of the Almond Grower's Association and fraternally was a member of the Odd Fellows and the Knights of Pythias of Stockton. Mr. Lasell died in 1917.

In 1919, Mrs. Lasell was united in marriage with Clarence W. Hurd, a son of Charles Hurd. A splendid, new residence was completed on her ranch in August, 1920. The ranch has sixteen acres in vineyard, nine of which is in full bearing and ten acres are devoted to alfalfa. Mrs. Hurd is a Republican and a member of the Lodi Woman's Club and is a past noble grand of the Rebekahs of Lodi.

JOHN CULVER HAMMOND.—The history of a community is best told in the lives of its citizens, and when these citizens are men of forceful character, progressive and public spirited, giving of the best of their lives not alone to the upbuilding of their own fortunes but to the establishment and maintenance of enterprises calculated to advance the general welfare of those about them, then indeed is such a career worthy of a place in the highest type of citizenship. Such qualities and characteristics have distinguished the life of John Culver Hammond, who came to California with his parents in 1854 and grew to manhood in San Joaquin County and who has proved a dominant force in the upbuilding of this commonwealth and the development of the county.

A descendant of one of the oldest and most prominent American families, dating back to 1634 when Elizabeth Hammond, her son Benjamin, and three daughters landed in Boston Sept. 18, 1634 on the ship Griffin, John Culver Hammond was born in North Abington, Plymouth County, Mass., on October 19, 1865, a son of George and Susanna (Shaw) Hammond. Grandfather Benjamin Hammond was a farmer in the vicinity of North Abington, Mass., and influential in that community. The father, George Hammond, was born in Carver, Mass., on June 21, 1815, and his wife was born in North Abington, Mass., on April 21, 1816. George Hammond came to California by the Panama route in the spring of 1864 settling at Lockeford, San Joaquin County, where he engaged in farming on a quarter section of land which he purchased, and on which he made his home until his death at the age of eighty-nine years. George Hammond's first marriage united him with Susanna Shaw, who passed away on November 29, 1874, and they were the parents of eight children, namely: Delia Marcella Hammond, the oldest daughter, was born in North Abington, Mass., on May 30, 1836 and was married to Dr. Dean J. Locke and they had thirteen children, Luther J., Ada, Horace Mann, Nathaniel H., Ida, May, William W., Hannah, John Calvin, Edward, Eunice, George, and Theresa. Mrs. Locke is still living in Lockeford. The second daughter, Susan Lucretia Hammond was born in North Abington, Mass., on January 13, 1839, and married George Shipley Locke, a brother of Dean J. Locke and they had eleven children, Sarah, A. J., Elmer Hammond, George Franklin, Wallace H., Almy, Lilla, John G., Mertice, Franklin H., and Almy G. Roland G. Hammond, the eldest son, was born at North Abington, Mass., on May 18, 1842, came with his parents to California and farmed near Lockeford until his death in 1901. He married Miss Rebecca Taylor in 1876 and they were the parents of six children; Alice Edna, Alberta Josephine, George, Estella May, Ina Pearl, and Nellie. Josiah Shaw Hammond was born at North Abington, Mass., on September 10, 1842, was graduated from the San Jose State Normal School in 1868 and from Cooper Medical College at San Francisco, in 1873 and is now practicing his profession at Butte, Montana. He married Miss Ann Eliza Simpson, a native of St. Louis, Mo., and they have six children, Emma Louise, Kate T., Hattie, Delia, Nelson, and Benjamin. Horace Alfred Hammond, the third son, was born at North Abington, Mass., on August 7, 1847, resides in Oakland, Cal., and is an engineer. His first marriage occurred on April 7, 1880, and united him with Miss Dolly McGregor, a native of San Francisco, who died in Oakland in 1884, leaving one child, Amy Evelyn. His second marriage united him with Miss Anna Elizabeth Harges. Hannah Sturtevant Hammond, the third daughter, was born December 12, 1849, and married Thomas B. Geffroy, who passed away in San Joaquin County. Mrs. Geffroy resides at Lodi and is the mother of seven children, Mabel, Carrie, Bertha, Arthur, Richard, Susie, and Amy. Clara Cobb Hammond, the fourth daughter, was born in North Abington, Mass., on November 8, 1853; on January 24, 1872, she married Rev. Orville Allen Ross, of Uxbridge, Mass., and they were the parents of eight children, Nettie Taylor being the only child living.

John Culver Hammond, the subject of this review and the youngest child of George Hammond's family, came with his parents to San Joaquin County in 1864 and was reared and educated at Lockeford. Previous to his death, George Hammond, the father, had sold a portion of his quarter section to his son Roland, but John Culver later leased this from his brother and engaged in general farming on the quarter section. John Culver received thirty-seven acres from his father's estate, which was grain land; he has since added to this until he now has ninety-five acres all in vineyard and the house in which he lives was built by his father in 1867.

The marriage of Mr. Hammond occurred in Lockeford on September 21, 1882, and united him with Miss Lucie Jane Coil, a native of Lincoln, Ill., born on December 25, 1864, a daughter of James Anderson and Mary Eliza Coil, both natives of De Witt County, Ill. They were the parents of three children, Mrs. Hammond being the oldest. Charles C. Coil is a merchant of Lockeford, and Myrtle is Mrs. Frank Hill of Fresno, Cal. Mrs. Hammond came to California with her parents in 1874 and received her education in the Lockeford schools. Her father passed away at the age of seventy-nine, while her mother died at the age of thirty-four years. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond are the parents of five children, as follows: Horace Coil Hammond married Miss Lena Dudley and they are the parents of one son, John C. H. C. is an employee of the Southern Pacific Railroad at Oakland; Alice Ethel married Dr. Phillip Petch, a native of Humboldt County, Cal., now practicing medicine in Oakland and they are the parents of one son, Phillip, Jr.; Myrtle Coil is a graduate nurse at the Stanford Hospital; James Anderson resides at home with his parents. On August 13, 1917, he entered the service of his country as a private and was sent to Camp Tanforan, Cal., in Battery B, 144th Field Artillery, 40th Division, known as the California Grizzlies. He remained at Camp Tanforan until October of 1917 when he was sent to Camp Kearney where he remained until August 2, 1918 and in August 15 of that year left New York for France. He trained first at Poitiers; then was sent to Bordeaux and after the armistice was signed was at Claremont-Ferrand, near Lyons, France, his foreign service covering the period from August 15, 1918, to January 3, 1919. Returning to the United States and California, he was discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco, when he returned to his home in Lockeford. Clara Cobb Hammond, the youngest child is now Mrs. Charles Utterback residing at Christian Colony and they are the parents of two children, Charles, Jr., and Marjorie Jane. In politics, Mr. Hammond is a Republican, and fraternally is a past grand of the Odd Fellows, while Mrs. Hammond is a past noble grand of the Live Oak Lodge of Rebekahs. The family have been identified with the upbuilding of Lockeford and have been factors in movements for the betterment of the social and moral conditions of the people.

AUGUST J. ZITLAU.—A prominent young banker of Stockton whose rise in the financial world has been rapid, due entirely to his ability and initiative, is August J. Zitlau, vice-president of the Sacramento-San Joaquin Bank, Stockton, successors to the Farmers & Merchants Bank. A man of marked ability, he is eminently qualified for the important post he occupies and already he has become an important factor in the banking circles of the community. A native son of California, Mr. Zitlau was born at Oakland March 18, 1886, the son of August F. and Catherine (Orth) Zitlau, well-known residents of Oakland. The father came to San Francisco in the early days from his native land, Germany, and for many years has been engaged in the flour milling business. Mrs. Zitlau, also a native of Germany, came to this country when a child, her marriage to Mr. Zitlau occurring in New York and they came to California on their honeymoon.

August J. Zitlau attended the Oakland public schools and graduated from the Oakland high school, and displaying a decided bent for journalism, he entered the newspaper field, first on the reportorial staff of the Oakland Tribune, and later with its advertising department. Here he remained for five years, a period that was of great value in its broadening view, and then accepted a position with the Anglo-California Trust Company of San Francisco. Fortunate in his association with this great financial institution, he gained a thorough grounding in the banking business, learning all of its details as well as accumulating a broad, comprehensive knowledge of the financial world and its operations. In 1913 Mr. Zitlau came to Stockton, becoming the assistant cashier of the Commercial & Savings Bank, resigning there in June, 1919, to become cashier of the Farmers & Merchants Bank, a post he handled so efficiently and constructively that when the bank merger with the Sacramento interests was made in the summer of 1920, he was appointed to the vice-presidency of this great financial institution.

On November 8, 1916, Mr. Zitlau was married to Miss Marjorie Littlehale, a native daughter of Stockton, and they are the parents of a little girl, Jane. Prominent in fraternal circles, Mr. Zitlau is a member of San Joaquin Lodge No. 19 F. & A. M. Stockton Chapter 28 R. A. M., Stockton Commandery, K. T., and Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Oakland and belongs to the Yosemite Club, the Stockton Golf and Country Club, and is a charter member of the Stockton Den of Lions, being treasurer of this organization.

A. J. Zittau.

MRS. ISABELLA SHERIDAN.—The earliest recollections of Mrs. Isabella Sheridan are associated with the crossing of the plains to California, where she has resided since she was four years old. She was born in Linn County, Mo., on April 15, 1848, the daughter of Solomon and Phoebe Epperly, her father a pioneer farmer of that state. Leaving Missouri with a span of horses and two oxen on the 14th day of April, 1852, the family came over the Sierra Nevada mountains by what is known as the Silver Lake route, and arrived in California on August 26, 1852. They settled at Vulcano and two years later at a point about two miles west of Lockeford near the old brick church, which still stands; there Mrs. Epperly bought out a claim and as there was no house on the place, the family lived in a tent until the father could build a house, which he did by cutting down trees, the logs were split and a flat surface hewed on one side of the log with a broad-ax. There were no nails to be had, and the logs were held together with wooden pegs, and the house was constructed eighteen feet square. For two years the family lived in this house with only a dirt floor; then a wooden floor was put in. Clearing his quarter section of land was laborious and slow, there being a thick undergrowth of chaparral and scrub oak, but it was finally accomplished. Solomon Epperly lived to be eighty-five years old, the mother passing away at the age of sixty-nine. They were the parents of nine children: Hawkins is living at the age of ninety years; Patience is eighty-eight years old; Frank, Zeralda, Evelyn, Elizabeth, Julia, Isabella, our subject, and Rebecca, only three now living.

Dr. D. J. Locke, Mr. Holman and D. J. Staples erected a schoolhouse one mile west of Lockeford made of canvas with benches made out of logs flattened on one side and in this schoolhouse Isabella Epperly started to school at the age of six years, with Mr. Wheelock as teacher, the school term covering a period of about three months out of each year. About the time of the Civil War the Octagon schoolhouse was built, so-called because of its octagonal shape.

Isabella Epperly made her home with her parents until her marriage on August 20, 1865, to Frank Sheridan, a son of William and Sarah Sheridan, his father a native of Ireland, where he passed away. Frank Sheridan came to California with his sister across the plains in 1852 from Missouri, where they had first settled upon reaching the United States. He received his education at Merced Falls, Cal., and grew to young manhood on a ranch and consequently he became interested in the stock business and followed the butcher business as a livelihood. Mr. and Mrs. Sheridan spent one year in Lockeford; then they moved to Snelling where Mr. Sheridan conducted a butcher shop for eleven years; then they moved to Turlock and Mr. Sheridan engaged in the same line of business. In 1878 the family moved back to Lockeford and Mr. Sheridan ran a meat market until he passed away in 1897. They were the parents of seven children: the first one died in infancy; Caroline Louise is Mrs. W. L. Young of Lockeford; Anna Josephine is Mrs. Stamper of San Francisco; Katherine May is Mrs. Hartwell of Tracy; Cora Belle is Mrs. Winkleman of San Francisco; Frank died in 1899; Emelda is Mrs. Craig of Fresno. Mr. Sheridan was a member of the old Workman Lodge of Lockeford. Mrs. Sheridan is the second oldest pioneer living in Lockeford today and it has been her good fortune to see the improvements and developments of the county and state from a wilderness to its present prosperity.

JAMES J. HAYES.—A successful business man who is also an experienced horticulturist, and who in both undertakings has displayed ability as a systematic manager, is James J. Hayes, who was a successful contractor and builder in Stockton for about twenty-five years. He was born at Swanton, Wayne County, Pa., on February 26, 1854, a son of Timothy and Julia (Carey) Hayes. The father was a native of County Cork, Ireland, and came to the United States in 1811 and saw service in the War of 1812. He was second cousin to President Hayes. The mother came from old Pennsylvania-Dutch stock and was the mother of fourteen children, seven sons and seven daughters, twelve of whom are still living. The father also served in the Mexican War and all through the Civil War was commander of the Army of the Potomac. He died aged 109, having rounded out a full life.

When James J. Hayes was eleven years of age he ran away from home and made his way to California where he joined his uncle, Colonel Thomas Hayes, who was at one time in command of Fremont's army and during 1864 he raised a company of men to join the southern forces and James J. Hayes joined them. Poncho Vallejo, son of Ex-Governor Vallejo, furnished about 200 horses for this company and they started out from San Francisco on their journey south; at Fort Yuma they were captured by Colonel Miles after crossing the Colorado River at Yuma. Bribing the guard with whiskey, they crossed the line as immigrants, but the news soon reached Colonel Miles who went after them and captured the entire company and sent them back to San Francisco on the sloop of war, St. Mary, where they were held prisoners of war for ninety days. James J. Hayes lived with his uncle until he passed away in 1868, then he took up the trade of ship carpenter and in 1887 settled in Stockton, where he engaged in the contracting business until about ten years ago. He built many of the older and larger buildings here.

The marriage of Mr. Hayes occurred in France in 1890 and united him with Miss Mary Parsaul, a native of Canada, born of French parents and who had gone to France to complete her musical education and there the young people met and were married. They are the parents of one daughter, Ethel, now the wife of S. D. Hewlett, manager of J. W. Galway & Company, and they have a daughter, Babe Hayes Hewlett, a graduate in June, 1923, of Stockton high school and a girl of fine literary talent. During twenty-two years spent in traveling, Mr. Hayes was a United States deputy marshal and it was during one of his trips to the district of Normandy, France, for the ship company that he was married to Miss Parsaul. Mr. Hayes is a member of the National Builders Trade Council and politically is a Democrat. He owns a sixteen-acre ranch devoted to orchard and alfalfa which has been developed into a very fine home place. He has always been a chicken fancier and was one of the organizers of the first poultry association in Stockton. He is still raising show birds and has some that he has exhibited at all the poultry shows in the state and taken prizes.

WILLIAM WESLEY FITZGERALD, M. D.—One of the most representative citizens of San Joaquin County who has made a name for himself as a physician and surgeon and who is also widely known as the pioneer in the English walnut industry of the county, is W. W. Fitzgerald of Stockton. A native son, he was born on a ranch about seven miles east of the city on June 1, 1868, the son of the pioneer, Philip Fitzgerald, a native of New Jersey but who was reared in Indiana from early boyhood and there followed farming until he set out for California in 1850, and arrived in Stockton in 1851, after having traveled for months behind slow-moving oxen. He first tried his luck at mining, then engaged in freighting to the mines from Stockton with ox teams. As he prospered in hauling supplies to the mining camps he bought land in the vicinity of Linden and there he set out one of the first vineyards, consisting of ten acres, in the county. As he had demonstrated that grapes would grow successfully here he enlarged his vineyard to thirty acres. In the early days prices were very good for wine grapes and the value of land increased in proportion when it was found that it would grow trees and vines. Philip Fitzgerald was twice married: his first wife was Miss Jane Kindle and a native of Wisconsin. They had five children: William W.; Emily; Josephine; Albert and Oattie. His second marriage with Miss Dora Hoffman resulted in the birth of three children: James W., Mark, and Clarence. Both parents of Dr. Fitzgerald are now deceased.

W. W. Fitzgerald attended the public schools of San Joaquin County, finishing with a course in the Stockton Business College. Desiring to become a physician he entered Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia and in due time received his M. D. degree, then he followed his profession in Philadelphia for a time. Upon the death of his father in 1895, he returned to Stockton and soon was recognized as one of the leading physicians and surgeons in the county, his practice taking him to almost every section of it, and for years he remained active as a leader in professional circles. During the years of his active practice he had associated with him at different times four young physicians, all of whom have become prominent in the profession. For many years Dr. Fitzgerald was surgeon for the Southern Pacific.

While acting as railroad surgeon Dr. Fitzgerald made frequent visits to Southern California, and being a keen observer as to the possibilities of the soil and climate of San Joaquin County, having been reared on a ranch, he concluded that soft shell walnuts would thrive here. He brought scions of the various kinds of English walnuts from the South and grafted them on to the black walnut trees in various parts of the county to test out both climatic and soil conditions. After several years' careful scientific experimental work he selected the Eureka and Payne varieties as the best suited to the local conditions and in 1909 he set out one of the very first commercial English walnut groves in the county, consisting of sixty acres, four and one-half miles southeast of Lodi. Still continuing his experimental work he demonstrated that the climatic conditions were ideal for the culture of walnuts as the trade winds from the ocean which follow the Bay to Stockton cool the hot air of the locality and enables the nuts to fill and mature. These two species named are hardy, uniform in size and command the highest prices in the markets of the East. After experimenting for about five years Dr. Fitzgerald set out his first grove in 1909, and one of 100 acres on Cherokee Lane in 1915.

After many years of professional work Dr. Fitzgerald retired in 1918. Having been the pioneer in the walnut growing industry in San Joaquin County, others have followed in his footsteps until the industry is now looked upon as becoming one of the principal horticultural projects in this section. Always willing to help others who are following his lead, his counsel is often sought by those contemplating the planting of English walnut groves; and besides he has been contributing to various journals on the subject of walnut growing and culture, also has given many lectures. In 1915 he was asked to address the American Pomological Society at its meeting in Berkeley on this subject. From a hobby the growing of walnuts has become a very profitable commercial enterprise with Dr. Fitzgerald and he is a member of the California Walnut Growers Association.

Dr. Fitzgerald was united in marriage on September 8, 1914, with Miss Dorothy Eproson, a native daughter, born at Milton, and she shares with her husband the good will and esteem of all who know them. He is a member of Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Stockton Council No. 10, R. & S. M.; Stockton Commandery, K. T.; and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. in San Francisco; he also belongs to Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and the Iroquois Tribe of Red Men. Taking his career from any standpoint it shows that Dr. Fitzgerald has been a benefactor in professional, commercial and horticultural circles and is entitled to the commendation of his fellow citizens who hold him in high esteem.

JAMES A. BARR.—High on the list of educators who have achieved marked success in their calling is found the name of James A. Barr, a man of fine intellectual attainments and executive ability who has devoted many years to the furtherance of the high standards of the state's educational system and has also found time in his busy life for much public service work. A native of Kentucky, Mr. Barr first saw the light of day in a log cabin near Union Star, Breckinridge County, on July 19, 1863. His parents were Henry Harrison and Susan Mary (Moorman) Barr, now deceased, and they were both born in the Blue Grass State. Leaving their Kentucky home the family went to Illinois and from there to Missouri, continuing their westward migration to California in 1875. They settled at Collegeville, San Joaquin County, and there the father farmed for three years, then removed to Stockton with his family.

The only child in the Barr family, James A. Barr, was twelve years old when his parents arrived in California. For a time he attended the rural school at Collegeville, and then for a year and a half he was in the Stockton high school. He was obliged to go to work early in life but his ambition for an education never wavered and he educated himself by long hours of study at night, after his day's work was over. His first employment was as office boy in an employment agency on Center Street, Stockton, where he received ten dollars a month; next he was with the Pacific Bakery for two years, getting fifteen dollars a month the first year and twenty-five dollars the second year, arising at four o'clock Sunday mornings to deliver baked beans to the customers. For a time he worked in a grocery store, all the while saving his money, and he was then able to attend the Stockton Business College for six months, Fisher R. Clarke being at the head of the school.

After he had received a teacher's certificate, Mr. Barr started out with a horse and buggy, looking for a position, and after driving three or four days through the country up into Calaveras and Amador counties, he was assigned to the Julian district school in Amador County, sixty dollars a month being the salary of country teachers at that time. His second school was in the Clements district, and the next year he was elected principal of the Jefferson school in Stockton. After four years there he became principal of the Fremont school, but after teaching there only three months he was elected to the office of city superintendent of schools of Stockton, holding this important post for twenty years, from 1891 to 1911, continuously, probably a record in California schools. An enthusiast in all matters relating to educational activities, during this long term of service Mr. Barr left the imprint of his high ideals on the public school system of Stockton, wisely shaping its policies and progress.

Shortly after severing his connection with the schools of Stockton, Mr. Barr was elected to the secretaryship of the California Teachers' Association, helping to organize this body. He took up his residence at Oakland and after one year in office he was honored by election to the office of Director of Congresses, to take charge of the conventions to be held at San Francisco during the Panama-Pacific Exposition in 1915. This was a most important position and Mr. Barr fulfilled its duties with great success, serving for four years, and being the means of additional thousands of visitors attending the Exposition. He made several trips across the continent, visiting many states and interviewing big, influential men. Through Mr. Barr's efforts 928 conventions were held in San Francisco during the Exposition, more than twice as many as were held in St. Louis, and four times as many as were held in Chicago during its exposition. A postage stamp campaign was also used by Mr. Barr in his publicity work, 750,000 letters being sent out, $13,000 being spent for postage. At present he is assistant secretary of the California Teachers' Association, the duties of the office requiring his spending a part of the time in San Francisco, the remainder being spent at his Stockton home, looking after his business interests here.

Mr. Barr's marriage united him with Miss Julia Inez Mann, a native daughter of Stockton, whose father, Stephen H. Mann, was a pioneer gold miner of the state, and who lived to the fine old age of ninety-two years. Mr. and Mrs. Barr are the parents of two children: James A., Jr., and Doris, and the family make their home at 105 East Magnolia Street, Stockton. Public spirited and loyally interested in the commercial as well as the educational progress of the community, some twenty years ago Mr. Barr developed the plan on which the Chamber of Commerce of Stockton was based, giving much of his time to its organization and helping in increasing the membership in a week's campaign from twenty to 600. He is past noble grand of Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. F., past chief patriarch of Parker Encampment, and belongs to the Stockton Elks and the California School Masters' Club.

Almost every man has some hobby and Professor Barr has one of the most interesting that one could imagine. For forty years he has been making a study of Indian life as found in San Joaquin County and he has collected the largest assortment of Indian implements from that region to be found anywhere. In that collection is found an assortment of 157 Obsidian curved knives, the largest collection of its kind in the possession of an individual in the U. S. He has pipes, beads, clay-balls, arrow and spear heads, etc. He has studied Indian lore and is an authority on the history of the Indians of early days. Besides this he has been gathering data and tabulating same, of historical topics of almost every description; and to top it all he has a large collection of unmounted photographs covering the development of the city, county and industrial life. This work has taken Mr. Barr years to gather, tabulate and index, but it means much to the coming generations who may have an opportunity to enjoy this wonderful collection in a museum that may possibly be erected by some public-spirited citizen of Stockton.

THOMAS B. PARKER.—Well known throughout San Joaquin County, Thomas B. Parker is a representative of best ideals of citizenship and progressive enterprise, and is one of the extensive farmers of the county, having a fine estate of 150 acres, one and a half miles east of Lockeford, a portion of the ranch settled by his father in the early '50s. A native Californian, he was born on his father's ranch in San Joaquin County, October 22, 1862, a son of Thomas B. and Margaret (Givens) Parker, both natives of Hopkinsville, Ky., and in early days moved to Missouri and located in Henry County. The father first came to California in 1850 and engaged in the stock business, but two years later returned to Missouri, where he remained for a time. Then he brought his family across the plains in 1854, driving the cattle, while his family came behind as a part of a large emigrant train. Settling in the northwestern part of San Joaquin County, Mr. Parker bought a squatter's right to 320 acres, but afterward had to pay the railroad for it. On a portion of this ranch our subject is living today. The father passed away when Thomas B. was about a year old and his mother afterwards married M. E. Bryant.

Thomas B. Parker had very little opportunity for schooling, but the education he received was while attending the Athearn school, then located on the Mokelumne River bottom, and the Mackville and Elliott schools. When he was nineteen years old he left home and went to Mason Valley, Nev., where he worked for Mason, of Miller & Lux, Mason being the head of the Nevada ranch. He then returned to Lockeford and worked on various ranches for three or four years.

Here the first marriage of Mr. Parker occurred at Lockeford at the old Parker home on May 8, 1884, and united him with Miss Margaret Atwood, a native of Logansport, Ind., who had come to California on a visit and met and married Mr. Parker. They were the parents of two children: Roy met death by accident at the age of fourteen, and Edith died when twenty-two years old. Mrs. Parker passed away in January, 1920, from influenza. His second marriage occurred on August 7, 1920, and united him with Mrs. Ossie (Wade) Holmes, a native of Morton, Miss., a daughter of Lafayette and Susan (Lingle) Wade, who were plantation owners in the rich delta land of the Mississippi River. Her parents are of Scotch-Irish descent and Mrs. Parker is one of the younger children. A brother, John W. Wade, is judge of the Circuit Court, first division, at Little Rock, Ark., and takes an active part in politics. After his first marriage, Mr. Parker continued to live on the old home place of 320 acres which his father had acquired so many years ago; of the original tract, he now owns 150 acres. While the old home buildings are still standing, Mr. Parker has built a fine, modern residence, where he and his wife reside. About 20 years ago Mr. Parker and W. R. McGary purchased the Buck Springs Ranch of 440 acres in San Joaquin County. Later Mr. McGary sold out to Ed Harris of Stockton. Politically Mr. Parker is Democrat and fraternally is affiliated with Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. Mr. Parker's farming and stock-raising operations are conducted upon a large scale and he has been identified with this line of enterprise ever since launching into his active career.

MRS. MARY DOWNING BRADDOCK.—A pioneer woman of San Joaquin County, whose father first came to California in 1850 across the plains, is Mrs. Mary Downing Braddock. She was born at Fort Scott, Kans., a daughter of William and Martha (Butts) Downing, both natives of Tennessee, who were raised near Missouri. William Downing crossed the plains with pack mules and mined in Calaveras County for two years when he returned to his home in Missouri and moved his family to Fort Scott, Kans., where he farmed for a year; then in 1863 he crossed the plains a second time with ox teams via the Salt Lake route, arriving at Sacramento on September 2, 1863; he located near Brighton, Sacramento County, where two of his brothers lived; then removed with his family to San Joaquin County locating on the ranch known as the McComas place on Cherokee Lane; there he remained for two years, then removed to Santa Clara County and located at Evergreen where he farmed for one year. He then returned to Lockeford and purchased a quarter-section of land and engaged in farming that place for five years; then removed to Butte County and lived near Biggs until 1895, preempting a quarter section of Government land. Nine children were born to this pioneer couple: Martitia, James W., Mrs. Lydia Woods and Rufus are deceased; Mrs. Mary Braddock, our subject; John, deceased; Mrs. Ida Hersam, of Berkeley; Robert J. resides in Hanford, Cal.; Mrs. Lulu DeWitt of Portersville, Cal. The father passed away aged seventy-four, and the mother at the age of eighty years.

On March 27, 1879, at Biggs, Cal., Miss Mary Downing was united in marriage with D. W. Braddock, a native of Ohio, and a son of Josiah C. Braddock. Mr. Braddock received his education in Ohio and after coming to California in 1869 attended the San Francisco Normal School. He was teaching school at Biggs where he met and married Miss Downing. He was county superintendent of schools of Butte County for eight years and after removing to Stockton he was principal of the Jefferson school for ten years; he also owned a fruit ranch near Gridley in Butte County, and in 1895 the family moved to their present home located at 427 East Lindsay Street where they have since resided. Four children have been born to them; Charles resides in San Francisco; David, Grace and George all reside in Stockton. Mr. Braddock has been engaged in the real estate business in Stockton for the past fifteen years; he and his wife are staunch Democrats. Fraternally he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and is a Knights Templar Mason, while Mrs. Braddock is a member of the Ladies of the G. A. R. and the auxiliary of the California Society of Pioneers.

JOHN FREDERICK STARK.—An honored name on the list of esteemed citizens of San Joaquin County was that of John Frederick Stark. He came to the county in 1883, and throughout the remainder of his life his interests were associated vitally with those of his adopted state. He lent his support to the educational, moral and social progress of his locality and his influence was always to be found on the side of the general welfare. He was born at Kiel, Germany, March 11, 1855, of German parents, who were farmer folk, and John Frederick was taught to work while still a young boy. He learned the carpenter's trade and spent twenty-six years of his life in his native country, when he decided to seek broader opportunities in the new world. He arrived in America in 1881 and first settled in Davenport, Iowa, where he spent two years, then removed to Stockton, Cal., and soon found work on the William and Bixler ranch on Union Island. He followed his trade and engaged in farming at the same time for about one year; then he rented a large tract of land and began his farming operations, which have proven successful. He bought his first land in 1901, which he developed into the home place, which he brought to a high state of cultivation. For three years Mr. Stark was assisted in his extensive farming operations by his cousin, August Stark, then the latter moved to Texas, where he died in July, 1922.

On February 27, 1888, Mr. Stark was married in Stockton to Miss Louise Elbrecht, a native of Bielefeld, Germany, born August 25, 1866, a daughter of Frederick and Amelia (Meier) Albrecht, well-to-do German farmers. Mrs. Stark accompanied her sister, Mrs. Lena Kuckuk, to California in 1887, arriving in Stockton on Christmas Day of that same year. Ten children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Stark: William became the manager of the large ranch after his father's death and was so engaged until his death on November 7, 1918, aged twenty-nine years; Julius, deceased in infancy; Fred, Jr., was also engaged in ranching on the home place until he passed away on November 14, 1918, aged twenty-seven; Margaret Dorothea is a graduate of the public schools and is at home with her mother; Louise, now Mrs. J. P. Murray, has one son, John Stark Murray; Herbert died in infancy; Elinor is at home; Theodore, a graduate of the public schools and of the College of Commerce, has charge of the ranch work for his mother and is successfully handling same; Minnie, a graduate of the College of Commerce, is the bookkeeper for the extensive ranching operations of her mother; Carl is a student. Mr. Stark added to his original purchase of land in 1901 until at the time of his death on November 25, 1917, he had accumulated 1,500 acres of choice Delta land. Mr. and Mrs. Stark were always interested in the affairs of the Lutheran Church of Stockton and for many years Mr. Stark served as school trustee of the Union Island school district and in his political faith was a staunch Republican. He was a public-spirited citizen, favoring every movement calculated to improve his locality and advance the interests of the state.

J. Fred Stark.

JOHN EDWARD JORY.—Born in the same district in which he now resides, John Edward Jory, since reaching manhood's estate has been prominent and public-spirited. He was born on a ranch a half mile south of the Harmony Grove schoolhouse on February 24, 1875, a son of James and Elizabeth (Tretheway) Jory, the parents both natives of Cornwall, England. The father, James Jory, came to California when he was eighteen years old, going direct to Contra Costa County where he worked in the coal mines until 1874, then he came to the Harmony Grove district, San Joaquin County and obtained work with Heath & Boody. The following year, 1875, he bought the home place, which, at that time, was heavily covered with timber. From time to time he acquired more land until he had 540 acres which he cleared and farmed to grain. The mother, Elizabeth Tretheway, was the daughter of John Tretheway, who was born in Cornwall, England, and came to the United States in 1868. He located near Harmony Grove Church, raised grain and as he succeeded he became the owner of valuable property in San Joaquin County. The children born to James and Elizabeth Jory are: James Alfred of Fruitvale; Nellie, married George Harris of Stockton; John Edward; Walter; Susan is the wife of C. F. Faber of Harmony Grove; Bessie is Mrs. Winfield Ryland of Stockton; Bertha is Mrs. William Biddick also of Stockton; Lila is Mrs. Earl Brumbl of Modesto; and Edna married Albert Beckman of Stockton. Mr. Jory, after many years of active work at ranching sold off part of his ranch to his son in 1906 and moved to Stockton with his wife and is now living retired.

John Edward Jory received the greater part of his schooling at the Harmony Grove school, and after his school days were over he began preparations for his future. In 1898 he went to Dawson, N. W. Territory, where he spent four years working for wages and prospecting, then returned to California with about $5,000 he had saved and located at Tracy where he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific as foreman of the car shops, being located at Tracy most of the following six years. With the money he had made in Alaska he bought from an uncle the old Tretheway ranch of 187 acres and set twenty-five acres to vines; later he was able to purchase 176 acres of the old home place for which he paid $14,080. With characteristic thrift and industry, inherited from his forebears, he improved twenty acres of his land, setting eight acres to vines, and sold this for $500 per acre. In 1919 he bought 160 acres east of his home place and sold it at a good profit; he also bought seventy acres of the old Farley ranch about two years ago. Mr. Jory bought the 160-acre ranch for $10,000, and not long afterwards sold it for $26,600, thus showing the rapid increase in land values in San Joaquin County. Mr. Jory has recently developed thirty acres of his ranch, planting ten acres to vineyard and eight acres to alfalfa with the intention of putting it on the market. He has farmed as much as 800 acres and was equipped with the necessary machinery for handling grain on an extensive scale, but during the World War, he disposed of all of his machinery and now only farms in a small way, owning and operating but 130 acres altogether, which he has improved with a modern home.

At Lockeford on June 25, 1902, Mr. Jory was united in marriage with Miss Mary Inglis, a daughter of Alexander and Jeanette (Wilson) Inglis, both natives of Scotland. Her father was reared in Scotland, and during his young manhood followed occupation of gardener. Mrs. Jory is the sixth child in a family of ten children, four having been born before the family left Scotland. The father brought his family direct to San Joaquin County, at the present time resides about one mile west of Lockeford. Mrs. Jory received her preliminary education in the Lockeford school; later taking a teacher's course in the San Jose State Normal School; after graduating she returned to San Joaquin County and taught in the Dry Creek school and the Lockeford school until her marriage to Mr. Jory. They are the parents of four children: Verel Deane, Dorothy, Ruth, and Robert.

JOSEPH MINER FOWLER.—Among the honored pioneers of San Joaquin County was the late Joseph Miner Fowler, who for many years was actively associated with the development of this portion of the state, and was always noted for patriotism and public spirit, industry and integrity. He was born in Westfield, Mass., July 25, 1825, his parents being Royal and Harriet (Smith) Fowler, the former a native of Massachusetts, and the latter of Connecticut. Royal Fowler was a farmer by occupation and a contractor and builder as well. He was one of the builders of the Erie Canal and one of contractors on the Boston and Albany railroad; he died in Westfield, Mass., August 27, 1875, at the age of eighty-six years. In tracing the genealogy of the Fowler family we find that they are of Scotch descent. They emigrated first to England, where they were the inventors of the first steam plow used in England, thence came to America.

Joseph M. was reared on a farm and remained at home until he was about eighteen years of age, when he went into a machine shop as an apprentice, remaining three years, at the expiration of which time he took a contract for building power and hand planers. After finishing this contract he joined a company for California. They sailed from New York February 28, 1849, on the schooner John Castner, which was chartered by a party of eighty and took them to Point Isabel, about five miles from the Rio Grande River. There they took passage on a Government steamer for Port Brown and Hamargo, landing on Mexican soil; and there they were delayed a week by cholera, which took the lives of two men. Fifteen of the party, including Mr. Fowler, procured riding mules and left for Monterey, Mexico. They went by El Paso and Saltillo, camped on the field of Buena Vista, following General Taylor's line as far as it extended, and through Chihuahua and Tucson, the eighty-mile desert, down the Gila River to the Colorado River, across the Colorado desert. Here they had trouble with the Indians, who threatened them with destruction. At that time they were waiting for a pack-train of provisions, and had been out of food for two days. On several occasions on the journey they were without food from three to five days at a time. Their route from Chihuahua through was without a road or guide. From Los Angeles they took the coast route for San Juan, where they spent the Fourth of July. They arrived at the mines at Jamestown on July 8, 1849. There they spent about two months in the mines; then mined in other places, following that occupation for several years, until 1856. In the meantime Mr. Fowler's brother, William, had taken up land and he helped him harvest during the harvest season. He was very successful in mining. In 1856 he returned East via Panama, but in the fall of the same year returned to California to work on the ranch of his brother.

In August, 1857, Mr. Fowler went East and was married to Miss Eliza Brumley, a native of Massachusetts. In the spring of 1858 he returned via the Isthmus, bringing his wife and from that date to the day of his death he resided on his ranch in San Joaquin County. In 1863 he purchased his brother's interest. He owned a section of land located about twelve miles from Stockton on the Davis Road; he also owned 1440 acres situated about five miles east of Merced. He was engaged in a general farming business and was a director of the Granger's store in Lodi and also of the Lodi Bank. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler were the parents of twelve children: George B. deceased; Royal R. resides in Stockton; Joseph Warren died at the age of fifty-three; Charles E. died when nine years old; Ellen L. Mrs. T. A. Jordan died at the age of fifty-two; Mary E., Mrs. Wilson H. Thompson, died in 1900, aged thirty years; Myrtle Mrs. E. E. Thompson, resides in Stockton; Hattie died at the age of three years; Addie, Mrs. D. K. Woods, resides at Kingdon; Ernest, the youngest, is a salesman for the Harris Manufacturing Company at Stockton; two children died in infancy. Mr. Fowler was a member of the Lodi Grange and the Pioneer Society. He passed away in 1896 at the age of seventy-three years and his wife was sixty-eight when she died in 1906.

JOHN B. O'MALLEY.—One of the successful, honored and highly respected citizens of San Joaquin County, where he located in an early day when pioneer conditions existed in this part of the state, was John B. O'Malley. As the day with its morning of hope and promise, its noontide of activity and its evening of accomplished and successful effort, ending in the grateful rest and quiet of the night, so was the life of this worthy man, who in his business career directed his labors so carefully and intelligently that he gained prosperity, and so honorably that he won the unqualified confidence of all with whom he came in contact. He was born in County Roscommon, Ireland, May 15, 1830, and when a lad of eight was bereaved of his father, Michael O'Malley. Being the oldest in the family he was obliged to begin at a very early age to help with the support of the other members of the family, but meanwhile he was able to acquire a fair education. When he was seventeen, in 1847, he brought his mother, Bridget O'Malley, his sister Margaret, and his brother Martin, to America. They embarked on a sailing vessel and after a six weeks' voyage, during which very stormy weather was encountered, they landed in this country, going direct to Norwich, Conn., where they located.

Two years later, on October 29, 1849, John B. O'Malley was married to Miss Ann E. Brennan, also a native of County Roscommon, born on June 29, 1831, the fourth child in a family of seven. She was educated in a private school and accompanied her parents to America in 1847, and she proved just the right kind of a helpmate and companion for her husband, and during her whole life exemplified the wonderful character that made her loved by all who ever knew her. Mr. O'Malley was employed on the S. S. Commonwealth, a passenger steamer plying between Norwich and New York until 1853, when he became enthused over the news of the gold discovery in California, so made arrangements to leave his family in the East and set out to seek his fortune in the est. He arrived in San Francisco, via Panama, and came direct to Stockton and found work at the Weber House, a leading hotel of that period, and soon he became the manager and held that position for four years. In the meantime, in 1856, he sent for his wife and their two children, Elizabeth A. and John, who reached Stockton in due time. Soon a home was established in the new city and they remained here until 1862.

Mr. O'Malley had his turn at mining with some Stockton men, among whom was Michael Carroll, who eventually became his neighbor and lifelong friend. In 1862 Mr. O'Malley bought 400 acres of land from George Castle, located seventeen miles southeast from Stockton on the French Camp Road and here he built a cabin for his family and there they resided until he was able to complete a large and commodious residence. This house is still standing and has been the family home ever since. In order to have a good neighbor, Mr. O'Malley sold to Michael Carroll half of his original purchase and these two men worked together to make their part of the county a desirable place in which to live. Mr. O'Malley was very successful as a grain and live stock raiser and in time came to own 1,300 acres of good land; 640 acres of this property he later sold to the Stockton Vineyard Company. He was a philanthropist in the truest sense for he helped a man to help himself and was ever ready to lend a helping hand to those less fortunate; he was likewise a devoted husband and father and their home life was ideal.

There were eight children born to this worthy couple, namely: Elizabeth A., died aged eight years; John died aged two; Sarah entered the religious life and for thirty-one years was a teacher in St. Agnes College in Stockton, also for seven years was in San Rafael. She was known as Sister Mary John of the Dominican Order and died July 10, 1920; William B., of Stockton, married Lonisa Denny of San Francisco and they have two children, John Raymond and Mary Ines; Mary, married W. L. Brennan and has four living children, Clare, Cyril, William Leland and Reginald; Miss Margaret makes her home on the ranch; Ellen is a registered nurse; and Miss Jane makes her home on the ranch and with her sister Margaret manages the home estate; both are graduates from St. Agnes College in Stockton, and they have shown marked ability in carrying on the ranch work and the memory of their father and mother are the incentives to maintain the highest standard on the ranch and to preserve the old California hospitality that has made their home a gathering place for all their friends.

In 1899 Mr. and Mrs. J. B. O'Malley celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their country home, surrounded by children, grandchildren, relatives and friends, and was a most enjoyable occasion for all. Mr. O'Malley handled his extensive interests up to the day of his death, on September 26, 1909. On June 29, 1921, at the family home was celebrated the ninetieth birthday of Mother O'Malley and a large company enjoyed a genuine hospitality under the roof of this honored pioneer woman, who always had been an inspiration to all who ever came under influence. She died on September 10, 1921, mourned by the entire countryside, as well as her immediate family and intimate friends. She was laid to rest in St. Patrick's churchyard at Atlanta, which she loved so well and which she and her husband had helped to maintain. Mr. O'Malley and Michael Carroll will always be given credit for putting in the blast that brought the water at the Lane Springs resort; and at the time of his death Mr. O'Malley was the oldest naturalized citizen in the county, receiving his papers as early as 1852. His mother came to California in later years and lived with her son, dying at his home at the age of seventy-seven years. The names of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. O'Malley are enduringly inscribed upon the records of the early pioneer settlers of San Joaquin County and it is with much satisfaction we present their portraits in this history.

CHARLES I. LEACH.—In connection with the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County the name of Leach is a familiar one, for both father and son, Charles I. Leach, have long been identified with this industry. He was born in Walworth County, Wis., in the village of Eagleville, August 18, 1852, a son of Charles Isaac and Martha J. (Tupper) Leach, natives of Vermont and Wisconsin, respectively. In 1853 Charles I. Leach, Sr., crossed the plains with an ox-team to join his brother, James B. Leach, who had come West a few years previous and had settled in Rogue River Valley, Oregon. Learning of his brother's intentions to come West, he sent a courier with the message for Charles I. not to come to Oregon, as the Indians were liable to cause trouble, and also instructing him to turn south and come on to California. The following fall the terrible Rogue River massacre occurred when every white settler was killed. Mr. Leach came on to California and settled on the Calaveras River at a place known as the Leach and Frost bridge on the Upper Sacramento Road; this was a stage coach station, where drivers changed horses enroute to Sacramento. James B. Leach had acquired 400 acres of land, which was afterwards purchased by Charles I., Sr., and this he farmed for many years. In 1868 he disposed of this ranch and bought the chinatown property in Stockton. For many years he was president of the San Joaquin Valley Bank in Stockton and although many opportunities came for him to hold public office he never accepted them, but preferred to live quietly. Charles I. is the only living child of this pioneer couple. James N. died in 1916, Helen died at the age of one year, John died at the age of a year and a half and Frank lived to be seven years old. The father lived to be eighty-two while the mother was sixty years old when she passed away.

Charles I. Leach attended the Live Oak, Davis and Fairchild district schools and finished his education at the Washington school in Stockton. He began to earn his own money when he was sixteen years old, but remained with his parents until he was twenty-five years old. His marriage occurred in June, 1877, in Stockton, which united him with Miss Fannie Hamilton, a native of Canada, a daughter of James and Jane Hamilton. Her father was a stonecutter and contractor in Canada where he passed away. After his demise the family came to Stockton. After his marriage, Mr. Leach removed to Portland, Ore., and conducted a flour mill for fourteen years, then sold out and returned to Stockton and later moved to the ranch which was left him by his father; 100 acres of this ranch was later sold, the balance of 155 acres being devoted to the raising of grapes, alfalfa and grain and it is irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch. Ten years ago a new house replaced the old one built so many years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Leach were the parents of two children: Cornelia E., died in 1920 and Charles Frank is on the home place. While living in Oregon Mr. Leach was a member of the Knights of Pythias, and in politics he is a Republican.

JOHN C. DUTTON.—Among the agriculturists who have reaped the usual rewards that fall to the pioneer in any practical industry may be found John C. Dutton, the owner of a ranch of thirty-nine acres on the Cherokee Lane, about eight and a half miles from Stockton, where he has continuously resided for the past forty-eight years. A native of Illinois, he was born in Lawrence County on August 17, 1842, a son of William and Eliza (Bryan) Dutton, the former a native of Somerset, O., and the latter of North Carolina. Early in young manhood, the father removed to Illinois and was a pioneer farmer of that state. John C. Dutton is one of a family of eight children. The mother passed away in 1861, when she was about fifty years old and the father survived her until 1864, passing away at the age of sixty years.

John C. Dutton had very little opportunity for an education, being obliged to assist his father on the farm. In 1861, he enlisted for service in the Civil War in Company H, 61st Illinois Volunteer Infantry, under Capt. Daniel Grass, Colonel Fry and General Thomas. He trained for one week and was sent into action in the Army of the Cumberland and later in the Western Army; he was in eleven engagements, but was never wounded; he was in the battle of Murphysboro, Tenn., and the fall of Vicksburg. At the end of three years he was discharged and then reenlisted for the duration of the war and was finally discharged on December 10, 1865, at Nashville, Tenn. Returning to civil life, he worked for awhile for wages, then rented eighty acres of farming land until 1868, when he came to California via the Panama route, settling first at Santa Rosa, where he remained for six years working for wages. He then removed to San Joaquin County and purchased his present ranch forty-eight years ago where he has since made his home. His first purchase consisted of 103 acres of grain land, but from time to time has sold portions of it until he now owns thirty-nine acres, seven acres of which is set to vineyard and the balance is devoted to the raising of grain with ample building space.

The marriage of Mr. Dutton occurred in Stockton on December 6, 1881, and united him with Mrs. Nettie Williamson Potter, born in Calaveras County, a daughter of James and Elizabeth (Lewis) Williamson. James Williamson came to California in 1852 from Illinois, driving an ox-team across the plains and became a farmer in Calaveras County; later he removed to Arizona and passed away there. Mrs. Dutton was educated in the Milton and Knights Ferry schools. Mr. and Mrs. Dutton are the parents of two children: Chester, who died in 1919, married Miss Alma McQuator and they had one daughter, Dolly May. Edna May, Mrs. Raymond Burson, resides at Suisun and they have five children—Ralph, Floyd, Ellsworth, Zelma May and Paul. Mr. Dutton is a member of the Hartford Post, G. A. R., of Lodi, and of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., and politically is a Republican.

JOSEPH P. VINET.—The farming and stock-raising industries in San Joaquin County contribute a very large percentage of the prosperity and wealth of the county, for much of the land is in the possession of men of marked enterprise and progressive methods. Of these men mention is made of Joseph P. Vinet, who located on his present ranch in 1897, and its appearance is indicative of his life of usefulness and agricultural activity. He is a native son of California, born on his father's ranch in San Joaquin County, on October 17, 1862.

His father, Peter Vinet, was born in Charante, France, in October, 1820, received his education in the schools of his locality and early learned the baker's trade. In 1839 he emigrated from Bordeaux, France, to Vera Cruz, Mexico, and there followed his calling, and there found his wife, whom he married in 1845, and who was in maidenhood, Miss Refugio Aguirre, born in Mexico in 1830, a daughter of Joseph Aguirre, a Spaniard. Upon the discovery of gold in California in 1849, Peter Vinet came to this state and for a few years was engaged in mining in Tuolumne County, after which he went to Sonora and opened a bakery and sold bread as high as $1.00 a loaf; later he was in the mercantile business at San Jose for a number of years. In 1859 he located in Dent Township, San Joaquin County, and bought 160 acres of land, which he increased to 1,760 acres as he prospered in raising grain, that being his chief industry, although he raised some stock. He was one of the original stockholders of the Shell Ditch, which eventually became the South San Joaquin Irrigation Company, and he was one of the members of the old Agricultural Society. He was of a benevolent disposition and supported all progressive movements for the betterment of general conditions in the county and state. He gave liberally to all religious denominations, regardless of creed, and was a firm believer in education and the maintenance of schools. Mr. and Mrs. Vinet were survived by three children: Joseph P., of San Joaquin County; Anita, who married William Lamasney and lives in Stockton; and Marie, who became the wife of Alfred G. Baker and died at San Francisco. One son, Leopold Vinet, died at the age of sixteen, in 1869. Mrs. Peter Vinet passed away in September, 1894, followed to the grave by her husband on December 27, of that same year. Both were mourned by a wide circle of devoted friends besides their immediate family. It is to such public-spirited men and women that California owes much for laying a firm foundation for its future prosperity.

Joseph P. Vinet received a good schooling in the local schools and finished with a business course and also attended the University of Santa Clara in 1880-'81, after which he returned to the home ranch and entered into a partnership with his father in the stock and grain business. The original brand established by his father is still used and is recognized by all stockmen as the PV brand. Mr. Vinet owns 533 acres of fine wheat land and eighty acres of grazing land and he raises large quantities of wheat and barley each year.

The marriage of Joseph P. Vinet occurred on October 24, 1887, and united him with Miss Louise Pache, who was born in Stockton, October 8, 1861. She is a representative of an old pioneer family, her father, Jules P. Pache, a native of Paris, France, came to America in 1851, around the Horn, arriving in California in the gold mining days and spent some time searching for the precious metal, locating at French Bar, Mariposa County, after which he engaged in the forwarding and commission business in Stockton. Some time later he was associated with Louis Chicard in the same business, then was a bookkeeper for I. S. Bostwick, and still later was with the Farmers Union. For twenty years he was a bookkeeper for the Stockton Savings and Loan Association. He was one of the dependable men of his day and could always be counted on to do his share to promote any worthy cause. For many years he was the representative of the French Consul for the mountain and valley counties. He married, in 1860, Miss Marie Elizabeth Chicard, born in Independence, Mo., on November 12, 1843, who came with her family to California across the plains, arriving November 1, 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Pache had six children: Louise, Mrs. J. P. Vinet; Dr. George F. Pache of Angels Camp; Edmund B., of San Francisco; Philip F., a merchant at Angels Camp; Dr. Francis C., of San Diego; and Mrs. Julie Umberger, of Angels Camp. Mr. Pache came of a prominent family from southern France, one branch being Royalist and the other Republican in its leaning. One member of the family was tutor to the children of Louis XV, another a Count at the Court of Charles XII. During the Revolution a member was on the committee of safety and prefect of Paris, later retiring to his home in southern France where he wrote a treatise on metaphysics.

Mrs. Vinet received a good education at Notre Dame College at San Jose and has become the mother of four children: Elois R., is the wife of W. C. Lucas, has three daughters and two sons and lives in Ione; Lucille A., married Dr. L. E. Trethewey and died December 31, 1920, survived by one son and one daughter; Antoinette K., became the wife of S. D. Miller and has two boys and two girls and they reside at Manteca; Josephine E., resides at home with her parents.

Mr. Vinet belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Knights of Columbus, and formerly was a member of the Republican county central committee and still takes an active part in local politics. He is a firm believer in the good roads movements and in irrigation activities, and he wields an influence for good in a large circle of friends and acquaintances. The Vinet family belong to St. Patrick's Parish at Atlanta, of which Peter Vinet was one of the pioneer supporters and organizers.

LOUIS EUGENE CHICARD.—The Chicard family comprising George Jean Chicard, his wife Marie F.; Louis Eugene; Adele C. (Mrs. G. Joseph); Marie Elizabeth (Mrs. Jules Pache) and Thomas Chicard, an infant, left Independence, Missouri in May, 1849, and came across the plains, traversing the Platte country and the Great American Desert, in "Ships of the Desert," by ox team, entering California by the route taken by the Donner Party, arriving at Sutter Fort in October, 1849. Their destination was San Jose but on arriving in Stockton on November 1, 1849, Thomas Chicard died and was buried in what lately was Independence Square. They purchased from Captain Weber, the quarter block corner of Market and Hunter streets, including what was later the old Catholic rectory, extending on Market Street 150 feet opposite to what was the old county jail and present City Library. The Hunter Street property was the home of the late Madame Chicard and on it was planted the first vines and bay trees in San Joaquin County, being brought from Santa Cruz County.

G. V. Vint

George Jean Chicard returned to St Louis where he died in 1850 and Madame Chicard remained with the family in Stockton, passing away in 1876. Louis Eugene Chicard engaged in the forwarding, commission and draying business for many years and was known throughout the Southern mines and valley counties. He was a member of the old Eureka Fire Engine Company, an Exempt Fireman and a member of the San Joaquin County Society of California Pioneers in which he held office at different times. He was esteemed for his probity and business acumen, being one of the public-spirited citizens of Stockton. Adele C. Chicard was married to G. Joseph, a merchant of Stockton, later removing to San Francisco where she resided for many years, passing away in San Jose in 1918.

Marie Elizabeth Chicard, married the late Jules P. Pache in 1860. She was educated at Notre Dame Convent, San Jose, being one of the first to matriculate. She excelled in fine needle work and tapestry, taking prizes for them at several early San Joaquin County fairs, the tapestries being prized and treasured heirlooms in the Pache family. She was a brilliant conversationalist, speaking several languages. She was a member of the Associated Charities while living in Stockton, and also of the San Joaquin County Society of California Pioneers, being voted a membership and certificate by the society, her membership being still in possession of her family. She resided in Angels Camp during the latter part of her life, passing away in 1916. The Chicard family came from Orleans, France, and there is still in the family on the banks of the River Loire in France, an estate comprising large vineyards and an ancestral chateau.

PHILEMON E. PLATT.—An early settler of much foresight and prominence, whose activities embraced various lines was Philemon E. Platt, a native of Providence, R. I. He crossed the plains with his parents in an early day and settled in Sacramento County, where he received his education and where he was first employed as a salesman in a local shoe store in the capital city. As he grew to manhood, he worked as a reporter on the Sacramento Record-Union; later becoming a court reporter; he also studied law, but was never admitted to practice, although his training was of great benefit to him throughout his business career. In partnership with W. R. Strong and Robert Williamson, he built up the W. R. Strong Company, the largest produce shippers on the Coast at that time; he entered the firm as a bookkeeper and later was admitted as a partner. Removing to Los Angeles, he established the P. E. Platt Fruit Company and was the first man to ship citrus fruit east in ventilated fruit cars, before the days of iced cars; later he founded and became a member of the firm of Dalton, Platt & Patterson Company. Twenty-five years ago he located in Stockton and founded the Platt Produce Company and was the pioneer in shipping potatoes and onions east in carload lots from Stockton; he shipped the first trainload of potatoes, forty-two cars, November 10, 1905. Through his efforts and influence, in part, the Santa Fe Railroad was built across the Delta and through Stockton, and this company built the first warehouse on the Santa Fe tracks for his exclusive use; a portion of the original building is still standing and is used by the present Platt Produce Company. While in the citrus fruit business in Los Angeles, he was the first man to ship Valencia orange trees, for planting purposes, to Northern California; at that time it was generally thought that oranges could not be successfully grown in northern California.

In the Orangevale and Penryn sections Mr. Platt financed, planted and developed several large orange groves, and also developed several fruit and vegetable ranches, which are now very valuable. His interest in new ideas and inventions was shown when he was the first man in the early days of Sacramento to have a telephone and was the first to use the typewriter and employ a stenographer; also had installed in his office the first electric call bell used for calling a telegraph boy from the main office. His influence for the advancement of his locality was most pronounced; he was president of the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade of Sacramento and enthusiastically gave his aid to all measures for the progress and development of every community in which he resided. Some forty-seven years ago he erected a residence of fifteen rooms and it is one of the old landmarks of Sacramento at the present time.

Mr. Platt's marriage united him with Miss Levina A. Barrett, a native of Ironton, Ohio, and they were the parents of four children, two of whom are now living; Pearl E. is Mrs. F. J. Beaton of Los Angeles; Roscoe C. is in business in Stockton; while Guy Thornton and Mabel are deceased. Fraternally Mr. Platt was very prominent in both Odd Fellows and Masonic circles. He was one of the organizers and a past worthy grand of Capital Lodge No. 87, I. O. O. F., in Sacramento, of which his son Roscoe C. was also a member. In Masonry he was a past master, a thirty-second degree Mason of the Scottish as well as the York Rite, a Knight Templar and a Shriner. He passed away on May 13, 1919; his wife continued to live at the old home in Sacramento until her death, which occurred September 11, 1922.

After Mr. Platt's death, a copartnership was formed by his son Roscoe C. Platt, under the firm name of the Platt Produce Company, with headquarters in Stockton, with the following officers: J. W. Barrett, manager; Roscoe C. Platt, district manager; and F. J. Beaton, manager of the Los Angeles office.

Roscoe C. Platt was born and educated in the grammar and high schools of Sacramento and later became a draftsman in the office of George C. Sellon, the state architect at that time. In 1910 he removed to Stockton and became a member of the original firm of the Platt Produce Company. He is a member of the Anteros Club in Stockton.

Mr. Platt was married on Christmas morning, 1922, to Miss Ada Irene Dennison, of Stockton, a popular and active member of Caliz de Oro Parlor, N. D. G. W., and Alpha Omega Sorority; born in San Francisco, she was a charter member of Columbus Chapter, O. E. S., Sacramento, and for many years one of its most active members. In 1917 Mr. Platt volunteered for service in the World War in the Coast Artillery at Fort Winfield Scott, San Francisco. He was advanced to corporal, then sergeant, remaining at Fort Winfield Scott to the close of the war.

JONATHAN HOLT DODGE.—The qualities which have contributed to success in new countries have always been characteristics of the family represented by the late Jonathan Holt Dodge, a California pioneer of 1850. The genealogy shows the undoubted antiquity and gentle blood of his English ancestors, several patents granting coats of arms, or confirming preceding grants, being preserved in the family to this day. As early as 1635 the first American ancestor, Richard Dodge, came to the new world and settled at Beverly, Mass., where he took an active part in the early struggles of the Colonies, and assisted in the founding and maintenance of one of the greatest institutions of learning in the United States, Harvard College. Others of this lineage bore an active part in the Revolutionary War.

Jonathan Holt Dodge was born in Lamoille County, Vt., July 21, 1819. He made the most of educational advantages in his boyhood and later gained a broad information, which gave him the power of initiative in the new conditions of the country. In early life he started out to make his own way in the world, and following the tide of immigration he came to McHenry County, Illinois, where he was living at the time of the discovery of gold in California. Eager to avail himself of this new opportunity, to make a fortune in the great unknown West, Mr. Dodge settled up his affairs in Illinois and on Christmas Day, 1849, with his boyhood friend, J. H. Cole, he left for California. They went to St. Louis and there took a steamboat for New Orleans, arriving January 17, 1850. The government steamer, commanded by Capt. David Porter, on which they took passage February 12, 1850, conveyed Mr. Dodge and Mr. Cole to the Isthmus of Panama. There they hired natives to carry their luggage across to Panama, where they embarked on the sailing vessel Greyhound, which anchored at San Francisco, forty-seven days later.

After their arrival they went to Sacramento by steamboat and then journeyed to the South Fork of the American River, six miles from where gold was first discovered at Coloma. Meeting with little success in the mines, and realizing the wonderful possibilities in the great interior of California, they soon decided to take up lands in the San Joaquin Valley, and on December 3, 1850, they settled in San Joaquin County. After a partnership of seven years with J. H. Cole, in which a large section of land was held jointly, Mr. Dodge purchased in his own name a large tract near the Calaveras River, a part of the famous Pico Grant. This became one of the grain ranches so conspicuous here in the early days of California.

On November 8, 1859, Mr. Dodge was married to Miss Emily Bray, who was born in Lancastershire, England, and was descended from an old and prominent family. The first dwelling of Mr. and Mrs. Dodge was a picturesque log house. It was on the property at the time of Mr. Dodge's purchase and was the first house in the county. The house was built by Dr. J. C. Isbell, a pioneer of 1846. A frame building brought around Cape Horn on a sailing vessel was added to the log structure and this continued to be the Dodge home until in 1866 Mr. Dodge erected a large, substantial residence. It is of considerable interest to know that General John C. Fremont on his way from Sutter's Fort made this site his camping place on March 26, 1844.

In addition to the cultivation of grain, stock raising formed a very important part of Mr. Dodge's business, and he became well known for the thorough-bred horses, cattle and sheep held in his possession. In connection with this business, he purchased in Merced County a ranch of several thousand acres. Mr. Dodge became interested in grape culture and planted a large vineyard of imported grapes, one of the first in the county. This experiment proved successful and encouraged many others to enter this industry for themselves.

Always public spirited, Mr. Dodge did much to contribute toward the welfare of the county, where for so many years he made his home. He was a staunch friend of the cause of education and was instrumental in establishing the first school in that locality. He gave the use of the old log house for that purpose and soon after donated the site for a schoolhouse and contributed largely towards its erection and maintenance. Especially kind was Mr. Dodge in assisting others less fortunate than himself to gain a foothold in the new country. By all who knew him he was held in high esteem and respect, of which he was so eminently worthy.

It is to men of the calibre of Jonathan Holt Dodge that California today owes much of its present prosperity and greatness. Though so successful in his early life in California Mr. Dodge later became overconfident in his investments and met with reverses. His death occurred July 20, 1893. A portion of the former property, together with the family residence, now remains in possession of his daughters where they maintain their home, located on the Waterloo-Lockeford road at the crossing of the Calaveras River. The children of the Dodge family were as follows: Henry L., Clara, now Mrs. M. T. Noyes; Florence, deceased; Emily M., Anna L., and Charles Holt, deceased.

MRS. EFFIE A. PATTON.—One of the pioneer families in the Golden State is that which now finds a worthy representative in San Joaquin County in Mrs. Effie A. Patton. She was born on the Tretheway ranch about two and one-half miles southwest of Lockeford on November 7, 1878, the oldest of a family of eight children of John and Amanda (Goodwin) Tretheway. Her father, John Tretheway, was born in Cornwall County, England May 7, 1851, remained in England until April 13, 1867, when he sailed for New York, landing April 27. He went direct to Morris County, N. J., where he engaged in mining until July of the same year, when he started for San Francisco, via the Isthmus, and landed in Stockton on July 28, where he met his brother George, who was working on the Tredway ranch about fifteen miles from Stockton, and here John Tretheway found employment; then he and his brother rented 320 acres, which they farmed for one year, when in partnership with James Jory, a brother-in-law, and R. B. Harris, they bought the ranch. This was only the beginning of extensive land holdings in California. Coming to California when he was sixteen years old with nothing but a willingness to work and a desire and determination to succeed, within thirty years he was rated as worth $300,000 and was the heaviest tax payer in northern San Joaquin County. After his remarkable success, he bought land in Yolo County and started to reclaim it, which operations proved so disastrous to his finances, that his holdings were gradually sold to cover reclamation work, all these difficulties proved too great and he was ruined financially; however, the original 320 acres was saved to his estate, which his wife holds today. They were parents of eight children; Effie A. the subject of this sketch; John D., Charles W., George Franklin; Alice and Russell are deceased; Arthur resides in Portland, Ore., has one son, Gordon Maurice; Mary Hazel is Mrs. Ray Faulkner of Pacific Grove. The mother is now residing at Pacific Grove, Cal.

Effie A. Tretheway received her education in the Harmony Grove school and the San Jose State Normal, and remained at home with her parents until her marriage, which was celebrated in the house in which she was born, on November 22, 1900, to Robert Francis Patton, also a native of San Joaquin County, born in Farmington, a son of Harry and Emma Patton, pioneers of California. After her marriage, Mrs. Patton went with her husband to Dixon, Cal., where Mr. Patton was engaged in the dairy business for five years; then he moved to Tracy and the next five years were spent there. About nine years ago Mrs. Patton came back to her old home, her mother having deeded her twenty acres of the original home place, ten acres of which has been set to vineyard, five acres to alfalfa and the balance unplanted. They are the parents of three children: Francis Everett; Lloyd Vivian; Erma LaVerne. Mr. and Mrs. Patton are Republicans and Mr. Patton belongs to Woodmen of the World.

George Franklin and John D. Tretheway, brothers of our subject have charge of the twenty-acre vineyard on the old home place, which is among the finest full-bearing vineyards in the community. George Frank Tretheway entered the American Army during October of 1917 and was sent to Camp Lewis in the Supply Company of the Three Hundred and Sixty-third Infantry, Ninety-first Division; later he was sent to Camp Merritt, N. Y., and sailed from Philadelphia landing at Liverpool, England; went across the English Channel to Cherbourg, France and was in the Argonne, Metz and Belgian front offensives. He returned to America from Brest, France, landed at Hoboken and was sent on to the Presidio at San Francisco where he was discharged. During his entire service, he received but a slight wound under one of his eyes. Charles W. Tretheway was educated in the Harmony Grove school and has remained on the home ranch the greater part of his life, and today owns twenty acres of it. On January 1, 1908, he was married to Miss Minnie Lottie Frades, born at Alexander, Nebr., who came to California two years before her marriage, with an uncle. They are the parents of one son, John Melvin and a daughter Nora LaVerne.

ERNEST W. LEFFLER.—Numbered among the prominent citizens and representative farmers of San Joaquin County is Ernest W. Leffler, who was born here when this was a frontier region, giving little promise of development and improvement which were so soon to transform it and which in the course of years would make it one of the best districts of the great commonwealth. He was born near Stockton on August 17, 1861, a son of George J. and Fredricka (Hecker) Leffler. The father, George J. Leffler was a native of Stuttgart, Germany, and came to America in 1849, settling first in New Orleans, La., and in 1851 came to California and settled ten miles northeast of Stockton and here homesteaded a quarter-section of land. There were seven children in the family; George J. Jr., John F., Henry G., Francis J., Bertha, Mrs. Henry Rohrbacher, a widow residing in Stockton; Ernest W. the subject of this sketch, and Ernestine, Mrs. John Guggolz of Lodi. The father passed away at the age of sixty-four, in 1874, the mother surviving him until she was seventy-five years old, dying in 1901.

Ernest W. Leffler received his education in the Live Oak district school and attended the Stockton Business College in the '80s. He remained on the home ranch with his mother until her death, he and his brother Francis J. leasing and running it. After the mother's death the estate was divided among the children, our subject receiving as his portion, one-quarter of the ranch; he then leased his sisters' portion of the farm for a few years, and then bought it, as well as his brothers' holdings. This home place, settled by his father in 1851, was the home of the first Tokay vineyard planted in the Lodi district. The father experimented with some fifteen varieties of grapes to prove which were the best adapted to the soil and climatic conditions, the Tokay taking precedence over the other varieties. His vineyard consisted of ten acres.

The marriage of Mr. Leffler occurred in Stockton on August 16, 1890, and united him with Miss Hattie M. Mason, a daughter of Major and Sarah (Elliott) Mason. Mrs. Leffler was born in Arizona and came to California with her parents when she was only a babe, her parents settling in the Waterloo section where they farmed a half section of land to grain. She was educated at the Delphi school and later attended the Stockton Business College, when it was in charge of Dr. F. R. Clarke. Mr. and Mrs. Leffler first lived on Norton Lane; then moved to the old home place on the Eight Mile Road, about ten miles northeast of Stockton. Mr. Leffler has added to his portion of the estate left him by his parents until he now has 186 acres, ninety-four acres of which is in vineyard; fifty acres are in bearing vines and forty-four in two year, three year and four year old vines, of different varieties. About thirteen years ago, Mr. Leffler bought a twenty-acre ranch on the south side of the Eight Mile Road on which he built a house and where he now resides; he and his youngest son bought an eighty-acre piece of land between his residence and the old home place. Mr. and Mrs. Leffler are the parents of three sons: Melvin F., entered the U. S. Army in July, 1917, in Battery C, 143rd Field Artillery. He was sent to the Presidio for a short time and then to Camp Kearney where his regiment was trained. In July, 1918, he went to France, and his regiment trained there at Camp De Songe, but never got into action. They had been training about six weeks and were just preparing to take their place in the front lines, when the armistice was signed. He returned to the United States in December 1918 and was discharged at the Presidio January, 1919. He was married at Sacramento on August 3, 1920, to Miss Bertha Kinchen, a native of Texas, a daughter of J. B. Kinchen, a stockman who had moved to Stockton. They are the parents of one child, Rita Lorraine. Wilbur C. served in the U. S. Navy; Dewey E. is the youngest. The three sons all reside on the old home place and run it. Their fruit is shipped through the Blackland Fruit Grower's Association, of which they are members. In politics Mr. Leffler is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the Modern Woodmen of Lodi.

JOHN C. GRAVES.—No life history is more interesting to chronicle than that of the California pioneer, the man who in his prime entered the wilderness and claimed the virgin soil as his heritage, who was not afraid to venture into the vastness and endure the hardships, but willingly put his shoulder to the task of development so that future generations might enjoy the comfort and luxury of present day civilization made possible through the blazing of the trail by our honored pioneers. Such a man is John C. Graves, venerable and esteemed pioneer of Stockton, who was born in Warren County, Mo., February 5, 1842. His father, Henry B. Graves, a native of Virginia, was descended from an old and prominent Southern family, while his mother, Lurina Howell before her marriage, was born in Kentucky, likewise of a well-established and leading family of the South. This worthy couple migrated to Missouri and there as farmers laid the foundation for their competency. In 1849 they removed with their family to Grant County, Wis., locating near Lancaster, where the father purchased a farm and it was here that John C. Graves was reared to manhood and in the great outdoors he acquired his great strength and physical stamina which has remained with him and stood him in such good stead to this day.

In those early days in Southern Wisconsin the opportunity for an education was limited, nevertheless Mr. Graves advanced himself in scholarship through his application, being of a studious nature. He was closely associated with his father in conducting the home farm until he reached his majority, when on November 2, 1862, at Lancaster, Wis., he took the important step which brought so much happiness to his life, when he was united in marriage with Miss Sarah C. Shanley, who had been his schoolmate. She was born near Lancaster, Wis., June 5, 1844, a daughter of Thomas and Mahala Rachael (Ingraham) Shanley, natives respectively of South Carolina and Virginia, who were also descended from prominent old Southern families. They migrated to Wisconsin and were pioneer farmers in Grant County. The following year Mr. Graves prepared for the long journey across the plains, his earthly possessions at that time being none other than a team of horses and wagon. He generally drove the lead team of the outfit captained by John B. Harelson, the party consisting of thirty-five wagons and 140 persons. They began their journey on May 2, 1864, but it was not until September that they reached their destination in the Golden State. They followed the old telegraph road all the way, a line which was also followed by the engineers who made the survey for the first transcontinental railroad. Among the party were three other old settlers of San Joaquin County, David Reynolds, Nathan Harelson and John McKinsey. David Reynolds was also from Grant County and was a schoolmate of Mr. Graves and the warm friendship that sprang up has continued pleasantly all through life. It was not an uncommon sight on their journey across the plains to see primitive Indian camps, but luckily the travelers were not molested; in fact no complaining was done on the part of the emigrants. Their first night in California was at the Tower House in Salt Spring Valley and pushing on they arrived at Dutch Point, seven miles south of Stockton on the French Camp Road on September 2, 1864.

Mr. Graves' first experience in the San Joaquin Valley proved to him the fertility of the soil here but prices for freighting were so high that after one season of farming he decided to engage in freighting. He was so occupied from 1865 to 1867, his outfit consisting of eighteen horses with a span of mules in the lead, hauling five wagons loaded with supplies from Stockton for the Southern mines. On his return trip his wagons were loaded with copper ore from the Copperopolis mines, which he brought to Stockton. In those early days there were no bridges nor graded roads so everything depended on the ability of the teamster to bring the valuable cargo to its destination, and as a teamster Mr. Graves had well qualified himself. He has a picture in his home showing his freighting outfit taken at Madam Felix's roadhouse near Tower Hill, in 1865, and it is one of his most cherished possessions.

In 1868 Mr. Graves purchased his first land, a tract of 320 acres which remained in his possession until 1888. By subsequent purchases he added to it until he had over 800 acres. In the meantime he also farmed in connection 1100 acres near Banta for six years and also owned a desirable farm of 560 acres of river bottom land two and a half miles south of Ripon on the Stanislaus River, a portion of which was heavily timbered. The timber was cut and sold for fuel in Stockton and six years later he sold this ranch to good advantage. Each of these enterprises was attended with signal success. In 1885 he moved his family to Stockton on account of the better school facilities. In 1890 he started a subdivision of his farm, selling it off in forty acre tracts and at the present time there are located twenty-five splendid ranch homes within the boundary of the original grain farm of 800 acres. This subdivision was completed in 1911. Mention must be made of the plan by which Mr. Graves made a successful disposition of these choice acres. The tracts were sold to desirable people and on terms so liberal that not one purchaser failed to carry out the terms of agreement.

Mr. and Mrs. Graves after coming to Stockton first resided on Magnolia Avenue. This place they sold on the completion in 1907 of their present spacious and comfortable home at 922 North Edison Street. Mr. Graves is deeply interested in good roads and has devoted much valuable time in the interest of county highways, among others the Austin Road, which with Engineer Brush he helped to survey and improve. Mr. Graves was a prominent member of the Union Grange and in politics he is a Republican.

Six children blessed the union of this worthy pioneer couple: Fannie Ellen is the wife of Frank Graves of Ripon; Luvenia Rachael is the wife of Charles Norman of Manteca; Lillie Ann married George Fox of Stockton, and their son, Louis, is the managing editor of the Stockton Independent; Henry Thomas is a merchant of Stockton; Sarah Etta died when twenty-three; Virdie is the wife of Robert Reed of Stockton. A quiet celebration of their golden wedding was held at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Frank Graves, at Ripon, November 2, 1912, and again at her home November 2, 1922, they celebrated their sixtieth anniversary or diamond wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Graves are now enjoying the freedom from care which they sustained so many years in managing their extensive ranch interests. Every movement for the upbuilding of Stockton and San Joaquin County has received Mr. Graves' hearty cooperation, and public and private charities have reason to be thankful to this highly esteemed and honored couple for their many benevolences.

LEWIS M. CUTTING.—A pioneer of Stockton who has had much to do with the building up of the city along substantial lines and whose optimism for its future greatness as a commercial city is Lewis M. Cutting, who at the advanced age of ninety-one years, after over sixty years of leadership in the realty field, still confers daily in the transaction of important deals in the conducting of the affairs of the firm of L. M. Cutting, realtors, of which he is the senior member, while his son, Francis Cutting, is the junior member and is actively engaged in the management of the firm.

Lewis M. Cutting was born in Lowell, Massachusetts, September 1, 1831. His father, Lewis Cutting, was a native of Weston, while his grandfather, John Cutting, also of Weston, married Cynthia Warren, a niece of General Joseph Warren of Revolutionary fame, who fell at the battle of Bunker Hill while in command of the American forces and died on the battlefield. In his will he left his niece, Cynthia, one of his farms at Weston, Mass., where General Warren had built a flour mill which was run by water-power. John Cutting and his wife were engaged in farming the place while their son, Marshall, ran the mill. Lewis Cutting, the father of our subject, was married in Lowell, Mass., to Miss Susan Julia Morrison, who was born in Derry, N. H., of an old and prominent New England family which took an active part in the early days of its Colonial history. The Morrison family dates back to a time in Norway when two younger sons of the then King of Norway settled in Scotland and established the Morrison family in that country. After many generations, members of the family settled in New Hampshire and were counted among the most highly respected families, some of its members serving in the Colonial and Revolutionary wars. Lewis Cutting was the superintendent of the cotton mills in Lowell, Mass. when his wife, who passed away three weeks after his son, Lewis M., was born, was buried in Derry, N. H. He married a second time and had six children—four of whom grew to maturity—but none are now living. In 1862 he came to San Francisco and established the Cutting Packing plant, which he conducted for many years; it was in that city that he spent the remainder of his life.

Lewis M. Cutting was reared in the city of Lowell, Mass., being graduated from the Lowell high school at the age of thirteen years. He then worked for a time in the cotton mills until he entered the employ of Burbank, Chase & Company, hardware merchants in Lowell. He left Lowell on Christmas Day, 1851, and going by way of the Isthmus of Panama he arrived in San Francisco February 7, 1852. For a few months he was employed in San Francisco, and then came to Stockton in June, 1852. Like most of the early pioneers, he was attracted to the mines, and for about three years he engaged in mining at Red Mountain Bar and vicinity in Tuolumne County, meeting with success. Returning to Stockton, he was employed in a hardware store on the corner of Main and El Dorado streets.

Having worked during vacations in his grandfather's flour mill at Weston, Mass. Mr. Cutting was solicited by the Sperrys to take charge as superintendent of their mills in Stockton. This place he accepted, and in his usual thorough way he made a success of the business and placed it on a substantial basis. He then again was employed in the hardware store until he accepted a position as superintendent of the flour mills at Knights Ferry for Hestres & Magendi, a position he filled for two years. While living at Knights Ferry he formed the acquaintance of Captain U. S. Grant, who was visiting his sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John Dent, and this resulted in a warm friendship.

In 1860 Mr. Cutting founded the business that today continues to bear his name so honorably. To prepare himself to be more able as a realtor he studied law for a time and few men had a better understanding of drawing up contracts and realty transactions. In the same year he became associated with Captain Charles M. Weber, the founder of Stockton, and at one time the principal owner of the land where Stockton is now located. A short time thereafter, President Abraham Lincoln confirmed Captain Weber's patent to the grant El Campo de los Franceses, a great property of some 48,000 acres. Mr. Cutting acted as Captain Weber's agent for twenty-seven years, and he continued in that capacity for six years after Captain Weber's death. He then closed up the estate, selling thousands of acres of land, which is now the most valuable aggregation of properties in San Joaquin County. The sale and deeds to practically all but the six central blocks of Stockton were handled by this able realty dealer, noted as an authority on land values in this county. Mr. Cutting was really one of the principals in the organizing of the Stockton Savings and Loan Association. Starting the first subscription for stock, in two hours he had enough subscribed to start incorporation.

Mr. Cutting's marriage occurred in San Francisco, where he was united with Miss Catherine Howland, a native of Vermont, an estimable woman. Their marriage proved a very happy one. She passed away in October of 1922, mourned by her family and friends. Their union was blessed with four children: Lewis H., a farmer; Francis, Mr. Cutting's partner; Maria, who is an artist and has a studio in this city; and Mrs. Grace Stewart, who presides over her father's home.

Associated in the firm of L. M. Cutting & Company is his son, Francis Cutting, a native son of Stockton who is following in his father's business footsteps. Reared in this city he has watched its steady growth, personally familiar with locations and land values in the city and farming communities; it is the consensus of opinion that he is one of the best informed land and investment authorities in Central California. Lewis M. Cutting served under two different governors as a director of the State Hospital at Stockton. He is one of the oldest members of Stockton Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F.

Always keenly interested in current affairs, Mr. Cutting is well informed and keeps abreast of the times. He is precise in his habits, friendly in his association, and, being a liberal man, he has been helpful to others. He has ever been loyal to the advancing interests of Stockton, having watched the city grow from a mere hamlet to a city of more than 50,000 inhabitants—a community of great manufacturing and industrial enterprises, and a distributing center for the agricultural products of Central California.

MARY A. TREDWAY.—One of the pioneer families in the Golden State is that which now finds a worthy representative in San Joaquin County in Mary A. Tredway, herself a pioneer of 1868 and the widow of William H. Tredway, a pioneer of 1854. Mary A. Tredway in maidenhood was Mary A. Ring, who was born in the state of New York, February 15, 1845, a daughter of Greenleaf and Betsey (Bunker) Ring, her father a native of New Hampshire and her mother of Vermont. Greenleaf Ring was a farmer in his native state who moved to New York state shortly after his marriage and remained there until after the birth of our subject. She was ten weeks old when her parents removed to Illinois, and the father purchased a quarter section of land west of Wheaton, which he farmed. For the benefit of his growing family, they lived in the town of Wheaton on account of the good educational advantages. There were six children in the family: Orvis was a member of the first graduating class of Wheaton College. He came West and settled in Nevada, where he became prominent in educational affairs and for twenty years was state superintendent of schools. Although unmarried, he has to his credit the education of several young men and left a lasting memory of the early days of that pioneer country. He was a thirty-second degree Mason and an Elk and died at the age of seventy-seven. Austin Ring died at the age of seventeen; Angelia, Mrs. Batchelder, was the wife of a Civil War veteran who gave his life for his country; Susan, Mrs. Hicks of Nevada, Iowa, passed away January 19, 1922; Mary A. is the subject of this sketch; Henry Sylvester is deceased. Greenleaf Ring was born April 11, 1808, and died December 30, 1877, and the mother was born May 3, 1810, and passed away February 15, 1875.

Mary A. Ring received her education in the grammar schools of Wheaton, Ill., and finished with a course in the Wheaton College and in 1868 came out to California, making the journey via the isthmus route. On May 19, 1870, she was married to William H. Tredway, who was born in Steubenville, Ohio, September 30, 1844. When he was ten years old, he accompanied his parents and other children across the plains from Ohio to this state. His father, Sylvester V. Tredway was a California '49er, who was born December 21, 1820, and crossed the plains to California in 1849, and after his arrival mined gold for some time. In the fall of 1853 he returned to Ohio via the Isthmus of Panama, and in March, 1854, brought his family, consisting of wife and three children, of whom William H. was the second child, across the plains to the Pacific Coast. His route was by way of St. Joseph, Mo., and he brought along a band of cattle and horses, arriving in San Joaquin County on September 10, 1854. For a time the father mined for gold in Calaveras and Amador counties, and also established and conducted several trading posts in those two counties. He located on the ranch in San Joaquin County in the year 1852, and was among the first settlers, and resided there until the day of his death. He was a member of the San Joaquin Society of California Pioneers, a Republican in politics, and was affiliated with the Knights of Pythias at Stockton and also with Jefferson Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Woodbridge. He married Miss Isabella McLaughlin, a native of Ohio, by whom he had three children: George W., William H. and Rebecca J.

William H. Tredway was reared to manhood in San Joaquin County, finishing in the public schools of the county the education which he had begun in Jefferson County, Ohio, and he also attended Napa College at Napa. He taught school for a short time in Napa County, but from youth up he was extensively engaged in farming. He became one of the leading ranchers of the county, and at one time owned 1,100 acres, forty acres of which was devoted to vineyard, and the rest to grain and pasture. Here Mr. and Mrs. Tredway made their home and reared their five children, namely; Sylvester Greenleaf Tredway, born May 23, 1870, married Miss Grace Maddocks and they were the parents of two children, Winthrop Henry and Marjory Lucile. He died January 27, 1912, at Sebastopol, Cal., and his widow in October, 1922; Orvis Wesley Tredway, born May 6, 1872, married Miss Sarah Cook of Glenbrook, Lake County, Cal., and they had five children—Harmon, William, Bessie, Cecil and Kenneth; he died November 15, 1913; Bessie Bell, widow of Warren Fowler, now resides in Stockton; Susie May is Mrs. Leon L. Kaiser, and with her husband resides on the home place; Ora R., Mrs. John Emde, the only one born on the old home place, resides in Lodi and has two children—George Wm. and Ora Lois.

For thirteen years Mr. Tredway served as deputy county assessor of San Joaquin County and was a staunch Republican in politics, casting his first vote for Lincoln. He was a Mason and served as chaplain of Woodbridge Lodge No. 131 F. & A. M. of which he was a past master; he was also a past patron of Woodbridge Chapter No. 118, O. E. S.; he was also a member of the Scottish Rite Consistory, and was just preparing to have the Shrine degree conferred upon him when he died. Mrs. Tredway is a member of the Eastern Star Chapter of Woodbridge. Mr. Tredway passed to the Great Beyond in November, 1911, mourned by the residents of San Joaquin County for he was prominent and influential citizen of that county. The present real estate holdings of Mrs. Tredway consist of 750 acres of well-improved land, thirty acres of which is in vineyard and the balance is used for grain and pasture, her stock averaging about 100 head. She has seen the county emerge from wild pioneer conditions and take its place among the leading counties of the great commonwealth, and her mind is stored with many interesting reminiscences of the early days.

ASA CLARK, M. D.—The experience gained through active professional work, first in the mining section around Placerville, and later in Stockton, gave Dr. Asa Clark a broad and humanitarian outlook upon the science of medicine and also brought him a high rank among physicians in Central California and Nevada. During the years of his earlier professional work Dr. Clark was greatly impressed with the fact that special care and special needs would be required to properly control and handle the large and increasing number of insane cases that came to his attention. This observation led him to make a thorough research into the treatment of mental diseases and was followed by his election as assistant physician of the State Insane Asylum at Stockton where his further observations and experience brought him to rank among the foremost in this important branch of the medical profession. As proprietor for many years of the Clark Sanitarium in Stockton, he devoted his entire attention to the care of insane patients, his years of continuous practice making him competent to cope with mental diseases of all stages.

The life which this narrative depicts began in the home of Curtis and Electa (Meacham) Clark, both natives of Vermont, but at the time of the birth of their son, June 29, 1824, residents of Essex County, N. Y. Subsequently they removed to Oswego County, same state, later settled on a farm near Park Ridge, Cook County, Ill., from there finally removing to Minnesota, where the mother died in 1862, at the age of seventy years, and the father in 1883, at the advanced age of ninety-three years. Asa Clark first attended the district schools in Park Ridge, and his academic education was received in Wilson's Seminary, Chicago. In the meantime, he had decided to follow the medical profession, and his studies thereafter were conducted under Dr. Brainerd, of Rush Medical College, Chicago. Receiving his diploma in 1849, he set out that same year for California, crossing the plains, going directly to Placerville, where he opened an office for the practice of his profession. Necessarily his practice was small at first, and in order to enlarge his income he became interested with others in the establishment of a general store in the town, and also was interested in mining to some extent. The year of 1850 found him in Santa Clara, and the year following he was in Santa Barbara. Two years later, however, in 1853, he returned to Placerville and resumed his practice, remaining there for eight years.

It was in 1861 that Dr. Clark came to Stockton to assume the duties as assistant physician for the State Insane Asylum, and since that time until his demise, his entire thought and study was given to those mentally afflicted. By arrangements with the authorities of Nevada, Drs. Langdon and Clark were entrusted with the care of the insane in the territory, then numbering about thirty, and all such other patients as should be committed to their care. They were first located in Woodbridge, and four years later opened their office in Stockton, having in the meantime also formed a contract with Arizona for the care of their insane. At times the institution cared for from 800 to 1000 patients. Both contracts remained in force until each territory had built its own asylum, Nevada in 1882, and Arizona in 1888, although after 1880 Dr. Clark carried out the contracts alone, owing to a dissolution of partnership with Dr. Langdon in that year. In 1871 Dr. Clark had established his private sanitarium in Stockton, then known as the Pacific Hospital and now known as Clark's Sanitorium.

In Placerville, Cal., May 7, 1856, Dr. Clark was united in marriage with Miss Mary Elizabeth Mountjoy. Her parents were natives of Virginia, but at the time of the birth of their daughter, in 1838, were residents of Ohio. Subsequently in 1852, they brought their family to California and here they passed the remainder of their lives. Dr. Clark and his wife became the parents of the following children:

Harriette Electa Clark of San Francisco; George Curtis, deceased; and Dr. Fred Pope Clark, the present owner of Clark's Sanitorium in Stockton.

LEON VILLINGER, SR.—The interest which attaches to the life story of California pioneers is a visible expression of the gratitude which all men feel toward the forerunners of civilization in the Far West, numbered among whom was Leon Villinger, Sr., who experienced all the hardships of those primitive days in his struggle for success. A native of Germany, with his wife and two daughters he started in 1850 on a sailing vessel for the far-off port of San Francisco, coming around the Horn. Both of his daughters died on the voyage and his eldest son Asa was born, the trip consuming eight months and filled with perilous happenings. At one time the ship was nearly lost, with all on board, as it sprang a leak off the west coast of South America and all hands had to bail for their lives until they could put in at the port of Valparaiso, Chili, where they remained six weeks while repairs were being made.

Mr. Villinger, who was a jeweler and watchmaker, engaged in this line of work in San Francisco for two years, and in 1853 he came to Stockton where he opened a jewelry shop, conducting it for two years, when he took up 320 acres of Government land three miles south of Lodi. It was a hand to hand fight in subduing the wilderness in those days and Mr. Villinger worked early and late clearing the land of brush and timber twenty acres at a time, then planting it in wheat. The Indian Reservation was near his home and there were all kinds of wild animals and game in plenty in the vicinity. He cut the wood on his place and hauled it to Stockton, where he sold it for five to eight dollars a cord. This was also the market for his wheat, which brought about eighty cents per cental. There were no roads in those early days and it took three days to get to Stockton through that wild country, the mud being so deep in the winter that it was necessary to drag their loads all the sixteen miles on sleds, with six mules hitched to them. Mrs. Villinger, who was Mary Peshy before her marriage, a native of France, passed away in Lodi in 1915 at the age of ninety-five; a fine type of pioneer woman, she came of long-lived ancestry, her father reaching the age of 104, while her mother lived to be ninety-six. Of the children born to Mr. and Mrs. Villinger the following are living: Asa lives in Lodi; Lucian and John are ranchers in the Lodi district; Leon lives at Lodi, and Mrs. Kate Goodwin makes her home at Fullerton, Cal.

Leon Villinger, Jr., was born on the old ranch near Lodi, November 5, 1854. The country was very sparsely settled then and the chances for schooling were meager, so as there was work for every one in the family, Leon started at the early age of eight to plow the virgin soil with a two-mule team. When he was eighteen he developed a ranch of 160 acres near the river northeast of Lodi, farming it to grain for seven years. He then located in Santa Ana, Orange County, Cal., where he purchased a thirty-seven acre orange grove, making this his home for seventeen years. When he returned to Lodi he first bought a place of twenty acres on Cherokee Lane, which he improved, planting some of it to grapes, and at the end of six years he disposed of it at a good profit. He then bought the property at 222 East Oak Street, Lodi, and erected the residence which has since been his home. Meanwhile he has been interested in the development of other properties, purchasing land next to the old cemetery, of which he was custodian for some time, later selling this land to Mrs. Frances Barton. He also bought forty acres on the river north of Lodi which he brought to a high state of improvement, planting a vineyard and installing a fine irrigation system with cement piping and two pumping plants, and after three years he sold this property to his son Charles L. Villinger.

Mr. Villinger's marriage united him with Miss Mary E. McCoy, who was born at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, and three children were born to them: Charles L., Fred H. and Mrs. Edith E. Ray. Always a leader in community enterprise, Mr. Villinger was elected as a member of the first board of trustees when Lodi was incorporated in 1906, serving six years and giving faithful service, the board holding 101 meetings the first year, when so many matters were coming up for adjustment. He is also prominent in the Lodi Lodge of Odd Fellows, having passed through all the chairs.

ROY S. MILLS.—The name borne by Roy S. Mills is indelibly traced on the history of San Joaquin County, for his grandfather Freeman B. Mills, was a pioneer of the county, coming in 1853 across the plains from Illinois and he became a very prominent citizen. He served as sheriff of the county for one term and was active in local Republican politics and was a charter member of Jefferson Lodge of Odd Fellows. Roy S. Mills was born in Paso Robles, Cal., April 29, 1895; his father, George Mills, was born on the Freeman B. Mills ranch one mile west of Lodi and received his education in the schools of his native district. After finishing his education he moved to San Luis Obispo County and purchased a ranch in the vicinity of Paso Robles. He married Miss Mary Bucher, a native daughter of California, and their six children were born on their ranch at Paso Robles, namely: Ralph; Stella, Mrs. Guy Knight; Ethel, Mrs. Fred McCann; Claude; Glendora, Mrs. Marcus Nelson, and Roy S. the subject of our sketch. The father passed away at the age of sixty-four years in Woodbridge.

Roy S. Mills attended the Woodbridge grammar school and the Lodi high school and at the age of eighteen years struck out for himself, working first in Stockton. About four years ago he returned to Lodi where he bought a twenty-one acre ranch on Walnut Avenue set to vineyard and amply watered by a good irrigation system; then he purchased another on Terminus Road, consisting of twenty acres, one-half of which was set to vineyard and the balance bare land; later he sold this ranch and then bought his present forty-acre ranch on the Cherokee Road south of Lodi, which is a producing vineyard.

The marriage of Mr. Mills occurred in Stockton and united him with Miss Corinne Bentley, a native of Lodi, Cal., a daughter of Rodney and Elizabeth Bentley. The former was born in Dixon, Cal., and later moved to Lodi where he engaged in the merchandise business. Both parents reside in Lodi, as does their daughter, Cecil Bentley McMillan. Mr. and Mrs. Mills are the parents of two children: James and El Roy, and in politics Mr. Mills is a Republican.

MASSIMENO PARDINI.—A native of sunny Italy who has been successful in California and who, therefore, having cast his lot here, has no need of regrets, is Massimeno Pardini, a native of Lucca, who has a fine delta farm of 390 acres in the Middle Division of Roberts Island, eight miles to the southwest of Stockton, and he has enviably identified himself with that region.

He was born on July 1, 1864, the son of Lorenzo and Maria (Poppini) Pardini, the former a well-to-do merchant and landowner, the parent of thirteen children, only three of whom are living, among whom our subject is the youngest. An elder brother, Luigo, came out to America in 1877 and established himself as a wheelwright at San Francisco, and there he conducted a shop of his own until his death, in 1898. When seventeen years of age, Massimeno left home, crossed the ocean and the American continent, and arrived at San Francisco on June 1, 1882; and after remaining there for six months, he came on into San Joaquin County, where for over seven years he drove an eight-mule team on the Due Ranch, near Atlanta, receiving as a wage just twenty dollars per month. He also followed general farm work, for seven and one-half years, at the John Minges ranch, on the French Camp Road.

In 1898, he made a start on his own account, coming to the new reclamation on Union Island, and there he put in the first bean crop in the peat lands of that section, attaining such surprising results that he produced the first season twenty-five sacks to the acre, a bountiful crop. He then moved to the middle division of Roberts Island and leased land from Woods brothers, raising beans and potatoes, continuing until in 1911, when he bought 390 acres of the Woods' lands and has since developed a model farm, improved with a desirable residence and complete, modern equipment of every sort. Since 1907, too, he has also owned a fine residence in Stockton, at 906 South Center Street, where he and his family are still residing. In 1884 he had citizenship in the United States conferred upon him at Stockton, and since then he has marched with the Democratic party.

On January 19, 1890, Mr. Pardini was married to Miss Giovanna Allegretti, a native of Stockton, where she was born on April 27, 1873, the daughter of John and Catherine (Gianelli) Allegretti; her father was a pioneer of San Joaquin County and is now the superintendent of gardens at the San Joaquin General Hospital at French Camp; her mother died in October, 1884; three children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pardini, only two of whom grew up and are living. George J. H., who was born on March 10, 1894, is a graduate of Heald's Business College, and is at present cashier of the American Express Company at Stockton. He was married to Miss Vera Camozzi in January, 1922. Leonilda, who first saw the light on April 24, 1896, became the wife of Ray E. Pulich and the mother of one son, Warren Marks, and they reside on the Pardini ranch. George J. H. Pardini is an active member of the Elks, belonging to Stockton Lodge No. 218, and of the Knights of Columbus, and he also belongs to Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W.

In 1900 Mr. Pardini made an extended trip to Europe, accompanied by his father, who remained in Italy and lived to reach the venerable age of ninety, passing away in 1920, and in 1907, he made a second visit to his Italian home-place, spending about five months abroad, and enjoying himself most pleasantly and profitably. On June 24, 1909, Mrs. Pardini, accompanied by her son and daughter, left for Italy; and they took along with them Miss Buella Minges, the gifted daughter of George Minges, whose interesting life-sketch also appears in this history. The presence of the young people made the outing doubly enjoyable, and Mrs. Pardini declares it was an experience never to be forgotten. During their stay in Italy her son and daughter attended school, from which they also profited greatly. Only by wise foresight, clever planning, and hard, incessant, honest labor has Mr. Pardino brought success his way, and his devoted wife has fully shared with him his responsibilities, and now merits to share his honors and success. They have never failed to give the right hand of fellowship to their neighbors and fellow-workers, and now, in their comfortable retirement, they have many right hands of friendship extended to them.

HARRY W. BESSAC.—When Harry W. Bessac was elected county superintendent of schools of San Joaquin County in 1922, a man was selected thoroughly qualified to fill the position with distinctive ability, whose heart is in the educational work before him. First of all, Mr. Bessac is an educator by training, bringing to the cause of education not only a well-trained mind, but a fund of practical knowledge backed by years of successful teaching. He was born at Dover, Wis., on July 29, 1876, and when a small boy was taken by his parents to the state of Washington, where he attended the public schools of Montesano; later, in 1889, when his parents removed to Los Angeles, Cal. he attended the grammar and high schools. Mr. Bessac then came to Stockton in 1897 for the purpose of taking a course in the Normal School and upon receiving a teacher's certificate, taught in Placer County for five years, when he became associated with the Western School of Commerce of Stockton. On September 1, 1902, this school was incorporated with the following officers: J. R. Humphreys, president; T. H. Wolfenbarger, vice-president; and Harry W. Bessac, secretary, and for the next ten years he was a successful instructor, officer and part owner of this institution. Mr. Bessac then became the principal of the Washington School of Stockton; later of the Jackson school, the largest grammar school in Stockton, and on December 1, 1921 was appointed superintendent of rural schools of San Joaquin County, a position of responsibility, and because of his wide experience in all branches of educational work he is recognized as a leader, and a man in whom the public has every confidence. He is a member of the executive board of the Elementary Teacher's Association of Stockton.

The marriage of Mr. Bessac occurred in Stockton and united him with Miss Nell Hurd, a native of Stockton and a descendant of a pioneer family. Her maternal grandfather, Dr. Kerr, crossed the plains in 1849 and opened the second drug store in Stockton and practiced medicine for many years. Mr. and Mrs. Bessac are the parents of three children: Marion R., Arthur H., and Francis B. Fraternally he is one of the leading Masons of the district; is past master of Morning Star Lodge No. 68; past high priest of Royal Arch Chapter No. 28; inspector of the twenty-sixth Masonic district, which includes six lodges as follows: Morning Star No. 68, San Joaquin No. 19, Delta No. 471, Stockton No. 498, Lodi No. 267, Valley Lodge of Linden No. 135. While inspector, Mr. Bessac organized two Masonic lodges in Stockton, Delta No. 471 and Stockton No. 498. He is also a 32nd degree Scottish Rite Mason. The Bessacs have been prominent in Masonic circles for two generations. His father, Henry W. Bessac, who resides at Riverbank, is a past master of his lodge, and a Mason of more than fifty years standing. In the spring of 1922, Mr. Bessac became a candidate for the office of county superintendent of schools in San Joaquin County, and was elected November 7, 1922, taking office January 8, 1923.

JOSEPH H. SWAIN.—For many years Joseph H. Swain has been numbered among the prosperous and progressive farmers and stock raisers of San Joaquin County, and previous to his removal to Stockton and from the year 1877 he lived on his fine ranch five miles north of Stockton on West Lane. He has added to his holding from time to time until he is now the owner of 1218 acres of fine grain land and its excellent improvements and thorough cultivation give it a reputation as one of the model places of the county. Since 1892 he has resided at 1045 North Commerce Street, Stockton. Mr. Swain is a native of San Joaquin County, where he has worked out his career in honorable effort to prosperous results, and he belongs to a family whose members have been influential in county affairs from pioneer days to the present. He was born January 13, 1856, a son of the late Cornelius Swain and his wife Juliza C. (Davis) Swain, the father a native of Tennessee and the mother of Missouri.

Cornelius Swain, who died at his home in Stockton in 1904, was a well known pioneer of San Joaquin County. He brought his family from Missouri to this state in 1853, crossing the plains with ox teams, and reached Stockton in the same year. He was a wagon and carriage maker, a trade which he followed for a short time after his arrival in Stockton, but nearly all of his active career here was spent in ranching on his fine estate on Cherokee Lane about six miles from Stockton, where he lived a life of usefulness until he removal to Stockton about ten years before his death. He was a prominent Mason, being a member of Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M., and of Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T., and he was buried with the rites of Masonry. He was a Democrat in politics, and as the candidate of this, the minority party, some years ago ran for the office of county treasurer. He served as trustee and clerk of the board of the Davis school district, in which he formerly resided, and he was always ready to act for the welfare and progress of his county.

There were six children of the Swain household: John A. resides in Stockton; Joseph H. is the subject of this sketch; Charles C., deceased; Mrs. Mary Bell Mitchell resides in San Francisco; George resides in Hollywood; and Mrs. Jessie Hamilton resides in San Francisco. The father died in 1904 at the age of seventy-eight and the mother was also seventy-eight when she passed away in 1906.

Joseph H. Swain was reared on the Swain ranch in San Joaquin County, and attended the Davis county school and the Washington school in Stockton, then entered the Stockton High School, and after his school days were over he took up agricultural pursuits, which he successfully followed until his removal to Stockton in 1892. While living in the country he served for a time as a trustee of the Davis school district.

The marriage of Mr. Swain occurred October 2, 1878, at the ranch home of his bride nine miles southeast of Stockton, uniting him with Miss Nancy H. Castle, born on the same ranch where her marriage occurred, a daughter of George H. and Harriet Castle. The former was born at Hobart, New York state, March 27, 1822, of English ancestry; his maternal grandfather was a Revolutionary soldier and served throughout the struggle that made the colonies free. He removed to the state of Wisconsin, from which state in 1852 he set out for California and was accompanied on this journey by his two brothers, James U. and Christopher C., his wife and three children. He was married at Springfield, Ill., April 1, 1846, to Miss Harriet Oliver, who was born at Springfield, Ill., October 28, 1829, and died at Oakland, August 2, 1882. They joined the usual emigrant train of those days, and, crossing the Mississippi River on April 5, 1852, arrived in Hangtown, Cal., on August 20. The brothers employed their energies in mining on the middle fork of the American River until 1856. Later Mr. Castle located in San Joaquin County, where he acquired considerable land and at his death left a large estate. He also became a large landowner in Tulare County. This worthy pioneer couple became the parents of fourteen children, nine of whom grew up: Mary E., Mrs. Barney, deceased; Cynthia, Mrs. Nicewonger resides in Berkeley; Hasting, deceased; Dorlusca, Mrs. E. W. Kay resides at San Anselmo; Nancy H., Mrs. Joseph H. Swain, deceased; Edmund G. resides at Oakland; Mrs. Pamela Josephine Baggs resides in San Francisco; Durrett Oliver resides on the old Castle homestead nine miles southeast of Stockton; Lavinia G., Mrs. Blythe, deceased. George H. Castle at one time served as sheriff of the county. After his marriage, Joseph H. Swain bought a quarter-section of land on Hammer Lane, about five miles north of Stockton and there resided for fourteen years, when the family removed to Stockton, where he has since made his home. Some time later he bought an eighty-acre piece of land adjoining his quarter-section and when his father died he inherited 108 acres from the Swain estate, making 348 acres of land. Mrs. Swain and the other Castle heirs inherited 1170 acres of land, but 400 acres was afterwards disposed of, leaving 770 acres. Mr. Swain bought out the other heirs from time to time until he owned the entire acreage, making a total of 1218 acres which he now owns and which is devoted to grain and stockraising.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Swain became the parents of a family of five children, three of whom are now living: Mabel J., Mrs. Frank M. Simpson, resides in Alameda; George C. is the manager of the old home ranch; and Gladys O., Mrs. Roy N. Waltz, resides in Stockton. There is one grandchild, Donna J., a daughter of Mrs. Simpson. Mr. Swain is affiliated with the Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M., at Stockton, and Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; he is also a member of the Elks at Stockton, and is a member of the Christian Church at Stockton. Mrs. Swain passed away in the Stockton home on February 18, 1920.

GEORGE WILLIS—For fifty-three years George Willis has been numbered among the citizens of Stockton, fifty years of this time having been spent as chief engineer for the Wagner Leather Company. He came West and settled in Stockton in 1869, when a young man and has progressed to his present prosperity mainly by reliance on his own efforts, and is therefore regarded among his neighbors and friends with that peculiar esteem always bestowed upon those who achieve their own welfare and success. He was born in Durham County, England, April 5, 1840, where at ten years of age he began driving a horse in the coal mines; later he was engineer in the same mine; he also worked on the hoists, taking the coal from the mines by cable. In 1867 he left England for America locating first in Ohio; the following year he removed to Omaha, Neb., where he fired on a locomotive during the building of the Union Pacific railroad for a short time, then to Salt Lake City where he became engineer in the Wyoming carbon coal mines.

Coming to California, he arrived in Stockton in 1869 and worked as a carpenter with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, building water tanks and culverts between Stockton and Oakland. In the spring of 1870, he entered the employ of the Wagner Leather Company where he worked uninterruptedly for fifty years and is now living retired on a pension granted by this company for his efficient service during those years. When he began to work for the company, twenty men were employed and Mr. Willis worked as fireman and engineer; at one time he was sent to Humboldt County where he worked in the extract plant of the company. His years of service and valuable knowledge of the business made him an expert in his line and the appreciation of the company for which he worked so long and faithfully was shown in a substantial manner.

Mr. Willis' first marriage united him with Miss Hannah Sutherland, a native of England, who passed away in Stockton. His second marriage united him with Miss Mary Blackburn, who was brought to Stockton by Mr. Willis when she was eight years old and received her education in that city. Three children were born to them: Evelyn, now Mrs. Harry Swift and they have one daughter, Betty; Hattie is the wife of John McAdams and they have two children, John W. and Frances, and they reside in Alameda; George B. is in the employ of the Stockton street railway, and was in the Navy, stationed on the South Dakota, conveying troops during the World War. In the early days of Stockton the slough came up to the Wagner Leather Company's plant by reason of the fact that Mr. Willis built a dam to bring the water to proper height, and schooners came through the drawbridge loaded with tan bark; as many as three at one time have been taken through by Mr. Willis. Mr. Willis is a man of genuine worth, and all with whom he has come in contact entertain for him high regard.

George Willis

CHARLES E. HURD.—A typical California pioneer, representative of all the best qualities and elements of those sturdy settlers is Charles E. Hurd. The veterans of the old vanguard who made settlement in the state fifty years ago are few and constantly decreasing in number, and the deeds done in those days of activity certainly deserve chronicling before the actors themselves pass from the stage of life. Of the eighty years of his life, Mr. Hurd has spent the last fifty-eight in San Joaquin County, so that none have a more intimate acquaintance with the development and upbuilding of this portion of the state. He was born at Conway, N. H., on February 7, 1843, a son of Oliver S. and Sarah Ann (Linsertt) Hurd. The father was a building contractor and there were five children in the family; Emma, Charles E., Elwell, William and Ann Sarah. The father lived to be over seventy years old, but the mother passed away when Charles E. was a lad of seven. After his mother's death he was sent to Brownfield, Maine, where he was reared in various homes and attended the district school in the winter and during the summer months worked for his living. From the age of ten until he was sixteen he lived with D. M. Bean and worked in his store when not in school and from sixteen to the age of twenty-one he was a clerk in Mr. Bean's store, with the exception of nine months that he served in the Civil War in the 23rd Maine Volunteer Infantry.

On February 26, 1864, he came to California and settled near Stockton where he worked for five years on a dairy owned by J. E. Moore, three miles out from Stockton and during that time was able to accumulate sufficient means to go into the dairy business for himself and for twenty-one years, he was so engaged, selling his products in Stockton. Some twenty years ago, Mr. Hurd purchased his present ranch of ten acres on Harney Lane about two and a half miles southeast of Lodi, the ranch being devoted to the growing of grapes, fruit and alfalfa. He has also done considerable well boring throughout San Joaquin County.

The marriage of Mr. Hurd occurred at Stockton on February 1, 1870, and united him with Miss Emma C. Kerr, a native of Miami, Ohio, a daughter of Dr. William R. and Francis (Brown) Kerr. Dr. Kerr came to California by the southern route and arrived in San Diego in 1849 and in the spring of 1850 came to San Francisco and the next year to Stockton. At the Gila River, Dr. Kerr was obliged to dispose of most of his baggage as the train was in danger of being hopelessly mired in the river. Mrs. Hurd was an infant in arms when her parents crossed the plains in 1849 and her father was a practicing physician and had one of the finest drug stores in Stockton. Mrs. Hurd was educated in the Eldorado district school in Stockton and later the Normal school and became a teacher in Merced County. Her father owned a ranch on Cherokee Lane and the family resided on it for forty years. Dr. Kerr and Dr. Kelsey, George and William West helped in the organization of the Republican party in San Joaquin County, not an easy task in those days, as the county was mostly Democratic. Dr. Kerr passed away at the age of forty-eight, but his wife lived to be ninety-four years old.

Mr. and Mrs. Hurd are the parents of eight children: Francis E., now Mrs. Manning of Oakland;

Lila M., Clarence W., and Charles; Ethel, now Mrs. Comfort of Stockton and she has one son, Hosmer; Lester resides at Westley; Nellie married H. W. Bessac and they have three children, Marian, Arthur and Francis; Alga is the wife of Dr. A. Carlton Smith of the Oakland Emergency Hospital and they have one daughter, Alga Margaret. Mr. Hurd joining the Masons on February 26, 1864, entering Mt. Moriah Lodge at Brownfield, Maine, and he has been a member ever since; at the age of seventy this lodge presented him with a life diploma and membership. Politically Mr. Hurd is a Republican and the family are members of the Methodist Church.

WILLIAM H. LORENZ.—San Joaquin County will never forget the important and necessary part played by the far-sighted, experienced bankers in her development, through which she has come to take a front place among the counties of California, and prominent among the agencies that has done much for the progress in Central California the First National Bank of Lodi must be mentioned. Its success is undoubtedly due, to a great extent, to the personal attention to every detail of William H. Lorenz, the president of this thriving institution. He was born in Crawfordsville, Ind., on April 9, 1863, and there was reared and educated. In 1885 he came West to Walla Walla, Wash., and engaged in farming pursuits for two years at the end of which time he removed to Stockton and was employed by P. A. Buell & Company; later he entered the Stockton State Hospital and soon afterward assumed the supervision of that institution, where he remained for fifteen years. During the year of 1905 he settled in Lodi and helped to organize the First National Bank and became its cashier, which position he held until recently when he was elected president. The other officers are as follows: H. C. Beckman, E. E. Morse and S. H. Zimmerman, vice-presidents; Lloyd Mazzera, cashier; P. A. Ritchie, H. F. Lightfoot, D. H. Groff and C. D. Tappan, assistant cashiers. The present board of directors are: George F. McNoble, chairman, and W. H. Lorenz, president; H. C. Beckman, E. E. Morse, and S. H. Zimmerman, vice-presidents; George W. Le Moin, E. A. Covell, John C. Bewley, Otto Spenker and W. G. Mieke. The First National Bank was organized with a capital of $25,000; and now with the Central Savings Bank, under the same management, has a combined capital of $300,000 with a surplus of $150,000 and resources of over $3,500,000.

Mr. Lorenz is the secretary and treasurer of the Lodi Investment Company which built and own the beautiful Lodi Hotel and the Lodi theater. In 1913 he purchased an eighty-acre vineyard near Youngstown, which he has brought to a high state of cultivation; an arch at the entrance to the property reads "Vista Del Monte Vineyard." In partnership with John C. Bewley, he recently subdivided a forty-acre tract south of Lodi into one-acre lots. Mr. Lorenz has been city treasurer of Lodi since its incorporation in 1906. Fraternally he is a member of Lodi Lodge No. 256 F. & A. M. Masons; and belongs to all branches of that order in Stockton, and to the San Francisco Consistory and Shrine; he has passed through all the chairs of the Lodi Lodge of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Lorenz's marriage united him with Hedwig Ruhl, a native daughter of California born in Stockton; she is the daughter of the late Fred Ruhl, a Stockton pioneer, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Lorenz are the parents of one daughter, Bernice, a graduate of the University of California in 1921. She married P. A. Ritchie of Lodi and they have a little daughter. A man of fine character, a clear thinker, broad-minded and progressive, Mr. Lorenz has a keen desire for the community's betterment, morally, educationally and commercially.

MRS. JOHANNA BROUND.—An honored resident of San Joaquin County, Mrs. Johanna Bround resides on the old Robert Stewart homestead situated on the Lincoln Highway about one-half mile south of the Henderson district school. She was born on this ranch in 1864, a daughter of Robert and Catherine (Callahan) Stewart, the former a native of County Antrim and the latter of Cork, Ireland. Robert Stewart was a young boy when he left his native land for America in 1849 and came direct to California in an ox-team train via the Salt Lake route, the journey consuming six months. Arriving in California he went to the mines at Placerville and Coloma where he spent three years and there met with fine success in his mining ventures. He then came to San Joaquin County and bought a squatter's title to a tract of land about nine miles north of Stockton on the Stockton-Woodbridge Road. Besides paying for his squatter's title, he later paid the railroad company for the same land. He thus acquired a quarter section of land, where he spent the remainder of his life. Three children were born to this pioneer couple, Mrs. Johanna Bround, the subject of this sketch; Mary Jane, Mrs. Bollinger and Robert, who died at the age of fifteen years.

Johanna Stewart received her education in the Henderson district school and remained at home with her parents until her marriage to Jacob Bround, which occurred January 17, 1888. He was a native of Denmark, whose father died when he was a babe. At the age of thirteen he left home and came to the United States and found employment in Chicago, where he remained for ten years, when he came to California and settled in the Wakefield district where he engaged in farming. Mr. and Mrs. Bround then removed to Eastern Oregon and homesteaded a quarter section of land and also preempted a quarter section of land in the same county; he also purchased additional school land and their residence there covered a period of fifteen years. On account of failing health, Mr. Bround sold his Oregon land and returned to San Joaquin County and bought a quarter section of land about five miles southwest of Lodi on the Davis Road, but was not permitted to enjoy his new home, for he only lived seven months after his return to California. He passed away on November 7, 1903. Mr. Bround was an active factor in all matters pertaining to the betterment of his locality and was also an active lodge man. After her husband's death, Mrs. Bround lived in Lodi until 1920 when she removed to her eighty-acre home place, a portion of the ranch owned by her father. Ten acres of this has been set to young vineyard and the balance is in grain and there is a comfortable concrete block residence on the place where Mrs.

Bround makes her home. Mr. and Mrs. Bround have three children; Mary, Mrs. J. Louis Perrin, resides near Kingdon; Ethel, Mrs. Fred Sanguinetti, resides near Acampo; Howard married Miss Gertrude Krebs and they have one child, Audrey Marie. Fraternally Mr. Bround was a member of the Ione Lodge I. O. O. F. in Morrow County, Ore. as well as a Mason. Mrs. Bround is a past noble grand and past district deputy of the Rebekahs in Lodi.

WILLIAM J. YOUNG, M. D.—A most skillful surgeon, William J. Young gained prominence in his profession and was recognized throughout the state among physicians and surgeons as among the foremost in the medical profession. He was not only a Native Son of the Golden West, but also a native of San Joaquin County, his birth having occurred on the Sonora Road, four miles west of Farmington, August 30, 1869, the son of an old time resident and pioneer of San Joaquin County, David Young, a native of Canada and a farmer of San Joaquin Valley for many years.

William J. Young was educated in the public schools of Stockton, St. Mary's College of Stockton, and pursued his medical course in the Cooper Medical College of San Francisco, from which institution he graduated with the M. D. degree. During 1902 he took a trip abroad for the purpose of taking a post-graduate course in Vienna and England.

Dr. Young was married about sixteen years ago to Miss Ysabel Laogier, a native of Stockton, daughter of the late Mrs. Basilio Laogier, and they were the parents of two daughters, Dorothy and Margaret. Two brothers, J. M. and David E. Young, both live in Stockton, while two sisters, Mrs. Tim Minihen and Mrs. Margaret W. Williams, have passed away. Dr. Young was a member of Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W., Young Men's Institute of Stockton, and of Stockton Lodge No. 218 B. P. O. E.

Dr. Young enjoyed one of the largest practices in this section of the state, was greatly beloved for his frank manner and sincerity and respected for his professional skill. During the last three years of his life, Dr. Young was associated with Dr. J. W. Barnes. For several months before his demise, Dr. Young had been seriously ill and on September 26, 1921, he passed away. As a physician and surgeon, Dr. Young ranked among the leaders in his profession, but overshadowing even this was the real man whose big heart went out to the poor and the afflicted and whose deeds of generosity and kindness have brightened many homes. Liberal to a marked degree, Dr. Young's charities were all done quietly and in an unostentatious manner, not for worldly praise but for the good and the relief he could give to his fellowmen. But now the voice that soothed is stilled and the eyes that shone with kindness and inspiration are closed and the skilled hands folded forever. The devotion to friends, faithful remembrances of favors received and love of family, the recognition of civic duties, all these contributed to form a character that may well be pointed at as that of an ideal physician. It can be said of Dr. Young that he was a good man, able physician and wise counsellor, a true friend and kind to the poor. His soul has gone to claim a just reward, but in the hearts of Stockton people his memory will ever remain as a truly good man.

GEORGE SAMUEL LADD.—For a period covering only a little less than fifty years George Samuel Ladd was actively identified with the interests of Stockton, where he arrived January 14, 1853, and was from that time associated with educational, real estate and commercial enterprises until his death, April 25, 1902. Not only does this era cover almost the entire period of the American occupancy of California, but in addition it represents the epoch of progress and development of the Pacific coast resources, which prior to the discovery of gold had been unknown to the world. Shortly after the discovery of gold, he started for this region, full of courage and ambitious to make his own way in the world, unmindful of hardships and perils by the way. He never regretted his decision to leave New England for the more fruitful regions of the West, but rather rejoiced in the privilege of aiding in the upbuilding of this great state.

Descended from an old New England family, George Samuel Ladd was born in Danville, Vt., May 28, 1832, being a son of Seneca and Pamela (Estabrook) Ladd, and a brother of John S. and Ira W. Ladd, also pioneers of California. His earliest education was obtained in the seminary at Sanbornton Bridge and there he was fitting for college when he heard of the discovery of gold in California. At once all of his plans for the future were changed and he began to prepare for the long journey to the new gold fields. With his father he took passage in 1851 on a vessel which made the trip by way of Cape Horn to San Francisco, where they landed after an uneventful voyage. They at once set out for the mines in Tuolumne County, where they met with fair success, but finally returned to Danville, Vt., arriving in July of 1852.

A few months later George S. Ladd, accompanied by his youngest brother, Ira W., came to California by the Panama route, and reached Stockton on January 14, 1853. In addition to mining interests he became interested in the freighting and commission business with his brother, John S.; later he became a partner of George West and Sidney Newell in the manufacture and sale of products from the West Vineyard. From time to time he had bought and sold farms in various counties of California, as well as in Oregon, and his ventures had proved of financial benefit to him and had enabled him to accumulate a considerable property. At the time of his death he left, in addition to his business property in Stockton, land in Fresno and San Joaquin counties, and property in Oregon, all of which has greatly increased in value. Fraternally he was a member of the Odd Fellows, which he joined in 1856, and belonged to Stockton Lodge No. 11 and was also a member of the Pioneer Society of San Joaquin County. He was a staunch Republican. For three years he was a member of the city council of Stockton and also officiated as state commissioner of the Yosemite Valley. For more than twenty years he was a member of the choir of the First Presbyterian Church of Stockton.

A record of the career of George Samuel Ladd would be incomplete were no mention made of his association with the educational development of his county and state. From early manhood he held a life certificate as a teacher and during his residence in Tuolumne County served as school trustee. In 1867 he was appointed superintendent of the schools of Stockton, and this position he held by appointment until the first election under the new charter, when he was duly elected to the office, holding same until 1880. Under his administration the local schools were brought to a high standard of excellence and the building of modern structures begun. Perhaps no work he accomplished in the position was more important than that of recommending a revision of the school law and manual outlining the duties of pupils, teachers and superintendents, which recommendation was adopted.

The marriage of Mr. Ladd took place in Stockton May 28, 1856, and united him with Miss Abigail Bourland, a native of Arkansas, born January 30, 1840. Her parents, Alue and Rebecca (Cook) Bourland, were born, reared and married in Alabama, but shortly after their marriage removed to Arkansas and settled at Fort Smith, where they remained for a number of years. During 1854 they started for California across the plains and proceeded as far as Surprise Valley without misfortune, but while camping there the mother died of heart disease. The survivors arrived in Stockton September 22, 1854. A brother, Lafayette Bourland, now of Woodland, Yolo County, aged ninety years, had come in 1853, and met the family and conducted them to Stockton. The maternal grandmother, Mrs. Abigail Bourland, lived to be ninety-six years old. Mr. and Mrs. Ladd were the parents of four sons. The eldest, George Edwin, was born May 11, 1857, and married in Stockton November 26, 1884, Miss Mary Evaline Van Vlear, who was born in Stockton in 1860. They were the parents of two children, Jeanette and Edwin Hubbard. George Edwin is now deceased. The second son, Walter Eugene Ladd, born May 27, 1859, and his marriage, which occurred February 5, 1885, united him with Miss Lucy Estella Ayers, who was born in San Joaquin County, December 9, 1862. They were the parents of six children, four of whom grew to mature years; George Allen, Walter E., Elmer A. and Juliette. Walter Eugene is now deceased. The two youngest sons of the Ladd family are Joseph Marshall and Dr. Ira Bourland. Joseph M. was born December 31, 1864; he is a resident of Stockton, where, August 17, 1905, he married Louise Poppelwell, a native of England, but a resident of Stockton since she was five years of age. Ira B. Ladd was born May 28, 1868; after his graduation from Cooper Medical College he practiced his profession in Stockton and held the position of county health officer. He married, first, Mrs. Mollie E. (Grattan) Cross. His second marriage united him with Miss Mabel Elliott and they had two sons, Ira M. and Bourland E. Ira B. Ladd is now deceased.

In the passing of George S. Ladd the city lost a citizen who had been ever alert to promote her educational, civic and commercial interests, and whose name will long be remembered as that of an honored pioneer. Mrs. Ladd resides in Stockton and is an active worker in the First Presbyterian Church; and is a member of the Kings Daughters, Red Cross and other kindred societies; she is a member of the Philomathean Club of Stockton. Like her respected and esteemed husband, she too is generous and kind and leaves no opportunity unheeded to assist those less fortunate than herself or to help promote the best interests for Stockton and her citizens. Mrs. Ladd owns the property in California accumulated by Mr. Ladd.

JOSHUA COWELL.—It is generally known that Joshua Cowell originally owned nearly all the land on which the thriving town of Manteca now stands, and the appellation "Father of Manteca" is well applied; he was also the first mayor of Manteca after its incorporation in May, 1918. In 1910 Mr. Cowell was harvesting grain from the land where now stands the modern city of Manteca with her 1,200 inhabitants. He has been most active in the upbuilding of this city, having erected a number of Class A buildings in the business district. He is now interested in general farming and is one of the leading advocates of irrigation, having proved in his own farm operations the value of this method in enhancing the productiveness of the land. So widely and favorably is Mr. Cowell known that his record cannot fail to prove of interest to our readers.

A native of Tioga County, N. Y., he was born on January 2, 1842, and is a son of Henry and Elida (McMaster) Cowell, also natives of the Empire State. The paternal grandfather, Joshua Cowell, was a soldier in the War of 1812. About 1845 the father, Henry Cowell, removed with his family from New York to Grant County, Wis., and there he lost his wife nine years later. Joshua Cowell was reared in Grant County, where he made his home until 1861, when at the age of nineteen years he came to the West, making the journey across the great plains with a train of emigrants. He drove an ox team all the way, reaching his destination after four months of travel. He left the train, however, at the Carson River in Nevada and remained for a time in that state. Subsequently he continued his journey to California, where he arrived in January, 1863, crossing the Sierra Nevada Mountains on foot and coming direct to San Joaquin County. He then took up his abode at the place where he now resides and it has been his home continuously since. He had two brothers, Henry W. and Williston Cowell, who also located with him on the ranch and for some time they conducted farming operations there.

On November 25, 1868, Joshua Cowell was united in marriage with Miss Vienetta Rachael Graves, born in Grant County, Wis., and who came across the plains in 1864. They became the parents of six children; Elida A. married James Salmon and died leaving one daughter; Mary E. became the wife of Charles L. Salmon and they have two children; Clara C. is Mrs. Clifford Wiggins and the mother of three living children; Otis M., the only son, is the father of one child. Two children died in early childhood. Some time after the death of the wife and mother, Mr. Cowell was married a second time, in September, 1884, when Miss Emily F. Sanders became his wife. She was born in New York state in 1849 and came to California in 1876. By this marriage there is one daughter, Hattie V., now the wife of Maxie Mewborn, and they have three children. There are five great-grandchildren in the Cowell family circle. In 1864 Joshua Cowell's father came to California, accompanied by F. Marion Cowell and Phoebe Cowell, and he died in San Joaquin County aged sixty-six years.

After his marriage Mr. Cowell took his bride to his farm, where he has since resided and has become one of the best known and most progressive citizens of his locality. He has always been a strong advocate of irrigation and with many others of the early settlers had the vision of water on those thousands of fertile, sandy and thirsty acres, so they dug a canal from above Knights Ferry, a distance of forty-five miles, taking water out of the Stanislaus River and they brought it down into the hot valley. They were laughed at for their dreams. The attitude towards the project was unfavorable, and the dream was unrealized and many of the promoters lost fortunes in the early throes of the irrigation movement. A trace of the old canal may still be seen. Then came Charles Tulloch and his interests, with more water, taking over the defunct concern's water system, and finally the formation of the South Side Irrigation district. For a number of years Mr. Cowell was engaged as a contractor in the building of irrigation ditches and levees mainly in San Joaquin County. His ranch is devoted to general agricultural pursuits and stock-raising, and both branches of his business have proved profitable. He has also been extensively engaged in the dairy business, and for five or more years served as president of the Cowell Station Creamery, being the first incumbent in that position. Whatever he undertakes he carries forward to successful completion, and while his labors have brought him prosperity they have also been of a character that has promoted the general good. In his political allegiance Mr. Cowell is a Republican, but while he renders unflinching support to the party he has never sought or desired public office for himself, preferring to give his attention to his business interests. He was, however, a candidate for the office of supervisor in the '80s. He belongs to the Brethren Church and never withholds his support and co-operation from any movements that he feels will contribute to the general good. His business career exemplifies the force of industry and energy in the utilization of opportunity. He certainly deserves much credit for what he has accomplished, and though he started out in life empty-handed he attained a high degree of success.

ANDREW W. SIMPSON.—Prominent among the leading captains of California industry whose exemplary lives and progressive enterprise made them eminent and influential in their day, was the late Andrew W. Simpson, who passed away on June 22, 1921, in the eighty-ninth year of his age. It was truly said of him, by a contemporary familiar with his character and daily routine, that he was among those who have builded for all time, and who have so lived their lives that in the evening of their earthly journey they would be able to look back, without regret, upon work well done, and with the knowledge that they had always enjoyed the esteem and confidence of both their business associates and the social world at large.

A native of Maine, Mr. Simpson was born on July 15, 1831, at Brunswick, Cumberland County, the son of Thomas and Eliza (Whitehouse) Simpson, both natives of that state, and a descendant, through his father's side, of a seafaring and shipbuilding class of men. His father and three of his brothers were shipbuilders, and two of his brothers were captains of vessels, and anyone knowing the history of the early American commercial navy, will realize what an honorable and aggressive part the builder and skipper from Maine took in making our flag known in every quarter of the globe. It was natural, therefore, that at a very early age the lad should be instructed by his father as to the names of the various parts of a ship and their uses, and in many ways initiated into boat building and management. One of the younger members of the family, he was given chores about the home place, while he attended the local school; and as education was highly esteemed in good old Maine, he was being prepared for college when the call of the El Dorado of the West proved too appealing to be resisted.

Three of Andrew Simpson's brothers—Lewis, Asa M. and Isaiah—had gone to California in the famous year of '49, and they fared so luckily here from the start, that they sent back the most favorable reports as to the opportunities here and naturally urged their younger brother to follow in their wake. This was easier said than done; for after he had arranged for his transportation, he still had to borrow $150 to defray his expenses, and even that was so inadequate, in comparison with what was needed to reach California at a time when everybody wanted to come and there were limited facilities for travel, that on landing in San Francisco he boasted as capital the exact sum of ten cents. He took passage on the steamer Daniel Webster, as a matter-of-fact, on her maiden voyage, when she brought the first lake steamer used to convey emigrants across Lake Nicaragua; and he was always fond of telling, in after years, the most absorbing stories of what he saw and heard, and of the amusing adventures befalling him and his fellow-travelers.

Coming of substantial New England stock, Andrew W. Simpson was fortunate in having his parents instill into him the precepts of honor and integrity as well as the habits of industry and the love of hard, manly work; and these precepts and virtues he carried with him, as the other children had done, upon leaving the paternal roof. In a sense, they were his main asset, when he began the battle for existence in the new-formed state; but they proved an asset of inestimable value urging him on progressively, and they assisted him wonderfully in attaining by steady, aggressive drives, an enviable and an almost astonishing success. After landing and looking around he decided not to tarry in the Bay City but to come direct to Stockton; and here he at once secured work in the lumber business established by his brother. He added to what he already knew and during the next few years gained a very thorough knowledge of the industry, particularly as to California's lumber conditions; and in 1853 he established a partnership with George Gray and so first struck out for himself.

They bought out the brother, Asa M. Simpson, and also a Mr. Jackson, and opened a lumber business which was carried on by them together until Andrew Simpson's retirement. It was soon demonstrated that of the two, Mr. Simpson was a very capable buyer of stock, and it came to pass that all purchases were left to him; and eventually Mr. Gray attributed much of the success of the firm to this wise division of activities. For more than fifty-five years their office was in the same location and was one of the best known business headquarters in Stockton, although at first its front faced Commerce Street; but in 1861 such changes were made that it fronted on Weber Avenue. The main yard was bounded by Commerce, Main and Madison streets and also Weber Avenue, and they had three other yards in the city to further protect their interests, doing in early days a large wholesale trade. This location and long tenure of position enabled the authorities, by means of marks made by Mr. Simpson on the cornerstone at the main yard, to determine the record of the high water in 1906, and to prove conclusively that the waters rose higher then than during the memorable flood of 1861-62.

By conservative methods, and through strict integrity and a commendable liberality in dealing with patrons, the firm were able to accumulate valuable property interests in both city and county, the administration of which always worked for the development on broad lines of community interests, and so was of benefit to others besides themselves; and this is of the more historic interest because, during all the years in which the wide-awake firm operated, Mr. Simpson was the recognized head of the company, to whose unerring judgment the success of their ventures was invariably referred. But though devoted to business for such a long period that he was both an eyewitness and a participant in many of the great changes that took place in the growth of the state, he was ever active in civic affairs, and maintained a live interest in all that made for the expansion of the city and the welfare of the people. From its infancy, Mr. Simpson was connected with the Stockton Savings and Loan Bank; he was a member of the Weber Fire Engine Company, and cherished his affiliations with the survivors of that early organization. An active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, he gave much thought to its platform work and contributed largely in funds towards its success; and he proudly voted for every Republican candidate for President since the stirring campaign of John C. Fremont, and in 1868, he was a delegate to the national convention held at Chicago, where he entertained and inspired many by his personal narrative of the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln. He was untiring in his political activity, and yet never accepted other than honorary recognition from his party; and his genuine Americanism was shown in his willingness to support every good local measure and candidate, untrammelled by any narrow partisanship. In all the years of his residence in Stockton, attests a writer of a generation ago, his integrity was never questioned, and early in his business career he established a reputation for honesty and fair dealing.

While on a visit to Maine in 1863, Mr. Simpson married Miss Augusta D. Pennell, a native of his home county, where she was born in 1842; and they made their wedding journey to California via Panama. Upon returning to Stockton he built for his bride the residence at the corner of El Dorado and Oak streets, regarded at that time as a veritable palatial home, where he breathed his last, following two weeks of illness; and where five of their six children were born, two dying in infancy and one daughter, Jessica Pennell, at the age of twenty-four. Those children now living are Estelle S., the widow of the late Minot Tirrell; Bertha G. and Andrew W., Jr.

Mr. Simpson was very fond of outdoor sports, as might have been expected of a son of Maine who had the good fortune to come out to California in the days where the Golden State was "all outdoors," and in the prime of manhood, he spent many leisure hours with rod and gun. His judgment was regarded as a factor in the successful management of the Stockton Savings and Loan Bank, and just prior to his fatal illness, he made a special effort to attend a meeting of the directors. He was generous to a fault, and quietly and unknown only to the recipients of his kindness, he often assisted others less fortunate than himself. He was, however, above all a kind and indulgent husband and father, and his happiest hours were spent at the fireside of his own home. The center of innumerable ideal friendships, his death occasioned widespread sorrow as his life had added to the lustre of his land and day.

THEODORE H. BECKMAN.—The name of Theodore H. Beckman is engraved on the pages of San Joaquin County's history, for through many years he has been an important factor in the agricultural and financial interests of this section of the state. With a mind capable of planning, he combined a will strong enough to execute his well formulated purposes, and his energy and perseverance have resulted in the accumulation of a handsome property, which places him among the substantial citizens of the county. He is a native son of San Joaquin County, having spent practically all the days of his life within the environs of his birthplace, and when ready to enter upon the active duties of life he took his place among the men of progress and public spirit who in the last two decades have been the leading factors in the recorded advancement of the agricultural, business, social and institutional interests of this section of the state. His birthplace was the Beckman ranch on Kettleman Lane southeast of Lodi and the date May 3, 1871, a son of Henry and Margaret (Toni) Beckman, who figured prominently in the county's history.

Henry Beckman was born in Prussia, near Bremen, March 13, 1834, his parents being William and Wilhelmina Beckman. William Beckman, the grandfather of our subject, was a farmer by occupation, and one of Bonaparte's soldiers, and after he was captured he fought for Blucher. He died in 1868. Henry Beckman was reared on a farm in Prussia. His mother having died when he was only three years old, he was put out among strangers until fifteen years old. In 1848 with his brother, Christopher, he came to America, sailing from Bremen and landing at Baltimore; together they went to New Haven, Pa., thence to Illinois, where they remained a year, working most of the time on farms for sixty-five dollars a year and board and then they were for a time engaged in lumbering and farming in Wisconsin. In the spring of 1853 they came to California, crossing the plains with ox teams, arriving in Stockton after a journey of six and a half months. After being here a year they settled on land in Elkhorn Township where they remained, making improvements, and in 1859 they divided up the land. That year Henry Beckman purchased his ranch, located about twelve miles from Stockton, and two miles from Lodi. He was one of the enterprising farmers of the township, and came to own about 1,000 acres of land which was well improved with substantial buildings. In 1868 he married Miss Margaret Toni, a native of Switzerland, and four children were born to this worthy pioneer couple: George V., Theodore H., of this sketch, Frank W., deceased, and Eva M., Mrs. Harry T. Bailey. Mr. Beckman was a member of the Masons of Woodbridge and a charter member of the Woodbridge Grange. Politically he was a Democrat. He passed away in October, 1910, while Mrs. Beckman is still living at a good old age.

Theodore H. Beckman was reared in the county and received his education in the public schools, supplemented by three years at San Joaquin Valley College, an excellent educational institution no longer in existence. In 1900 Mr. Beckman inherited 300 acres of his father's ranch, sixty acres of which is in vineyard, sixty acres in orchard, and the balance in pasture land.

The marriage of Mr. Beckman on January 30, 1900, in Lodi, united him with Miss Grace Diers, a granddaughter of that old pioneer, Jacob Brack, whose history will be found on another page of this work. She is a daughter of William H. and Mary (Brack) Diers and was born and reared in the Lodi section and received her education in the Turner district school, supplementing with a course at West's private school in San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Beckman are the parents of two sons, Earle Brack Beckman and Stanlee Theodore Beckman.

Mr. Beckman is the senior member and president of the firm of Beckman, Welch & Thompson, brokers, dealing in loans, buying and selling farm lands, city property, grain and fruit and is among the most substantial business firms of Lodi. In 1921 this firm disposed of their store to Pearson, Knutsen & Minnihan of Stockton, and the Stockton Hardware Company bought the hardware department, but Beckman, Welch & Thompson retained their brokerage business. Mr. Beckman is an independent fruit packer and shipper, having two packing sheds of his own to take care of his abundant fruit crops each season. One of his packing sheds is at Brack's station on the Western Pacific, four miles west of Woodbridge, and the other at Lodi. He ships through the Pacific Fruit Exchange, of which he has been a stockholder for many years; he is also a director of the Lodi National Bank and a member of the finance committee and owns considerable stock in the Lodi Investment Company. He is a Republican in politics, but the honors and emoluments of public office have had no attraction for him, as he prefers to devote his attention to business affairs, wherein he has met with well merited success. He has served as a trustee of the Henderson school district for eighteen years and of the Lodi Union high school for the last six years. In 1896 Mr. Beckman was patron of the Eastern Star Chapter of Woodbridge; in 1900 was the master of the Masonic lodge No. 131 at the same place; he is also a member of Stockton Chapter, Stockton Commandery, and Islam Temple A. A. O. N. M. S. of San Francisco, and belongs to the Native Sons of the Golden West of Lodi and of the Elks of Stockton.

Mr. Beckman has installed a very complete irrigation system for his vineyard and orchard, having concrete pipes for carrying water to all parts of his ranch; there are three wells on his ranch having an eight-inch, a seven-inch and a six-inch pump with thirty, twenty-five and fifteen horsepower motors for power. Mr. Beckman employs about fifty people to take care of his fruit during the busy season and his payroll in 1921 amounted to $20,000. He is vice-president of the Woodbridge Vineyard Association. Mrs. Beckman inherited 200 acres of the Brack estate eight miles west of Lodi, 140 acres of which is in vineyard and sixty acres in grain land. She is an active member of Woodbridge Chapter O. E. S., a past worthy matron and is past grand district deputy of the fourteenth California district for this order and has attended almost every session of the Grand Chapter. She is very active in all civic affairs and a member of the building board of the Lodi Woman's Club. Mr. and Mrs. Beckman have accumulated a gratifying amount of worldly possessions through their own industry and thrifty management, and the esteem of their fellow-citizens is deservedly accorded to both of them.

JAMES M. BIGGER.—After years of experience studying and demonstrating soil possibilities and production in the famed Delta country of central California, during which time he made numerous experiments in agricultural operations that set new records, even in the wonderous Delta of the Stockton country, James M. Bigger, formerly superintendent of the Drexler tract, opened real estate offices in Stockton, with a branch in San Francisco in 1918, and took in as a partner, Jesse J. Inman, formerly of San Francisco, and under the firm name of Bigger and Inman are doing an extensive business. He was born and reared in the farming districts of Ontario, Canada, and while still a young man removed to New York and later spent some time in Pennsylvania. In 1884 he came to Santa Clara County and was engaged in the dairy business for three years; then we find him in San Joaquin County where he has since followed farming on a large scale in the Delta district; he also has farming land in Sutter County. On Rough and Ready and Roberts islands in the Delta district he is extensively engaged in raising vegetables and grain and has farmed as many as 3000 acres in the Delta; one season he had 500 acres in celery and has also been a large grower of asparagus and other vegetables; in Sutter County he farms from 500 to 1700 acres to fruit and grain; he built the first silo in northern California and the second ever erected in this state; this was on the Albert Lindley ranch on Rough and Ready island; for a number of years he conducted the largest dairy in the county.

The firm of Bigger & Inman maintain offices at 307 East Weber Street, Stockton. A specialty is made of handling farm lands, particularly in the Delta sections. City property is another important department, and carefully arranged descriptive lists of residence property are also shown to advantage. Estates are also managed, lands rented or leased and crops handled to the best advantage possible for owners, and a fire insurance department is maintained. Mr. Bigger is, perhaps, one of the best-posted authorities on realty values in the state. For many years he was confidential appraiser for several conservative firms, and vast sums of money have been invested in the Delta on his judgment. He keeps in intimate touch with the conditions of demand and supply, knows locations and values as few men get to know them, and when he becomes the intermediary between buyer and seller both sides get the benefit of his wide experience. He was the first to introduce corn production for commercial purposes in the Delta, and scored a record yield of corn on the Drexler tract. He was one of the first and most persistent boosters for the Borden Delta road and the highway across Union Island, has been an indefatigable worker for all improvement.

Mr. Bigger is one of San Joaquin County's substantial citizens who has given much of his valuable time without remuneration toward making the county fair a success. As the vice-president, with the fifteen directors of the fair, he has borne the burden of the big undertaking purely out of a broad-minded desire to be of service to the community.

The marriage of Mr. Bigger united him with Miss Anna E. Farrington, a native of New York state, and they were the parents of six children, five of whom are living: Mrs. A. C. Parker, Olin M., Albert E., Lena E., and Alice I. Mr. Bigger was bereaved of his faithful wife November 23, 1916.

Mr. Bigger has for many years been a director of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce; a director in the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau, representing San Joaquin County; he is a director and was one of the organizers of the California Bean Growers' Association; during the late war he was food administrator for San Joaquin County and conducted this office at his own expense; he was a member of the County Council of Defense, and a member of the advisory board for the western part of San Joaquin County, working with the board of supervisors. He is on the Advisory Board of the Agricultural Department of the United States Veterans Bureau Training School, known as the Trinese School for Disabled Soldiers on Rough and Ready island, which is in its experimental stage being the first of the kind in the United States. It is men like James M. Bigger who have looked into the future and given freely of their time and means that are responsible for the growth of San Joaquin County and he is a real builder of this section of the state. He is a member and director of the Lions Club of Stockton.

ANSEL WILLIAM POST.—A worthy representative of the native sons of the state, one who has been closely identified with the welfare of their community is Ansel William Post, a lifelong resident of San Joaquin County and a prosperous farmer and vineyardist, having a productive twenty-five-acre ranch five miles south of Lodi on Cherokee Lane. He was born on his father's ranch about six miles north of Stockton on April 29, 1892, a son of Frank and Cora (Ralph) Post.

Grandfather William H. Post was born at Southampton, L. I., on March 18, 1821, and at the age of nineteen shipped before the mast on the whaling vessel Nimrod, bound for the Indian Ocean. The vessel was filled with oil within thirteen months and then returned to port at Sag Harbor, L. I.; his next voyage was on the bark Gem and the lad was given the position of boat steerer, and this trip covered a period of eleven months and they returned with 3,200 barrels of oil; his third voyage was on the ship Illinois, sailing from Sag Harbor to the Siberian Coast, being out eighteen months and returning with 3,000 barrels of oil; his next voyage was on the same ship as second officer, bound for the same place and the ship returned with about 2,500 barrels of oil. Upon his return to Long Island he heard of the discovery of gold in California. He helped organize a company and they bought the Sabina, a full-rigged vessel, and with a few passengers, set sail from Sag Harbor on February 9. After being out three days they encountered a severe storm, which damaged their ship, but by skillful management the vessel was brought safely through, and they made such repairs as they could arriving at St. Catherine, on the coast of South America, where they stopped and gave the ship a general overhauling and on August 9, 1849, reached San Francisco. The company which they had formed was a joint stock company and it was agreed that all were to stay together and work for the interests of the company. They had a large stock of provisions, which they intended to sell. During the three days they stopped in San Francisco they had trouble in keeping the crew together; finally they procured a pilot and sailed up the bay to the mouth of the San Joaquin River. There was the first three-master that, up to that time, had come up so far. While opposite the fort of Benicia they were fired upon and compelled to lay to; some of the goods were taken to Sacramento in small boats, with most of the crew, leaving a few behind to look after the ship. At Sacramento they bought a six-mule team and went up to the mines. Grandfather Post was left behind on the banks of the river. One day he was taken violently ill and as the days went by and he did not improve, he finally took passage on a ship bound for the Sandwich Islands, where he completely recovered. From the islands he took the position of officer on the ship Deucalion, bound for Australia. After being loaded with her cargo, she sailed for San Francisco. Grandfather Post only made one voyage after that. In March, 1850, he started for the mines where he spent about a year and a half. In 1853 he settled on the ranch, containing 300 acres, situated on the Cherokee Lane Road, where he resided until his death. The ranch then passed to his two sons, Fred Post and Frank Post, the latter being the father of our subject.

The maternal grandfather, C. R. Ralph, was born and reared in Vermont and at the age of seventeen went to live in Michigan, residing there until he was of age. In 1849 he arrived in California with his family and engaged in farming, stockraising and trading until 1856, when he returned to Michigan with his family on a visit. After spending a short time in Michigan they came back to California by the overland route and settled in San Joaquin County, where he followed farming until he was elected to the position of county assessor, which he filled for two terms to the entire satisfaction of the public. He passed away September 17, 1882.

Frank Post was married in 1889 and there were four children in the family: Constance, Ansel William, the subject of this sketch, Ralph resides at Lodi, and Warren, deceased. The father passed away in 1899 and the mother still resides on a portion of the old Post place. The father was a member of the Knights of Pythias of Stockton.

Ansel William Post attended the Live Oak, Stockton and Lodi grammar schools. After his father's death in May, 1899, the family moved to Stockton, where they remained for three years, then returned to the home ranch where the mother had built a house on the 150 acres, her portion of the old Post ranch. After her husband's death, she sold seventy-five acres and then divided the remaining seventy-five into three parts, the mother keeping the twenty-five acres with the house, buildings and bearing twelve-year old vineyard and she gave her son Ralph twenty-five acres and our subject twenty-five acres. Both brothers have developed their property with irrigating plants and have planted a portion of their land to vineyard. Ralph Post married Jean Villinger and they have a daughter Isabel; he is a member of the Masonic Lodge of Lodi and both brothers are Republicans.

JOHN CLEMENS GERLACH.—For many years prominent in the affairs of San Joaquin County, since reaching manhood's estate John Clemens Gerlach has been an extensive rancher, and in his line of industry has made a great success. The community in which he resides has also in other ways felt the impress of his influence and energy, and his public-spirited enterprise and excellent citizenship are to be accounted among the valuable civic assets of the county. He is a native of New York City, born on November 20, 1853, a son of Conrad W. and Mary (Krouse) Gerlach, the former born at Frankfort-on-the-Main, Germany, the latter also a native of that country. Conrad W. Gerlach emigrated to America in 1849, landing in New York, where he made his home for a number of years, following the machinist's trade. In 1865 he came to California and was employed for a short time as a machinist in San Francisco, but in the fall of 1867 came to San Joaquin County and settled on Lone Tree Creek, and engaged in farming pursuits. He made the trip to California via Panama, and through his years of residence in San Joaquin County was known as an active, energetic and honorable farmer. His political support was given to the Republican party, and in religious faith he was a Lutheran. Of the children of this worthy pioneer couple, three are yet living; Daniel H. resides in San Joaquin County; John C. is the subject of this sketch; and Eliza is the wife of Theodore Henkey, also a San Joaquin County farmer. The father passed away on July 22, 1903, and the mother is also deceased.

John C. Gerlach spent the first twelve years of his life in New York City, and then came with his parents to the Pacific Coast, arriving in San Francisco in 1865, and since the fall of 1867 has resided in San Joaquin County. He was reared to manhood on his father's farm and in the practical school of experience learned many valuable lessons. In his youth he became familiar with all the duties of the farm, and in 1891 he settled upon the farm which is now his home, located on the Lincoln Highway, twelve miles south of Stockton. It is located near the Mossdale school house, the land being donated by Mr. Gerlach to the district for the erection of the school building. It is a valuable tract of land, comprising 504 acres, upon which is a beautiful country house and good outbuildings, modernly equipped.

On October 22, 1890, Mr. Gerlach was united in marriage with Miss Augusta F. Zeppernick, a native of Germany, and a daughter of Peter and Mary Zeppernick, also natives of that country, both now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Gerlach were blessed with five children: Edward C. is married and has one child and is the manager of the Gerlach ranch; Elsie, Ruby, Ella and Selma. Mrs. Gerlach passed away in May, 1916. In politics Mr. Gerlach is a Republican and he has always been a champion of the movements and measures which have for their object the welfare of the county. For many years he served as a trustee of the Mossdale school district and was also a trustee of the Reclamation district No. 17 of San Joaquin County. He is classed among the enterprising, progressive and influential citizens of San Joaquin County, and in his locality he is well known, commanding confidence and respect by reason of his reliability in business, his loyalty in citizenship and his trustworthiness in private life.

John C Gerlach.

PHILIP FABIAN.—During the entire period of his residence in California, covering an eventful epoch of only a little less than forty years, the late Philip Fabian made his home in San Joaquin County, where he occupied positions of increasing importance in civic, industrial and financial circles. To the enthusiastic, progressive efforts of such citizens as he may be attributed the encouraging development of the city of Tracy and the surrounding country, whose resources he was instrumental in promoting and whose future he was solicitous to build upon the substantial foundations of a successful past.

Of German birth, Philip Fabian was born in Zempleberg on February 17, 1843, and received his elementary education in his native land. Being a thoughtful lad, the oppression of the military powers of his own country weighed heavily upon him; his ideals of government not being that of burdensome military duty, but freedom to live one's life according to his desire, and he soon became desirous of satisfying his ambition to leave his native country and seek his fortune in America. He embarked for America early in 1861, coming to California via the Isthmus of Panama, and located in Jackson, Amador County, making his way overland from San Francisco carrying his pack containing his entire possessions. Very soon after his arrival in Jackson, Mr. Fabian found employment as clerk in the general merchandise store of Levinsky Bros., where he worked for two years. About 1863, in partnership with L. Levinsky, a general merchandise store was opened at Woodbridge where six successful years were spent, following which he settled in the West Side section of San Joaquin County and established the first general merchandise store of that locality in Ellis, about two miles from the present site of the city of Tracy. In 1876, the village of Ellis contained two stores, one blacksmith shop, five saloons, a school building and a town hall. Upon the completion of the railroad from Richmond to Los Banos, the town of Tracy became an important junction and early in the year of 1877 Mr. Fabian moved his store building from Ellis and before the close of that year all the buildings had been moved to Tracy, most of the hauling being done by the late William Brockman. From that time forward, Philip Fabian became an active factor in all the improvements and developments of the town and surrounding country; being aware of the wonderful possibilities of this section, he made investments in land, choosing them with care and adjacent to the town he had selected for his permanent home. During those earlier days in the history of that section, there were no banks except in the larger centers, so Mr. Fabian came to the rescue of the farmers and saw them through any financial depression on account of failure of crops, the same as would a banking institution, thus his influence for the upbuilding of the community was felt throughout the county. Mr. Fabian so managed his affairs that during his entire business career, there was never a lien or a mortgage filed against any of his property. The large mercantile business conducted under the firm name continued until the death of L. Levinsky, associate partner, whose interest was purchased by A. Grunauer and L. Kroner, and the business was incorporated under the name of The Fabian, Grunauer Company. In 1889, Mr. Fabian removed to San Francisco and opened an office from which he transacted his vast business and continued his residence there until his death on January 16, 1909.

The marriage of Mr. Fabian occurred in San Francisco and united him with Miss Annie Schwartz, and they were the parents of two sons and two daughters, the eldest son being the efficient business manager of the large store in Tracy. Mr. Fabian was a devoted husband and father; his recreation was spent in his splendid gardens surrounding his home in San Francisco, where the many wonderful colors and shades of carnations grew to perfection, among them being many prize winning ones. He was a Republican of the staunchest party loyalty. As early as 1877 he offered to the man who could plan a successful system of irrigation, as compensation, every other acre of land that he possessed, and they were extensive even in those early days; however, there was no one to plan the system, and Mr. Fabian, himself, was a prime factor in the struggle for irrigation in the San Joaquin Valley.

Many public and charitable institutions have reason to be grateful that such a liberal and broad-minded citizen and captain of industry existed, not only as one of the pillars upholding the financial and industrial world, but as one of those who dispensed wisely the profits which his life of diligence and high ability had accumulated. Fraternally he was among the oldest members of the Sumner Lodge of Odd Fellows, which was founded in the old town of Ellis many years ago.

WILLIAM J. ROBINSON.—One of the well known and enterprising citizens of San Joaquin County, William J. Robinson, has for the past twenty-five years continuously resided in the Lodi section. A native of California, he was born in San Francisco on January 10, 1859, on the exact ground where fifty-six years later was held the great Panama-Pacific Exposition. His father, Francis H. Robinson, was born in Indiana and crossed the plains to California during the year 1857, while his mother, who was Rebecca T. Cooper before her marriage, was born in Kentucky and came to California via the Isthmus of Panama in 1858. His father conducted a dairy where our subject was born; and was also a contractor and laid the first brick in the old fort at Fort Point, fronting on the Golden Gate. Mr. Robinson was married in Louisville, Ky., about 1847, and three daughters were born before coming to California and four children in California, of whom three are living.

When William J. was ten years of age, the family removed to Antioch, Contra Costa County, and there finished his schooling and later engaged in farming and stock raising. During the year of 1892 he removed to Lathrop, San Joaquin County, and for eighteen years engaged in farming; in 1900 he removed to Lodi and settled on a dairy ranch east of the city, which he conducted until 1906 when he sold it. He then established a feed and fuel business in Lodi, first on Pine Street and later on East Lodi Avenue under the firm name of W. J. Robinson Company, and later his son Willard J., and son-in-law E. L. Weaver became his partners. About two years later Mr. Weaver withdrew from the firm. Mr. Robinson started his business in a small way with little capital, and when he sold the business in 1920 he had built up a large and successful enterprise. A few years previous he had erected a modern plant of concrete blocks covering a considerable area and in selling out he retained his building, selling only the stock and goodwill, which he still owns in partnership with his son.

Mr. Robinson married Miss Helen Johnson, a native of Missouri, but a resident of this state since the age of five years, and they are the parents of two children: Willard J. is a member of the firm of Robinson & Lyon, owners and proprietors of a sporting goods house in Lodi, and has one son, William Emery; Bira T. is Mrs. E. L. Weaver of Lodi; she was formerly a teacher in Inyo County, and has three children: Leroy, Kenneth and Ralph. Fraternally Mr. Robinson is a member of the Lodi Lodge No. 259, I. O. O. F., joining that order in Antioch, Cal., when a young man. He and his family are members of the Congregational Church of Lodi. Broad-minded and progressive, he has always adhered strictly to high principles in business matters as well as in personal conduct.

W. E. GIBBONS, M. D.—When, on November 21, 1920, Dr. W. E. Gibbons breathed his last, at St. Joseph's Hospital, Stockton, California lost one of its most distinguished men of science and the United States one of its most loyal and worthy citizens, for he was dean of the medical profession of San Joaquin County, and beloved by a legion of steadfast friends in this and neighboring counties. He had entered upon the practice of medicine in San Francisco in the late '70s, and in the early '80s he had established his offices in Stockton.

Dr. Gibbons was born in Missouri in 1841, and when twenty-two years of age he came to California. For a while he worked at the harness-maker's trade, and then he became attached to the City and County hospital staffs of San Francisco, by whom he was kept busy for six years, during which time his natural talents impressed his associates, and won for him a high place in their esteem. Acting on their advice to take up the profession of medicine, he entered St. Mary's College, at San Francisco, and there for two years followed their prescribed course; later he took a medical course in the University of California, and later still special studies in the University of the Pacific. In 1878, he first hung out his shingle as an M. D.; two years later, he removed to Sutter Creek, in Amador County, and after another two years he joined the fraternity at Stockton.

Throughout his long professional career he was most zealous in the advancement of his professional attainments, and he enjoyed the highest standing among medical men in this and other counties. Though he enjoyed a very lucrative practice, however, and was ever engaged, he found time to do good deeds and to shower kindnesses and benevolences wherever he knew there was need of them. His natural benevolence, cheery presence, kindly wit, democratic characteristics won for him the affection of all with whom he came in contact, and wherever Dr. Gibbons' name was spoken, it was in terms of affection and respect. Ever since his earliest residence here, Dr. Gibbons in particular was prominent in the social, fraternal and political life of the community. He served as county health officer, city health officer, and at various times was consulting physician to boards and hospitals. Standing high in professional attainments, possessed of all the attributes that typify the highest manhood, and benevolent in the extreme, he endeared himself to the hearts of all who came to know him well.

About forty-eight years ago, Dr. Gibbons married Miss Mary Agnes Rowley of San Francisco; and he was granted the inestimable blessing of her companionship until a few years ago, when she breathed her last. A sole survivor is his daughter, Mrs. John Raggio, also an esteemed citizen, and a worthy representative of this well-known pioneer.

NEIL B. FABIAN.—A worthy representative of that honored class of Californians who are native sons of the state and who have throughout their active careers been closely and usefully identified with the welfare of their respective communities, Neil B. Fabian has been a resident of San Joaquin County since 1917, and is a prosperous agriculturist. He was born in San Francisco on October 14, 1895, a son of Philip and Annie (Schwartz) Fabian, natives of Zempleberg, Germany, and California, respectively. The father, who died in 1909, became a progressive citizen of San Joaquin County and his interesting life sketch can be found on another page in this work.

Neil B. Fabian began his education in the public schools of San Francisco and from the grammar school entered the Polytechnic high school where he completed the course in three and a half years; then entered the employ of Baker & Hamilton, San Francisco, where he remained for another year; then he entered the agricultural branch of the University of California at Davis, spending two and a half years in the study of animal husbandry, horticulture and agriculture. In 1917 he leased thirty acres of the A. Grunauer ranch on Union Isle, where he planted pink beans, which yielded twenty-two sacks to the acre, each sack averaging 100 pounds, for which he received eight cents per pound, a result most gratifying. The next year he located on 160 acres of his father's estate south of Tracy and there has erected a fine residence and substantial ranch buildings. Mr. Fabian has experimented on thirty acres of his land with Peruvian alfalfa which was seeded in February, 1921, and the same year harvested 160 tons of hay; this year his expectations are that the acreage will yield 275 tons. In time, Mr. Fabian expects to seed the entire 160 acres to alfalfa; he is also establishing a thoroughbred stock and hog business and is rapidly shaping his ranch to be one of the show places of Central California. Thus, Mr. Fabian has demonstrated the wisdom of scientific farming methods properly and intelligently applied.

The marriage of Mr. Fabian occurred at Tracy and united him with Miss Lorraine Ritchey of Seattle, the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Ritchey. Mr. Fabian is an active member of the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau and is now serving his third term as secretary of the local bureau at Tracy; he is also a director in Division No. 5 of the West Side Irrigation district; fraternally he belongs to Sumner Lodge I. O. O. F. of Tracy and the Moose fraternity of Stockton. The work which his father inaugurated in behalf of this county in pioneer times he carries forward and he is today classed with the leading agriculturists of his locality.

MILTON JASPER MOWRY.—Among the honored pioneers of the '70s of San Joaquin County is Milton Jasper Mowry, who has made his home in the county since 1873. He is, therefore, familiar with many of the events which shaped the early history of the state, has witnessed much of its transformation and growth, and in all these years has been loyal to its best interests. He was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, November 18, 1853, a son of Lazarus, born 1831, and Electa (Morgan) Mowry, the former a native of Ohio and the latter of Virginia. There were nine sons in the family, three of whom are living: Milton Jasper, our subject, Grant and John. In 1854 the family moved to Iowa. In 1861 they moved to Illinois, and in 1866 to Missouri. On March 6, 1873, the family left Shelby County, Mo., for California on an emigrant train, which took eleven days from Omaha, Nebr. The fare was $61.50 and was a hard, tiresome trip, there being no sleeping cars in those days. At the time of their arrival in Moke-lumne Station, now Lodi, there were very few residents in the place and the country surrounding was covered with liveoak brush. The business portion of Lodi was composed of Brown's livery stable, three saloons, the Spencer hotel, Hill's jewelry store, John Bell's barber shop, and Smith's butcher shop. After a year, the father purchased fifty acres known as the Dr. Pitcher place, just north of town, for which he paid $1,050, with a cow and a span of mustangs thrown in to complete the sale. In 1876 the father set out a vineyard, one of the first in that section, and there he lived until the time of his death in 1915, at the age of eighty-four, while the mother passed away at the age of seventy-four. The father was a Civil War veteran, having served in an Illinois regiment. He and his wife were devout members of the Methodist Church.

Milton Jasper Mowry had few of the advantages afforded young men at the present day, but his early privileges were supplemented by the knowledge and training gained from practical experience in a busy life. His first job was grubbing out willows on the Ed. Bryant ranch; then to Staten Island where he planted barley on the Falkner-Styles ranch; then he went to Butte County where he worked for Albert Woods for a time. He and his brother George conducted a butcher shop at Lockeford for six years, then one in Lodi for three years. In the early '80s he located in Tulare where he ran a butcher shop for thirteen years, then he removed to Stockton and engaged in the livery business for twenty-two years, his first stable being at El Dorado and Sonora streets, the second, Pat Field's stable, the third was on Hunter Street, the fourth, the old Sonora stable, and the fifth the Golden Gate on Hunter Street. He then bought a forty-acre ranch six miles southeast of Stockton, which he farmed for two years together with 200 acres adjoining. Returning to Stockton in 1912, he traded his ranch for Lincoln Street property which he still owns. He also owns the Blake stable and later bought the old Wolf stable at California and Main streets. Three years ago he entered the butcher business in Stockton and now conducts the meat market at the corner of Weber Avenue and Aurora Street.

Mr. Mowry has been married twice, the first time on July 18, 1877, to Miss Nellie Pygall, and they were the parents of five children: the only one living is Walter, who has been associated with his father in business many years; he lives in Stockton, is married and has two sons. Mrs. M. J. Mowry passed away in 1909. They adopted three baby girls, unrelated, reared and educated them to womanhood. Corinne is Mrs. George Newcomb and they have two children: Vera is a bookkeeper with the H. C. Shaw Company; and Evelyn is a student in the Stockton high school. Mr. Mowry's second marriage united him with Miss Helena Robinson on May 15, 1910. Fraternally he is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge No. 11.

JAMES CALVIN McCOWN.—A well-known and highly respected Grand Army man whose residence in California covered a period of forty-six years, was the late James Calvin McCown. He was born in Ohio in 1839 and there grew to young manhood and married. During the Civil War he enlisted in Company C, Eleventh Regiment, New York Volunteer Cavalry, and served until the conclusion of the war. After the war he removed with his wife to Colorado where he engaged in the general merchandise business in Erie, a small town near Denver, until 1876, when they came to California and located in Mendocino, later going to Eureka, Humboldt County, where he conducted a merchandise store. Later Mr. McCown conducted hotels at Sisson, at the base of Mt. Shasta, Siskiyou County, and at Adin near Alturas, Modoc County. In 1895 the family located at Stockton and Mr. McCown retired from active business cares. He passed away on February 26, 1922, and his wife, Electa Ann McCown, survived him until May 10, 1922. This worthy couple are survived by four children: William E., the eldest child, was born at Monroe, Jasper County, Iowa, December 16, 1869. He received a good public school education and finished with a course in a commercial college in Stockton. He was married in Stockton, October 19, 1911, to Miss Eva S. Church, born at Farmington, Cal., a daughter of M. M. and Sivilla Ann Church, pioneer residents of the Farmington section of San Joaquin County. The mother, Mrs. Church, died in March, 1920; the father is still living. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. William McCown: William E., Jr., and Edna Birdena. William E. McCown is a Mason and a past grand and past chief patriarch of the I. O. O. F. The other surviving sons are Nathaniel T. and Edwin L.. Nathaniel T. was born in Iowa in 1871, and is now clerk in the freight office at Stockton for the Southern Pacific. He was public administrator of San Joaquin County for one term. Edwin L. was born at Adin, Modoc County, Cal., September 7, 1880. He received his education in the public schools of Modoc County and when twelve years of age began to make his own living by delivering newspapers; in 1898 he learned the boilermaker's trade and for the past seven years has been conducting his own business. Mary E., the only daughter, was born in Erie, Colo., and received her education in California schools. In Stockton on June 3, 1902, she was married to Willard Loveland, a native of California, who passed away in March, 1909. The third son, James Calvin, Jr., died April 30, 1917, thirty-eight years old. He was a linotype operator and a law student at the time of his death.

ROBERT L. GRAHAM.—Prominently identified with the development and progress of modern California the late Robert L. Graham was one of the most prominent and representative citizens of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County, where his life was so ordered as to gain and retain the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen. He was born December 16, 1855, on the old Graham homestead southeast of Lodi, where the A. E. Angier home now stands, and was a son of Robert L. Graham and his wife, Caroline Roe (Stokes) Graham, both natives of Kentucky. The father was born December 27, 1826, his parents being Levy and Mary (Tatum) Graham, natives of North Carolina. The maternal great-grandfather of our subject, Thomas Tatum, was a teamster in the Revolutionary War. Grandfather Graham was a farmer by occupation and emigrated from North Carolina to Kentucky with his father, when a small boy, remaining there owning land until about 1860, when his wife died and he sold out and went to Missouri; there he remained but a short time, when he went to Arkansas, where he died in 1881 at the age of eighty-six years. The father remained at home with his parents until twenty-four years of age, then, February 22, 1852, he left for Missouri, where he remained for one year, when he crossed the plains to California, arriving in San Joaquin Valley September 2, 1853. In 1847 he was married to Miss Caroline Roe Stokes, whose grandfather was a fifer in the Revolutionary War. Arriving in San Joaquin County he purchased a claim of a man named Adams, situated nine and a half miles from Stockton and five miles from what is now Lodi. He sold the place in 1857 and went down to the Lower Sacramento Road, where he purchased 200 acres where he had stock. He remained there until the fall of 1862, when on account of flood he came back and purchased again near the old place. Not long afterwards, however, he traded that for 300 acres, ten miles from Stockton and five miles from Lodi, on the Cherokee Lane Road. He was a pioneer in agriculture, there being only three farms under plow before he settled here. Four children were born to this worthy pioneer couple; Robert L., our subject; Surelda, Mrs. A. M. Hale of Amador County; Della, Mrs. C. Hull; Eugene D., the county clerk of San Joaquin County.

The first twenty-five years of Robert L. Graham's life was spent on his father's farm. When he was twenty-six years old he came to Lodi and started to work in a drug store owned by Byron Beckwith. He received his grammar school education at the little red schoolhouse at Live Oak and was graduated from a college at Stockton, then passed the state board examination and became a licensed pharmacist. At this time there were only three business houses and a few dwellings in Lodi and much of the site of the present city was covered with brush and scrub oaks. The first drugstore Mr. Graham owned was on Elm Street on the corner of Sacramento and at this location he served as postmaster and postal telegraph and telephone operator; later he moved his old store and built a brick structure. Sacramento Street was at that time nothing more than a road through the tangle of brush. Little business was done in those days, and Mr. Graham often said that if he had five or six customers a day he thought he was doing well. He was in business for forty-one years and was located on the corner of Elm and Sacramento streets all of that period. The first long distance telephone and the first telephone exchange in the town were placed in his store and he also had the first postal telegraph office, and after learning the code, he sent, received and delivered all messages in Lodi for a long time.

On June 22, 1886, occurred the marriage of Mr. Graham and Miss Sarah J. Schu, a native of Missouri, a daughter of John Adam and Frances J. (Martin) Schu. Her father was a native of Alsace-Lorraine, who came to the United States when a young man, first settling in New York, later going to Illinois and still later to Missouri. When Mrs. Graham was three years old her parents came to California settling at Woodbridge where they remained for three years; from there the family removed to Galt where they lived for a short time; then removed to Biggs where the father followed his trade of shoemaker; then he followed his trade in Oroville for a short time, then moved his family back to San Joaquin County where he passed away at the age of sixty-three; the mother still living in Sacramento at the age of eighty. There were seven children in the family: Josephine, John and Aggie are all deceased; Sarah J., Mrs. Graham; Charles and Robert reside in Sacramento and Etta is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Graham were the parents of two daughters, LaRelda Roe, Mrs. R. L. Patton, of Lodi, and Gladys Frances, Mrs. Oscar H. Wood, of Lodi, has one daughter, Janis Maurine. Mr. Graham was the owner of an eighty-five-acre ranch in the Elliott district of north San Joaquin County. For the past thirteen years, a niece, Miss Marion Schu, the daughter of Charles Schu, has made her home with Mr. and Mrs. Graham. She attended the Lodi high school and is now employed by the First National Bank of Lodi. Mrs. Graham is a past grand of the Pythian Sisters lodge of Lodi and is a member of the Eastern Star and the Rebekahs and of the Lodi Woman's Club. Mr. Graham was enjoying his first vacation in thirty-five years, in the Yosemite Valley where he was stricken and passed away on June 20, 1922, before any assistance could be rendered him. He was a charter member and past chancellor commander of the Lodi Knights of Pythias; the Foresters of America, and was also a member of Lodi Parlor No. 18, N. S. G. W. He was widely known and esteemed and had many excellent traits of character which endeared him to a large circle of friends, and in his death the community deplored the loss of an enterprising business man and honored citizen who for many years had witnessed the county's growth and had contributed in no small way to its development and substantial upbuilding.

CHARLES W. HUNTING.—The distinction of being a native of California and the son of a California pioneer belongs to Charles W. Hunting of Lodi. He was born on Roberts Island, San Joaquin County, on October 25, 1882, a son of Luther and Marietta (Peters) Hunting, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of California. His father crossed the plains to California in 1863 and located near Acampo and engaged in farming pursuits. Charles Hunting, the grandfather, brought his family in 1863 and became the owner of 640 acres of land near Acampo. There he spent the balance of his days, raising grain and stock. Luther Hunting inherited 80 acres and set 32 of it out to vineyard. Charles W. is the youngest of a family of four children, the others being Mrs. H. Smithson, Edward, deceased, and Mrs. J. A. Carroll. His father died in 1907, aged about 63.

Charles W. was educated in the district schools and the Stockton Business College. After finishing his course at these he returned to the home ranch and further improved the property his father had begun. Later he became a clerk in a grocery store in Acampo and in 1913 removed to Lodi and found employment with the City Fuel & Ice Company. By close application he steadily advanced until in 1918 he was made manager of the company, which was originally established by the late Charles Sollars many years ago and in 1918 was purchased by the City Fuel & Ice Company; this company also operates a bottling works. Mr. Hunting's degree of success has been accomplished by hard work and a determination that tolerates no defeat.

Mr. Hunting's marriage, November 8, 1908, united him with Miss Mary Vest, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of three children, Josephine, Warren, and Kenneth. Fraternaly he is affiliated with the Fraternal Brotherhood; in local affairs he belongs to the Lodi Business Men's Club. Public-spirited and willing at all times to support measures for the advancement of his native county, Mr. Hunting can be counted upon to lend a hand for the welfare of county and city.

WILLIAM H. THRUSH.—A California agriculturist who well has merited, by his progressive, scientific industry and his practical results of value to others as well as himself, all the prosperity which has finally crowned his efforts up to the present day, is William H. Thrush, whose splendid ranch on the Waterloo Road has become as fine a demonstration as would be possible of the productivity of San Joaquin County soil. A native son, he was born in the Harmony Grove district of this county, one mile west of the Harmony Grove schoolhouse, on March 14, 1864, the only son of George and Dora Elizabeth (Ebeling) Thrush, both now deceased.

George Thrush was born in Pennsylvania and when a small boy he was taken to Ohio by his parents, where they lived a short time and then removed to Missouri, where he grew to manhood and lived until he came west in 1862. He had married in Missouri and settled down to farm-pursuits until the news of the discovery of gold induced him to come to California. Leaving his wife and daughters—all then small children—he started overland with a mule and an ox team and a companion, in the '50s, and in due time arrived at his destination. Some time after locating in this state he and his friend took the smallpox and his friend died; and as soon as he had recovered from the disease he went back East to join his family and at the same time determined to make a permanent location in the Golden State. Settling his affairs he outfitted and with Mrs. Thrush and daughters made the long overland trip, driving an ox-team, while his wife drove a mule-team, taking the Salt Lake route to California. He was accompanied by Henry Ebeling, the youngest brother of his wife, and he later died in this state. Upon arrival here Mr. Thrush hauled supplies to the mines and later engaged in ranching in the Harmony Grove district, where he settled upon his arrival. He sold out his holdings in that locality and bought 640 acres near Modesto and raised grain there until 1871, when he concluded he would try farming back in Missouri once more. Renting his land and equipment, with his family he returned to Missouri, bought and stocked a good farm, but only lived there six months, when he turned again to California. He lived for a time in San Jose and Santa Clara, then came to San Joaquin County in 1874, bought 320 acres of land on the Waterloo Road, eight miles from Stockton, and from that date this section remained his home until his death, September 8, 1907, at the age of seventy-eight years. Mrs. Thrush died at the age of sixty-three.

The following children were born to this worthy couple: Ellen married Russell Kincaide of Long Beach, and died in 1922, leaving two boys and four girls; Louise is the widow of D. I. Hancock and makes her home with her only daughter, Mrs. Ed Branstead, near Stockton; Marine became the wife of William Bonham and has two sons and one daughter; Edith is the widow of Henry Leffler and the mother of three boys; Fanny is the widow of Nicholas Bacon of Stockton and has one boy and two girls; Alice is Mrs. Wilkes Foreman of Oakland; the seventh in order of birth is William H., our subject; Dora married Thomas Brierly of Oakland and they have one daughter. The last two children were born in California.

William H. Thrush remained at home with his father until he was twenty-one and then started to farm for himself. He leased 160 acres near Linden and raised grain for three years, then came back to the old Thrush ranch on the Calaveras River and in 1892 bought eighty acres of the home estate; later he added ninety-five acres adjoining, part of the Martin property, and this he farms to grain with the exception of about four acres that he has planted to alfalfa. In 1914 he bought fifty acres of bare land near Linden that he has leased for a period of years and which will be set to fruit trees and vines. Mr. Thrush also owns considerable real estate in Stockton, which makes it more natural that, as a public-spirited citizen and loyal Republican that he should favor any legislation encouraging and protecting agricultural and industrial development. He has made his own way since leaving home and his success is the result of his own efforts.

At Stockton, August 26, 1885, Mr. Thrush was married to Miss Allie Anderson, a native of Carson City, Nevada, and the daughter of William H. and Jane (McBride) Anderson. Her father was born in Hamilton County, Ind., August 22, 1838, and now makes his home with Mr. and Mrs. Thrush. When a child he was taken to Van Buren County, Iowa, by his parents and there reared and educated. He came across the plains to Nevada in 1864, mined and freighted for two years. In 1866 he came to San Joaquin County and until 1886 farmed leased land in the vicinity of Waterloo, then he spent fifteen years in Mendocino County lumbering and since then has lived retired. He is of Scotch ancestry, his paternal grandfather having served in the Revolutionary War. Mrs. Anderson was born in Ohio of Irish parents and she died at the age of thirty-six, leaving two children, H. G. Anderson, an employe of the General Petroleum Company in the Coalinga oil field and Mrs. Thrush.

JOHN RANDOLPH CORY.—We all owe much to the pioneers of San Joaquin County for the secure foundation they laid for the present prosperity, and among these men we mention John Randolph Cory, a '49er, who was well and favorably known to the early settlers of Stockton and vicinity. His forebears were of English stock; the progenitor of the family in America was William Cory, as the name was spelled in England, who landed in the New World in 1660, settled on West Main Road in Portsmouth, R. I., and erected a stone house at the foot of Barker's Hill, two and three-quarter miles from Bristol Ferry, which was thereafter called Cory's Castle. About sixty years elapse before the Corys are again heard from, this time when Thomas Cory, born about 1720, served in the British army when Canada was taken from the French in 1759. He was never heard from and it is supposed he was killed in battle. He left a widow, Patience Haskell Cory, who died in 1794. These were the great-grandparents of J. R. Cory. There was a son named Samuel Cory in their family and he was born at Portsmouth, R. I., in 1758 and died in 1841. He married Jemima Walden on August 2, 1781, and she died on September 23, 1848. Samuel Cory served in the Revolutionary War and with his comrades suffered great hardships when they were forced to march through snow and ice without shoes and left bloody tracks in their wake. The next in line was Pardon Cory, father of John R., born at Portsmouth, R. I., in 1793, married Abigail Lake, daughter of Daniel and Ruth (Tripp) Lake, on January 7, 1816, and went to live with his parents in a house near the head of Cory's Lane; part of this house was used as a town hall. It was here that John R. Cory was born. In 1810 Samuel Cory bought a place on a road, afterwards known as Cory's Lane, and the family removed there in 1822, and this remained the home for many years. Pardon Cory died on South Kingston Road in 1863.

John Randolph Cory first saw the light on October 11, 1816, and was named for John Randolph of Roanoke. He received a good common school education and when he was seventeen went to Lippitt, Town of Warwick, R. I., to learn the trade of blacksmith with his uncle, George Cook, who had married his mother's youngest sister. He only remained there a year, then returned home and attended school that winter. Upon the suggestion of his mother that he should learn a trade, he went to Providence, R. I., and apprenticed himself to Solomon Arnold for three years to learn the wheelwright trade and was to receive as his pay the sums of twenty-five dollars for the first year; fifty dollars the second; and seventy-five dollars the third year, including board. He only remained two and one-half years, then went to work at the trade in that city until he went to New Bedford and engaged in the business for himself, continuing there until he decided to come to California in 1849. He sailed on the Bark Diamond in February, 1849, coming via Cape Horn, and arriving at San Francisco on July 22, that same year. He wrote an interesting account of his voyage to his family after his arrival here. Mr. Cory bought a lot in San Francisco soon after his arrival, then went to the mining districts but did not stay very long, intending to return to the East. He stopped off in Stockton, then a city of tents, and was so well impressed with the possibilities that he made his decision to locate here. In 1851 he returned to New Bedford, disposed of his interests there and made arrangements to have his wife and child join him in California a little later, again made the trip, via Panama, to Stockton.

He had married at New Bedford, April 25, 1844, Miss Abby, daughter of Benjamin and Penelope Cory, who was born at Tiverton, R. I., on July 17, 1823, and two children were born in Massachusetts, one dying in early childhood. In January, 1852, Mrs. Cory, with her small daughter, arrived in Stockton to join husband and father, having come by way of Panama, crossing on mule-back, the child being carried on the back of a native. The fording of the Chagres River was attended with numerous mishaps, the trunks and other baggage being carried on pack animals. On January 15, 1852, Mr. Cory purchased four lots from Captain Weber at the corner of Fremont and California streets, paying $400 for them; here he built a small three-room house for their immediate needs and enlarged it from time to time as necessity demanded. He engaged in the carriage making business in a shop on Channel Street, and besides other work that came his way, he built wagons for heavy freighting to the mines. He lived in town and carried on his business until 1863, when he moved with his family to a ranch of 285 acres on the Weber grant about two and one-half miles east of Stockton, he had purchased several years before. Mr. Cory had also become the owner of what came to be known as the Fanning property (he having sold it to Mr. Fanning) where the Western States Gas & Electric Company is now situated; later he owned a forty-five-acre ranch near Lockeford.

Five children were born of the unusually happy marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Cory: Caroline Jemima, died in the East in early childhood; Abby Amelia, a school teacher, died February 22, 1880; Adaline A., married James A. Louttit and died August 21, 1884; Nellie, married Charles H. Cory and died April 4, 1918, near Soquel, Santa Cruz County, where she had lived for a number of years; and Carrie E., who still lives at the old Cory ranch on the Waterloo Road and upon which Mr. Cory farmed and raised stock for many years, which has been the home place of the Corys since 1863. Miss Cory still has 184 acres of the original tract and her nephews 60 acres. Here Mr. and Mrs. Cory lived and died, he passing away on February 12, 1898, and his good wife breathed her last on May 3, 1901. Mr. Cory was a good friend, a good neighbor, and was esteemed by all who knew him for his honesty, industry and integrity and left to his descendants the heritage of an untarnished name.

EDMUND MILLER.—Early in the year 1898 Edmund Miller, a native of Ogle County, Illinois, came to Stockton to visit his brother, S. M. D. Miller, a machinist employed in local shops for a number of years. He worked in a machine shop for two years in Stockton, then was recommended to Mrs. J. R. Cory by an intimate friend in whose home he roomed, as being trustworthy and familiar with farm work and in 1900 was employed on the Cory farm. Shortly before Mrs. Cory's death she requested that he remain on the place and assist her daughter and he has since continued in the management of the property.

As he was accustomed to stock raising, after a time it was arranged that Miss Cory and himself would increase the stock and operate the farm on shares. They then engaged in dairying for several years, in the meantime purchasing a number of black Percheron mares. From these Mr. Miller raised many fine colts, some of which were sold at good prices. Among them were several excellent stallions, and he was largely instrumental in improving the quality of the work stock in this vicinity. Mr. Miller exhibited at the State Fair at Sacramento two years, winning each time on all of his entries either first or second prizes. He also had driving stock, among them a stallion that he bought as a small colt, which was both speedy and handsome, winning the first prize at the State Fair. He was called Stam Boy, being a son of Stam B. and grandson of old Stam-boul and on his dam's side a great-grandson of Electioneer. The horse business becoming dull and the care made difficult on account of floods Mr. Miller finally disposed of the pure-bred stock. Owing to the numerous overflows from the diverting canal the land is now unsuitable for purposes to which he would otherwise devote it and the management of the property is beset with great difficulties at the present time.

GEORGE WENTWORTH CAMPBELL.—A former well-known citizen of Stockton, George Wentworth Campbell passed away at his home in that city, March 14, 1905. For many years he had been one of the prosperous business men of Stockton, where he conducted a draying business, and as man of happy, genial nature and thorough integrity he had a large acquaintance and is held in grateful remembrance by his fellow-citizens. He came of hardy New England ancestors and was born at Argyle, Maine, April 9, 1828. Late in the '40s in company with his father, he left Boston, Mass., in a sailing vessel bound for California via Cape Horn. The trip consumed one year and while enroute the father passed away and the son immediately returned to his native state with the body. As soon as he could conveniently do so, he again set sail for California via Cape Horn and duly arrived in San Francisco and went direct to the mines in Calaveras County; then engaged in teaming to the Southern mines from Stockton, hauling supplies to the mines. Later he established a draying business in Stockton which he conducted until his death in 1905.

The marriage of Mr. John Campbell occurred May 13, 1863, uniting him with Miss Mary Ann Grace, a native of Ireland, and six children were born to this pioneer couple; Mrs. Grace Myers resides in San Francisco; Florilla; Charles F.; John P.; and Mrs. H. W. Spurr. George H., the oldest son, died in Stockton January 1, 1909; Mrs. Campbell passed away on June 18, 1919. Miss Florilla Campbell has been closely identified with educational matters in San Joaquin County since her graduation from the Stockton high school, first as teacher in the district schools of Fairview and Elkhorn and later in the Stockton city schools. She taught in the Franklin school, then was principal of the Grant school. She is past president of San Joaquin Parlor No. 5, N. D. G. W., and has at all times taken a very active part in all the affairs of the organization. Mr. Campbell was prominent in fraternal circles in Stockton, being a charter member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., and after returning to Stockton from San Francisco, where he resided for a few years, he joined Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F. He was also a member of the Volunteer Firemen of Stockton.

NATHAN ROSWELL BARBOUR, M. D.—The medical profession in San Joaquin County has an able exponent in Dr. Nathan Roswell Barbour, who has engaged in practice in Lockeford and vicinity since 1883. A native son of the Golden State, he was born in Suisun Valley, on August 26, 1853, a son of Nathan and Nancy (Alford) Barbour. Nathan Barbour was born in New York state, while the mother was a native of Virginia, and the young people were married in Missouri and crossed the plains with the Pyle-Whiteman party, just ahead of the ill-fated Donner party. Nathan Barbour was a carpenter by trade and built the hotel at Benicia, which he owned for a time. He went into the woods of Sonoma County and cut the timber and hauled it by teams to Benicia. Nathan and Roswell Barbour, father and uncle of Dr. Barbour, both served in the Mexican War under Fremont and he has their discharge papers signed by General Fremont. During the year of 1849, Nathan Barbour mined at Hangtown and in 1850 he bought a ranch in the Suisun Valley, consisting of 240 acres, and on this property he raised grain and stock. The following children were born to Nathan Barbour and his wife: those living are Eli, Nancy, Nathan Roswell and Julia. Those deceased are Amelia, William, Nellie, May, Florence and Kate Viola. The father was born in 1813 and died in 1872; the mother, who was born in 1827, died in 1869.

The education of Nathan R. Barbour began in the district school in the upper part of the Suisun Valley and was completed in the Oakland schools, then he topped off with a six months' course at Heald's Business College in San Francisco. Deciding to take up the study of medicine he studied the rudiments for one year, then completed his medical studies at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1881. He then spent one year in New Mexico. His father having passed away, he returned to Suisun as administrator of his estate; later he spent a short time at Fairfield, Vacaville, and Colusa, and in 1883 settled in Lockeford where he has practiced medicine since that time. Upon his arrival in Lockeford, he purchased a home and in 1912 built a modern, up-to-date bungalow where the old house stood.

Dr. Barbour's marriage occurred in Napa, Cal., on October 7, 1884, and united him with Miss Nellie Josephine Powell, a native of Monticello, Minn., a daughter of William and Barbara (Barrett) Powell. Her father, William Powell, was of English descent and engaged in farming for a time; later was a merchant in Monticello. Her mother passed away in Minnesota in 1869 and about 1871 the father brought his family to California and resided here until his death. Mrs. Barbour received her education in the Napa schools. Dr. and Mrs. Barbour are the parents of two children: Nathan Powell Barbour, a practicing physician residing in Stockton, and Roswell Powell Barbour, real estate dealer at Lodi. Dr. Barbour has been a member of the Masonic fraternity since 1882, demitted from the Suisun Lodge No. 55 to Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., in 1886, and he served for two years as inspector of this district. He joined the Royal Arch Chapter in Suisun in 1883, and Vallejo Commandery that same year; he is past grand of Progressive Lodge No. 134, I. O. O. F., at Lockeford, which order he joined in 1884. Mrs. Barbour is past noble grand of the Lockeford Rebekahs, of which Dr. Barbour is also a member. Both Dr.

and Mrs. Barbour were members of the Eastern Star Chapter, but now have their demit. Dr. Barbour belongs to the American Institute of Homeopathy and to the California Homeopathic Medical Society. Politically he is an adherent of the Socialist party. He is keenly interested in everything that pertains to the general welfare of the community in which he has resided for so many years, and has given his support to matters of a constructive nature.

CORNELIUS SWAIN.—When Cornelius Swain passed away at his Stockton residence, March 26, 1904, San Joaquin County lost a venerable and progressive citizen and a pioneer of 1853. Having come to the county among the early settlers, he at once became identified with the best interests of this section of the state; and throughout his career he gave constant evidence not only of his individual success, but of a broad-spirited citizenship which meant the welfare of all people and institutions with which he came in contact. He was a man of irreproachable character, earnest in the serious affairs of life, kind and helpful in the family circle, and recognized for his honesty and sterling integrity in all his relations with mankind. For many years, in fact throughout the greater part of his active career, he engaged in the various departments of farming on his ranch located about six miles from Stockton on Cherokee Lane, where he had been one of the early settlers in 1853. A native of Nashville, Tenn., he was born February 17, 1826, being a son of John and Mary (Armes) Swain, natives of North Carolina and Pennsylvania, respectively. In 1830 the family migrated to Franklin County, Ill., where he lived until the age of eighteen, when he returned and lived a number of years in Tennessee. In 1850 he moved to Jackson County, Mo., which was his home until his removal to California.

While a resident of Jackson County, Mo., on March 4, 1851, he was married to Miss Juliza C. Davis, born January 1, 1829, a daughter of Anderson and Hannah N. (Head) Davis. Her father, a native of North Carolina, resided for some years in Kentucky before his removal to Jackson County, Mo. Her mother, who was born in Virginia, went with her parents to Jackson County in the very early days of that part of the state. Her paternal grandfather, John Davis, had served as a soldier in the War of 1812. Mr. and Mrs. Swain were the parents of six children: John A.; Joseph H.; Mary; Charles, deceased; George; and Jesse, all born on the home ranch in San Joaquin County, with the exception of John A., who was born before they left Missouri.

On April 28, 1853, Mr. Swain, with his wife and one son, left his Missouri home, and with ox teams drove over the broad western prairies to California, being just five months on the journey, arriving on September 28, 1853. They camped first on the spot where the Eldorado Brewery now stands. Later in the same year they located on the ranch on Cherokee Lane, about six miles from Stockton, which has ever since been known as the Swain ranch, and on which Mr. Swain made his long and prosperous record as an agriculturist. His ranch was covered with a thick growth of brush, which he cleared. He fenced and farmed the property, planted a family orchard, and engaged in raising fine horses and mules. This was the family home for forty-two years, until 1895, when he and his wife removed to Stockton and made their home at the pleasant place at 2 East Flora Street, where they both remained until they passed away, Mr. Swain in 1904 and his wife in 1908.

In the early days Mr. Swain had a contract to cut and bale 200 tons of wild oats and hay for G. Joseph, who engaged in teaming with mules to the mines. The hay was cut with a hand scythe and baled by hand, and Mr. Swain received fifty dollars per ton for it. Mr. Swain was well known in Masonic circles, being affiliated with Morning Star Lodge No. 68 and Chapter, at Stockton. He was popular and held in high esteem throughout the county, and had once been a candidate for the office of county treasurer. Mr. Swain was one of the organizers and for many years served as trustee of the Davis school district, the schoolhouse being located on a part of his ranch. He was one of the promoters of the Farmer's Union, and served as director of the San Joaquin Valley Bank. He and some of his friends were the first to build a good gravel road out of Stockton, and for years it was a toll road.

CHRISTOPH M. BATTERMAN.—A useful and prominent citizen, whose success as a grain-farmer has given him an enviable influence in helping to shape the destiny of San Joaquin County as a great agricultural region is Christoph M. Batterman, who resides near Banta. He was born at San Francisco on May 1, 1868, and when a mere babe-in-arms was brought into San Joaquin County by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. C. Batterman, pioneers and community builders of the West Side. They were natives of Germany, and brought with them the industrious and thrifty habits and that knowledge of agriculture for which their native land was so long famous; and they were not long in acquiring the home-ranch near Banta.

When, therefore, our subject reached his fourteenth year, he went to work on the farm; and there he has been engaged as a successful agriculturist ever since, having as a boy received a good common-school education. He remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-nine years old, and then, at Mt. Eaton, near Hayward, in Alameda County, he was married to Miss Anna Rippe, who first saw the light near San Lorenzo, and enjoyed a good training in the common schools in Alameda County. Her parents, Christian and Doris (Dunker) Rippe were also natives of Germany, and they settled in California in 1877. One son, Henry C. Batterman, was born to this fortunate union, and he is attending the West Side Union high school. The father of our subject passed away at Tracy on October 17, 1918, preceded, on May 19, 1905, by his devoted wife.

Mr. Batterman now owns the western half-section of No. 24, a portion of which is cut off by the town-site of Banta; and as he cultivates the soil there, bringing forth exceptional crops and maintaining a modest ranch of permanent attraction to all well-versed in agricultural pursuits and problems, he prosecutes his arduous labors with greater satisfaction, recollecting that he is continuing to operate what has been the widely-known Batterman home-place since the late nineties, long the center of a generous hospitality, shared by many an appreciative guest, neighbor, fellow-citizen, and wayfarer.

JOHN A. SWAIN.—A prominent citizen of Stockton, and among the oldest residents of the city, is John A. Swain, who has been identified with the city's agricultural and other interests throughout his active career. The family home is located at 336 West Acacia Street, and his excellent farming estate is located on the Lower Sacramento Road, about three and a half miles north of Stockton. This ranch, which has so long been under his careful management, contains 480 acres, twenty acres of which is in vineyard, while the greater part of the remaining acreage is given up to grain raising. This is a model country estate and Mr. Swain is known as one of the most successful ranchers in the county. When Mr. Swain settled thereon in 1877 it was almost entirely unimproved, much of the land being covered with dense underbrush that had to be cleared before it could be cultivated; and it is owing to his energy and progressiveness that it has been brought into its present fine condition.

Mr. Swain belongs to a well-known San Joaquin County family, his father having been an early settler of the county. His birthplace was at Westport, Mo., a town that is now a part of Kansas City, although his parents had settled in that vicinity before the latter city began its existence. He was born January 13, 1852, being a son of Cornelius and Juliza C. (Davis) Swain, the former a native of Tennessee and the latter of Missouri. Cornelius Swain, who passed away at his Stockton home, March 26, 1904, had crossed the plains to this state in 1853, being accompanied by his wife and one child, the latter being John A. This journey was made with ox teams, and it was five months before they arrived at Stockton. Cornelius Swain was a carriage maker, having learned the trade at Nashville, Tenn., and followed it in Missouri. On reaching San Joaquin County he settled on Cherokee Lane, six miles north of Stockton, being one of the early settlers of that locality, and he remained there until his removal to Stockton in 1894. He lived his last years in his city home. His widow, who was born January 1, 1829, survived him until 1908. Cornelius Swain was a Democrat in politics, and fraternally was a prominent Mason. Six children were born to this worthy pioneer couple: John A.; Joseph H.; Mary; Charles, deceased; George, and Jessie.

John A. Swain, having come to California when a little more than a year old, has spent practically all his life in this state. He was reared to man's estate on the home farm in San Joaquin County. After his public school career he attended the San Joaquin College at Colledgeville, an institution no longer existent, and he subsequently spent two years as a student at the California State University, then located at Oakland, but now in Berkeley. Following the completion of his education, he farmed the home place for a time, and with the money that he had saved took a trip through the South, visiting Los Angeles, San Diego, Fort Yuma and Tuscon, Arizona. Not being satisfied with the country and conditions, he returned to Stockton and told his father that he had decided to take up farming. Since that time he has devoted his time and attention chiefly to agricultural pursuits in their several branches, and is now known as one of the leading men in this occupation. His father gave him a half interest in the 230-acre home place on the Lower Sacramento Road, which is now a portion of his fine estate located north of Stockton. About thirty years ago, Mr.

Swain set out a twenty-acre vineyard of black grapes, which is still producing good crops. This was one of the first vineyards to be planted in the district.

On March 3, 1878, Mr. Swain was married to Miss Mary E. Bunch, a daughter of the late John Bunch, who crossed the plains to this state in 1864. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Swain. John C. is engaged in farming the home place, under the able supervision of his father. Susie S. is now Mrs. Marcree; and Ethel, Mrs. Victor N. Walsh, resides in San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Swain are the grandparents of five grandchildren. For many years Mr. Swain served as a trustee of the Lincoln school district. Fraternally he is affiliated with San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M., at Stockton, and he is a member of the Christian Church in that city.

Mr. Swain recalls many incidents of the early days of Stockton and relates interesting experiences of those pioneer times. The whole country around Stockton, which was then a city of tents, was covered with dense growth of underbrush, which had to be cleared before plowing and planting could be done. Antelope abounded on the plains and wild game birds were plentiful. He has resided in San Joaquin County sixty-nine years, and with his estimable wife enjoys the respect and esteem of the entire community.

JAMES M. SCHOFIELD.—Not many well-boring contractors have had half of the experience of James M. Schofield, of 845 South San Joaquin Street, Stockton, and certainly few, if any, have had his good luck in completing what he sets out to do. He was born at Hull, in Yorkshire, England, on August 15, 1851, the son of a sea-faring man who was an expert North Sea pilot. James Schofield was taught by the well known educator of that time, namely Zebider Scaping, in Trinity House School at Hull, England, entering when a lad eleven years old. This historic school continues to be a leading school of navigation for boys and dates back to 1729. It is related that after the publication of Defoe's "Robinson Crusoe" in 1719, the Trinity House took a practical view of the question, and in order to stimulate the youth of Hull to take up sea life, formed a Marine School in 1729. In the examinations, which were held under the auspices of the science and art department of the Committee of Council on Education of South Kensington, England, he showed himself an apt pupil, passing satisfactorily examinations at twelve years of age in the following subjects: physical geography, mathematics, nautical astronomy and general navigation; and at thirteen years of age passed satisfactory examinations in the following subjects: mathematics, physical geography, steam, navigation and nautical astronomy. He then took to sea, sailing under Captain James Bell on the ship "Cape Horn" of Liverpool. Before sixteen years of age he had doubled Cape Horn three times, and crossed the equator four times in a sailing vessel. When only fourteen years old he received the Queen's Prize on navigation. The prize consisted of a case of nautical instruments, which together with the various certificates of examination are still in his possession. The Queen's Prize is inscribed as follows: "Science and Art Department of the Committee of Council on Education. Presented to James Schofield for his success in the examination of science classes held May, 1865, 2nd Grade in Navigation. By Order of the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council on Education. MDCCLXI."

Mr. Schofield made three trips to the Bay City of the Pacific and arriving in San Francisco in the fall of 1866, after a voyage of 128 days, he left the ship, and soon supported himself by following various occupations.

By 1873, however, he had found the field in which he was destined best to succeed, that of well-boring, for which there was increasing demand; and for some time he made his headquarters in Merced. In 1898 he located at Stockton; and since then he has bored thousands of feet of wells from Turlock to above Sacramento. He had the contract to bore the wells needed by the Western Pacific Railroad, when they were building through the Valley, an undertaking which required plenty of experience and foresight to conclude with success. He sank two wells of twenty inches on A. B. Humphrey's ranch at Escalon, and this alone added much to his enviable reputation as one of the noted authorities on well-boring in the State. The importance of having such work as this entrusted to an experienced man of exceptional knowledge is seen in the peculiar and imperative problems he is called upon to solve daily. In his work in the Delta District he finds that care must be taken not to go too deep where one may strike salt water, although some of the wells around Stockton sunk by him have been 200 feet deep. He also finds that in late years the gas seeps into the water and causes much trouble. In his drilling operations, he uses power from his automobile—a device of his own invention—and he finds that thereby he is economically successful.

When Mr. Schofield married, he chose for his wife Miss Minerva W. Campbell, a native of Mariposa County; and the couple have made the best of working teams. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias of Stockton, and it is needless to say that he is one of the most popular of members.

GERALD BEATTY WALLACE.—A man unusually posted in all that pertains to his chosen profession is Gerald Beatty Wallace, whose natural endowments together with a pleasing personality make him very acceptable to the community which he has selected for his permanent home. His practice as an attorney and activities in the political field are well known and he has been a prominent factor in the progress of the beautiful city of Stockton. He was born in Eureka, Eureka County, Nev., on January 28, 1891, a son of the late Hon. Robert M. Beatty, at one time attorney general of Nevada, who was a native of Ohio. His mother's maiden name was Mary E. Arnhart, and she was born in Missouri. After the death of his father, his mother married Hon. C. C. Wallace of Nevada, a prominent politician of that state, who died when his stepson was ten years old. When he was one year old, his mother, who is now residing in Stockton with him, removed to Nevada City, Cal., where he was educated in the grammar and high schools, graduating from high school in 1909. Four years later, in 1913 he was graduated from the University of California with the degree of Bachelor of Letters, majoring in jurisprudence and political science; then three years of post graduate work earned him the degree of Master of Arts from the department of political science and Juris Doctor from the school of jurisprudence. During his years in college, he was active in the affairs of the University and the University Y. M. C. A.; he was the winner of the first prize for delivering the best oration on the liquor problem; a member of the university rifle team; assistant in the department of political science; assistant to the dean of the summer session; and also author of a master's thesis on the teaching of American government and of law notes on evidence, equity and public law, published in the California Law Review.

He began the practice of his profession with the law firm of Lilienthal, McKinstry & Raymond in San Francisco; in 1918 he located in Stockton and was associated with Arthur L. Levinsky; later with Thomas S. Louttit; then he engaged in independent practice of the law for two years. In May, 1921, he was appointed United States Court Commissioner for the Northern District of California. He is now a member of the law firm of Foltz, Rendon & Wallace, which has its main offices in the Wilhoit Building in Stockton and branch offices in Lodi, Manteca, Ripon and Tracy. Since coming to Stockton, Judge Wallace has been unusually active in civic and commercial affairs of the city and county. He has served as a lecturer in commercial law for the Extension Division of the University of California; as well as instructor in political science and public speaking for the Extension Division; legal advisor for the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau; secretary and attorney for the Better Business Bureau of the Stockton Advertising Club, instructor in commercial law and public speaking in the Stockton evening high school; special lecturer of the Blackstone Institute of Chicago; associate lecturer for the American City Bureau; secretary for the Stockton district council, California Alumni Association; founder and lecturer for the Stockton Law School and assistant secretary of the Stockton Golf and Country Club. He was one of the organizers and the first secretary of the Stockton Lions Club, and also deputy district governor for California and Nevada for the International Association of Lions Clubs. He has also lectured on political science in the Stockton College of Commerce. During the late war, he was one of the four minute men; member of the Legal Advisory Boards in San Francisco, Alameda and San Joaquin counties, and manager of the Stockton branch of the military bureau of the University of California, being in charge of recruiting there for all branches of the army and navy under the jurisdiction of the U. S. war department. In recent state and national elections, he has been a speaker and manager for several candidates. In his political views, he is a Republican. He is an enthusiastic member of the legal profession and is affiliated with the San Joaquin County, California, and American Bar Associations. Fraternally he is a member of Delta Lodge No. 471, F. & A. M., and Homo Chapter No. 50, O. E. S. He is a member of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church of Stockton. A director of the First National Bank of Ripon, Judge Wallace has always taken a constructive interest in matters pertaining to the advancement and progress of the community, is rated as one of its most dependable citizens and is held in the highest esteem.

Gerald Beatty Wallace.

WILLIAM CAMPBELL.—A time-honored pioneer resident of San Joaquin County, who is honored and esteemed not alone for the length of his residence, but also for the excellence of his citizenship and the worthy part he has taken in the various activities of the county is William Campbell. Only such old residents as he can fully appreciate the transformation that has been wrought in this beautiful and fertile valley of the San Joaquin Valley. He has been intimately identified with these changes and development, and in the history of the state he deserves mention as a man of enterprise, eminent public spirit and broad usefulness in whatever field of endeavor the fortunes of the world have placed him. He was born in County Down, Ireland, April 16, 1841, of Scotch ancestry who had left Scotland for Ireland during the reign of Cromwell. Ancestors on both paternal and maternal side were Scotch, belonging to the Presbyterian Church, and for many generations were farmer folk. William Campbell was a lad of eight years when he accompanied his parents, John and Mary (McKee) Campbell to America. The voyage was made in a small sailing vessel and thirty days were consumed before they reached New York. From New York they proceeded up the Hudson River to the Erie Canal, through the canal to the Great Lakes, then by water to Chicago, and overland 180 miles in covered wagons to Rock Island, Ill. There were eight children besides the parents and many hardships and privations were suffered before reaching their destination. In 1850, one year after arriving in Illinois, the death of the father occurred, and seven years later the mother left the home circle. She was a kind, patient and devoted mother and her children cherish her memory. Three of the sons enlisted in the Eleventh Iowa Volunteer Infantry and served valiantly, one being killed in action at Atlanta, Ga., on August 19, 1864.

As soon as William Campbell was old enough he began to work on the farm and was fortunate in being able to attend the Camden public schools and so received a fairly good education. At fifteen years of age he began to learn the harnessmaker's trade in Camden, where he worked for two years. In 1858, in company with his brother John, he started west to Kansas City, then a place of 2,500 inhabitants. There were no railroads beyond the Mississippi River, all transportation being made by boats on the river and teams overland. William Campbell soon had an opportunity to drive a team across the plains to New Mexico for the Government freighters, Russell, Majors & Wardell. This was an exciting period in his life, as the route was through a wild, unpeopled region infested by Indians and wild beasts and none but brave men cared to face the dangers of the journey. The safety of the company was in the number of wagons and the first train that Mr. Campbell joined consisted of twenty-five wagons with six yoke of oxen to each wagon, laden with supplies for the Government posts in New Mexico. The train left Kansas City in May and ninety days were consumed making the round trip. Mr. Campbell agreed to make another trip, and on this trip the train was attacked by Indians, but fortunately there was no loss of life. Mr. Campbell followed freighting until 1860 when he left Nebraska City with a train and got as far as the North Platte and late in the fall of 1860 he entered the service of the pony express, as a rider from Cottonwood Springs, subsequently called Ft. McPherson, to Lowell, seven miles below Ft. Kearney. The quickest news service from the East to the Pacific Coast in those days was twenty-five to thirty days via the Isthmus of Panama, or by stage coach. St. Joseph, Mo., at that time, was the western terminus of the Hannibal & St. Joseph Railroad, and the only town on the Missouri River north of Jefferson City that had rail and telegraphic communication with Washington, D. C. The route of the pony express followed the stage coach line through Seneca, Marysville, to Big Sandy, up the valley of the Little Blue, then across to the valley of the Platte, through Fort Kearney and Julesburg, then across to Fort Laramie, and across the South Pass to Fort Bridger and Salt Lake, and from there through Nevada to Sacramento, a distance of 1,980 miles. On April 3, 1860, the first pony express started from St. Joseph, Mo., going west, and at the same time a rider left Sacramento going east. The stations were from twenty-five to thirty miles apart, and the riders rode from seventy-five to 100 miles. Mr. Campbell tried very hard to go with the first lot of riders, but his opportunity did not come until in the fall of 1860. His ride covered a distance of seventy-five miles and on the first trip he faced a snow-storm all night and was nearly blind for several days. Mr. Campbell rode twice a week over his route and stopped at Fort Kearney to get the latest telegraph news, as the Civil War was coming on and, of course, there was great interest in the latest dispatches. The telegraph line was completed to Fort Kearney in the fall of 1860 and was extended to Sacramento in the fall of 1861. The riders carried about twenty pounds of express, and the company charged five dollars per letter for one-half ounce, written on tissue, water-proof paper. The pony express made a wonderful record, not only for its speed, but for its efficiency, due to its fearless riders, who braved the dangers of swollen streams and lurking savages. In 1862 Mr. Campbell took care of the stage coach horses at the Gilman ranch and the following year, 1863, he and his brother bought teams and freighted from Nebraska City to Denver, Colo., and during that year made two trips; the following year they increased their stock and wagons and carried freight to Montana, receiving sixteen cents a pound for all freight carried. In the fall of 1864 they sold their outfit in Montana and returned to Nebraska on horseback. In the spring of 1865 Mr. Campbell purchased surplus Government mules at a reasonable price and again entered the freighting business to Salt Lake City, receiving twenty-five cents per pound for everything carried. He continued this business until 1868, when he and his brother John took a contract to build a portion of the Union Pacific Railroad in eastern Nevada and western Utah, and one year later, 1869, the brothers sold their stock and returned to Nebraska City. Mr. Campbell then purchased 320 acres on the wild prairie and there established his home.

On August 6, 1869, Mr. Campbell was married to Miss Jennie M. Fitchie, a native of Pennsylvania, the daughter of the well-known James Fitchie, then justice of the peace and pioneer citizen of Nebraska City. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Campbell; Grace, deceased; Joy is married and has a wife and two children residing in Stockton, where he is assistant manager for the Hedges, Buck Company, wholesale grocers; Margaret C. is at home; Tessora, Mrs. C. G. Wakefield resides in Stockton; James is married and has wife and one child residing in Stockton, where he is associated with the Wilhoit Abstract Company; John is a rancher at home; Bess, Mrs. Arthur Ross, has one son and resides in Oakland, Cal.; Helen, Mrs. Donald Burnett, resides in Stockton, where Mr. Burnett is the vice-president of the Harris Harvester Company. Twenty-five years were spent on the Nebraska farm, where Mr. Campbell became one of the most successful breeders of fine driving and draft horses in the state. For eight years he served as chairman of the board of supervisors of Otoe County, Nebraska, and in 1881 was elected state senator to fill the unexpired term of C. H. Van Wyke who was elected to the U. S. senate. In 1893 the family removed to California and acquired valuable ranch property about twenty-two miles southeast of Stockton. Mr. Campbell engaged in stock raising and grain farming and is ably assisted by his son John and they are active and influential in community interests and champion every measure that contributes to public progress and improvement. He has always been a strong advocate of irrigation and was one of the organizers of the South San Joaquin Irrigation district.

JAMES R. PERROTT.—A native son of the great Golden State, who, by hard and intelligent work has won a place for himself in the agricultural world, James R. Perrott now lives a retired life from active duties, but none the less interested in the prosperity and development of his community. Born in Amador County on November 19, 1853, he is the eldest son of John and Anne (Grieves) Perrott, the former born in London, England, and the latter in Worcester, Mass., of Scotch and New England ancestors. His father, John Perrott, crossed the plains in 1849 with an ox-team and engaged in mining at Winter's Bar until 1852 when he returned East by water via Havana, Cuba, and settled in Steubenville, Ohio, where he remained for one year, when, during the year of 1853 he again crossed the plains to California, by ox-team, with his bride, where he mined for a time on the Mokelumne River; later he purchased a quarter section of land two miles from Woodbridge, San Joaquin County, adding more land until he owned 700 acres. Barley was the chief grain crop in those early days, and it was sent to the mines by six and eight-horse team over the mountains, some of it being sent as far as Virginia City, Nev. While residing in Steubenville, Ohio, John Perrott joined the Jefferson City Lodge of Odd Fellows and after settling in Woodbridge the same name was given to the lodge there, of which he was an honored member. He was a member of the settlers' league formed in 1855 to combat the claims of the Spanish settlers to the Spanish grants of land, and the league proved a successful undertaking; he also served as county supervisor of San Joaquin County for one term, in 1880. Mr. and Mrs. Perrott were the parents of eight children, six of whom are living, as follows: James R., John, Mrs. Walter Leckebusch, Frank, Fred G., and Mrs. Walter M. Smith. The father lived on his ranch at Woodbridge and farmed to the time of his death in 1906.

James R. Perrott being the oldest son, began work on the farm when very young, following a plow when he was twelve years old, gaining what education he could during the short terms of school at the Woodbridge school. He worked on the home ranch until he was twenty-five years of age; then farmed a portion of it on his own account for twelve years, when he took charge of the T. & E. ranch on Ryer Island, which occupied him for ten years more; later he farmed the Thornton ranch at Thornton, Cal., and is now living retired enjoying the products of years of hard labor and careful economy.

Mr. Perrott's marriage united him with Miss Addie Woods, a native of Lynn County, Iowa, now deceased. He has been active for forty-six years in Jefferson Lodge No. 98, I. O. O. F., of Woodbridge.

WILLIAM HENRY KLINGER.—For sixty-six years, his entire lifetime, William Henry Klinger has been a resident of San Joaquin County where by close application to his business he has succeeded and has gained a liberal competency, being accounted among the substantial agriculturists of his locality. He was born near Linden, Cal., April 19, 1856, the eldest son of George and Mary A. (Helmert) Klinger, both natives of Germany. George Klinger was a remarkable person. He and his father were both harness-makers in Germany, George learning the trade from his father and became very proficient. He took a live interest in business and political affairs and became personally acquainted with such men as Carl Schurz and General Ziegel, with both of whom he renewed his acquaintance in the United States, at a later date. He emigrated to the United States in 1844, settling in St. Louis, Mo., where he secured employment at his trade, and made harness, saddles and other equipment to be used by the American forces in the Mexican War. Later on he went to Milwaukee, Wis., and when the news of the gold discovery in California reached that city he resolved to seek his fortune in that El Dorado, consequently in the early part of 1849, in company with other Argonauts, he started for St. Louis, Mo., by river-boat, expecting there to outfit for the trip across the plains. Cholera, however, broke out aboard the boat and when he came to St. Louis they were not permitted to land; so they pressed on up the Missouri River to Independence, Mo., where they got up a train of sixty great prairie schooners drawn by oxen. Amid untold obstacles and hardships, they pressed on to the land of gold and after a six months' journey pulled up in what is now Butte County, where Mr. Klinger met General John Bidwell with whom he made arrangements to work a placer mining project at Bidwell's Bar. After about two years of mining he returned to his trade and in 1851, at Sacramento, he made the first horse-collar that was ever made in California. He followed his trade in Sacramento for several years, and later went into business for himself in that line at Stockton, which he carried on successfully until 1855 when he located on a ranch near Linden where he owned 160 acres of land and on which he resided until his death. George Klinger received his United States citizenship while residing in the East and cast his first vote for Martin Van Buren; was a Republican in politics and fraternally was a past grand of Scio Lodge, No. 102, I. O. O. F., at Linden. For eight consecutive years he served as deputy county assessor of San Joaquin County in Douglas township, and for twenty years was a trustee of the Linden school board. For twenty-six years he served as agent for the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. Nine children were born to this pioneer couple: William Henry, the subject of this sketch; Sarah, Mrs. Conrad Gischel; Mary A., Mrs. Harry Little; John; Minnie, Mrs. Lewis Grimsley; Matilda, Mrs. Augustus Welsher; Louisa, Mrs. Henry Renter; George W.; and Charles A. The mother of our subject passed away in 1906, the father surviving until 1909, when he died, eighty-four years old.

William H. Klinger.

Mrs. Belle Klinges

William Henry Klinger received his education in the Linden school and was reared to work on his father's farm and thus at an early age became associated with his father in agricultural pursuits. On January 13, 1881, at Round Timber, San Joaquin County, he was united in marriage with Miss Belle Goucher, born at Dublin, Cal., a daughter of James and Mary (Heaton) Goucher. James Goucher was born in Parkersburg, W. Va., in 1821, and was married to Miss Mary Heaton in 1845. He started for the coast in 1849 and of the party of twenty men only five survived and arrived in California. He engaged in mining near Weaverville for four years, then moved to Santa Clara County where he bought a ranch near San Jose; there he remained for one year, then returned to West Virginia for his family. George G. Goucher, a brother of Mrs. Klinger, later state senator from California, was a babe of a month when he was brought to California. James Goucher served as judge on the Vigilante Committee in early days and was a member of the group that ran down the Joshua Holden Gardens near Sonora, a notorious den of gamblers and murderers in the early days of California. Mrs. Klinger comes from pre-Revolutionary American stock. Her mother was a cousin of Gen. Robert E. Lee, of the Confederate Army, and is directly descended from James Carter, the first governor of Virginia. Mrs. Klinger's people have a genealogy which goes back to the twelfth century, the lineage tracing back to Charlemagne. She is an accomplished lady and a woman of great force of character, and is one of California's most favored daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Klinger are the parents of six children: Maude Irene; William W.; Elva; Floyd A.; Helmer; and Alma. Besides their own family, they have adopted and reared twelve children less fortunate, a number of whom are men and women who have gone from the Klinger home to assume the duties of life on their own account, while the youngest is still unable to walk. The satisfaction of caring for and rearing these children has meant much to Mr. and Mrs. Klinger. In 1904 Mr. Klinger rented the Casa Blanca Rancho of 1,200 acres, which was devoted to grain raising, but the flood of 1906 caused an entire loss of crops; then he rented a ranch of 1,280 acres south of Lathrop for three years, which yielded good crops. In 1909 he purchased forty acres near Ripon and from time to time has added to them until they now number 175 acres, seventy of which is in vineyard and the balance in orchard and alfalfa and on which Mr. Klinger conducts a dairy. This worthy couple have the esteem and good will of the entire community, where they are respected for their honorable principles, upright dealings and true worth. Mr. Klinger is six feet four inches in height and is a splendid type of western manhood. He enjoys the distinction of being the youngest pioneer whose picture adorns the historic walls of Fort Sutter, Cal., an honor well bestowed, as he is one of the worthiest of all of the Native Sons of the Golden West.

HENRY MOORE.—The name of Henry Moore is an honored one on the list of pioneer citizens of San Joaquin County, where he took up his home in 1858, and throughout his life his interests were associated vitally with those of his adopted state. He lent his support to the educational, moral and social progress of his locality, and, being a man of great force and integrity of character, his actions in regard to any enterprise could be predicted in advance and his influence would always be found on the side of the general welfare. He was born in Seneca County, Ohio, on December 22, 1833, and at the age of nineteen years went to Texas, where he remained for two years, then returned to his home in Ohio.

On April 26, 1855, Mr. Moore was married to Miss Sarah Meyer and for the next three years farming engaged his attention. In 1858 he and his wife started for California via Panama and settled in Castoria township, San Joaquin County, near French Camp, and there bought and improved a 160-acre ranch and for forty-nine years made that his home. He took an active and unselfish part in all public matters and for several years was justice of the peace of Castoria township. As an agriculturist he was successful and took much interest in the various agricultural fairs, and in many ways helped to raise the standards of his occupation. Mr. Moore passed away in July, 1907, mourned by the entire community wherein he had spent so many active years of his life. His widow resided on the home ranch until she passed away in June, 1909. Mr. and Mrs. Moore were the first to leave an endowment fund of $400 to the East Union Cemetery. He was public-spirited in citizenship, was trustworthy in business, faithful in friendship, and in his home was most devoted to the welfare and happiness of his wife. Many were his good qualities and few his faults. He loved truth and justice and represented a high type of our American manhood.

JOHN ANDERSON.—Distinguished among the representative educators of his time in California, the late John Anderson, formerly superintendent of schools of San Joaquin County, made such an enviable record for efficient, conscientious service that the story of his own progress has been accepted as typical of the progress of education in the Golden State during his period. He was born near Suisun in Solano County, and was a mere child when the family located in San Joaquin County. He attended the Linden school and a preparatory college in Stockton, and then went for a year to the University of California. Afterward, he pursued courses for three summer sessions of the law school at the University of California, intending to equip himself for the practice of law; but he became interested in educational work, and gave up law as his goal. He first taught in the Linden school, part of the time as principal. In Stockton, he was principal of the old North school, on the site of the El Dorado school of a later period; and subsequently still, he was head of the Lodi grammar school. Later, he became assistant postmaster under Postmaster F. E. Ellis at Stockton.

In the fall of 1910, Mr. Anderson was elected county superintendent of schools, entering upon his duties with the confidence, esteem and good-will of thousands; and after having amply demonstrated not only what he was able to do, but what his high principles and exceptional sense of honor demanded of himself in the performance of his duties in his high trust, he was serving his third term in office at the time of his death, which occurred on August 24, 1921. He not only stood high as a practical educator, but he had rare executive ability, the most desirable tact, and thus was an efficient officer.

In 1907 Mr. Anderson married Miss Effie Stillson, a native of Sacramento, a graduate of both the Sacramento High School and the San Jose Normal School, and a teacher at Lodi; and on the death of her lamented husband, she was appointed county superintendent of schools, a choice giving great satisfaction to many. She is fully qualified for the position, for she was her husband's deputy during his term of office. Superintendent Anderson was also prominent in the Masonic order. He was a member of Stockton Lodge of Perfection No. 12, S. R.; the Albert Pike Chapter No. 6, Knights of the Rose Croix; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; and Lodi Chapter, Eastern Star. He was a past master of Linden Lodge of Masons, and past patron of Lodi Chapter, O. E. S.

JAMES CONNER.—One of the old-time families in the Golden State is that represented by James Conner who for the past forty-eight years has been identified with San Joaquin County along agricultural and stock raising lines and he is today an authority on livestock. The Conner family has ever borne their part in the upbuilding and development of this region, and have invariably been exponents of progress and liberal ideas upon all subjects. James Conner was born at Wilmington, Ohio, May 24, 1843, and grew up on his father's farm. When President Lincoln issued his first call for men to bear arms in the Civil War conflict, James Conner and two brothers, W. H. and his twin brother Peter, enlisted in Company A, Forty-eighth Ohio Volunteer Infantry and the first battle they engaged in was the Battle of Shiloh. The three brothers passed through many engagements until Peter was taken ill and was sent home, where he passed away in 1863; the two remaining brothers fought to the finish and were honorably discharged July 3, 1865. The Conner brothers were in Sherman's March-to-the-Sea and James Conner cast his first vote for Lincoln while in camp in Tennessee in 1864. Returning home from war, Mr. Conner removed to Illinois and located near Knoxville, where he farmed for two years, then moved to Iowa, where he remained until 1874 when he came to California and located at Lathrop, where he has since continuously resided.

The marriage of Mr. Conner occurred while residing in Iowa in 1873 and united him with Miss Josephine Pollick, a native of Henry County, Iowa, and one year later the young couple removed to California. Seven children have been born to this union: Porter L., deceased; Clifford, deceased; Delbert, deceased; Susie Mae, Mrs. Voyce of Los Angeles, Calif.; Adelaide, Mrs. Upton of Crows Landing, Calif.; Charles and Fred are deceased. Mr. Conner has always been a staunch Republican and his reminiscences of his Civil War experiences are calculated to increase the patriotism of his hearers. He is among the oldest settlers of San Joaquin County, nearing the eighty-first milestone on life's journey, and few there are who have so long been identified with the development of this portion of the state. He is now enjoying the fruits of a life spent in usefulness and honorable toil and he has a very large circle of friends in this portion of California.

GEORGE W. LANGRIDGE.—For forty-five years George W. Langridge has been a resident of Stockton and he has never had occasion to regret the impulse which led him to establish his home in this city, for he has steadily progressed toward the goal of success and through the capable management of his business interests he has also contributed in marked measure to the commercial development of his community. Since 1879 he has been engaged in the shoe business, being the pioneer merchant in this line in the city, and his establishment ranks with the best in this part of the state.

Mr. Langridge is a native of Wisconsin, his birth having occurred in Milwaukee on June 11, 1856. He comes of an old English family; his father, Charles A. Langridge, was born in Brighton, Sussex, England, serving in the English army as a bugler. Soon after his discharge from the army he came to Milwaukee, Wis., where he met and married Miss Eliza Martin, also a native of Brighton, who had accompanied her parents to Milwaukee. In 1858, when our subject was two years of age, the family removed to a farm near Lancaster, Grant County, where they became prosperous farmers in that splendid farming section of southern Wisconsin, continuing until they retired to Lancaster where they passed their last days. On the breaking out of the Civil War, although a man of family Charles A. Langridge responded to the call and enlisted under the colors of the Stars and Stripes in Company I, 5th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, serving until the close of the war, holding a commission of lieutenant. He was a prominent Grand Army man and a Mason.

The worthy couple had a family of six girls and three boys, all living except one of the sons, George W. being the second oldest. He was reared on a farm near Lancaster, in Grant County, and attended the nearest district school, which was three miles distant, while in the summer months he was busy with the farm work. In 1874, when eighteen years of age, he came to California and for two years rode the range in Plumas County, but at the end of that time made his way back East. He was not content to remain there, however, and in 1877 returned to California, locating at Stockton, where he has since resided. For a short time he was clerk for the Yosemite Hotel and for about two years was with the clothing store of Caden & Bagley. In 1879 he purchased a half interest in the shoe store of George E. Weller at 119 East Main Street and their interests were conducted as Weller & Langridge until 1883, when John Garwood acquired the stock of the senior partner and the name was changed to Langridge & Garwood. Two years later Mr. Langridge bought out his partner and the business continued as George W. Langridge until 1920 when Henry L. Jeffrey acquired an interest in the business, now known as the George W. Langridge Shoe Company. Mr. Langridge has remained at his present location for forty-three years—a record unequalled by any other merchant in the city—and is not only its pioneer shoe merchant but the pioneer merchant in Stockton. He conducts his establishment along the most modern and progressive lines, and has ever borne an unassailable reputation for business integrity, enterprise and reliability. With the passing years his business has steadily developed and his patronage has now reached large proportions. He also owns a fifteen-acre fruit ranch at McHenry's Station, in Stanislaus County, which he purchased for a home.

Mr. Langridge is deeply interested in all that pertains to the welfare and progress of his community and for five years served as a member of the board of managers of the Stockton State Hospital, being appointed by Governor Gage. He is affiliated with Truth Lodge, No. 55, I. O. O. F., and also with Morning Star Lodge, No. 68, F. & A. M., Stockton, Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T., and Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., at San Francisco. He is likewise a past patron of the Eastern Star, having filled that office for three consecutive terms. He enjoys the esteem of many friends and fully deserves the honor that is accorded the fortunate individual who has fought and won in the great battle of life.

JAMES C. DEWEY.—In the death of James C. Dewey on August 10, 1917, Stockton lost one of its prominent and highly respected citizens. His career was a long, busy and useful one, devoted to the upbuilding and development of the city of Stockton from pioneer days, and while promoting the material welfare of the community he also gave an active and liberal support to those measures which tended to advance its intellectual and moral status. His life was filled with good deeds and kindly thoughts, and all who knew him entertained for him the highest regard, by reason of his upright, honorable life. He was born in Ontario, Canada, March 17, 1845, and came to California via Panama in 1866. Upon his arrival in San Francisco he went to Virginia City by stage, where he clerked in a general merchandise store. In 1874 he was married to Miss Kathryn Campbell, who came West to California with her brother-in-law, Daniel O'Connell, a merchant at Virginia City. Mr. Dewey then went to work in a stamp mill and saved his money in order to enter the hotel business, when he purchased the Burlington Hotel at Virginia City, which he conducted successfully until the panic of 1878; he then removed to Stockton practically penniless and started anew to make his fortune. In 1880 he brought his family to Stockton and the home was established on Union Street between Church and Hazelton streets. He was engaged in the contracting business in Stockton for about twenty-six years and he built up a second fortune; then about sixteen years ago he established a grocery business at the corner of Church and Stanislaus streets, which he continued for four years, until 1910. From 1908 to 1913 he served as councilman of the Third Ward in Stockton and retired to private life after a record of faithful and efficient service. He was bereaved of his wife on October 10, 1904, and on August 10, 1917, he passed to his reward, mourned by his family and numerous friends. The mayor of Stockton ordered all flags at half-mast in respect to the memory of this honored pioneer. Six children survived this worthy couple: Anna, Mrs. J. L. Swass, residing at Atlanta; George is now deceased; James resides in Stockton; Edward lives in Oakland, Cal.; Harry and Robert reside in Stockton, the latter being an ex-service man in the U. S. Navy on board the S. S. Foote. Mr. Dewey passed away at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Swass, who has always been identified with all movements of progress and development and was closely associated with her father in the social life of Stockton, where she has been active in musical circles, possessing a beautiful voice and has appeared in opera in California and the eastern states. Since giving up her professional career she is devoted to her family and home, but enjoys assisting on local programs to the delight of her audiences. She is the daughter of a worthy father and her genial social nature has gained her many friends. She was married at Stockton, Cal., August 20, 1906, to Joseph L. Swass, the oldest son of Antone and Maria Swass, late highly respected pioneers and prominent orchardists of Watsonville, Cal. Mr. Swass, who was born at Hayward, Cal., took a very active interest in his father's affairs. He moved to the Atlanta section of San Joaquin County in 1913 and is the owner of two ranches there and is a leading spirit in all matters pertaining to southern San Joaquin County. He has one sister, Miss Mary Swass, a graduate of the University of California, and is and for several years last past has been a teacher of Spanish at the Santa Ana high school; he also has two brothers, Frank and Henry Swass, prosperous farmers in the same vicinity.

DEAN JEWETT LOCKE.—The name of Dean J. Locke is synonymous with many of the influences and movements that have had to do with the upbuilding of San Joaquin County, and his name has been perpetuated in the town which he founded and in which he made his home for nearly forty years, or until his death. He passed away in Lockeford May 4, 1887, at the comparatively early age of sixty-four years, mourned alike by old and young, all honoring and respecting him for his large accomplishments and loving him for his genial, kindly nature.

The records state that the Locke family is of English origin, and was established in the United States during colonial times by Deacon William Locke, of Woburn, Mass. From him the line is traced to Calvin Locke, who was born in Ashby; N. H., in 1765, and who in February, 1796, married Sarah Jewett. Their son Luther was born in Sullivan County, N. H., in the latter part of the year 1796, and in that vicinity the greater part of his life was passed. Four children were born of his marriage with Hannah Willard, as follows; Luther Franklin, who graduated from Middlebury, Vt., College, and also from Cambridge Medical College; Dean Jewett, Elmer Hall, and George S.

The second child in the parental family, Dean Jewett Locke, was born April 16, 1823, at Langdon, Sullivan County, N. H., where his father was a trader and owned a store in partnership with a brother. Dean Jewett received his early education in the schools of his native town. At the age of fourteen years he attended the academy at Langdon, paying his tuition by his services as janitor of the building, ringing the bell and keeping the fires supplied with wood through the long snowy winter time, and performing the same work for the people with whom he boarded, in payment for his board. Thus early in life he was engaged in earning his own living, with characteristic energy and determination. Later, in order that he might further pursue his studies, he taught school, beginning when he was seventeen years of age, at Tewksbury, Mass. With the money which he had accumulated in this way he attended the first State Normal School in Bridgewater, Mass., and after graduating from it, he taught in the high school of Pawtucket and Worcester, Mass., until he entered Harvard College, graduating from the medical department of this institution in 1849. It had been his intention to settle in the East and follow his profession, but the discovery of gold in California during the year of his graduation turned his thoughts toward the Golden West instead. On April 16, 1849, he with a party of twenty-five friends started across the plains for California, the party being incorporated as the Boston and Newton Joint Stock Association. Dr. Locke served in the capacity of physician to the company and received his transportation in exchange for his services. Five months of weary marching finally brought the little party to their destination, Sacramento, where they arrived September 16, 1849. What is now one of the principal cities of the state and its capital as well, was at that time a settlement of tents and rudely constructed shacks. Here Dr. Locke practiced medicine for a short time, after which he went to the mines at Downieville, on the American River. It is safe to say that his anticipations as a miner were not realized, for he had been there only a short time when he gave up mining, and coming to San Joaquin County, took up a tract of land whereon is now located the town of Lockeford, having first paid a good price for it to the parties who had purchased a pretended Spanish grant, and afterward being required to buy it from the government at the regulation price of $1.25 per acre. Dr. Locke settled on what was known as Yankee Hill just north of Lockeford in 1851, and maintained a ford across the Mokelumne River, to guard against quicksand in the summer; and during the winter time, when the river was too high to ford, he ran a ferry boat across the river. Dr. Locke built the first house in Lockeford. After the town was started a name was needed; and as the ford across the river was called Locke's ford, at the suggestion of his wife the "s" was dropped and the town named Lockeford, which name it has since borne.

In 1854 Dean J. Locke returned East, and on May 8, 1855, was united in marriage with Miss Delia M. Hammond, a native of North Abington, Mass. The wedding journey of the young people brought them to Lockeford, Cal., July 1, 1855, and they set up housekeeping in a house which Dr. Locke erected in the autumn of that year. On their return from the East Dr. Locke and his wife were accompanied by the former's father, Luther Locke, who became the first postmaster of the town, in June, 1861, and who here rounded out his long and useful life, passing away in 1866, at the age of nearly seventy years. Thirteen children were born of the marriage of Dean J. Locke and his wife, named in order of their birth as follows: Luther J.; Ada.; Nathaniel Howard; Horace Mann; Ida; Mary, deceased; William Willard; Hannah; John Calvin, who passed away in Brooklyn, N. Y., and who was superintendent of street paving at the time of his demise; Edward Moore; Eunice; George Hammond; and Theresa. Mrs. Locke is living in Lockeford at the age of eighty-seven years. All of their children received an excellent education, for Dr. Locke was a staunch advocate of furnishing the younger generation with good school advantages, and as a member of the board of education of the town he was able to accomplish considerable along this line. None of her citizens were more public-spirited or philanthropic than was Dr. Locke, whose greatest happiness seemed to be in advancing the growth and upbuilding of the town, to which he gave a number of lots for the erection of churches and schools. Himself a temperate man in every sense of the word, never having used liquor or tobacco in any form, he was a staunch advocate of temperance and was an unwearied worker in the cause throughout his life. During his early life he voted the Whig ticket, but later, when the Republican party was formed, he voted for its candidates. He passed away in the town which he had founded, May 4, 1887, at the age of sixty-four years, loved and honored by his fellow citizens. Mrs. Locke is still living at the old home place, and at the age of eighty-seven is enjoying very good health. She has a record of temperature and weather, taken three times a day, as well as a record of happenings of the Lockeford locality since her arrival in 1855.

NATHAN MORETON STRONG.—A veteran of the Civil War who has been a resident of California since 1876 and a highly respected citizen of Stockton these many years is Nathan Moreton Strong, who was born in Adrian, Mich., December 25, 1844, a son of Nathan Strong, who was born in Ohio in 1813, and married Mrs. Mary A. (Inglehart) Quackenbush, who was a native of New York state. They removed to Lenawee County, Mich., where the father followed his trade of cabinetmaking at Adrian and also owned and operated a farm. They had a family of eight children and although over military age when the Civil War started he volunteered his services in the 18th Michigan Infantry as fifer and bugler and was the chief musician for three years. In the same regiment, also serving as a musician, was his son Nathan, our subject. The father was taken prisoner and was confined in the rebel prison at Cahaba for nine months, until the close of the war, when he was set free. After the war the elder Mr. Strong followed farming until 1875 when he moved to Stanislaus County, Calif., spending his last days in Modesto. The mother's first marriage resulted in the birth of three children and two of these sons, Isaac and James Quackenbush, served in an Ohio regiment in the Civil War from 1861 for three years. Isaac was nine months a prisoner in Andersonville while James was severely wounded.

Nathan Moreton was the next to the youngest child born of the mother's second marriage and spent his childhood on the farm near Adrian, receiving a good education in the local district school. When seventeen years of age, in August, 1862, at the second call for 300,000 men, he responded to the call and enlisted as a private in Company C, 18th Michigan Volunteer Infantry, mustered in August 26, 1861, and was a drummer in the drum corps of the regiment; later, when the Regimental band was formed, he was the drummer in the same band in which his father was chief musician. So father and son were with the colors for three years.

He was engaged at Danville, Ky., against Pe-gram's forces, then against the same at Buck Creek, Lebanon, and at Decatur, Ala., held the pontoon bridge and thus headed off General Hood and delayed him on his march to Nashville; he was also in engagements at Pond Spring Court House, School Creek, and others, serving until the close of the war he was mustered out at Nashville June 26, 1865, and received his honorable discharge at Jackson, Mich.

On his return to Lenawee County, he followed farming, and in that county near the city of Adrian,

Susan Strong

September 20, 1869, occurred his marriage to Miss Susan Thayer, a native of Jefferson County, N. Y., the daughter of Augustus and Eliza (Talbot) Thayer, who brought their family to Adrian, Mich., where they resided on a farm until they passed away. This worthy couple had twelve children, of whom Mrs. Strong is next to the youngest. Two of her brothers, William and Charles, also served in the Civil War in Company C & B, respectively, 18th Michigan Volunteer Infantry, both were taken prisoners and kept at Cahaba until their discharge and were returning north up the Mississippi River on the ill-fated steamer Sultana, when it blew up. Charles perished, for his body was never found, while William, thrown into the Mississippi, caught a door and floated down the river for miles, working his way toward shore, until he found a tree leaning into the river to which he lashed himself before he became exhausted and unconscious, when he was found and rescued. Two other brothers of Mrs. Strong were in the South as railroad engineers when the war broke out and were forced into service as engineers for the Confederacy.

In 1876 Mr. and Mrs. Strong came to Stockton and engaged in ranching near town until Mr. Strong entered the employ of Moore & Smith, lumber dealers, continuing with them and others until February, 1901, when he entered the employ of the Rural Cemetery Association and has continued with them ever since, for many years serving efficiently as general office man. Mr. and Mrs. Strong's union has been blessed with three children: Nathan C., superintendent of the Rural Cemetery; Percy M., in employ of the street railway in Stockton; and Gertrude, who died in 1909. Mr. Strong is a prominent member and past commander of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R., while Mrs. Strong is a member of Roosevelt Circle, Ladies of the G. A. R.. Mr. Strong and his estimable and devoted wife are a very interesting couple and in their liberal and kindhearted way dispense old-time Californian hospitality to their many friends who appreciate their generosity and love them for their many attributes of mind and heart.

GEORGE H. LOCKE.—It is an unusual occurrence for one who has been born and reared under the sunny skies of California to seek a home in any other part of the country upon reaching years of maturity, as almost without exception they remain in the midst of familiar scenes and take up their life work. This has been true of the life of Dr. Locke, who has never been outside of his native state except for three years during his service in the United States Army in the Philippines. Not only is he proud of his nativity as a Native Son, but he also takes pride in the fact that he is a son of one of the state's sturdy pioneers, to whose bravery and indomitable spirit this greatest of commonwealths owes its existence.

With the other children, George H. Locke attended the schools of the village, from which he graduated with honors in 1895. As he had been considering his future course in life while a pupil in the grammar school, by the time of his graduation he had his future plan of action well formulated, and without loss of time he continued his studies in the veterinary department of the University of California, preparatory to becoming a veterinary surgeon. After the completion of the course he returned to Lockeford and opened an office for practice, following it with considerable success for one year, when the breaking out of the Spanish-American War broke in upon his plans and for three years he served as a veterinary surgeon in the United States Army in the Philippines. With the close of his service he came back to Lockeford and resumed his practice, and also again gave attention to his livery business, which during his absence had been in charge of his brother.

Dr. Locke's marriage occurred in January, 1906, and united him with Miss Estelle Walsh, of Linden, San Joaquin County, the daughter of H. W. Walsh, a well-known resident of that place. Two children have been born of the marriage of Dr. and Mrs. Locke, Olga and Georgiana. Fraternally Dr. Locke is a member of the American Veterinary Medical Association, the California State Veterinary Medical Association and North San Joaquin Valley Veterinary Medical Association. Politically, he is a staunch Republican, and has been state fire warden for Lockeford since 1918. Since the second year of the organization of the local center of the San Joaquin Farm Bureau at Lockeford, Dr. Locke has been secretary one year; since then he has been a director of the local Center or a director at large of the county organization. During his service he was at the front from 1899 until 1902 under Gen. Funston.

ANSEL S. WILLIAMS.—In preparing our coming citizens by training their minds and hands and bodies for maximum effectiveness Stockton's public schools are doing wonderful work. At their head is Superintendent Ansel S. Williams. Trained at Stanford and Yale Universities, Mr. Williams has inaugurated and carried out a constructive upbuilding of the public school system that began in the adoption of a $596,000 bond issue two years after he took office. Hence Stockton pioneered in the erection of brick and reinforced concrete edifices for her children, steps in which most California cities have since followed. This distinguished educator is a native of California, born in Tuolumne County August 20, 1876. He is the son of Alvaro and Mathilda (Georges) Williams, the former a Californian and the latter an Iowan.

Grounded educationally as a pupil of the Stockton schools, Mr. Williams was graduated from the Stockton high school and from Leland Stanford University, graduating from Palo Alto's great institution of learning in 1903. Then Mr. Williams took a post-graduate course in Yale University in 1904. He specialized in history and economics and history at both of these universities. From 1904 to 1909 he was head of the history department of Stockton high school, and in 1911 was appointed superintendent of Stockton's schools. The enrollment has doubled since then and mounts steadily. As the municipality had faith and vision, its school buildings were put on a modern basis at no special hardship, financially, to the taxpayers. This was done by issuing 498 grammar school bonds at $1000 each, falling due from the third to the thirty-fifth year, successively, and ninety-eight high school bonds, falling due from the third to the twenty-second year. Three new grammar schools and five four-room additions to present edifices, the best of heating and ventilating systems for all, and manual training and domestic science departments as well as gymnasiums were authorized by the bond issue of 1913. The result has been that the number of boys enrolled has been greatly increased as compared with the preponderance of girls. The course of study gives practical preparation early for the pupils on which to build for the future; it holds the youths in the schools longer and turns them out better equipped, while the physical training gives a well-rounded development rather than making specialized athletes.

Mr. Williams in a fraternal way is associated with Morning Star Masonic Lodge, and is also a member of the Rotary Club. His wife was Miss Edna Marion Small, a native of Stockton, and descended from an historic pioneer family of Stanislaus County. They have two children, Ansel S., Jr., and Marian Yale.

GEORGE E. CATTS.—For thirty-four years the Lauxen & Catts Furniture Company has held a leading place in business circles of Stockton and theirs is the pioneer enterprise of this character in the city. George E. Catts, president of the firm, is a native son of Stockton and was born June 20, 1860, his parents being Samuel and Margaret (McDonald) Catts, the former a native of Maryland, while the latter was born in Ireland, and both are deceased. The father enlisted in the Mexican War and served under Col. J. D. Stevenson. He rounded Cape Horn in 1846, landed in San Francisco in March, 1847, and in 1848 he arrived in Stockton, where he engaged in freighting, taking the first load of supplies that went from Stockton to the Southern mines, using ox teams for this purpose. He established a freight line first to Sonora and afterwards to Mokelumne Hill and other points in the mines, and later, while a resident of Stockton, he purchased a vessel and engaged in transporting freight by water between this city and San Francisco.

George E. Catts was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1879 and from St. Mary's College in 1881 and in 1888 he established the Lauxen & Catts Furniture Company. This is the oldest firm of the kind in the city and the business methods of the house have ever been characterized by integrity, enterprise and reliability, winning for them the confidence and support of the public. Mr. Catt is president of the firm and for many years he has been prominently identified with financial affairs. He was a director of the Stockton Savings Bank and the organizer of the City Bank of Stockton, of which he served as president for several years, while he is now acting as vice-president.

Mr. Catts married Miss Susan F. Hicks, a native of Merced County, Cal. She is a member of one of the old pioneer families of the state, her father crossing the plains to California with the gold seekers of 1849. Three children have been born of this union: Georgie, Susan and Letitia. Mr. Catts is progressive and public-spirited in matters of citizenship and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, of which he has been president. He has always taken an active part in civic affairs and from 1901 until 1903 served as mayor of Stockton, being elected to that office on the Democratic ticket. He is connected with the Native Sons of the Golden West and the Lions Club and is also identified with Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E. He is a Knights Templar Mason and an exemplary representative of the craft. He has won success through industry and ability and these qualities unite to make him an upright man and useful citizen.

HERBERT E. WILLIAMSON.—For over forty years a resident of Stockton and closely identified with its business life, the late Herbert E. Williamson was an active factor in the upbuilding of the city, aiding liberally with his time and means movements for the benefit of the place and the welfare of its people. One of the leading realty men of Stockton during his lifetime, he was recognized as a man of excellent judgment, keen intuition and broad information, and his judgment of property values was considered authoritative.

Born at Pontiac, Mich., March 25, 1851, Mr. Williamson came to California in his youth, and as a young man he worked for the Matteson & Williamson Harvester Works, which was later absorbed by the Holt Manufacturing Company. His father, Truman P. Williamson, a pioneer of California of 1855, was president and one of the founders of the company, and here he worked as machinist in his father's plant. On the death of his father he assumed the management of the plant, continuing until it was sold to the Holt Manufacturing Company. Later he entered the real estate and brokerage business and soon became an important factor in this field, so closely identified with the progress of any community, and did much to promote the development of the Stockton of early days to its present size and importance among California cities. He opened his office on South San Joaquin Street, where the office building he erected still stands, and it was his privilege to live to see the completion of the handsome pressed brick business block, which he built on San Joaquin Street next to the Farmers and Merchants Bank, and which added an improvement of great value to this district. A keen business man, Mr. Williamson was very successful in his investments in both city and country lands, and in his passing away on December 17, 1917, Stockton lost one of its most dependable citizens, and one who commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact either in business or social life.

In San Jose in 1882, Mr. Williamson was united in marriage with Miss Seleni Slaughter, a native daughter of San Joaquin County, born near Morada, and the only one living of the three children born to Joseph H. and Elizabeth (Speltz) Slaughter; the father, a native of Indiana, crossed the plains in 1852, and settled on a ranch near Morada, San Joaquin County, where he passed away many years ago. Mrs. Slaughter, who was born in Kentucky, was early left an orphan and came to California via the Isthmus in 1856 with Mr. and Mrs. John Ward, who located at Altaville when she met Mr. Slaughter. She was a prominent Methodist and organized St. Paul's Bible class. She died May 4, 1922. Mr. and Mrs. Williamson were the parents of two children: Paul T., who carries on the real estate business founded by his father, is a graduate of the University of California and of Cornell, and a member of Theta Delta Chi. He married Miss Grace Ray and they have one child, Ellis R.; Ruth, who with Mrs. Williamson, resides at the family home, 548 North Sutter Street, Stockton, is a graduate of Miss Mason's School at Tarrytown-on-the-Hudson, N. Y. During the World War she was deeply interested in Red Cross Work, going overseas as head of her unit, and was stationed at Paris, France, as a canteen worker and later in charge of entertainment. She returned home after the war but in 1922 made another extensive tour of Contimental Europe and Turkey. Mrs. Williamson has traveled widely, visiting Honolulu and spending five months in England and on the Continent. She is a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Philomathean Club and a trustee of the College of the Pacific. An attendant of the Central Methodist Church for many years, Mr. Williamson was prominently identified with the activities of that congregation and for a long period was a member of its official board. He was an active worker in the Anti-Saloon League and contributed generously to that cause. Always deeply interested in the cause of education, he was one of the trustees of the College of the Pacific, and in fraternal circles was a member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., of Stockton. Liberal and charitable, his benefactions were many and Mrs. Williamson, since his death, has continued his generous support to many worthy causes.

JOHN C. HANNAN.—A native son of California whose memory reaches back to its pioneer days, John C. Hannan, the president of the Hannan Patrol and Detective Agency, was born at Stockton, Cal., January 9, 1862. His parents, both natives of Ireland, were John and Catherine (Collins) Hannan, both now deceased. The father was a '49er and he crossed the Isthmus on his way to California and mined at Sonora, Tuolumne County. He died in 1862 and Mrs. Hannan was later married to J. W. Maher; she lived to be eighty-eight years old and was the mother of eleven children, dying March 31, 1913. By her first marriage the following children are living, James B., John C., of this sketch, Mrs. J. D. Gall and Mrs. Delia Douville, and of her marriage to Mr. Maher, William J. Maher, Mrs. Annie Hudson, Mrs. Maggie Knap and Miss Mamie Maher.

John C. Hannan attended a parochial school at the corner of San Joaquin and Lafayette streets, Stockton, for a short time but he was obliged to earn his living at a youthful age. He became a jockey when he was ten years old, at that time weighing less than eighty pounds. He rode running horses all over the state, riding for Judge C. E. Creaner, Wash Trahern and Judge Terry, all well-known horsemen of Stockton in those days. When he grew too heavy for the saddle he went to Nevada where he rode the range for a number of years, and also engaged in mining, working in the Aurora gold mine in Esmeralda County, Nevada.

In 1885 Mr. Hannan returned to Stockton and became an attendant at the State Asylum for two years, and for the next twenty years was in business in Stockton. In 1909 he started the Hannan Patrol and Detective Agency, an undertaking that has proved very successful, and in 1913 George M. Clark became his partner and is the manager of the agency. The patrol consists of six men who patrol beats in the business and residence section of Stockton at night and through their work many notorious criminals have been taken up; they act in complete harmony with the sheriff and the police department of Stockton. The detective branch of the agency works all over the state as well as in the other Pacific Coast States, and number some competent men among their personnel.

While living in Nevada, Mr. Hannan was married when only eighteen years of age to Miss Ethel Roscot, a native of Minnesota. She passed away on September 4, 1917, the mother of the late J. W. Hannan, prosecuting attorney for the city of Stockton, who married Sadie McGintis and had one son, Murel Hannan, and Mrs. Harriett Kram, of Stockton. Mr. Hannan is a Democrat in politics and he is affiliated with the Loyal Order of Moose; while in Nevada he served as deputy sheriff of Mono County and as constable of Clinton, in that state. Blessed with an excellent memory, he can relate many interesting experiences of the pioneer days, when this locality bore little promise of its present progress and development. At times the town of Stockton was flooded with water in many of the streets and people went about in boats. There were many Indians, Chinamen and Mexicans here then and he remembers one time seeing 300 Chinamen get off the boat and tramp in single file to the mines, and also 300 to 400 mules, leaving daily in pack trains for the mountains. In those days the Island country was all a wilderness and much credit is due the Chinese for developing that rich soil.

CHARLES E. NEEDHAM.—When Charles E. Needham passed away, San Joaquin County lost an influential and progressive citizen, one who had resided in the county since 1867, when he removed from his native state of Vermont to California and settled near Banta, where he took up a homestead. He was born in Vermont, December 1, 1829, a son of Charles and Minerva (Porter) Needham. The ancestry of Charles E. Needham is traced in a direct line from Anthony Needham, an Englishman, and his wife, Anna Potter Needham, who were charged as Quakers on June 25, 1658, and were duly persecuted. They were the progenitors of the Needham family in America, which has been traced in a direct line through succeeding generations to the present time by H. C. Needham, a well-known attorney of New York City. The Needhams were men of military habits and, despite his Quaker faith, Anthony, Sr., was corporal of the Salem Old Troop in 1665, and in 1675 he served during King Philip's War as a lieutenant under Captain Nicholas Manning of Salem. He had a son Anthony, and it is said that he was the first white settler within the present town of Wales, Hampden County, Mass., where he settled in 1726. The next in line was Jeremiah Needham, born in 1741 at South Brimfield, Mass., where he was town clerk in 1765. He was also a sergeant in Capt. Daniel Winchester's company, Col. Ruggle's Woodbridge's regiment, serving from August 17, 1777, until November 29 of that same year, with the Northern Army; he was also a private in Capt. John Carpenter's company of guards from June 24 to August 4, 1779, and was stationed at Springfield, Mass. Jeremiah had a son of the same name who moved to Vermont in 1805. The next in line was Charles Needham, the father of our subject, born in 1800, who moved to DeKalb, Ill., in 1854, where he engaged in raising Morgan horses from the famous Black Hawk stock; in 1855, with his son, he opened up Gibson's Addition of 320 acres to DeKalb, and he also played a prominent part in the early development of agriculture in that state.

Charles E. Needham married Miss Olive L. Drake, born in Crown Point, N. Y., but they both grew up on Lake Champlain and he crossed the ice in winter to do his courting. In 1862, leaving his wife and three children in the East, he crossed the plains to California and engaged in ranching in Santa Clara County, but being a strong abolitionist, he determined to go East to lend his aid in freeing the slaves. He did return to Illinois intending to join the Northern forces but his three children were of tender years and he was persuaded that his first duty was to his wife and family. With his wife and family, he set out with an emigrant train for the Golden State, as soon as he could, and it was en route that their fourth child, James Carson, was born at Carson City, Nev. They reached their destination at Mayfield, Santa Clara County, in the latter part of 1864, and Mr. Needham resumed his ranching operations. He was a strong Whig and Republican and was a personal friend of Gen. John C. Fremont. It is said that he wept bitterly when he heard of the defeat of Fremont for the presidency in 1856, and he never shaved his beard thereafter. Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Needham: James Carson Needham, a prominent citizen of Modesto, an ex-congressman and at present judge of the Superior Court of Stanislaus County; Harry B., employed in the U. S. Customs office in San Francisco; Cyrus H., a rancher at Patterson; Myrta L. is the wife of W. G. McKean and resides in Berkeley; Lillian V. is the wife of William E. Holman, a rancher near Farmington, San Joaquin County; Luella G. became the wife of James T. Holman and also lives near Farmington. Mr. Needham was public-spirited in citizenship, was trustworthy in business, faithful in friendship, and in his home was most devoted to the welfare and happiness of his family. Many were his good qualities and few his faults. He loved truth and justice and represented a high type of our American manhood.

STEPHEN B. COATES.—The late Stephen B. Coates was born near Toronto, Canada, in January, 1847. He spent most of his career in serving the printer's craft in Canada, the States and in California. He mastered the rudiments as a youth in Ingersoll, Canada, followed typography in Silver Cliff, Colo., in the olden days, and located in Stockton in February, 1883, growing up with the Golden State.

Mr. Coates first on his arrival in Stockton identified himself with the Independent, as job printer, and, advancing to the foremanship, remained sixteen years with this publication until he terminated his business activities. In 1900 he became a director of the Farmers & Merchants Bank, an institution he helped at organization by investing in its stock in October, 1888, continuing as a director until his demise. He also served his city as a member of Stockton's Council in 1902-04. His political affiliations were Republican.

Mr. Coates married Miss Phyllis Harris, a native of England; and of this union one son, James Y., was born. Fraternally Mr. B. Coates was an Odd Fellow a half century, since his initiation in Canada in 1871, and in Stockton he was a valued member of Truth Lodge. His church activities center in Stockton Episcopal Church, of which he was vestryman. He died February, 1921, being survived by his widow who died in April, 1921.

CHRIST ALBRIGHT.—Like many others of his native land, to Christ Albright, one of Lodi's prosperous citizens, America beckoned as the land of opportunity, as his immigration here at the age of eighteen testifies. Born in the state of Baden, Germany, three miles from the French border, on December 3, 1859, his parents were farmers and when not busy with the farm work our subject attended school until he was eighteen years of age when he sailed for America. He first settled at Circleville, Pickaway County, Ohio, and hired out as a farm hand; then he went to the pine woods of Minnesota and Michigan and worked in the lumber camps, also in the iron and copper mines; in 1880 he went to Yankton, Dakota Territory, but finding that city not to his liking, he returned to Michigan. In 1885 he removed to Dakota Territory, and located in McIntosh County, where he took up government land and there he farmed successfully for twenty-two years. His farm consisted of 1400 acres and was one of the best in the county; 400 acres were devoted to the raising of wheat, flax, oats and barley, the balance being devoted to cattle-raising. He was among the first in the state to raise Aberdeen-Angus cattle, exceptionally fine beef cattle that command the highest prices, and was very successful and prosperous. For a number of years he resided in Ashley, the county seat of McIntosh County and became a prominent figure in Republican politics, serving as justice of the peace in 1887; then for six years he was county supervisor; in 1894 he was elected county auditor and served for ten years in that capacity; then he was elected state senator for one term.

Deciding to give up political life, Mr. Albright refused to run again for office and in 1909 sold his farm and removed to California, settling in Lodi with the intention of retiring from active life. When the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Lodi was organized on May 10, 1916, he was prevailed upon by his friends to become its president. The bank was organized with a capital of $25,000 in the commercial department and $5000 capital in the savings department and the bank has shown a hearty growth and is doing a fine business. A report of the condition of the bank on April 28, 1921 shows a paid-up capital of $96,000 with a surplus of $26,200; during the past three years the bank has paid eight per cent dividends. The officers and directors of the institution are as follows: Christ Albright, president; Lot Lachenmaier, vice-president; Edgar B. Doering, cashier; directors, Peter Joens, H. C. Lang, Henry Nelson, and John Mettler, Jr.

The marriage of Mr. Albright united him with Miss Barbara Baurer, a native of Germany, born in the same district as her husband. They are the parents of one son, Samuel, who is in the garage business in Lodi; he served four years in the U. S. Navy. Mr. Albright was a member of the Ellendale, Dickey County, N. D., lodge of Masons, but is now a member of the Masons lodge in Lodi. His religious faith is that of the German Lutheran Church and he has served as treasurer of this body. Mr. Albright has an assured place in the affairs of the community, through his efficiency and dependability and as the leading spirit in a growing banking institution, is an important factor in the progress and prosperity of the central portion of California.

MRS. SUSAN J. FREDERICK.—A prominent and highly esteemed California pioneer, Mrs. Susan J. Frederick has been a resident of San Joaquin County for nearly her entire lifetime, having witnessed as much of its development and growth as probably any other living resident, and the large success gained by herself and husband, the late Thomas Frederick, was entirely earned by steady industry and business management. She was born near Memphis, Scotland County, Mo., September 24, 1855, a daughter of William H. and Barbara E. (Dye) Crow, both now deceased. William H. Crow, familiarly known throughout his locality as "Uncle Billy," was born in 1819 in Kentucky, but was reared in Pike County, Mo., whither his parents had removed in the early '30s. He was next to the oldest in a family of eight boys and one girl. On February 2, 1843, William H. Crow was married to Miss Barbara E. Dye, born in 1828 in Morgan County, Ohio, a daughter of John and Nancy (Archer) Dye, farmer folk who settled in Missouri when their daughter, Barbara E., was a small girl. After his marriage, William H. Crow continued to reside in Scotland County, Mo., where he became a successful stockman, remaining there until 1850.

News of the gold discovery in California having reached Missouri William H. Crow's father, Capt. Walter Crow, lost no time in organizing a company, among which were his two youngest sons, and of which he was made captain. They brought a large number of cattle with them. The two sons remained in California, but Walter Crow returned to his home in Missouri via the Isthmus; the next year, 1850, he came out again, and brought four more of his sons with him, one of whom was William H. Crow, the father of the subject of this review. The journey was completed successfully, the party stopping at Shaw's Flat, Tuolumne County, where they disposed of their stock at fancy prices to the miners. Capt. Walter Crow died in Sutter County in 1850, but William H. Crow opened a butcher business at Shaw's Flat, which he conducted until 1855. He made three trips in all across the plains. His second trip was in 1852 when he brought his wife and one child with him. Of their four children the oldest was Walter J. Crow, who was born in Missouri and was the only child who accompanied the parents on their trip out from Missouri in 1852; the second, Emma J., is the widow of the late Judge Prewett and resides at Auburn, Placer County, Cal.; the third was Susan J., the subject of this review, who was born while the parents were back in Missouri; and the fourth, Lewis B., was born after the parents returned to California, and is a prosperous rancher near Sanger, Fresno County, Cal. The oldest son became a rancher near Hanford, where he died. Returning again with his family to California in 1857, and crossing the plains for the third time, William H. Crow finally settled permanently on the Stanislaus River, near Ripon, twenty miles south of Stockton, where he took up land, to which he added from time to time, until he became an extensive land owner. Transportation was made in those days overland and by river hoats. One boat, the Clara Crow, plied the San Joaquin and Stanislaus rivers to San Francisco and Stockton for many years. The hoat (for a single trip) reached what is now known as Riverbank, but at that time was known as Burneyville. Of William H. Crow's brothers and sisters, there were eight brothers and one sister in all. The two brothers and one sister remaining back in Missouri moved out to California in 1865 with their families. Six of the Crow brothers settled in Stanislaus County and one, James A. Crow, settled in Stockton, where he passed away. In 1865 the mother of our subject passed away at the River Ranch and subsequently William H. Crow married Mrs. (Virda) Trolinger, a sister of John Jones of Escalon. William H. Crow was a Democrat in politics and for many years was an active Mason in the Modesto lodge. He passed away at the River ranch, July 29, 1884, his widow surviving him until 1906. The extensive land holdings of William H. Crow (900 acres in all) have been sold in small ranches and the section is now under a high state of cultivation. Lewis B. Crow and our subject, and Emma J., the widow of Judge Prewett of Auburn, Cal., are the only surviving members of the William H. Crow family. Judge Prewett was the administrator of the large Crow estate. For thirty-two years he had served as superior judge of Placer County and when he passed away on July 7, 1922, he was justly mourned by a large circle of friends and the public in general, whom he had served so long and so faithfully. He was survived by his widow and two children, William J. and Nellie E.

On September 1, 1872, Miss Susan J. Crow was married to Thomas Frederick, born January 27, 1849, near South Bend, Ind., and was a babe in arms when his parents removed to Iowa. He was a boy thirteen years old when he came to California as a member of his stepfather's family. After his father's death his mother was married to Elias Nutt, who became a prominent grain farmer in the Ripon section of San Joaquin County. Thomas Frederick received his education in the old San Joaquin school and in young manhood acquired 160 acres in the Jackson district of Stanislaus County; later he exchanged this with William H. Crow, the father of our subject, for a fine quarter section two miles west of Ripon. At that time only one house had been erected between this quarter section and the town of Ripon and in those pioneer days the mail was brought from the station known as Morrano, two miles north of Ripon. A store was erected at Ripon in 1875 and conducted by a Mr. Crook, who gave the village its name after his home town in Wisconsin. The first house erected by Mr. Frederick on his ranch was a small cottage, then in 1875 was replaced by a much finer residence and in 1886 remodelled into a fine house, where the family resided until 1904. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Frederick: Genoa resides in Ripon; Charles is represented in this work; Hattie resides at home in Ripon; and Lulu, now Mrs. H. L. Dickey, has two children. Mr. Frederick was active in the development of Ripon; he organized the Ripon Lumber Company; was one of the organizers and a director in the Bank of Ripon and was active in the development or irrigation in this section. In politics he was a Democrat and fraternally was a charter member of the Mt. Horeb lodge of Odd Fellows. In 1904 the family removed to Stockton and located at 324 West Park Street, where he passed away suddenly July 4, 1920. Mrs. Frederick later returned to Ripon, where she built a home on Orange Avenue. She retains her interest in the Bank of Ripon and is an active member of the First Congregational Church, to which she contributes liberally of her time and means. Mrs. Frederick is held in high esteem, and the kindly social qualities with which she is endowed wins for her the friendship and good will of all.

CHARLES A. STEELY.—A ranchman of varied experience, and who has so well succeeded that he is among the large grain growers of San Joaquin County, is Charles A. Steely, at present operating about 2,000 acres in the Elliott section of the county. He was born on the old Steely ranch north of Clements, San Joaquin County, on January 17, 1888, a son of George W. and Jessie (Niman) Steely. George W. Steely was born near Columbus, Franklin County, Ohio, on March 15, 1862, a son of Joseph and Rachel Steely, both natives of Ohio. When George Steely was a youth his parents moved to Kansas and farmed in Case County, about twenty-five miles from Kansas City, and George Steely attended school there. In 1884 he came to California and settled in San Joaquin County, where he purchased a 240-acre ranch, which he successfully farmed for a number of years. About 1910 he bought 160 acres, three miles north of Clements, and has improved it with a good set of buildings. At Stockton, George Steely married Miss Jessie Niman, born near Council Bluffs, Iowa. Her father was a stone-cutter by trade, owning and operating a granite and marble monument business. When she was twelve years old the family settled in California near Stockton, and Mrs. Steely received her education in the grammar schools of that city. Her father passed away when she was five years old, and nine years later her mother married Jesse Weaver, a farmer. Mr. Weaver passed away at the age of seventy-four, but her mother is living in Lodi at the age of seventy-five years. Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Steely were the parents of six children: Joseph, residing at Clements; Charles A., the subject of this review; Ray; May, who married W. E. Prouty, and died in May, 1921, leaving two children, Gladys and Ellsworth; Irene, Mrs. James Baker of Lodi; and Myrtle.

Charles A. Steely received his education in San Joaquin County, spending two years at Dry Creek; four years at the Justice school, and two years at the Clements school, and attending the Lodi high school for a short time. He is in partnership with his father in farming and stockraising, at the present time having about 1,000 acres in grain and 1,000 acres in stock range and hay land.

The marriage of Mr. Steely occurred at Stockton on August 1, 1910, and united him with Miss Mary Josephine Satori, a native Californian, born at San Francisco, a daughter of Louis and Mary Ellen (Hart) Satori, natives of Canton Ticino, Switzerland, and California, respectively. When Mary Josephine was a young girl, her parents removed to Nashville, Eldorado County, Cal., where she received most of her education, her father being in the merchandise business in Nashville and also postmaster of that town. He passed away in 1900, and later her mother married Marcus A. Steely, an uncle of our subject. Mr. and Mrs. Steely are the parents of two children, Rose Ellen and Stanley Charles, and the family resides on the Hans Smith ranch northeast of Lockeford. In politics, Mr. Steely is liberal in his views, supporting the candidate best fitted for office, rather than adhering to strict party lines. Fraternal-ly, he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, of Clements.

HARTMAN LITTEBRANT.—An interesting pioneer of Stockton is found in Hartman Littebrant who was a continuous resident of Stockton from 1852 and was ever active in the progress and prosperity of the city and county. A native of New York, he was born in Schoharie County on April 6, 1832, of old Knickerbocker stock descended from Holland Dutch settlers of New York. His mother died when he was only an infant and he was reared by friends until he was ten years of age when he went to live with his grandmother and remained with her for a time; then he went to Prattsville, N. Y., to live with a married sister and was with her until he was eighteen years of age, during which time he attended the local schools. About this time he met a friend who was coming to California and was told that he could go along, so with a party of five men, sailed from New York City on September 6, 1852, and landed in San Francisco, Cal., on October 6, 1852, coming by the way of Panama, and immediately went to Stockton, arriving there on October 8. For a time he tried mining in Tuolumne County, but not meeting with great success, he returned to Stockton and later he became the partner of Mr. Cory in the livery business. During 1861-62 he was located on Main Street, the present site of the Yosemite Theater; in 1862 he bought three lots on Main Street near American Street and erected a building and was engaged in the livery and feed business with George Aylesworth; during the early days they operated a stage line from Stockton to Copperopolis and during the Civil War, had a stage line from Stockton to Placerville, Cal. Later Mr. Littebrant engaged in the mercantile business at the corner of Main and Sutter streets with N. J. Salisbury as a partner. In 1876 Mr. Littebrant accepted a position in the U. S. mint in San Francisco and remained there until 1885; he returned to Stockton and served as deputy sheriff of San Joaquin County under Sheriff Tom Cunningham for six years.

The marriage of Mr. Littebrant occurred in Stockton in 1861 and united him with Miss Catherine Cunningham, a native of Ireland who came to California in 1856 and passed away November 4, 1904. They were the parents of three children. The late General William T. Littebrant had a brilliant career in the U. S. Army and died very suddenly while commanding officer at Camp McClellan at Anniston, Ala., July 2, 1919. In 1884 he attended West Point and was graduated in 1888 as a lieutenant of infantry; later he was transferred to the cavalry on account of his fine horsemanship. During the Spanish-American War he was in Cuba, attached to the quartermaster's department, and was later stationed at the Presidio in San Francisco and in Monterey and other western posts; during the World War he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general and trained an artillery division at Camp Fremont; he was married and had two daughters, Laura K. and Marion E. The second child is Miss Christine, who has been a teacher in the Stockton schools for eighteen years. The third child was Catherine L., who was also a teacher until she married Mr. McCoy. She passed away leaving three children: Winifred, Lillian F. and William I. T.

In 1862, Mr. Littebrant bought three lots on the corner of Stanislaus and Market streets and erected his home on the corner lot; later, in 1882, he moved his house to the lot next the corner and erected the

Hartman Lillibrant

Winifred apartments. This property is still in possession of the family. He was a member of the Volunteer Fire Department in the early days; he served as a member of the city council for two terms from the Third Ward. Fraternally he was the oldest member of the Stockton lodge of Odd Fellows, No. 11, the lodge conferring on him a medal for being the oldest living member. Mr. Littebrant passed away at the home of his daughter Christine February 19, 1922, and was buried under the auspices of the Odd Fellows. He was a man of a strong constitution and his mental faculties were alert until his taking away only six weeks before reaching his ninetieth year. He was a great reader and kept abreast of the times and was an interesting and ready talker and naturally had a host of friends in the county, where he had resided for seventy years.

IRVING MARTIN.—As the owner of the Stockton Daily Evening Record, Irving Martin wields an influence for good in the county and state; and he is also serving the state as a member of the State Railroad Commission, which position brings him into contact with every section of California. He was born at Bath, S. C., March 19, 1865, in which city his parents happened to be sojourning when the Civil War broke out and were unable to get back to New York State, where they had a home in the Catskills. His father was Richard Martin, a New Yorker, and he had married Mary Peelor, the marriage being against the will of the parents of both participants on account of religious differences. The young folks went to South Carolina, where two children were born to them, a girl, Anna Josephine, and two years later the son, Irving. The mother died when her boy was a babe and the father, grieving over the loss of his wife, took to his bed without apparent cause and died six weeks later.

Irving Martin drifted to California and attended the public school in Stockton in 1876, then at various times he had an opportunity to go to a country school in Yuba County until he was seventeen, at which time he entered a printing office to learn the trade, and the balance of his education was obtained from that source. He began at the very bottom rung of the ladder, as "devil" and gradually worked his own way to the top, through the various mechanical departments to reporter, and finally bought a half-interest in what was known as the Commercial Record of Stockton, W. M. Denig being his partner for two years, at the same time continuing as a reporter. In 1895 Mr. Martin was engaged in the publication of a weekly paper, the nucleus of the present Record plant. From a weekly newspaper it became on April 7, 1895, the Stockton Daily Evening Record. His associate at that time was E. H. Fontecilla, the name of the firm being Martin & Fontecilla; later Mr. Martin acquired his partner's interest, then incorporated the paper, disposing of a small amount of stock, which he later bought back. He is now the principal owner of the Record corporation.

For many years Mr. Martin has been active in Republican politics, was affiliated with the Lincoln-Roosevelt League, organized in 1910, and served as the first state secretary of the organization. For the past two years he has been nominally a Republican, but very independent in his views. In 1894 he was appointed secretary of the Police and Fire Commission of Stockton, holding the position four years. In 1912 he was appointed by Governor Hiram Johnson a member of the board of trustees of the Fresno State Normal School and held that for six years; in 1915 Governor Johnson appointed him a member of the California State Water Commission and he held that office until December 31, 1918, and on January 1, 1919, Governor W. D. Stephens appointed him a member of the State Railroad Commission. In each and every position of trust and responsibility, Mr. Martin has demonstrated his broad-mindedness and progressive ideas and has served the State to the best of his ability in each position he has filled.

The marriage of Irving Martin on March 9, 1892, at Stockton, united him with Miss Clara Elizabeth Goldsworthy, daughter of William and Keziah Goldsworthy, both born in England, but residents for several years in Santa Clara County, where Mr. Goldsworthy was engaged in mining at the New Almaden quicksilver mines; later he removed to Stockton and engaged in the grocery business. They have had one son, Irving Martin, Jr., who married Elsa Saddington and they have a child aged four and one-half years and reside in Stockton. Fraternally Mr. Martin is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Loyal Order of Moose, and is a 32nd degree Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of the Chapter of the York Rite. He has passed through all the chairs of the Knights of Pythias and Odd Fellows lodges. He is a member of the Yosemite and the Advertising clubs of Stockton; and the Commonwealth, Masonic, Engineers, Advertising and Union League clubs in San Francisco. He is a large holder in guaranty stock of the Security Building and Loan Association, of which he is a director and vice-president. It will be seen that while Mr. Martin has been closely identified with the building up of his newspaper he has always found time to devote to the interests of the people of the State of California by serving in any capacity for the public good.

RUDOLPH GNEKOW.—Few residents of the changing, growing cities of California have the distinction of having lived on one corner for more than sixty years, but such was the record of one of Stockton's pioneer citizens, Rudolph Gnekow, who maintained his home on Main Street for that long period, during which he saw such a transformation in his locality as would have been unbelievable to any one not gifted with a prophetic mind who came here in the early days of California's statehood.

Born near Breslau, Germany, in 1835, of Russian and Polish parents, Rudolph Gnekow ran away from the parental home when he was nineteen and on arriving in America crossed the plains to California in an ox-team train. He had learned the trade of a locksmith in his native land. Landing in New York, he started for California, and on arriving here stopped in San Francisco for a short time and then came on to Stockton, in 1856, and entered the employ of John Hart, blacksmith, and Bill Derrick, the stage builder. Here he bought the property on Main and Stanislaus Street, having a frontage of 104 feet on Main Street; and on this corner he built a blacksmith shop, where in the early days he shod the oxen used for transporting supplies to the southern mines, and also made wagons and carriages. He later erected a residence here, which was the family home for over sixty years, all of his children being born and reared there. In 1893 he bought the property now occupied by the Sutter Hotel, which was erected by a syndicate that had purchased the ground from Mr. Gnekow, the block which he had built being torn down to make room for the hotel.

In 1872, Mr. Gnekow gave up blacksmithing and carriage building to engage in the real estate business. In early days he owned the half block now a part of the Holt Manufacturing Company's grounds on South Anrora Street, paying $300 for it and selling it for $350. He bought a part of the Walker tract and offered it to the Odd Fellows for a building site, but the lodge decided to build elsewhere and so did not take advantage of his generous offer. He became extensively interested in realty operations and was very successful, amassing a competence during the years of his activity.

Always a Republican, Mr. Gnekow was very active in politics and served as city councilman of Stockton and as supervisor of San Joaquin County. He was a member of the old volunteer fire department, whose roster included the leading business men of the early days, and he was prominent in the ranks of the Exempt Firemen in later years. A devout member of the German Methodist Church, he taught a Bible class there for many years. He was a great student of the Bible, having read it through many times, and could quote any familiar passage. His aid was always freely given to any of the church's benefactions. He joined the Odd Fellows Lodge in 1861, becoming a member of all its branches, and at the time of his death was one of its two oldest living members. A gold medal was presented to him by his fellow members in celebration of the fifty-fifth anniversary of his membership in that order. He was a Past Noble Grand of Stockton Lodge No. 11, and for many years held the office of treasurer. He was made a citizen of this country in 1855, and entered heartily into the spirit of his adopted land, never regretting the step that led him to cast in his lot on these shores. Among his other interests he was a director of the Stockton Savings & Loan Association. His passing away on January 13, 1920, depleted the fast-thinning ranks of those pioneers to whom full recognition is due for the labors they performed in the early days, making possible the comfort and progress of today.

At Stockton, in 1860, Mr. Gnekow was married to Christiana Bollinger, who was born at Wurtemberg, Germany, and came to California by way of the Isthmus in the late fifties. Her brother, Gottlieb Bollinger, was a pioneer minister, building the German Methodist Church at Marysville, and later the German Methodist Church on South Sutter Street, Stockton, where he was pastor. Mrs. Gnekow passed away March 15, 1915, the mother of eleven children, nine of whom are living: Edward L., Frank W., Chas. D., William H., C. Cordelia, Dr. Emilie L., Nettie C. (wife of Thomas Bonney), Rudolph J. K., and Mrs. Rose E. Heeb. Dr. Emilie L. Gnekow, prominent among the medical fraternity of Stockton, attended the public schools of Stockton, took a course of training at Lane Hospital, San Francisco, graduated from Northwestern University, Chicago, in 1901, and has been engaged in the successful practice of her profession ever since. She is a member of the Greek Medical Fraternity, a member and Past Grand of the Rebekahs, and a member of the Native Daughters of the Golden West and of the Women of Woodcraft, being examining physician of the latter two, and belongs to the San Joaquin Medical Society.

P. H. STITT.—There is ample opportunity in a city with such great possibilities as has Stockton for the exercise of the energies of those engaged in the real estate and insurance business, and among the most enterprising and successful men in those lines is P. H. Stitt, who was born in Brockville, Province of Ontario, Canada, on January 12, 1869, being the youngest son of James H. Stitt and Louise Nettleton. Mr. Stitt's father was born in Spencerville, Ontario, Canada, his mother, Louise Nettleton, being a daughter of Philemon Nettleton, a Pennsylvania Dutch descendant of the Pilgrim Fathers, who landed in America in 1620. The subject of this sketch was named after his grandfather, his full name being Philemon Herbert Stitt. Eight children were born to James H. Stitt and Louise, his wife, P. H. Stitt and one sister being all that remain alive. Mr. Stitt's grandfather, Philemon Nettleton, left New York in 1849, on a sailing vessel for California, but died of ship fever, and was buried at sea, when abreast Cape Horn. Mr. Stitt's father was killed in a railway accident in 1870, his mother, left with eight children, the youngest being the man about whom this article is being written. Two of the children died later, but the brave little mother, whose memory her son reveres because of her many splendid qualities, struggled on and reared her family as only a truly Christian mother could. She was highly educated, gentle in disposition and of unusual charm. All who knew her testified as to her being generally loved, it being a common expression among her acquaintances, that she was never known to show anger under any circumstances. She was a Wesleyan Methodist, and God finally called her to Him in 1882, when P. H. Stitt was about seventeen years of age.

At the age of eighteen years, P. H. Stitt was employed by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company and served as agent for this company for over eighteen years. In 1901, he was transferred to Victoria, British Columbia, as superintendent of the company; and in 1902, was sent to Stockton to represent that company as district agent where he succeeded in developing a fine business for the company. In 1907 he quit the life insurance business and formed a partnership with Sidney N. Hodgkins, under the firm name of Hodgkins & Stitt and embarked in the real estate and general insurance business; this partnership was dissolved in 1914 and Mr. Stitt opened up an office and has succeeded in building up a large business for himself. He has popularized the idea of owning one's home by the slogan, "Build your own home." In 1918, he took over the Tuxedo Park properties, a subdivision consisting of 400 acres in the fashionable residence section of the northwest part of Stockton; this district was recently annexed to Stockton, which has added over a million and a quarter dollars to the valuation of Stockton and $30,000 annually in taxes; before this property was placed on the market, all improvements, such as sewers, sidewalks, gas and electric service, were made. Mr. Stitt has made a wonderful record in the building of this portion of Stockton; the first year sixty homes were erected representing one-half million dollars; this record has been kept up and forty acres only is left of this fine tract of land; within the past two years, 150 homes have been built. Since 1903, he has been the sole representative of the Aetna Life Insurance Company and has become known as Stockton's Aetnaizer, being one of the Aetna's leading agents in California. His insurance clientele has grown steadily and he is considered an authority on insurance matters.

By his first wife, Mr. Stitt had three children, James H. is a practicing attorney in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. During the World's War, he served overseas eighteen months in the trenches, being commissioned as lieutenant during this war; William H. is interested with his father in the real estate and insurance business; Charles M., the other son by this marriage, is also in his father's office. His second marriage united him with Miss Clarice Haas, a native of Stockton and a daughter of a California pioneer. They are the parents of three children: Philip attending Hitchcock Military Academy at San Rafael, Cal.; Natalie Clarice, and Burton, a baby boy of two years of age.

Mr. Stitt was the first president of the recently organized Lions Club of Stockton, and is a member of the Yosemite and Country Clubs. He also holds a position on the Board of Directors of Stockton Chamber of Commerce. Although one of Stockton's busiest men, he has given unstintingly of his time to community activities. During the World War, he served on all the campaign committees, including Red Cross, Salvation Army, Y. M. C. A. and Liberty Loan. He was also one of the valuable four-minute speakers. He was a member of the board of directors of the Stockton Y. M. C. A. for over ten years, serving as president of this board during the year 1919. He is a member of all the Masonic bodies in Stockton, as well as of the Oakland Consistory and Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. of Oakland. He is known among his friends as the man who has a "voice with a smile that wins." He believes in spreading happiness wherever he goes, and those who know him agree that he is succeeding at the job. Honorable in his dealings, industrious in disposition, his influence is ever used unsparingly in promoting the welfare of Stockton, and his many friends esteem him for his public zeal and his many excellent qualities.

DERVIN K. WOODS.—Among the enterprising ranchers of San Joaquin County is Dervin K. Woods, whose fields and vineyards are indicative of careful supervision and progressive methods and he is numbered among the leading agriculturists and fruit raisers of San Joaquin County. He was born in Creston, Iowa, July 27, 1875, a son of Harvey B. and Elizabeth (Knox) Woods, both natives of Pennsylvania. Harvey B. Woods first came to California in 1852 from his native state and stopped at Marysville; returning East he enlisted in the Civil War and finally in 1884, returned to California and settled at Fresno, where he engaged in buying and selling stock. Dervin K. is the youngest in a family of four children. Elmer E. Woods resides at Salem, Ore., Frank P. is at Lodi, Ella became Mrs. Johnson and both she and her husband died in 1923. The mother passed away at the birth of our subject and the father lived to be eighty-four years old, dying in 1914.

Dervin K. Woods received his education in the grammar schools of Fresno and at the age of eighteen years he began to earn his own way in the world. He learned the printing trade and worked on the Fresno Expositor for five years, then went to Bakersfield where he worked for three years on the Bakersfield Standard. He then spent a year in the East in various localities and returning to California in 1899, settled in the Lodi district, San Joaquin County.

On October 24, 1900, on the Fowler ranch six miles southwest of Lodi, Mr. Woods was married to Miss Addie Fowler, a daughter of Joseph Miner and Eliza B. (Brumley) Fowler, whose sketch will be found on another page in this history. Mrs. Woods received her education at the Lafayette district school of San Joaquin County. Mrs. Woods received 160 acres from her father's estate, twenty-two acres of which was sold and the remaining 138 is devoted to vineyard and grain raising. There was a fine old vineyard on the place, but Mr. Woods grubbed it out many years ago, and has since set forty-six acres to vineyard, which is now a fine bearing one. He has installed one eight, one six and one five-inch pump run by two electric motors, and a twelve horse-power engine. Mr. and Mrs. Woods had five daughters, Ella M., Celia A.; Winifred, Niletta, died aged five and Addie June. Both our subject and his wife had a wide acquaintance in the locality in which they make their home, and enjoy the warm regard and friendship of those with whom they associate.

EUGENE DOUGLAS GRAHAM.—One of the most popular officials of San Joaquin County who holds a most enviable and honorable record, is Eugene Douglas Graham, who was born on his father's ranch just north of the metropolis of San Joaquin County, January 22, 1866, a son of Robert L. and Caroline R. (Stokes) Graham, natives of Logan County, Ky., who lived to see their son so greatly honored by his fellow-citizens. The Graham family is of Scotch-Irish lineage, the ancestors being early settlers of Virginia, members of the family serving in the Revolutionary War. Grandfather Graham removed from Virginia, making his way over the mountains to Logan County, Ky., in 1808, where he reared his family. The Stokes family are traced back to Germany. Great-grandfather Stokes was born in Stuttgart, Wurtemberg, Germany, and came to Richmond, Va., when a very young man. Here he entered the Continental Army, serving under Washington as a fifer in the Revolutionary War, being wounded in battle, and he carried the bullet until his death; he left a widow and three children, among them Grandfather Stephen Stokes, who migrated to Logan County, Ky., and there he married and was a pioneer in the development of the Blue Grass State.

Robert L. Graham left his native state with his family for California, crossing the plains in 1852 in an emigrant train of wagons drawn by oxen commanded by Captain Wood, men driving their loose cattle and stock with them. As one of the pioneers Robert Graham preferred farming to mining and located on a ranch near Lodi, where he followed agriculture all his life. The mother passed away on the home place September 15, 1915, and then the father lived with our subject but did not long survive his life companion, for he passed away November 17, of the same year.

This worthy couple had four children: Eugene D., the subject of this review; Robert L., a successful druggist in Lodi, died suddenly of heart failure while on a trip in the Yosemite Valley, June 2, 1922; Surrelda, Mrs. S. H. Hale of Amador County; Della B., the wife of Otto Seegers, died in Stockton in 1908. Eugene D. grew up on his father's farm and from a boy assisted in the work on the ranch learning to drive the big teams in the vast grain fields of that day. However, his education was not neglected for he attended the public school in Lodi and after completing the course he supplemented it with a course at the old Stockton Business College, now "Heald's," where he was duly graduated in 1885.

As early as the age of thirteen he started to make his own living, his first employment being assistant postmaster at Lodi, a very responsible task for a youth of his age, but he early showed that thoroughness to make the details of anything he undertook and soon developed into a painstaking and efficient assistant, so much so that he was continued in the position until he was twenty with the exception of the time he finished school and also the time required for his business course. In 1886 he again took up farming, first on his father's ranch and then grain farming on his own account, and for the purpose leased a ranch north of Stockton.

Soon after this he chose his life companion, the marriage ceremony being performed at Modesto September 5, 1888, uniting him with Miss Frances E. Mann, who was born in Iowa, a daughter of D. L. and Elizabeth J. (Sutherland) Mann, also natives of the Hawkeye State. Her father served in the Civil War and afterwards was a locomotive engineer. Bringing his family to California in 1869, when the daughter Frances was a babe in arms, Mr. Mann engaged in farming near Dixon, Solano County, for some years and then came to Modesto, Stanislaus County, where he farmed until he retired and moved to Stockton, and there he and his wife died in January, 1919, their deaths occurring two weeks apart.

After his marriage Eugene Graham continued farming until January, 1895, when he was appointed deputy county clerk under Otto Grunsky, serving for five years, when he resigned to again engage in grain farming on a ranch near Lodi. In 1902 he was nominated on the Republican ticket as a candidate for county clerk and was elected in the fall of that year by a majority of 1,000 out of 8,000 votes cast, taking the oath of office in January, 1903. He has since then served uninterrupted, being re-elected every four years without opposition, an unprecedented record in the state of California and undoubtedly the longest continuous service in the state as county clerk. When he took office in 1903 the office was conducted in one room with the aid of four deputies. The gradual increase of the business of the office now requires four rooms and ten deputies, and the county's registration increased from 8,000 to over 30,000. However, it has been Mr. Graham's policy to always keep the expenses of the office down to a minimum in the matter of assistants as well as in the securing of supplies. He has been a close student of the election laws and his many years' experience makes him an authority on ballots and balloting, his advice being frequently sought by professional as well as laymen. Mr. Graham's watchword is economy and efficiency, and taxpayers are unanimous in their praise of the conduct of the office and of the universal courtesy accorded all who have business in his department. During the World War Mr. Graham served as secretary of the county exemption board and for a time was a member of the County Council of Defense. He has always manifested a keen interest in farming, and owns a forty-acre ranch near Lodi which he is planning to develop to orchard and vineyard.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene D. Graham have been blessed with three sons: R. Ellsworth is deputy county clerk of Department No. 2, San Joaquin County; Lloyd L. is engaged in the grocery business in his home city, and Dr. E. Myrle Graham, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of San Francisco, is practicing his profession in Stockton. He was in the medical division of the U. S. Navy, serving overseas on the Hospital Ship "Mercy." Mr. Graham is prominent in fraternal circles, being a member of Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F., Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., the Woodmen of the World and the Loyal Order of Moose. He is deeply zealous for the future greatness of his county and never allows an opportunity to pass to boost for and extol the great natural resources of this wonderfully rich and productive region, and he is ever ready to give of his time and means to aid in movements that have for their aim its development.

EDWARD C. WAGNER.—Thoroughness, industry and trained business judgment may be said to be distinguishing characteristics of Edward C. Wagner, president of the Wagner Leather Company. He was born in Stockton, November 24, 1869, the son of the late Charles Wagner. The success attending his career has not been due to any whim of fortune, but to years of painstaking work and consistent application. Although he is always a busy man, he is never too busy to recall with a smile the school days of a generation ago, with the pranks of now prominent citizens who were his chums.

Mr. Wagner's father was a very practical man. When Edward had completed his ordinary school course, he was sent to the old business college at the corner of Hunter Street and Miner Avenue. Then came his practical education as a tanner. Although his father held out to him the possibility that he might be one day the head of the great business which the Wagners had founded, he was put against the heaviest part of the work and passed through all the departments. He worked with the tan bark, in the engine room, and at pipe and carpenter work, and finally passed on to the more technical parts of the tanner's trade. Young Wagner was fortunate in that he was placed among elderly men, who, appreciating his desire to learn, were helpful to him and imparted all the knowledge at their disposal. It did not matter what the task might be or how long the hours of labor, the young man stuck to it and never passed from one department to another until his knowledge was complete. Another faculty stood him well in hand. He recognized that business is progressive and that the man who would succeed must keep abreast of the times and adjust his methods to its demands. Accordingly, Mr. Wagner has always been alert to adopt every proven improvement. As a result, the Wagner Leather Company's plant has been kept modern in every respect, and the business methods have been kept up-to-date.

Mr. Wagner was married in 1900 to Miss Nellie Hellwig, and they are the parents of two children, Edward H. and Charles C. The Wagners come from a long line of tanners, and it is noteworthy that when Mr. Wagner married, his bride was the daughter of a prominent tanner of San Francisco. Although a busy man always, Mr. Wagner finds time for a delightful home life and for outside associations that keep him in touch with the social activities of the day. He is a member of the San Francisco Commercial Club and the Olympic Club of San Francisco, of the Yosemite Club, of the Eugene D. Graham.

Stockton Country and Golf Club, and of the Native Sons of the Golden West, at Stockton. In politics he is a Republican.

Mr. Wagner has traveled extensively on both business and pleasure, and is personally familiar with conditions in all business centers. He has specialized to a large extent in the export business, and it is known that this department of his company is handled in keeping with the best rules known to commerce. In his personal relations he is a man of agreeable personality, considerate and helpful toward others. This has found practical expression in his relation with his men. In the business of which he is the head will be found men who have never had another employer, being devoted to their work and the success of the great tannery.

As a Stocktonian Mr. Wagner is always in line with the best constructive thought. While conservative in his attitude, he stands always for progress along proven lines. His first business is always to attend to his own large responsibilities, but he finds time to give public matters the attention and thought that qualify him as a wise adviser and capable leader. When looking for Mr. Wagner, look for a man who has the gait and action and vigor of a man in his prime. He has arrived at great success while the years of young manhood are still with him.

JOHN NICHOLAS TONE.—A wide-awake, progressive rancher, whose commendable enterprise has steadily brought him handsome returns, is John Nicholas Tone, who has a very trim farm of 335 acres, 11½ miles out of Stockton, on what is popularly known as the Jack Tone Road. He was born on the old, historic Jack Tone ranch, on April 24, 1866, the son of John Henley and Alice M. (Walsh) Tone, a worthy couple also represented in the biographical memoirs in this volume. Our subject first attended school in the Moore school district, and by his fifteenth year had finished with the fifth reader. He then stayed at home for a year, and then took a course of five months at the Sacramento Institute, following that up, for a short time, with studies at the Santa Clara College, and topping off his preparation for life's struggle with a course in the Stockton Business College in 1883-1884.

John Nicholas Tone has always remained on the old John Tone ranch, and now owns the handsome tract of 335 acres of what was long his father's famous acreage. As far back as 1873, the large two-story brick residence was substantially constructed, and ever since then has been the hospitable Tone home. Besides being a member of the San Joaquin County Pioneer organization (since the sons of the pioneers were admitted to the order), he was one of the organizers of the Tokay Colony district school, and is now clerk of the school board. He is a Republican in matters of national political import, but non-partisan in all movements making for local advancement and improvement.

At Stockton, on February 3, 1904, Mr. Tone was married to Miss Grace G. Talbot, who was born near Linden, the daughter of Patrick and Margaret Talbot. Her father came to California a genuine Argonaut, in the glorious year of '49, sailing with thousands of others around the Horn, and Margaret came to California in 1852, by way of the Isthmus Route. Mr. Talbot first mined in the romantic Mariposa district, and then, finding the appeal of the soil-tiller greater than that of the digger of possible gold, he settled on a farm at Linden. Ten children were in time born to them; Margaret, now deceased; May C., John A., Elizabeth, Clara Augusta, Fannie, deceased, Thomas, deceased, Grace C., William, deceased; one child died in infancy. Mrs. Tone attended the Linden schools, and has many happy recollections of her school days. Six children have been granted her and her husband. Margaret and Alice are attending the Dominican College at San Rafael; and the others are John H., Mary Genevieve, Richard N., and Theodore T. Tone. The family are devout Catholics, and Mr. Tone is a member of the Knights of Columbus. He also belongs to the Elks at Stockton, and no one is more welcome in that circle.

MRS. ALICE M. TONE.—A pioneer of California and of San Joaquin County, Mrs. Alice M. Tone, residing at 135 East North Street, Stockton, is rounding out her life amidst the scenes of her girlhood, surrounded by those she loves. She is a true representative of the sturdy womanhood that braved the perils of the long and tedious journey to California in the early days. She came from her New York home to California by way of Nicaragua in 1853, when she accompanied her mother and brothers to join husband and father in the Golden State. Her father, Nicholas Walsh, was a Forty-niner. He was born in Dublin, Ireland, where he was married to Elizabeth Brannan and where their two oldest children, Alice M. and Thomas Walsh, were born. The latter is well and favorably known throughout this county. With his family, Nicholas Walsh set sail for America in 1842, landing in New York and living there until 1849. Two boys were born in that state: Henry W., now living on the Jack Tone road near Stockton, and Charles, deceased.

In February, 1849, Mr. Walsh and a party of men from his vicinity in New York left there under the guidance of Mr. Audubon, the naturalist, for the long trip to California. They had only pack animals and saddle horses and chose the Southern route as being the best at that time of year, and after eleven months the party arrived in the gold fields of the state. Mr. Walsh spent about a year in the mining districts, meeting with indifferent success, which possibly decided him that ranching was a surer way to independence than hunting for the shining metal. In 1851 he came down into San Joaquin County and bought out a squatter's right to 160 acres of land on the Waterloo road and here began stockraising and some general farming. As usual with the pioneer, he suffered many discouragements; but he stuck to his work and began making a name and place for himself in his community. He sent back to New York for his family, who joined him in 1853, arriving on April 22. With his neighbor, Mr. Kenyon, Mr. Walsh built the first schoolhouse in that part of the county on land owned by G. Moore. The school is known today as the Moore School. Mr. Walsh, Mr. Kenyon and Jacob Peters were the first trustees. When the new building was erected it was built on land donated by Mr. Walsh. In 1862, the year of the flood in this county, the people of the section about the Walsh ranch ran out of supplies. They built a boat, and starting from Walsh's house rowed direct to Stockton to the stores for their supplies, and out into the open and back to the ranches. It was the custom to lay in enough supplies in the fall to last all winter, for the roads were impassable during the winter months.

The dry year followed in 1864; then the ranchers had to go to the tule lands to cut hay for their stock, and it was during the travel back and forth that Mr. Walsh lost his life, falling from the boat and being drowned on September 6, 1864. Mrs. Walsh lived to reach the good old age of eighty-eight, dying November 22, 1892.

Alice M. Walsh was born in Dublin, Ireland, in September, 1838, and when four years old was brought to America by her parents, who located on Manhattan Island, New York State, and there she was reared and educated. In 1853, she accompanied her mother and three brothers to California. She well remembers the day they left New York for Brooklyn to spend a couple of days with an aunt before leaving the East. It was March 17, and the St. Patrick's Day parade halted their little party several times in passing. They left Brooklyn the 19th, and arriving at Nicaragua crossed to the Pacific side, and from there came on to San Francisco. She was then in her sixteenth year and the events of the long journey are stamped indelibly on her mind. The arrival of the family on the ranch in San Joaquin County was an event. It was known that Mr. Walsh expected his family, and in that family was a young lady; and young ladies being very few in number here, the whole population turned out to greet them as they made their way to the ranch home.

In February, 1855, Miss Walsh was united in marriage with John H. Tone, born in New York in March, 1826, and reared in the locality where the Walsh family had settled upon arrival in this country. He was a member of the same party of gold-seekers as was Mr. Walsh, and he mined with fairly good success for about a year, when he turned to agriculture and bought government land in San Joaquin County, in 1850. He had three partners, each buying 160 acres; but Mr. Tone finally bought out two of his friends and became the owner of 480 acres, all of which is still in the possession of the family. He became very well-known and did his part to help build up San Joaquin County, and by his death, on June 12, 1902, the county lost a progressive citizen and the family a devoted husband and father. Mr. Tone was a member of the Stockton Society of California Pioneers, and was a man whose word was as good as his bond.

The marriage of John H. Tone with Miss Alice M. Walsh resulted in the birth of the following children: Mary Elizabeth, widow of John T. Doyle, is the mother of two daughters, Alice T., and Gertrude, of Stockton; Margaret F. married Samuel Storer, and they have two sons, Walter T., who was purser on the boats running from San Pedro to Catalina until the World War, and then was on the "President," taken over by the government and put in service between San Francisco and Honolulu, carrying troops and supplies; and Theodore J., who saw service in France with the anti-aircraft department. John N. Tone lives on the old home place, and has six children: Margaret, Alice, John H., Mary, Richard N., and Theodore T. Catherine married Frank B. Cluff of Berkeley, and has one daughter, Elizabeth, now the wife of Homer Gordon. Ella is the wife of Robert Benjamin, and resides on part of the Tone ranch; she has three children: Robert, Elecia and Theodosia. Anna is the wife of Harvey J. Condit, of Stanislaus County, and the mother of three daughters: Jane, Helen and Patricia. One daughter, Alice, died in 1920; and another daughter, Laura, died at the age of five years. To such women as Mrs. Tone the country owes a debt of gratitude; for they have done their part to raise the standard of society, to make their children useful, and also to inculcate patriotism in the generations to come.

GEORGE HOLDSWORTH.—A highly-esteemed pioneer whom posterity will always delight to honor, and whom Californians, ever mindful of what they owe to those who "made straight the paths in early days," will certainly never forget, was the late George Holdsworth, who breathed his last in Stockton on December 6, 1921, having attained to his eightieth year. He was born in Halifax, England, on September 7, 1842, and came of good old English stock, than which none better ever helped to found and develop a New World. His father, also named George Holdsworth, was a genuine '49er who reached California in the thrilling Argonaut days, but early settled in Stockton where he engaged in teaming—one of those occupations at that time essential to the welfare of almost everybody, and to no one more than to the gold-digger himself. He furnished sand for building operations, first transporting the same from the islands in a scow, and hauled the first load of sand used in the construction of the first building of the State Hospital on North California Street.

Our subject was seven years of age when the family settled at Kenosha, Wis., where he grew up and attended the public schools, and learned the trade of carriage painter in Ed. Bane's carriage shop. He arrived in Stockton on November 13, 1859, and soon after went to work for William Miller, the well-known carriage manufacturer and a carriage painter. He was employed at his trade for thirty years at the Miller factory at the southwest corner of Channel and California streets, where the Sequoia apartments now stand; and he enjoyed the friendship and entire confidence of his employer throughout the long years of their association together. For a short time, about a year, he was in business for himself, in a shop in the St. Charles Hotel building; and at one time he owned a ranch at Wallace, in Calaveras County. Before the advent of the railroads, also, he drove a pedler's wagon through the mountain towns, selling tinware, clothing and shoes, and the old wagon he drove stands today in the barn back of his old home, at 136 East Church Street. The old home, now standing, was built by him over fifty years ago, and it is in a fair state of preservation. He worked with his father in early days supplying sand for building materials in Stockton, and at one time was employed on the river steamer "Pert." After giving up carriage painting, he followed teaming in Stockton for a number of years, and became well known and highly esteemed by his fellow-citizens. He was a member of the old Volunteer Fire Department, and later the Exempt Firemen's Association.

At Stockton, in the year 1866, Mr. Holdsworth married Miss Mary Robertson, a native of San Francisco, where she was born in 1849, the daughter of a California pioneer who died in August, 1902. Eleven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Holdsworth, and three died in childhood. Edward, however, reached the age of forty-six; Lulu, the age of twenty-one; and James the age of twelve. The five living children are: William, the pilot of the steamer, J. D. Peters; Charles, a teaming contractor of Stockton, who started as a boy of thirteen, and joined his father in teaming, later taking over the business for himself; Thomas, who is a member of the fire department of Stockton; George, who is employed in house-moving, with Fisher Bros.; and Miss Sadie I. Holdsworth, who was married February 3, 1922, to Mr. Walter M. Zwinge and resides at 138 Church Street, the old home place. All were born in Stockton save Thomas, who first saw the light in Calaveras County. During the latter years of Mr. Holdsworth's life, he enjoyed the loving care and attention of his devoted daughter, Sadie, who kept house for him and nursed him through his illness, and who otherwise rendered the service of affection, without money and without price, because no worldly value can ever be placed upon such divine ministrations.

CHARLES WAGNER.—San Joaquin County will never forget the important part played by her far-sighted and experienced manufacturers, among the more prominent of whom was Charles Wagner, late president of the Wagner Leather Company, operating the Pacific Tannery. He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, January 23, 1837, a son of Christian and Johanna (Gunsser) Wagner. His father was a tanner, and his grandfather, John Wagner, was in charge of his great-grandfather's tannery in Balingen, Wurtemberg, to which business Christian also succeeded; so that at least five successive generations of the Wagner family have followed the tannery business. Both the father and the grandfather of the subject of this sketch lived to an advanced age, as did Grandmother Wagner also. Grandfather Christian Gunsser, a public surveyor and school teacher, was sixty-five years old at his death, but his wife reached the age of ninety-two. The mother, Johanna (Gunsser) Wagner, lived to the age of sixty-two years.

Charles Wagner attended school until he was fifteen years old, and then learned his father's business. He left Wurtemberg in the fall of 1855 for California, coming on the ship "Bavaria," from Havre, France, to New York, thence by steamer "Northern Light" to Chagres, across the Isthmus on mule back, and then by steamer to San Francisco, where he arrived January 19, 1856. Proceeding to the mines by way of Stockton, he made one month's trial at mining in Calaveras County, near what is now Copperopolis. The result being unsatisfactory, he returned to Stockton and with his brother, Jacob C. Wagner, started the Pacific Tannery on a very small scale, in which he was interested up to the time of his death.

In 1859, desiring to perfect himself in his trade, Mr. Wagner left Stockton for San Francisco and other parts of the state where tanning industries were carried on, and finally worked for eighteen months in the tanneries at Santa Cruz, where at that time the best article of leather was made. After an absence of two years he returned to his labor in the tannery here, which was established by himself and brother in 1856; continuing to manufacture, in 1865 they adopted the firm name of Wagner Bros.

In 1869 Jacob C. Wagner retired and Moses Kullman became a partner, under the title of Kullman, Wagner & Company. In 1879 Herman, a brother of Moses Kullman, was admitted into partnership, and in 1874 Jacob Salz purchased an interest. Moses Kullman, at his death, November 6, 1878, bequeathed one-half of his interest to his brother Herman, and the other half to a nephew, Charles Hart, who thus became a member of the firm. The Pacific Tannery has thus been an important industry of the city of Stockton for sixty-seven years. Pure tanned California oak scoured sole leather, in hard and pliable tannage, is a special feature of their output, great quantities of this valuable product being produced and exported to the world's markets. The company ranks today as one of the greatest of western leather manufacturing and distributing organizations, and is a prominent factor in the industrial life of Stockton. For more than half a century the company were extensive producers of harness leather, but in 1919 this feature was discontinued. The demand for the Stockton product from all parts of the civilized world is one of the big development factors of this section of California, and to properly care for the increasing sole-leather trade a general branch office and sales department are maintained in San Francisco, whence the export trade is handled.

Since the establishment of the business in 1856, the Wagner Leather Company have been growing steadily year by year, new buildings and equipment being added until it has become a notable institution in manufacturing and industrial circles of California and the West. The original tannery was inepted by the late Charles Wagner, father of Edward C. Wagner, present directing head of the company, which is capitalized for $300,000 and has a payroll of more than $100,000 a year. In 1918 a disastrous fire destroyed the main portion of the plant. Business, however, continued right along, and in a few months modern and well-equipped new buildings were erected and machinery installed, each machine equipped with an electric motor of the latest type, power being furnished by the company's own generating plant. This gives the company production facilities one-third greater than before, a big item in these days of progress, when there is such a wide demand for Wagner-made sole leather.

Mr. Wagner was married in Stockton in 1867, to Miss Philipina Simon, born in Bosenback, Bavaria, in 1846. She was a daughter of Jacob and Katrina (Rothenbush) Simon, now deceased, the mother dying in 1866 and the father in 1867, both well advanced in years. Mr. and Mrs. Wagner are the parents of two children. Edward C. is the president of the Wagner Leather Company; and Bertha W. is the wife of George E. Honsken of Stockton, who is treasurer of the corporation. Fraternally Mr. Wagner was a member of Stockton Lodge No. 11, Odd Fellows, and the last of the charter members of the Stockton Turnverein, of which he was a trustee. At various times he was president of that society. He was an advanced liberal in his views, and a progressive man in all realms of thought. He passed away on October 17, 1912, at the age of seventy-five years. He was a man of fine character, broad-minded, and with a keen desire for the community's betterment morally, commercially and educationally.

HENRY B. BUDD.—One of the esteemed and helpful citizens of Stockton is Henry B. Budd, a representative of the distinguished family of that name. His father and grandfather won distinction as prominent jurists in San Joaquin County; and an uncle, Hon. James H. Budd, was governor of California. Henry B. Budd was born in Stockton, Cal., on January 12, 1877, a son of John E. and Mary (Haste) Budd, natives of Wisconsin and California, respectively. John E. Budd was born in Janesville, Wis., in 1853, being the second son of Hon. Joseph H. and Lucinda (Ash) Budd, descendants of Eastern ancestors. John E. Budd came to California in early life and received his education here, and was graduated from the University of California in 1874. He studied law in his father's office, and in 1876 was admitted to the bar, and at one time was associated with his brother, Hon. James H. Budd, ex-governor of California, in the practice of his profession. He became well known and influential in his practice and in politics. Mr. Budd married Miss Mary Haste, of Berkeley, in 1887, a daughter of J. H. Haste, an honored pioneer of the state and for many years a public-spirited citizen of Berkeley. They were the parents of three children. Both parents are now deceased, Mrs. Budd having survived her husband until May 1, 1921.

Henry B. Budd, the only son of his parents, was educated in the Stockton grammar and high schools, and in 1898 was graduated from the University of California with the B. S. degree. After his graduation, he became associated with the chemical department of the State Mining Bureau in San Francisco, and during the two years of his connection with this department, devoted his time to the study of assaying. He then located in Sierra County and became surveyor of the mine belonging to the Croesus Mining & Milling Company, engaged in operating the Plumbago Mine, a gold mine in that county. Later he operated a gravel mine of his own. From 1901 to 1905 he was deputy United States mineral surveyor, appointed by President McKinley, his operations extending throughout Sierra and Plumas counties; he also engaged in private practice there.

Upon learning that the Delta lands of San Joaquin County were to be reclaimed, Mr. Budd removed to Stockton and engaged in land surveying on the islands. In 1906, when the Western Pacific Railroad were constructing their line through the valley, he was transitman in the survey of the road. During 1911-1912 he was city surveyor of Stockton, and he has also been engineer for a number of reclamation districts in the valley. His close study of conditions and his years of practical experience relating to the reclamation of land, have made him an authority on the subject, on which he is conceded to be one of the best-posted men in the county.

Mr. Budd has engaged in real estate operations, making a specialty of subdivisions. The following are some of the properties that he has subdivided and put on the market: Lomita Park, twenty-five acres northwest of the city; Merryvale, a subdivision of twenty acres east of Stockton; City Park Garden, a tract of twenty acres, and the Budd Addition to Manteca, consisting of five acres, now a part of the city of Manteca. As manager of the Budd estate, he has erected the Budd Apartments on East Channel Street, Stockton. Aside from his real estate business, he is the active senior member of the firm of Budd & Widdens, civil engineers, and surveyors, of Stockton, Cal., which firm is favorably known throughout Central California. The consensus of opinion is, they have the largest practice in their profession among the landowners of the fertile section embraced in the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys. Mr. Budd's partner, Mr. Charles H. Widdens, is the grandson of John Herd, one of the pioneers of the reclamation of the famous San Joaquin Delta.

The marriage of Mr. Budd united him with Miss Marion R. Browne, of Berkeley, Cal. Fraternally Mr. Budd is a member of Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W. He is secretary and treasurer of the San Joaquin County Society of Civil Engineers.

AUGUST DANGERS.—One of the earliest pioneers of Roberts Island who gave of his energy and resourcefulness to the reclaiming and developing of the Island from tule and swamp land until it has become one of the most fertile sections in the state, is the late August Dangers, a man who was highly respected and much loved. He was born in Mandelsbach, Hanover, Germany, September 11, 1833, where he grew to manhood and received a good education in the excellent schools of that country.

When eighteen years of age, in 1851, he made his way to Fredericksburg, Gillespie County, Texas, and in 1854 he was joined by his parents and brothers and sisters and followed farming and cattle ranching. Wishing to obtain good farming land he concluded to investigate conditions in Central America, so in 1859 he made the trip to Panama locating in the Province of Chiriqui. He engaged in raising pineapples but found he could not dispose of them to advantage on account of the Civil War in the U. S. After about three years he determined to come on to California, arriving in Stockton in 1862. His brothers joined him in 1870 and his parents came in 1873. Mr. Dangers engaged in farming and soon afterwards located on Roberts Island where he purchased 320 acres of land and helped to build the levees from the beginning of the reclamation of that island, engaging in raising grain and horses. However, the recurrence of floods caused him heavy damages and the repeated expense of rebuilding the levee was too much and he met with heavy losses. He spent his last days in Stockton, passing away in 1905 at the age of seventy-nine years.

Mr. Dangers was a well-informed man; always a great reader he was an advanced thinker, particularly on lines pertaining to agriculture. He saw the need for irrigation and of intensive farming for the fertile San Joaquin County lands and how they could be made to yield a big increase by irrigation and that the additional expense necessary to put water on the lands would be returned many fold. He was an advocate of the raising of sugar beets which has since been demonstrated a success in the county. He was a correspondent of the Stockton Independent and his articles were always interesting, showing much thought and reflection.

The marriage of Mr. Dangers occurred in Stockton, uniting him with Miss Ida Saloman, a daughter of Max and Mina Saloman, pioneers of San Joaquin County. Mr. Saloman has passed on but his widow is still living, making her home with her granddaughter, Miss Dangers. Mrs. August Dangers passed away soon after her marriage leaving two daughters, Erna, who died at twenty-six years, and Juanita, the youngest. Being bereaved of her mother in her first year Juanita was reared in the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Mina Saloman, in Stockton. After completing the public schools she entered the employ of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company and she is still in their employ. She is a member of the Saturday Afternoon Club.

HON. JAMES HERBERT BUDD.—The ideal life is measured not by years but by intensity, and truly "that life is long which answers life's great end." Gauged by years alone, the career of ex-Governor Budd was all too brief; but estimated by the amount he accomplished for the welfare of his fellowmen, the upbuilding of the commonwealth, and the attainment of needed reforms, his life was long, as it was also brilliant and eventful. In the annals of California his name is entitled to perpetuation. Every station that he held was distinguished by his loyal service. Of him it may be said that he promoted the prosperity and exalted the reputation of the state.

He was born at Janesville, Wis., May 18, 1851, and passed away at his residence, 1239 East Channel Street, Stockton, Cal., July 30, 1908, after a vain struggle of years against a fatal disease. With his parents he resided in California after 1858, and in Stockton after 1860, the father, Hon. Joseph H. Budd, becoming one of the successful attorneys of this city and eventually winning distinction as one of the most learned jurists of the state. Upon completing the studies of the Stockton schools, the youth was sent to the Brayton College at Oakland in 1869, after which he entered the first class of the University of California, from which institution he was graduated in 1873. Immediately he took up the study of law in his father's office at Stockton, and in 1874, at Sacramento, he was admitted to practice before the supreme court of California. Returning to Stockton, he engaged in practice with his father for a time, and also with Judge J. G. Swinnerton for a brief period. During 1873-1874 he had served as deputy district attorney under A. W. Roysden.

A nomination in 1882 for Congress at the hands of the Democratic Congressional convention seemed but to invite defeat, for the district was overwhelmingly Republican and his Republican opponent was Hon. Horace F. Page, who for years had represented this district in Congress with distinction and efficiency. Only the remarkable ability and personal magnetism of the Democratic candidate could have won in the face of such odds. His defeat was everywhere predicted, but he persevered in his campaign and in every locality won stanch friends. It was he who originated what became known as the "buckboard canvass," so called from his habit of riding over the country in a buckboard. The end of the campaign brought him and his party victory, to the surprise of those who believed the Democrats could never win in this district.

In Congress Mr. Budd was very active and influential, serving on the committees on education and invalid pensions, and also securing a large appropriation for dredging Stockton channel, and introducing and carrying through a measure in the interest of the settlers on the Moquelemos grant. To his efforts was due the passage of an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, making the Indians amenable to the state and territorial laws. Chinese matters, interstate-commerce law, fortification measures, and appropriation bills were his chief interests while in the house of Congress. Upon his return to Stockton from Washington, at the expiration of his term, he was given an ovation surpassing anything of the kind ever witnessed in the city. He was renominated without a dissenting vote, but declined a second term. Again and again he was renominated, with appeals to accept, but each time he was firm in his refusal. While he declined the honor for himself, however, he was eager to aid his party, and in 1888, by acting as chairman of the city and county central committees, he carried the county for the Democrats.

When twenty-three years of age, Mr. Budd served on the staff of Governor Irwin. As a cadet in the University of California he became connected with the National Guard, and at graduation held the rank of first lieutenant. Later he received successive promotions to the ranks of major of brigade staff, lieutenant-colonel on the governor's staff, and major of the line; and when Governor he was entitled brigadier-general. During 1889 he became a member of the board of police and fire commissioners of Stockton. For six years he was a trustee of the Stockton city library, which was made a depository for public books and documents covering an issue of ten years.

In 1894 the Democratic convention, assembled at San Francisco, nominated Mr. Budd for governor, his Republican opponent being the late Morris M. Estee, afterward appointed United States circuit judge in the Hawaiian Islands. The popularity of the Democratic candidate was shown by the fact that he was the only man on the Democratic ticket elected, and ran over 33,000 votes ahead of his ticket. Spencer G. Millard, the Republican nominee for lieutenant-governor, was elected, but died ten months after his inauguration and was succeeded under appointment by William T. Jeter, who had been the governor's running mate for the office of lieutenant-governor. The campaign of 1894 will long be remembered in California. It was almost unbelievable that Budd should defeat Estee and should be able to overcome a 20,000 Republican majority. But this is precisely what happened. The year 1894 was a year of political upheaval. Budd was elected governor and Sutro was elected mayor of San Francisco.

During the executive administration of Governor Budd, the taxes were reduced, and many reforms were brought about in the interests of economy and good government. His term was one of the most successful of any of the governors. Upon retiring from office he practiced law in San Francisco, and it is said that the returns of his large and important practice enabled him to accumulate a fortune in a comparatively short period. The failure of his health, however, caused him to retire from professional labors, and during 1907 he traveled extensively in Europe, hoping to be benefited by the change, but only temporary relief was secured. In the spring of 1908 he returned from abroad and, feeling restored in part to his former health, announced his intention of residing in Stockton and maintaining his principal offices in that city, with a branch office in San Francisco. The illness of his brother, John E. Budd, caused him to plan an automobile trip to Lake Tahoe, and the brothers spent several weeks at mountain health resorts; but meanwhile the ex-Governor contracted a cold that brought on a recurrence of rheumatic and kidney troubles. Treatment under a specialist in a San Francisco hospital proved of no avail, and he was brought to his Stockton residence, where the end came.

Mrs. James H. Budd was formerly Miss Inez A. Merrill, born near Hartford, Conn., on August 2, 1851; in 1856 she was brought to California by her parents, Marcus H. and Celinda A. (Clough) Merrill, natives respectively of Connecticut and Massachusetts. The marriage of Mr. Budd and Miss Merrill was solemnized in Stockton, October 29, 1873, and was the consumation of a romance begun when they attended the same school in Stockton. In every respect Mrs. Budd was fitted to be the wife of a man of genius and brilliant mind.

One of the most brilliant men ever in California was lost to the state in the death of Mr. Budd. Nature had liberally endowed him, and to this endowment he had added by industrious application. Supplementing a brilliant mind, were great generosity of disposition, earnest philanthropy, a sincere love of children, an unflinching courtesy toward the aged, and the utmost consideration for others. Wherever the need might arise, there was the helpful hand, there was the kindly act. Many remember him less as the influential governor or the brilliant Congressman than as "Jim" Budd, the devoted friend. His genial disposition won to him even those of different political opinions, and he never permitted differences of opinion to interfere with his friendships. It was said of him that he would travel a thousand miles to do a friend a favor, and none of his friends were dearer to him than the comrades of his early days in Stockton, the men who then admired and now remember with affection the generous, witty, genial "Jim" Budd, a friend unchanged toward them by manifold successes of a brilliant career.

HON. JOSEPH H. BUDD.—Associated for almost forty-five years with the activities of San Joaquin County and the improvement and development of the city of Stockton, Joseph H. Budd became one of the most prominent and progressive citizens of that section. He was an eye-witness to the remarkable growth and prosperity of the city and county, for this had been his home from the year 1858 until his death, February 21, 1902.

A native of the East, Joseph H. Budd was born in Dutchess County, N. Y., January 13, 1822, the son of James and Ellen Budd, also natives of the Empire State and descendants of families who had flourished for many generations in that commonwealth. Joseph H. Budd's boyhood days, like those of other farmers' sons of his acquaintance, were spent working on his father's farm and attending school during the short term it was in session. However, as he had no special inclination toward following farming as a life-work, but on the other hand had a leaning toward professional life and became interested in the study of law when he was little more than a boy. With the idea of preparing himself for the profession of the law, he supplemented his early school training by a course in Williams College, graduating from that institution in 1843, at the age of twenty-one years. With this foundation as a basis, he gave his attention thereafter to the study of law, taking his legal training in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., where he was duly admitted to the bar. In 1847 he located in Wisconsin, and during the ten years he was identified with the state attained high rank in legal circles. Locating in Janesville, he opened an office for the practice of his profession, at first carrying on his practice alone, but later being associated with Lorenzo Sawyer, ex-judge of the United States circuit court, and also with John R. Bennett, of the district court of Wisconsin, both deceased. After a record of his successful practice in Wisconsin, Mr. Budd came to California in 1858, locating first in Woodbridge; but after remaining there a year, he came to Stockton, and in this city, he made his home until his death. Soon after establishing his practice here he became associated with W. L. Dudley in the practice of law under the name of Dudley & Budd; and as both were men of brilliant legal attainments and keen discrimination, they built up a large practice and had as clients some of the most influential business men of the city. Politically, Mr. Budd was a staunch Democrat, a fact which, coupled with his unique fitness for the position, led to his appointment as successor to Judge Baldwin; and later he was twice elected to the office of superior judge of San Joaquin County. He also served two terms as city attorney of Stockton. At the time of his death he had served on the bench fifteen years, during which time he had gained the reputation of being one of the best jurists in the state; and it is a well-known fact that his decisions were seldom reversed. Many of the most prominent legal cases handled in the county were brought to him for settlement, among them being the well-known Moquelemos grant litigation.

While a resident of Janesville, Wis., Joseph H. Budd was united in marriage, June 4, 1849, to Lucinda M. Ash, who like himself was a native of New York State. Two children were born to them, James H. Budd, the late ex-Governor of California, and John E. Budd, a resident of Stockton many years, but now deceased. His wife brought with them from the East much of culture and refinement, and those early days they were leaders in the social life of Stockton. Personally, Mr. Budd was beloved by all with whom he came in contact. With his wife, he was a member of the Baptist Church. His life was a success; and while succeeding in a financial way, he never neglected his duties as a citizen, and much of the city's advancement can be traced to his foresight and substantial encouragement.

CARL DANGERS.—Over fifty years have passed since Carl Dangers came to California to cast his lot with the pioneers. He was born in Hanover, Germany, on September 11, 1840, a son of William and Rebecca (Engelhausen) Dangers, also natives of Germany, both parents now deceased. Mr. Dangers is descended from an old Huguenot family in France, the name being D'Angers. Members of the family were obliged to flee from France at the time of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, and after settling in Germany the name became Dangers. The father brought his family on a sailing vessel, the trip taking forty-nine days, and they landed in Galveston, Texas, in the fall of 1854. The father bought a section of land in Gillespie County, Texas, and engaged in cattle raising; then removed to Mason County. At the time of his settling in Texas the country was wild and desolate, with buffaloes and Indians roving the country, but he remained there until 1873 when he sold out and came to California to join his sons, who had previously migrated to California. There were three sons and one daughter in his family, as follows: August, deceased, Carl, George, deceased, and Mrs. Mina Salmon. August Dangers came from Central America to California in the '60s. He settled on Roberts Island where he bought land and farmed to grain and also raised chickory. He was married and passed away in 1907, leaving a daughter, Juanita.

Carl Dangers' education was obtained in excellent schools in Hanover, and having been a student and reader coupled with his years of experience have given him knowledge and wide range of information. During his residence in Texas he helped his father in the cattle business and during the Civil War drove herds of cattle into Old Mexico where he sold them; later he drove cattle to New Mexico and Colorado where he experienced many hardships and privations, encountering herds of buffaloes and Indians. Selling their cattle in Pueblo, in November of 1870 he and his brother George came to California on an emigrant train from Denver and joined their brother August in San Joaquin County and remained with him for two years; then he and his brother George bought 308 acres of the Meyer ranch near French Camp where they raised barley and chickory. George Dangers died in 1908. In 1909 Carl Dangers sold his ranch and moved to Stockton where he invested in real estate. He is now living retired from active life with his sister, Mrs. Mina Saloman, at 405 East Church Street; his niece, Miss Juanita Dangers, also resides there. He attends the German Lutheran Church. Mr. Dangers' early experiences at ranching were not all ease and comfort, but attended with hard work as well as disappointments. He has been through five floods, each covering the ranch, saved stock by driving to higher places, and living in the second story, coming and going in a boat. His interest in everything pertaining to the welfare and progress of the state is deep and sincere, and in as far as he has found it possible has co-operated in public measures for the general good.

EDGAR WOODRUFF.—For thirty years actively identified with the development of Stockton as one of the city's best known building contractors, Edward Woodruff is now enjoying life in caring for his ten-acre fruit ranch at Linden. Mr. Woodruff was born at Fairbault, Minn., July 16, 1858, and after finishing his schooling there he learned the carpenter's trade. He was only eighteen when he made his first venture as a building contractor, and since that time, until about a year ago, he has followed this work with great success. For ten years he operated in Lyon County, Minn., building residences, flour mills and elevators, and in the fall of 1890, he came to California, settling first at Oakdale, where he remained for eight months, arriving in Stockton in 1891, and this has since been his home.

Among the buildings Mr. Woodruff has erected in Stockton may be mentioned the following: the Stockton Record building, the Wheat and Starch factory, which later burned, the Baldwin Block, the Terry Building, superintended the construction of the Odd Fellows Building and the Stockton Hotel, built the German Methodist Church, the Odd Fellows Building at Tracy, the residences of Joe Peters on Cherokee Lane, Colonel Ketchum at Linden, and Francis Hodgkins, at Lathrop, and many of the fine homes of Stockton. He was a pioneer in the Sperry addition, as he bought the first lot and erected the first house there. It was still a grain field, having just been put on the market, and no streets had been put through. Mr. Woodruff built a wooden sidewalk from his residence to North Street and this was the first entrance to the tract. He bought a number of lots there, built and sold the houses and erected many homes for others. He still owns two apartment houses and two residences there.

Mr. Woodruff was married to Miss Carrie B. Reed, a native of Rice County, that state, born August 7, 1864, and they have one daughter, Dorothy C., the wife of F. R. Shutes of the contracting firm of Shutes & Zinck. She is the mother of two children, Stanford Woodruff and Janet Ray. Since his retirement from the building business in 1921, Mr. Woodruff has devoted his time to the development of his acre ranch at Linden, which he has owned for the past eight years, and through his care it has become a valuable property. It is planted to prunes and walnuts and ten tons of prunes were taken off of it in 1922. Mr. Woodruff is prominent in Odd Fellow circles, being a member of Truth Lodge.

GEORGE WOLF.—An early settler of Stockton who is a veteran of the Franco-Prussian War, is George Wolf, a successful groceryman, located at 147 North Aurora Street, Stockton. He inherited many of the sterling qualities of his forebears, and these, combined with his own initiative and determination, have brought him large degree of success. A native of Germany, he was born in Bavaria on November 22, 1848. He learned the trade of baker in his native land and was occupied in that line of work when the Franco-Prussian War broke out in 1870; he was recruited for the cavalry, but on account of his being a baker was attached to the bakery department; he was at the siege of Paris and baked bread in field ovens, under fire, and had many narrow escapes from being shot; however, he went through the entire campaign and accomplished his task under great difficulties. In 1876 he arrived in San Francisco and worked in a bakery, receiving $15 per month for the first three months, working from sixteen to eighteen hours per day; two years later he settled in Stockton and was employed by Jacob Miller in the City Bakery; later he was head baker for the State Bakery conducted by John Inglis. He then entered business for himself at the corner of Weber Avenue and Sutter Street on the site of the present Elks' building; after fourteen years in that location he sold out and bought the two-story brick block at the corner of Aurora and Channel streets, his present location, where he has been since 1903; here he conducts a grocery store and has built up a fine trade. In 1901 Mr. Wolf purchased a piece of property at 828 East Miner Avenue where he built a home; later he moved the house back on the lot and erected a modern residence; this property he now leases.

Mr. Wolf's marriage at Stockton, May 14, 1901, united him with Miss Annie Tecklenburg, a native of San Francisco, Cal., a daughter of the well-known pioneer of San Joaquin County, Heiman Tecklenburg, who came to California in 1866. Her father is a native of Schleswig-Holstein, Germany, and sailed around the Horn to California in pioneer days and has been occupied with farming pursuits for many years in the San Joaquin County. His wife, Margaretta Jurgens, also came to California around Cape Horn, making the long journey in 1867. The parents are still living and in 1920 celebrated their golden wedding. Of the seven children Mrs. Wolf is the oldest. She is possessed of much business ability and is of the greatest assistance to her husband in conducting his mercantile establishment and Mr. Wolf accords her no small degree of credit for his success. Fraternally Mr. Wolf belongs to the German Order of Druids, in which he is past arch and trustee; he is also a member of the Sons of Herman, in which he is a trustee. He is also a member of the American Order of Foresters and the Fidelity Society, while Mrs. Wolf is a member of Ivy Circle of Druids, in which she is past arch druid. They are both members of the German Methodist Church and contribute generously to it.

JOSEPH TRIMBLE REES.—Among the enterprising boosters and builders up of Stockton must be mentioned Mr. and Mrs. Joseph T. Rees, who own valuable property and greatly enjoy the climate and advantages of the great San Joaquin Valley in whose future they have great faith. Mr. Rees is a native of the Buckeye State, born near Zanesville, March 23, 1847, a son of Jacob and Nancy (Goshen) Rees, farmers in Ohio until 1856, when they removed to Illinois, locating near Bloomington, where the father died and the mother spent her remaining days in Stanford, Ill.

Of their nine children, Joseph T. is the oldest child. He had a brother Amos who served in the 29th Illinois Volunteer Infantry in the Civil War from 1861 and afterwards was in the 33rd Illinois Volunteer Infantry until he was killed at Petersburg, Va., in 1864. Joseph T. was reared on the Illinois farm, receiving his education in the district schools. When seventeen years old in the spring of 1864 he volunteered in Company H, 145th Illinois Volunteer Infantry, being mustered in at Camp Butler, Ill., and was sent into Missouri, where he served until he was mustered out in the fall of 1864.

On February 6, 1870, Mr. Rees was married at Bloomington, Ill., being united with Mrs. Christiana Loretta (Price) Mahaffey, who was born in Huron County, Ohio, and came to Illinois with her parents when she was a child of five years of age. They settled on a farm twelve miles west of Bloomington where she grew to womanhood, attending local school held in a pioneer log school house with puncheon floors and slab benches. Her father, Horatio B. C. Price, was a New Yorker, who had married Ruanny Goodrich, a native of the same state, of Welsh and German descent. Mrs. Rees also traces her lineage back to Benjamin Franklin. The Price family moved to Pennsylvania and later to Ohio. In 1850 the family located in McLean County, Ill., where they were pioneer families, and there this worthy couple resided until their death. Five of their seven children grew up, of whom Mrs. Rees is the youngest and the only one now living. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Rees engaged in farming in Butler County, Iowa, for three years when they returned to McLean County, Ill., where they followed agriculture. In 1876 they removed to Kansas, settling on a homestead near McPherson. In Kansas he was one of the organizers of the Farmers' Alliance Insurance Company, serving as director and treasurer for five years; the company was very successful and is still doing good business. He was also a member of the Farmers' Elevator Company and the Farmers' Co-operative Store in McPherson, being a stockholder and director for twenty years.

As early as 1890 Mr. and Mrs. Rees made a trip to California spending two years at Stockton and at Burson, returning to Kansas, they farmed at McPherson until 1900, when they moved to Oklahoma where they were engaged in farming and stockraising in the Kiowa country until March, 1910, they returned to California and took up their residence in Stockton. They purchased property and improved it and now own an apartment house on South Pilgrim Street as well as a residence in the rear. They also own a nice residence on Washington Street and four residences at the corner of Hazelton and Sierra Nevada streets, housing in all thirteen families. Their investment is proving a profitable one and they have been true upbuilders of the city. They have also bought and sold several other properties and own lots in and near Tuxedo Park. Mr. and Mrs. Rees have been blessed with five children, three of whom grew to manhood, and are living. Joseph Hubbard Rees is a very successful farmer at Roosevelt, Okla.; Ezra Grant is a contractor at Enid, Okla., and is also a preacher in the Christian Church; he had a son Herald, who served overseas in the World War; and Nancy Edith, Mrs. Schmalzried, resides in Stockton. By her former marriage Mrs. Rees had three children that are living: Newton Mahaffey, a contractor in Stockton; Wm. H. Mahaffey, a contractor in the Wyoming oil fields; and Adella, Mrs. McCombs, of Galena, Kansas. She had a son, Robert McCombs, who served overseas and died in France. Mr. Rees is a worthy member and past commander of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R., and has served as an aide on the department commander's staff. Mrs. Rees is a member of Col. Roosevelt Circle, Ladies of the G. A. R., and for over twenty years has been an active member of the W. C. T. U. and is a devoted member of the First Christian Church, Stockton. In Kansas Mr. Rees served as a member of the school board as he also did while residing in Oklahoma. He is a very strong temperance man and is a Prohibitionist in his political views, while Mrs. Rees is a very strong Republican. She is very patriotic and has one corner of a room in her house set aside for the preservation of historical and patriotic souvenirs. They are both well read and well informed and believe in the adage of live and let live.

D. W. FANNING.—From the time of his arrival in California in 1848 until his death nearly fifty years later, D. W. Fanning was identified with various enterprises, agricultural and commercial, tending toward the development of San Joaquin County and during that period he held a position among the prosperous and enterprising citizens of the community. He was born in Franklinville, N. Y., August 11, 1823. At the outbreak of the Mexican War he was apprenticed as a horseshoer. He ran away and enlisted in the Second Dragoons, serving with Generals Perry, Scott and Taylor, in the battles of Palo Alto, Buena Vista, Cerro Gordo, Churubusco, Chapultepec, San Pasqual, Tobasco, and Vera Cruz, serving from 1846 to 1848, and received wounds from which he never entirely recovered. He was a farrier by trade, which he followed during his entire enlistment. In 1848 he came to California and established a wheelwright and blacksmith business at the Old Fourteen-mile House east of Stockton on the Mokulomne Hill Road; later he conducted the same kind of a business at the Half-way House and still later he removed his shop to Fishers Bridge, now Bellota, where he passed away on June 15, 1898, his widow surviving him until June 18, 1908.

Four children survive this interesting pioneer couple: Mrs. Frank Creary and Mrs. Charles Cody residing in Bellota; William Fanning of Linden, and Mrs. Anna Lusignan of Stockton. Mr. Fanning was well known to every teamster and freighting company who passed through Bellota during the exciting days of gold discovery and being an expert in his trade, he was sought by every teamster to the Southern mines and they would travel many miles in order to have him do their wagon work. Almost a quarter of a century has passed since the death of Mr. Fanning, but among old settlers in San Joaquin County he is remembered as one who labored unselfishly to bring about better conditions in the district in which he settled sixty-four years ago.

Joseph T. Rees
Christiana L. Rees

MRS. REBECCA J. IVORY.—For sixty-nine years Mrs. Rebecca J. Ivory has been a resident of San Joaquin County, where she has witnessed the transformation from a barren stretch of sand to its present high state of development. She was born in Steubenville, Ohio, August 3, 1846, a daughter of Sylvester V. and Isabelle Tredway, natives of Tennessee and Ohio. Sylvester V. Tredway first came across the plains from Ohio to California in 1849 and engaged in mining and conducted trading posts for four years, though he made his headquarters on his ranch. Then he returned to Ohio and the following year, 1854, brought his family across the plains and on September 9 they located southwest of what is now Lodi, on what is known as the old Tredway ranch which had been purchased in 1850. In 1852 an uncle, James Tredway, sailed around Cape Horn to California. Sylvester V. Tredway became a partner of David Kettleman, owning at one time about 9,000 acres in San Joaquin County, besides a large tract of land in Fresno County; he also had an interest in mines at Winter's Bar, where he conducted a store across the river from Lancha Plano. The father and his brother James, always close partners, established a number of butcher shops, one as far north as Volcano, and these shops were supplied with meat from the Tredway ranch; they also sold a large amount of meat to Miller & Lux. On account of his large land holdings and the vast herds of cattle, the father was obliged to employ many men and he was noted the country over for his humanitarianism. If a man was injured while in the discharge of his duty, he was made comfortable and was given every care until he recovered. His great kindness was rewarded by faithful service of his many employees. Two Mexicans were so devoted to the family that they would have given their lives to protect Mrs. Tredway and the children from harm. Mrs. Ivory is the only one living of her family, George W. and William H., her brothers, both having passed away.

Rebecca J. Tredway received her first schooling in the school at Lancha Plano. Every morning her two brothers and two cousins, children of James Tredway, and herself were ferried across the river from their home at Winter's Bar to school and returned home in the same manner in the evening. A school-house was finally built at the place now known as the Burton Town Corners, south of Woodbridge, and Rebecca used to ride eight miles horseback to school; a few years later the Henderson school was built and still later the Lafayette school was built and she only had about three miles to go to school; she also attended school in Stockton and finished her education at Hunt's Seminary in Stockton.

On November 1, 1870, Miss Rebecca J. Tredway was married to Charles Oscar Ivory, a native of Smithville, N. Y., born March 8, 1834, a son of Horace and Marilda Ivory, a pioneer New York family.

In 1853 Charles Ivory came to California and settled in Stockton where he remained until 1867 when he removed to Woodbridge and engaged in business with John M. Burt. In 1868 the business was moved to Lodi, where he built the first business block and was the first merchant; later the partnership was dissolved and Mr. Ivory continued in the general merchandise business until in 1886, when he sold out. He passed away in 1889. Mr. and Mrs. Ivory owned a beautiful home, consisting of a half block on Elm and School streets, on which was a fine two-story house, surrounded by a rose garden and all kinds of flowering shrubs and for many years was a show place of Lodi. Mrs. Ivory disposed of her home when her husband died, although she has continued to live in Lodi. Mr. Ivory was a charter member and past master of the Masonic Lodge in Lodi and belonged to the Royal Arch Chapter in Stockton, and was also a charter member of the Odd Fellows in Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Ivory were the parents of the following children: Sylvester Horace died at the age of two years and two months; Carrie Bell, Mrs. Warren Hull, resides in Hoquiam, Wash., the mother of three children—Beatrice Ivory, Dorothy, and Charlene; George Oscar; Edith King is Mrs. Frank Henning, who makes her home with her mother; and Edna Lovisa, a trained nurse, died in 1918. Mrs. Ivory is a charter member of the Eastern Star and Rebekah lodges of Lodi and is a past noble grand of the Rebekah lodge, and served as treasurer for nineteen consecutive years and has filled all the other offices of the lodge except secretary; she was also the first treasurer of the Lodi Chapter of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Ivory has reached the age of seventy-six years, alert in mind and agile in body, and it is indeed a pleasure to hear her relate experiences of early days.

GEORGE CLINTON TURNER.—On his retirement from active work in 1913, the late George C. Turner left behind him a record of more than thirty years of faithful and efficient service with the water department of the city of Stockton. Mr. Turner was born in St. Lawrence County, N. Y., August 30, 1851, the son of David Clinton Turner, who came to California in the fall of 1850. In 1855 Mrs. Turner came to California to join her husband, bringing with her George C., who was then four years old, and from that time until 1866 he made his home at Springfield, Tuolumne County. He then spent four years in Carson City, Nev., and was at White Pine when gold excitement ran high, coming to Stockton in 1871, where he first worked for the Globe Iron Works and then spent two years under Mr. Thresher for the water company and next in the flour mill of R. B. Lane. In 1882 Mr. Turner re-entered the employ of the Stockton Water Company, which was later taken over by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, and for many years was the chief engineer of the water department of the company. Entering the service in its earliest days, he superintended the digging of many of the first water wells and from that time until he retired on February 12, 1913, he gave long years of conscientious constructive service and was numbered among the company's most trustworthy employees.

On February 12, 1872, Mr. Turner was married to Miss Rebecca Bevan, a native of Pennsylvania, who came to California in 1863. Four children were born to them: Frank Clinton Turner is engineer of the Stockton high school; Mrs. Luella May Wentzel resides in San Francisco; Mrs. Cora Smith lives in Stockton; George Chester passed away some years ago. Public-spirited in his interest in local affairs, Mr. Turner served as a member of the Stockton Board of Education for six years, and in his death on September 23, 1921, the community lost a sterling citizen. Mr. Turner was prominent in Masonry, as were his ancestors for generations before him, and was a member of Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M.; Lodge of Perfection Scottish Rite Masons, and was a past patron of Homo Chapter, O. E. S., of Stockton. One of the family's cherished heirlooms is a Masonic apron, bearing the date of 1818, which belonged to Mr. Turner's grandfather.

BENJAMIN A. GOODWIN.—A man who has taken a very prominent and important part in irrigation matters, so that he is known as the father of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District, is Benjamin A. Goodwin, a native of East Charleston, Vt., born June 29, 1853. His father, Darius Goodwin, was born in Lewiston, Maine, and Captain Benjamin Goodwin, the grandfather of our subject, sailed around Cape Horn in his own vessel in the twenties or thirties, coming north along the coast of California, and he traded merchandise and notions for hides and tallow which he took back to Massachusetts. He died at East Charleston, Vermont.

Darius Goodwin was a successful farmer in the East, but in 1869 he left his old home and with his wife and son Benjamin came to California via Panama. An older son, Daniel, had come to California in 1867 and settled at Modesto. On his arrival here Darius Goodwin located on a farm near Ripon and there they spent the rest of their lives. Of their two children Benjamin is the youngest and he received his education in the schools at Woburn, Mass. He was sixteen years old when he accompanied his parents to California and he assisted them to get settled and started in agricultural pursuits in their new home. He then went to work on the large ranches in the neighborhood, driving the big teams in the grain fields. It was not many years until he began farming for himself, leasing land and raising grain.

On November 24, 1878, Mr. Goodwin took an important step when he was united in marriage with Miss Mary Eleanor Clapp, born in Wilmington, Mass., the daughter of Noah and Louisa (Stickney) Clapp, both natives of Massachusetts, Mr. Clapp being a prominent man of affairs, owning a sawmill and engaging in the manufacture of lumber. In 1873 the Clapp family migrated to California, locating near Lathrop, where Mr. Clapp purchased a part of the ranch belonging to his brother Peter, who had been one of the very earliest settlers there. He was one of that hardy band of Argonauts, coming around Cape Horn in '49 in an eighty-ton schooner which he tied up in Stockton Channel, rushing from there to the mines. However, he soon saw that greater opportunities for him lay in farming so settled at Lathrop, and was extensively interested in ranching until he retired, removing to Stockton, where he spent his last years. He and his wife had six children, all girls, of whom Mary E. or Nellie as she was called by her friends, was next to the youngest. She received a good education in the schools of her native state and was well fitted to preside over their home which was destined to be the center of much whole-hearted hospitality.

After his marriage Mr. Goodwin enlarged his operations in grain raising, leasing 2,000 acres and using four big teams on his ranches, meeting with good success. In the meantime he purchased 320 acres three miles east of what is now Manteca on the Escalon road, his first purchase having been 160 acres for which he paid $1,500 and a few years later, land having increased in value, he paid $4,000 for the other quarter section. He was the pioneer orchardist of that section, setting out sixty acres of almonds and ten acres of olives, which have been for many years in full bearing and good producers. He installed a pumping plant, planted alfalfa and established a dairy that he ran for many years. He finally sold 160 acres of his ranch and on the remainder is his pioneer orchard as well as an eleven-acre vineyard which was set out in 1910. After installing two pumping plants it was not long until Mr. Goodwin saw the need of more water for irrigation and so he began planning for an irrigation system that all might have an ample water supply; after working to that end for several years he succeeded with others in organizing the South San Joaquin Irrigation District in 1910. He was a member of the first board of directors and upon its organization became president of the board, holding the office for six years during the construction of the dam and canals, until the system was in good running order. With the members of the board he saw to the voting of bonds and securing the water from the Stanislaus River, the dam being named Goodwin dam in his honor. They built the main canals, a distance of thirty-five miles, and the laterals, making over 200 miles in all. At the end of six years of incessant work, having given nearly all his time to the district and bringing it to a complete success, although he was requested to continue as president he declined to accept the office.

In 1907 Mr. Goodwin was one of the organizers of the Farmers' Mutual Protective Fire Insurance Company of San Joaquin County formed to provide fire insurance for the farmers with the object of reducing the rates. Mr. Goodwin was elected a member of the board of directors and was selected by the board as its president. To the success of the company he gave the same care and attention he always manifested in all matters undertaken by him. The result to the farmers has been very gratifying, for it has greatly minimized the cost of insurance, as it is only half the rate they formerly paid the old companies. At present there is over $6,300,000 of insurance in force. After nine years of active work Mr. Goodwin refused further election as president but has consented to remain a member of the board of directors. He worked faithfully to make the insurance company a success and can naturally take much pride in having had a part in this saving of insurance to the farmers.

In 1917 Mr. Goodwin rented his ranch to his son, A. D. Goodwin, and in 1920 moved to Stockton, purchasing a comfortable home in Lake Park tract where he resides with his wife, who presides gracefully over his home, and there they are enjoying life to the fullest contentment. When they first located at what is now Manteca they went to Stockton, seventeen miles away for their mail, and when the roads were bad it was an all-day trip for a team of horses. Now at the ranch they have a daily mail, electric lights, electric power for many machines, good roads, and of course automobiles for comfort and speed in their trips about the country, some contrast to the old boggy roads, slow-going horses, candle dips and kerosene lamps.

Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin had five children: Irvin A. is engaged in the automobile business at Ripon; Arthur N. died in his twenty-first year; May is the wife of L. L. Miller, a rancher at Manteca; Elmer is farming a part of the home place; Alfred D. is operating the home place. Mr. Goodwin has always been greatly interested in the cause of education and served as trustee as Atlanta school district and later of Calla school district, twenty years in all. He is prominent in the Odd Fellows, being a member of Mt. Horeb Lodge No. 58, at Ripon, of which he is a past grand, of Modesto Encampment, and with his wife is a member of the Rebekahs in which his wife is past noble grand. Mr. Goodwin is also a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and in politics he has always been an ardent Republican. Mrs. Goodwin has been a very active worker and member of the W. C. T. U. for many years, serving as county president of San Joaquin County for two years. In 1907 he and Mrs. Goodwin made an extended trip through the East, spending some time in their native states of Vermont and Massachusetts, and June 13, 1919, they crossed the continent by automobile, again visiting the old home places and many others of interest en route, returning to their California home in October after a pleasant and profitable time.

LAUREN E. WILKINSON.—A native son of San Joaquin County, where he has spent his entire life, is Lauren E. Wilkinson, a representative citizen of Lodi, engaged in the wholesale tobacco business. He was born near Elliott, San Joaquin County, in the Telegraph school district, February 20, 1893. His father, Thomas Edgar Wilkinson, was born in Grant County, Wis., June 1, 1849, his parents being Thomas and Emma M. (Carlow) Wilkinson, the former of English extraction. The grandfather of our subject, Thomas Wilkinson, was born on the high seas during his parents' journey to America on April 29, 1809. He was reared in Albany, N. Y., and in 1850 came to California, via Cape Horn, and for a time after his arrival was engaged in gold mining; later he worked at his trade of brick-laying, plastering, etc., making his home near Woodbridge, where his death occurred on June 4, 1865.

The father of our subject, Thomas Edgar Wilkinson, crossed the plains to California with ox-teams in 1861, with his mother and other members of the family, joining the father in San Joaquin County, and afterward the family took up their abode near Woodbridge. He was educated in the schools of San Joaquin County and from the age of fourteen has made his own living. His fine homestead farm consisted of 160 acres of rich and productive land, all under cultivation, twenty acres of which was devoted to vineyard, while the remainder was used for general farming; he also owned 160 acres near Acampo. On August 31, 1873, he was married to Miss Clista Dustin, a native daughter of California born in San Bernardino, February 14, 1855, and they had six children: Emma, Mrs. Albert Stokes; Evaline, Mrs. C. F. West; Edgar; Ira Ivan; Lauren E., the subject of this sketch, and Willis A., deceased. The father passed away on August 31, 1917, at the age of sixty-eight, and the mother is still living in Lodi. The father was a Republican in politics and for several years was a member of the San Joaquin County Republican Central Committee. For ten years he served as deputy county assessor; for twelve years served as a member of the board of trustees of the Telegraph school district, and for eight years was road overseer of Liberty township. He was a Mason and an Odd Fellow, holding membership in the Woodbridge lodges.

Lauren E. Wilkinson began his education in the Telegraph district school, then entered the Lodi high school, and after graduation entered the Heald's Business College in Stockton. At twenty years of age he entered active business life in Lodi, where he established a wholesale liquor and tobacco business. Since the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment, Mr. Wilkinson has conducted a wholesale tobacco store, where he retails soft drinks. His business has grown to such proportions that it requires two automobiles for delivery. Mr. Wilkinson is also interested in the cultivation of a vineyard, being the owner of a half interest in forty acres four miles northwest of Woodbridge, the entire acreage being set to Tokay grapes, on which is an adequate pumping plant for irrigation.

In October, 1911, in Stockton, Mr. Wilkinson was united in marriage with Miss Hazel N. Le Moin, born in Drytown, Cal., a daughter of George Le Moin. For many years her father was a proprietor of a hotel and is now living, with his wife, in Lodi, retired from active business cares. Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson have one daughter, Winifred. Mr. Wilkinson is a Republican in politics and fraternally is affiliated with the Native Sons and the Eagles, while Mrs. Wilkinson belongs to the Eastern Star of Lodi.

HENRY MABES SHARP.—Among the foremost agriculturists of San Joaquin County is Henry Mabes Sharp, born at Napa City, Cal., March 17, 1880, a son of Henry W. and Emily (Mabes) Sharp. Henry W. Sharp was born in South Lyndboro, N. H., March 28, 1850, and his father, John W. Sharp, was born in Boston in 1823. Great-grandfather John Sharp was a native of Yorkshire, England, who emigrated to America about 1820 and settled in Boston, where he was a stonecutter. Grandfather John W. Sharp also learned the trade of stonecutter and he married Miss Susan B. Cram, whose father was a soldier in the War of 1812. She died February 7, 1923, in her ninety-fifth year. The original emigrant of the name of Cram came to America from England in 1739. Grandfather John W. Sharp came to California via Cape Horn, arriving in San Francisco in 1850. He mined in Tuolumne County and afterward in Calaveras County. Henry W. Sharp, the father of our subject, accompanied his mother to California in 1852 and were joined by the husband and father in San Francisco.

John W. Sharp then went to Mokelumne Hill, where he built a hotel in 1853, which was burned down in 1855. He then turned his attention to mining and accumulated considerable means. He next built a fine hotel for those times in Calaveritas, which also burnt down in 1858 during his absence in Carson Valley in search of a good cattle range. He then started a small store which he conducted but a short time, when he sold out and moved to San Andreas, where he built a store of the native rock, quarried, dressed and placed it himself, and kept a general store until about 1863; this building is still standing. From 1864 until 1868 he conducted the Metropolitan Hotel in San Andreas, then moved to San Francisco, where he carried on the old Barnum restaurant near where the Palace Hotel now stands, until called away by the White Pine excitement in Nevada, which proved a failure. He then carried on the Revere House in Napa until 1873, then conducted a general store in Darwin, Inyo County, for about two years, but was burned out. This worthy pioneer couple were the parents of three children: Henry W., the father of our subject; Charles F.; and a daughter, Harriet Sophia.

Henry W. Sharp went to school in San Andreas until about fifteen years old, when he went to San Francisco to learn the printing business. He afterward worked on the Napa Register and later on the Yolo Mail, and for a time was the owner of the latter paper. On Thanksgiving Day, 1873, he was married to Miss Emma Mabes, a native of California. In 1876 Henry W. Sharp, in partnership with his brother, C. F. Sharp, bought their father's store in Darwin which they operated for about three years. Their next venture was the Ormsby House in Carson City, Nev., which they conducted for about six years; then they conducted the Andrews Hotel in San Luis Obispo only six months, when it was destroyed by fire. In August, 1886, they took charge of the Yosemite House in Stockton, at that time one of the best hotels in Central California. In 1887 the father moved to the Lafayette district of San Joaquin County and bought 130 acres of grain land, which he has steadily improved until it is now under a high state of cultivation. He later disposed of thirty acres leaving 100 acres still in the possession of himself and son, Henry Mabes, our subject. The father still resides on sixty acres of the old home place.

Henry Mabes Sharp received his education in the schools of Stockton. From early boyhood he has been interested in agriculture, helping his father in the many duties connected with the growing and production of fruit and worked side by side with his father in the improvement of the home ranch. Today he owns forty acres of the home place, five acres of which is in orchard and thirty-five acres in bearing vineyard.

On April 23, 1907, in Stockton, Mr. Sharp was married to Miss Florence Nicholson, born at Martinez, Cal., a daughter of Golder and Martha (Green) Nicholson. Her father was also a native of California and she was only a year old when he passed away. Her mother subsequently married Alfred Wilson, and they had six children: Alfred, Jr., enlisted in the U. S. Army during the late war and has never been heard from; Cyril resides at Lodi; Mrs. Anna Nicewonger resides in the Lafayette district; and Mrs. Violet Moore in the same locality; Bert; Alice is Mrs. McCambra of Hayward. Mr. and Mrs. Sharp are the parents of two daughters, Edna May and Alice. In politics both are Republicans, and fraternally Mr. Sharp is a Mason, a member of Woodbridge lodge, and a member of the Knights of Pythias of Lodi, while Mrs. Sharp is a member of the Eastern Star of Woodbridge and is a past chief of the Pythian Sisters of Lodi; they are both members of St. John's Episcopal Church.

URBAN J. MUNSON.—A general feeling of regret was expressed when that pioneer of 1850, Urban J. Munson, passed away on January 31, 1898, at the old home place near Atlanta, San Joaquin County, Cal. He was born near Calais, Maine, in 1832, and in the early '50s came with his father, Moses Munson, via the Nicaragua route to California, going direct to Jamestown where they engaged in mining for a livelihood; later, in the early fifties, he and his father acquired large land holdings near Atlanta which they farmed to grain and stock. In those pioneer days, the country was wild and unsettled, there were no fences and their stock ran over the hills and valleys unobstructed. Their first house was built of logs hewn from the virgin forests and constructed with great difficulty. Growing up with the country, he became deeply interested in all matters of growth and improvement along educational, political and social lines; he was a stockholder in the Farmers' Union in Stockton and the Grangers Union and the Grangers Bank in San Francisco.

Mr. Munson's marriage united him with Mrs. Cynthia Davenport Cookson, a native of Worcester, Mass., a daughter of Gary Davenport who was born in Rhode Island, where he married Catherine Pratt. The Davenport and Pratt families are of English descent, dating back to the Puritans. Mrs. Munson's maternal great-grandfather, General Trask, was an officer in the Revolutionary War. Gary Davenport was a machinist. He served in a New Jersey regiment in the Civil War, being mustered out as a sergeant. He and his good wife came to California in 1871, engaging in farming at Atlanta, where they spent their last days. They were the parents of two children: Mrs. Cynthia Munson and Mrs. Evelyn Harrelson. Mr. and Mrs. Munson's union was blessed with the birth of one son, Arthur J., a well-known farmer of the county. He was born on his father's ranch at Atlanta on March 12, 1878, and was educated in the district school located on their home ranch. During 1911 he removed to Stockton where he now resides. Fraternally he is a member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., and Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.

On the death of her husband, Mrs. Munson sold a quarter section of the home place to the Western Pacific railroad and decded a quarter section to her son, Arthur J., which he farms to grain, and the remaining one-half section she still retains and leases to her son by her first marriage, Samuel T. Cookson; this home place is improved with a fine residence and farm buildings. Some eleven years ago, she removed to Stockton and invested in lots and erected four residences, which she still owns and which produce a good income.

Mrs. Munson's first marriage occurred in Maine in 1870, uniting her with Capt. Samuel G. Cookson, a native of Belfast, Maine, who followed the sea for a livelihood, working up until he was master of vessels. His first trip to California was made in the early '60s, sailing around Cape Horn and he was so enamored of the beauties of California that he gave up his seafaring life and when he married they came to California via Panama and settled on a farm at Atlanta where he raised grain extensively. He retained his membership in China Lodge, A. F. & A. M., in China, Maine, up to the time of his demise. They were the parents of two children: Samuel T., born on the ranch at Atlanta and now engaged in farming.

G. J. Munson

He married Miss Elsie Ritter, a native Californian and they have one daughter, Norma. The second son, Walter M., was for many years with the Holt Manufacturing Company in Stockton but now is associated with his brother, Samuel T., farming the home place of the Munsons. Mrs. Munson in 1920 built a residence at Pacific Grove, where she spends her summers.

JOHN RAGGIO.—The time will never come, it is to be both hoped and expected, when posterity will fail to honor such a pioneer as John Raggio, the banker, broker, timber-man and former Calaveras stage operator, whose friends among his contemporaries were legion, and whom to know was to esteem and love. He was president of the Commercial & Savings Bank of Stockton when he died at the Lane Hospital in San Francisco on June 9, 1921, after an illness of a couple of months. John Raggio was born at El Dorado, now known as Mountain Ranch, in Calaveras County, east of San Andreas, July 16, 1860. In his boyhood days he drove a butcher wagon over a route covering Mokelumne Hill, Rich Gulch, Glencoe and West Point in Calaveras County, and later he conducted a stage service between Valley Springs and Angels Camp. Those were during the days of the picturesque six-horse stages which carried bullion from the mines to the nearest railway stations, and when the stage operators had to outguess daring hold-up men. It came about, therefore, somewhat naturally that Mr. Raggio was a man of untiring energy and varied enterprises. He accumulated vast holdings of land in Calaveras County, near his native heath, and throughout his long and successful business career he remained loyal to his home country, contributing to the upbuilding of its community life and varied industries. A keen business man, he met with great success in all his undertakings; and more than twenty-five years ago he organized the Calaveras County Bank.

On July 1, 1903, he organized the Commercial and Savings Bank of Stockton, beginning in a small way in the Hale Building on the south side of Main Street, between Sutter and San Joaquin streets. He took Edward F. Harris, then a young business man, in with him, and Mr. Harris continued to be long associated with him in business affairs. In 1914-15, Mr. Raggio erected the ten-story building in which the present Commercial and Savings Bank is located, and it was a source of just pride to him that he gave Stockton its highest sky-scraper. He did this very naturally, too, for as a man of vision and foresight, he predicted a great growth for Stockton, and his faith was exemplified in undertaking this huge building responsibility at a time when many keen conservative business men of the city felt that the time had not arrived for such a venture. But Mr. Raggio's faith was steadfast, and up went the ten-story building, now a monument to his vision, his faith, and his enterprise, and a structure of which all San Joaquin County is proud.

Mr. Raggio was also a director of the Tuolumne County Bank and was heavily interested, as a director, in the Argonaut Mining Company of Jackson, which operates ones of the largest gold-mining properties in the state. Among his activities and business enterprises were stock-raising, farming, brokerage, land and timber holdings; and in earlier days, as has been stated, staging. He was more or less of a really self-made man; and it is not surprising that he was generous in aiding worthy young men in whom he detected character and ability. It is known that he financed the college education of several young men, and put others in a way to great success in business and professional life. He was a keen observer and reader of character; and when once impressed with any young man, he recognized no limit in making it possible for him to attain a high place in whatever field of activity he desired to prepare for. Mr. Raggio, on the other hand, was charitable in the extreme in his judgments, and intensely loyal to his friends; hence he was beloved by all who knew him best, and he enjoyed the fullest confidence and deepest respect by all with whom he had any dealings in his multiplicity of activities.

When Mr. Raggio closed his arduous career, he was survived by a widow, Mary Gibbons Raggio, a daughter of Dr. W. E. Gibbons, and two children: a son, Jack Raggio, a graduate of the University of California and now connected with the Commercial and Savings Bank, and a charming daughter, Miss Lois Raggio.

ELMER E. THOMPSON.—A useful and prosperous citizen of San Joaquin County may be found in Elmer E. Thompson, who has continuously resided in this county for more than thirty-five years. The country, the time and the people have changed wonderfully since he made permanent settlement in this part of the state, and besides being a witness of all these transformations he has also taken no inconsiderable part in all the affairs of his county. He was born near Lawrence, Douglas County, Kan., December 25, 1861, and is the eldest in a family of seven children born to John and Catherine (Shank) Thompson. The former, a native of Pennsylvania, was born in 1838, a son of James and Elizabeth Thompson, natives of the north of Ireland, who early in life emigrated to Canada and subsequently moved to Pennsylvania.

John Thompson was reared and educated in his native county, and at the age of eighteen went to Illinois where he followed farming; he then removed to Kansas, and from that state, in 1874, he came to California and engaged in farming near Lathrop and Linden. He then purchased 160 acres four miles northwest of Woodbridge on which was planted one of the early vineyards, which was one of the most profitable branches of his enterprises. He was married in Illinois in 1859 to Miss Catherine Shank, a native of Ohio, whose parents were both natives of Germany. John Thompson served for a number of years as trustee of the Ray school district and was affiliated with Jefferson Lodge No. 98, I. O. O. F., at Woodbridge, and he and his wife were both members of the Rebekahs at Lodi. Mr. Thompson was a Republican in politics, and in many ways manifested his interest in the affairs of his community. Elmer E. Thompson received his education in the Henderson district schools, now the Ray school, and as he grew to manhood assumed charge of the home place, where he remained until 1905, when he moved to Stockton. Since 1897 he has been engaged in buying, developing and selling country property throughout the county, and also in the produce commission business, buying large quantities of potatoes, onions and beans and shipping them to San Francisco and Sacramento. Three times each week he loaded three river steamers with from 5,000 to 7,000 sacks of potatoes, etc., which were shipped to the markets in San Francisco and Sacramento. He is the owner of a 215-acre ranch near Linden, devoted to alfalfa and grain. Mr. Thompson has also been a successful realty operator in Stockton, where he was engaged in buying vacant property, erecting residences and flats and then selling them. During 1897-8-9 he served as deputy assessor.

On June 2, 1891, Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Carrie M. Fowler, a native of San Joaquin County, the daughter of Joseph M. and Eliza (Bromley) Fowler, pioneer settlers, also represented in this work, and they are the parents of two children: Clarence Ellsworth married Miss Ruby Eaton and they have one daughter, Helen; and Bessie B. Thompson. Mr. Thompson is a Republican in politics and since August, 1896, has been a member of the Jefferson Lodge No. 98, I. O. O. F., of Woodbridge, in which he is past grand; he also served as clerk of the school board of the Ray school district. Mrs. Thompson is a member of the N. D. G. W., the Rebekahs at Lodi, and an honorary member of the Daughters of Pioneers.

ALFRED GWYNNE WATKINS.—One of the esteemed and helpful citizens of Bellota is Alfred Gwynne Watkins, a prominent rancher and cattleman, well known throughout the county as an authority on stock. He has assisted in building schools and churches, and contributed to every project for the upbuilding of the community. He was born on his father's ranch at Bellota, August 1, 1885, the youngest child of the late Craddock Gwynne and Hannah (Young) Watkins, both born in England. Craddock G. Watkins and his wife came to America from England in early days and settled near Bellota where they engaged in farming, the old homestead now being operated by James G. Watkins, a brother of our subject. Mrs. Watkins resides at 519 West Vine Street, Stockton. Alfred G. Watkins attended the Bellota and Linden schools and this section has been his home his entire lifetime. While still in his teens he took up the carpenter's trade, which he followed for a while, and at all times was interested with his father in the stock business.

The marriage of Mr. Watkins occurred at San Francisco August 18, 1908, and united him with Miss Ruby A. Bliss, born at Stockton, a daughter of William D. and Nellie (Youngs) Bliss, the former now deceased, while the latter makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. Watkins. Mrs. Watkins spent her childhood days in Stockton and graduated from the Stockton high school in 1899 and for some years engaged in teaching. Four children have blessed the home of Mr. and Mrs. Watkins; Kenneth C., William C., Teddy B., and Alice Marie. In 1914, Mr. Watkins purchased 160 acres, known as the W. A. Shippee place, and about one year ago he purchased an additional seventy acres, making a total of 230 acres on which he raises stock and grain; he also leases a tract of range land near Waverly Station where a fine herd of beef cattle range. In politics, Mr. Watkins is a Republican and is a director of the Linden Union high school since its reorganization in 1921; for some years he was a director of the Bellota district school. Recently he has completed a fine residence on his ranch, which makes it one of the show places of this section of the county.

MICHAEL S. ARNDT.—Among the pioneer clothing merchants of Stockton is Michael S. Arndt, who recently celebrated the forty-third anniversary of his business, which has grown from a small beginning to its present prosperity. A native Californian, he was born in Stockton, Cal., on January 31, 1862, a son of Solomon and Ella (Heilborn) Arndt, both natives of Germany. His father settled in Stockton in about 1853, via Panama, and founded the clothing business of Arndt & Gumpertz, who originally occupied a small store on North El Dorado Street between Main and Weber. Both parents have passed away.

Michael S. was educated in the Stockton grammar and high schools and supplemented it with a course in the Stockton business college; at the age of seventeen he entered his father's clothing store and soon afterwards acquired an interest in the business. His father passed away in about 1885 and the business was continued under the same firm name, when Mr. Arndt bought the interest of Mr. Gumpertz and became the sole owner, after which the business was conducted as M. S. Arndt. The business was removed to the corner of Main and San Joaquin streets occupying the present site of the Stockton Savings & Loan Society and still later he moved to his present location at 313 East Main Street, known as the Wilhoit building, adjoining his former location, and here with large quarters and ample room he has built up the largest, as it is also the oldest and most successful clothing and men's furnishing business in Stockton. Some twenty-five years ago he purchased seventy-five feet front on the east side of California Street, between Main and Weber, and erected a business block, known as the Arndt block, which cost $27,000 and which is now valued at $150,000, showing the advance in real estate in that section of the city.

The marriage of Mr. Arndt united him with Miss Rose Louis, a native of Boston, Mass., and they have two children, Stanley M. and Janet; the latter is the wife of Aaron L. Sapiro, a prominent attorney of San Francisco. He serves as counsel for twenty-two co-operative marketing associations in California and many of the big marketing associations throughout the East and South, and is an expert on the subject of co-operative marketing, and has addressed mass meetings in different parts of the United States on this subject; in the southern states he organized the cotton, tobacco and peanut associations. He also organized the maple sugar association of the East and in other sections of the country, speaking on the crops pertaining to their districts.

Stanley M. Arndt was born in Stockton on January 27, 1894, and was educated in the grammar and high schools of that city, graduating from the Stockton high school with the class of 1911; in 1915 graduated from the University of California. He had entered the University of California law school but the World War interrupted his course and he enlisted in the first officers' training camp, Presidio, San Francisco, in April of 1917, and on August 15 of the same year received his commission of lieutenant, being stationed at the Presidio and Camp Lewis, serving as first lieutenant of the First U. S. Infantry until January 25, 1919. He then resumed his studies at the law school and graduated in December of 1919. He practiced law in San Francisco until April, 1920, when he established his law office in Stockton and has attracted nation-wide attention by a number of special articles written by him and which have been published in the California Law Review, articles treating on the law of California relative to co-operative marketing associations. This was the first time this subject had ever been discussed from a legal viewpoint and many letters have been received from different parts of the country asking for a copy of the Review. An article treating on "Liquidated Damages" in California appeared in the Review of December, 1921. He is a member of San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M., and all the bodies of the Scottish Rite in Stockton and San Francisco Consistory No. 1, as well as Aahmes Temple A. A. O. N. M. S., Oakland, Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., of the "B'nai Brith," and he is the commander of Karl Ross Post of the American Legion. We find him too a member of Stockton Lodge of Odd Fellows and the Rebekahs.

Sidney G. Gumpertz, a nephew of Mr. Arndt, was born in Stockton and is now a resident of New York, a writer of note, contributing special articles to magazines and newspapers throughout the United States. He is a World War hero, being one of five New York men among forty-one soldiers to win the Congressional Medal of Honor, the highest award in the gift of the nation. Charging through a dense smoke screen and a barrage of artillery and machine gun fire, he captured single-handed a machine gun nest with its crew of nineteen Germans; a few days later he duplicated this feat by a capture of eleven more prisoners.

M. S. Arndt was the founder and organizer of the Water Consumers' League of Stockton, which has for its purpose the municipal ownership of water; the league is also active in reducing the rates of gas and electricity. Fraternally he is a member of the San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M., and all branches up to and including San Francisco Consistory No. 1, Scottish Rite, Islam Temple A. A. O. N. M. S., and the Stockton Scots No. 5. He belongs to Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.

Mr. Arndt owns a beautiful home in Bours Park. Here he sunk a well 212 feet deep, giving him an abundance of water, the purest water than can be obtained anywhere, because the analysis shows it is 100 per cent pure. He has installed his own water-works, the Stirling Automatic Pressure System, giving him ample water for domestic use as well as for irrigating the gardens and lawns. The grounds are attractively laid out and beautified by a large variety of shrubs, suitable to the soil of California, considered by experts from the University of California to be the finest collection in the county.

JOHN S. MONTGOMERY.—A modest, sincere and very public-spirited citizen, is John S. Montgomery, the ex-mayor and ex-chairman of the board of trustees of Lodi, Cal. A man of retiring disposition, he is nevertheless a forceful personality, and in his quiet and unassuming manner is a leader in the affairs of his city. He was born in Greenfield, Dade County, Mo., on January 6, 1881. His education was obtained in the grammar and high schools of his native city, and following his graduation he taught in the public schools of Greenfield. He arrived in Lodi on January 15, 1903, and found employment with Beckman, Welch & Thompson, and through his capabilities and strict attention to business he was made a member of the board of directors of that company. He was in their employ for fifteen years, and when he resigned occupied the important position of credit man. In July of 1918 he opened an insurance and brokerage office at 11 West Pine Street, which has proved to be a wise move. He owns and operates a ninety-two-acre vineyard south of Lodi. Mr. Montgomery is secretary and treasurer of the City Improvement Company and a member of the board of directors of the Citizens National Bank of Lodi. During April of 1918 he was elected as a member of the board of city trustees, and two years later he was elected chairman of the board. Many improvements have been made since he has been a member of the board. Ten miles of streets have been paved; a $200,000 bond issue has been carried for city improvements such as water, sewer, electric lights and fire protection; many modern buildings have been erected; and the city has shown a remarkable advancement within the last four years. He is a charter member of the Rotary Club and past president of the Business Men's Association. In his fraternal relations he is a member of the Lodi Odd Fellows, No. 259, and of the Masons Lodge, No. 256, the Stockton Commandery of Knights Templar, and the San Francisco Consistory and Shrine.

The marriage of Mr. Montgomery united him with Miss Elizabeth Bowling, a native of Missouri, and they are the parents of two children, Ruth and Clifton. Mr. Montgomery is liberal and enterprising, and is ever ready to assist worthy measures and movements for the betterment of his locality. He well deserves the esteem in which he is held in the community.

MAJOR WALTER E. GARRISON.—To the enterprise and industry of such forceful men as Walter E. Garrison is due the continued prestige of this section of California. His position in the public regard, however, has not come merely as a tribute to his success, but is in recognition of his personal worth and the honorable and straightforward methods he has ever employed in his business career. He was born on his father's ranch west of Modesto, Cal., December 30, 1876, the youngest son of Clinton and Amanda (Watts) Garrison, natives of Tennessee and Pennsylvania, respectively. Clinton Garrison was born on his father's farm of 160 acres near Nashville, Tenn.; and when he was a lad of four years his parents removed to Missouri, where his mother died. His father married again, and Clinton left home at the age of fifteen and started life for himself. He eventually came to California in 1857, stopping for a time in San Joaquin County, but in 1865 became one of the early grain farmers in Stanislaus County, where he owned and operated 1,600 acres until 1908, when he retired from active business and the property was divided. This branch of the Garrison family is in the direct line of descent from a fine old English family, their direct ancestor being Lord Garrison. Our subject's mother was Miss Amanda Watts, a native of Pennsylvania and of Scotch descent. They had two sons: W. Henry, who is an extensive rancher near Modesto, influential in civic and social life; and Walter E., the younger. The mother passed away at the age of forty-five, the father surviving her. He makes his residence in Santa Cruz, and is eighty years old.

Walter E. was reared upon the family homestead near Modesto, early becoming familiar with farm work in its various departments. The summer months were spent in the field, and during the other seasons of the year he attended the district schools until he had mastered the elementary branches in English. He then entered the Modesto High School and still later the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge, from which he was graduated in 1895 with the degree of B. A. When the division of the family homestead was made, Walter E. received a half-section of land, which he farmed for twelve years. In 1914 he moved to Lodi, where he purchased eighty acres in vineyard. Besides his eighty-acre ranch, he leases 240 acres, forty of which is in orchard and the balance in vineyard and general farming land, irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch.

Walter E. Garrison enlisted for the Spanish-American War in the 1st California Volunteer Infantry as a private in Company B, for service in the Philippines, and was in the first expedition to leave the shores of the United States for service in a foreign country, going to Manila, where he remained for one year, from 1898 to 1899. During his service he was promoted to the rank of corporal and he was honored by the award of the McKinley Medal from the Congress of the United States.

The marriage of Major Garrison occurred at Woodbridge on the old Robert Boyce ranch, October 22, 1901, and united him with Miss Martha Boyce, who was born on the same ranch, a daughter of the late Robert Boyce and Lorah K. (Turner) Boyce. Robert Boyce was a native of Ohio, and was twelve years old when his parents came across the plains to California and settled near Woodbridge. In 1871 he purchased 160 acres adjoining his father's farm, which he farmed to grain for many years. Later he planted a vineyard of thirty-three acres, and still later sixty acres were planted to Tokay grapes. He passed away in 1914 at the age of sixty-seven years. The mother makes her home in Lodi and takes an active part in social and civic affairs. She still owns the valuable ranch property left her by her husband. Mrs. Garrison is the only child of this worthy pioneer couple. Her early education was obtained in the district schools of the county. She then entered the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge and there was a classmate of her husband. Major and Mrs. Garrison are the parents of two daughters, June and Roberta.

On the day Congress declared war on Germany Walter E. Garrison offered his services to his country. He entered the first officers' training camp at the Presidio, and later received a commission as captain, taking command of Company D, 363rd Infantry, of the 91st Division. Later he was transferred to Headquarters Company, and was in command of the 1st Battalion of the 363rd Infantry, which left for France in July, 1918. After landing at Glasgow, Scotland, they proceeded to Southampton and crossed to Cherbourg, France. Previous to his service at the front, Major Garrison trained at Montigny-Le-Roi; and his battalion went into the reserves of the St. Mihiel drive and took part in the first Meuse-Argonne offensive. Later he fought with the French troops in Belgium. After the Meuse-Argonne he was commissioned Major of the 3rd Battalion, 363rd Infantry. Major Garrison was twice wounded, once by a machine-gun, in Belgium; and he was also gassed while in the Meuse-Argonne battle. He was sent to the base hospital at London, and while there he organized a provisional battalion of hospital evacuate and returned to France with them, each soldier returning to his own regiment, Major Garrison returning to his own battalion in December, 1918. He left St. Nazaire for New York with the 91st Division, arriving at the Presidio, San Francisco. After disbanding he was discharged from active duty. For services at the front, he was decorated by Marshal Petain with the Croix de Guerre with the Gold Star.

On his return to Lodi, Major Garrison resumed his ranching enterprise, which Mrs. Garrison had been bravely carrying on during his service overseas. He is the present commander of Lodi Post 22, American Legion; president of the San Joaquin Council of Boy Scouts of America; president of the Rotary Club of Lodi; and vice-president of the Associated Growers, Inc., of Lodi. Fraternally he is a member of the N. S. G. W. of Modesto, and has passed through the chairs of the order; he belongs to the Modesto Lodge of Elks. While in the army, Major Garrison made a record as an expert rifleman, and he is at present the president of the Lodi Gun Club.

HENRY KAISER.—A prominent rancher and a pioneer of San Joaquin County, Henry Kaiser is now living retired from active business cares, but still owns a fine ranch of 560 acres southeast of Stockton, on which is produced large quantities of grain; in addition he owns his residence at 1443 South San Joaquin Street, Stockton, where he resides with his family. He was born near Salt Lake City, Utah, March 7, 1855, while his parents were en route from Cincinnati, Ohio, to California in an ox-team train, but Mr. Kaiser is pleased to claim California as his native state. He is the eldest son of a family of fifteen children born to Valentine and Catherine Kaiser, both natives of Germany, but reared in Ohio.

When the Kaiser family arrived in California in 1855, they located near San Jose, where they farmed for a couple of years, then sold out and moved to a wooded tract of land ten miles southeast of Stockton, where the home was established and which is still the home of the mother, highly honored and respected, now eighty-eight years old. Valentine Kaiser passed away at the old home place in 1914 at the age of eighty-seven years. Henry Kaiser attended the district school in the neighborhood of his home and was reared on the farm and as soon as he was old enough assumed his share of the work at home. In 1881 Mr. Kaiser bought his first land and by subsequent purchases has added to the original purchase until he now has 560 acres on which is raised large quantities of wheat and hay, which has been produced for the past forty years on this ranch.

In Stockton, September 30, 1901, occurred the marriage of Mr. Kaiser and Miss Ella Sorensen, who was born in Nephi, Utah, a daughter of Fred and Caroline E. (Buntzen) Sorensen, natives of Denmark and Oldenburg, Germany, respectively, who emigrating to the United States located first in Utah, where Mr. Sorensen was a farmer for twenty years, and then brought his family to Stockton in 1897. The father has passed to the great beyond and the mother now makes her home with Mr. and Mrs. Kaiser who look after her comfort and welfare. They have been blessed with one son, Edmon V. In 1917 the family removed to Stockton and about one year ago Mr. Kaiser purchased his present residence at 1443 South San Joaquin Street. Besides his residence, Mr. Kaiser owns other valuable real estate in Stockton, which he purchased a number of years ago, realizing that Stockton would eventually become a large and prosperous commercial center. His business career has been marked with upright dealing, and the fact that many of his staunchest friends are those who have known him from boyhood is an indication that his has been an upright, active and honorable life.

GEORGE MONROE FRENCH.—With the development and upbuilding of the San Joaquin Valley the French family has been identified from early pioneer times to the present, and no man in this section of the state was more widely known or more highly esteemed than the late George Monroe French, who resided on a ranch three miles east of Stockton, his popularity and genuine personal worth being attested by the fact that for over a quarter of a century he continued in the office of supervisor for the third district of San Joaquin County. He was born on his father's farm on the Mariposa road, the family home, December 3, 1856, and his parents were William Bradley and Sarah (McCloud) French, the former a native of Rhode Island, and the latter of Massachusetts. Lured by the discovery of gold, the father came to California in 1849, making the voyage around Cape Horn. After reaching San Francisco he engaged in mining in the southern mines. In 1852, he returned to Massachusetts, where he was married and in 1853 brought his bride to the Golden State, and they crossed the Isthmus of Panama on donkeys. When Mr. French first passed through Stockton, in 1849, its population numbered only a few persons, who were living in tents. He decided to locate here after his return from the East, and for many years was proprietor of the old Charter Oak House, also conducting a stage station. It was located eight miles east of Stockton, and the country was then in a very wild and undeveloped state, no roads or fences having been constructed, while lawlessness held full sway. Human lives were not accounted as of much value, and vigilance committees were organized by the citizens, who took the law into their own hands, administering punishment to the guilty. On his journey to the East Mr. French had carried with him six gold slugs, valued at fifty dollars each, and these were securely tied around his body. Wages were high in those early times, a laborer receiving fifteen dollars per day; but all commodities were very expensive, a pair of gumshoes costing fifteen dollars. Subsequently the father purchased land three miles east of Stockton, and for many years he devoted his attention to farming, becoming the owner of three horses, which was considered a large number for that period. Of the family of Mr. and Mrs. French, three children survive: William A.; Mrs. Emma Strait; and Mrs. Hattie M. Jones.

George M. French acquired his education in the primitive schools of the early days and later assisted his father in farming, which occupation he continued to follow, and he resided on a portion of one of the ranches owned by the father, a part of the William B. Loser farm. In 1896, his fellow citizens recognizing his worth and ability, called him to the office of supervisor for the third district of San Joaquin County, and he served continuously in that capacity until his death, when Mrs. French was appointed to fill the vacancy, the term expiring in 1924. This is a record unequalled by any other county supervisor in the state, and indicates his marked capability and devotion to duty. He was personally acquainted with all of the old residents in the county and with all of their descendants, and his reminiscences of the early days were both interesting and instructive. During his early boyhood there were but fifteen houses and two stores in Stockton, and a slough ran through the present courthouse yard. The Sister Slough ran to French Camp, which was then the head of navigation, and from that point supplies were hauled to the southern mines and to the mountains. He witnessed practically the entire development and upbuilding of this part of the state, and rejoiced in the improvement and transformation that had been wrought with the passing years.

On September 17, 1890, Mr. French married Miss Josie Utt, a native of California, and four children were born of this union: Hazel E., the wife of Stephen Gaskill and the mother of two children; Hattie A.; George Jewett; and Janice J. Fraternally, Mr. French was a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. He always took an active and helpful part in public affairs, and in everything that touched the welfare of his city he was quick to respond. He was loyal to any cause which he espoused and faithful to every trust, and Stockton numbered him among her honored pioneers and valued citizens. He passed away on March 10, 1922, after a life of usefulness to his fellow citizens, and is mourned by a wide circle of friends from all walks of life.

LAWRENCE HEARTY.—About sixty-three years ago Lawrence Hearty settled in Stockton. He became a prominent citizen and was associated with many early events in the county, as well as with its later progress and improvement. For several years he conducted the Weber stables, and then, in 1874, bought 520 acres of land near Ripon, where he engaged extensively in grain farming and stockraising until his death in November, 1901. On May 8, of the following year, 1902, his widow passed away, leaving two sons and two daughters. Charles died on May 22, 1922, survived by one son, John Bertrand Hearty. Catherine E. is the widow of Thomas Clinton. Thomas Clinton came to California in 1877, and engaged in farming until his death, November 29, 1903. Mr. and Mrs. Clinton were the parents of four children. Annie is the wife of Alfred Carroll, and they have two children and reside at Atlanta; Alice is at home with her mother; Edward is associated with his mother on the home ranch; Nellie is at home. Annie Hearty, the deceased wife of James McCormick, is survived by three children: Mary A., Mrs. C. C. Hitchcock; Charles B.; and James, Jr. Thomas Hearty is a successful grain farmer in Dent Township. From 1910 he was justice of the peace of that township, until it was divided in 1923, forming Ripon township, and he was elected in the latter township.

Lawrence Hearty and his good wife were most liberal in their contributions to charities, more particularly to St. Patrick's Parish at Atlanta. Their daughter, Mrs. Clinton, is also a faithful member and an untiring worker for the cause of St. Patrick's. Mrs. Clinton and her son are associated with Thomas Hearty in general farming. They enjoy the confidence of the business community and the respect of their associates in social life, and are consistent members of St. Patrick's Parish.

JAMES A. LOUITTIT.—Distinguished among San Joaquin County's leading citizens, whom he represented so worthily as a member of Congress, standing high as a member of the legal fraternity, and popular and prominent in civic and social circles, James A. Louttit's name will ever be honored in the community where practically all of his life was spent. His father, Thomas Sinclair Louttit, was the founder of the family in America, leaving his home in Scotland, where he was born July 4, 1821, to cross the ocean to America in 1837. He settled in New Orleans, where he followed the trade of a blacksmith, and there he married Miss Jessie Ann Bell, also a native of Scotland, who had come to America in early girlhood. She was the daughter of Alexander Bell, a Scottish Covenanter leader who attained the age of ninety-seven years, and who was survived by his wife, Jessie Margaret (Robertson) Bell, who lived to be 103 years old. They traced their ancestry to the Orkney Islands, as did also the Louttit family. The parents of Thomas Sinclair Louttit were James and Mary (Sinclair) Louttit, the latter a sister of Thomas Sinclair, who for several years was lieutenant-governor of British Columbia and who also gained distinction as president of the Hudson Bay Company.

A resident of New Orleans at the time of the discovery of gold in California, Thomas Sinclair Louttit with his family made the tedious and dangerous journey to the Pacific Coast, but not meeting with the desired success in the mines, he turned his attention to the blacksmith's trade, which he followed until the infirmities of age compelled his retirement from active labors. Afterward he and his wife lived quietly at their home at Mokelumne Hill, Calaveras County. Like the majority of the pioneers of 1849, he was bold in spirit, resolute in purpose and dauntless in action. Hardships did not dismay him and obstacles served only to bring out his determination to overcome them. During the early days he organized at Coloma the Vigilantes, a law and order committee composed of public-spirited citizens, pledged to enforce the laws and win California from the control of the lawless element. He died April 22, 1896, his wife surviving until August, 1898.

Of the five children that comprised the family of this worthy pioneer couple all are deceased; they were James A., Mary, Thomas S., Belle and William R. Born in New Orleans on October 16, 1848, James A. Louttit was educated in the country schools of Mokelumne Hill and later, under a private tutor, Rev. W. C. Mosher, he became proficient in Latin, Greek and higher mathematics. He was graduated from the State Normal in 1864 and won first honors in his class. For three years he taught in the Brooklyn high school of Oakland, when that institution was the only high school in California outside of San Francisco. Meanwhile, during his hours of respite from educational duties he took up the study of law, which he prosecuted under the preceptorship of Porter & Holladay of San Francisco. Having been a diligent student from boyhood and having developed his mind at the expense of his body, Mr. Louttit found himself compelled to abandon his law books for a time and he sought outdoor life with the hope of recuperating. It was his good fortune while he engaged in mining both to regain his health and lay the foundation of financial independence.

In October, 1869, Mr. Louttit was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of California, and about the same time he bought a set of law books which, by frequent additions, brought him in later life a library more complete than is usually found even in the largest law offices in the state. With his customary courtesy he gave to his professional co-workers the privilege of access to his library, in order that the best authorities might be consulted in problems of serious import. Under the sponsorship of Hon. J. G. Carlisle and Hon. Thomas B. Reed, former renowned speakers of the House of Representatives, he was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of the United States. During 1871 he opened a law office in Stockton, where the same year he was elected city attorney, retaining that post until 1879. For many years he was the partner of C. H. Lindley, later an attorney of San Francisco. In 1885 he became the senior member of the firm of Louttit, Woods & Levinsky, and in 1903 he formed a law partnership with his son, Thomas Sinclair Louttit, which continued until his death on July 26, 1906.

Fraternally James A. Louttit was identified with Stockton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., and was a charter member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. Politically he gave staunch support to Republican principles. Although his district was Democratic, at the election of November, 1884, he was chosen as representative in Congress, carrying the district by a decisive majority. During his services at Washington he gave a large share of his attention to working for the extension of the free mail delivery system and after eight months of tireless effort he was privileged to see the system extended to 142 cities, among these being his home town of Stockton. At the expiration of his congressional term he declined a renomination, preferring to devote himself exclusively to his professional work. As may be judged from his efforts to secure the free delivery of mail in Stockton, he was intensely devoted to the welfare of the city, and every progressive movement for city, county and state received his intelligent co-operation and assistance, and it is to the leadership of such men as he that Stockton has attained its present high place in the commonwealth.

Fond of home and children, many of Mr. Louttit's happiest hours were spent in the society of his family. His first marriage occurred in 1872, uniting him with Ada A. Cory, who was born in California in 1854 and died at Stockton August 21, 1884. Her parents were John R. and Abbie A. (Cory) Cory, honored pioneers of San Joaquin County. To this union the following children were born: Mary B., the widow of A. M. Young; John Randolph, of Lodi; Thomas Sinclair, a prominent member of the Stockton bar; Jessie Ada, the wife of Dr. J. M. Sloan; James A., Jr., died in Alaska; Howard died at twenty months. In 1891, at San Francisco, Mr. Louttit was united in marriage with Mrs. Nettie O. (Bailey) Walker, who was born on the Bailey ranch, near Linden, a daughter of Charles K. and Mary E. (Belknap) Bailey, pioneers of this county, represented on another page of this work. Her childhood was spent on the home ranch near Linden and there she received her education in the public schools and later in Stockton. Her first marriage, which occurred in Stockton, united her with Lon M. Walker, a native of Ohio, who settled in San Francisco, where he was engaged in the realty field. He passed away in 1897, while on a visit to the Bailey ranch, leaving his widow and one son, Lou M. Walker, now of Seattle. Since Mr. Louttit's death Mrs. Louttit has continued to make her home in Stockton, occupying her time in looking after her interests. Especially is she devoted to teaching china painting, having displayed a decided artistic talent from her early girlhood.

NATHANIEL HOWARD LOCKE.—An enterprising and successful rancher and stockbreeder, worthily representing a very thorough-going pioneer who stood for great things in pioneer days, is Nathaniel H. Locke, the third oldest in a family of thirteen children of Dean J. Locke, who was born April 16, 1823, at Langdon, Sullivan County, N. H., and whose sketch also appears in this work. Nathaniel H. Locke was born at Lockeford, July 9, 1859, and there spent his boyhood, attending school there until he entered the San Jose State Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1880. Following his graduation, he taught school for a number of years in Calaveras, Marin, and San Joaquin counties. Mr. Locke still owns a portion of the old home place and in addition some 300 acres situated on the Mokelumne River, his holdings amounting to over 500 acres. The Kerr ranch of 300 acres, purchased in 1911, has been developed into a splendid stock ranch, and here Mr. Locke engages in the breeding of fine Jersey dairy cattle. Recently, he has leveled twenty-five acres of rich bottom land, which he has set to pears. This is only a beginning, as Mr. Locke intends to enlarge his pear orchard from time to time. Mr. Locke's ranch was known in early days as the "Rancho Rio De Los Mokelumnes," on which is the camp site of Captain Fremont on the night of March 25, 1844, when he was on his way south to fight the Indians, an account of which is found in the diary of the famous captain, paying tribute to the beauty and picturesqueness of this particular spot.

The marriage of Mr. Locke occurred on Christmas Day, 1885, and united him with Miss Lucinda M. Clapp, born at Wilmington, Mass., April 24, 1863, a daughter of Noah and Louise Clapp. They are the parents of six children, as follows: Chester C. died in 1918; Lottie C. is Mrs. Tip Anderson, residing on her father's place; Alma C. is Mrs. Arthur C. Ambrose, a geologist for the United States Government, located at Washington, D. C.; Howard C. resides at Lockeford on a stock ranch; Myrle C. is the wife of Capt. P. J. Clowry of Modesto; and Nathaniel C. resides on a ranch near Lockeford.

Mr. Locke has been in the stock business since 1887. He is among the leading stockmen of the state, and today owns the choicest herd of pure-bred Jersey cattle. His stock comes from the "King's Valet," imported from the Jersey Islands, a grandson of "Financial King," also imported, and the herd bull of John D. Rockefeller at Tarrytown. His "King's Valet," together with the heifer "Empress' Lass," won the grand championships at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition; and whenever he has exhibited his dairy stock they have won their share of the prizes. He is an exhibitor each year at the State Fair. According to tests made by the Milk Producers' Association, Mr. Locke's herd led in tests made for butter fat, and for the month of February, 1922, in a "cow-testing record," Mr. Locke had the winner, a cow giving an average of seventy-six pounds of butter fat during the month; and in January, 1923, a cow gave ninety-one pounds of butter fat. His dairy stock has been in great demand throughout the country; and he exports to the Sandwich Islands, to Mexico, and to most of the western states of the Union.

Fraternally, Mr. Locke has been a member of the Odd Fellows' Lodge of Lockeford for many years. He belongs to the Encampment; is a Patriarch Militant, Canton Ridgley; and is also identified with the Modern Woodmen of America, enjoying in the circle of each of these well-known fraternities an enviable and deserved popularity. San Joaquin County may well be proud of the invaluable contribution made to its permanent growth and real progress by such citizens as Mr. Locke and his family.

WILLIAM C. MURDOCK.—A California pioneer of whom all native sons and daughters of the Golden State, and especially all patriotic residents of San Joaquin County, are justly proud, is William C. Murdock, who owns three-fourths of a section of excellent ranch land about one mile and a half southeast of Clements. He was born in the province of Nova Scotia, near Halifax, on December 19, 1844, the son of Henry and Mary (Sanford) Murdock; and according to the old story of ancestral migration, three brothers on his father's side came from Scotland to South Carolina. Grandfather Finley Murdock was a great trader, a merchant-marine man, who handled South Carolina products, with his sailing vessels running to foreign ports. Finley's two brothers were planters, owning extensive lands in South Carolina, and cotton plantations. Grandfather Finley came from near Inverness, Scotland. During the War of 1812, one of the ancestors on the maternal side was a surgeon. He was Dr. Woolever, a native of Holland, of the old William Penn stock. Henry Murdock's folks migrated to Nova Scotia from South Carolina, and settled at Halifax; and Grandfather Murdock built and kept a public house, free to be used by all, at Windsor, N. S. Henry Murdock took up the wheelwright's trade, and followed it during his lifetime. He died of lung fever at the age of seventy-eight. Five children were granted the worthy couple. James is deceased. William C. is the subject of our interesting review. Sarah Jane, who became Mrs. Hamilton and reared a family of four children, is deceased. Mary, now living at Fresno as Mrs. Smith, also brought up a good-sized family; and Katie is Mrs. Lane, of Oakland. The Sanfords originally settled in Massachusetts.

When William Murdock was fourteen years old, having finished his district school studies, he went to sea as a cabin-boy; and at the age of nineteen, with seventy-five men working under his direction, he built a ship, constructing it from the keel to the top rigging on the mast, and launched it in the ocean. Curiously, after that practical experience with the sea, though having long wanted to come to California, he waited until he could come on an emigrant train. The first trans-continental train crossed the wide stretch of hitherto untracked country in May, 1869. Mr. Murdock came in November of that year, and the trip took fourteen days, and was full of adventures. For example, at one time a great herd of buffalo was seen coming towards the track a little way ahead of the train, and the engineer stopped the train to allow the band to pass, the train having to wait for about an hour.

Mr. Murdock landed at Stockton in November, 1869, and came almost directly to Lodi, where, as a partner of Alexander Gordon, he loaded cars and split wood. He was an expert carpenter, and he helped build the hotel on the Copperopolis road, which had been projected because the owners, thinking that the railroad would soon be opened up to the mines, expected to do a good business. But the road did not pass that way and the hotel was finally burned to the ground. There were no railroads for a long time, for problems of construction balked the attempts to open up the country on an economical basis. The road from Stockton to Ione and Jackson passed through such forests of trees that the driver had to pick his way. Mr. Murdock worked at his trade for a while at Lodi, when that place had one blacksmith shop and a store building owned by Mr. Ivory. In Stockton the sidewalks were built on sticks, like stilts, so that on coming into the town one would not need to walk in the mud.

In his youth, Mr. Murdock was a member of the Christian Church; and upon his attending church here, he met W. C. Miller, who was both a great church worker and a man of wealth. Soon afterward, Mr. Miller proposed that they form a partnership, and embark in the sheep business. Mr. Murdock had no money at that time, but Miller introduced him to his banker in Stockton, and left instructions for the bank to allow him to draw all he needed for the business, in which he was then a half-partner. He accordingly went into the country east of Lockeford, and ranged his sheep from a point about one mile east of the present location of Clements, on eastward into Calaveras County and as far south as Tulare County. This herd grew to contain several thousand head.

Since 1870, Mr. Murdock has called the country east of Lockeford his home. He took up a government claim of a quarter-section of land, and received the patent to the land with James A. Garfield's signature to it; and he still holds this quarter-section. Mr. Murdock also bought a half-section, and now, all in all, three-fourths of a section minus the forty-acre strip of land given to each of his daughters, on which they and their families reside today. The quarter-section of government land lay three miles to the east of his home.

At Sacramento, on November 5, 1870, Mr. Murdock was married to Miss Martha Dimock, who was born in the province of Nova Scotia, the daughter of Asa and Amy (Northover) Dimock, of English descent, who came to California and to Sacramento, bringing her when she was seventeen years old. He built a fine, two-story home on his ranch, in 1902, about one and a half miles south of Clements; but in 1917 it burned to the ground, a total loss, due to lack of insurance. He then built a new home, where he and his son Winfield and his wife live together today. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Murdock, five of whom are now living, and there are ten grandchildren. Arthur passed away in 1915; Carrie died in 1893; Katie lived to be only ten days old; Alberta has become Mrs. Pierson, and resides on forty acres of the old home place; Ethel is Mrs. Sain, and also lives on part of the old home ranch; Charles is in Stockton; Lena is Mrs. L. L. Brandt; and Winfield is at home. Alberta Pierson is the mother of Ross, Madaline, Stanley and John. Ethel Sain has a daughter, Lucile. Charles is the father of Ann Bell and Marcel. Lena Brandt's children are named Harold, Marietta, Eugene, and Louis. Well, and still enthusiastic enough to ride about his ranch and give orders as to important details, Mr. Murdock is essentially a home man. He takes a live interest in politics, and endeavors to support the best men and measures.

WINFIELD SCOTT HARSHNER.—A worthy pioneer family who came to California in the early '60s is represented by Winfield Scott Harshner, who resides on his well-improved ranch of eighty acres on the Harshner Road six miles west of Lodi. He was born on the old Harshner ranch three miles southwest of Woodbridge, Cal., May 8, 1880, a son of Andrew M. and Mary Ann (Garver) Harshner, both natives of Ohio. The father, Andrew M. Harshner, was born March 22, 1839, a son of Andrew and Mary (Murray) Harshner, natives of Pennsylvania and Maryland, respectively. Grandfather Harshner was a farmer by occupation and lived in Ohio until his death in 1889, at the age of eighty-six years, and Grandmother Harshner passed away in 1878, aged seventy years. There were eight children in the family. The father, Andrew M. Harshner, was reared on a farm and remained at home until he was twenty-one years old. In 1860 he was married to Miss Mary A. Garver, born December 22, 1840, a daughter of John and Elizabeth Garver, and four years later Mr. Harshner crossed the plains to California, where he found employment near Sacramento putting up hay by the month. In 1865, Mrs. Harshner and her daughter Laura E., came by way of Panama to join Mr. Harshner. In March, 1865, he went to San Francisco and then to San Joaquin County, where he rented land and farmed for two years. In 1867, he purchased 160 acres three miles southwest of Woodbridge, on which he made all the improvements, making it one of the best farms in the locality, residing there until his death, August 18, 1913, at the age of seventy-four. His wife survived him until July 19, 1916, passing away at the age of seventy-five. There were eight children in the family: Ellena, Charles A., Laura E., and Allen T., are deceased; Mary Emma, Mrs. C. D. Shaw on the old home place, Clara B., Mrs. Fred Sprott on the home place, Lillian E., Mrs. Joseph Maley of the Turner district place, and Winfield Scott, of this sketch. The father was a member of Woodbridge Grange No. 84 and politically was a Democrat, casting his first presidential vote for Stephen A. Douglas.

Winfield Scott Harshner grew up on the farm, receiving practical experience along agricultural lines and his education was obtained at the Turner district school in the vicinity of the home ranch. He was married at Stockton in September, 1912, to Miss Katie Blohm, born at Rio Vista, Cal., a daughter of Charles and Minnie Blohm. Mrs. Harshner lived in San Francisco until 1906 when her parents removed to the Turner district of San Joaquin County, where the father engaged in farming. Mr. Harshner inherited eighty acres from his father's estate, fifty-five acres of which is in vineyard of Zinfandel and Tokay grapes; in 1912 he built a modern residence and other farm buildings; this ranch is also well irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch. Mr. and Mrs. Harshner are the parents of two children: Evelyn Bernice and Ellen Dorothy. In politics Mr. Harshner is a Democrat and fraternally is affiliated with the Native Sons of the Golden West of Lodi.

WILLIAM H. RIECKS.—One of the most popular and efficient officers that San Joaquin County has ever had is William H. Riecks, county sheriff since June 5, 1911. A native son, he was born near Vernalis, on November 9, 1869, a son of William H. and Rebecca (Von Bremen) Riecks, both born and reared in Germany and early settlers of this county. The senior Riecks was one of the early pioneers and was engaged in ranch work all his active life. He located in the county before the Civil War, and from that time until his death in 1879 did his part as a public-spirited citizen to lay secure the foundation for the development of the county. Mrs. Riecks is still living, and resides upon the ranch she settled on in 1868, where she is surrounded by a wide circle of friends. By her marriage with Mr. Riecks she is the mother of three children: William H., of this review; Herman A., and Karl F. She married for a second husband, Thomas Ohm, by whom she had three children, Henry T., and Bertha and Tonia.

As a boy W. H. Riecks attended the public school in the district where he was born and at the same time helped with the ranch work; later he supplemented his primary schooling by a course at Heald's Business College in San Francisco. His father's death, when the lad was but ten years old, threw a certain responsibility upon his young shoulders, and after his school days were over he took up grain and stock farming on the home ranch, continuing as his mother's right-hand man for many years, and at the same time winning a host of friends by his strict attention to the task he had in hand.

Mr. Riecks always took an active part in local politics, and became recognized as a leader in the West Side political arena for the Republican party. Upon the death of Sheriff Sibley in 1911, the board of supervisors sought the best man in the county to fill the vacancy and offered the position to Mr. Riecks; and so ably did he fill the responsible office that at the general election in 1914 he sought the nomination at the polls and won out at the primary over five opponents. He succeeded himself in the office again in 1918, and likewise in 1922, after a hard-fought campaign; the voters were satisfied with results in the past and returned their favorite to the office. Mr. Riecks has a force of seventeen deputies, and with the growth of the population in the county the responsibilities of his office are increasing each year; but he has so systematized its routine that wonders are accomplished in the maintaining of law and order. The deputies under him are all capable and trustworthy men and are loyal to their chief, who never sends a man where he won't willingly lead. In maintaining law and order Sheriff Riecks shows no partiality, and has no favorites to protect; his aim is and has been to serve the whole people to the best of his ability, and such has been his success that his popularity is constantly growing.

The marriage of W. H. Riecks united him with Miss Sarah E. Prather, born in Missouri, but from infancy a resident of San Joaquin County. With her husband Mrs. Riecks takes an active interest in community work. Mr. Riecks is a Mason, belonging to the Lodge, Chapter, Scottish Rite Consistory in Stockton, and to Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Oakland. He is also a member of the Scots, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Improved Order of Red Men, the Knights of Pythias, the Foresters of America, the Woodmen of the World, Tracy Parlor, and Native Sons of the Golden West. Since attaining his majority Sheriff Riecks has always given his aid in all enterprises that had for their objective the upbuilding of San Joaquin County. His activity was especially noted as a member of the bond-selling committee during the World War.

JOSEPH D. PARKER.—A native son of the state, who has served his community for the past twenty years as constable, is Joseph D. Parker, who possesses in a large measure those qualities which have been the foundation of the upbuilding of the West, enterprise and determination, qualities which he no doubt inherited from his father, Thomas B. Parker, a pioneer settler of California.

Thomas B. Parker was a native of Kentucky and grew to young manhood in his native state, and there married Miss Margaret Givens, also born in that state. Their families moved to Missouri and the young couple came across the plains in the customary ox-teams in 1851, locating at Mokelumne Hill, Calaveras County, where Joseph D. Parker was born on December 20, 1852, one of a family of nine children, four of whom are still living. Thomas B. Parker engaged in the livery business in Mokelumne Hill; then in 1860, he purchased a ranch of 240 acres above Lockeford, to which he moved his family. Later the family removed to Nevada, where the father died at the age of forty-two years, the mother surviving him until she was sixty-three years old. She married M. E. Bryant after Mr. Parker died.

Joseph D. Parker began his education in the Athearn school of the Lockeford district. Upon his removal to Nevada, he went into the Central Cortes mines and for the next twenty years was engaged in mine work of all kinds, and as he was mechanically inclined, took readily to construction work. Returning to Lockeford he engaged in carpenter work, and for many years has been active as a contractor and builder, erecting many of the business blocks and residences of Lockeford and vicinity. As constable of Lockeford, he has faithfully and creditably served for twenty years, and the community is indebted to him for his honesty of purpose in matters of law and order.

Mr. Parker's marriage occurred in Lockeford on November 20, 1895, and united him with Miss Minerva Hartley, a native of Arkansas, daughter of H. G. Hartley. Mrs. Parker came to California with her married sister in 1891. They are the parents of two sons. Ralph, while attending the Lodi high school, was awarded a trip to various parts of the United States as a reward for his excellent scholarship; later he was graduated from the University of California in the mining engineering department, and at the present time is in Ontario with the Cherry Hydraulic Mining Company. Ray, the other son, is attending the University of Nevada, pursuing a course in electrical engineering.

Forty-eight years ago, Mr. Parker became a member of the Esmeralda Odd Fellows Lodge of Nevada. Upon removal to Lockeford he was demitted to Progress Lodge No. 134; he has passed through all the chairs of the order and is now serving as secretary. He and his wife are active members of the Lockeford Rebekahs, and Mrs. Parker is the secretary of the organization. Mr. Parker was active in the Knights of Pythias at Battle Mountain, Nev., and has passed through all the chairs of that order many times. In national politics he is a Democrat, but he does not allow narrow views of any kind to interfere with his support of every measure or movement likely to build up the community with which he is so vitally and so honorably associated.

EDWIN A. WILLIAMS.—A native son, proud of his connection with San Joaquin County, Edwin A. Williams was born on his father's ranch four miles from Lodi, October 8, 1878, a son of Edwin and Bessie (Martin) Williams, the former a native of Wales who came to California during the year 1869, soon afterwards settled down to the life of a rancher and here, on his Lodi ranch continued agricultural pursuits until his death. He was an early member of the Lodi Lodge of Odd Fellows. Mrs. Williams was born in England, and she is still living, the mother of five children: Reese, of Stockton; Mrs. B. Parmento, of San Francisco; Edwin A.; Mrs. Margaret Thim; and Mrs. Lea Hussy.

Edwin A. Williams attended the district school in the vicinity of the home ranch, and when old enough began helping his father. Later he was employed on the George Ashley ranch. In 1898 he came to Stockton and entered the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company, and began learning the trade of machinist; and later he was with Matteson & Williams. In 1900 Mr. Williams entered the employ of J. M. Kroyer, when he started the Samson Iron Works, and soon became superintendent of the plant. He remained in the employ of Mr. Kroyer until 1918, when the plant was sold to the General Motors Corporation, and Mr. Williams became manager of the retail division, having charge of the sales of trucks, tractors and agricultural implements, with headquarters in Stockton. When the sales department of the Star Motor Car was perfected, Mr. Williams severed his connection with the General Motors Corporation and became the local agent for the "Most Talked-of Car in America." His many years of contact with people in his home county has given him a wide acquaintance, and his business integrity and personality easily win friends.

The marriage of Mr. Williams united him with Miss Emma Lambert, born in Stockton, a daughter of Fred Lambert, an early settler in Stockton. In pioneer times he conducted a shoe store at Chinese Camp, Tuolumne County, later moving to Stockton, where he continued in business at the corner of Main and El Dorado streets. He was a natural-born musician and able to perform on almost any instrument, and he was leader of the Stockton band. He owned the property where now stands the City Bank, which he sold at a small figure and which is now one of the most desirable business sites in the city. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have one son, Errol, a student in the high school, who inherits his maternal grandfather's musical talent. Mr. Williams is a prominent Mason, holding membership in San Joaquin Lodge, No. 19, F. & A. M., Stockton Chapter, No. 28, R. A. M., Stockton Council, No. 10, Stockton Commandry, No. 8, K. T., and Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Oakland. He is also a member of the Eastern Star Chapter. He belongs to the Odd Fellows, Charity Lodge, No. 6, the Rebekahs, the Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and Stockton Parlor, No. 7, N. S. G. W.

DAVID FACCINI.—Comfortably situated among those who have both merited and attained the good will of a wide circle of friends is David Faccini, now living at 427 South Harrison Street, Stockton, an honored pioneer Italian-American, and a member of the Exempt Firemen of that city. He was born at St. Terezo, on the Gulf of Spezia, near the historic city of Genoa, on December 8, 1850, and at the very early age of ten went to sea on the steamboat "Tuscano," and for twenty-five years he followed a sailor's life. Most of this time he served on large Italian vessels, and he not only has sailed the "seven seas" but he has coursed around Cape Horn three times, and has seen much of many countries, particularly in South America. While ashore in Peru, where he was employed by one of the best clubs for nine years, he competed in water-athletics, being a champion oarsman; and he is rather proud of the record of never having lost in such a contest.

Aboard the good ship "Garibaldi," on which he had visited practically every port on the Pacific Coast in North and South America, David Faccini arrived in San Francisco in 1881 from Peru, then he went North to the salmon fisheries on the Columbia River, near Astoria, where he remained for two years. Then he returned to California, coming down to Stockton in 1883 on the river boat Paris City, and that season put in with service on the freight boats in the Delta. For twelve years he worked in the Stockton Paper Mill as a fireman and then for eleven years for the Bowers Rubber Company in San Francisco.

In 1892 he bought a tract of land near Stockton, which he developed into a garden ranch; for the past fifteen years he has been a faithful and trusted employee of the municipality of Stockton in the department of streets and highways, and now lives in the quiet and comfort of his family circle, entertaining his friends with remarkable ability in the narration of his many and varied adventures while traveling over the globe before he reached California, but nowhere, at any time, did he find any place more attractive to him than Stockton, in which city, in 1888, he was married to Miss Clarinda Largomazino, a native of Calaveras County, where she was born in 1866. Her father was a '49er, and he came direct from Italy to the Golden State via Nicaragua.

Four children have blessed this fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Faccini. Frank is the eldest; Angelina married Don Hopper and died leaving one son, Don; Josephine married Fred Fritz and has two girls—Dorothy and Evelyn; David, Jr., first saw the light on October 8, 1895; he served in the late World War, responding patriotically to the call of his native country on February 26, 1917, enlisting as an aviator at Kelly Field and went overseas in the 32nd Aero Squadron; and during spirited action, when exposed to the deadliest fire, he received three wounds and has still a piece of shrapnel in his leg. He is a member of the Army and Navy Union, Hiram W. Johnson Garrison No. 33, and of Karl Ross Post No. 16, American Legion. By a former marriage Mr. Faccini has one daughter, Mrs. Emily Benz.

Mr. Faccini early joined the volunteer fire department, becoming a member of Weber Engine Company and is now a member of the Exempts; he then joined the Bersaglieri, an Italian society; then became a member of Concordia Grove No. 98, U. A. O. D., and also holds membership in the Beneficencia Puccini.

IRA CLARK BARRON.—From young manhood Ira Clark Barron was a resident of the Golden State, having arrived in California in 1863; and after locating near Lodi he was continuously identified with agricultural interests. Early in life he learned the value of industry and enterprise as the initial steps toward success, and he made these qualities his salient characteristics throughout a business career in which he worked steadily upward. He was born at Marengo, Ill., December 23, 1838, a son of Francis and Emily (Perry) Barron, natives of Canada and Vermont, respectively. Grandfather Barron was a commissioned officer of the English army, and during the Revolutionary War was sent to America in charge of English troops. Arriving on American soil, he became convinced that the Americans were fighting for a just cause; and recognizing the privations and sacrifices the American people were making for their liberty, he resolved that he would take no part in such a struggle. He went home to England, resigned his commission, married, and with his wife moved to Canada, where they reared their family. Grandfather Perry was a cousin of Commodore Perry, and was a native of Vermont. Francis Barron married Miss Emily Perry in New York State and engaged in farming there for a while, and then moved to Marengo, Ill. They were the parents of six children: Emily Minerva, Mrs. Dinsmore, deceased; Garret Albert, deceased; Ira Clark, deceased; Francis Edwin, a veteran of the Civil War, now deceased; George Decker, deceased; Harriet Julia, the only one living, who resides at Huntington Park, Cal.

Ira Clark Barron received his education in the grammar school in Marengo and early in youth learned practical lessons in agriculture. In 1863 he came via Panama to California and worked for wages on a ranch at Elk Grove, Cal., for one season, and then came to San Joaquin County. Here he worked on the Tredway ranch for a short time; then, in 1864, in partnership with his brother, he rented a half section of land on the Lower Sacramento road near Lodi, which they farmed to grain for three years. Afterwards they rented a quarter-section of land on the corner of Cherokee and Kettleman Lane roads, where they also raised grain. He then purchased a half-section of government land southeast of Lockeford, which he farmed until 1871. He sold out and moved to Ventura County near the present site of Oxnard, farmed for one year, and then moved to near Nordoff, Cal., where he farmed until 1881.

On October 26, 1870, Mr. Barron was married on the Freeman Mills ranch, west of Lodi, to Mrs. Mary L. (Mills) Peters, a native of Peru, Ill., daughter of Freeman and Minerva Mills. Mary Mills was a young girl of thirteen when her parents moved to California and settled in San Joaquin County. She first married James V. Peters, a native of Michigan, who came to California in 1858 and mined for a time, and then came to San Joaquin County and purchased a quarter-section of land on the Davis road in the Woodbridge section. Mr. and Mrs. Peters had two children: Mrs. Fronia May Dinsmore, a widow residing at Inglewood, and James Edward Peters, of Pomona, Cal. Mr. Peters died in 1868. Mr. and Mrs. Barron had four children: Harriet Louise, widow of F. L. Coe of Los Angeles, Cal., who has one son, F. Llewellyn; Lillian Irene, Mrs. J. W. Dinsmore, who resides at Moorpark, Cal., and has one son, Glen; Flora M., Mrs. J. G. Blazer, who lives on the home place near Lodi; and Ira M., who married Miss

Mable Williams, and resides on part of the home place, the father of two children, Elizabeth and Mary Louise. Mr. and Mrs. Barron had two grandchildren, who served during the late war. James Elwin Peters entered the army serving overseas for two years with the 42nd Division. Llewellyn Coe trained at Arcadia and Camp Kearney, and then went to France, where he became a motorcycle dispatch rider. He suffered severe injuries when thrown into a deep shell hole. Mr. Barron usually gave his support to the Republican candidates, but weighed well the qualifications of the candidate before casting his vote. From the age of nineteen he was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. A public-spirited citizen, he favored every movement calculated to improve his locality and advance the interests of the state. In 1881 Mr. Barron removed to Los Angeles County, purchased ten acres a mile and a half west of the University of Southern California, and there resided for twenty-five years, nearly seven of which he was employed by the city of Los Angeles. In November, 1907, he moved back to Lodi, and later bought eleven acres on the corner of Stockton and Vine streets, which is irrigated with a four-inch pump, driven by a ten-horsepower motor. Upon locating in the vicinity, Mr. and Mrs. Barron settled on twenty-five acres on Sargent road, about a mile west of Lodi, which was an inheritance of Mrs. Barron from her mother's estate, and which she had set out to a vineyard prior to settling on the place. In 1921, Mr. Barron erected a modern bungalow on the ranch. Mrs. Barron died on February 16, 1923, and Mr. Barron passed away the 18th of that same month, and both were buried on February 20. On October 26, 1920, this pioneer couple celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their home.

F. JOSEPH DIETRICH.—One of the leading real estate and insurance men of San Joaquin County is F. Joseph Dietrich, member of the firm of Dietrich & Leistner, located at No. 26 South San Joaquin street, Stockton. Mr. Dietrich is a native son of Stockton, born on November 7, 1875, a son of Theodore C. and Marguerita (Majer) Dietrich, the former born in Germany and the latter in France, but both now deceased.

Joe Dietrich, as he is known to his friends, was reared in Stockton and was graduated from the high school in 1893; he then spent one year at the Hopkins Art Institute in San Francisco, and soon after returned to Stockton. In 1895, Mr. Dietrich entered the county clerk's office as a deputy under Otto Grunsky; and during the six years he remained there he studied law, but did not take the examination to enter practice. When the newly organized Chamber of Commerce began to function, Mr. Dietrich was solicited to act as assistant secretary in 1902, and he served until January 1, 1903, when he formed a partnership with Otto Grunsky and embarked in the real estate business, with offices occupying all of a small building on North San Joaquin street, and began to build up a business under the name of Grunsky & Dietrich. There was also a firm doing a general real estate business under the name of Grunsky & Leistner; and when Otto Grunsky retired from the firm of Grunsky & Dietrich, the latter firm was merged under the name of Grunsky, Dietrich & Leistner, continuing thus until the death of the senior member, E. M. Grunsky, when Dietrich & Leistner bought his interest. They have since continued in business and have grown to be among the leaders in their field in the county, specializing in subdivisions, a feature in which they are the pioneers. The firm also is interested in the development of country properties, particularly in the growing of English walnuts.

Mr. Dietrich was married on October 6, 1902, to Miss Henrietta Mann, the daughter of Stephen Mann, pioneer of this county. Of this union four children have been born: F. Joseph, Jr.; Stephen M.; Marguerita; and Henrietta. Mr. Dietrich is past president of Stockton Parlor, No. 7, N. S. G. W., and is a member of Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Yosemite Club, Chamber of Commerce, and Merchants & Manufacturers Association. For nearly twenty years he has been a member of the board of managers of the Stockton State Hospital, having been appointed by Governor Pardee and having served under the various governors ever since. He is keenly interested in the upbuilding of his county and is liberal with time and means in the support of all progressive measures.

JOHN HUTCHINS.—Not many among the highly honored pioneers of San Joaquin County could boast a more enviable record, or a more interesting history than John Hutchins, who breathed his last nearly one-quarter of a century ago, and went to his long rest secure in the annals of the town as one of its honored founders. He was born in Canada, and in 1853 for six months braved the danger of a trip across the great plains to California, and upon his arrival here set out for the mines in Placer County. With four associates, he bought the site of the present town of Lodi, and these five men in association founded the place. He also induced the Southern Pacific Railroad to build its line through the town, and then he laid out the town and sold lots. He himself bought seventy-seven acres running west from Sacramento Street up Lodi Avenue; and he also bought, for $11,500, 190 acres extending west for half a mile, and then north, between Lodi Avenue and Pine Street. He cleared the land of scrub and live-oak, and cutting up the wood of the trees, hauled it to Stockton for sale. As a farmer, he raised grain for many years; and later he planted one of the first commercial vineyards in the district. He also planted almonds and fruit. After a while John Hutchins found that he had more land than could be held by law, and so he disposed of a part of it, trading it off for a span of horses and a wagon.

At Stockton, Mr. Hutchins was married to Miss Anna Nevin, a native of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, who had crossed the plains ten years later than he, and had then been able to make the journey in three months. Five children were born to them: Nellie M.; John, of Ripon; Edward; Mary, now Mrs. Jahant, and Catherine, now Mrs. Larson, of Lodi.

Edward Hutchins was born on his father's ranch, a part of which is now within the city limits of Lodi, on October 30, 1872. He attended the Lodi public schools, Woodbridge College, and St. Mary's College, at Oakland. As a young man, he worked on his father's ranch; and later he was in charge of the home farm. He has since divided a part of the property, some seventy-five acres, now within the city limits, and he has laid out the Hutchins Oak Street Addition, and Hutchins High School Addition, with such building restrictions as will insure the establishment and maintenance of a very select residential district, it being the largest and most important real estate project of its kind ever undertaken in the city of Lodi. A part of the home ranch is still in possession of the family, and there they have a vineyard of 110 acres.

At San Francisco in 1894, Edward Hutchins was married to Miss Ada L. Corbin, an attractive lady from West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Hutchins neglected no opportunity to further the interests of their community.

FRANCIS MARION BARNETT.—Popular among the most interesting pioneers now enjoying a retired life in California is Francis M. Barnett, of 914 West Poplar Street, Stockton, who was born near Camden, Benton County, Tenn. on May 31, 1840, the son of Bird B. and Martha (Walker) Barnett, the former a native of Tennessee, while the latter was a native of South Carolina. They were of the good old-fashioned type of Americans, being good citizens; good neighbors and good friends; having rested from their earthly labor they have left behind the man enviable record. They were the parents of eight children, six boys and two girls, of whom only two are living, Francis M., the subject of this sketch and F. Joseph, of Fresno. In July, 1849, Bird B. Barnett started across the great plains with an ox team, bringing with him his family, setting out from the Missouri River; he was frequently forced to stop for some time along the route, and so the trip was long and tedious, and they were obliged to winter in Salt Lake City. The next spring they started for California and on Independence Day of 1850 Mr. Barnett led his family into California, coming over the Carson Valley route to Placerville, then called Hangtown. Mr. Barnett opened a hotel nine miles from Coloma, and also used his oxen to haul supplies to the mines.

In the fall of 1851, Mr. Barnett removed to San Joaquin County, where he bought a place on the Calaveras River, and raised hay, which was taken to the mines to feed the stock, during 1851-52-53. During this time he built a residence and barns on the Copperopolis Road, three miles east of Stockton, now the old Marsh place, and lived there until 1855. From the Calaveras ranch they were routed out by Captain Weber, who had the Spanish grant, although Mr. Barnett had paid the former owner; he then moved to Mariposa County. From the latter year, however, he engaged in the stock business and raised cattle and sheep, continuing in that field after he had located in Mariposa County, where he also had a first-class dairy. He drove cattle up and down the valley, and over the mountains to Nevada, and became a large landowner and prominent cattleman of early days, holding title at one time to some 3000 acres of land in Fresno County.

Francis M. Barnett attended the Stockton public schools, and was associated with his father many years in the Valley. When twenty years of age, he became a cowboy and rode the range, making trips over the mountains, driving cattle to Nevada, sometimes crossing the desert eighty miles on a stretch, without water for the stock. He had many interesting experiences, including trouble with the Indians and outlaws.

In 1874, he started in business on his own account, buying a stock ranch of 4000 acres near Oakdale, in Stanislaus County, in the vicinity of Cooperstown. There he engaged in sheep-raising, and later took up the cattle industry. He still owns the ranch, which, however, he rents out for service to others, and to which he fondly reverts in memory, in the days of his comfortable retirement. He likes to look back, also, to the time when he attended the first public school, in Stockton, in 1851-52, and he has many other interesting recollections of pioneer days. In 1866 his father built a residence on Union and Channel streets and there the parents made their home for the remainder of their lives..

Mr. Barnett was married at Knights Ferry, May 10, 1881, to Miss Ada F. Parker, a native of Knights Ferry, the daughter of Dominicus Parker, a native of Maine who crossed the uncharted plains as early as the year '49, and thus became one of the Argonauts. He teamed to the mines, and later located in Knights Ferry, where he followed his trade of blacksmith. He died in 1882, survived by his devoted wife, who was Frances Babb before she was married and was also from Maine. They had five children, and two are now living, Ada, Mrs. F. M. Barnett and Mrs. Mary E. Allard, of Stockton. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Barnett, and three sons are now living. Hal A. is the junior member of the well-known real estate firm, Hodgkins & Barnett, of Stockton; Sidney B. is secretary of the Stockton Hardware & Implement Company, and Donald C. is purchasing agent of the Harris Manufacturing Company of Stockton. For many years Mr. and Mrs. Barnett have spent their summers at Pacific Grove, where they own a comfortable home. Mr. Barnett has been a member of the Odd Fellows for many years.

JOHN CHATTEN THOMPSON.—Very early in the colonization of America the Thompson family became established among the pioneers of the New World, the first of the name making settlement upon Virginia soil, where he gained notable prosperity. John Thompson, a native of the Old Dominion, grew to manhood on a stock farm, and at an early age acquired a thorough knowledge of the raising of stock. He was given a good education in private schools, and while living in the old home neighborhood he married Mary Adams Williams, a native of Virginia, where for some years they continued to make their home. They were the parents of four children, all of whom were born in Tazewell County, Va. John C., the subject of this review, was the second son. Another son, Hon. Rees B., formerly a member of the legislature of California, died on July 3, 1908. A daughter, Mrs. Eliza Thompson Yerby, died in Los Angeles, and another daughter, Mrs. Sarah L. Thompson Wheeler, made her home at Milton, Calaveras County, Cal., but died in Oakland. Eventually they followed the tide that drifted over the mountains into Kentucky and Missouri, and for six years lived in northwestern Missouri. The discovery of gold called attention to the unknown riches of the Pacific Coast, and John Thompson determined to try his fortune in that country. Having made the necessary preparations and disposed of his possessions in Missouri, during 1852, he and his family crossed the plains and after a fatiguing and eventful journey, during which his wife died in the Big Meadows of the Humboldt Basin, now Nevada, he arrived at his destination.

Seeking a suitable location, John Thompson came to San Joaquin County and selected land near New Hope, where he acquired the title to 500 acres; and here he engaged in raising small grain, and also cattle and horses. After two years he returned to Missouri and married Mrs. Jane Hardesty. He crossed the plains a second time to his California home, bringing again a large drove of cattle. Being a man of tireless energy and wise foresight, he prospered in his undertakings and became one of the leading citizens of his county, where he rendered efficient service as a supervisor and in other ways identified himself with public affairs. Reared a Democrat, and always staunch in his allegiance to that party, he nevertheless favored the Union cause at the time of the Civil War and in 1861, upon being elected to the state legislature, entered the office with the understanding that his support would be given to the Union. During his service he never faltered in his allegiance to the Union, and as a member of various important committees he proved helpful to the welfare of the state and nation. He later was a Douglas Democrat, a believer in states rights, and when the Southern states seceded his sympathies were with them. In no matter, public or private, was his integrity ever questioned. His force of character left its impress upon the early history of the county, where he continued to reside many years. The latter part of his life he spent with his daughter, Mrs. H. C. Yerby, where he died in October, 1886, at the age of eighty-four.

John C. was born in Tazewell County, Va., in January, 1835, and in childhood gained a practical knowledge of the frontier through residence in Missouri, during the pioneer days of that state. It was his good fortune to be the son of an advocate of liberal education, a man who devoted himself to giving his children the best advantages possible to the period. Hence, it was his privilege to receive instruction from a private tutor and later he was a student in Grand River College, Grundy County, Mo. He left school to come to California in 1852, and thereafter devoted his time to work on the home ranch, where he soon gained a thorough knowledge of all kinds of stock. After attaining his majority he began to buy and sell horses and cattle, and prepared cattle for the home markets. In 1861, he formed a partnership with James P. Folger, under the firm name of Thompson & Folger, which partnership was successfully continued until the death of Mr. Folger in 1885, after which the business was incorporated under the name of Thompson & Folger Company. From time to time the company made investments in land, until eventually it acquired holdings of about 3,000 acres, where stock of fine breeds were to be found, and good improvements in the way of buildings were made, with the various accessories which tend to the success of the rancher or lighten his labors. In addition to his stock interests he developed vineyards.

The marriage of Mr. Thompson took place at Ione, in 1863, and united him with Miss Caroline Rutledge, whose parents, John and Nancy (Fulton) Rutledge, migrated from Virginia to California at an early day and settled in San Joaquin County. They were the parents of four children: Edward R., deceased, at one time city attorney of Stockton, and a well-known member of the San Joaquin County bar; Mrs. Richard C. Minor, of Stockton; John H., president of the Stockton Iron Works, and manager of the Thompson & Folger Co., and the John C. Thompson Estate; and Mrs. Edward F. Haas, of San Francisco. Fraternally, Mr. Thompson was a Master Mason, identified with the Woodbridge Lodge, No. 131, and was also a member of the Stockton Elks, No. 218. He was one of the founders and a trustee of the Woodbridge College. A number of industries received the benefit of his cooperation and counsel in addition to the ranches with which his name was closely associated; he acted as a member of the state board of managers of the state hospital, held the office of director in the Farmers & Merchants Bank of Stockton, and was vice-president and one of the founders of the Bank of Lodi, (now the Lodi National Bank); these various positions indicating his high standing as a man of ability and as a progressive citizen. He passed away on February 20, 1911.

MRS. MARGARET FORD.—An energetic, experienced and highly progressive American woman who has demonstrated her ability as a successful California agriculturist, is Mrs. Margaret Ford, whose maiden name was Margaret Ferguson. She was born on Fairchild Lane, about eight miles out of Stockton, on May 4, 1858, the daughter of William Ferguson, who had married Miss Mary Ray. Her father was a native of Ireland, and came from County Armagh in the province of Ulster, and her mother was a native of New York. They were married at Little Falls, N. Y., and came in the pioneer days, in 1854, to California, settling in San Joaquin County, on Fairchild Lane. Mr. Ferguson was a farmer, who for years leased ranches, but toward the latter part of his life bought a farm of ninety-nine acres on Fairchild Lane, which he continued to cultivate until his death. He passed away at the age of seventy-six, in 1904; and Mrs. Ferguson breathed her last in 1908, at the age of eighty-three. They had five children. Mary, the eldest, married H. A. Miller, a highly esteemed citizen of Clements; Margaret is the subject of our interesting story; James, whose life was valued by those who knew him, is deceased; Isabel has become Mrs. Wm. Hines, of Stockton; and Laura is Mrs. W. J. Herson, of the same city.

Margaret Ferguson attended the Greenwood school. On the 31st of May, 1874, she was married at Lockeford, in the old red-brick church, to Charles Ford, born in Ireland, but who came to the United States with his parents at the age of eight. The Fergusons and the Fords started for California about the same time, but Charles Ford's father died before he reached the Golden State. Mrs. Ford, Charles' mother, owned a fine ranch of 182½ acres on Fairchild Lane; and when our subject married, she and her husband moved onto the place. At the death of his mother, Charles Ford inherited the ranch, and on Mr. Ford's lamented demise, in 1905, she took charge, and now owns the entire acreage intact. The death of Mrs. Ford, Sr., occurred only six weeks previous to that of Charles Ford; hence the transfers of the estate were made in rapid succession. Mrs. Ford is a Republican, and exerts her best influence in the use of the franchise and in endorsing approved political movements, to favor such legislation as will assure the best interests of the community and state.

Five children and seven grandchildren have added to Mrs. Ford's earthly joys. Clara is Mrs. G. W. Gordon, and resides on the Jack Tone road. Mamie has become Mrs. Charles Farthing of Stockton. Thomas and William are at home, and make themselves invaluable there. Nettie is Mrs. James Atkins of Linden. Mrs. Gordon is the mother of four children—Blanche, Arthur, George and Robert, and Mrs. Farthing has one child, Charles Llewellyn. Mrs. Atkins had two daughters: Margaret Alice, now deceased, and Irma May.

THOMAS ROBERT BROWNE.—No man is better known to the implement trade of the West than Thomas Robert Browne, who has had broad experience in this line of business and represents the Cushman Motor Works of Lincoln, Nebr., in the states of California, Nevada and Arizona, maintaining his headquarters at Stockton, Cal. The Golden State claims him as one of its native sons, for his birth occurred at San Francisco, August 24, 1863. His father, Robert T. Browne, was one of the early pioneers of that city, to which he came in 1858 by way of Cape Horn, and the son was born in a house on the present site of the California market, in the heart of the business district.

In the public schools of San Francisco, Thomas R. Browne acquired his education and as a boy he entered the employ of the Baker & Hamilton Company of San Francisco, with whom he gained his first knowledge of the hardware and implement business. In the early days the farm implements were shipped to the firm in cases, being sent via Cape Horn, and after reaching their destination they were taken out and reassembled. This task was assigned to Mr. Browne, who thus became thoroughly familiar with the mechanism of mowing and threshing machines and in fact all kinds of farm implements, and this knowledge led to his being placed in charge of the implement and machinery department. For twenty-eight years he remained in the service of that house, being one of their most trusted and valued employes, and in August, 1907, he resigned his place and accepted the position of sales manager for the H. C. Shaw Company of Stockton and came hither. In 1912 he resigned and opened an office in Stockton as manufacturers' agent for various lines of farm machinery, in which connection he has been very successful. He acts as agent for the Cushman Motor Works of Lincoln, Nebr., and has established agencies at various points throughout California, Nevada and Arizona. He caters exclusively to the wholesale trade and handles the famous Cushman gas engine, making shipments to Alaska, Siam, India, the Hawaiian Islands and South America. One of its principal uses is in the grain and rice fields as an auxiliary engine on the self-binders and in the towns of Colusa, Willows and Biggs and other districts in Butte, Glenn and Colusa Counties more engines for binders have been sold than in any other equal area in the United States. The engine is well adapted for use in conjunction with hoists for mining and dredging purposes and in irrigated sections for pumping outfits. Through the untiring efforts of Mr. Browne the farmers in the Delta district were finally induced to use the elevating potato digger equipped with the Cushman auxiliary engine, for which there is now a large demand. He is also agent for a sprayer for trees and vines and likewise handles the Toro motor cultivator and mower. While connected with the firm of Baker & Hamilton he spent several years in their spare parts department and is considered the best informed man west of Chicago in that line.

In 1889, in San Francisco, occurred the marriage of Mr. Browne when he was united with Miss Mary E. Harrington, a native daughter, born in San Francisco, where she was reared and educated, a cultured woman who has been a splendid helpmate. Her parents were pioneers of San Francisco, having emigrated hither in the early days. Mr. and Mrs.

Thomas R. Brown.

Browne's union has been blessed by the birth of four children: Roberta; Thomas R., Jr., is with the Southern Pacific Railroad; Leo L. is assisting his father in business; Berenice is Mrs. C. Edward Tyner of Stockton. Mr. Browne was a member of California National Guard for three years, serving as first lieutenant of Company E, First Regiment.

Mr. Browne is a communicant of the Catholic Church and he is also connected with the Knights of Columbus, the Elks, and the Kiwanis Club, in which he is a director and is a member and director of the California Tractor and Implement Club. Through his membership in the Stockton Chamber of Commerce he does all in his power to promote the welfare and prosperity of this city and he is in all respects a public-spirited citizen.

JAMES PATRICK NOLAN.—An enterprising, progressive and highly successful vineyardist to whom much credit is due for his contribution to the advancement of husbandry in California, is James Patrick Nolan, living two miles to the northwest of Acampo, and widely and favorably known throughout San Joaquin County. He was born in County Wicklow, Ireland, on January 19, 1871, the son of Edward and Anna (Murray) Nolan, the former a shoemaker by trade, who had to work so hard for a living that our subject was denied the opportunity to attend school in Ireland. In 1885, however, he came out to the United States, for a larger schooling in the New World, and ever since he has made his own way. He migrated west to California, and came early to the vicinity of Acampo, where he has continued to make his home within a short distance from where he first worked. His father never came to America. His grandfather and grandmother were Michael and Bridget (Russell) Nolan; and there were two uncles and aunts, brothers and sisters of his father, who came out to the United States. One of these, James G. Nolan, reached California in 1858, and died near Acampo on October 28, 1903. Michael came to the United States and was last heard from in Pennsylvania. Mary married and became Mrs. Coleman, and she died at Santa Rosa about sixteen years ago. Annie also married, and as Mrs. Crowley lived at Terre Haute, Ind. An uncle, James G. Nolan, came to America and pushed on as far west as St. Louis. There he took charge of a band of cattle, to be driven to Fort Leavenworth, Kans. After that he drove four mules to Salt Lake City. In 1858 he came overland to California and settled at Cucamonga, in San Bernardino County, and there he built the first house occupied by a white man. After working only two months on this house, he started north with John Dunn as a co-partner and fellow-traveler. They reached French Camp, and there dissolved partnership; and when they divided their capital, each took a half of twenty-five dollars. Uncle James then came to Stockton and accepted a job at $25 per month tendered him by John Welch, and this job he kept for two years. In 1862 he purchased 160 acres about two miles northwest of Acampo, and this came to be known as the old Nolan Home Ranch. On November 2, 1862, James G. Nolan married Miss Kate Burns, who had come to America from Ireland in 1854, and had settled for a while in New York, finally reaching California on October 9, 1861. Mr. Nolan was a Democrat, but he cast his first vote, in 1864, for the illustrious Republican, A. Lincoln.

When James P. Nolan came to Acampo, he worked for three years for his uncle, in order to get a good start in farming, and then he rented a grain ranch of 500 acres two miles from his uncle's, where he followed agricultural pursuits for five years. He next bought forty acres of the old Nolan ranch, for which he was required to pay only seventy dollars an acre, and later he added another ten acres. Three years ago, Mr. Nolan refused $13,000 for the ranch. The entire ranch was open land when Mr. Nolan bought it, and since then he has set out all the vineyard and done all the improving himself; and he has just completed an attractive ranch-house at a cost of $9,000. The ranch now consists of fifty acres of bearing vineyard, twenty-eight acres in bearing Tokays and eight acres in two-year-old Tokays, five acres in Cornichons, and one and one-half acres in Zinfandel grapes. The balance will soon be developed to vineyard.

At Lodi, on September 16, 1894, Mr. Nolan was married to Mary Rebecca Phillipi, a native of Pennsylvania and the daughter of Isaac and Tilly Phillipi. Her father was a millwright, carpenter and farmer, and came to California when she was two years old. He settled in 1873 in Sacramento County, where he cultivated several hundred acres planted to grain. He then removed to Shasta County and farmed for a couple of years, and so it happened that Mrs. Nolan went to the Shasta County schools. The family then made a trip to Oregon and Washington, and returned later to San Joaquin County. Locating at Lodi, he lived there for about five years, associated with Mr. Van Gelder in the nursery business. In 1892, Mr. Phillipi moved to Acampo, and here Mrs. Nolan lived until her marriage. He attained his sixty-second year, survived by his devoted wife, who was seventy-one years old when she died. Mr. Nolan's father, on the other hand, died in Ireland, and he was also sixty-two years old; and his mother also passed away in Ireland, leaving a family of six children, among whom Mr. Nolan was the fourth in the order of birth. Mr. and Mrs. Phillipi had twelve children, and of these only three are now living: Mrs. Nolan; Bessie, who has become Mrs. C. W. Thompson of Acampo; and Carrie, who became the wife of Harry Engels of Lockeford. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Nolan. Anna M. died in 1916. Maurice I. Nolan entered the United States service during the World War, on August 28, 1918, and was sent to Camp Lewis, where he was placed in Company L, 75th Infantry, 13th Division, and was made a corporal, and on February 1, 1919, he was honorably discharged from the Presidio at San Francisco, when he returned home and resumed the avocations of peace. James G. was married January 28, 1922, to Miss Nancy M. Baker, a graduate nurse from St. Joseph's Hospital, at Stockton. Carolyn is a graduate nurse from St. Joseph's Hospital at Stockton, and was married, February 4, 1923, to Mr. George L. Chapdelaine, a vineyardist at Lodi and Woodbridge. Frances lives at home. Mr. Nolan is a Democrat. He belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and is affiliated with the Lodi Lodge.

EDWIN S. VAN PELT.—A pioneer citizen of Stockton with many interesting memories of its earlier years, Edwin S. Van Pelt for thirty years conducted the thriving business of the River Express Company of Stockton, and his activities were closely linked with the days of Stockton's development from a small town to a prosperous, modern city. A native son, proud of his birth in the Golden State, Mr. Van Pelt was born at Mokelumne Hill, Calaveras County, on July 2, 1858, his parents being John W. and Sarah Jane (Kilton) Van Pelt, both of good old Eastern stock, the father a native of Long Island, N. Y., and the mother of Grafton, N. H. The former who was of Holland Dutch descent, descended from the early Knickerbocker families of New York, came to California in the early days of the mining excitement, and passed away when Edwin S. was a small child; the mother was married again to E. B. Cogswell, and they removed to a ranch at Bellota, San Joaquin County, where Mr. Cogswell died; after which the mother resided with her only child, Edwin S., until her death.

Mr. Van Pelt spent his boyhood days on this ranch, attending the neighborhood school, completing his education with a course at the Stockton Business College, and going back to the home ranch for a time. In 1886 he bought out the business of the River Express Company in Stockton, at that time only a small affair, one wagon being used to deliver freight in Stockton. Austin H. Kilton was his partner in those early days, but he later sold his interest to Mr. Van Pelt, who incorporated the business as the River Express Company, Inc. Mr. Van Pelt soon began the expansion of this pioneer business, handling freight on the steamers running from San Francisco to Stockton, up the Sacramento River to Sacramento, also to Napa and Vallejo. For some time he conducted an express line across the Bay to Berkeley and Alameda, taking freight at a very low rate, and in the early days did nearly all the express business between San Francisco and Stockton, and was the means of making the Wells Fargo Express Company reduce their rates, but even then the River Express Company held the business. This company was the pioneer in shipping furniture from Stockton to San Francisco without unloading, their wagons filled with household goods being driven onto the boat at Stockton and hauled to their destination in San Francisco. In Stockton five wagons were used in hauling and draying in connection with the express business, besides the equipment kept in the other cities. For this purpose they had offices in San Francisco, Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, Napa, Vallejo, Sacramento, Benicia and Antioch. They first began shipping parcels but the business grew rapidly and became so popular they enlarged it so they handled everything and made deliveries in all the cities. The people appreciated Mr. Van Pelt's service so his company had most of the express business at the points named. In this connection the Wells Fargo Company's contention was that the River Express Company could not pay losses but Mr. Van Pelt's company always paid the claims and when the steamer J. D. Peters was sunk in a collision in San Francisco Bay, November 2, 1898, although the California Navigation Company, owner of the steamer, was exempt by law, Mr. Van Pelt decided he wanted to pay the loss from the standpoint of equity and fairness and paid all the claims of his company, forty-five in number, amounting to about $2,600. For thirty years Mr. Van Pelt conducted the affairs of this company, building up a large, lucrative and successful business, and in April, 1916, he disposed of it, having accumulated a competency in the years of his activity in its affairs. For many years he was a stockholder in the Union Safe Deposit Bank and the Morris Plan Bank.

On the organization of the Security Building and Loan Association October 25, 1912, Mr. Van Pelt accepted the presidency, being well qualified for the position, and under his guidance it had a very rapid growth, conducted as it was along broad and liberal lines. However, wishing to retire from business, he resigned the presidency January 4, 1922.

Mr. Van Pelt is recognized as one of the best posted men in building loan matters in the state. He served as a director on the board of one of the other local building loan associations of Stockton for eighteen years and represented them several times as a delegate to the conventions of the California Building Loan League, a state organization. At the league's annual meeting held in Los Angeles in May, 1910, Mr. Van Pelt was elected president of the state organization. At that meeting he was honored by the league when Stockton was selected as the 1911 meeting place. While president of the state organization he succeeded in reorganizing it and was instrumental in creating more interest in league affairs by the associations throughout the state. In 1916 he was selected as the state league's representative to the annual convention of the United States League of Building Loan Associations held in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and attended the convention. Mr. Van Pelt has always taken an active interest in building loan association matters and always attends the annual meetings of the state organization. By reason of the fact that he is a past president, he has a voice on the floor in all annual meetings of the state league.

In 1911 Mr. Van Pelt built the Van apartments on North American Street, a modern two-story apartment house, up-to-date in every particular and always filled. He also purchased the residence next to his apartment house and remodeled it into four modern apartments and this fine properties are bringing him a splendid income. He has also recently purchased a twenty-acre orchard near Oakdale which is in charge of his son, Percy E. Van Pelt.

Mr. Van Pelt's first marriage occurred in Stockton uniting him with Miss Minnie May Davenport, born at Linden, whose parents were pioneers of that section. She passed away leaving two children: Percy E., who served nineteen months in the U. S. Navy during the World War is now in charge of the Oakdale orchard, and Arthur C., of Colfax. His second marriage at San Jose united him with Mrs. Eunice (Stilson) Taylor, who was born at Corvallis, Ore., a daughter of Frelinghuysen Stilson, born in Delaware County, N. Y., an early settler of Corvallis. A college man, he was a prominent educator in Oregon and was superintendent of schools of Benton County and one of the founders of the Oregon Agricultural College at Corvallis, where he spent his last days. Mrs. Van Pelt's mother was Jessie Marian Thompson, a native of Yamhill County, Ore., a daughter of Arthur Henry Thompson, a native of New York, who crossed the plains in 1847 over the old Oregon Trail. He settled at Astoria when there were only three families in that place and served as justice of the peace. He soon made his way to California, lured by the gold mines and was killed on Sutter Creek by the Indians. Mrs. Stilson also died in Oregon. Mrs. Van Pelt, the eldest of their five children, received her education in the public schools and at St. Helen's Hall, Portland. In Yakima, Wash., she was married to James G. Taylor, who was a prominent railroad man and became master mechanic of the Western Pacific Railroad at Stockton, a position he held until his death. Two children resulted from this union: Mrs. Grace Roles and Roy James.

Mr. Van Pelt is very prominent in fraternal life and is past grand of Stockton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., and for ten years served as treasurer of Charter Oak Lodge, K. of P., and is also past chancellor. He has seen many changes in this locality and well recalls in the early days of Stockton when he drove his team along Main Street in the winter time and the mud would be splashed all over the sidewalks, a decidedly different picture than Stockton of today, with its miles of well-kept streets and beautiful homes.

JOSIAH McKINDLEY.—A decidedly representative man in the Acampo district, one who has faith in the future of this region, and of whose life work the district is proud, is Josiah McKindley, a native of Dent County, Mo., where he was born on August 1, 1852, the son of Alexander and Sarah (Shealor) McKindley. His father came to California in 1853, crossing the great plains in a prairie schooner drawn by an ox-team; he was a farmer and provided a comfortable farm-home for his family of five children. He died here in 1861; but his devoted wife lived to see her seventy-fifth year. When Mr. McKindley reached El Dorado County, he went at once into the mines, where he was moderately successful. Then he moved to the vicinity of Volcano, in Amador County, and after being there a short time, removed to the vicinity of Healdsburg in Sonoma County, where he took up government land. He was contested by an old Spanish-grant holder, however, and lost out on his title; and this dissipated the fruits of years. In 1863, Mrs. McKindley was married a second time to a Mr. Strickland, of Volcano, who was both an hydraulic and a placer miner.

Josiah McKindley attended the district school near Healdsburg, and when yet a lad, started out for himself. He worked at all kinds of hard labor to get ahead; he lumbered, logged in the forest, and worked in the mines in Amador County, mining at Sutter near Volcano. When he was twenty years old, he took up teaming by contract, and not only provisions and lumber but did a general freighting from Volcano and other points to the mines. Later, he removed to Elk Grove, Cal., and followed grain-farming; he leased land, and for fourteen years planted it to grain, and at times cultivated as many as 4,000 acres at once. Then he sold out his stock and his implements, and in 1900 bought 196 acres just southeast of Acampo station—a grain-farm in a very run-down condition when he purchased it—and he immediately started to improve it in every way. He built a fine house and barn and all the necessary outbuildings for a successful ranch, and began setting the land out as both a vineyard and an orchard. From time to time he sold off portions as he developed them, in small lots, until he had reduced the property to about 116 acres, the finest portion of the ranch, on which he had his residence. Of this land, he had forty acres in peaches, four in apricots, six in cherries, twelve in prunes, and thirty in a vineyard, while the remainder was either devoted to yards or was vacant.

In the summer of 1922 Mr. McKindley sold off 106 acres of his farm. This leaves him 10.51 acres upon which he built a beautiful country residence in 1922-1923, where he and his family are comfortably and happily domiciled.

The marriage of Josiah McKindley and Miss Emma A. Mattice took place at Volcano on March 30, 1875, the bride being a native of Illinois, who was brought to California about 1856, when she was a little child, by her parents, Simon and Agnes (Stockton) Mattice—the former a miner at Volcano; and they had seven children. Mr. and Mrs. McKindley have nine children. Flora, Mrs. J. W. Pritchard, of Acampo; Daisy is Mrs. Agnew, of Fresno; Elizabeth is Mrs. E. Adams of Acampo; Sarah, or Sadie, is Mrs. S. Smithson, of Acampo; Ernest Mahlan lives at Lodi; William A., a government agent, is also there; Hazel passed away in her fourteenth year; Rosabelle is Mrs. Holt, of Acampo; and Edith, who resides with Mr. and Mrs. McKindley, is now Mrs. Story.

Mr. McKindley was president and manager of the Acampo Fruit Growers Association; and since it was reorganized, he has been a director and a vice-president. The new organization is known as the Acampo Growers Association.

FRANK E. HOGAN AND GEORGE HOGAN.—Well known in San Joaquin County as successful ranchers of the Lodi section, Frank E. and George Hogan own and operate a 126-acre orchard and vineyard located on the corner of Hogan Lane and Cherokee Lane, two and a half miles south of Lodi. Both were born on the old Hogan ranch, settled by their father in 1875. Frank E. Hogan was born on August 11, 1879, a son of George and Elizabeth (Bennett) Hogan, the former a native of New York and the latter of Illinois. The father, George Hogan, was taken by his parents to Ohio, when he was a small child. There they remained for a number of years, going thence, to Illinois, where his father, Edward Hogan, passed away in 1876. George Hogan was reared on a farm until thirteen years old, when he started out for himself, working five years on a farm. He then started for California, in 1864, crossing the plains with a train of about forty families. The trip occupied about four months and was a very pleasant one, as they had no sickness and lost no stock. George Hogan spent about a year on the John Dodge ranch on the Calaveras River, and then purchased land on the Waterloo road. This he sold at the end of a year, and went on the upper Stockton road, where he rented land and farmed for one year. In 1875, he purchased 380 acres of land three and a half miles from Lodi and ten miles from Stockton on the Cherokee Lane road, which was devoted principally to the production of hay, grain and stock; he also set out a small vineyard for family use. His marriage occurred in Illinois in 1861 and united him with Miss Elizabeth Bennett; and they were the parents of twelve children. He was a member of the Lodi, I. O. O. F. Lodge, No. 259, and also of the Lodi Grange, No. 92. George Hogan became a very prosperous farmer. He passed away on August 9, 1894, at the age of fifty-seven years; and the mother died June 2, 1899, aged fifty-nine years.

The two brothers, George and Frank E. Hogan, jointly own the home ranch which now contains 126 acres, 42 acres of which are in vineyard; the balance is devoted to almonds, pears and plums, with sixteen acres in alfalfa and some grain land. There are two large walnut trees on the place that were set out by the father forty-six years ago and each season yield a large crop; Frank E. Hogan lives in the house built by his father many years ago.

The marriage of Frank E. Hogan occurred in Lodi on November 8, 1908, and united him with Miss Mina Williams, a native of Henry County, Mo., and the daughter of James Alvis and Anna (Godwin) Williams. She is the third in a family of five children: Clyde, of Los Banos; Mrs. Hogan; Harry, a mechanic at Lodi; Marie, residing in Lodi; and Charles, living at Los Banos. Mrs. Hogan received her education in the grammar schools of Missouri, and in 1906 came to California. Her father lived in Lodi until 1910, when he removed to Los Banos, where he resides at the present time. Mr. and Mrs. Hogan are the parents of twin girls, Eleanor Lucille and Leonor Louise. In politics he is a Republican and he is a member of the N. S. G. W.

TILLMAN B. LITTLETON.—Public spirited to an unusual degree, Tillman B. Littleton, the present commissioner of finance, revenue and public supplies of Stockton, has for many years taken an active part in civic affairs, contributing of his time and wide experience to the cause of good government. His father lost his life in the Civil War, and in 1873 the mother brought her family to California. She was a member of the historic old Cameron family of Tennessee, and was herself a native of that state. Her parents were members of one of the early parties that started across the plains in 1847, and they were both killed by the Mormons in the the Mountain Meadow massacre.

Tillman B. Littleton was born September 1, 1856, in Jackson County, Ark., and accompanied his mother to California in 1873, the family locating on a ranch on Waterloo Road. He finished his education in Stockton and attended the old Stockton Business College, where F. R. Clarke was one of his teachers. He then went to work on ranches, working for wages until he was able to go into ranching on his own account. He rented considerable land and was one of the successful wheat raisers, one year producing 6,000 sacks, which he hauled to the Sperry Flour Mills, receiving one dollar a bushel for it. Later he purchased a grain ranch of 160 acres on Waterloo Road, where he made his home for some time. In 1897 he disposed of this place and since then he has made his home in Stockton, being closely identified with its affairs since that time.

At first, on coming to Stockton, Mr. Littleton bought and sold hay, and later, becoming more and more interested in civic affairs he has devoted the greater part of his time to public work. He was elected superintendent of streets and held this office for one term and then for two years served as harbor master. Next he entered the street and sewer contracting business, building miles of macadam and gravel streets in Stockton, and in one summer he built $24,000 worth of sewers for the city. Entering again into the commercial life of the city, Mr. Littleton bought out the Yolland Ice and Coal Company and for ten years conducted it with success, selling out when he was elected to his present office in 1918 for a term of four years. There were ten candidates for this office, but Mr. Littleton was elected at the primaries, receiving more votes than all the other candidates put together, a record to be justly proud of, and showing the high esteem in which he is held by his constituency through the splendid service he had rendered in other public posts.

Mr. Littleton's first marriage united him with Miss Katie Hayes, a native of Missouri, and one son, Roy J., now employed in the Central Bank at Oakland, was born to them. He is married and has two children, Frances and Gloria. Mrs. Littleton passed away in 1906 and Mr. Littleton was married a second time to Miss Kathryn Harvey, a native of California, and they have a daughter, Alice Loraine. In addition to his busy life as a public official, Mr. Littleton is prominent in lodge circles, being a member of the Elks, Foresters of America, Loyal Order of Moose, and the Truth Lodge of the Odd Fellows. Politically he is a Democrat.

LORENZ SEIFERT.—A trusted employee of the Wagner Leather Company who holds the unusual record of almost a half century's continuous service with this concern, is Lorenz Seifert, an esteemed citizen of San Joaquin County since the early days of 1870. Mr. Seifert is a native of Bavaria, Germany, born there April 1, 1851. His father, Bernhardt Seifert, was a fruit grower and a cloth manufacturer who married Barbara Krimm, Lorenz, being the second oldest of their nine children, only three of whom are living. Besides Lorenz there is Bernhardt, who lived in Germany and a sister, Mrs. Roth, who resides adjoining our subject. Reared in the farming district, where he received a good education in the local schools, the early years of his life were spent in various occupations—in the meat business, on farms and in a furnace factory, and traveling on the road for the latter.

In June, 1870, Mr. Seifert came to the United States and located at Buffalo, N. Y., where he worked in a brickyard until December before coming to California. For several years after arriving at Stockton he worked for the Pioneer Tannery, and in 1874 he entered the employ of the Wagner Leather Company. He learned all the branches of the tanning business and became skilled and proficient in the handling of leather, so that for close to half a century he has been one of the company's most capable and appreciated employees, still active in its business.

In Stockton, in December, 1877, Mr. Seifert was married to Miss Lena Fetters, born in Bavaria, and they reared a fine family of children, all upright, industrious citizens and assets to the communities where they reside. They are: Mrs. Lena Eldringham of Acampo has one child; Elizabeth, the wife of Walter Templeton of Stockton, is the mother of two children; Gussie, Mrs. Joseph Lynch of San Francisco; Dora is the wife of Henry Green, a contractor of Stockton, and they are the parents of two children: Mrs. Anna Ellis of Stockton, and one son, Christopher Seifert, is also with the Wagner Leather Company. Beloved by her family and many friends, Mrs. Seifert passed away in 1914. In the early years of his residence here Mr. Seifert was a member of the Turnverein, and he is now affiliated with the Druids. In religious circles he gives his support to the German Lutheran Church, contributing generously to its worthy causes. In 1876 he bought his lot at 1228 East Oak Street and built the comfortable residence, where he has resided ever since. He has built several other places which he has disposed of.

LOUIS GERLACH.—How unremitting, intelligent industry inevitably brings its own reward is well illustrated in the career of the late Louis Gerlach, pioneer cattleman of Stockton, who passed away at his home at 231 East Flora Street on June 6, 1921. He was one of Stockton's best known citizens and known throughout the West as one of the richest and most extensive operators in cattle and grazing lands in the country, his death bringing great sorrow to a large circle of friends in San Joaquin County and in Nevada, where his land holdings were very large. He was born in Prussia, Germany, April 25, 1835, and when only a young lad was apprenticed to learn the butcher's trade. Early in life he formed a determination to seek a land of greater opportunities and when seventeen years old left for America. He first settled in Philadelphia, Pa., and worked at his trade for two years; then removed to Stockton, arriving in 1855, and for five years worked in the pioneer butcher shop of Henry Hodgkin; then for six years he ran his own shop at the corner of Hunter and Weber avenues; then sold out and engaged in stock trading. He then entered into partnership with Jacob Wagner, the founder of the Wagner Meat Company, and was thus occupied for about twenty years. He retired from the retail business in 1898, selling out to his partner, and devoted himself exclusively to stockraising in Nevada. Mr. Gerlach owned thousands of acres of land in Nevada when the Western Pacific railroad was built and as the road traversed his lands their value was enhanced greatly. Previous to the coming of the railroad his cattle were driven 100 miles to Reno for shipment. With the completion of the railroad a station named Gerlach in his honor was established on his property and this shipping point became a prominent one. Mr. Gerlach employed a small army of men and to provide them with all the necessities and comforts he established a trading store there. Later the station became a division point from which railroad operations have since been directed. Until his health became impaired Mr. Gerlach directed his vast estate and its affairs personally, making frequent trips to Nevada for this purpose. He knew every foot of his holdings, arranged all details for the management of his business and was an executive of rare ability. He was held in affection by all the men employed by him and the suggestion of the humblest was given an attentive ear by the great operator, who had the faculty of winning the confidence and respect of his men. Mr. Gerlach was intensely loyal to a friend or faithful worker. Generous, big-hearted, loyal and true, much of his business was transacted without written contracts. His word was accepted and his gesture concluded deals as finally as written documents. At one time he owned 5,000 acres of grain and grazing land on the San Joaquin River; this he later sold. His largest holdings are 30,000 acres of grazing land in Washoe County, Nevada, and northern Modoc and Lassen counties, California. He has run as high as 12,000 head of cattle on this range. At the present time there are 15,000 head of sheep and 5,000 head of cattle on this large range, which he has owned since 1884. The present holdings in San Joaquin County are 1,500 acres on the Lower Sacramento Road, which is fine grazing land partly under irrigation. In partnership with a son-in-law, A. B. Lang, he owned 700 acres of grazing land on Cherokee Lane near Stockton. Showing the low price of land in Stockton in pioneer days, he purchased from Captain Weber 400 acres of land at $4 per acre, now a part of the residence portion of Stockton. Some four years ago, with his daughter Mrs. Baldwin, his son-in-law, A. B. Lang, and Mrs. Smith, he bought the Hale block at the corner of Main and San Joaquin streets; they later purchased the old Presbyterian Church adjoining the building on the south and an addition has been built to the block. He helped to organize two banks in Stockton, one being the First National, serving on the board of directors until his death, and was its vice-president. For nearly a half century Mr. Gerlach was one of the heaviest stockholders and a director of the Stockton Savings Bank, now the City Bank.

Political life did not appeal to him, but he was once persuaded to run for office of supervisor, serving from 1880 to 1884, then was elected county treasurer of San Joaquin County by an immense majority on the Democratic ticket in a strong Republican county, serving from 1884 to 1888.

Mr. Gerlach was married in Stockton, September 18, 1862, to Miss Amelia P. Mersfelder, a native of Baltimore, Md., who survives him. She is the daughter of Louis and Amelia (Haupt) Mersfelder, who were born in Germany and came to Baltimore where they met and married. In 1853 they came to California via Panama, landing in San Francisco from the steamer John L. Stevens. They located in Stockton, where he opened the Eureka Bakery on Weber Avenue between Eldorado and Hunter. Later he bought property on Channel Street between Hunter and San Joaquin and moved his bakery there, continuing there until he sold out and retired. The bakery is still being operated under the same name, the Eureka Bakery.

The father died here at eighty-two years and his wife died five months before him, aged seventy-two years. Three of their children are living; besides Mrs. Gerlach there are Mrs. Louisa Liegenger of San Francisco, and Mrs. Laura Hahn of Stockton. Amelia Mersfelder as a child came with her parents via Panama and she attended the public schools in Stockton. The young couple first resided on Channel and Hunter streets for nine years, then moved into the present home at 231 East Flora Street. Their union was blessed with eight children: Emma is the wife of Herbert Baldwin of Stockton; Clara, Mrs. John Kearns of Oakland; Rose, the wife of L. E. Doan, died in Los Angeles; Nellie is the wife of T. V. Morris of San Francisco; Louis F. died at two years of age; Fred C., manager of the Gerlach Live Stock Company in Nevada; Laura F. passed away in 1908; Ethel is the wife of A. B. Lang of Stockton. Mr. Gerlach had four grandchildren: Harold Kearns, L. E. Doan Jr., Louis G. Baldwin and Dorothy B. Lang. Mr. Gerlach was eighty-five years old when he passed away. He was an expert fireman and was always a Democrat in national politics but independent in local matters. As early as 1895 he incorporated his holdings in Nevada as the Gerlach Livestock Company of which he was president until he died. This corporation is still held by the family and the business being managed by his son, Fred C. His widow is now the president and since his death she continues to occupy the old home surrounded by her children, who assist her in every way to manage the offices left by her husband.

WILLIAM A. SPOONER.—A career of more than ordinary interest and prosperity is that of William A. Spooner, among the most successful viticulturists of the Lodi section, whose expert knowledge of the grape industry has been of great benefit to the community. A native of San Joaquin County, he was born at Stockton, Cal., on January 10, 1878. His father, Alden Spooner, a native of Massachusetts, left his native state when seventeen years of age, with a party of friends who chartered a small whaling schooner sailing from New Bedford, Mass., in the fall of 1849. They sailed around the Horn to California and after landing in San Francisco, where they obtained additional supplies, sailed up the San Joaquin River and arrived at Weber Point, near Stockton, on July 4, 1850. He spent some time in the mines in Tuolumne County and later ran a general merchandise store there. Upon his return to Stockton, he went into partnership with Mr. Mix in the operation of a planing mill under the firm name of Spooner & Mix. Later he plied his trade of ship joiner with the California Navigation & Improvement Company, and also with the P. A. Buell Company, and became a very familiar figure on the water front for many years. He had married Miss Eliza S. Williams while residing in Stockton, and on September 17, 1894, they removed to Lodi, where they purchased a fruit ranch on Cherokee Lane, on the Mokelumne River. This he later sold to good advantage and moved onto the Williams ranch, where he passed away. He joined the Odd Fellows in San Francisco and was a charter member of Truth Lodge of Odd Fellows in Stockton. There are two children in his family: Clarence E., of Stockton, and William A., our subject. The mother is still living, making her home in Stockton.

As a boy, William A. Spooner attended the Weber and Fremont schools in Stockton, and later was graduated from the Lodi high school. After finishing school, he assisted his father on the ranch for a time, but in 1901 he entered the employ of Henderson Brothers, hardware dealers, as a clerk. In those days the business was small and he was the only clerk. In 1906, the business was incorporated, and three years later the corporation absorbed the Henderson interests and Mr. Spooner became the president of the company, where he remained for eleven years, during which time it became one of the largest hardware firms in the county, at the present time employing twenty men. On July 1, 1920, Mr. Spooner sold his interest and retired from the firm to devote his full time and attention to his realty interests. He is associated with Louis Sanguinetti and James G. Anderson in an eighty-seven-acre vineyard of Tokay and wine grapes, which requires a vast amount of care to bring the most satisfying results.

The marriage of Mr. Spooner united him with Miss Mary L. Anderson, a native Californian, a daughter of James A. and Mary L. (Hummer) Anderson, early settlers of the San Joaquin Valley. They are the parents of one child, William Anderson Spooner. Fraternally, he is past master of Lodi Lodge of Masons, No. 256, and a member of Stockton Chapter, No. 28, R. A. M., of the Stockton Elks, No. 218, and Lodi Parlor, No. 18, N. S. G. W. In July, 1922, Mr. Spooner was appointed a member of the city council to succeed C. A. Rich, and is chairman of the Public Utilities Committee.

THOMAS JEFFERSON GILL.—A native son of the great Golden state, who, by hard, intelligent work has won a place for himself in the business world, is Thomas Jefferson Gill, residing with his family in Stockton. He was born near Liberty, San Joaquin County, on his father's farm, February 17, 1862, a son of W. J. and Elizabeth (Coffer) Gill, the former a native of Lexington, Ky., and the latter of Illinois. His father, who was a minister of the Christian Church, crossed the plains with an ox-team in 1852. He purchased the old Jahant ranch of 160 acres near Liberty and engaged in stockraising; later he traded the ranch and moved to Inyo County and engaged in stockraising there until his death at Independence; the mother is also deceased. They were the parents of five children of whom three are now living: Thomas Jefferson, the subject of this review; Mrs. W. J. McCowan, of Portland, Ore.; H. D., of Lone Pine; George M., deceased, was Superior Judge of Inyo County; Lafayette, a prominent attorney of Riverside, is also deceased.

In 1885 Thomas Jefferson Gill returned to San Joaquin County where he has made his home ever since. His marriage, which occurred in Stockton, united him with Miss Lulu M. Harris, a native of Stockton, where her father was a pioneer blacksmith. Mr. and Mrs. Gill are the parents of one son, Claude M., an attorney. The latter was educated in Stockton, was graduated from the Stockton high school; later studied law and was admitted to practice in 1909; he is a member of the Masonic order. He is married and has one son, Melvin C., also born in Stockton, thus making three generations of the Gill family who were born in that city. Mr. Gill is a strong Republican, and co-operates in all movements for social uplift, as he shows his public-spiritedness in endeavoring to raise civic standards.

PLINY E. HOLT.—When the history of motorized artillery is written, Pliny E. Holt and the Stockton plant of The Holt Manufacturing company will be accredited with much of the success in modernizing the United States field and coast artillery. Pliny E. Holt was born in Loudon, Merrimack County, N. H. on August 27, 1872, a son of W. Harrison Holt, the eldest of the four brothers who were the founders of The Holt Manufacturing Company, the other brothers being Charles H., A. Frank, and Benjamin, sons of William R. Holt, who owned and operated a saw mill and lumber business in Merrimack County, N. H. W. Harrison and Charles H. Holt came to California in the late '60s. These two brothers saw the opportunity to bring hardwood lumber from the east and sell it at a profit, and in 1871 the Holt Brothers Company was established in San Francisco, conducting a wholesale business in hardwood lumber and wagon wheels. W. Harrison Holt returned to New England to handle the eastern end of the business. In 1873 a factory was built in Concord, N. H., for the manufacture of spokes, hubs, felloes, wheels, bodies and running gear, and in 1883 the Stockton factory was established for the assembling of the wheels. In the meantime W. Harrison Holt had removed to Tiffin, Ohio, to look after the lumber interests of the company, which were under his personal supervision until the early '80s, when he retired from active interest in the company and moved to Minnesota, where he resided until shortly before his death which occurred in Stockton in 1903.

A. J. Gill

Pliny E. Holt was ten years of age when his parents removed to Minnesota, and as a lad attended the public schools and when he had finished high school, entered the University of Minnesota, working his way through by conducting an electrical repair shop in the afternoons and attending his classes in the forenoons. On February 15, 1896, he became associated with The Holt Manufacturing company and from that date until 1906 he was connected with the company in various capacities, generally in the engineering department. During these ten years, he was closely associated with his uncle, Benjamin Holt, the president of the company and its inventive genius, and took a very active and important part in all the experimental and development work of the company, the "Caterpillar" Tractor being the principal product.

In 1905 Pliny E. Holt became the president of the Aurora Engine Company, which was later incorporated in The Holt Manufacturing Company, this company supplying the gas engines used in the Holt gas tractors. During the years of 1905-09 he was treasurer of the Houser-Haines Company of Stockton. In 1909 he went to Peoria, Ill., and established the Holt Caterpillar Company and purchased the Colean plant for the manufacture of the "Caterpillar" Tractor. During the year of 1913, a consolidation was brought about whereby The Holt Manufacturing Company absorbed the Holt Caterpillar Company of Peoria, Ill., the Houser-Haines Manufacturing Company of Stockton, the Daniel Best Manufacturing Company of San Leandro and the Aurora Engine Company of Stockton. Mr. Holt then returned to Stockton and was made vice-president and general manager of the company.

Early in the great war, Mr. Holt retired from the management of the company and decided to take a well-earned rest, but when the United States entered the war he went to Washington, D. C., to offer his services to the government in the emergency and remained there in charge of important work until after the armistice was signed.

England and France had already adopted the use of the "Caterpillar" Tractor for hauling their heavy artillery and supplies and this innovation in military equipment had proven so successful that the use of these tractors by our own army was determined upon as one of the very first steps in this country's preparation to participate in the conflict.

During the time Mr. Holt was in Washington, he not only supervised the design and building of the "Caterpillar"—ten ton—five ton—and two and one-half ton artillery tractors, but also made the preliminary study of the one-man tank, which was later built by the Ford company. He also supervised the work of preliminary design of the 150-ton tank and started work on the 1,500-ton tank, at the request of the Naval Consulting board, which work was finally completed in conjunction with the engineers of the Westinghouse company.

In his early connection with the Government work, Mr. Holt continued his connection with The Holt Manufacturing Company and his association with the work was in the nature of an offering of his personal services and those of the company for any disposition that might be of great value to the Government. Later, as Mr. Holt's mechanical and inventive genius came to be more fully recognized, it became desirable for him to sever his connection with the company for the remainder of the war and devote his entire time and energy to Government work. He was offered a commission, which, after considerable consideration, he declined, feeling that he could be of greater service in a civilian capacity. Gen. C. C. Williams, Chief of Ordnance, then appointed him to serve in a civilian capacity as chairman of the board organized to handle the production of the "Caterpillar" Artillery program. This appointment became effective July 3, 1918, and Mr. Holt immediately took up the work of developing the "Caterpillar" idea from that of a tractor used to haul artillery, to that of a self-contained unit, the gun being mounted directly on the tractor. The first of this kind was the "Caterpillar" Mark I—Gun Mount, which carried an eight-inch Howitzer, weighed 58,000 pounds and had a road speed of one to four miles per hour. The "Mark II" and "Mark III" were developed later. The "Mark IV" was a slight departure from the other models. The armistice was signed about the time the first four models were completed. The astounding success of these machines indicated that they would constitute the coming type of artillery.

Mr. Holt then returned to California to continue this work at the Stockton plant of The Holt Manufacturing Company, and the "Mark VII" was designed and built there during 1919. This mount carried a seventy-five millimeter gun and achieved a speed of eighteen miles per hour. Later this mount was equipped with a water-proofed motor, which enabled it to travel at a considerable depth under water, making it possible to cross rivers. The "Mark VI" was also completed early in 1921 and in test runs reached a speed of thirty-one miles per hour, a test run being made from Stockton to San Francisco and return which was successful. Firing tests of the Howitzer were successfully made at Fort Scott. It means much to Stockton to be the home of such an achievement and this city may well feel proud of Pliny E. Holt and the service he has given his country. As a result of his zeal and loyalty, America today is in a position, if occasion should demand, to launch a war program of artillery construction which no other nation in the world can match on short notice.

Mr. Holt is now in charge of all engineering work at the Holt plant, taking up the work of the late Benjamin Holt. He was the first president of the Good Roads Association of California and is a pioneer in the development of highways which have made California famous all over the world. During the years when he was first connected with The Holt Manufacturing Company in an executive capacity, he was vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce of Stockton.

Mr. Holt's marriage united him with Miss Florence Guernsey, a native of Stockton and a daughter of a San Joaquin County pioneer, and they are the parents of four children, Pliny Guernsey, Frank Harrison, Richard Eastman, and Harriet. Fraternally he belongs to the Morning Star Blue Lodge of Masons and all branches of Masonry, including Aahmes Temple of Oakland; is a member of the Stockton Elks, the Rotary Club, being one of the first members to join the local order; a member of the Stockton Golf & Country Club, the Yosemite Club and the Union League Club and Transportation Club of San Francisco.

EDWARD P. WILSON.—A prosperous and energetic farmer whose activities along agricultural and viticultural lines have brought him success is Edward P. Wilson, on the Waterloo road. His birth occurred in Madison, Wis., February 14, 1876, the third child in a family of thirteen children born to Robert Jacob and Mary (Conlin) Wilson, the former a native of Wisconsin and the latter of Massachusetts. Robert Wilson's parents settled in Wisconsin in early days and there Robert grew to manhood and took part in the Black Hawk and Mexican wars. He owned and conducted a wholesale grocery business in Madison for many years and passed away there at the age of seventy-four. The mother of our subject is still living. Edward P. Wilson received his education in the schools of his native city, then spent two years at the University of Wisconsin, where he pursued a mining engineering course. At twenty-three years of age he came West and engaged in mining engineering at Thunder Mountain, Idaho, and at various points in the northwest.

In Stockton, July 13, 1905, Mr. Wilson was married to Miss Bertha L. Jones, a native of San Joaquin County, born five miles from Stockton on the Upper Sacramento Road, a daughter of Hiram M. and Lovina S. (Morton) Jones. Hiram M. Jones was born in White Hall, N. Y., and in the winter of 1849 crossed the plains with an ox team to California; subsequently he made fourteen trips to the East, bringing back stock each trip. He was engaged in mining and farming and also kept a store in the early days. For two years he lived in Prescott, Ariz., and he is known as one of the men who laid out the site of that mining town. Hiram M. Jones' first marriage occurred in Santa Clara County and four children were born of this marriage: Filmore and Fremont are twins and both live in San Joaquin County; Mary and Semore are deceased. Mr. Jones next moved to San Francisco, where he conducted a dairy business for some time, then about 1873 came to San Joaquin County and settled five miles northeast of Stockton, where he thereafter resided. The ranch on the Upper Sacramento Road was the home place and he also owned 480 acres at Escalon and a third ranch of 300 acres at Linden. After the death of his first wife, Mr. Jones was married the second time, and Mrs. Wilson is the only child of this marriage. Hiram M. Jones lived to be seventy-nine years old, dying June 26, 1905, and his wife died when seventy-six, February 14, 1917. Mrs. Wilson was educated in the Stockton grammar and the San Francisco Poly high school and at the death of her parents inherited the home place, where she now makes her home.

During the Spanish-American War, Mr. Wilson was a member of Company G, First Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry in the Fifth Army Corps under General Shafter; later he was placed in the Seventh Army Corps under General FitzHugh Lee. During 1898-99 he was in the Cuban campaign, entering as a private and was advanced to second lieutenant. After the war, Mr. Wilson removed to Tonopah, Nev., where he became mining engineer for the Tonopah Mining Company; at that time this company owned the largest silver producing mine in the West. In 1913, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson removed to the ranch where they now reside, consisting of 120 acres of rich land, a portion of which is in vineyard and the balance is devoted to grain raising. A system of irrigation furnishes ample water for the entire 120 acres. Mr. Wilson served as assemblyman for two terms in Nye County, Nev., and he is fraternally connected with the B. P. O. Elks No. 1062 of Tonopah, Nev., and politically is a staunch Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are the parents of one son, Pliny Edward Wilson.

ELISHA HOLT FINE.—In a history of agricultural development of San Joaquin County mention should be made of Elisha Holt Fine, that worthy pioneer who began his farming activities in the county fifty years ago. His death on March 14, 1921, marked the passing of a progressive and influential citizen of the Linden district of the county. His career was crowned with a gratifying success which he had honorably won and his exemplary life could well be imitated by future generations. His birth occurred in Lafayette County, Mo., November 28, 1836, on his father's farm, where he was reared to young manhood. In April, 1853, the family started across the plains to California, driving a herd of cattle and five months later, in September, they arrived in San Jose with about eighty head, having lost a great many. They encountered considerable inconvenience crossing the plains on account of the scarcity of water, but reached their destination with no serious trouble with the Indians. The family settled at Mayfield, where they remained for a few years, then moved to Contra Costa County and located in Moraga Valley, where they acquired extensive grazing land and engaged in the stock business on a large scale; Mr. Fine for years ran his stock in San Luis Obispo and Tulare counties maintaining a large number of cattle. During the dry years of 1864-5 he suffered severe reverses, but with true, pioneer spirit he met and overcame them.

The marriage of Mr. Fine occurred in Tulare County, September 22, 1864, and united him with Miss Martha Ann Blair, also a native of Missouri, born January 9, 1847. At ten years of age she accompanied her parents across the plains to California, her father, Rev. Jonathan Blair, being a Presbyterian minister. They landed in Red Bluff, Cal., but their destination was the Sonoma Valley. Mr. Fine continued to reside in Moraga Valley until 1872, when he sold out and located on a ranch at Linden, where he reared his family of six daughters and one son. When Mr. Fine came to the ranch some of it was heavily timbered, which in time he cleared and in 1895 he planted orchards of prunes, peaches and apricots. The home ranch consists of 220 acres northeast of Linden and the improvements and developments which Mr. Fine accomplished on this ranch were indicative of his industry and thoroughness. He served as a trustee of the Linden school and was an honored member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge. His family were members of the Methodist Church, South, of Linden. On March 12, 1920, the home was darkened by the passing of the wife and mother and on March 14, 1921, Mr. Fine passed away, sincerely mourned by the entire community where he had labored so faithfully for forty-nine years. After the parents' death the ranch was divided among the heirs, the portion with the family residence being now the property of Miss Lena

E. H. Fine

Martha Ann Fine

E. Fine and her thirty-three-acres, nearly all orchard, is among the choicest properties in this section of the county, and she is a worthy representative of this honored pioneer.

IRA W. LADD.—Passing away in his seventy-ninth year, Ira W. Ladd left behind him a record of success and great worth and esteem among all with whom he had had relations of a business or personal character, and it is safe to say that few of the California pioneers passed their careers in greater usefulness to home and community than did Mr. Ladd. He came to California seventy years ago, when a lad of about fifteen years, but sturdy and independent, and from the first showed his ability to paddle his own canoe. He came to California with his brother, the late George S. Ladd, in 1852, coming via Panama from Vermont, his native home and the abode of his ancestors for some generations back. His father, Seneca Ladd, had come from Vermont to California in 1850, but had returned to old home state in the same year that his sons ventured out to seek their fortunes in the Golden West. Seneca Ladd remained in Vermont until his death, in 1868. His wife was Parmelia Esterbrook, and they were both natives of the Green Mountain state.

Ira W. Ladd was born in Caledonia County, Vt., February 26, 1837. He was deprived of his mother's tender care when he was nine years old, and all conditions worked together to push him out of the home nest at an early age, thus he became very self reliant. He lived in his native state receiving a good education and when he was fifteen years old, he joined his brother on the ever memorable voyage to the Western Coast. For several years after arriving in this state he was engaged in various lines of employment. In 1856 he came to Stockton, and for some years thereafter was engaged principally in freighting from that point to the Southern mines. During the '70s he located on the ranch now owned by his daughter, Lillie I. Ladd, where with the exception of a few years spent in Stockton he resided and centered his activity until his death in 1916. The home ranch comprises 368 acres of land under an excellent state of cultivation, and he also owned 800 acres in Solano County as well as land in Fresno and Merced counties.

He was married on March 7, 1858, to Miss Emily J. Southerland of Stockton, a daughter of Jacob Southerland, deceased, a well-known pioneer of San Joaquin County. Mrs. Ladd accompanied her parents across the plains to California in 1852, coming by the old southern route. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ladd; Lillie I. is the owner of the Ladd homestead near Stockton; Addie A., Mrs. W. C. Salmon, deceased, survived by two sons, Ira T. residing at Coalinga, and William L. who is manager on the Ladd homestead, having made his home with his aunt, Miss Lillie Ladd, since his mother's death when he was three years of age; Fred G. is married and has two children and they reside at Coalinga; Emily J., Mrs. Walter Vincent, has three children and they reside in Stockton; Ira G. is deceased. Mrs. Ladd passed away on May 21, 1908, at the age of sixty-seven, while Mr. Ladd survived her until he was seventy-nine years old, passing away on March 8, 1916, at his beautiful ranch home southeast of Stockton. Mr. Ladd served as a trustee of the neighboring Weber school district for many years, and always took an active part in the educational affairs of his locality. He was a Republican in politics and fraternally was affiliated with Stockton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., and was well known through his section of the state. He was a member of the San Joaquin Society of California Pioneers and Mrs. Ladd was one of the charter members of the auxiliary of the same society. Since her father's death Miss Lillie I. Ladd has successfully handled the extensive interests left by her beloved parent and is worthily perpetuating the Ladd name in the locality where he was so long an honored citizen. She has a fully equipped wireless station at her residence on the homestead, demonstrating that she is far ahead of many in seeing the value of modern science in business as well as pleasure.

HARVEY E. VICKROY.—Widely known as one of the most experienced and progressive of building contractors in San Joaquin County, Harvey E. Vickroy, of 1122 North Commerce Street, Stockton, never wants for advance commissions to keep him and his force of expert workmen busy. He was born on a farm in Warren County, Iowa, on November 20, 1875, and reared and educated at Chariton, in the Hawkeye State. He learned his trade of a carpenter under Benjamin Frazer, and at that occupation worked in Omaha, Neb., for a year and a half. Arriving at Oakland, on October 1, 1906, he built a number of fine homes there, and also two apartment houses for A. V. Faight, now of Stockton, and on August 4, 1909, removed to the latter city, where he has since followed his line of work. He first worked for Dockendorff, the contractor, and as foreman had charge of the construction of the Congregational Church on Park Street, and also of the second addition to the Moline Plow Building.

In 1910 Mr. Vickroy entered business on his own account, and soon was called upon to put up a four-flat apartment house in San Jose. He next erected both the Arlington Hotel and the Coffee Club building in Stockton, and then he formed a partnership with A. J. McPhee, under the firm name of McPhee & Vickroy, and as partners they built the Griffith Block, the Carlton Block, and the McCoy Block, at the corner of Market and Stanislaus streets. They also constructed a block at East and Main Streets, the Salvation Army Building on South San Joaquin Street, an eight-flat building at the corner of California and Park streets, two residences in Willow Street, and still other apartment houses. Then Messrs. Vickroy & McPhee dissolved partnership, and our subject operated alone. He erected the Stockwell three-story brick block, and a number of houses for himself, which he built to sell. In 1920 he formed with E. L. Morrison another partnership, under the firm name of Morrison & Vickroy, and they erected the four-story brick block known as the White Hotel, a two-story brick block in El Dorado Street, at the junction with California, while one of their best specimens of work in construction was the new Odd Fellows Building, completed in the fall of 1921. This is located on South Hunter Street, and is one of the best buildings in the city. The firm have also built residences in Tuxedo Park and the Sperry Addition, and a four-flat building near the Sampson Iron Works. Mr. Vickroy has also operated in the Delta district. He built the Waukeen Hotel at Manteca, the best building in that city, and in the same progressive town erected several houses and a business block for Ed Powers. On August 1, 1922, the firm became Vickroy and De Atley, composed of our subject and O. C. De Atley, the latter being an expert builder of concrete buildings. This firm has at present under construction the building of J. C. Renny on Sutter and Miner streets which will be occupied as the new Buick Garage. They are also building the large three-story brick at South California and Lafayette streets for the Italian-American Realty Company and several other structures, business and residences. They employ from fifteen to forty men.

At Leon, Iowa, in 1905, Mr. Vickroy and Miss Caroline L. Smith, a native of Iowa, were married; and nine children add to their comfortable home.

OTTO M. VOGELSANG.—A worthy citizen of Stockton, who has a record of continuous service with one firm of thirty-eight years, is Otto M. Vogelsang, the owner and proprietor of the James T. Mills Hardware Company, 30 East Main Street. He was born in Peetersburg, Calaveras County, Cal., on December 12, 1864. He received his education in the country schools and his first job was herding sheep for three months for Fred Beal. In 1882 he went to Stockton and was employed with James T. Mills, and there he learned the tinsmith and plumbers' trade; later he became the foreman of all outside work. Upon the death of Mr. Mills in 1900 he assumed the management of the business. Mr. Mills' daughter, Miss M. Alice Mills, succeeded to the business and when she passed away in 1920 she willed the entire stock and fixtures of the hardware store, free of debt, and $3,000 in cash to Mr. Vogelsang, a fitting tribute for his faithful and efficient years of service to her father and herself. Miss Mills was graduated from the Stockton high school in 1871, this being the first graduating class from that institution.

James T. Mills was a native of Hartford, Conn. When he was a young boy he ran away from home and went to sea; he sailed around the Horn to California in 1849 and in 1850 settled in Stockton and opened a plumbing and hardware store, the first of its kind in Stockton. He was a fine mechanic and worked on many of the first buildings to be erected in Stockton; among them the Catholic Church, the First Presbyterian Church, the First Methodist Church, and the first court house erected in Stockton. He was active in civic affairs, serving on the city council, the city board of education; was a member of the Volunteer Fire Department and Exempt Firemen's Association; he was a charter member of Charity Lodge of Odd Fellows. He was an active member of the Congregational Church, and a strong temperance advocate, and was beloved by all who knew him.

The marriage of Mr. Vogelsang united him with Miss Nancy Gertrude Wyatt, a native of Stockton, Cal., whose parents were pioneers of that section. They are the parents of two sons. Harold A. is secretary to the chief of police of Stockton. During the World War he was sent to France and became machine-gun and bayonet instructor and during his service of eighteen months drilled 40,000 men; he was one of five who went from San Joaquin County to serve as instructors during the war. Ralph Leslie, formerly treasurer of the Yosemite Theater, is now a stage carpenter. He served the last two months of the war in the motor truck division at Tacoma, Wash. While the greater portion of his time is consumed by his business, Mr. Vogelsang can be counted upon to support all public-spirited movements for the good of the community.

CHARLES A. BACON.—Besides having the honor of being a native son of San Joaquin County, Charles A. Bacon is also the only son of a pioneer family who came to this State in 1863, and was born on the Bacon ranch, three miles from Lockeford on July 25, 1868. His father was Eugene Charles Bacon, a native of New York, and a son of Samuel C. and Finetta Bacon, natives of Connecticut and New York State respectively. Samuel C. died in 1861 and Finetta Bacon died in 1852. In 1854 Eugene Charles Bacon left home and traveled through many western and southern states, following engineering on the Illinois and Mississippi rivers for a period of nine years. He arrived in San Francisco in 1863, but after four months went to Virginia City, Nev., where he was employed by the Gould & Curry Company for three years, then removed to San Joaquin County, Cal., settled on the ranch that became known as the Bacon Ranch and followed ranching and stock-raising until his death in 1913, aged seventy-seven.

In 1867, Mr. Bacon was married to Miss Ellen Vincent, daughter of Capt. Ashmit B. Vincent, who came to California as master of a sailing vessel, around Cape Horn in 1850. Upon his arrival here he spent two years in the mines, then went to Mokelumne Hill and was engaged in gardening until 1855 when he removed to San Joaquin County where he bought a squatter's claim to 160 acres of land from Merchant and Moore. This he cleared and farmed until his death in November, 1870. He had made arrangements to have Mrs. Vincent join him in California with their two daughters, Ellen and Cora, who came in 1853 on a clipper ship around the Horn. Mrs. Vincent died on January 23, 1861. Mrs. Eugene Charles Bacon is still living on the home place near Lockeford and at eighty years of age is hale and hearty and is surrounded by a host of friends who enjoy her tales of pioneer conditions in the Golden State. Mr. and Mrs. Bacon had two children, Charles A. and Ethel, who with their mother reside on the home place.

Charles A. Bacon received his education at the Harmony Grove school and after his school days were over worked on the ranch and at the same time has followed the machinist's trade, as well as learning the plumbing and sheet metal trades. From 1900 until 1912 he conducted a shop in Lockeford, during which time he perfected an acetylene gas machine which he manufactured and sold. After moving his shop to the ranch he has devoted part of his time to managing the home estate and doing expert repair work on all kinds of machinery, his equipment being adequate to handle almost any kind of a job. For more than fifteen years he has engaged in well boring, specializing in deep water wells for irrigation purposes. On the ranch they maintain a dairy of twenty cows and raise grain and stock; twenty acres of the ranch is in alfalfa. Mr. Bacon is a member and past grand of Progressive Lodge No. 134, I. O. O. F., at Lockeford, a member of the Lodi Encampment, and past chancellor of the Lockeford Knights of Pythias. Politically he is a Republican and is counted among the progressive men of the Lockeford section of his native county.

MR. AND MRS. EUGENE C. BACON

ASA MOUNTJOY CLARK.—One of the most progressive and able business men of Stockton is Asa Mountjoy Clark, the efficient manager of that well known institution, Clark's Sanatorium. He was born in Stockton on May 20, 1890, a son of Fred Pope and Edith (Cross) Clark. His father, Dr. Fred Pope Clark, is also a native of Stockton, born August 25, 1865, and is the son of Dr. Asa Clark, the founder of Clark's Sanatorium in 1871; after attendance at high school he entered Cooper Medical College at San Francisco, where he was graduated in 1887. For the following two years he was engaged in practice in Angels Camp, Calaveras County, and then came to Stockton, where he has remained ever since. In 1889 Dr. Clark was married to Miss Edith Cross, a daughter of Dr. L. E. Cross, of Stockton, and they have two children, Asa, the subject of this sketch, and Lester, the secretary of Clark's Sanatorium. Dr. Clark is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Elks, the Native Sons of the Golden West, and the Knights of Pythias, and in politics is a staunch Republican.

Located in the center of a health appearing and inviting park, just at the edge of the city of Stockton, amid surroundings where nature combines with professional care to restore normal conditions to people suffering from mental ailments, Clark's Sanatorium presents many interesting features. The main buildings are surrounded by a park of stately trees, well-kept lawns and flower beds, while the atmosphere is restful. It is an institution especially adapted for those suffering from overwork and business worries that affect the mind and body, many coming here from other sections because of the inviting conditions, care and treatment. The main building is a large, roomy, two-story structure, comfortable and homey in furnishing and appointments.

At the institution everything is electrical, the equipment in each instance being the most modern. Electrical cabinets, massage, baths, showers and sprays, with electric attachments; X-ray massage, electrotherapeutic appliances, and other innovations are always ready for use. Hydro-therapeutic treatment is another feature here. In this department neutral and cooling sheet packs, fan baths, Hammam baths, sprays and showers, cold towel rubs, mitten, ice and alcohol rubs, are specialties.

The sanatorium is conducted under the personal management of Asa M. and Lester L. Clark, sons of Dr. Fred P. Clark, owner of the institution. The medical department is under the able supervision of Dr. Fred P. Clark of the State Hospital, who has an able medical staff specially trained in nerve disorders. Dr. Clark consults and advises with the doctors regarding special cases as occasion arises. There has recently been established a Clark's Sanatorium service in the principal interior cities of the state. In cases coming to the attention of the local physician if local treatment can be administered it is so done, but if institutional treatment is advised the case is then sent to their Sanatorium at Stockton. This new feature has been found very satisfactory, particularly when patients return to their homes they may have follow up treatment under the direction of the institution by experienced physicians.

In 1912, Asa M. Clark, helped to organize Battery C, California Field Artillery, and was sent to the Mexican border; later when the Mexican trouble arose he became attached to Battery B Sixth Regulars for border duty, Intelligence Service. Mr. Clark was married in June, 1916, to Miss Myrtle Stevens of Stockton and they have one child, Asa M., Jr. In fraternal life Mr. Clark is affiliated with San Joaquin Lodge 19 F. & A. M., is also a 32nd degree Scottish Rite Mason; locally he is a member of the Anteros and Rotary Clubs of Stockton, and of the American Legion.

Leslie L. Clark is a graduate of Stanford University class of '16; he served in the 32nd Field Artillery in the World War, being stationed principally at Camp Zachariah Taylor, Kentucky, being discharged November 16, 1918, and since his return is giving his undivided attention to the success of Clark's Sanatorium. He was married in Stockton in 1920 to Miss Genevieve Wyllie, a native of Calaveras County, and they have one child, Eleanor.

Dr. Asa Clark in the early days at Placerville had a large practice throughout the Sierra region, traveling through the mountains riding horseback with his saddle bags. Clark's Fork of the Stanislaus river was named for him. He did not hesitate to give medical aid to the Indians with his usual success and in their appreciation they named him "The Medicine Man."

Dr. Clark was a man of strong physique and great energy, an inveterate worker and was never idle. In the period of his life he saw great progress in science, not only in medicine, for he was in New York City and saw the first administration of chloroform, but in mechanical inventions, as he remarked: "I saw the first locomotive, first bicycle, first automobile and have lived to see the aeroplane a reality."—few men live to such an age. This interesting pioneer and philanthropist passed to the great beyond at his home in Stockton, January 20, 1912, almost eighty-eight years of age.

ARCHIBALD WEST CRARY, M. D.—Among the recent acquisitions to the medical fraternity of Stockton is Dr. Archibald West Crary, a successful practitioner and specialist in diseases of the eye, ear, nose and throat. He is a native of Boone County, Iowa, and was born on April 18, 1876, and began his education in the public schools of Boone. In 1897 he began his education in the public schools of Boone. In 1897 he was graduated from Cornell College with a B. S. degree; then he entered the Iowa State University at Iowa City and in 1906 was graduated with the degree of M. D. and one year later received his master of science degree from the same institution. Before his graduation he became assistant instructor and after graduation became a member of the medical faculty of the university. Returning to the city of his birth he practiced his profession for fifteen years and while there joined the Masons, Elks No. 73 and Knights of Pythias. He enlisted in the Spanish-American War and was a member of the 52nd Iowa Volunteers and after the war became active in the Iowa State National Guards, serving as first lieutenant. Removing to Stockton in 1919, Dr. Crary has enjoyed a constantly growing practice in his chosen profession.

The marriage of Dr. Crary united him with Miss Ida May Johnson, a native of Iowa, and they are the parents of two children, Ruth and Jean Ellen. Recently he has purchased a residence on Yosemite Terrace, one of the new and fashionable sections of the city. Dr. Crary is an ardent booster for Stockton and the San Joaquin County and believes in the continued growth of the city he has selected for his permanent residence. He is the popular president of the Iowa Club of Northern California, which now has 450 members. He is also a member of the Spanish-American War Veterans of Stockton and of the Sciots. Throughout his professional career his labors have been characterized by continued advance along scientific lines, and he has made for himself an honored name as a member of his profession.

GEORGE PRESZLER.—Among the well-known and prosperous viticulturists of San Joaquin Valley is George Preszler, the owner of a valuable vineyard of eighty-seven acres about four miles east of Lodi, undoubtedly one of the finest and most profitable vineyards in the county. He was born in South Russia not far from Odessa, on October 4, 1868, a son of George Adam Preszler. He has no recollection of his parents, as his mother and father both died from the cholera within two weeks of one another when he was four years old.

He is the youngest of five children: John and Daniel still reside in Russia; Mrs. Katie Finck of Tripp, S. D.; Eva is Mrs. George Mettler of Lodi; and George, our subject. When he was seven years old he accompanied his sister Katie to America and settled in Hutchinson County, Dakota Territory, where he remained until he was fifteen years old; then he worked for his brother-in-law, George Mettler, for six years until he was of age, then started out for himself.

Most of Mr. Preszler's education was obtained in the "school of hard knocks," for he was fifteen years old when the first Government school was established in South Dakota. With the thrift and industry of his forbears, Mr. Preszler had saved sufficient money with which to purchase a half-section of land in Hutchinson County, S. D., which he farmed to grain for eleven years when he sold out and set his face toward the Golden State, arriving on February 15, 1901, and coming direct to San Joaquin County he purchased his present ranch of 154 acres.

In Hutchinson County, S. D., on December 12, 1889, Mr. Preszler was married to Miss Margareta Schnaidt, also a native of South Russia, a daughter of John and Katherine Schnaidt. John Schnaidt was a farmer and Mrs. Preszler was three years old when she was brought from Russia to South Dakota, where her father homesteaded land. They are the parents of eight children: Edward is a vineyardist near Lodi; Emma is Mrs. Kirschenmann of Victor; William resides at Victor, Cal.; Henry is on the home place; Alena; Ida; Martha; and Lenhardt. When Mr. Preszler purchased his ranch it was a stubble field and all the improvements on the ranch have been made by him, including his fine residence and vineyard. Of the original acreage, he gave his son Edward forty acres; William thirty-seven acres; to his daughter Emma, now Mrs. Kirschenmann, he gave a ten-acre vineyard; and his son Henry a forty-acre piece, Mr. Preszler retaining the remainder, which is considered among the finest vineyards in the state. In national politics Mr. Preszler is a Republican and he and his family are members of the Reformed Church. He has served as a member of the Victor school board. He is a good example of what hard work, saving and enterprise can do when persistently followed, for he is rated as one of the wealthy vineyardists of the Lodi country.

ALOIS GAUL.—A representative California rancher whose enterprise is born of a progressive spirit and ambition, and whose foresight is the result of profitable experience, is Alois Gaul, the Delta farmer, who resides upon the old Captain Frewert homestead, nine miles southwest of Stockton on Upper Roberts Island. He was born in Bavaria on January 3, 1861, and when twenty years of age left home for America, and after an adventurous voyage of sixteen days, reached New York in 1881 and there he spent a year with relatives.

In 1882 he arrived in California, and for ten years he remained in San Francisco, for eight years being with the late John Wieland. Then he bought a forty-acre tract of land in Placer County, and having cleared it of brush, etc., he set out an orchard and a vineyard. This property so increased in value that by the time it was in bearing he was able to sell it at a good profit, enabling him, in 1900, to remove to the Delta district in San Joaquin County, where he took up his residence at the old home of Captain Frewert, a pioneer of this county. At San Francisco he received his citizenship in 1887 and soon identified himself with the Republican party, but in local matters he casts partisanship to the winds and goes in for the best man and the best measures.

At Stockton, January 14, 1897, Mr. Gaul was married to Miss Bertha A. Frewert, a daughter of the highly honored Captain Frewert already referred to, and a gifted lady who was born on the Frewert place, Roberts Island. Three children were born to this fortunate union. Herman is a Delta rancher closely associated with his parents in business affairs; Emma has become the wife of Peter Claussen, and the mother of two children, Marjorie and Bobbie; and Vera is a student in Stockton high school. Mrs. Gaul has served for two years as an efficient and popular member of the board of trustees of the Garden school district.

Since coming to San Joaquin County, Mr. Gaul has made an enviable reputation as a farmer and stock breeder, for sheep raising in the Delta has proven very profitable and so has been the raising of shorthorn Durham cattle, horses and mules, and registered Friesian-Holstein dairy cattle. His livestock has been shipped into the range and cattle country of New Mexico, Arizona and throughout California. He owns an imported Percheron stallion, and was the proud possessor of a purebred Belgian horse. Fortunately for him, the transportation facilities hereabouts could hardly be improved upon, both by trucks and by river boats, and in 1906 he constructed a warehouse with 1,000-ton capacity of hay on the levee landing by his farm, and there the river boats can tie up for the loading and unloading of produce.

Mr. Gaul had a younger brother, K. G. Gaul, a prominent stockman of the Salinas Valley, but he passed away in 1919. His sisters, Mrs. Erhardt and Mrs. Julia Kilian, both reside in Brooklyn, N. Y. Two other members of the family—a sister, Mrs. Teresa Rupert of Minneapolis, and an elder brother Henry, have long since closed their eyes to the scenes of this world. Mr. Gaul has three Delta farms. The home ranch embraces 266 acres; then there is a stock-raising ranch of 92 acres in the old Shippee tract on French Camp Road, and there are some 334 acres near Old River on Upper Roberts Island also belonging to him. He is widely known as an authority on livestock and he has served for many years as a trustee of Reclamation District No. 544 and for the past eleven years has been chairman of the board of trustees. In this connection it may be well to note that during the past nine years the affairs of this district have been so efficiently conducted that it has been necessary on only two or three occasions to levy assessments, and in both cases these assessments were not over twenty-five cents per acre. In fact, this remarkable administration of the levees in this district, and the solution of the many problems concerning their upkeep have attracted attention from other reclamation districts—clearly an emphatic compliment to Mr. Gaul and those associated with him in this work.

JOHN H. SOUTHWELL.—For many years a resident of Lathrop, where he was a leader in the town's activities, John H. Southwell has become thoroughly identified with the spirit and undertakings of the city of Stockton, since taking up his residence here. Mr. Southwell is a native of Utah, born at Christman, in the mining district, July 23, 1882, and when twelve years old came with his parents to Lathrop, Cal., where he continued his education in the public schools. His first venture into business life was as a clerk in the general store of B. F. Eastman, and on leaving Lathrop he took a position at Oakland as yard clerk with the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Coming back to Lathrop, Mr. Southwell became assistant agent for the Wells Fargo Express Company, and then went on the road as a messenger for the company, later becoming the agent at Lathrop, and then assistant agent at Santa Cruz. Returning again to his old home town of Lathrop, he purchased an interest in the store where he had worked as a boy, at this time being conducted by S. W. Reynolds, and with D. T. Sutton as a partner the firm of Southwell and Sutton was established and a splendid business built up. This partnership continued for eleven years, when Mr. Southwell disposed of his interest at a profitable figure in 1918. While a resident of Lathrop, he became a man of affairs there and took an active part in all civic developments. At the age of eighteen he was one of the founders of the local lodge of the Modern Woodmen and it was due to his endeavor that the funds were raised to erect the new hall of that order, which is a decided credit to the town. For eight years he served as justice of the peace of Castoria township, this township including the thriving city of Manteca. Shortly after the State Bank was started, Mr. Southwell became a stockholder and director, serving until January 1, 1922, as a member of the board of this thriving institution, which is now the First National Bank of Manteca. While in business in Lathrop Mr. Southwell had an exciting encounter with a negro burglar who had entered his store. The battle lasted half an hour, a fusillade of shots being fired, one of them passing through Mr. Southwell's coat. The burglar was captured and is now serving his sentence in a California prison.

On coming to Stockton in February, 1918, Mr. Southwell bought an interest in the San Joaquin Auto Company, the proprietor being A. E. Hunter, and the name was then changed to the Southwell-Hunter Auto Company. They are distributors for the Chandler and Cleveland cars for San Joaquin, Stanislaus, Amador, Calaveras and Tuolumne counties, and he is also a member of the firm of the Clarke-Southwell-Hunter Company at Modesto, in charge of Fred H. Clarke. Both the Chandler and Cleveland are aristocrats in motordom, distinctive in design and with reputations for dependability of service that have made them exceedingly popular throughout the San Joaquin Valley. With their large territory, the firm has built up a splendid business, due both to the high-grade cars they represent and the initiative and capability that characterize both partners.

In January, 1905, Mr. Southwell was married to Miss Estella Sutton, a native daughter of Stockton, and they are the parents of two children, Laverne and Lucile. Mr. Southwell is very prominent in the fraternal life of Stockton and takes an active interest in all public affairs, contributing generously to every progressive cause. He belongs to the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, belonging to Aahmes Temple of Oakland, a member of Stockton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., the Elks, Sciots, Knights of Pythias, the D. O. K. K., and a charter member of the Stockton Lions.

HENRY ESHBACH.—In the great army of Argonauts there came across the plains two brothers, Frank Robert and Joseph Robert, pioneers of 1848 on the Pacific coast and intimate friends of the illustrious Captain Weber. For a time they tried their luck in the mines, but indifferent success caused them to turn their attention to industrial pursuits. Starting the first dairy in Stockton they met with steady success, and for years continued to conduct a prosperous business. Upon finally retiring they removed to San Francisco and there died when advanced in years. During the early growth of their business they became impressed with the possibilities of the state and accordingly sent money for traveling expenses hither to Henry and Magdalena (Robert) Eshbach, a brother-in-law and sister.

Thus it happened that the Eshbach family in 1857 boarded a vessel at New Orleans bound for the Isthmus of Panama and from there proceeded to San Francisco, whence they came to Stockton. Henry Eshbach was a native of Switzerland and in early life had immigrated to the United States, settling in New Orleans, La., where he followed the trade of a carpenter. There he met and married Magdalena Robert, who was born in Alsace-Lorraine and in childhood had come to the United States. It was not the privilege of Henry Eshbach to attend school regularly in boyhood, hence his education was not what he wished. However, he was a natural mechanic and also a proficient carpenter, and after coming to Stockton he followed carpentering until his death, which occurred at the age of sixty years. His wife met with an accidental death in 1878. During the Civil War, he served as a member of the 3rd California Regiment Volunteer Infantry from 1862 to 1865 and on the way east his regiment was detailed to suppress an Indian uprising in Utah. He was a member of the Stockton Volunteer Fire Department, San Joaquin Company No. 3. They were the parents of two sons, Henry, the subject of this sketch, and Frank, both residents of Stockton.

In the city of New Orleans, La., Henry Eshbach was born on August 25, 1850, and there he spent his first seven years, when he took passage on a ship in 1857 and came via the Isthmus to California, landing from the steamer Golden Gate in April, 1857. He attended the old Franklin school, still standing on South Center Street, and in the same class with him was Caroline Deitsch, a pioneer's daughter, whom he married in 1875, and by whom he has two daughters; Amy E. is the wife of Frank E. Murphy, an attorney of Stockton, and Carrie L. is the wife of S. E. Berkley of Stockton and they have two children, Caroline and Eugenia.

Upon leaving school Mr. Eshbach worked at the printer's trade. For nine years he was foreman of the job department of the Independent, and has in his possession a copy of the paper dated November 2, 1869. He also ran a job printing office on Eldorado Street between Main and Weber with Charles L. Hamilton as a partner, and started the Stockton Record, which was then known as the Commercial Record. Eventually he sold out to a partner and after an association of eighteen years with the printing business he turned his attention to other lines and is now living retired from business cares and responsibilities. He was a member of the Volunteer Fire Department Weber Company No. 1 and is now a member of the Exempt Firemen's Association, and for four years was chief engineer of the Stockton fire department. A Democrat in politics, he served as a member of the city council from 1881 to 1884; he also served as a member of the police and fire commission for two years. Fraternally he is connected with the Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., which he joined over fifty years ago, on February 28, 1872, and is a member of the relief committee of that order; Stockton Lodge Elks; Knights of Pythias; and Ancient Order of United Druids. He is also a member of Fidelity Lodge. Mrs. Eshbach is now deceased. Their two daughters are members of San Joaquin Parlor No. 5, N. D. G. W., and also of Lebanon Rebekah Lodge.

ISAAC H. ROBINSON.—Honored and respected in every class of society, Isaac H. Robinson has been closely identified with the public life of Stockton for over a quarter of a century, and his name is inscribed high on the roll of its foremost citizens. He was born on a California ranch near Santa Rosa, October 17, 1856, and until the age of sixteen attended the district school in the neighborhood of his home and during spare hours helped his father on the home place. The practical ranching experience enabled him to obtain employment on other ranches in northern California and ten years of his early manhood was thus spent. During February, 1883, he arrived in Stockton and found work in the planing mill of P. A. Buell, being thus occupied until he entered the Stockton police department as patrolman, remaining in that position for two years; then for two years he served as chief of police of Stockton. He was then selected as deputy sheriff and served four years under Tom Cunningham. Following this he was elected to the position of city clerk of Stockton which he capably filled for five and a half years. For the past twenty years he has been in the office of the county treasurer and tax collector and is now serving as chief deputy in that office with entire satisfaction to the general public. He gives his political allegiance to the Republican party and has taken an active part in local and state politics. His fraternal memberships are with the Native Sons of the Golden West, Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., having passed through all the chairs of the latter organization, and he has passed through all branches of Masonry up to and including the thirty-second degree, and belongs to Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Oakland.

The marriage of Mr. Robinson united him with Miss Henrietta Fortune, a native of San Francisco, and they have one daughter, Mrs. C. H. Bouch of Los Angeles, who is the mother of three sons. Mrs. Robinson is well known in the community and has gained the warm regard which is ever given in recognition of sterling worth.

FRANK W. BECKMAN.—Among California's native sons of whom she is justly proud is numbered the late Frank W. Beckman, a prominent and worthy representative of an early family of San Joaquin County. He was born on his father's ranch near Lodi on July 29, 1875. His father, Henry H. Beckman, was born in Bremen, Prussia, on March 13, 1834, and was reared on a farm in his native land until he was fourteen when he started for the United States in 1848. Five years later he crossed the plains to California with an ox-team and settled in Elkhorn township, San Joaquin County, where, with his brothers, he farmed grain until 1859, when a division was made of the property and from that time on he farmed alone, having as much as 1,000 acres in grain at one time and he became very well-to-do. He married Miss Margaret Toni, a native of Switzerland. He was a charter member of Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, F. & A. M.

Frank W. began his education in the schools of his district and later was graduated from the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge, and supplemented this with a year at Stanford University. After finishing his education he went to work on his father's ranch, but soon an opportunity presented itself and he became one of the founders of the grocery firm of Beckman & Thompson, operated for years under the firm name of Beckman, Welch & Thompson Company; this is not only a pioneer firm of Lodi, but is the largest in that line.

As a progressive citizen, Frank Beckman was public spirited and was ready to assist any worthy project that he thought would help to build up his community; he served as a member of the Lodi library board; was a stockholder in the Lodi National Bank and in the First National Bank. In his fraternal relations he was active in Masonic circles and held membership in Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, F. & A. M., of which he was a past master, belonged to Stockton Chapter, R. A. M., and to Stockton Commandery, K. T., and to Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., in San Francisco. He was also past patron of Woodbridge Chapter No. 118, O. E. S.; belonged to Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and to the Knights of Pythias.

Mr. Beckman's marriage on November 30, 1899, united him with Miss Addine Le Moin, a native of California born in Amador County November 30, 1880, the daughter of George W. Le Moin, mentioned on another page of this history. Three children were born of this union: Margaret is Mrs. J. E. Devine and the mother of a son, Dalton, and they reside in Lodi; Le Moin F. and Addine Winifred are students in the Lodi high school. Mr. Beckman passed away May 23, 1907, mourned by his family and a large circle of friends and acquaintances. Since the death of Mr. Beckman, Mrs. Beckman has carried on the various projects that he had started and is interested in the First National Bank, the Lodi National Bank and the Lodi Investment Company. In 1922 she completed one of the most modern of homes on West Pine Street, Lodi, where she lives with her family. She takes an active interest in and is a member of the Woman's Club of Lodi and Lodi Chapter No. 151 O. E. S.

WALTER T. RUTHERFORD.—A worthy citizen of San Joaquin County, with whose agricultural and other interests he has been identified for a great many years, is Walter T. Rutherford who, for the last four years has been in charge of the field work of the Lodi branch of the Earl Fruit Company in San Joaquin County. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, July 25, 1867, a son of John and Mary (Bowie) Rutherford, both natives of Scotland, and where the father was superintendent of a large estate until his death at the age of forty-eight years, the mother living to be eighty-two years old. There were eight children in the family, seven of whom are living: Isabelle, Annie, Archie, Walter T., our subject, John, William, Angus gave his life for his country during the World War, and Mary.

Walter T. received his education in the schools of his native country and when twenty years of age came to New York, where he became a landscape gardener in the city parks of Buffalo and New York for three years. In 1889 he left New York for the West, traveling through New Mexico and Arizona and reaching California he settled in Sacramento, where he followed farming and the breaking of raw tule land; some for Arthur Thornton at New Hope and for the Eppenger Company on Ryer Island; he also worked on Grand Isle and Staten Island. He broke tule land on Ryer Island when the levees were constructed by Chinese with wheelbarrows.

The marriage of Mr. Rutherford, November 28, 1906, at Sacramento, united him with Miss Jeannette A. Chase, born at San Andreas, Cal., a daughter of Charles Lowe and Addie Jane (Hatch) Chase, and is one of a family of eight children: Rule L.; Jennie, Mrs. M. J. Burke, resides in Sacramento; Mrs. Elizabeth Morf resides in Sacramento; Mrs. Florence A. Blodgett resides in Lodi; Charles Victor is at Mare Island; Daniel P. resides in Sacramento; Mrs. Jeannette A. Rutherford; Wilbur Richard is a printer residing in Seattle, Wash. Mrs. Rutherford's parents were natives of the same town in Maine and descendants of old Colonial stock. Mrs. Rutherford's maternal grandfather, Mark Hatch, came to California in 1849 during the gold excitement and engaged in mining near Jenny Lind, and there built the first house. Mrs. Rutherford's maternal grandmother died in Maine and as the grandfather was already in California, the children were obliged to come to California to be with their father, so in 1862 Addie Hatch, Mrs. Rutherford's mother, brought five brothers and sisters to California via the Isthmus route to the home in Jenny Lind which the father had prepared; Mark Hatch also planted the first peach orchard at Jenny Lind.

Charles Lowe Chase came to California via the Isthmus route in 1852 and settled first at San Jose, then to the mines of Calaveras and El Dorado counties; he cast his first vote in 1856 at Murphys, Calaveras County; later he engaged in the lumber business at Willow Creek and was known as the champion shingle splitter; he also owned mines at Cheechee Flat, called the Mountain Ranch, and here the mother taught one of the first schools of the district. He passed away in 1905 at the age of seventy-two and the mother was sixty-three years old when she died in 1906. Mrs. Rutherford was educated in the grammar schools of Lodi and Stockton, then entered the Stockton high school from which she was graduated; then entered the University of California, graduating in 1903. She specialized in natural science. After graduating from the University of California, she taught school for two years in the Alpine district of San Joaquin County, one year at New Hope and one year in the Stockton schools; she was then obliged to make a trip to Maine to settle her father's estate and soon after her return was married to Mr. Rutherford.

Soon after their marriage they removed to New Hope where they purchased 100 acres in what is known as the Pocket of the Mokelumne River and on this ranch Mr. Rutherford conducted a dairy for six years; leveled the ground for gravity irrigation and built a comfortable bungalow. When the Western Pacific Railroad was built through his section of the county, he did the grading work for the tracks through Thornton. Two years ago, Mr. Rutherford sold his ranch and purchased a home at 201 North Church Street, Lodi, where he and his wife now reside. Mr. Rutherford was a school trustee of the Ray school district and is a member of Franklin Lodge at Cortland, Cal., and also a member of Lodi Chapter, O. E. S., of which Mrs. Rutherford is matron. Mrs. Rutherford has been a member of the Eastern Star for twenty-four years; she is also a member of the Lodi Woman's Club and the N. D. G. W., of Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford are both ardent Republicans and members of the Congregational Church of Lodi.

SAMUEL R. ARTHUR.—The name of Samuel R. Arthur is closely connected with the history of the medical profession of California and more especially with Lodi, having practiced for twenty-two years in the city. He is a native of California, having been born in Stockton on April 14, 1874, a son of Richard and Anna (Alles) Arthur, both natives of England. His father made his first trip to the United States in the late '50s and located in Indiana; he then returned to England for a time and when he returned to the United States in the early '60s he located in California, going direct to the mines; but later settled in Stockton where he engaged in teaming and contracting. There were four children in the family, three of whom are now living, Dr. Edgar A. Arthur residing in Stockton; Mrs. E. M. Tremper; Ethel, who was a teacher in the Stockton high school is deceased, and Samuel R. Arthur, the subject of this sketch. Both parents are now deceased.

Samuel R. Arthur attended the public schools of Stockton and upon leaving the Stockton high school he pursued a special scientific course in a private school, after which he entered the University of California and was graduated from that institution with the class of 1899 with the degree of M. D. He then became an interne in the San Joaquin County Hospital and in 1900 located in Lodi, forming a partnership with Dr. Hull, the association continuing until 1905 when Dr. Hull removed to Stockton. Eminently successful in his chosen profession, Dr. Arthur has also been active in land development, having planted a thirty-acre vineyard east of Acampo, which he sold at the end of four years. At the present time he is the owner of two fine ranches in the Escalon district consisting of 117 acres, on which he maintains a fine herd of Holstein dairy cows, besides raising Poland China hogs. His ranches are planted to alfalfa and vineyard, on which he raises very fine grapes which are one of the most profitable crops of the San Joaquin Valley. He has brought his ranches to a high state of cultivation. He makes his home in Woodbridge and is a member of the school board of that district.

Dr. Arthur's marriage united him with Miss Lillian Freeman, a native of Kansas, but reared and educated in California and they are the parents of two children, Samuel R., Jr., and Grace Wynette. In his fraternal association, Dr. Arthur is past master of the Woodbridge lodge of No. 131, F. & A. M., a member of the Stockton Knights Templar and of the Stockton Elks. He is past noble grand of the Woodbridge Lodge No. 98, I. O. O. F., and belongs to the Knights of Pythias of Woodbridge, and is a member of the State and County Medical societies and of Lodi Parlor N. S. G. W.

OSCAR W. ECKSTROM.—Five years ago Oscar W. Eckstrom became actively identified with farming pursuits in San Joaquin County, when he purchased twenty acres at the corner of Schutte Lane and Waterloo Road, where he set out a new orchard and by his steady industry and perseverance he has made his way to a front rank among his fellow-citizens in the Linden section of the county. He was born near Saratoga, Cal., August 15, 1885, a son of John J. and Minnie (Roos) Eckstrom, both natives of Sweden. John J. Eckstrom served three years in the army of his country prior to coming to America in 1876, locating in Gladstone, Ill. Eight years later, in 1884, he removed to California, locating near Santa Clara, where he engaged in fruit raising. In 1896 he located at Linden, Cal., where he was employed by D. W. Miller. He had purchased twenty acres, which he devoted to general farming and orchard. In 1917 he sold the same and removed to Palo Alto, where he is now living retired. Oscar W., the second oldest of their three children, received his education in the public schools and while still a young boy began to do ranch work for neighboring farmers. In 1912 he went to Siskiyou County and engaged in mining, later engaged in the same occupation in Shasta County and spent about five years there, being fairly rewarded for his work.

In 1913 at Stockton, Mr. Eckstrom was married to Miss Isadora Whitcomb, a native of Vermont, a daughter of Charles M. Whitcomb, who removed to Linden, Cal., in 1910. Mr. Whitcomb passed away a year afterward, survived by his widow, who makes her home on the twenty-acre home place left her by her husband. Mr. Eckstrom cares for his own twenty acres and also that of Mrs. Whitcomb, the products of these ranches being peaches, almonds, apricots, prunes and plums, besides considerable hay and grain. Mr. Eckstrom uses a tractor for the cultivation of his land and irrigation water is supplied by a fifteen-horsepower motor. Locally he is identified with the California Prune and Apricot Association, California Peach Growers, California Canning Association, and the California Almond Growers.

Fraternally he is a past grand of Scio Lodge No. 102, I. O. O. F., of Linden, and with his wife is active in Opal Rebekah Lodge in Linden. He is a well-known and popular citizen, and in many ways has performed a useful part in the life of his community.

JOHN A. COLEY.—A very representative citizen of Stockton is John A. Coley, who was born on a farm in Scott County, Va., on August 31, 1872, and when a young man of about eighteen, arrived in Stockton on October 15, 1889, since which time he has been one of the most enthusiastic and effective "boosters" in the Golden State. He was first employed near Sonora, in Tuolumne County, at cutting wood, and then he followed various occupations. On May 1, 1891, he went to Oakdale, in Stanislaus County, and worked on a ranch; and having saved his money, he was able to begin farming for himself. Later he bought 320 acres east of Escalon, which he farmed to grain; he rented land, and farmed as many as 3,000 acres of the Jones ranch; he made money, and he erected buildings in Escalon, of which town he can be truly called "the father," for he founded that now thriving village at the southern end of San Joaquin County. He built the first store building and had the postoffice and the telephone established there. He was one of the promoters of the Tidewater Southern Railroad, and served as its vice-president, working hard to secure the right of way for the road, and to sell stock in the enterprise. By unwearying labor, he secured the right of way from Stockton to the river, although in some cases he was obliged to buy the land needed by the company. When the Santa Fe Railroad built through Escalon he erected a grain warehouse there, and later another one, and one also at Avena; and on selling out to G. W. McNear of San Francisco, he became the latter's manager and bought grain for him for seven years. Then he bought back the warehouse and conducted the business for himself.

He next formed a partnership with J. L. Craig, to operate in the real estate field, under the firm name of Coley & Craig; and they subdivided the tract of land at Escalon, described in the interesting Craig sketch given on another page of this work. At one time the Coley & Craig company owned over 4,000 acres of land there, and later they operated in Stockton, erecting business houses and private residences. On his own account, Mr. Coley built a number of first-class homes in Stockton, in one case putting twelve in the northwestern part of Stockton, and after the fire at Escalon, three years ago, he also erected business blocks there, some of which he still owns. He has large real estate holdings, besides those in Stockton, in Oakland and San Francisco, and he has been one of the leading factors in the upbuilding of southern San Joaquin County, thereby becoming notable as a self-made man who has met with exceptional success. He has written fire insurance for the past twenty years, and he still has customers who, having taken out their insurance with him at the start, have remained his good patrons ever since. Mr. Coley belongs to the Oakdale Blue Lodge of Masons, No. 275, and to Lodge No. 218 of the Stockton Elks. He has one son, Cyril L. Coley, who is associated with him in business.

J. H. Coley

EMERY E. TREMAIN.—An experienced, wide-awake mechanic whose workshop is much sought by the users of auto-trucks, truck-bodies, etc., desiring first-class service, is Emery E. Tremain, the wood-worker and blacksmith of 640 East Market Street, Stockton. He is the agent for the G. M. C. motor truck and the Swinehart truck tire, nor could the successful manufacturers of these products well find a more capable representative. He was born near the Allegheny River, in Allegheny County, Pa., on February 16, 1872, and reared at Wichita, Kan. In 1891, with a boy friend as a companion, he started West, expecting to settle in the state of Washington; but they landed in Stockton with just five dollars as their combined capital. Emery secured work on John Williams' ranch, and later he accepted employment with the Ed Clowes ranch; then he went to the Smith ranch, where he was foreman for three years. All in all, he put in eleven years on ranches, and in those early days used to work on a thirty-two-horse grain harvester.

In 1901 he started to learn the blacksmith's trade with L. F. Salbach, but when he had finished, at the end of three years, he opened a small shop for himself at the corner of Stanislaus and East Market streets. He had saved $650, but it was necessary to assume a debt of $1,465 for machinery and tools in order to equip even a modest work-shop in the way he believed it ought to be done. In one year, however, he had earned enough to enable him to clear off all indebtedness. In 1907 he bought a lot on East Market Street, the site of his present building, paying $2,500 for the same, but he was obliged to borrow $1,500 in order to close the deal; but again luck, or better still, the rewards of foresight and industry were with him, for in another year he had made money enough to wipe out that new indebtedness and to take care of the purchase. In 1911 he erected a two-story building of cement and brick on his lot, at a cost of $7,500, borrowing half of the money in order to build; but now his property is free of debt.

In February, 1915, Mr. Tremain took on the agency of the G. M. C. motor truck, and so successful has he proved himself in presenting the claims of this superior outfit that he has readily made important sales to the leading establishments in Stockton, among them being the Sunset Lumber Company, the Stockton Transfer Company, the San Joaquin Oil Burner Company, the Stockton, Littlefield and Horan Furniture companies, the Stockton Soda Works, the Goodale Transfer Company, the Hatch Lumber Company, etc.

Mr. Tremain, among other ventures, pioneered an automobile stage company from Stockton to the Yosemite Valley, by way of Big Oak Flats, securing a franchise and putting on a twelve-passenger coach, and from the beginning the undertaking "boosted" Stockton, although it was not until the second year that it paid expenses. Then, at a fair profit, Mr. Tremain sold the line to Bob Young, having previously opened an office in San Francisco for the stage route. Mr. Tremain, who has always been one of the most enthusiastic and loyal boosters for Stockton, has himself invested in a vineyard of ten acres in the Victor Tract near the city. In earlier days he was a member of the Terminal City Wheelman's Club, and took part in many road races across the country, and quite naturally for one who has come to be so actively engaged in motoring he has worked hard, wherever the opportunity presented itself, to forward the cause of better roads. Mr. Tremain has leased his ground floor, blacksmith and wood-working departments to Messrs. Bidwell and McKinnon, who will conduct that branch, while he gives his time to the truck and tire business.

In 1901, at Stockton, Mr. Tremain was married to Miss Susan C. Pope, a native of Stockton, and a member of one of the well-known pioneer families of this section, her mother having crossed the great plains to California many years ago. One son, Virgil E. Tremain, has blessed this fortunate union. Mr. Tremain is a member of the San Joaquin Auto Trades Association, and of the State and National Auto Trades societies, and for more than twenty years he has been a popular member of the Red Men.

DUDLEY I. WALTZ.—The great cattle-barons of California have always occupied an heroic position in the intensely interesting history of the Golden State, exponents of that courage, foresight, optimism and progressive enterprise which have marked the leaders of the Pacific commonwealth as among the most progressive of all highly successful Americans; and it is natural, therefore, that such men of large affairs as Dudley I. Waltz, the stockman, should be accorded an enviable eminence among men of wide influence, and should preeminently enjoy the esteem and confidence of their fellows. Mr. Waltz was born in Monroe County, Mo., May 3, 1861, first seeing the light on a comfortable home farm; but in 1877, when only sixteen years of age, he came out to California, in company with a boy friend. His first employment was on a farm at Wheatland, where he pitched hay for $1.25 per day, and after working as a farm hand for some three years, he bought 320 acres of land in Sutter County which he farmed to wheat and barley. At the end of two years, he sold this ranch at a profit, and he then bought 800 acres of land in Placer County, which he farmed for another two years, and then sold at a profit. He next bought a small band of sheep, this being his start in handling sheep and cattle, and from that time on he has steadily advanced, until now he is one of the largest sheep-owners in California, having about 30,000 head.

In 1896, he bought of General Bidwell, of Chico, some 7,000 head of sheep, and leased all of Bidwell's pasture land up to the time of his death. The same year, he bought 10,000 sheep from the Joe Cone estate at Red Bluff. In 1898, he bought from Tom Haw, a Chinaman, some 10,000 head, at Dillon, Mont., and the next year he opened a butcher shop on Second Street, Chico, which he operated for a couple of years. In 1900 he bought a train load of cattle in Old Mexico; and this was the first load of cattle that crossed the quarantine line into the state. They were unloaded at Bakersfield, where they were disinfected and examined by a state veterinary. For two years he conducted a ranch in Merced County, removing to Stockton in 1902. Now thousands of his sheep and cattle range on a thousand hills in California, and his holdings include the Stanford Ranch of 9000 acres in Tehama and Butte counties, once a part of the famous Leland Stanford estate, known as the Vina ranch. He also owns 9000 acres of land in Merced County, and leases 20,000 more in Mariposa and Merced counties; and he leases 50,000 acres of land in Butte and Tehama counties, directing the whole with the assistance of his two sons, Edward P. and Arthur W. Waltz, who are associated with him in his livestock enterprises. Mr. Waltz is a member of the advisory board of the Imperial Cattle Loan Company of Los Angeles, and he is ex-president of the San Joaquin County Cattle Men's Association. He helped to organize, and is the president of the Central California Wool Growers' Association, and is also director of the State Wool Growers Association; and in 1911, he helped to organize the California State Life Insurance Company of Sacramento, and is official appraiser and director of the same, and in 1922 was elected its vice-president. This company has been very successful, and has made the best showing of any company in the United States in the past ten years.

When Mr. Waltz married September 2, 1889, at Auburn, Cal., he chose for his bride Miss Martha H. Brock, a native of Sutter County; and their union has been blessed with the birth of five children: Edward P., who married Miss Dorothy Boone of Red Bluff, is associated with our subject and his brother, Arthur B., in the sheep and cattle business, under the firm name of D. I. Waltz & Sons with principal offices at Stockton; Arthur B. was in the Aviation service and put in eighteen months overseas; Dorothy is the wife of Ralph Jeanelle of Stockton, and Minnie and Grace are the youngest in the family. San Joaquin County is justly proud of such an eminently progressive captain of industry as Mr. Waltz, one of the greatest patrons of husbandry in the Golden State.

ARTHUR F. ROBERTS.—A business man of marked ability, who has been with the Hobbs-Parsons Company of Stockton, wholesale distributors of produce, for the past twenty-one years, is Arthur F. Roberts, the capable manager of that organization. Born on a farm in the Mohawk Valley near Rome, Oneida County, N. Y., on July 28, 1870, he received his education in the district schools, the Rome Academy and the Albany Business College in Albany, N. Y. Remaining at home until he was twenty-three years of age, in 1893 he came to Fresno County, Cal., and went to work in a raisin vineyard at thirty dollars per month; at the end of one year he formed a partnership in the retail fruit and produce business; later engaged in the wholesale fruit and produce business and was the originator of the system of packing figs with steam treatment. He was thus occupied until 1900 when he entered the employ of the Hobbs-Parsons Company as a buyer. He traveled over the large potato growing states of the West, principally Oregon, Idaho and Minnesota, passing two seasons in Minnesota where he established relations with the large potato growers, and this business connection still continues.

The marriage of Mr. Roberts united him with Miss Clara Belle Hamilton, a native of Watsonville, Santa Cruz County, Cal., and they are the parents of three children: Edward Hamilton, Thomas Arthur, and Harriet Anne. He has taken an active interest in the Y. M. C. A. and for several years was a member of the board of directors and at present is a member of the finance board. In 1920 he was chairman of the boys' work committee. At one time he was a member of the executive council of the Boy Scouts. During the World War he was captain of all drives covering a territory eight miles north of Stockton and near the close of the war served as a member of the county exemption board. He is a member of the Stockton Golf and Country Club; an ex-member of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, and is a past president of the Stockton Rotary Club. In 1921 he was elected a director in the Stockton Savings and Loan Bank. In May, 1922, he was elected a member of the committee of freeholders, fifteen in number, which drafted a new charter for the city of Stockton, providing for the manager form of government. In his religious affiliations he is president of the board of trustees of the First Congregational Church, of which the family are members.

JOHN EDMUND MORAN.—A native son of California who was identified in a practical and successful manner with agricultural pursuits all his active career, was the late John Edmund Moran. He was born on his father's ranch near Bethany, Cal., November 13, 1873, a son of William and Hannah Moran, both of them natives of Ireland, the parents of eleven children, eight of whom are living; they are now residents of Oakland, the father being ninety years old. He came to San Joaquin County in the early '60s, where he followed farming and sheep raising on the West Side for many years.

John Edmund Moran received his education in the Tracy schools and meantime helped his father on the home place; when he grew older he engaged in farming on his own account and for twenty years was a prominent and successful grain farmer in the Delta district of San Joaquin County. His holdings on Union Island, a part of the old Williams properties, consisted of over 1,000 acres; he also leased land in the Bixler tract for many years. In partnership with Harry Martin, he operated about 500 acres in the Clifton Court tract in Contra Costa County. He was also in partnership with his brother, E. A. Moran for five years and the latter, with Mr. Moran's son Sherid, will continue the farming operations. Mr. Moran was always loyal to the county of his birth and was active in all affairs of the development of the West Side, and took an active part in the establishment of the irrigation district for the development of the Delta lands of the county.

The marriage of Mr. Moran occurred at the home of the bride in San Joaquin County and united him with Miss Caroline A. Pagel, also born in San Joaquin County, a boyhood friend. She is the daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Kraus) Pagel, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Alsace Lorraine. There were five children in the family, three of whom are living: Mrs. Moran, Fred and A. J. Pagel, who are ranching in the county. The father was an early settler on the West Side of the county where he took up Government land and farmed until his death. The mother, too, is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Moran were the parents of four children: Sherid, Helen T. and George E.; Edward, the eldest child, died aged ten months. Mr. Moran passed away April 20, 1922, mourned by his devoted family and a host of friends. Fraternally he was a member of the Odd Fellows, Tracy Parlor, N. S. G. W., and Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E. For many years he served as a school trustee in his district. He was a thorough and practical agriculturist, and his sterling characteristics and honorable business methods won for him the respect and esteem of all with whom he had business or social relations.

LOUIS M. HAIGHT, M. D.—Few names of modern California are more distinguished among the native sons and daughters than that of Haight, so worthily represented in Stockton by Dr. L. M. Haight. A native son, he was born in Alameda on October 7, 1868, the son of the Hon. Henry Huntly and Anna E. (Bissell) Haight, the former a native of Rochester, N. Y., and the latter born in St. Louis, to whom, in time, three children were born—L. M., of this review; Miss Janet C. Haight, a favorite in social circles in Oakland, and Henry Huntly Haight, who passed away in 1919.

Henry H. Haight, Sr., came out to San Francisco as a pioneer in 1850, and being an attorney by profession, he had no difficulty in successfully establishing himself in practice in the Bay City. Nominated on the Democratic ticket, he ran for governor of California; and in 1867 he was elected to that high office. He made a famous governor, for it was during his term that he signed the charter of the University of California, and that great institution, of such vital importance to the people of the Golden State, was started. For the first two years of its existence, the University encountered many trying difficulties; and it was then that Governor Haight and a relative contributed funds to keep it going. Governor Haight was prominent in banking circles in San Francisco, and held a directorship in various financial institutions. He was also a large landowner on the east side of the Bay, and his country home in Alameda, occupying twenty-two acres, was one of the show places of the district. The Haight school in Alameda was named in his honor, as was Haight Street in San Francisco. He died in 1878.

L. M. Haight attended the school named in honor of his father in Alameda, then went East to New Haven, Conn., where he attended the Hopkins Grammar School for three years. He then matriculated at Sheffield Scientific School, a branch of Yale University, from which he was graduated in 1889 with the Ph. B. degree. In 1892 he returned to California and at Stockton bought an interest in Holden's Drug Store. During this time he took a post-graduate course in pharmacy at the University of California, and in 1897 was graduated in pharmacy, and then he sold out his interest in the drug company.

In 1898 Mr. Haight entered the Cooper Medical College, from which he was duly graduated in 1903 with the degree of M. D.; and for the next two years he was in the City and County Hospital at San Francisco. He also practiced medicine in that city for two years, and in 1908 he returned to Stockton, and ever since has been practicing here. He is a member of the National and State Medical associations and of the San Joaquin County Medical Society. Dr. Haight belongs to Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Stockton Commandery No. 8 K. T.; Stockton Pyramid No. 5, of Sciots; and to Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S. He also is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks; Pohono Tribe of Red Men; and of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.

In 1900 Dr. L. M. Haight was united in marriage with Miss Minnie A. Schuler, a native of Stockton and the daughter of Michael and Marie Barbara (Strohmeier) Schuler, pioneers of Stockton. Both were born in Germany, the former in 1828, and his wife, in 1838, and he came to Stockton in 1852, married here on October 27, 1860, followed freighting to the Southern mines from Stockton and took part in the early activities in the building up of this city. He died on November 20, 1905, and Mrs. Schuler passed away in 1901. They had eight children born to them and all are living. Of the union of Dr. Haight and his wife three sons have been born: Louis Cameron is a student in the medical department of the University of California; Herbert Schuler is attending the Stockton high school, as is the youngest, Henry Huntley, named for his grandfather.

M. S. HEWITT.—An enterprising raucher who resides on a portion of the ranch where he was born is M. S. Hewitt. His ranch of 183 acres lies about fifteen miles east of the city of Stockton and is a portion of his father's ranch of 1080 acres, which was farmed to grain for many years. A native son of San Joaquin County, M. S. Hewitt was born September 18, 1892, the eldest son of William Thomas and Mary Jane (Herron) Hewitt, both now deceased. William Thomas Hewitt was born in Steubenville, Ohio, and was five years old when his father, Samuel Hewitt, left Ohio for California in 1852, crossing the plains with ox teams. Grandfather Samuel Hewitt settled on land near Farmington, where he became an extensive grain farmer. William Thomas Hewitt, the father of our subject, was born January 23, 1847, and from his youth up was engaged in farming and came to own a homestead ranch of 1080 acres on which he erected a fine residence of nine rooms at a cost of $4000, and a barn costing half that amount. He removed to 1219 North Hunter Street, Stockton, Cal. in 1906, where he resided until he passed away in January, 1908, after which his widow continued to reside in Stockton until her death June 2, 1920.

Three children were born to this pioneer couple, of whom Marion Samuel, our subject, is the eldest. He began his education in the district school in the neighborhood of his home and supplemented it with an engineering course at the Agricultural College located at Corvallis, Ore., from which he was graduated in 1915 with the degree of B. S. The following year, 1916, he located in Modesto, where he was employed as cashier of the Grange Company. On October 2, 1917, Mr. Hewitt enlisted in the 143rd Field Artillery, receiving the rank of corporal, and went to France with a replacement battalion and after his arrival in France served in Battery C., Seventh Field Artillery; he went through three major offensives and served nine months with the occupation army at Coblenz, Germany. On September 27, 1919, he received his honorable discharge and immediately returned to Stockton and has since taken a very active interest in farming pursuits. He handles the subdivision of the home ranch in a very capable manner and his present fine home place of 183 acres is a portion of the homestead which was settled by his grandfather, Samuel Hewitt, in the early '50s.

On May 30, 1922, Mr. Hewitt was married to Miss Marguerite Menchen, a graduate of the Lux School at San Francisco, a daughter of George and Anna Menchen, residents of Petaluma. Mr. Hewitt is a member of the American Legion and the local Farm Bureau. In politics he is a Republican and his public spirited interest has been manifested in all affairs concerning the welfare of his county and community.

GEORGE FALKENBOROUGH SMITH.—

Prominent among the sturdy, progressive and prosperous pioneers whose fruitful lives were spent in intimate association with the growth and development of California, especially with the expansion of the northern section of the state, was George Falkenborough Smith, less familiarly known, perhaps, by that name to his fellow-pioneers of early days than by the name Fortenberry Smith, as he was generally called throughout the great Central Valley, where he was always popular and esteemed as an experienced and very successful "Gringo" cattle raiser. While best known in the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys, his dealings extended through the state to the south as far as the Mexican border; and having always maintained amicable relations, through his honest and generous methods, with the native Spanish and Mexicans, he was welcomed wherever he rode by the cattle raisers.

His branch of the Smith family went back to Virginian ancestry in the person of Grandfather Isaac Smith, a Revolutionary soldier. His son, Robert Smith, was born on June 2, 1771, and in time migrated to Kentucky, where he met and married Lydia Ann Hardin McMahon, a member of two other Virginia families, the McMahons coming from Frederick County and the Hardins from Fauquier County, in that state. The first Hardin emigrant was a French Huguenot, while his wife was Lydia Waters, of English birth. John McMahon, and Rosannah Hardin, born in 1760, went to Kentucky when Lydia (who was born on May 9, 1784) was three years old, joining the expedition headed by Rosannah's brother, Col. John Hardin. He had already been there and had located lands, and about 1786 or 1787 he took his family and certain relatives back to Washington County. The sons of Martin Hardin, the great-grandfather, who lived and died in Fauquier County, lived some years at George's Creek, Monongahela, Pa.; and from there they floated down the river into the Ohio River, to Kentucky.

George F. Smith was born on September 13, 1822, in Crawford County, Ind., and from infancy profited by the English, Irish and Huguenot traits inherited from his excellent parents, who had moved into Crawford County because they considered the river lands unhealthful. They had ten children; but one boy died in infancy, and their only girl Rose passed away when she was nineteen years old and just budding into attractive womanhood. George was born about the time she breathed her last. Having a large family and no daughters, Mrs. Smith trained her sons to household duties, assigning four to help their father in the field, and retaining four to assist her in the home. Two of the latter did the cooking and general housework, and two—Ben and George—busied themselves with the spinning and weaving. George was the spinner, and inordinately vain over his ability in that line; he would spin his stint, and then help Ben with his weaving, and after that they were free to play. He would also challenge all the girls of the neighborhood to a contest of skill, but the girls never ventured to accept his challenge, and hence he regarded himself as the champion spinner of the neighborhood. Robert Smith, who had long been a cripple through a fall from a horse, died when George was sixteen, and as soon as they were old enough the boys went back to the Ohio River, several settling in Meade County, Ky., where they lived and died. Thus it happened that George, our subject, attended the schools of that county, and with his brothers spent much time on the Ohio. In their locality, flat-boating was quite an enterprise; and so they built boats, and loaded them with their crops, or perhaps with lime, and floated down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers to whatever market they desired. New Orleans, of course, was the great goal as a marketing-place, and George Smith made a number of trips there and back by the big river steamers before he embarked on his most adventurous journey and came out to California.

In the famous year of the Argonauts, 1849, George F. Smith crossed the then little-traversed plains and arrived in Sacramento on Independence Day. His party, which was composed entirely of young and hardy men, all had fine mule teams, and they adopted the method of overtaking an ox-train and traveling with it, while their mules rested. Then they would push on more rapidly and overtake the next ox-train. There was danger, of course, from the Indians; but they were successful in slipping through, probably because of their method was unusual and unexpected. It was George Smith's intention to try his luck at mining; but after casting in his lot at the so-called "Southern" mines, he met with little or no success, and when other opportunities beckoned he answered their appeal. Later in life, he often said it would have been a financial misfortune had he met with even moderate success, and so been diverted or retarded from his destined way.

Leaving the mines, he first went to Stockton, where he established a livery stable in partnership with a man named Van Dyke; but although they were well rewarded, he sold out his interest in the spring of 1851, just before a fire swept the city and destroyed the stables. He already had begun to negotiate with one of the old Spanish families for the purchase of its holdings, consisting of a ranch on the west side of the Tuolumne, near its junction with the San Joaquin River in what is now Stanislaus County; and he immediately proceeded to secure United States title to this land. With the land, he acquired the "harp brand" and its accompanying ear-marks, the "swallow-fork" and the "under-slope," and this purchase conveyed to him, wherever found, "all cattle or horses bearing one or both of said marks, being marks of identification, or calves following cows, or colts following mares, bearing the same." He immediately planted an orchard, and his place was known far and wide for its fruit, and people came comparatively long distances to partake of his hospitality and to eat of his fruit, his vegetables and his luscious melons, for the cattlemen kept open house to all comers.

On May 9, 1854, Mr. Smith was married at Sonora, in Tuolumne County, to Miss Jane Bell, a native of Rutherford County, N. C., where she was born on March 7, 1827, a daughter of John and Margaret (Neel) Bell, both North Carolinians of Scotch origin, and descendants of good old American Revolutionary stock. She had come to California two years before, by way of the Nicaragua route, and had braved frontier life with true pioneer spirit. John Bell was born in Lincoln County, N. C., on March 4, 1787, and Margaret Neel was born in Cabarrus County, in the same state, on September 29, 1796. Both of Jane Bell's grandfathers were Revolutionary soldiers. Thomas Bell, her father's father, was born in Rathfriland, County Cork, Ireland, on February 2, 1745; but his father, William Bell, came over to Ireland from Dundee, Scotland, early in 1700 to escape the persecution of "Bloody Mary," for they were followers of the Scotch Stuarts, though Presbyterians in religion. Thomas Bell came out to America in 1765, enlisted for service in the Revolution during the second year, and served with credit during the remainder of the war. He married Rachel Ewart, who was born in 1759 and was related to old North Carolina families, her father having been Robert Ewart, born in 1725, who served at the Battle of King's Mountain, and was a member of the Committee of Safety from the Salisbury district in 1775, and her mother, Margaret Adams, a daughter of William Adams. Jane Bell's maternal grandfather, John Neel, was born in North Carolina. His father was James Neel, a Revolutionary soldier, and his mother was Margaret McEwen. The Neels and the McEwens both lived in western North Carolina in early Indian days, and there had thrilling experiences; but the family of John Neel's wife, Sarah Gayley, had moved to North Carolina from Pennsylvania.

Soon after Jane Bell's birth, her parents moved to Tennessee, then decidedly a frontier country, and no place for a family of children, away from the school advantages of a thickly settled, established community. Then, too, the farm of John Bell, sold in Rutherford County, N. C., later yielded much gold, being in the far-famed gold-fields of the Tar-pitch State. The Bells lived in Tennessee until 1841, when they removed to Metropolis, Ill. There they remained until they came to California in 1852, with the exception of a brief period when they were in Smithland, Ky., where John Bell died on July 12, 1844. Margaret Bell, the mother, passed away in Metropolis, on March 17, 1849, and both parents are buried there.

Two of Jane Bell's brothers, Andrew and Thomas Bell, had come out to California in 1848, and later Andrew came back for his family. The party consisted of Jane Bell, James Bell and his wife, and a married sister, Rachel Robertson, and her husband (a doctor) and her stepson. Andrew Bell had had such a hard trip overland to California that he wished to take his family by the way of the Nicaragua route, and be spared equal hardships; but they also had a very hard trip. They embarked at New Orleans on the steamer "Pampero," but encountered a hurricane in the Gulf of Mexico, and the steamer, which had been rebuilt and made longer, broke in twain and they were in great good fortune to be able to get back to New Orleans. On their second trip, they were fairly comfortable while traveling on the Atlantic; but when they reached the Pacific, only one boat met the two steamers, bound respectively from New York and New Orleans, and the New York passengers got aboard the Pacific steamer first. The Bell family, although holding first-class passenger tickets, only had a portion of the deck assigned to them, until two gentlemen gave up their cabin to Jane Bell, who had been stricken with the Panama fever, and to her sister-in-law, who was also sick. Both came near death; and later, on their arrival in Sonora, where their brothers were located, they contracted smallpox, their brother Thomas already having taken that disease and so communicating it to them.

The Bell brothers were millwrights and carpenters. They built the first Sonora court house, and later James Bell erected a flour-mill near Sonora, and was a prominent business man of the county, closely associated with the history of that locality and also prominent in Masonic affairs. He lived there until his death, in 1896. Andrew Neel Bell and Thomas Ewart Bell were interested in the first quartz mills erected in California, but on account of the quality of the ore and the crude milling methods, the venture proved a failure. Twenty years later, with improved machinery and methods, the mine became one of the greatest producers of gold in the mother lode. Later, Thomas and Andrew Bell went to Inyo County and became prominent in the history of that section. Andrew Bell built the first flour-mill established there; and this is still in existence, one of the oldest and most interesting landmarks.

George F. Smith took his bride on horseback across the California plains, brilliant with the wild-flowers which made it look like a gorgeous carpet, to his home cattle-ranch at the fork of the Tuolumne and Stanislaus Rivers. There three of his children were born, Richard Russell, Thomas George, and Henry Clay, the last-named passing away there also. He built a new home upon the place; but shortly after it was completed, he sold the place to an Englishman named John Davis, and in November, 1860, moved his family to Stockton, where Thomas George died of diphtheria, on January 13, 1861. He made several trips back to Kentucky, to visit his brothers and friends, the first in 1869, when he took his family and stayed six months, the second trip in 1871 or 1872, and the third in 1883, when he took his daughter Bell with him.

In the sixties Mr. Smith became associated in business with the late Jefferson G. James of San Francisco and Fresno counties; and although their cattle and ranges were never amalgamated, in almost all speculations they were partners, and there are now surviving a few properties from this old partnership of Smith & James. The two men were close friends, and the strong bonds of friendship held intact after Mr. Smith decided to retire from active participation in business. In his operations in more active days, he had employed mostly Mexican herders and had learned enough Spanish for all business purposes; and he had in other respects matched up with the natives. The Mexicans, for example, were wonderful riders, and George Smith became quite expert as a horseman, and could pick up a handkerchief from the ground as he rode by at full speed.

Mr. Smith bought a block of land in Stockton, and in the fall of 1861 the family home at 347 East Poplar Street, which is now the property of his daughter, Miss Nellie Alice Smith, was ready for occupancy. After selling his ranches in Stanislaus County, he purchased the Fish slough range of 8,000 acres, and moved his horses and cattle there, while Mrs. Smith made a visit to her brother, James Bell, near Sonora. Her brother, Thomas Bell, was taking her to Stockton to their new home when they were caught at Knights Ferry by the flood and had many exciting experiences. She was the guest of the Edwards family for six weeks, and saw the Two Mile Bar Bridge (a toll-bridge built and operated by her brother, Thomas Bell) go down the Stanislaus River. She also saw the Knights Ferry Bridge go off. The present bridge at Knights Ferry was also long operated as a toll-bridge, in which all the Bell brothers held large interests. During the disastrous flood, Mr. and Mrs. Smith had no knowledge of each other's welfare, and Mr. Smith did not succeed in reaching Stockton until two weeks after his wife had arrived. They then moved into their home, where they lived until her death in 1910, except for a few years when she lived on her ranch near Stockton. Her two youngest children were born in the Stockton home, and there their youngest boy, Willie, died. The eldest daughter, Bell, was born in Jackson, Amador County, and was one of the three children who have lived to maturity. Richard Russell Smith has been married twice; his present wife was Miss Hetty Corlett, a native of Iowa, who was reared in San Francisco. By this marriage there were two children, but both are dead, the boy at birth, and the little girl, Kathryn Bell, who was a remarkable child, just before her fourth birthday. His first marriage was with Miss Etta Russell, a native of Woodbridge, San Joaquin County, and there were three children by this marriage: George Russell, Ebell, and Elta. George has been married twice, the second time to Miss Sue Waldie of Antioch, Cal., by whom he has had two children, Richard Russell, 2nd, and Jane Bell, who is named for her great-grandmother. Ebell Smith married Henry Addison Barnett, the son of a pioneer family known to the Smiths from earliest days. There is one child, Francis Marion, who is so named for his paternal grandfather. Elta Smith married Arthur H. MacFarland, of Los Angeles, who is a member of a prominent family of that place. Emma Bell, George F. Smith's oldest daughter, married Otto Grunsky, of Stockton, and they had three children, Otto, Jr., Charles and George. The year 1899 brought sad misfortune to the Smith family, for Death took away three members of the devoted circle. First, Bell Smith Grunsky died, on March 15th; then Etta Russell Smith, Richard's wife, died on May 26; and little George Grunsky, Bell's son, passed away on the 2nd of December.

Otto and Charles, Bell Grunsky's sons, both went overseas in the great World War, but Otto alone saw actual fighting. He went in the ranks of the 91st Division, was under Col. Henry C. Jewett of the 316th Engineers, Company C, Captain Collins' command, and was a sergeant when the war closed. He was in three major engagements, St. Mihiel, the Argonne, and Lys-Scheldt, in Belgium, and he went over the top as an infantryman in the Argonne, besides doing engineer service. He served along the battle front, and his company was in action when the armistice was signed; yet he came out without injury, although his comrades fell at his side. Charles volunteered as soon as the United States went into the war, took the training at the Officers' Training Camp, won the rank of first lieutenant, and was assigned to the 5th Engineer Train at Fort Funston, Texas, where for a long time he was the only officer. He took the train overland to Corpus Christi, Texas, and while waiting to be sent overseas he qualified for the regular army, and became captain of Company B, 5th Engineers, 7th Division. He arrived in France on August 12, 1918, and was regimental supply captain part of the time there. He went to an officers' bridge-building school, and while there his company was sent to the front. He had just rejoined them when the armistice was signed. He was very popular with his company, each member declaring that he never failed to mete out absolute justice. Charles was married on July 11, 1922, to Gertrude Jessup Dixon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Jessup of San Francisco. Mrs. Jessup was Marietta Cowie of Sonora, Tuolumne County, and her parents were early friends of the James Bell family there. Richard Russell Smith lives retired at Berkeley, and Miss Nellie Alice Smith resides at the old Smith home-place at 347 East Poplar Street, Stockton, an old Stockton landmark, where Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Barnett reside with her.

In the late sixties, Mr. Smith sold his lands and cattle in Fresno County, retaining, however, the "brand and ear-marks" as his property; and for five or six years thereafter he gave much of his time, in the capacity of a director, to the affairs of the Bank of Stockton, the largest organization of that character in San Joaquin County. In the early seventies, Captain Kidd, the president and manager of the bank, moved his residence to San Francisco and gave all of his attention to the management of his interests in that city. For a time a manager was employed to take over his duties in the Bank of Stockton; but as this proved unsatisfactory to the directors, they determined if possible to have one of their members assume the duties. The choice centered upon Mr. Smith; but after considerable hesitancy he refused the offer as he feared that after all the years he had lived in the freedom of the "open," such confinement would prove irksome to him. In 1872 and 1873, he purchased 3,000 acres of land four miles northwest from Stockton, the greater part of which was swamp or tule land, and the leveeing, ditching, draining and breaking of which kept him very busy for a number of years. The first levees were built by Chinese coolie labor, 260 of the Orientals being employed at one time. Levees so constructed having proven unsatisfactory, Mr. Smith constructed an endless chain dredger, known as "The Ajax," one of the pioneer dredging machines of the San Joaquin and Sacramento delta regions. After disposing of his ranges and cattle interests, he intended to retire; but he found he could not endure the inactivity. His family regret that he did not take the opening offered him by the Stockton Savings Bank, but he bought instead the 3,000 acres referred to, on the lower Sacramento Road. He had a hard and expensive training, when he changed occupations, for he said he never knew what hard work was until he became involved in farming. Reclaiming swamp and overflow lands was a new enterprise, and even to this day people are ruined financially trying to accomplish it. He sank a lot of money in this farm; and worse than that, he lost his health when a tenant shot him in the back. His death at the comparatively early age of sixty-seven was probably due to the bullet, which was never removed, and to an accident some years later when he was thrown from a cart at his Los Banos sheep ranch and kicked by the horse. He had been a strong, robust man, but he never fully recovered from these two injuries.

In personal appearance, George F. Smith was six feet one inch tall, broad and muscular, and weighed about 190 pounds, with not an ounce of fat on his frame. He was a man to whom all children felt a strong attraction, and he made it his boast that no child had ever refused to come to him from its mother. In politics he was a Democrat, but invariably voted for any Republican whom he regarded as more capable or honest. For a time, he was a member of the San Joaquin Society of Pioneers. Owing to the meager educational facilities in Kentucky early in the nineteenth century, Mr. Smith always felt that he had been deprived of the early education to which all American youths are entitled. He was therefore much interested in the public schools, and served for a number of years on the Board of Education of Stockton. He was at the time of his death a member of San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. A. & A. M., Stockton, Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., and Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T. His son, Richard Russell Smith, is also a member of all three.

After Mr. Smith's demise, the following resolutions were sent the family of the deceased:

To the Officers and Members of Stockton Commandery, No. 8, K. T.

Your Committee, appointed to draft resolutions of respect to the memory of our late Sir Knight George F. Smith, beg leave to submit the following:

Sir Knight George F. Smith was a member in good standing in San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; and Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T., and his death has caused a vacancy in our ranks.

Now that he has gone, we are more conscious of his good character, a model of punctuality in all his dealings, sincere and earnest in all he did, thoughtful in all he said, cautious, cool, energetic and candid. He has left behind him an honored name, more valuable than the fortune which crowned his career with success.

In order, therefore, to perpetuate the recollection of his virtues, as a member and Sir Knight of this Commandery, be it

Resolved, That the loss sustained is deeply felt by the members of this Commandery; that his virtues and demeanor are worthy of imitation; that we mourn his death as an irreparable loss to his family, to the community, and to the members of this Commandery; that these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, and a copy hereof sent to his bereaved widow and children, with the sympathy of his fellow-members.

DELAVAN M. BURGE.—An energetic, foreseeing, eminently practical and very successful rancher is Delavan M. Burge, a native of Iowa, where he was born near Cedar Rapids, in Lynn County, on December 28, 1856. His father, a native of Virginia, was Simeon S. Burge, and he married Miss Elizabeth Archer, a native of Ohio. They both went to Iowa, where they married. In 1862 these sturdy pioneers crossed the plains, during which they and their companions had no less than three encounters with the Indians, and in one encounter, the train had to halt and corral at noon, when shots were exchanged. The Indians succeeded in stampeding the fleeing cattle, consisting of about eighty head of domestic stock, but luckily, while two persons were wounded, none were killed. In 1864, Mr. Burge went back to Iowa to bring his parents, Minor and Elizabeth Burge, to California. They died here and are buried at Woodbridge.

Upon arriving in California, Simeon Burge first settled four miles west of Woodbridge, where he purchased a quarter-section of land, later adding a second quarter section to it in the same vicinity. The pioneer and his wife had seven children: John O., who is now deceased; Delavan M.; Estella, who has become Mrs. Williams, of San Francisco; Simon, also deceased and buried at Woodbridge; Maude, who is Mrs. Oppenheimer; Ella, Mrs. Charles Searle, and Archer.

Delavan began his education at the Turner district school, but in 1871, the family moved to Stockton, for Mr. Burge had been elected county recorder, an office he filled with signal ability for two years, when he resigned. He then helped to organize the Grangers Union, and became secretary and manager; and this helpful enterprise he thus headed from 1874 to 1880. He then became general manager for the D. M. Osborn Company, and went to Portland, Ore., for five years; but in 1885 he returned to Stockton and conducted a hardware business. He bought out Bailey Badgeley, and from 1885 to 1890, had a business at the corner of Main and California streets. Mr. Burge then became a partner in the Burge-Donahoo Company of San Francisco, jobbers of farming implements, for several years; but from San Francisco he removed to Merced and engaged in grain-buying. He died at Point Richmond, when past seventy-five years of age, and was buried in the rural cemetery of Stockton. Mrs. Burge died in April, 1906.

Delavan Burge struck out for himself when very young, and at Stockton on May 20, 1880, he was married to Miss Mary A. Harelson, a daughter of Edmund and Mary Ann (Oliver) Harelson; her father was a native of Kentucky, who had moved into Wisconsin, in frontier days, and then on to California across the plains, arriving in 1850. He mined for a short time, recovered his health, then returned to Wisconsin, but did not remain very long until he again came to California. Mrs. Harelson was a native of Alabama, and settled on the ranch near Stockton, and her father had also moved to Wisconsin in pioneer days, braving the rigors of frontier life. They were also married in Wisconsin. Edmund Harelson had located about six miles northeast of Stockton, on Fairchild Lane, and was joined here by his wife and children; then they purchased 482 acres from a Mr. Hitchcock. The Harelsons had six children: Durrett O., now of San Francisco; Almeda, Mrs. C. C. Castle of Stockton; Elizabeth became Mrs. John Salmon; Edmund died at the age of sixteen; Mary Ann is Mrs. Burge; Nevada is Mrs. O. R. Smith of Lindsay. The father died at the age of sixty, while the mother lived to be eighty-three. In Lancaster Co., Wis., Mr. Harelson had been county treasurer.

In 1881, Delavan Burge bought 57½ acres of the old Harelson place and Mrs. Burge inherited 57½ acres from her father; they moved onto it and he planted it to grain until he started to intensify his farming. In 1889 he set out sixteen acres to grapes; now he has thirty-five acres of bearing vineyard. He also has four acres of almonds, five acres of walnuts, and four acres of cherries, the place being well irrigated. He has put all the improvements on the place, and has a finely-equipped ranch for high-grade and abundant production. At the death of her mother Mrs. Burge inherited forty more acres of the estate.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Burge. Noel S. is superintendent of the Libby Canal Ranch, a graduate of Stockton high and of Stanford University in the field of civil engineering, having been a member of the class of '07; Hazel, the wife of Prentice Burtis, the manager of Hale Bros., of Sacramento, is a graduate of Stockton high school and Smith College in Massachusetts. Noel married Miss Ruth Maddox, of Visalia, and they have three children—Delavan, Noel S., Jr., and Barbara Ann; and Mrs. Burtis has a son, Prentice Townsend Burtis, and a daughter, Mary Prudence. Delavan M. Burge is a Republican in politics; and he is a member of Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Stockton.

ABRAHAM PARSONS HENNING.—A most worthy and highly esteemed pioneer who always endeavored to live up to the Golden Rule, and who will be sure, therefore, of the honor usually accorded by posterity to those whom the world cherishes for helping to make life of value to the living, was Abraham Parsons Henning, to be thought of by all who knew him, not as having died, but rather as having continued elsewhere a career of marked usefulness. Born in Saline County, Mo., on November 1, 1846, he was the son of John Pinnell and Mary Katherine (Vanmeter) Henning. She was born in Westmoreland County, Va., near the home of General George Washington; and her father's family was related, through its branch of the Fairfax family, to the first President of our land. Mary Katherine's relatives on her mother's side were most honorable descendants of the "Honorable Parsons," who was well-known for his ability, integrity, wealth and generosity. Mary Katherine was only a child when her father, Abraham Vanmeter, who had married Elizabeth Parsons, sold their old Virginia home and started across the dense forest-land of the West to make their next home in Missouri. He stopped near Miami, Mo., on the river, and purchased several hundreds of acres of government land. There he established a home-place, since added to so that it has come to embrace several thousand acres, which as late as the nineties was still known as the old Vanmeter home. The youngest son of Abraham Vanmeter, named Able James Vanmeter, together with his wife, Annie, resided on the place during the nineties, and she is still there.

On June 16, 1840, Miss Mary Katherine Vanmeter, was married to John Pinnell Henning, who came out to California for the first time in 1849. Later, he returned to Missouri, and in 1854, the family came across the great plains, Mrs. Henning, during the long, hazardous journey, driving her own team. The oldest son, Irving Pinnell, was then twelve years of age; the next, Addison David, was ten years old; while the youngest son, Abraham Parsons, the subject of this sketch, was only seven, somewhat tender ages, which did not, however deter these sturdy boys from riding horseback the long, tiresome journey, over 3,000 miles, at the same time driving cattle, and standing guard during the night, like men, on the watch against a possible ravaging onslaught of the prowling Sioux and Cheyenne Indians, precautions not in vain, for only a few days after the departure of the family from the fort, the Indians killed many of the soldiers in cold-blooded murder. The Indians at this time were becoming desperate over the apparent destruction of their game, and in revenge were accustomed to make the most cowardly and unprovoked assaults on the immigrants. On Bear River, the men in advance of the Henning train killed an Indian and captured twenty ponies in an encounter with the red men. Mrs. Henning was a very cool and careful driver, and never had an accident, even in crossing the roughest mountain rivers, although along the River Platte and among the Black Hills the storms raged almost daily, and once, during a hard thunderstorm, the lightning killed an ox.

After what could be called a fortunate and in many ways a pleasant journey of five months, all the party reached San Jose safely and camped on the Collins ranch at the Eastern foothills of the Santa Clara Valley—the ranch then owned by Mr. Collins, the hat manufacturer of San Francisco. Soon after, Mr. Henning purchased a farm of 160 acres from a Mr. Johnson, and there the family made their home. There, also, Mary Elizabeth was born, who later married a Mr. Hall and resided in a lovely home on the Monterey road, near San Jose. The other daughter, Sarah Frances, who married Mr. De Rome and settled at Menlo Park, was born on the farm near Edenvale, to which John P. Henning later moved. Two sons, John Thomas Henning and Herbert Vanmeter Henning died when only a few years old. Addison Henning passed away in 1892, on the 5th of April, at the Henning home at San Miguel, one month after the father died; and both J. P. and his son Addison were buried near the home. This home-place remained in the estate of the heirs of J. P. Henning for quite a while after his death.

J. P. Henning was engaged in farming and stock-raising in the Santa Clara Valley until 1859, when he bought out Buffalo Jones, above Los Gatos, and undertook the running of sawmills together with stock-raising. He laid out Lexington, and named it after his home in Missouri, where he and his brother Alpha W. resided and owned a furniture factory. In 1861, J. P. Henning bought 250 acres of land west of Edenvale, on the old Monterey road, and set out a large family orchard, one of the first to be planted in that vicinity. He also made valuable improvements while preparing a genuine homestead; but in after years he bought other titles and paid full value in gold coin three different times, each to a different claimant, for the same piece of land, and finally was ruthlessly driven from his home by so-called officers of the law.

Under the necessity of beginning life all over again, Mr. Henning removed to Lompoc, in Santa Barbara County, in 1874, to the New Temperance Colony, of which he was an active trustee, and his eldest son a highly esteemed secretary, from 1875 to 1880. In the latter year, the oldest son, Irving Pinnell Henning, married Miss Ella Brown; and after their marriage, they removed to San Jose. He was for many years connected with the Cogswell Polytechnic College, and later with the California School of Mechanical Arts, of San Francisco, founded by James Lick. The youngest son, Abraham Parsons, the subject of this sketch, married Miss Sarah Ryder.

After a number of years, John Pinnell Henning, with his wife and youngest daughter, Fannie, moved near Cayucos, in San Luis Obispo County; and here Fannie married Alfred De Rome, a skillful artisan at the forge. Following the marriage of the youngest of the family, the parents sold their home and took up a government homestead, twelve miles east of Paso Robles; but Mr. Henning soon sold this, and bought instead a forty-acre tract of highly improved land, two and one-half miles to the south of San Miguel Mission on the Southern Pacific Railway and main county highway, bordering the Salinas River. There J. P. Henning died, and the mother made her home on this ranch with her daughter until her death.

Abraham Parsons Henning was married near Salinas, Cal., on May 20, 1873, to Miss Sarah Ryder, born in San Francisco, the daughter of William Charles and Rachel Marie (Kerr) Ryder, both natives of Boston. William Ryder made the journey to California in 1854 with his wife, and after settling in the Gateway of the West, conducted the old Reddington Drug Store in that city for many years. Later, in partnership with his brother he bought a farm near San Mateo, some 200 acres in all, and for a few years made his home at this place. In 1872 he moved to the vicinity of Salinas and engaged in the raising of grain at that place and it was here that Sarah Ryder married Abraham Parsons Henning. Sarah was the eldest of eight children, the others being as follows: William Charles, now deceased; Rachael Marie, who is Mrs. Bardin and lives at Salinas; Eliza Jane, Mrs. Gruwell, who lives at San Miguel; John, deceased; Henry; Harriet, now Mrs. Machado, of Monterey; and Mrs. Florence Smart, also deceased. William Ryder died at the age of seventy-eight, and his wife when seventy-four.

After their wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Henning resided in San Jose for some fifteen years, and then removed to Cottonwood, in Shasta County, where their children were reared and educated. They were blessed with ten children: John A. is in Lodi; Irving L. is of Woodland; Wilbur S. lives at Lodi; Frank A. is in Lodi; Allen D. is in Dorris, Cal.; Henry H. is at Lodi; Marion D. is at Gervais, Ore.; Mabel Frances died in 1892; two years later, George Parsons passed away; and Florence L. is at home in Clements with her mother.

In 1911, Mr. Henning moved with his family to San Joaquin County, and in November bought a ranch of fifty acres about one mile to the east of Clements, on the state highway. This was open land but Mr. Henning's enthusiastic application to the industry involved enabled him to develop this ranch as he had developed orchards and vineyards in Fresno, Santa Clara, and Shasta counties. He set out thirty-five acres to an orchard, planting plums and walnuts. The orchard is irrigated by a private pumping plant on the ranch. The remaining fifteen acres are ordinary farming land. Here Mr. Henning built a commodious home, and here he died, on December 27, 1920. He left a widow and eight living children, and two sisters and a brother—Mary E. Hall of Los Gatos, Fannie De Rome, and Irving P. Henning of San Jose—the rest of the family having already preceded him to the Great Beyond. Mr. Henning was a Republican. He endeavored to be liberal and fair in all things, and supported whatever made for the public welfare and community progress.

JAMES P. HARKINS.—An efficient and popular railroad official is James P. Harkins, the wide-awake and affable agent of the Western Pacific Railroad handling both their growing freight and passenger interests at Stockton, in which city he was born on November 29, 1877. His father, Captain John Harkins, is still esteemed as one of the most agreeable of Irish gentlemen settling in America, while his mother, who was Miss Mary Ann McCarthy before her marriage, is equally the center of a circle of devoted friends, who admire in her those traits for which the daughters of Erin have long been noted.

James Harkins was educated at St. Mary's College, Stockton, in the thorough manner for which that institution is famous, and then he began a three-year experience as messenger boy in the employ of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and during his service there, he learned telegraphy, becoming telegraph operator for the Alameda & San Joaquin Railroad, a busy line running from Stockton to the coal mines at Tesla. When the Western Pacific Railroad started construction in 1905, they took over this coal line, and Mr. Harkins became an operator along the line of construction. In 1909, the Western Pacific Railroad commenced regular operations in their important service to the public, and Mr. Har-kins was made cashier in the local office under the management of J. H. Mettler, the agent. Four years later, in January, he was promoted to be chief clerk, and, having continued to give the best of satisfaction as his experience was widened and he became more interested in and devoted to railroad work, in March, 1919, he was made freight and passenger agent at Stockton—in which capacity he succeeds so well that the company is able to render the maximum of service with the lowest cost and the least possible friction to the public.

At Stockton, in 1914, Mr. Harkins was married to Miss Catherine McLaughlin, the daughter of a pioneer family of Stockton; and their fortunate union has been blessed with three children, William T., Ivan James, and Jacquelin M. Mr. Harkins belongs to Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., to Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and he is a very active and popular worker in the K. of C. and the Young Men's Institute.

RICHARD W. BONNEY.—A native son of California who is prominently connected with various military organizations is Richard W. Bonney, who was born in Stockton, August 5, 1871, the son of John A. and Ann Elizabeth (Yelland) Bonney, natives of Eastport, Maine, and Cornwall, England, respectively. John A. Bonney crossed the plains to California by way of the Salt Lake route in 1854 and upon his arrival he followed mining, built quartz mills, etc., until 1867, making his headquarters in Reno and Carson City, Nev. During 1867 he entered the employ of the Central Pacific Railroad as foreman of the bridge-building department and was engaged in building stations, tanks, bridges at various points on the line. He lived in Stockton until 1872, when he moved to Merced and was in charge of the pumping plant at that station for the Central Pacific. Later he returned to the vicinity of Stockton and tried his luck in running a ranch near the fair grounds, but this was not to his liking and during the interim was employed by the paper mill. Then he moved into town and took up the trades of millwright and carpenter, doing a great deal of work for the Sperry Flour Company and for the old Shippee Harvester Works. Mr. Bonney, in October, 1870, had married at Stockton, Miss Ann Elizabeth Yelland and six children were born to them: Richard W., was the oldest; Ida Scott, is now the widow of James M. Wright and lives in Pacific Grove; Ethelind M., is a teacher in the Stockton schools; Orpha O., died in infancy; Mabel Y., the next in order of birth, died at eighteen months; Ruth Allen is now Mrs. H. E. Lewis, also of Pacific Grove. The wife and mother died in 1920, while Mr. Bonney died on October 4, 1914. The last twenty-three years of his life were spent at Pacific Grove, where he was a member of the local Grand Army Post. He was in Nevada during the Civil War and joined Company E, First Nevada Cavalry, and spent one year fighting the Indians. He was a member of Rawlins Post, G. A. R., later being transferred to the Pacific Grove Post.

Richard W. Bonney attended the Nightingale district school and after moving to Stockton, the Jefferson school and finished with a business course at the Stockton Business College. When he was fifteen he worked in a tannery, later at the black-smithing trade, then began at the printing business, which he followed for a quarter of a century, excepting the time he was in military service. He first worked for B. H. Berdine, then in 1890 started with the Stockton Mail, continuing there as a printing pressman until 1914. For short periods of time he worked on the Monterey Cypress and the Pacific Grove Review. On November 1, 1913, he took the civil service examination and in 1914 became an employe of the postal department in Stockton, later became a letter carrier, and is now in the parcel post department in the local postoffice. When the members of the board of freeholders were elected to frame the present operating charter of Stockton, Mr. Bonney was one of those elected.

The marriage of Mr. Bonney, on June 27, 1900, at Stockton, united him with Miss Katherine Desmond, born near Lawrence, Mass., a daughter of Michael and Bridget Desmond, both natives of Ireland. In 1892, Miss Desmond came to California to join a brother and two aunts. The following children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Bonney: Mary V., Loyola C., Richard W., Jr., and Christina D., who died at the age of twenty-one months.

Mr. Bonney has an interesting record as a soldier which began when he entered Company A, Sixth Infantry, Third Brigade, N. G. C. on June 8, 1891, and saw service for twenty-four days during July, 1894, at the time of the A. R. U. strike; in 1895 he was promoted to be a corporal, then became sergeant in 1898, just before the Maine was blown up. When war was declared against Spain, Company A, enlisted in the volunteer service. Mr. Bonney went to San Francisco with his company, where they completed their muster into the United States Volunteer Service. The captains of each company were instructed to appoint their own non-commissioned officers and Mr. Bonney was appointed company quartermaster sergeant and was stationed at Alcatraz until September, 1898, then transferred to Fort Point and served until he was mustered out of service of the United States on December 15, 1898. He was given orders to report back to the N. G. C. on May 25, 1899, at which time he was given a company discharge for promotion and became regimental quartermaster sergeant for the Sixth Regiment, N. G. C. on June 10, 1901. In 1905 he reenlisted in Company A, N. G. C., was appointed Company Q. M. S., during that enlistment Company A was called for duty in San Francisco at the time of the fire in 1906, and Mr. Bonney was on duty 30 days. After a record of ten years of service, he was given a certificate of discharge and a decoration. Mr. Bonney was one of the organizers and mustering officers of Commodore Stockton Camp, No. 281, Spanish-American War Veterans on August 29, 1902. On January 4, 1904, it was rechartered as Commodore Stockton Camp, No. 4, Department of California, United Spanish War Veterans; when organized there were seventeen charter members and now there are fifty-four, Mr. Bonney being adjutant. When Weber Auxiliary No. 38 was organized Mrs. Bonney was made the first president. On November 13, 1917, Hiram W. Johnson Garrison No. 33, Army and Navy Union of U. S. A., was organized with twenty charter members, Mr. Bonney again being mustering-in officer. He is commander of Gen. Thos. E. Ketcham Camp No. 11, Div. of Calif. & Pacific Sons of Veterans, U. S. A.; member of Court Stockton No. 56, F. & A.; Stockton Printing Pressman's Union No. 132 of which he is past president, and honorary member of Luneta Post No. 52 V. of F. W. of U. S. A. In politics he is a Republican.

ROBERT BOYCE.—An honored pioneer citizen of San Joaquin County, who contributed generously to the county's development during a residence of fifty-five years, Robert Boyce was born in a rural district of Richland County, Ohio, on July 6, 1847, the son of Jonathan and Nancy (Jump) Boyce, natives respectively of England and West Virg.n.a. When a young man, Jonathan Boyce came out to America and westward to Ohio, with his parents, where they settled in Richland County, and he followed agricultural pursuits. In the year 1859 he crossed the great plains with his family, making the long and tedious journey to California in an ox-team train, and on his arrival in San Joaquin County, he located at Woodbridge. A true type of the wide-awake and progressive California pioneer, he saw the value of the virgin land spreading out before him, and set to work to clear and improve some of it; and because he understood the possibilities of the soil, and was, all in all, a good farmer, he succeeded in raising fine crops, and prospered, and steadily added to his holdings,—a circumstance of double import, for others witnessed his success and were stimulated to follow his example. Mr. Boyce and his devoted wife passed away at the old farm homestead, esteemed and honored by all who knew them.

Robert Boyce, the fourth of their six children, spent his early boyhood on the Boyce farm in Ohio, but in 1859, when he was twelve years old, he accompanied his parents across the continent to Woodbridge, in San Joaquin County. There he attended the public schools and completed his schooling. He remained on his father's ranch until he was twenty-four, and then, in 1871, he purchased the adjoining 160 acres. He farmed this tract to grain, and through the best of care and most scientific cultivation, he coaxed from the soil the highest yield. In 1882, he purchased another tract of 160 acres opposite his home-place; and after farming to grain for many years, he concluded to try viticulture. He therefore experimented, in 1890, by planting thirty-three acres to a vineyard, and the effort proved so successful in every way that in 1900 he set out sixty acres more. He was an early shipper of grapes, and built a house on his ranch especially for packing his products; and continuing to give unwearied attention to the problems of cultivation, he brought the properties into full bearing. In 1910, he removed to Lodi, where he erected a comfortable home from which he superintended his ranch; but he was not destined long to enjoy these domestic comforts, passing away on March 17, 1914. For many years a member of the Knights of Pythias, he was affiliated with the Woodbridge lodge; and he not only enjoyed an enviable popularity among his fraternal associates, but he occupied a high place in the esteem of the community, in which he had lived and labored for so many years, and in whose welfare he had always felt the keenest interest.

On March 3, 1872, Robert Boyce was married near Lodi to Miss Lorah K. Turner, a native of Plaquemine, near Baton Rouge, La., and the daughter of Frank and Victorine (Robicheaud) Turner—the former a native of Missouri, descended from an old and long-honored South Carolina family, and the latter a native of Louisiana, gracefully representing an old family there of most interesting French descent. Mr. Turner crossed the great plains to California in 1852, and for four years mined in Placerville, when he returned East for his wife and two children, whom he brought out to the Coast in 1856, by way of the 1stmus of Panama. At Woodbridge he located on 160 acres, which he in many ways improved. Mrs. Turner passed away in California, but her devoted husband spent his last days in Louisiana. He was for many years a trustee of the Turner School district, and was decidedly a strong, friendly advocate of popular education; and was also a member of the Masonic Lodge, in highest standing. Mr. and Mrs. Boyce were blessed with two children: Lorah, the wife of Chas. McConnell, passed away, in 1911, leaving three children; Martha D., is the wife of Major Walter E. Garrison, and they have two daughters.

Since her lamented husband's death, Mrs. Boyce has continued to make her home at 303 West Elm street, Lodi, and to take an active part in community work, being a member of the Lodi Woman's Club, and maintaining a very live interest in civic and social affairs. While not a member of any church, she is nevertheless a true Christian in spirit and in deed, and believes in doing all the good she can, especially in matters of unostentatious charity. She still retains the large ranch lands left her by her husband, and in 1919 she had an additional eighty acres of the old home ranch planted to Tokay grapes. Mrs. Boyce has been privileged to witness the most wonderful transformations effected in California during her long residence and she can recount many interesting stories of early days. She well remembers, for example, her trip to the Golden Gate from New Orleans, by way of Aspinwall, and then across the Isthmus to Panama, when they took passage on the steamer Golden Gate, and landed in San Francisco in January, 1856. San Joaquin County was then unsettled, Texas cattle roamed wild everywhere, and settlers were few and far between. But each year showed a steady influx, and thanks to the path-breaking labors of such pioneers as Mr. and Mrs. Boyce, the forests were felled, the land cleared, and the desert was made to blossom as the rose.

WM. E. FERGUSSON.—A veteran of the Civil War, Wm. E. Fergusson was born in Glengary County, Ontario, August 2, 1848, a son of Rev. Wm. E. and Jane (Mason) Fergusson, natives of Aberdeenshire, Scotland. The father was a graduate of St. Andrews University with the degree of M. A. and was ordained a minister in the Presbyterian Church. Coming to Ontario he preached for many years until he accepted the position of inspector of schools for Dundas County until he retired. He and his wife died in Ontario.

Of their ten children William E. is the fifth oldest and was educated in the public school at Winchester. Living close to the U. S. line, his patriotism was stirred and when sixteen years of age he left his books and made his way across the line to enlist in Company K., 193rd New York Volunteer Infantry, March, 1865, was sent into the Shenandoah Valley where he served nearly a year, being mustered out at Harper's Ferry in the spring of 1866 and was honorably discharged in Albany, N. Y. He returned to his studies and then taught school in Ontario until 1870, when he came to Nevada and taught school in Reese River until he began mining, in which he met with fair success. In 1884 he came to Shasta County, Cal., where he followed farming.

In 1872 Mr. Fergusson made a trip back to Ontario and was married to Miss Elsie Neveu, a native of that province. She died in Shasta County in 1893 leaving six children. Foresta presides over her father's home; W. P. Fergusson, Kenneth T. Fergusson, D. D. S.; Franklin Fergusson, Mrs. Elsie Proctor and Wilbur, all of Stockton. For a time Mr. Fergusson was in the employ of a lumber company. Later he became manager of a store and was assistant postmaster for several years. Several of his children having located in Stockton he also came hither and for three years he engaged in the grocery business, since which time he has lived retired. In Shasta County he was a member of the school board. He was made a Mason in St. Johns Lodge in Ontario and is now a member of Morning Star Lodge No. 68 F. & A. M. and also a member of Rawlins Post No. 23 G. A. R. serving as adjutant for the last six years and is also a past commander of the Post. He is a trustee in the United Brethren Church and politically he is a staunch Republican.

JOHN D. GRUWELL.—For more than twenty-five years John D. Gruwell resided on his ranch property four miles east of Farnington, where he became one of the best and most representative agriculturists in the county, and on his ranch of 720 acres, which was his home and center of operations from 1871 to 1900, he enjoyed a degree of prosperity which ranked him among the most enterprising men of his class in San Joaquin County. He was born in Quincy, Ill., June 9, 1830, a son of Robert and Millicent (Daves) Gruwell. The parents, natives of Ohio, moved to Indiana in an early day, and thence to Illinois in 1828; and there Robert Gruwell became the owner of 160 acres of land, and remained a resident there until 1833, when he moved to Lee County, Iowa. On May 3, 1849, with his wife and eleven children, he started for California. All these children were born in Illinois and Iowa; the eldest child died in 1852 at the sink of the Humbolt River, while crossing the plains. With them across the plains a brother, Jacob Gruwell, came with his family.

At Salt Lake City some Mormon acquaintances told them that it was impossible to go through to California by the northern route, as the grass was all burnt off. They wintered at Fort Utah, a distance of sixty miles from Salt Lake City, found work, and there met a man named Page, whom their father had brought from Iowa, and this man, in company with a cousin, went to the council house and there heard the Mormons talk of murdering Jacob and Robert Gruwell, charging that they had been parties to the expulsion of the Mormons from Nauvoo, Ill., and other localities in Iowa. The young men returned to camp and reported the danger, so the Gruwell brothers started for California at once, by a circuitous route, leaving their families, who secured a Mexican guide and in three days started on the southern route for this state, their train being the first that ever passed over General John C. Fremont's southern trail. After many hardships, privations and also loss of cattle, etc., their progress became very slow, and soon their diet was confined to beef cattle, who had become too poor and weak to bear the yoke. It was seen that the women and children would all perish from hunger, so John D. Gruwell and his older brother, in company with four others, left the train at a distance of 300 miles for the nearest settlement, the Cucamonga ranch. They had been informed by their Mexican guide that the distance was only sixty miles, and they took with them only four days' rations; when their provisions gave out they lost all hope. They toiled on, however, four days and three nights longer, without a drop of water or a morsel of food to eat except prickly pears. At Los Vegas Springs they found a poor colt which had been left by General Fremont's pack train and this they were not long in butchering and devouring. The next meal was a coyote, on the Mojave desert, and after that only a few acorns until they reached the settlement. They returned to their party with six mules packed with provisions and twelve head of beef cattle, and arriving at the train in time to save their lives. They reached the Cucamonga ranch, September 23, 1849. Robert Gruwell and his brother after eluding their enemies, who were unaware that they had received any notice of the secret plot, came on by the way of Marysville, Sacramento, Stockton, Los Angeles, and met their families 150 miles out from the settlement, and they completed the journey safely together. The father and family remained at Cucamonga ranch until spring and then moved up into El Dorado County, near Coloma, and engaged in mining there until late in 1851. The parents and their younger children then removed into Santa Clara County, where the father had bought land. In June, 1852, with his eldest son, Noah N., he went East via Panama, where Noah N. was ill seventeen days with the fever, from the effects of which he never entirely recovered. As soon as he was able to travel he completed the journey, assisting his father in buying some cattle. He married Sirena Cox, and the next spring started for California with a herd of cattle. He arrived at the sink of the Humbolt, but relapsed and suddenly died. In 1857 Robert Gruwell sold out and moved to Lake County, buying land and entering into agricultural pursuits and stock raising. In 1861 he moved back to Santa Clara County, where in the same year the mother died, aged fifty-four years. In 1883 he died, aged seventy-six years.

John D. Gruwell went to work on his own account in 1849, mining. In 1851 he made his first purchase of land, adjoining Santa Clara, and consisting of thirty acres. Selling this, he bought, in partnership with his brother, Labin H., 160 acres three miles further south, which they farmed until 1857. Then selling out, they moved to Lake County, taking up Government land and following stock raising and farming there until 1869. In 1869 John D. Gruwell moved in to San Joaquin County and conducted a hotel at Peters, during the construction of the Copperopolis and Milton railroad. In 1871 he bought a squatter's right to 160 acres of land, which he preempted, and on which he resided until about 1900, four miles east of Farmington; later he increased the extent of his land to 720 acres. Soon after settling on this ranch he commenced raising wheat; at that time it was the most easterly point of the wheat-growing section of the valley. He erected a good two-story residence, with all necessary out-buildings and here he reared his family.

On June 19, 1854, in Santa Clara, Mr. Gruwell was married to Miss Evelyn Fine, born in Fayette County, Mo., May 22, 1836, and they were the parents of six children, two of whom are now living, Robert C. and Oscar. Mrs. Gruwell passed away in June, 1906, Mr. Gruwell surviving until August, 1911, aged eighty-one.

JOHN B. CORY.—The story of the progress and success of John B. Cory, a native Californian whose interests in the San Joaquin Valley are of such nature as to make him one of the most prominent and influential citizens of the county, is interesting and illuminating, showing what may be done by steady application, industry and well-directed activity. A native of Santa Clara County, he was born in San Jose, Cal., on February 20, 1854, a son of Benjamin Cory, a pioneer physician of San Jose. His father was a native of Ohio, who came to California at an early day and established a practice in San Jose.

John B. Cory was reared and educated in Santa Clara County, his public school education being supplemented by a course in the College of the Pacific. After finishing school he tried stockraising for a time; then, in 1882, he removed to Vacaville, Solano County, and began his career as a fruit grower, in which line of business he has been very successful. During the fall of 1887, in company with his brother-in-law, Frank H. Buck, he came to San Joaquin County and purchased 400 acres of the Langford tract near Acampo, a part of the ranch of the late Senator Langford. At that time most of the San Joaquin Valley was devoted to the raising of grain; but when Mr. Cory and his partner acquired the land they set it to fruit trees, planting peach, plum, prune and apricot. Later they purchased 350 acres more of the same ranch, making a total of 750 acres, and the property became known as the Buck & Cory ranch. Thus Mr. Cory is the pioneer fruit grower in the Lodi district, for they set out the first commercial orchards here, and when their orchards came into bearing, showing a large yield of most excellent fruit, it was demonstrated that their judgment had been correct. They incorporated the Frank H. Buck Company, fruit shippers, which became one of the large fruit companies of the state. Mr. Cory became manager for their local business in this section. Upon the death of Mr. Buck in 1918, the Buck and Cory ranch was divided, the home place of Mr. Cory containing 240 acres, which has been so highly improved that it is one of the show places of the valley. An attractive and commodious residence has been erected with beautifully laid-out grounds and tropical gardens; and a complete system of irrigation has been installed with three pumping plants, which furnish an abundance of water for all purposes. Mr. Cory's ranch is a fine demonstration of what can be accomplished in the way of beautifying and improving property in the San Joaquin Valley.

In 1905, in conjunction with a number of influential citizens of Lodi, Mr. Cory organized the First National Bank; and he was its first president, serving in that responsible position until he disposed of his interest in January of 1922, when he was one of the organizers of the Citizens' National Bank, of which he was elected president, a position for which his years of experience so well qualified him. Mr. Cory is also a director in the Lodi Investment Company, among the notable buildings which they have erected being the Lodi Hotel and the Lodi Theater Building. He is also a stockholder in the City Improvement Company that built the modern business buildings on the corner of School and Oak streets.

The marriage of Mr. Cory in Vacaville, in 1884, united him with Miss Nellie Buck, a native of New York. Her father, L. W. Buck, was one of the leading fruit growers of California, and was promi-nently known all over the state as a highly intelligent and progressive citizen. He served as state senator from his district. Mrs. Cory was reared in Vacaville, and completed her education at the College of the Pacific. Fraternally, Mr. Cory is a member of Woodbridge Lodge, No. 131, F. & A. M., of which he is past master. He is also a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; of Stockton Council, R. & S. M.; Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T., of which he is a past commander; Islam Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in San Francisco; and the Order of Eastern Star. He belongs to the Yosemite Club and Country Club in Stockton, and the Mokelumne Club and Rotary Club in Lodi. Mrs. Cory is also prominent in civic and social affairs, being a member and past matron of Woodbridge Chapter No. 118, O. E. S., of which Mr. and Mrs. Cory were charter members, and served as the first matron and patron. Mrs. Cory is also a member of the Lodi Woman's Club and the Philomathean Club of Stockton, having served two terms as vice-president of the latter. Mr. and Mrs. Cory have traveled extensively, and recently returned from a trip around the world. Mr. Cory's prominence as a progressive citizen has been won by strict application to business, backed by ability and intelligence, and Lodi is proud to count him among her most worthy and valuable citizens.

ALTHA C. CUSTER.—A prosperous viticulturist of the San Joaquin Valley, Altha C. Custer is now living retired from active business care at his comfortable home at 214 West Oak Street, Lodi. An Ohioan by birth, having been born in Highland County, March 5, 1852, a son of Samuel and Anna Custer, both natives of Pennsylvania. There were four children in the family, our subject being the oldest, and he and a sister Orpha residing in Oklahoma are the only two living; Melvin and Alvina are deceased. In 1873 the family removed to Iowa where they spent a couple of years and in the spring of 1875 moved to Gentry County, Mo., where the father purchased a ranch. The mother was only thirty-two years old when she died, the father surviving her until he was sixty-five years old.

Altha C. Custer remained at home with his parents until his marriage, on March 24, 1880, when he was united with Miss Eunice Johns, a native of Madison County, Iowa, a daughter of A. B. and Ann (Smith) Johns, both parents natives of Dayton, Ohio. Mrs. Custer is the fourth in a family of eight children: Eliza, John, deceased, Nancy, deceased, Eunice, Mrs. Custer, James H., Mary Elizabeth, Carl, and Joseph, deceased. Mrs. Custer was seven years of age when her parents removed to Andrew County Mo., where the father became a well-to-do farmer. After his marriage, Mr. Custer leased 220 acres of land, which he farmed for six years when he removed to Rea, Mo., where he became employed with the Great Western Railroad on construction and maintenance work; this position covering a period of six years. In 1897 the family came to California and settled at Covina, where he worked at various kinds of employment for seven years, four years of which was spent in the orange and lemon industry in the Covina district. In 1904 Mr. Custer removed to Berkeley, Cal., and worked at the carpenter's trade for three years, then moved to Lodi, where he bought a twenty-acre ranch northwest of Victor. This ranch was a bearing vineyard and

Mr. Custer improved it with a pumping plant and a good house where he and his family resided for thirteen years, when he sold his place and purchased his present comfortable home in Lodi. To Mr. and Mrs. Custer were born three children: Rolla Johns, the second oldest, has been efficiently and successfully connected with educational work of San Joaquin County for the past eleven years. Joseph died in Missouri when two and one-half years old, and Bernice died in Covina, California, when seven years old. Mr. Custer is a Democrat in politics, and has the respect and good will of all who know him.

GEORGE HARPER.—Now the pioneer custom tailor in Stockton, having been in business longer than any man in his line in the city, George Harper can look back on an interesting career in the world of sport, having a national reputation in the baseball arena for many years, both on the Pacific Coast and in the big leagues. Mr. Harper was born near Milwaukee, Wis., August 17, 1865, where he was reared and educated, learning the painter's trade when quite young. The life of outdoor sport made a strong appeal to him, however, and he entered the great American game in 1886 as a pitcher for the Milwaukee team of the Northwestern League. In 1887 he was pitcher for Omahain in the Western League, coming to California in 1888 with the Oakland team in the old California State League, but on August 19 of that year was acquired by the Stockton team as pitcher to take the place of Eddie Lorigan, winning the championship that season.

Mr. Harper, after the ball season was over that year, was engaged by H. J. Cochran, the manager of the steamboat line and a well-known river man of the early days, to take charge of the painting of the steamer J. D. Peters, just being built, and he completed the job that winter. He pitched for Stockton again in 1889, then for Sacramento in 1890, San Jose in 1891-92, Stockton again in 1893, and then for six years pitched ball for the big leagues, playing with the Philadelphia, Brooklyn and Rochester, New York teams. Returning to Stockton in 1900, Mr. Harper became president and manager and part owner of the Stockton team, and during that year he also opened up his tailor shop, which he has conducted ever since. He still retained his interest in baseball affairs, however, and in 1914, the year four teams of the Pacific Coast League maintained a farm to develop young players, Mr. Harper was the manager of the Stockton Club, owned and financed by Eddie Maier, who also owned the Vernon team of the Coast League.

In February, 1889, Mr. Harper was married to Miss Clara May Campbell, daughter of C. A. Campbell, former city clerk of Stockton. One daughter, Leslie, was born of this marriage. She is now Mrs. Clyde Jenkins and the mother of one son, Clyde Jenkins. Mrs. Harper died in 1893. Mr. Harper's second marriage, in 1898, united him with Miss Rosalie Stuppacher, the daughter of one of Stockton's old-time tailors, who for years was cutter for Lewis & Johnson; they reside in the home purchased some years ago by Mr. Harper at 734 West Poplar Street. Capable and progressive, he has built up a splendid business and stands high in Stockton's commercial circles and in the Odd Fellows, having joined Stockton Lodge, October 25, 1889; he is also a member of the Eagles.

ANDREW WOLF.—To depict in their entirety the salient events in the life of Andrew Wolf, would be to portray the progress of California during the period that has elapsed since its American occupancy, and such portrayal would fortunately familiarize the younger generation of readers with many of the thrilling adventures experienced by the men known in history as the pioneers of '49. To this class belonged Mr. Wolf, who in the flush of young manhood made the memorable journey across the plains to the unknown region lying beside the sunset sea. Travelers of the present day, crossing the continent in the splendidly equipped limiteds, cannot realize the dangers and hardships incident to that trip taken under the conditions existing sixty years ago. To that journey as made by Mr. Wolf there was added to the dangers from attacks by Indians and starvation through being lost on the desert the even greater danger of cholera whose victims fell by the wayside, where their bones met the eyes of the traveler to add terror to his dreams by night.

The life which this narrative depicts began in Bath Township, Greene County, Ohio, May 26, 1821, in the farm-house of John W. and Mary (Hawker) Wolf. During the era antedating the Revolution the Wolf family became established in America, its first representative in this country being a pioneer of Pennsylvania. There John W. Wolf was born in 1791, and from there in 1792 he was taken by his parents to Greene County, Ohio, the family settling on what was then known as the Western frontier. The first recollections of the boy were associated with visits from friendly Indians and with hunts for wild animals, the securing of game being the means of furnishing the family larder with meat. During 1812 his father died of the plague, and later he bought from the other heirs their interest in the old homestead, where he engaged in farm pursuits. During the War of 1812 he volunteered in the American Army and served at the front until the surrender of General Hull, when he was honorably discharged.

The first wife of John W. Wolf was born in Montgomery County, Ohio, November 17, 1800, and died March 5, 1837. Eight children were born of that union, namely: Israel, born in 1819, died at the age of fourteen years; Andrew, whose name introduces this sketch; Catherine, born in 1822; Susannah, born in 1826, and who died in Indiana; George W., born in 1828, a pioneer of California, where he died in 1861 at the age of thirty-three years; Mary A., born in 1831; Malinda, born in 1833, and who died in Dayton, Ohio; and Louise, born in 1835, now the wife of Putnam Visher, living in Stockton. The second wife of John Wolf, whom he married February 25, 1838, was born in Ohio in 1808 and bore the maiden name of Rebecca Swadner. Her death occurred in 1899, at the age of ninety-one years. Of her six children the two eldest, Elizabeth, born in 1838, and William B., born in 1840, are deceased. Benjamin, born in December, 1843, is a resident of Bryan, Ohio. Martha A., born in 1845, makes her home in Dayton, Ohio, where also reside John M., born in 1849, and Charles E., born in 1852.

Shortly after the death of his mother Andrew Wolf started out to seek his own livelihood in the world and at first clerked in a store in Dayton, Ohio, owned by an uncle, William Van Cleaf. Two years later he embarked in business with J. R. Coblenz, and continued there until October of 1847, when he severed the partnership and went to Iowa to visit an uncle, Abram Morgan, of David County. This uncle met him at Burlington, Iowa; but before proceeding with him he paid a visit to an old friend at Bloomington, now called Muscatine, Iowa, and later went to his uncle's home. Through this friend he secured a position with Greene & Stone, general merchants and pork packers of Muscatine, with whom he continued from November 1, 1847, to March 1, 1848. On leaving their employ it was his intention to return to Ohio. However, he was interviewed by Alexander Oglebie, the merchant who had sold the first yard of calico in Muscatine. Having planned to reenter business, Mr. Oglebie asked Mr. Wolf what he planned to do and was told that he intended to return East as soon as he could get across the river. The next inquiry was as to the terms on which he would enter the employ of Mr. Oglebie. Replying, "My price would be so high that you would not want me," he named the terms, not thinking they would be accepted, but at once Mr. Oglebie closed the bargain. At first Mr. Wolf thought he would offer $100 to be released from the bargain, but he decided it would be best to fulfil his part of the contract and accordingly took charge of opening up the mercantile business of Oglebie & St. John, whose stock of goods had been purchased in St. Louis.

Meanwhile the tales of the discovery of gold in California proved so alluring that the young clerk determined to try his luck in the West, and at once he began to make his plans for the trip. The outfit for the overland journey, consisting of four pairs of steers, one yoke of cows and a mule, was carefully selected by a friend who knew the requirements of stock for such a trip. Among the party were S. C. Hastings, Dr. Owles, James Baker and a Mr. Smith. Two friends of Mr. Wolf, William Scott, an experienced cook, and Isaac Heath, a teamster, were asked to accompany him, but as they had no money Mr. Wolf agreed to pay their expenses, they to reimburse him as soon as they had earned the means in California. Mr. Heath stated that he would drive every step of the road to California and upon his arrival there would pay back one-third, besides giving Mr. Wolf the outfit. In the party there were thirty-six persons, three to each team, and Mr. Scott cooked and washed for their party of three, besides doing duty as guard.

Leaving Iowa, April 5, 1849, the party proceeded to St. Joseph, Mo. There they found the regular ferry would not cross the river for six weeks with their outfit, as each party had to wait their turn. Thereupon they proceeded to make a special ferry, at which they worked from the 11th to the 13th of May. On the launching of the boat their twelve wagons were ferried across free of cost in return for their work, while if they had waited for the regular ferry it would have cost them $300 to get their teams across the river. Meanwhile hundreds of emigrants were dying of the cholera, and during the night of the 14th one of their party died of the dread disease. This was the only one they lost, although three others were very ill for a time. With them was a doctor who never lost a case of cholera if notified in time, and through his instrumentality many emigrants were saved, for he always responded to appeals for aid from other parties than his own. An abundance of meat for the party was secured through the killing of wild animals, and Mr. Wolf had a record for killing more antelope than any other man in the train. In selecting a route the expedition adhered to the road surveyed by Gen. John C. Fremont for the government, and traveled to the Sink of the Humboldt over the hard road and the sand. Well-equipped with water and hay as per instructions, they arrived at the sand strip about three o'clock in the afternoon, intending to travel the twenty-five miles of its length during the cool of the night, and by so doing they avoided disastrous consequences; but all along the trail they met wagons with emigrants who had disobeyed orders and were begging for assistance, as their stock had become worn out with hard driving in the heat of the day. By taking every precaution they got safely through to California, but for two weeks they were never free from the sight of cholera victims. A saving of sixty miles was effected through continuing the journey via Fort Laramie and the Sublette Cut-off, and they entered California at Truckee. They camped and slept in the cabin that had been occupied by the ill-fated Donner party, and from there traveled across the Sierra Nevada Mountains and entered Hangtown, now Placerville, where the company disbanded. Mr. Wolf, with his two friends, Heath and Scott, and some members of an Illinois train, found a place to put their stock for recruiting it, and then proceeded to the mines.

A German who belonged to the company soon found gold that he could pick up with his hands, and claims were at once staked out by all. In three days Mr. Wolf cleaned up $1,500 worth of gold, but on the fourth day he was blinded by poison oak so that further work was impossible. Hiring a driver at ten dollars per day, he took his team to Sacramento, meanwhile suffering untold agonies all the way. It was his good fortune to meet an emigrant train in which a woman had some sugar of lead, which she gave him, besides rendering every assistance in her power. Without her timely aid he would probably have perished on the road, but the help came in time and after recruiting for seven days in Sacramento he was able to proceed to San Francisco. October 15, 1849, he arrived in Stockton, and from that time to the day of his death he was inseparably associated with the development of this part of the state. Until 1851 he engaged in freighting between Stockton and the southern mines. Later he built a livery stable on Main Street, and in time this business increased until he owned 200 feet on Main Street, 130 feet on California, 150 on Market and 100 on Sutter Street. The Wolf stables became known throughout the entire state and remained in the same location until 1906 although after 1865 he leased the business to other parties. As early as 1860 he became interested in farming, and in 1865 he moved his family to his ranch on the Mariposa road, eight miles from town, where he owned 800 acres of land. For this he paid two dollars and fifty cents per acre after buying out some squatters who had settled on the tract. With characteristic generosity he donated land to the railroad and for the opening up of highways, which lessened his ranch to 750 acres. The land is fertile, and still ranks among the finest properties of the kind in the entire valley. After 1875 Mr. Wolf resided in Stockton, and with the exception of twenty years he conducted the ranch himself. In 1886 he replaced the cottage built in 1852 by a modern structure.

On August 17, 1852, Mr. Wolf was married to Amanda Dwelly, a native of Maine. When she was a small child she lost her father, and later her mother married again. In 1850 she came to California with her mother and stepfather and settled in Stockton.

Of her marriage four children were born. Laura, who married W. T. Smith, died at Elko, Nev., March 27, 1880, leaving an only daughter, now the wife of State Senator Charles Henderson, and the mother of two sons. Franklin resides in Alameda; he married Laura Usher, by whom he has a daughter, Lita, and a son, Andrew. George L., who was born May 26, 1858, resides in Stockton and conducts a real estate business. Delia became the wife of Dr. J. J. Meigs and is residing in Stockton; they have one son, John Gerald.

While making the management of his ranch his main activity during the years of his prime, Mr. Wolf found many other enterprises to engage his attention, as might be expected of a man possessing such great energy, varied resourcefulness, and fine qualities of mind. Many enterprises that afterward became important owed their origin to his foresight and progressive spirit. He built the first track and sheds for the Fair Association, with which he was identified as treasurer during its existence. On the organization of the Stockton Grange he was chosen the first master. As president of the Grangers' Union in Stockton he erected for them a building now occupied by Hudson & King, and also had charge of their warehouse, where an immense volume of business was transacted for a number of years. Eventually he resigned his office as president and disposed of his interests in the enterprise, thereafter living retired. In the organization of the San Joaquin County Pioneers' Society he was a prime factor, and for one term officiated as its president. On September 3, 1845, he joined Buckeye Lodge, No. 47, at Dayton, Ohio, and later became a member of Charity Lodge, No. 6, I. O. O. F., in which he had passed all the chairs. In addition he was associated with the Parker Encampment. At the time of his demise, in July, 1912, aged ninety-one years, he was the oldest Odd Fellow in San Joaquin County, and so far as known, also in the entire state. He and his wife were members of the Episcopal Church. At the inception of the Stockton Savings & Loan Society Bank he became one of its stockholders, and remained until his death a member of its board of directors, in which body the value of his sagacious counsel and optimistic spirit was appreciated, as a member of the finance committee. Mr. Wolf was always active in mind and body, thoroughly posted concerning matters of current importance as well as the happenings of pioneer days, and was a delightful companion for those progressive spirits who study conditions of the past and present, thereby to gain an intelligent outlook on the future. No one had greater faith in the future of Stockton than he and none were more ready to advance local projects by contributions of time, money and by sagacious advice founded upon the experiences of many busy years. To an unusual degree he was honored by the people of his home town, and in its annals his name will ever occupy a prominent place.

FRANK B. BRIARE.—For almost forty years Frank B. Briare has been a resident of Stockton and has in many ways been identified with the best interests of his locality. For twenty-three years he has been actively and prominently identified with the police department of Stockton and was one of the most efficient officers the city ever had. He was born at Martinez, Cal., June 14, 1862, the eldest son of his family. At ten years of age he began to make his own living working on the Fitzgerald ranch, receiving for his services one dollar per week and board and room; his next job was selling newspapers in Martinez for four dollars per week; later he and George McMahon secured a job as school janitor at thirteen dollars per month; he also worked in the warehouses of Martinez and Brentwood. In 1883, in company with Eugene Marshall and Robert Hanna, he arrived in Stockton, the three of them having $30.30 between them. Mr. Briare secured work in the Crown Flour Mills, owned by J. M. Welch, packing flour. In 1884 he was appointed guard at San Quentin state prison and later became captain of the first watch; in 1889 he was transferred to Folsom prison and was lieutenant of the guard for seven and a half years. On June 23, 1893, he was in charge of the life termers, when the big break at the prison occurred. The convicts at work at the stone quarry on the banks of the American River had secured a number of rifles and at three o'clock in the afternoon the fight began. Mr. Briare was overpowered in the fight which lasted forty-five minutes, when four convicts were killed and three wounded, among the wounded being the outlaw Sontag. No one escaped. In 1897 Mr. Briare returned to Stockton and was employed by the California Transportation Company until 1899, when he was appointed on the Stockton police force and one year later received the appointment of captain of police, serving two years in that position. In 1902 he was appointed chief of police for a short period; then was patrolman until 1907 when he was appointed chief of police and served for ten years in that capacity. In 1921 Mr. Briare was pensioned and he is now living retired from active business. He was identified with every murder case in the city, including the celebrated case of Le Doux and the Minotti case, the Chamber and Jack Briscoe murders, the W. A. Door case, Houlon case and many others in this state as well as capturing many criminals wanted in other states. Since he retired from the police force he is a successful private detective.

The marriage of Mr. Briare occurred at Stockton on January 8, 1890, and united him with Miss Annie Elizabeth Collins, a native of Stockton and to them have been born eight children, all living: Mary Elizabeth, now Sister Mary Nazareth of the Dominican Sisters at Sacred Heart Convent, San Francisco; Frank Daniel is proprietor of the Stockton Carriage Works; he enlisted in the Navy during the World War; John Joseph is clerk in the Pacific Gas & Electric Company's office at San Francisco and is taking a law course at St. Ignatius College; George Stephens is with the Standard Oil Company and during the war was in the U. S. Navy; Bernadette is a graduate from St. Agnes college; she lives at home, and presides over her father's household; Clarence is with the Sterling Iron Works; he was a marine during the recent war; Ambrose A. is a student in the St. Agnes high school; and Anne Elizabeth also is attending St. Agnes school. Mrs. Briare passed away January 30, 1919, while her sons were serving their country. Fraternally Mr. Briare is a member of the Stockton Elks, Stockton Parlor, N. S. G. W., the Knights of Columbus and in politics he is a Democrat and has taken an active and influential part in winning success for his party.

OLIVER H. ECCLESTON.—A native-born Californian who has continuously remained amid scenes made familiar by association, is Oliver H. Eccleston, a worthy representative of that pioneer family. He was born in Stockton on January 4, 1872, the son of Ransom and Sarah E. (Samsel) Eccleston. The father, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work, was a young man of about twenty-four years when the wave of excitement passed over his home locality and without loss of time he made preparation for the journey across the plains, arriving in California during the month of November, 1849. He engaged in mining a short time, then took a trip to the Sandwich Islands, and upon his return to California in the spring of 1850 he located near San Andreas, Calaveras County, where he first became interested in the hotel business, and in addition was the proprietor of a general store; then in 1866 he came to Stockton and thereafter made this city his permanent home, following the hotel business. He was married in San Andreas to Miss Sarah Elizabeth Samsel on August 22, 1854, and of the children born to their marriage, two are living, as follows: Mrs. W. C. Matteson, of Stockton, and Oliver H., our subject. The father passed away in Stockton November 15, 1907, and the mother died in Stockton on July 26, 1922, aged eighty-four.

Oliver H. Eccleston began his education in the public schools of Stockton and completed it with a business course in the Stockton Business College. At the age of twelve years he delivered and sold papers on the streets of Stockton and three years later, when he was fifteen years old, he became an apprentice to learn the printer's trade with the Stockton Independent. He worked nights on this paper as printer's devil for a period of six months during which time he continued to go to school in the afternoons. However, night work not appealing to him, he obtained position as pressman with Everett Ruggles, who after a short time started an evening paper, called The Republican, afterwards acquired by the Stockton Daily Record. His printing experience extended over a period of three years, during which time he continued to take special courses of study at the Stockton Business College and completed their teacher's preparatory course with an idea of studying medicine. However, business vocation called him and after working at various callings from blacksmith's helper with the H. C. Shaw Company and Matteson-Williamson Manufacturing Company, foundry helper with the Stockton Iron Works, warehouseman with the Standard Oil Company, laundry driver with the Troy Laundry and as clerk and bookkeeper with the Houser and Haines Manufacturing Company, he settled down permanently with the Holt Manufacturing Company as bookkeeper in their accounting department. His previous shop experiences gave him a practical insight into the requirements and workings of factory accounts which combined with a methodical mind and natural accounting skill soon advanced him to the position of chief accountant and office manager of The Holt Manufacturing Company. For a number of years he has held the position of assistant secretary and auditor of this company and during the war rendered valuable service in taking care of the systems of the rapidly expanding departments and business accounting. During the war he also acted as auditor and director of accounts of the San Joaquin County War Committee and rendered accurate account of all subscriptions of the various Liberty Loan drives and

W. Eccleston

Red Cross campaigns amounting to several millions of dollars. During these drives he supervised the tabulating and personal records of over 60,000 names of residents and citizens of San Joaquin County and Stockton. Mr. Benjamin Holt, president of The Holt Manufacturing Company, employed him as his confidential secretary and Mr. Eccleston accompanied him on his many business trips to Eastern cities, Canada and the Northwest and also to the eastern plant of The Holt Manufacturing Company, at Peoria, Illinois. Mr. Eccleston has been the secretary and treasurer of the Benjamin Holt Corporation since its inception in 1915, this corporation holding all the property of Benjamin Holt. The confidence of Mr. Holt in his secretary was shown at the time of his death when he named him as one of the executors of his will and one of the trustees of a fund set aside for old and faithful employees. The total length of service of Mr. Eccleston with the Holt interests has extended over a period of thirty years.

Mr. Eccleston's marriage united him with Miss Kathrine Power, a native of Ireland, born in County Waterford, but reared in Stockton, a daughter of Dr. John Power, the pioneer veterinary surgeon of Stockton, and they are the parents of three children: Ruth Marie, William Power and Jack Oliver. Mr. Eccleston is prominent in fraternal affairs, being a member of Stockton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F., and Parker Encampment No. 3. During his term of service in lodge work, he was past district deputy grand master of District No. 7, I. O. O. F., and was also a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. and past president of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W. In his younger days, Mr. Eccleston was a member of the National Guard of California, Company A, serving his term of three years as private and corporal. As an American citizen he has always been among those who stood for law and order and for a Government by the people and for the people.

MRS. ELIZA J. GORDON.—A resident of California since 1868, Mrs. Eliza J. Gordon was born in Indiana, November 18, 1835. Her father, Josiah Anderson, a native of Kentucky, removed to Indiana where he was a farmer. Later he located near Burlington, Iowa, residing on a farm there until 1849, when he became a pioneer of California, passing away at the advanced age of eighty-nine years. He had married Lucinda Westfall, a native of Ohio who died in California, aged sixty-five years, leaving their ten children, three of whom are now living, namely: Eliza J., our subject, Newton and J. O. all of Stockton. Eliza J. grew up in Iowa and there attended the public schools. She was married in 1851 to Aaron Gordon who was born in Springfield, Ohio, August 21, 1830, a brickmason by trade. Removing to Iowa in an early day he was married there and followed his trade until the Civil War when he enlisted in Company A, 83rd Iowa Volunteer Infantry, serving throughout the war. He received an honorable discharge, after which he continued at his trade in Iowa until 1869, when he brought his family to California, coming via the Panama route and soon selected Stockton as his location. Here he engaged in contracting and building. Many of the important buildings of those early days are to his credit. He built his residence at 1452 South Hunter Street where he resided until he died August 10, 1909. He was a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. Mr. and Mrs. Gordon were blessed with ten children, four of whom are living: Virgil, Mrs. Imogene Parker, Elmer E., and Mrs. Algena Loos, of Stockton. Mrs. Gordon continues to reside at her old home surrounded by her family and many friends who appreciate her for her merit and worth.

ROBERT C. GRUWELL.—A native son of California, whose father and grandfather crossed the plains with ox teams in 1849 and became prominent grain ranchers east of Farmington, is Robert C. Gruwell. The family is one of the best known and highly esteemed in Central California, and has been intimately associated with the extensive farming interests of the state for over half a century. Mr. Gruwell's father was John D. Gruwell, well known in San Joaquin County as a man of character and ability. He came to California from his native state of Illinois in 1849 and engaged in mining on his own account; in 1851 he made his first purchase of land in Santa Clara County and later moved to Upper Lake, Lake County, Cal., and in 1869 moved to the east side of San Joaquin County, settling east of Farmington. The mother of Robert C. Gruwell was Evelyn (Fine) Gruwell, born in Missouri in 1836; her parents well-to-do farmers who died early in life during a yellow fever epidemic. John Fine cared for the little orphan girl, gave her a good home and she accompanied him and his wife to California in 1853. Mr. and Mrs. Gruwell were the parents of six children, of whom only two survive, Oscar, a merchant residing in Oakland and Robert C. of this sketch. Mrs. Gruwell passed way in June, 1906, at the family home in Oakland, followed by her husband in August, 1911, at the age of eighty-one.

Robert C. Gruwell was born near Upper Lake, Lake County, Cal., July 19, 1862. The family at that time resided on a Government homestead, where the father engaged in farming and stockraising until 1869, when the family removed to San Joaquin County. Robert C. attended the Everett and Home Union schools and early learned the details of farming through assisting his father with his grain and stockraising enterprises.

In 1891 Mr. Gruwell was married to Miss Birdie Drais, a daughter of Edward M. Drais, deceased pioneer and capitalist of the Farmington district of San Joaquin County. Mrs. Gruwell was born at the family home, known as Rock Creek ranch, on June 20, 1865, and received her education in the Home Union and Cottage schools. In 1897 Mr. and Mrs. Gruwell moved to their present home place twelve miles east of Stockton on the Copperopolis Road and here they reared their three sons: John Edward, Robert M., and Lyle M. Mr. Gruwell owns 540 acres of fine grain land in two ranches, 420 acres on Little John Creek, and 120 acres in the home ranch two miles west of Peters. Of recent years Mr. Gruwell has been assisted by his sons, each one having a share in the Gruwell ranch. Mr. Gruwell serves as the president of the board of trustees of the Everett school and has been a big factor in securing the fine new building which was completed in 1921, replacing the one built in 1865. Mr. Gruwell is a Democrat in politics and his sons are members of the N. S. G. W. at Stockton. He is an advocate of good roads and the family is one of prominence in this community where they have a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

LEWIS E. GRIMSLEY.—Coming to Stockton in 1872, Lewis E. Grimsley has since been closely allied with the development of the San Joaquin Valley and he is widely and favorably known to the ranchers of this part of the state, owing to his long connection with grain-threshing activities. He was born on a farm in Morgan County, Ill., July 14, 1853, and when twelve years of age accompanied his parents on their removal to Vernon County, Mo. For four generations members of the family have engaged in blacksmithing, the father and grandfather having devoted their energies to that line of activity, while Mr. Grimsley and his son have also followed the trade, of which the subject of this review acquired a thorough knowledge under the guidance of his father while the family were residing in Missouri.

In the fall of 1872 Lewis E. Grimsley and his brother John came to California on one of the early emigrant trains, consisting of freight and passenger cars. Along the way they saw the remains of prairie schooners which had been burned by the Indians and they were three weeks in making the trip, arriving in Stockton on October 10th. Shortly afterward the brother died and Mr. Grimsley succeeded in obtaining employment on a ranch near Waterloo owned by Judge Hill. For thirty-nine years he had charge of grain-threshing outfits and worked all over the San Joaquin Valley, threshing many thousands sacks of grain. In 1900 he became connected with the Holt Manufacturing Company, which sent him out with one of their steam threshing machines, operating on ranches situated on Tulare Lake and on Kern Lake. One season he was sent to the Eureka Flat section, near Charles Moreing, on the Jones tract. He did the plumbing work on the first caterpillar tractor built by Benjamin Holt for the Holt Manufacturing Company and for the past twelve years has had charge of their plumbing department, and is regarded as one of their most competent and trusted employes.

Mr. Grimsley was married to Miss Minnie Klinger, who was born in San Joaquin County. Her father, George Klinger, was a native of Germany and in pioneer times he crossed the plains to California, becoming the first harness and saddle-maker in Stockton, while later he followed ranching and also conducted a saddle shop at Linden. For many years he served as a school trustee in the Linden district and he was a charter member of the Odd Fellows Lodge. Mr. and Mrs. Grimsley have become the parents of four children: Henry is the owner of a blacksmithshop at Linden; L. F., is the distributor of the C. L. Best line of tractors whose place of business is on South Aurora Street, Stockton, and his biography appears elsewhere in this work; William was connected with the Holt Manufacturing Company for twenty-two years but is now associated with his brother L. F.; Maud, the only daughter is at home. Mr. Grimsley has watched with deep interest the development and upbuilding of Stockton, in which he has borne his full share, and as one of the pioneers of the San Joaquin Valley he has the esteem of a large circle of friends.

ROBERT FRANKLIN GREEN.—A venerable pioneer of San Joaquin County is found in Robert Franklin Green, who has been a continuous resident of the county for fifty-nine years, his father having settled on the ranch where our subject now resides. He was born in Allen County, Kan., on August 9, 1861, a son of Jasper W. and Sarah E. (Carlisle) Green, born respectively in Alabama and Missouri. Grandfather Jesse Green was a Methodist minister. In 1860, with his wife and some of his children, he crossed the plains to California and located on a farm three and one-half miles northeast of what is now Lodi. On a part of this ranch the town of Victor is now located. Rev. Jesse Green was a pioneer minister in the San Joaquin Valley, who with true religious zeal did much to establish early churches and raise the standard of morals in those early days. He passed away at the age of eighty-four years. Jasper W. Green removed from Alabama to Arkansas and engaged in the mercantile business. The war coming on, his business was ruined and he moved to Kansas, where he carried on farming. In 1864 he brought his family to California, making the journey across the plains in a prairie schooner drawn by oxen, and taking six months on the way to a day. On arriving at his father Jesse Green's place in San Joaquin County, he purchased 160 acres near by and engaged in grain farming until the time of his death in 1887 aged fifty-seven years. The mother survived until she was sixty-two years old. They were the parents of four children: Mrs. Mary Snyder, of Oakland; Robert Franklin, the subject of this review; Newton, deceased; and Mrs. Lochie Ellis, of Lodi.

Frank Green, as he is familiarly called by his many friends, made the overland journey with his parents when he was in his third year, so that his first recollections are of San Joaquin County. Here he was reared on the farm, enjoying the great out-of-doors, and thus grew to be a very large and athletic man; and he still retains the vigor and strength with which nature so liberally endowed him. He received a good education at the Alpine school, and at the same time made himself useful as his father's right-hand man. After his father's death he continued to run the home place, and in addition purchased 400 acres near by, which afterward became known as the Green Colony, and which he later subdivided and sold in small acreages. Mr. Green received fifty acres as his share of his father's estate, of which he planted thirty-five acres in vineyard and fifteen acres in alfalfa. His irrigating system consists of a five-inch pump driven by a fifteen-horsepower motor.

During his long residence in San Joaquin County Mr. Green has become widely known, and his many excellent traits of character have gained him the friendship and warm regard of many with whom he has come in contact. In national politics he is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Lodi Lodge of Odd Fellows, of which he is a Past Grand and has been a delegate to the Grand Lodge. He is also a member of the Harmony Encampment of Odd Fellows; of Ridgely Canton, Stockton; and of Lodi Rebekah Lodge. He is interested in the growth and development of this county and is an original stockholder in the National Products' Association of Lodi.

R. L. Green

During Mr. Green's long residence in the county he has witnessed the marvelous growth and development of not only the Victor section but all of the county. Though very young in years when arriving in the county he remembers helping his father clear the land of brush and heavy timber; and when he reached young manhood he took advantage of the natural resources the section afforded and has met with gratifying success.

FREDERICK W. BUTTRICK.—A prominent factor in the development of the northwest section of Stockton has been Frederick W. Buttrick, who was born near Lathrop, in San Joaquin County, on February 26, 1872, the son of William H. and Retta (Tyner) Buttrick, natives respectively of Massachusetts and Missouri. Mr. Buttrick, as a pioneer, crossed the great plains in an ox-team with Captain Moss, and having done so well with his first venture, he and the captain made four trips across the continent, on one of the journeys driving some 800 head of horses, which they sold to Brigham Young at Salt Lake City. Later still these two men owned large tracts of land, which they farmed to grain and where they raised cattle on land for which they paid only $2.50 an acre, the low price being due to its swampy character; and since this land has been drained and reclaimed, the value has advanced to $1200 per acre. Mr. Buttrick also farmed all of Staten Island, comprising some 10,000 acres for J. B. Haggin; he was active in politics, and became paymaster of the California National Guard; and he died in 1905, highly esteemed by all who knew him.

Frederick W. Buttrick was sent to the Stockton schools, and he was graduated, after pursuing the excellent courses of the high school at Stockton, with the class of '90. He then entered the employ of the Stockton Savings Bank, now the City Bank, where he remained nineteen years; and as assistant cashier he resigned to enter the real estate field in 1911. In partnership with Charles Ray, he organized the Tuxedo Land Company, which brought 800 acres northwest of Stockton on the San Joaquin River; and having laid out fifty acres as a subdivision under the name of the Tuxedo Park Company, they sold $460,000 worth of lots in twenty-two months, the Tuxedo Golf and Country Club taking a part of the 800 acres. About $15,000 was spent in advertising the property, and sixteen salesmen and eight autos were used in the selling campaign. What the company did for the investors may be realized from the fact that lots which sold six years ago for $400 are selling today for $1,200, for the property is now built up, and contains some of the best homes in the city.

Since selling off that fine property, Mr. Buttrick has devoted his time to the development of small acreage for suburban homes. These were put on the market as the Stockton River Farms No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3, in each of which there were forty acres. These are ideal garden farms, and about 100 acres have been subdivided into lots of from two and one-half to five-acre places, in which pumping plants have been established. Some fifty-two families have been located on these properties in the past two years, and there are now over 500 lot owners there. Mr. Buttrick has himself erected a beautiful suburban residence on one of the seven-acre places, having a pear orchard; and viewing his operations and successes as a whole, it is evident that he has become one of the important developers of the district.

At Merced, in 1918, Mr. Buttrick was married to Miss Gena Metvedt, a native of Wisconsin, a gifted lady who has added to Mr. Buttrick's popularity. He belongs to Lodge No. 218 of the Elks, and also the Yosemite Club.

EDWARD DUNNE.—A worthy, highly-esteemed pioneer of San Joaquin County who was always of particular interest as a relative of John Redmond, the famous Irish Nationalist, was the late Edward Dunne, a native of Ireland, where he was born in County Wexford on March 30, 1853. He came to the United States when he was still a boy, and for a time made his home in Baltimore; then, pushing out to the great West, he reached San Francisco in 1877. Soon after reaching that city he entered the firm of the Nolan Shoe Company, relatives of his, and there mastered the shoe trade, applying himself assiduously because of his expectation of establishing himself in business some day. In 1884 he came to Stockton to open a store for that manufacturing concern in the Masonic Building. A few months later he bought the business and moved to a better location on Main Street where he became particularly well known to the public. Mr. Dunne constructed the first cross-walk on Main Street, which ran from his store across the street to the Yosemite Hotel and for many years all street cars stopped at that crossing, making it especially agreeable in wet weather. He it was who inaugurated the lighting of the store fronts in the city also. Some years after he had opened his store Mr. Dunne bought out the store in Fresno formerly owned by the Nolan Company, but sold it later on and devoted his entire time to the Stockton store. He was a master of every detail in his line of activity, and was always studying, in the minutest detail, the needs of his customers, often anticipating their wants. The result was that once a customer of Mr. Dunne, the patron seldom or never left him. Another result was that Mr. Dunne, full of local pride, never neglected any opportunity to build up the commercial interests of the community as a whole, not merely considering his own advancement, but standing ready to do his neighbor and his competitors a good turn if he could.

In 1883, at San Francisco, Mr. Dunne was married to Miss Alice Gibney, also a native of Ireland; and they had twelve children, all of whom were born in Stockton. Frank, Joseph, William, Leo and Edward Dunne are the sons in Stockton, while Vincent and Ray are law students at the University of California; Mary, Helen and Dorothy Dunne are in Stockton; Theresa, Mrs. Alden White, lives in Berkeley; and Loretta, Mrs. Joseph White, resides in Pittsburgh, Pa. Mr. Dunne was both a loyal member of the Catholic Church and a very loyal citizen of the United States, especially devoted to Stockton. He was a charter member of the Yosemite Club and of the Young Men's Institute. Francis, Joseph, Leo and W. H. Dunne were associated with him in business; Joseph was in France for two years in the World War, Leo also served, as a member of the navy, almost as long in foreign waters; and Ray was in officers' training camp fitting himself for active duty when the armistice was signed. Mr. Dunne died on November 23, 1919, and will be sadly missed; for, honorable, upright and faithful in his family relations and religious duties, he was a true man, and one who left as a heritage to his children the record of an unblemished character.

JOHN M. BLODGETT, D. D. S.—The opportunities offered by California to men of determination, energy, and perseverance find a fitting illustration in the life of John M. Blodgett, D. D. S., who arrived in California with his parents at the age of five years and for the past thirty-one years has been prominently identified with the professional and business life of his county and the state, having been an active member of the State Board of Dental Examiners since 1909. He was born near Mt. Sterling, Brown County, Ill., on December 5, 1865. His father, Joseph H. Blodgett, was born in Indiana and crossed the plains to California with an ox-team in 1857, but returned East via the Isthmus of Panama and located at Lancaster, Schuyler County, Mo. In Scotland County, Mo., on October 27, 1859, he was united in marriage with Miss Eliza Ellen Chambers, a native of Richmond County, Ohio. Afterwards the family moved to Mt. Sterling, Ill., where their son, John M. Blodgett, was born. Later they again moved to Lancaster, Schuyler County, Mo., and resided there until the year 1870, when the family left Missouri for California on one of the early continental passenger trains. Arriving in Sacramento, they proceeded by steamer up the river to Red Bluff and from there overland to Millville, Shasta County, where the father engaged in farming and stockraising. However, Joseph H. Blodgett and his wife spent their last days in Lodi. Their union was blessed with six children, five of whom grew up. Martha M. is Mrs. C. C. Garner, of Lodi. Wm. O. Blodgett was formerly a teacher, until he was elected county clerk of Shasta County, where he served acceptably for many years. He is now deputy county clerk, and is one of the best-known men in the county. His home is in Redding. Dr. John M. Blodgett is the subject of our interesting review. Dr. Thomas D. Blodgett was a prominent physician and surgeon in Tulare until his passing away, November 10, 1919. Walter S. Blodgett is a farmer and vineyardist at Acampo..

John M. Blodgett attended the public schools of Shasta County, and after completing his studies there entered Pierce Christian College at College City. His courses here were supplemented by attendance at the San Jose State Normal School. He then spent one year teaching school in Lake View, Ore. Having become interested in dentistry, he entered the office of Dr. A. D. Gleaves in Redding, and under his preceptorship studied diligently for a year. In the fall of 1888 he entered the dental department of the University of California, taking the regular course, and was duly graduated with the class of 1892, with the degree of D. D. S.

Dr. Blodgett located in Madera and opened an office, but remained there for only a very short time. On May 29, 1892, he located in Lodi and purchased the only dental office then in this city, and he has continued in the practice of his profession here ever since, a period of more than thirty-one years. Although he is a very busy man in his profession, Dr. Blodgett finds time to engage in viticulture, in which he is intensely interested. In partnership with Charles M. Ferdun he owns the Ferdun and Blodgett vineyard of thirty acres, near Lodi. He also owns a half interest in the Friedberger and Blodgett Building, centrally located on the corner of Sacramento and Pine streets, one of the largest and most modern office buildings in the city of Lodi. He is also interested in and a director of the Lodi National Bank.

When the city of Lodi was incorporated, in 1906, Dr. Blodgett was elected a member of the board of trustees, on which he served for seven and a half years to the entire satisfaction of his constituents, his efforts being to have a clean and sanitary city and to place it on a sound financial basis. On December 4, 1909, Dr. Blodgett was appointed a member of the State Board of Dental Examiners by Governor James N. Gillett; and he was reappointed by him, and then by Governor Hiram Johnson, and again by Governor Stephens, having served continuously since 1909, and as president of the board in 1912 and again in 1922. Thus he is well and favorably known throughout the whole state, and wields a wide influence in his profession. He is a member of the American Dental Association, and has always been an active member of the State Dental Association, serving as its president in 1920, the year of its Golden Jubilee Celebration in San Francisco, it being the fiftieth anniversary of the association. He also has the distinction of being a life member of the above association. He was one of the organizers of the Central California District Dental Society, and since 1915 has been a member of the executive council of the California State Dental Association. He is president of the People's Building Company, that owns a business block in Lodi, and is a member of the Lodi Business Men's Association and the Associated Growers of Lodi, as well as of the Rotary Club and the Mokelumne Club of Lodi, in which he has served as a director and as president.

In his fraternal relations Dr. Blodgett is very popular and prominent. He was made a Mason in Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., April 5, 1895, and in 1899 served as Master of the lodge; and since the beginning of the present century he has been treasurer of the lodge. He has been an important factor in the building up of the lodge, there having been only twenty members when he joined, while now there are 275. He is a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Stockton Council, R. & S. M.; and Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; and is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, his membership being in the Stockton Consistory. He is also a life member of Islam Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., and a charter member of the Eastern Star, being a past patron of Lodi Chapter. Dr. Blodgett is a director of the Masonic Temple Association of Lodi, which contemplates the erection of a suitable Masonic Temple. He is past chancellor of Lodi Lodge No. 41, K. of P., and a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, being the oldest in membership from Lodi. During his career at the University of California Dr. Blodgett was a charter member of Zeta Chapter, Delta Sigma Delta Fraternity, in which he takes much pleasure and pride, being a life member of the Supreme Chapter.

The marriage of Dr. Blodgett occurred in Lodi, June 3, 1903, when he was united with Miss Florence Adele Chase, a native of California, born in Calaveras County, a daughter of pioneer parents. Their union has been blessed with four children: Lois A., Grace W., Eleanor E., and John M., Jr. Mrs. Blodgett is a charter member and past matron of Lodi Chapter No. 150, Order of Eastern Star, is president of the Delphine Club, and a member of the Woman's Club of Lodi. Politically, Dr. Blodgett gives his support to the Republican party, and as a member of the state and county central committees upholds the principles of his party; and in all matters that tend to build up the community and advance the public welfare he is found lending a helping hand. His entire life has been actuated by high principles and honorable motives, and his efforts in behalf of the community have been far-reaching. As a professional man, business man, and viticulturist, he is among the most successful in the county. He is decidedly a man of great energy, and has accomplished much in his profession as well as in the development of the great natural resources of this famous valley.

CAPTAIN JOHN HARKINS.—San Joaquin County may boast of many intrepid pioneers such as Captain John Harkins, the early commander of river craft, whose work of developing the resources of the country justly entitles him to lasting record and the esteem and good will of all who come after them. John Harkins was born in Ireland in 1838, and when only fourteen years of age came on to America. He attended school at Dedham, Mass., and at the age of nineteen, commenced to follow the sea on sailing vessels. He was thus exceptionally well equipped to leave the more civilized East and try his fortune in the half-primeval, unsettled West.

In 1859, impressed with the greater prospects in California, Mr. Harris crossed the Isthmus of Panama, made his way to San Francisco, traveled inland to Stockton, and for a time worked on a ranch east of that town, owned by William Overhiser. In 1860, however, he followed his natural bent and took up homesteading on the river; and from that time until he retired, 1910, he was one of the most familiar figures on inland California waters, and was particularly well-known in the Delta district. He held the record, in fact, for the longest term of river-boat service in the Delta district boasted by any man, and he was also about as long in river service as any other man living at that time in the Golden State.

He first worked as a deck-hand upon the steamer "Christiana," which made a few trips each spring, when the water was high, from Stockton to Fresno Landing, near Fresno, towing a barge loaded with grain and freight, and taking from two to three weeks to make the trip. Later, he and his brother Daniel owned a steamer of their own, and made trips to San Francisco and Sacramento. For a time, John Harkins retired from the river-work and engaged in the wholesale and retail handling of wood in Stockton, maintaining an office in a small building at the corner of California and Sonora streets. This was about thirty-four years ago, and that old office structure now stands in Captain Harkins' back-yard, a relic of pioneer days. The wood sold was cut in the mountains, and hauled to Stockton. Mr. Harkins also did teaming and general hauling in earlier days, and was kept so busy that he operated as many as eight teams.

Resuming activity on the river, for which he was so well qualified, Captain Harkins was for many years pilot and captain on freight and passenger boats between Stockton and San Francisco. He was with the old Independent Line owned by T. C. Walker, and later he was pilot on the steamer "T. C. Walker" of the California Navigation and Improvement Company. Today, in his well-earned retirement, he enjoys the pleasant associations of membership in the Master Pilots Association of San Francisco.

At Stockton, on June 3, 1872, Captain Harkins was married to Miss Mary Ann McCarthy, a native of Ireland, by whom he had eight children, five of whom are still living. James P. Harkins, is the well-known railroad man whose story is given in detail elsewhere in this volume; and his brothers are Harry and Ed. A. Harkins. One daughter, Francisca, is Sister Superior of St. Agnes Academy, Stockton; and the other daughter, Alice Frances, has become Mrs. A. J. Higgins, of Vallejo.

JOE GALL.—There are few men living in San Joaquin County who are better known than Joe Gall, member of the firm Joe Gall & Son, Auctioneers of Stockton. He has been especially known in sporting circles and for many years was the announcer in the roped arena. Mr. Gall was born in Stockton on November 23, 1871, the son of Alexander and Margaret (Stewart) Gall, both of whom were born in Scotland. In 1850 the father arrived in San Francisco, having made the voyage in a sailing vessel from the shore of his native land. Two years later he became a resident of Stockton, where he soon entered into business as a baker. He had learned the trade in his own country and when he started in Stockton it was in a shop on El Dorado, between Main Street and Weber Avenue, and his was the first bakery in Stockton. He carried on the business for many years and during the time took an active part in the development of the interests that subsequently made the city what it represents today. When he retired from the bakery business he was appointed superintendent of streets; also had charge of the dredging of the channel; and he served as a member of the city council, discharging the duties that devolved upon him in the most capable and painstaking manner. He was firmly impressed with the future of Stockton and made investments in local realty. He owned the property and erected the building at the corner of Main and Sutter streets, where now stands the Stockton Drug Company's store. In the early days Mr. Gall was a member of the Scottish Society—since discontinued—and he was also connected with the Caledonian Club. He died in 1894, the father of seven children, four of whom are now living: Alexander C., Charles G. and Joe of Stockton, and Mrs. J. F. Petzinger of San Francisco.

Joe Gall was educated in the public schools of Stockton and after reaching manhood was engaged in the real estate business with his brother, John D. for a number of years. Later he was in the cigar business. He next took up auctioneering and has been following that calling ever since with ever increasing success, being one of the best known men in that line in this part of the state. It is to his credit to have conducted some of the largest farm sales ever put through in California; and for four years was federal auctioneer for the State of California, holding sales in the custom house in San Francisco. There are few ranchers and stockraisers in the San Joaquin Valley who are not acquainted with Joe Gall. In recent years he has had associated with him his son, Joe C. Gall, and like his father, is well and favorably known as one of the most successful auctioneers of the state. The present office of the firm of Joe Gall & Son is at 222 North El Dorado Street, Stockton.

Mr. Gall is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, whose well-directed projects for the developing of the community receive his hearty support. He has always taken a pride in the advancement of Stockton and as a Republican, was elected a member of the city council from the first ward serving for a period of seven years. During one campaign he failed to receive the nomination on the Republican ticket and the next day was chosen as the candidate on the Democratic ticket for councilman and won out over the Republican candidate. This is undoubtedly the only case of its kind in the state. Mr. Gall is a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks.

In his younger days Joe Gall was well known among the "light fans" as the announcer in the ring of the fighters and he has the distinction of having introduced such notables as James Jeffries, Bob Fitzsimmons, James J. Corbett, Sam McVey, John L. Sullivan, Jake Kilrain and others before local audiences. Also in the earlier period he was noted as a comedian and humorist, taking part in fraternal and other amateur theatricals, and has a well-filled scrap book which tells an interesting story of his earlier activities. He has now retired from the ring and the mantle has fallen on the shoulders of his capable son and partner.

The marriage of Joe Gall in 1892 united him with Miss Annie Benson, born in Stockton, and the daughter of Captain Benjamin Benson, a pioneer steamboat captain, being master of the T. C. Walker. Four children have blessed this union: Joe C.; Theresa, Mrs. P. Tindall; Benjamin M., and Floyd. Mr. Gall is well known as a man of integrity, enterprise and reliability in all business transactions and has always found time to cooperate with every movement seeking the improvement of Stockton.

FRANK A. MEYER.—Born in Calaveras County, Cal. Frank A. Meyer first saw the light on October 21, 1887, the son of John and Mary (Fisher) Meyer, the former now deceased, having been a native of Switzerland, the latter still living, being a native of California. John Meyer came out to California in 1856, and having settled in Calaveras County he followed mining and agriculture. Twelve children were born to this worthy pioneer couple, and ten of this number are now living. Frank A. Meyer attended the local schools in Calaveras County, and in time he took a normal course in the Western School of Commerce in Stockton. On his return to Calaveras County, he taught school for a year and a half; and then he took a business course in a Stockton business college; after that he entered the employ of the Stockton Savings and Loan Bank as bookkeeper, where he remained for four and one-half years. He then entered the Commercial & Savings Bank of Stockton as teller, and after a while was made assistant cashier, and finally cashier.

In 1921 he resigned his position in the bank, and on October 5 he was appointed secretary of Lodge No. 218 of the Elks, his selection being the natural expression of esteem and confidence on the part of a legion of friends. He is also a member of Morning Star Lodge, F. & A. M.; Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F.; and the Pohono Tribe of Red Men.

The marriage of Mr. Meyer united him with Miss Oleta Dennis, a native of Calaveras County, and they have one daughter, Jane Alice. Mr. Meyer commands the respect of his fellowmen by his sterling worth and is an honored California son.

ROBERT J. STANLEY.—An esteemed pioneer of San Joaquin County is Robert J. Stanley, known as one of the most successful and enterprising grain farmers and stock raisers of the county and he makes his home on a ranch twelve miles east of Stockton on the Sonora Road, consisting of 865 acres, and recently he has purchased 309 acres of wheat land, a portion of the Griffin estate. He was born on March 28, 1848, in Essex County, Vt., a son of John C. and Jane (Beattie) Stanley, natives of New Hampshire and Vermont respectively, who were farmers in Essex County, Vermont, where they resided until they passed away. Their family comprised five children: William J., a farmer in Franconia, N. H.; Margaret, Mrs. Brown, passed on in Coos County, N. H.; Jennie, who for many years was a teacher, resides in Lancaster, N. H.; Mrs. Harriet Carpenter, deceased, and Robert J., the subject of this review. John C. Stanley was a farmer all his life in Vermont and lived to be seventy-seven and his wife died at the age of seventy-six in 1887.

Robert J. Stanley attended the public school in Lancaster, N. H., and also Lancaster Academy, and after completing his school work entered the employ of the Boston & Maine Railroad as fireman, where he remained for four years, then returned to his home and farmed for two years. At twenty-seven years of age he entered the contract lumber business at Strafford, N. H., and also at Brunswick, Vt., which engaged his attention for the next six years, when he started for the Pacific Coast. In 1879 he arrived in Stockton and was greeted by his old boyhood friends, D. A. and Fred Guernsey and John Moore. Mr. Stanley found employment on the grain farms and spent two years driving the big teams in the grain fields, then began on his own account and for forty-one years he has farmed east of Stockton on the Sonora Road.

In Stockton on February 3, 1881, Mr. Stanley was married to Mrs. Lucretia (Dowling) Matteson, a native of Lima, Ohio. Her father, Dr. John Dowling, was a pioneer physician in California and he also engaged in farming his ranch, being located east of Stockton, which was also the headquarters for his freighting outfit. He practiced medicine from his home on the ranch until his demise, 1875. Mrs. Stanley was educated at Oberlin College, where she was graduated. She taught school in Ohio and then as a member of the American Missionary Association. As Mrs. Matteson she went to Africa as a missionary, spending two years on the Dark Continent. On her return she located near Wichita, Kans., until 1875, when she came to California to take possession of her father's estate, and it was here she met and married Mr. Stanley. She passed away in 1904. By her first marriage she had two sons, Arthur E. and John J. Matteson, the former living in this county. By her union with Mr. Stanley there was one son, Albert James, a graduate of York's Business School. He spent some years in the Kansas oil fields, but since 1911 has been associated with his father in ranching. He married Miss Edna Rossen and has one child, Ruth Ethel, attending the University of California. He is a member of the Odd Fellows and Native Sons.

Mr. Stanley has been a very successful farmer; twenty-four years ago he leased the present ranch of 865 acres from J. H. Hough. He also owns 309 acres adjoining, purchased from the Griffin ranch, devoting his operations to raising wheat and barley. At times he has farmed as much as 2500 acres, the land yielding from eight to twenty-five sacks of wheat to the acre and from fourteen to thirty sacks of barley. Mr. Stanley has also engaged in raising fine mules and horses and at the present has sixty-five head of choice stock. Installing a pumping plant in 1910 Mr. Stanley seeded ten acres to alfalfa, from which he has cut six crops during the year. Mr. Stanley has always used the most modern machinery in harvesting his grain and was one of the first to own and operate a Holt combined harvester in this section. The machine shop in which John Holt and Dave Young, now both deceased, manufactured their first harvester in 1876 is still standing on Mr. Stanley's ranch. The first harvester was known as the Centennial and fourteen machines were manufactured. In politics Mr. Stanley is a Republican and fraternally has been a Mason since 1872.

JOHN D. GALL.—A native son of Stockton, Cal., John D. Gall was actively identified with business activities of this thriving city from young manhood and was a prominent factor in its upbuilding and development along substantial and enduring lines. He was born in this city July 11, 1855, a son of Alexander and Margaret (Stewart) Gall, both natives of Scotland. In 1850 the father left his native land in a sailing vessel bound for San Francisco, and in 1852 settled in Stockton. He owned and operated the first bakery in Stockton for many years, then retired when he was appointed superintendent of streets and also had charge of the work of dredging the channel; he was also a member of the city council and was a promoter of every measure and movement calculated to advance the prosperity and growth of this city. He became the owner of valuable city property. He passed away in 1874 and of his children, four are now living: Alexander C., Charles G., and Joe M., all residents of Stockton, and Mrs. J. F. Petzinger, of San Francisco.

John D. Gall obtained his education in the public schools of Stockton and St. Mary's College in San Francisco and assisted his father in the bakery until he was old enough to engage in business for himself. He first ran a liquor store with Frank P. Madden on East Weber Avenue near Eldorado Street; later he sold out to his partner and ran the same kind of business in San Francisco for a number of years; then he went into partnership with Edward Burns and they were the first to develop the northern section of Stockton, by platting the North Stockton addition. They opened up the North Addition which is now built up with beautiful residences. Besides this, Mr. Gall erected a number of houses in the southern part of Stockton; he purchased the Quinn property and erected residences on same. When Turlock, Stanislaus County, was a small town, he located there for a time and erected a two-story business block and also built the first electric light plant and the first building for the Commercial Telephone Company.

On April 30, 1882, Mr. Gall was married to Miss Hattie Hannan, also a native of Stockton, one of a family of four children born to John and Catherine (Conley) Hannan, both natives of Ireland and both now deceased. John Hannan was a miner and mined at Sonora, Tuolumne County. He died in 1862 and subsequently Mrs. Hannan was married to J. W. Maher. She lived to be eighty-eight years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Gall were the parents of one son, John. Mr. Gall passed away April 21, 1915. He took a prominent part in the political life of Stockton and was a member of the old Volunteer Fire Department in early days, serving as chief during 1882 and 1883; later he was chief of police of Stockton. Fraternally he belonged to the Native Sons of the Golden West. Since Mr. Gall's death, his son John has erected a modern two-story business block at a cost of $40,000 on the corner of East Main and Aurora streets; this was the first modern block to be erected in this section for a number of years. When Mr. Gall passed away, Stockton lost one of her most loyal citizens and he never lacked for enthusiasm when any measure or movement was proposed for the advancement and prosperity of his beloved city of Stockton.

ARTHUR C. BOEHMER, M. D.—A thorough understanding of the theory and practice of medicine and surgery has brought Dr. Arthur C. Boehmer most gratifying success and the citizens of Lodi have shown their appreciation of his five years of work among them, for he occupies a high position in the esteem and confidence of the people of the city and environs. A native of Wisconsin, he was born in La Crosse on October 30, 1890, but when a small lad removed with his parents to Tomah, Wis., where he was reared and attended the public schools. He entered the University of Illinois and was graduated with the class of 1913 with the degree of M. D. and was the youngest student to graduate from that institution up to that date. He was popular in the Greek fraternity, Phi Rho Sigma, and was interested in all college activities. After his graduation he became an interne in the West Side Hospital in Chicago where he remained for two years, gaining knowledge and experience; he then became the house physician of this hospital, remaining in that position for one year; he then became associated with the famous surgeon, Arthur Nathan Claggett, and the year's close association with this noted surgeon gave him an experience that could not have been acquired otherwise. He then became professor in the Chicago College of Medicine and also in the Illinois Post Graduate School where he remained until his removal to Lodi in 1917, where he has been successfully practicing his profession. He has been very active in the affairs of the County and State Medical societies and through his efforts and influence has aided materially in making the city and county a more desirable place in which to live.

The marriage of Dr. Boehmer united him with Miss Florence L. Schubert, a native of Illinois. In his fraternal affiliations, Dr. Boehmer is a member of Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., and of the Royal Arch and Council of Stockton, and the Ben Ali Temple of Sacramento. At the present time he is the examining physician of the Eagles lodge of Lodi. In local affairs he is a member of the Lodi Business Men's Association and the Mokelumne Club. He has always been most actively interested in everything pertaining to the progress both of Lodi and San Joaquin County and maintains a most progressive stand on all questions relative to the prosperity and development of his particular locality. He has recently erected one of the most artistic and attractive residences in Lodi where he and his esteemed wife entertain their many friends and acquaintances.

JOHN M. POSEY.—Not many Californians, perhaps, can boast with modest pride of a family tree so interesting as that of John M. Posey, the well-known San Joaquin County realtor, which links him and his near-of-kin to the truly good and equally truly great. Himself a native son, he was born on September 27, 1863, in the northern part of the San Joaquin Valley, on the ranch of his father, Jeremiah Posey, a pioneer of the Lodi district and a native of Alabama. He had previously married Miss Eliza Lucas, a native of Georgia and a member of the family of the distinguished Robert Lucas, twice Governor of the Buckeye State; and after their marriage they had removed to Texas, and from the Lone Star State had crossed the plains together to California. Upon their arrival on the Coast, Mr. Posey traded a span of mules for 150 acres of land along the river in the northern section of San Joaquin County, and this he farmed to grain, and many are the good stories coming down through him about those settler days. There were no fences then in that part of the county, and cattle roamed at will; and the Indians came down from the mountains to help harvest the crops. The grain was hauled to Carson City and Virginia City, Nev., over toll roads, the tolls being $125 for the round trip, which required two weeks to make. Elks, too, were plentiful, and John Posey well remembers seeing a couple of them, one day, when he was a little child playing on the Dodge place. From all accounts, no better parents ever lived than these worthy pioneers who rounded out their useful, self-sacrificing lives with honor and success not accorded to everyone, and left behind, as a precious legacy to their descendants and also to society generally, and the patriotic American proud of his country's founders, the glory of an untarnished name. Three children still live to represent the family: Margaret has become Mrs. Aldrich and resides at Lodi; near her is Agnes, better known as Mrs. Foster; while the one surviving son is the subject of this review.

Left an orphan when a mere baby, John M. Posey was reared on a neighboring farm, where he went to work when old enough to be serviceable as a husky farm-hand, but attaining his twenty-first year, he started out to make his own way in the world. He went to Oregon and settled in the Rogue River country, and there, for four years, he farmed 160 acres. Returning to the San Joaquin Valley, he purchased another 160 acres near Lodi, known as the Dunbar ranch, which he proceeded both to cultivate and to make his home; and this he sold in 1914, after he had first raised grain there, and then planted an orchard and vines.

Since then Mr. Posey has bought, developed and sold numerous ranches throughout the San Joaquin Valley, his comprehensive knowledge of California agricultural conditions enabling him to judge with unusual intelligence and clearness, and to be the safest kind of a mentor to others as well desiring to entrust their important interest to his unbiased decision and unimpeachable integrity. His present real estate holdings consist of about 235 acres lying to the west of Lodi, 100 acres of which are in bearing vines; and he has a tract of eighty acres near Lafayette which is highly improved. In 1914 Mr. Posey established a real estate business, by means of which he devotes his time and energies largely to the buying and selling of extensive ranch properties, and he has become a most potent and welcome factor in both the development and the upbuilding of Lodi and the immediate vicinity.

Mr. Posey's marriage on April 5, 1890, and at Medford, Ore., united him with Miss Lena Stimson, a native of the good old state of Maine, and seven children, all natives of San Joaquin County, have been born to them. Charles is a partner with his father in the J. M. Posey Land Company; Nellie has become Mrs. Fore and resides at Lafayette; Stella is Mrs. McKenzie, and lives near Acampo; Donna is also married, having become the wife of Raymond Northrop, and resides near Mrs. Fore; J. Everett is operating one of his father's ranches; Margaret and Jennie are in school. Mr. Posey is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West, affiliated with Lodi Parlor, and he belongs to the Knights of Pythias. Mrs. Posey passed away in 1907, leaving behind a blessed memory.

The association of our subject, through his mother and her forbears, with the famous Robert Lucas, is naturally a matter of great satisfaction to Mr. Posey and his patriotic family, as it will always be a matter of real interest to the student of California history and the scribe delving into the annals of San Joaquin County; for the history of the Lucas family in America is a story of pioneer settlements and frontier life, a tale of Indian wars and boundary disputes, a story with chapters generations long, with ever the same pioneer background and ever the same pursuit of the border-line of civilization from England in the Cromwellian days to the middle of the American Continent two centuries later. In England, the Lucas family had been Quaker; and when the tide of westward civilization set toward American shores there crossed the Atlantic one Robert Lucas, who arrived in 1679, and took part in the founding of William Penn's colony. Bucks County, Pennsylvania, was his habitat; and here generations sprang forth to carry on the great work he had begun. Here Edward Lucas, the grandfather of Governor Robert Lucas, already referred to as related to John E. Posey's mother, was born, reared and married to Mary Darke, a descendant of one of Cromwell's soldiers; and in their home in Jefferson County, Virginia, on the 10,000 acres which Edward Lucas bought from Lord Fairfax. William Lucas, father of Robert, was born about 1743. As he grew into manhood, he met and married, at Shepherdstown, Miss Susannah Barnes, likewise of Jefferson County; and it was Joseph Barnes, her brother, who a few years later, according to local tradition, successfully propelled against the current of the Potomac River a steamboat of his own invention, long before Fulton's "Clermont" had ploughed the waters of the Hudson. Having cast off his Quaker proclivities, William enlisted in dead earnest for three years of service in the American Revolution; and it is still told in the family how at the muster of Captain William Lucas' company later, when off on frontier duty, a proclamation by Governor Thomas Jefferson of Virginia was read, warning all who had sworn allegiance to England to leave the country.

It was in these eventful times and stirring environments that Robert Lucas was born on April 1, 1781, destined to make his way, in 1800, to Ohio, under the influence of the restless spirit manifest at the close of the Revolutionary War, which impelled men from older regions to push out as settlers into untrodden territory. In Ohio, he rose to the rank of Major-General of Militia. When the War of 1812 broke out and again involved his country in a dispute with a foreign power, calling for additional or renewed display of patriotism, Robert Lucas was commissioned captain in the 19th U. S. Infantry, on March 14, 1812, and on the 20th of February of the following year he was made lieutenant-colonel; but on June 30, feeling a more imperative call for his services at home, he resigned his enviable commission and served as brigadier-general of the Ohio State Militia in defense of the frontier, continuing that arduous and responsible duty from July 25 until September 19, subject to untold privation and exhausting fatigue, and exposed hourly to every conceivable kind of danger. In 1814 he was a member of the Ohio Legislature, and in 1832 he presided over the Democratic National Convention that nominated Andrew Jackson for a second term.

General Lucas served twice as Governor of Ohio, first from 1832 to 1836, first taking the oath of office on December 7, 1832, and then, when his first record was well known to the people, he was the first Territorial Governor of Iowa, filling that difficult role at the outset of the new commonwealth, from 1838 to 1841. He was an active Freemason, a man of strong impulses, but of strict integrity.

This distinguished relative of the Poseys cannot fail to interest Californians, and especially so because of the Golden State's relation to the two commonwealths he once ruled. He was a typical Western man, as his biographer, John C. Parish, has declared, and believed in the development of the West and its resources. Throughout his career in Ohio his efforts to establish roads and perfect a great canal system for that state were particularly marked. In Iowa the legitimate successor of the canal—the railroad—claimed his interest. In 1850, when even Californians were awakening, despite their paramount interest in gold, or perhaps because of it, to the necessity of better means of transportation to the West, enthusiasm over railroads toward the West ran high in Iowa, and Robert Lucas actively participated in the conventions. Thus in his last days we find him—always a pioneer—exerting his best energies toward the development of three great pioneer movements: education, temperance, and railway communication. But his life brought many disappointments. With all the intensity of his spirit he had cherished longings and ambitions which in the nature of things could not be fulfilled. He had been privileged to sow the seed; it was given to others to reap the harvest. His years had been many and his services great. He had seen a great state rise from the wilderness north of the Ohio River, and had given it a third of a century of his own life's work. He had guided the beginnings of the promising Territory of Iowa, and helped it to gain admission as a new State of the Union.

Hardly less interesting from a human standpoint was the companion of his arduous days. On March 7, 1816, Robert Lucas married Miss Friendly Ashley Sumner, and shortly after he and his bride moved to Pike County, and settled in the town of Picketon, which, for over a score of years, was to be his home. Ninety years have passed by; and yet the little village of Picketon, with the hills on one side and the Scioto River on the other, has not grown a great deal. The present postmaster is a grandson of Robert's brother, Joseph Lucas; and there still tread the gravel paths of Picketon, men and women who remember the tall, straight figure and stern face of the Governor, and the delicious currant pies of his wife, Friendly. When Mr. and Mrs. Lucas first made this place their home, he was thirty-five years of age, and lived in a house that still stands on the main street of the town. Later, when his brother-in-law and political rival was elected to the State Senate, and for two years he could devote his time and attention strictly to his private affairs, he built himself a house which was among the finest in all Southern Ohio. To this old-time mansion, years have brought somewhat of change; but it still stands on the Jackson Road two miles east of Picketon. It was a large, two-story brick house with a hall in the center and sitting-room and parlor opening on each side of the hall. Each room, upstairs and down, was provided with a fireplace. Over the front door was placed a stone, in which were cut the following words: "Virtue, Liberty and Independence." Below the word Liberty appeared a five-pointed star; while below the motto were carved name and date: "R. Lucas, 1824." Located on a farm of 437 acres, surrounded with large trees and with sweet briar and eglantine growing in profusion about the place, and over the walls, it was indeed a home of wonderful attractiveness. The grove about the house was the distinctive feature of the farm; and so, in honor of his wife, Robert Lucas named his new home "Friendly Grove." Here the Lucas family lived for fifteen years, and here Lucas and his hospitable wife entertained in great state. Political friends came to discuss weighty matters of public concern, and to laugh at the quick-witted sallies of Mrs. Lucas. Methodist circuit riders stopped here in their unending round of pioneer preaching, finding spiritual improvement and incidentally nourishing their gaunt frames upon the ample and delectable meals outspread by their hostess. Mrs. Lucas had an ever-ready tongue, an unquenchable fund of spirits and vigor, and a widespread reputation as a cook; and she was a general favorite, particularly with those to whom these and her many other virtuous qualities appealed. One of her pastimes was horseback riding; indeed, it was a common sight to see her galloping over the rough country roads of early Ohio on her coal-black horse "Nig," or, with a big basket swung from the pommel of her saddle, riding over the stretch of hills that lay between Friendly Grove and Picketon on her way to do the shopping for the family.

The home which Governor Lucas had built south of Iowa City in 1844 was the home of his last days. Because of the plum trees before the house, he called it Plum Grove; and here in the midst of his family, he quietly rested from his long life's work. He awaited the approach of death with calmness, day after day entering on the margins of old newspapers or on the backs of old documents expressions of his hope of immortality and final salvation, interweaving an undying evidence of his affection for his family. On the last day of the year 1852 he recorded a hymn full of hope and cheer in the pages of the journal he had kept in the War of 1812. Five weeks later, February 7, 1853, Robert Lucas died at Plum Grove, and on the following day he was buried in the cemetery at Iowa City. Friendly A. Lucas outlived her husband more than twenty years.

GEORGE L. DICKENSON.—It is safe to say that there has been no person in Stockton who more continuously extolled its possibilities as a manufacturing center and distributing point, with its three trans-continental railroads and its ocean shipping, than George L. Dickenson, the conservative, yet enterprising leader in business affairs and public-spirited citizen. A native of Missouri, he was born in Jackson County, September 13, 1857, the son of Charles W. and Elizabeth (Meador) Dickenson, natives of Virginia and Kentucky, respectively. The Dickenson name has been associated with California since 1846, when Gallant Duncan Dickenson, a cousin of George L., became identified with the West. He was born in Virginia in 1806, and was left an orphan at an early age and reared by an uncle. In 1822 he went to Ruth-erford County Tenn., and there was married to Isa-bella McCreary in 1828; in 1834 they moved to Jack-son County, Mo., and lived there until 1846, when with his wife and six children, G. D. Dickenson left Inde-pendence and crossed the plains as a captain of a train of 500 emigrants. Arriving in California the family spent the first winter near San Jose, but in 1847 re-moved to Monterey County and lived there for the next eighteen months. While residing there, Mr. Dickenson built the first brick kiln and erected the first brick house in the state. During the year 1848, while prospecting for gold, he discovered the gulch which bears his name, and in April of 1849, he located in Stockton. When he had passed through here in 1846 there was neither a wooden nor a brick building in the place. Here Mr. Dickenson built the first hotel, constructed of lumber that was brought around the Horn and costing him one dollar a foot. This hotel accomodated 100 guests and was operated by him for a short time; later it was leased to Roach & Morgan for a rental of $18,000 a year. The building was des-troyed by fire about two years later. G. D. Dickenson was elected alcalde of Stockton and served till Cali-fornia was admitted as a state. It was here that his daughter Margaret was married to A. G. Lawrey on October 29, 1849. She was the first American girl wedded in this city. In 1851 the family settled in Stanislaus County, where he established Dickenson's Ferry; and this continued to be their home until his death, October 25, 1870.

George L. Dickenson was educated in the public schools of his native county and in Baker University at Baldwin, Kans. For a number of years he was con-nected with railroad interests in the Middle West. He was in the auditing and freight department of the Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Gulf Railroad at Kansas City, Mo.; then with the Atchison & Nebraska at Atchison, Kans.; and then with the Indiana, Bloom-ington & Western at Indianapolis, Ind. In 1890 he came to California and the following year settled in Stockton, where he became associated with the Holt Manufacturing Company, retaining his connection with this concern until 1913, when he resigned to give his attention to his own interests that had accumu-lated with the passing of the years. During the years he was with the company he became the first secre-tary after its incorporation in 1892; in 1910 he became secretary and treasurer of the Peoria, Ill., branch of the Holt Manufacturing Company; and then for three years had charge of the Holt interests in the Eastern and Middle states, as well as much of their foreign trade. He became recognized as one of the best informed authorities on harvesters, traction engines and equipment. In 1901 the Matteson & Williamson Manufacturing Company was purchased by Mr. Dickenson and George H. Cowie. It was operated by them two years. In 1903 the business of this concern was merged with The Holt Manufacturing Company, and in 1905 The Georges Company was organized and succeeded to the realty holdings of the Matteson & Williamson Manufacturing Company.

In 1919 The Georges Company Building was erected at the corner of Aurora and Market streets. This structure was conceived by Mr. Dickenson as a home for industrial interests, it being in the heart of the in-dustrial district of the city. The building is two stories high, with the entire ground floor arranged to house tractor concerns and affiliated institutions that help make that branch of trade so important. It is well-appointed throughout and occupies about a quarter of a block. The second floor is devoted to business of-fices, each provided with conveniences that add com-fort to the occupants.

In passing, it is well to mention the fact that the Matteson & Williamson Manufacturing Company, which began business in 1852, was one of the oldest concerns in the state, and with it were connected men at different times that are now prominent in industries of their own. Among these we mention: G. H. Harris, superintendent, now president of the Harris Manu-facturing Company; O. H. Eccleston, secretary, now holding the same position with the Holt Company; E. H. Noack, who began his apprenticeship as a foundryman and is now president of the Monarch Foundry Company; J. M. Kroyer, formerly foreman in the machine shop, now president of the Kroyer Motor Company. When the company's business was merged with the Holt concern it had existed over half a century.

The marriage of Mr. Dickenson on February 15, 1910, united him with Miss Erma Wagner, born in Ventura County. They had a son, Richard W. Dick-enson, born November 12, 1910, who is shaping an in-dividuality that will place him in high position when reaching mature years. Upon the reorganization of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Dickenson was elected a director; and he was always active in its affairs. He was also a member of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and belonged to the Yosemite Club and the Golf and Country Club.

Mr. Dickenson was always found among the leaders in all movements that make for a greater Stockton, was ever on the alert to "boost" his favored city, and worked consistently to show industrial leaders of the whole country the splendid possibilities of this city as a manufacturing and distributing center, where raw materials, labor and water and rail transportation combine to create the location they are seeking. He was a persistent worker and advocate of Stockton and San Joaquin County, and never neglected an op-portunity to place before the public the features that are offered by Stockton for jobbing, manufacturing, packing, canning and distributing. He is the father of Tractor Row, which extends from Weber Avenue, to South Street on Aurora Street. It is this constant endeavor that does much to bring substantial results and new institutions to Stockton, and for these efforts the people of this county owe much to the unselfish devotion of Mr. Dickenson. He died January 12, 1923.

ORRIN C. WILSON.—Among the highly esteemed residents of Stockton was the late Orrin C. Wilson, the proprietor of the well-known broom factory at Stockton. A native son, he was born in the house at Stockton in which he lived at the time of his death on June 8, 1873, the son of John Wilson, a native of St. Johnsbury, near Danville, Vt., who was a farmer and came out to California by way of the Nicaragua Route in 1852. He reached Stockton in time, and for a while teamed to the mines in Calaveras County, using bull-teams to haul the freight. Later, he followed sheep-shearing, and then he had a dairy in Stockton and delivered milk, leasing land from Captain Weber, and farming where Oak Park now is. In 1864 he bought the block in Stockton bounded by Pilgrim, Ophir, Channel streets and Miner Avenue, paying only $450 for the same, and later he sold the half of it for the price paid for the whole. He also owned one-fourth of another block on Miner Avenue. He built eight houses on his property, erecting in 1869 the Wilson home-place. In partnership with Jacob and Hiram Fisher, John Wilson, who had married Miss Mary C. Fisher, a native of Missouri, April 7, 1863, also engaged in house-moving in earlier days, using stalwart oxen. He died March 27, 1899, full of years and honor as an exemplary citizen of the finest Yankee type, and his good wife passed away in 1909. They were the parents of two children, both sons, one of whom died at the age of five. John Wilson was a prominent member of the Methodist Church. Mrs. Wilson was the daughter of Hiram Fisher, who crossed the great plains in 1852 and became the owner of the Fisher Addition at Stockton. Mrs. John Wilson cooked the first meal in the first home which stood in Modesto, and that first house was a small frame structure moved from San Joaquin City to Modesto by her father, with the aid of ox-teams. She was an active worker in the Central Methodist Church.

Orrin C. Wilson attended the public schools in Stockton, and then learned the trade of a carpenter, and was the leading building contractor of Oakdale, in Stanislaus County, for a number of years, where he helped greatly to build up the town, erecting many of the finest residences there, and also business blocks. There he became a member of Oakdale Camp No. 331 of the Woodmen of the World. At the age of thirty-one he became totally blind, and then he came back to Stockton and opened a cigar store on North Sutter Street, which he conducted for ten years. Selling out in 1916, he attended the Industrial Home for the Adult Blind in Oakland, a large institution devoted to the manufacture of brooms, and there learned, and learned well, the broom-making trade.

Returning to Stockton, Mr. Wilson opened his own broom factory in 1918, and in this venture he was very successful from the first. He was an expert at the trade, and he worked every day in his factory. He manufactured on an average 2,500 brooms yearly, and he originally grew the broom-corn on his ranch of 160 acres near Stockton, which he sold in February, 1920. All the large manufacturing plants in Stockton were patrons of their factory.

At San Francisco, on October 29, 1895, Mr. Wilson was married to Miss Birdie G. Mosher, a native of San Joaquin County; and their union was made happier in the birth of one daughter, Lillie Mary, a native of Stockton, who is now the wife of Thomas R. Carroll. Miss Mosher was the daughter of Charles Henry and Mary (Jones) Mosher; he was a native of Oswego, N. Y., and crossed the great plains to California in 1854, with the old-time ox-team, and farmed in Cherokee Lane, near Stockton. He served in the Civil War and became a veteran of the Grand Army of the Republic; he was killed, while working on the first combined harvester built in San Joaquin County. Grandfather Jones first crossed the continent with an ox-train in '48; and afterwards he made no less than eleven trips, on several of which he faced all the dangers and privations of the journey while slowly crawling over the plains behind teams of oxen. Mr. and Mrs. Mosher had four children: Arthur H., Lillie May, Archie Courtland and Birdie G., who became Mrs. Wilson. Mr. Wilson died very suddenly in Stockton on August 10, 1921. Mrs. Wilson continues the manufacturing business, having added up-to-date equipment to bring the establishment to a high standard, and during the first year under her management she put out more than 10,000 brooms and now, besides supplying the various manufacturers she has the wholesalers' trade and sells direct, at wholesale, to the retail dealers in town.

MICHAEL P. SHAUGHNESSY.—A leading light in the legal fraternity of San Joaquin County, and prominent in its public life as city attorney of Stockton, Michael P. Shaughnessy also has an enviable record for patriotic service, both in the Spanish-American War and in the recent European conflict. Mr. Shaughnessy is a native of Minnesota and was born in Sibley County on December 1, 1875. His early education was attained in the public schools of Minneapolis, and he then entered the University of Minnesota at Minneapolis, where he graduated in 1895. Continuing his studies there, he took a post-graduate course in law, which he completed in 1897.

Returning to Minnesota, Mr. Shaughnessy was admitted to the bar at St. Paul in 1897, and he soon began the practice of law in Minneapolis, continuing there with marked success for several years. In 1902 he removed to Asotin, Wash., and while a resident there he was appointed district attorney of Asotin County, serving with distinction for two terms. Coming from there to Stockton, Cal., Mr. Shaughnessy opened a law office here on September 9, 1915, soon taking his place among the leaders of the bar, practicing alone until October 1, 1919, when he formed a partnership with Warren H. Atherton, now city justice of Stockton, as Shaughnessy & Atherton. The following year, on January 1, 1920, he was appointed city attorney, and this important office he has filled most capably.

Soon after his graduation, Mr. Shaughnessy enlisted in the Thirteenth Minnesota Infantry in May, 1898, for service in the Spanish War. His regiment was sent to the Philippines, where he served under General Lawton, taking part in fifteen engagements and passing through many hardships in that long campaign. Returning to the United States, he received his honorable discharge in October, 1899, having spent eighteen months with the U. S. forces. Shortly after the entrance of this country in the World War, Mr. Shaughnessy became a member of the Exemption Board of San Joaquin County, where for twenty-one months he gave faithful and efficient service, his long military training making him a most valuable member of this body.

At Spokane, Wash., Mr. Shaughnessy was united in marriage with Miss Edna M. Ridgway, like himself a native of Minnesota, and the daughter of William A. and Effie C. (Close) Ridgeway. Mr. Shaughnessy is prominent in the Knights of Columbus, and keeps up his military associations by membership in the Veterans of Foreign Wars and honorary membership in the American Legion. He also belongs to Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., of Stockton.

MRS. BARBARA J. SOLLINGER.—A representative of one of the early pioneer families of San Joaquin County is Mrs. Barbara J. Sollinger, in whose life are evidences of the sterling traits of character which command respect and confidence in every land and clime. Because of the fact that she has resided in the county for the past sixty years, and has been a loyal and helpful citizen and trustworthy friend, she is indeed worthy of representation in this volume devoted to the representative men and women, past and present, of California. She was born in Linn County, Iowa, on her father's farm, February 20, 1854, a daughter of Richard and Mary A. (Durbin) Woods, natives of West Virginia and Virginia, respectively. Richard Woods was born in 1822 in Marshall County, W. Va., where his parents, George and Achsa (Birch) Woods, natives of Virginia, were farmers. In 1855 the family moved to Linn County, Iowa, settling upon land obtained from the government, and resided there until the father's death in 1863 at the age of seventy years. Richard, who was brought up to farm life, went to Iowa in 1853, two years before his parents emigrated there, and followed agricultural pursuits until 1862, when he came overland with ox teams to California, arriving here at the end of a six months' journey. In 1851 he had married Miss Mary A. Durbin, born in Virginia and a daughter of William B. Durbin. On the way across the plains they were attacked by Indians, at the place known as the City of Rocks, north of Salt Lake; and although Mr. Woods and another member of the party were wounded, the forty whites put the hundred Indians to flight. On arriving here, Mr. Woods purchased a squatter's right to land located about five miles west of Woodbridge in Elkhorn Township, and was one of the first to settle in this part of the county. He had wild land, upon which it was necessary to make all the improvement; and the high state of cultivation and productivity to which Mr. Woods brought the land attest the good judgment, energy and economy of the owner. This worthy pioneer couple were the parents of the following children: Mrs. Barbara J. Sollinger, the subject of our interesting review; Adeline, Mrs. James R. Perrott, deceased; George A., now in Alaska; William A., living in Lodi; Achsa B., Mrs. Hughes, also of Lodi; Carrie L., Mrs. L. J. Lucas, of Woodbridge; Charles R., deceased; James A., residing at Walnut Grove, and Melvin, with the Holt Manufacturing Company in Stockton. Richard Woods lived to be ninety years old, while his wife passed away at the age of seventy-three years.

Barbara J. Woods began her education in the district school in the vicinity of her home in Iowa; and when the family settled in San Joaquin County, she continued her schooling at the Turner district school. She remained at home with her parents until her marriage in October, 1867, which united her with James Alexander Sollinger, a native of Crawford County, Ohio, born in 1842, a son of James H. and Mary (Kimmel) Sollinger. Mr. Sol-linger was educated in the schools of Bucyrus, Ohio, when he prepared for teaching, which he began at the age of eighteen. He taught school in Ohio for two years, and when twenty years of age came to California, riding on horseback and assisting in driving a herd of horses across the plains, in 1862. After his arrival in California he taught school first in Stanislaus County, and then in San Joaquin County, and from 1882 to 1886 he served as superintendent of schools of San Joaquin County. As an educator he met with much success, and is well-remembered and highly esteemed for his intellect and scholarly attainments. He was also deputy county treasurer for some years, and served as a school trustee in his district, for he was always a friend to the cause of education. Mr. and Mrs. Sollinger engaged in viticulture, purchasing twenty acres near Woodbridge which they set to vineyard of Tokay, Black Prince, and Emperor grapes, today full-bearing, a valuable income property with a comfortable residence, where Mrs. Sollinger makes her home and where she and her granddaughter, Mrs. Beatrice Welsh, dispense in their liberal and kind-hearted way the good old-time California hospitality.

Mr. and Mrs. Sollinger were the parents of one daughter, Mary Ann, who became the wife of Dr. Willis Spencer Snedigar, born near Oakdale and a member of a pioneer family of Stanislaus County. Both Dr. and Mrs. Snedigar are now deceased. They had one daughter, Beatrice, now Mrs. Clark G. Welsh, with whom Mrs. Sollinger, our subject, makes her home. Mrs. Sollinger has five great-grandchildren: Kenneth S., Donald J., Bonnie Jean, Enid Lavern and Willis Clark. Mr. Sollinger passed away on March 15, 1918. He was a man of excellent public spirit, and one who lent his efforts to many undertakings for the general welfare of his locality.

JULIUS J. GAEDTKE.—One of the few venerable and honored pioneers of California who yet enjoy life and its blessings in the state with which they so early cast their lot in the days of gold, is Julius J. Gaedtke, who has passed the age of fourscore. He was born in Koenigsburg, Prussia, March 23, 1838, and was brought up in the Lutheran Church and educated in the schools of his native land. His father was Johan Gaedtke, a carpenter who married Louise Klos, both natives of Koenigsburg, and they were the parents of six children of whom our subject is the fourth. Julius J. Gaedtke served an apprenticeship of four years in Germany and learned the trade of coppersmith becoming an expert in making ornamental flowers of tin, these being used for wedding and table decorations. When twenty-eight years old, then he sailed from Hamburg and landed at Castle Garden in February, 1886. He worked at his trade of tinsmith in New York City and vicinity for one year, then in 1867 he removed to California coming via Panama and arrived in San Francisco in February of that year, where he plied his trade for two years when he removed to Stockton. He brought his tools for making tin ornaments with him into Stockton and made many kinds of decorations in the early days here and he was the only man in the state as far as it is known, to do this work.

Mr. Gaedtke then returned to his native land for a visit, remaining for eleven months, during which time on August 22, 1870, at Hamburg, he was married to Miss Maria Kuhlbrunn, and they immediately sailed for America and settled in Stockton, where Mr. Gaedtke resumed his trade and has worked for different firms in Stockton doing tinsmithing and work on pumps, pipes, windmills, etc. Mr. and Mrs. Gaedtke became the parents of three children: Otto is engaged as a clerk in a cigar store in Stockton; Julius is chief clerk of the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and Lottie died at the age of forty-five. Mrs. Gaedtke passed away in 1919. Mr. Gaedtke is a naturalized American citizen and fraternally he is a member of the Druids. At the age of eighty-four years he still takes a keen delight in living and doing. He has been an eye witness of the wonderful development of San Joaquin County and his mind is stored with many interesting reminiscences of the early days.

James A. Solinger

WILLIAM F. GARVEY.—Among the well known citizens of San Joaquin County is William F. Garvey, a representative agriculturist who has served as deputy constable of Oneil township. He owns a residence at 2602 East Main Street and engages in general farming on a tract of land in East Stockton. He was born August 12, 1859 at Peoria, Ill., the eldest son of Miles Garvey, a native of County Cavan, Ireland, who was eighteen years old when he came to America. He was a skilled machinist and soon found employment on the Illinois Central Railroad, where he attracted the attention of Captain Moss, a railroad contractor and builder at Peoria, who was also the owner of the Moss & Bradley Distillery and a prominent business man of Peoria. In 1861 Miles Garvey drove a team across the plains to California for Captain Moss, arriving in Stockton in August of the same year. He spent five years as a prospector in the Southern mines, then returned East, arriving in Peoria late in 1866. The following spring he moved his family to Omaha, Neb., and there conducted an express and transfer business for five years; then in 1871 the family removed to St. Paul, Kans., where Mr. Garvey engaged in farming until 1876. In 1879 Miles Garvey brought his family to California, arriving in Stockton on April 25 of that year; for two years he farmed the Moss ranch two miles south of Stockton and then moved to the Lathrop section of the county, where he and his sons farmed 1500 acres to grain and were unusually successful in this undertaking. Miles Garvey was a Democrat in politics, a kind friend and loving father. He passed away in Stockton in 1897, his wife surviving him one year, passing away at the Waverley Station ranch near Bellota in 1898, aged eighty-four.

On October 7, 1884, William F. Garvey was married to Miss Clara Moriarty, of St. Paul, Kans., and eight children have been born to this worthy couple: Margaret, died when eight years old; Clara is the wife of L. D. Witherspoon of San Francisco; William, Jr., is employed by G. Lindauer of San Francisco; John L. is traveling salesman for the Moline Plow Company and lives at Sacramento; Irene died when seven years old; Edward, an automobile machinist, resides at Stockton; he was overseas in the late war, in the aviation service; Elodie married Joseph Bruhl and resides in Stockton; Generose is the wife of Hubert Rond of Lodi, Cal. Sixteen years ago Mr. Garvey bought a tract of land in East Stockton, where he owns his residence and seven lots at the present time and engages in general farming. Mr. Garvey was, for many years a watchman for the Harris Harvester Company and Richmond-Chase Packing Company and at the same time was a deputy constable. In politics, Mr. Garvey votes with the Democratic party and for the past twenty has been affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America.

HENRY P. GREEN.—A thoroughly wide-awake experienced contractor whose ambition, never lost sight of, to render only dependable service, has led his many patrons never to lose sight of him, is Henry P. Green, the junior member of the enterprising firm of Daniels & Green, of 705 Yosemite Street, Commercial and Savings Bank Building, Stockton. He was born at Volcano, Cal., April 29, 1881, a son of John Green, a native of Ireland, who came to California in early days by way of Cape Horn, and was a miner in Amador County. When six months old, Henry was brought by his parents to Stockton, and at St. Mary's College, in this city, he was educated.

Growing up, our subject learned the carpenter's trade with Thomas D. Lewis, and some twelve years ago he formed a partnership with Wesley Daniels, under the firm name of Daniels and Green. They organized to do general contracting, and in this field they have been extremely successful. They have specialized in heavy construction work, and hence it has fallen to their lot to put up some of the finest structures in Stockton. These include an office building for the California Navigation & Improvement Company, the remodeled Washington and Johnson schools, the North, Weber and Hazelton schools, the Lincoln and Taft hotels, the two-story brick block for the City Development Company, the remodeled interior of the Commercial and Savings Bank, and the City Bank. They also built the annex to the Smith & Lang Block, the Botto and Brassesco Block, the Marshall Building, and Oneto and Campodonico block, the Flannigan block, the St. Agnes Convent, the Stockton Dry Goods Company's Block, the Pacific State Telegraph and Telephone Building, the Meyers Meat Market Block, and the fine residence for F. J. Viebrock.

At Stockton, in the year 1903, Mr. Green was married to Miss Dora Siefert, a member of a well-known pioneer family of Stockton; and they have two children, Vera and Dorothy. Mr. Green is a member of the Stockton Elks, No. 218, the Knights of Columbus, Stockton Court No. 5, Y. M. I., and Parlor No. 7 of the Native Sons of the Golden West.

W. E. FITZ GERALD.—A veteran of the Civil War, W. E. Fitz Gerald was born in Clinton, N. Y., February 5, 1840, where he received a good education in the Clinton public schools, then removing to Rutland, Vt., he went to work in the marble quarries until the breaking out of the Civil War. At the first top of the drive Mr. Fitz Gerald volunteered his services to his country, enlisting April, 1861, in Company H, 1st Vermont Cavalry, being mustered in for three months and was sent south with his command, taking part in the battle of Big Bethel. On the expiration of three months he was mustered out and returned to Vermont. He immediately reenlisted in the same company and registered for three years and served until after the close of the war. He was honorably discharged October, 1865, having taken part in many engagements, among them, Gettysburg, Antietam and many others, serving under Custer and Kilpatrick. Mr. Fitz Gerald was fortunately never wounded and served actively all the time.

On his return to Rutland, Vt., he became stationary engineer in the marble quarries, continuing for a period of two and a half years and then removed to the great West, when he helped on the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad on the Central Pacific and was present at the driving of the Golden Spike at Promontory Point in 1869. Next we find him in Texas, cattle ranching in Brown County; then for ten years in the hotel business at Brownwood. He then went to Colorado, engaging in mining at Boulder. At the time of the opening of Oklahoma he made his way thither and took a homestead of 160 acres, which he improved and farmed for eight years. In 1913 he disposed of his holdings there and coming to California, he settled in Humboldt County, but in 1915 he removed to Stockton where he is in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. Fitz Gerald was married in Texas to Miss Rhoda Taylor who was born in Mississippi and they have had four children, three of whom are living: Ella, Mrs. Rechland of Grass Valley; Mrs. Josephine Rudesen of Stockton and Elizabeth, who makes her home with her parents. Mr. Fitz Gerald is a Republican and a member of Rawlins Post, G. A. R.

HENRY BRACK.—For a long period of successful activity Henry Brack has been intimately associated with the material growth of Stockton. Unostentatious in manner, broad in information, liberal in views and his means, he adds to these advantages the fact that he is a native-born son of the state and throughout all his life has been intensely interested in its progress.

The founder of the family in California was Jacob Brack, a pioneer of 1849 and a native of Switzerland, born in 1825. His marriage in 1854 united him with Miss Lena Meyer, a native of Germany, who came to California in 1852.

Born in Stockton, Cal., on March 4, 1857, Henry Brack attended the district schools, later supplementing this with a course in the California Military Academy in Oakland and Heald's Business College in San Francisco. He then became associated with his father on the ranch and in later years became its manager, and under his wise supervision the large holdings of his father continued to prosper. For many years he industriously labored in building up his cattle business and he deserves the reputation of being among the most able stockraisers in the great state of California.

After the death of his father in 1912, the ranch was divided and he sold his interest and removed to Stockton, where he has since made his home. His marriage on June 11, 1884, united him with Miss Lena Wagner, a daughter of Jacob Wagner, born at Baden-on-the-Rhine in 1830, a pioneer of the Golden State, and they were the parents of one daughter, Emma D., who passed on in February, 1911, at the age of twenty-six. Mr. and Mrs. Brack have been liberal contributors to charities throughout the county.

WILLIS SPENCER SNEDIGAR, M. D.—A native son who became very efficient and prominent in his profession was the late Willis Spencer Snedigar, who was born near Oakdale, Stanislaus County, on November 4, 1867. He was a son of Thomas Fielding Snedigar, who came to California when a young man, crossing the plains with Thomas and Lucinda Richardson, the latter being Mr. Snedigar's aunt. He resided with them until he started for himself, when he was married to Miss California Dodson. For a time he followed teaming and freighting, and as soon as he had means purchased land and also began farming. Acquiring more land, he quit teaming and bent all his energy to ranching in which he was very successful, becoming a large landowner and a successful financier. He was very liberal and enterprising, being known for his progress and kind-heartedness. He and his wife passed away at their home, a highly esteemed pioneer couple.

Willis Spencer Snedigar, the oldest of their family, was educated in the public schools in his district and at Woodbridge College. Having chosen the profession of medicine, he entered Cooper Medical College, where he pursued the regular course and was duly graduated with the degree of M. D. First locating at Newman, he practiced there for a short time; but desiring a larger field he soon located in Stockton, where he became very successful as a practicing physician and surgeon, continuing in his profession actively until his death, June 10, 1910. He was a member of the County, State, and American Medical Associations, and a member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.

Dr. Snedigar was married at Woodbridge in 1890 to Miss Mary Ann Sollinger, a native daughter, born March 17, 1869, a daughter of J. A. and Barbara J. Sollinger, whose biography appears on another page in this history. Mary Ann was their only child, and was reared on the ranch at Woodbridge. After completing the public school she entered Woodbridge College, where she was graduated. Dr. and Mrs. Snedigar purchased a ranch adjoining the Sollinger place, which was improved to vineyard and is now the property of their daughter Beatrice, Mrs. C. G. Welch. Mrs. Snedigar was a woman of pleasing personality, her affability endearing her to all who knew her, and at her passing, August 26, 1914, she was mourned by her family and a wide circle of friends. She was a member of the Native Daughters of the Golden West. Dr. and Mrs. Snedigar were members of the United Brethren Church, and contributed liberally to its benevolences.

CLARK GARRETT WELSH.—Succeeding well in life's affairs, Clark Garrett Welsh has become one of the well-known ranchers of San Joaquin County, where he has devoted himself to the agricultural and viticultural industries. He is the son of Garrett and Emma (Stuck) Welsh, and was born in Sioux City, Iowa, October 25, 1882. Garrett Welsh was a farmer and later moved to Mitchell, S. D., where he bought a section of land and raised grain, remaining there until 1904, when he came to California and bought an eighty-acre ranch on the Mokelumne River, sixty acres of which was in vineyard and the balance bottom land. The family resided on this ranch until 1909, when it was sold and the parents removed to Oakland, Cal., where they now reside. There were two sons, Clark Garrett and Raymond N.

Helen S. Snodgrass M.D.

Mamie S. Snodgrass.

The early mental training of Clark Garrett Welsh began in the grammar schools near Mitchell, S. D., and after his parents moved to San Joaquin County he attended the grammar school at Woodbridge and the Stockton high school. After his school days were over, he was employed in San Francisco until his marriage, which occurred in Stockton, May 20, 1915, and united him with Miss Beatrice Snedigar, a daughter of Dr. Willis Spencer and Mary Ann (Sollinger) Snedigar. In 1852 Grandfather Thomas F. Snedigar crossed the plains to California and settled in Stanislaus County, where he engaged in farming and stockraising, becoming a large landowner. The biography of Dr. Willis S. Snedigar appears on another page in this history. Beatrice Welsh was born in Stockton. She was reared in an atmosphere of culture and refinement, and presides gracefully over their home. Their union has been blessed with five children: Kenneth S., Donald James, Bonnie Jean, Enid Laverne, and Willis Clark. Mrs. Welsh inherited a 32-acre full-bearing vineyard from her mother, on which Mr. and Mrs. Welsh make their home. They not only operate their own place but also Grandmother Sollinger's vineyard of twenty acres adjoining, and they are meeting with deserved success. In politics, Mr. Welsh is a Republican. He is devotedly attached to San Joaquin County and deeply interested in its welfare and progress, and has found no place more attractive than the one he has chosen for his home.

JOSEPH M. CORSON.—A well-known citizen of the Lodi vicinity is Joseph M. Corson, who has had his permanent home in California since 1876. He resides with his family on his well-improved ranch of forty-five acres, five and a half miles southwest of Lodi in the Henderson school district. A New Englander by birth, having been born in Somerset County, Maine, October 19, 1859, he is a son of Lysander and Susan C. (Morrison) Corson, both parents being born and reared in Maine. Great-grandfather Morrison was a soldier in the War of 1812. Lysander Corson was a farmer in New England and reared a family of seven children: Charles; May, Mrs. F. R. Clarke, resides in Stockton; Joseph M. is the subject of this sketch; Augustus resides in Lodi; Addie, Mrs. Edding Holt, resides in Maine; Belle, Mrs. Ulysses Holt, also resides in Maine; Henry Lysander is an attorney in San Francisco. The mother passed away in Maine in 1881.

Joseph M. attended grammar school in Somerset County and finished with a year's business course after coming to Stockton. He was fifteen years of age when he began to work for himself, working two years in a sawmill, then for a year in the timber of Moosehead Lake, Maine. In 1876 he came to California where he worked on farms, then rented a farm near Linden containing 400 acres and for eighteen years he engaged in grain and stock raising to good advantage; he then removed to a ranch seven miles northwest of Lodi on the Walnut Grove Road and bought a forty-acre ranch, twenty acres of which was in vineyard and the balance used for grain. Here he farmed for seven years, when he sold it and went to the Naglee ranch northwest of Tracy and there farmed 1,000 acres to grain. He then moved to Lodi and made that his home for a time; then purchased a twenty-two acre vineyard in the Christian Colony which he held for two years and then sold and with the proceeds purchased his present ranch of forty-five acres, twenty acres of which is in vineyard; alfalfa is raised on the balance, the ranch being irrigated by a pumping plant.

The marriage of Mr. Corson occurred on October 29, 1887, in Stockton and united him with Miss Mary A. Loveland, born on her father's ranch in San Joaquin County, a daughter of D. H. and Rachel L. (McClanahan) Loveland. Her father crossed the plains to California with an ox-train in 1852, the journey consuming six months. He worked for a time in a warehouse in San Francisco and in 1854 came to the San Joaquin County where he purchased two ranches, one of 160 acres and the other of 320 acres, four miles east of Waterloo; this he farmed to grain. The mother came to California from Wisconsin a few years later and their marriage occurred in San Joaquin County and they were the parents of four children: Mrs. Corson; Willard, deceased; Mrs. Edna Benjamin; and Leta, deceased. The father lived to be seventy-four years old and the mother was forty-two when she passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Corson are the parents of one son, Cullen D. In politics Mr. Corson is not restricted by any party lines, but votes for the candidate he considers best fitted for the office. Fraternally he is a member and past master of the Valley Lodge of Masons at Linden and both he and Mrs. Corson are members of the Woodbridge Eastern Star Chapter. Mr. Corson has served as a school trustee of the Henderson district and was a deputy county assessor under Cy Moreing for the Thornton and Lafayette districts.

WILLIAM CORELL.—For the past fifty years William Corell has been a resident of San Joaquin County and has been an eyewitness and an active participant in the development and prosperity of his locality. The ranch of 200 acres, which he purchased in 1875 was in timber and underbrush; this he cleared and first farmed to grain and it is now in beautiful orchards and vineyards. He was born in Tazewell County, Va., November 5, 1839, a son of Joshua and Jane (Wynn) Corell. The father was born in 1794 and when he grew to manhood was an owner of a plantation in Virginia. There were ten children in the family, Mary Ann, Andrew Jackson, Josiah Wynn, Rebecca, John Wynn, Reese B., William, James Oscar, David Campbell, and Samuel Joshua. William, the subject of this sketch, and James Oscar are the two survivors of this large family. The father passed away in 1873.

William Corell received a public school education in his native county and grew to young manhood on his father's plantation. On March 11, 1869, in Tazewell County, he was married to Miss Emily Thompson, a native of the same county, a daughter of James and Visa (Harison) Thompson, both natives of Virginia, descendants of an old family of Virginia pioneers. Two daughters, Helen and Mary, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Corell before they left Virginia, the other three of the five children were born in San Joaquin County, James, W. O. and Harvey. In 1872 the family removed from Virginia to California and first settled at Kiles Corner, southeast of New Hope, where he farmed for three years on 160 acres; then he purchased 200 acres of raw land two miles north of Lockeford on the Elliott Road. Gradually the timber was removed and the ranch planted to grain and later was developed to orchards and vineyards. This 200 acre ranch has been equally divided among his five children. Thirteen years ago Mr. Corell moved to Lodi where he resides at 414 Forest Avenue. His son, W. O., was born at New Hope February 4, 1876, and attended the Brunswick district school north of Lockeford and has always been identified with his father in farming pursuits. Mr. Corell became a Mason in Tazewell County, Va., and is now a member of the Woodbridge Lodge; also a member of the Eastern Star and his two daughters are both past worthy matrons of the Eastern Star Lodge at Woodbridge. As the greater portion of his life has been spent in San Joaquin County, he is widely known among its citizens and is held in high regard.

WILLIAM H. JOHNSEN.—For the past thirty-nine years William H. Johnsen has made his home in the San Joaquin Valley near Tracy, and he has been a valued factor in promoting the development and progress of this district. He was born in Holstein on October 6, 1853, his parents being William A. and Catherine (Voss) Johnsen. The father died in Germany in 1914, eighty-nine years old; the mother passed away in 1892, sixty-nine years old.

On his mother's side Mr. Johnsen is related to the famous Voss family and his second cousin, Mr. Voss, of the firm of Bloom & Voss, famous ship-builders of Hamburg, was at one time head architect of Holland's navy and was doubtless the greatest ship architect of his time. Another cousin was John Voss, world traveler and lecturer, who passed away in February, 1922, while on a visit at Mr. Johnsen's home and was buried at Tracy.

In the land of his nativity, William H. Johnsen was reared and his education was acquired in the public schools there. In his twentieth year he entered the German army, spending eight months in the service of the carpenter's department. He had previously learned the carpenter's trade and he became a good workman in that line. In 1874 he sailed for America, shipping as a seaman on the American vessel Franklin, at Hamburg. From there he went to Cardiff, England, where he subsequently sailed as a ship's carpenter and seaman on the ship "Gem," and by way of Havana he made his way to New Orleans. For the next three years he was engaged on cotton vessels, sailing from New Orleans to European ports. Leaving England in the latter part of February, 1877, aboard the sailing vessel Samaria, where he served as ship's carpenter, he doubled Cape Horn and reached San Francisco July 31, 1877, and since that time he has lived in California. He made his first visit to the West Side of San Joaquin County in May, 1878, but continued to sail during the winter months, working as a carpenter in San Joaquin County in the summer time; he was the only carpenter in the Jefferson and New Jerusalem districts for several years. He now owns eighty acres of land under a good state of cultivation and his farm is well developed, constituting a valuable property.

The marriage of Mr. Johnsen occurred on April 27, 1883, and united him with Mrs. Jeanette Scott, the widow of Mungo Scott, of San Joaquin County, and a native of Nova Scotia. By this marriage there were two daughters, Annette M. is now Mrs. Frank Nicolaysen, and Marguerite C. is the wife of Lloyd Gerry of San Francisco. For many years Mr. Johnsen served as a trustee of the Jefferson school district and the cause of education finds in him a warm friend. He belongs to Summer Lodge No. 177, I. O. O. F., of Tracy and also has membership with the Tracy Encampment. He is now living retired at his ranch home near Tracy, after a busy and useful life.

PETER JOHN SMITH.—Among the many benevolent organizations of Stockton, the Board of Exempt Firemen of which Peter J. Smith has been president for more than twenty years, is doing an outstanding work. Mr. Smith became a member of the Volunteer Fire Department of Stockton in May, 1879, and at all times since has been active in its affairs. He was born in Milwaukee, Wis., January 13, 1855, a son of John Adams and Magdalena (Andres) Smith, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. His ancestors on both the paternal and maternal sides were political exiles from Alsace-Lorraine, France and they figured prominently in the early days of our Republic. Two sons were born of this union, Peter J., the subject of this sketch, and Frank Harmon, superintendent of the Flint & Marquette Railroad, Milwaukee, Wis. John A. Smith was a member of the 26th Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry during the Civil War and served three years; at the close of his three years' service he was wounded and returned home and after his recovery engaged in the tanning business at Milwaukee for many years. The parents of our subject lived to be eighty-six and eighty-five years old, respectively.

Peter J. Smith began his education in the public schools of Milwaukee, and recalls vividly the assassination of President Lincoln and the closing of the schools on that account; he also attended the Spencian College in Milwaukee. His dreams of living in the Golden State were realized in May, 1876, when he arrived in San Francisco, where he met his uncle Peter Andres, superintendent for the Simpson Lumber Company; he found employment with the same company and was soon made assistant superintendent; later he was sent to Tnolumne where he established a lumber yard for his employers.

Mr. Smith's first marriage occurred in Stockton in 1879, and united him with Miss Mary McNamara, a native of Iowa, and two children were born to them: John Adams, civil engineer and railroad surveyor, and Andrew, of the firm of Pope & Smith, undertakers of Stockton. Mrs. Smith died on September 26, 1910, and in 1915 Mr. Smith married Miss Anna Yettner, who was born in Kansas, but reared in Stockton. For many years Mr. Smith was connected with the Stockton Lumber Company and the Buell Lumber Company; he is now living retired at his comfortable residence, built in 1880 at 1104 South Center Street. Mr. Smith has always been active in the affairs of the Republican party and has served many times on the county and state central committee; for the past forty-six years he has been identified with the Knights of Pythias Lodge and is a past chancellor; he served as deputy sheriff under Walter Sibley for many years. He is a member of the South Stockton Improvement Club and has taken a very prominent part in the activities of this organization and from its workings the agitation for the new city charter came into being. His activities as president of the Board of Exempt Firemen have been productive of much good to the community where he is held in high esteem by all who know him.

GUISEPPE BATTILANA.—An influential citizen of San Joaquin County is Guiseppe Battilana, who by ceaseless toil and endeavor, has attained a marked success in business affairs, has gained the respect and confidence of men, and is recognized as one of the representative citizens of Stockton, where he has resided for the past thirty-two years. He was born on a farm in the Genoa district of Italy, November 11, 1863, his father being a farmer and also a store-keeper in a small town in Italy. Guiseppe helped his father on the farm and in the store until he was twenty-seven years of age, then started for America and came direct to Stockton, Cal., arriving with very little money in his pocket; however, he soon found work in a grocery store owned by August Gianelli, located on the corner of Center and South Streets, and after four years of clerking, he and D. Gianelli, a brother of August Gianelli, purchased the business, and the firm became known as Gianelli & Battilana and they conducted the store for five years, when Mr. Battilana sold his interest and with the proceeds bought lots at the corner of South and San Joaquin streets, where he built a store building and carried on a grocery business for eight years; he then erected two business blocks at the corner of Church and San Joaquin streets and conducted a grocery store for four years. Success attended every venture, for he was persevering and industrious and was optimistic for the future of Stockton, so invested his savings in real estate. About twelve years ago he entered the real estate and insurance business, paying particular attention to the insurance end of the business and he has built up a very profitable clientele. Mr. Battilana has bought and sold houses and lots in Stockton and is the owner of considerable valuable real estate in the city. He is a prominent member of the Italian colony of Stockton and has been an influential factor in the upbuilding of the city.

Mr. Battilana's marriage united him with Miss Lottie Gianelli, a daughter of G. Gianelli, an early resident of Stockton, now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Battilana are the parents of eight children, five of whom are now living; Zelda, is the wife of Beverly Castle; Marsel married Inez Scalati and they have one daughter; Eugene, Beatrice and Joy. Mr. Battilana is a member of the Stockton Italian Club.

JAMES A. ALLEN.—For the past thirteen years James A. Allen has been closely identified with the building interests of Stockton, and is one of the progressive and enterprising men of that city. He was born near Springfield, Mo., on July 13, 1882. His father was a building contractor and when James was fourteen years old he began to learn the carpenter trade with his father and followed his trade in the East until 1905 when he came to California. His first work was on the Spreckels Sugar Factory at Visalia; he next worked on a sawmill at Milwood Basin in the mountains of Fresno County. In 1906 he went to San Francisco shortly after the fire, where he worked for a contractor and later ran a shop where he made office fixtures and helped materially in rebuilding the stricken city. In 1909 he came to Stockton and first worked for Chappell, the contractor, on the interior finish of the Wonder Store, Denton's residence and the new concrete building at the State Farm; then he entered the employ of Chirhart & Nystad, building contractors, and with them worked on the new buildings for the Stockton high school. In 1912 he started in for himself as building contractor, making a specialty of fine homes in which line he has built up a fine reputation. He has erected residences for Frank Murray, Frank Warner, Arthur Salz; he has also done some fine work on interior finish and fronts of stores. He erected a $20,000 home for George Moore at Lodi, a $9,000 home on the Theissen ranch near Thoruton and the Percy Hodgkin ranch home. He recently designed and completed the Gall block at the corner of Main and Aurora streets at a cost of $45,000, one of Stockton's new, modern structures. He has also constructed and sold eight houses.

Mrs. Allen's maiden name was Miss Mary Lipp, a native of Indiana, and she is the parent of a daughter, by her former marriage, Lena Belle. Mr. Allen is a member of the Stockton Builders' Exchange and fraternally is a Knight of Pythias of uniform rank, the Pythian Sisters and the Woodmen of the World. Mr. Allen has recently sold his beautiful home in Tuxedo Park, and is now planning a new residence.

THOMAS F. BAXTER.—Stockton owes much of its world-celebrity to the Holt Manufacturing Company, whose efficient, popular manager is Thomas F. Baxter, the president. He was born at Brookline, Mass., on November 1, 1869, and there attended the grammar and high schools. At the age of seventeen he secured a position with a banking firm in Boston, and after three years there, he became, when twenty years of age, treasurer of the Worcester, Nashua and Rochester Railroad. Three years in railroading satisfied his ambition for that field, and then he entered the Boston and New York banking firm of Messrs. Bond & Goodwin. From the start there, he was successful, both in inspiring his superiors with confidence in him, and in satisfying the patrons of the house with whom he dealt; and it is not surprising to find that in 1900 he was made a partner in the concern, and two years later he became senior partner. The banking house is one of the largest in the East, with many branches and connections elsewhere, including some on the Pacific Coast; and Mr. Baxter could hardly have had a better introduction to his present line of enterprise.

In 1913, then, with the prestige of a successful banker, Mr. Baxter came out to Stockton, as general manager of the Holt Manufacturing Company, and on the death of Benjamin Holt in 1921, he was made president of this now widely-known company. In January, 1920, he retired from active participation in banking, two years after he became a citizen of Stockton. He is still a director of the banking firm of Bond, Goodwin & Tucker, Inc., at San Francisco, with Pacific Coast branches, being chairman of the board, and he is also a director of the Stockton Savings and Loan Bank. He is vice-president of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, and was active in all liberty bond drives; he is still especially interested in the Boy Scout movement, and donated Camp Baxter to the Boy Scouts for summer vacation purposes.

Mr. Baxter was married at Boston, in 1899, to Miss Mabel Smith, a native of Boston, by whom he has had two sons and one daughter, Thomas J., Philip N., and Ruth Baxter. Mr. Baxter belongs to the following clubs: Brookline Country Club, the Braeburn

Country Club, the Minneapolis Club, the Peoria Country Club, the Pacific Union Club, the Burlingame Country Club, the Yosemite Club of Stockton, the Stockton Golf Club, the Stockton Country Club, the Stockton Progressive Business Club, the Brookline Elks and the Boston Press Club; is a Scottish Rite Mason and Shriner, holding membership in Aahmes Temple, Oakland. He has recently been elected president of the Chamber of Commerce.

JOHN NICHOLAS SOUTHREY.—An old settler who is also a veteran of the Civil War is John N. Southrey, who was born in London, England, a son of William and Frances (Floyd) Southrey, natives of Aylesbury, England, who migrated to Quebec, where William Southrey was a letter press printer. Later they came on to St. Louis, Mo., afterwards locating in Philadelphia, Pa., and he followed his trade until the Civil War, 1861, when he enlisted in the Seventy-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, serving for about two years, when he was honorably discharged on account of physical disability. He and his wife spent their last days in Stockton in the home of our subject.

John Nicholas was the third oldest of eleven children and was reared in London until sixteen years of age, having the advantages of excellent public schools. In 1852 he came to Quebec, where he learned the carpenter's trade. Later he followed that trade in St. Louis and then in Philadelphia. In 1861 he enlisted in Company A, Third Pennsylvania Cavalry as bugler of his company. He was a musician and played both piano and violin. He was wounded in the battle of Williamsburg and was captured by the rebels at that battle and sent to Libby Prison in 1862, and thirty days later was paroled and he returned home. He remained at home, and having never been exchanged could not go back into the army, for he would not break his parole. He was finally discharged in Philadelphia, working at his trade until 1868, when he came to Stockton, engaging in contracting and building.

Mr. Southrey was married in Stockton, August 6, 1871, to Miss Mary Elizabeth Hammond, born on the Waterloo Road near Stockton, a daughter of Alden and Elizabeth (Gorham) Hammond, born in Newport, R. I., and Nantucket, respectively. In 1849 Mr. Hammond came to California and here he prospered. He resided on his ranch until his death, January 4, 1923, eighty-eight years old, his wife having passed away August 6, 1910. Mrs. Southrey is the oldest of their family of five children, four of whom are living.

Mr. and Mrs. Southrey resided in Stockton until 1874, when he purchased his present place on the Linden Road, about one-fourth mile out of Stockton. This place he has improved with a vineyard and cherry orchard. He has been a close student of fruit growing and is well posted in horticulture, serving for many years as president of the county board of horticulture, performing that duty ably and well, without a cent of remuneration until it was placed on a salary. He has been greatly interested in the cause of education and served acceptably as trustee of Fair Oaks school district many years. Mr. and Mrs. Southrey have been blessed with two children: Mary Ellen is Mrs. Durand of Searchlight, Nev.; Florence died at the age of thirty-six years on November 29, 1921, a sad blow to the family. Mr.

Southrey is a member of Morning Star Lodge of Masons, and while in Philadelphia was a member of the Odd Fellows. He is a member of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R. Politically he has always been an ardent Republican.

JOHN BOYCE.—A man of splendid attainments, who made a success of ranching, was the late John Boyce, a native of Ohio, born in Richland County, March 14, 1844. His father, Jonathan Boyce, came from England to Ohio, where he was married. Afterwards the family removed to Keokuk, Iowa. In 1859 they crossed the plains to California, and Jonathan Boyce became a prominent and extensive landowner and farmer near Woodbridge, San Joaquin County.

John Boyce, the eldest of the family of children, attended the public school in Ohio until fifteen years of age, when he accompanied his parents across the plains to California; and here he attended the local school at Woodbridge. He assisted his father on the farm, and then engaged in farming for himself. Later he purchased 320 acres from his father and began the improvements which in time made his ranch one of the show places in the county. He planted vineyards and orchards, converting it from a stubble field into a valuable fruit farm. He also owned a 120-acre farm at Escalon.

Mr. Boyce was married in Stockton, May 17, 1899, being united with Mrs. Emma (Soverign) Freeman, who was born in Kane County, Ill., a daughter of Joshua Soverign. Her father was born in Simcoe, Canada, of American parents, October 7, 1833, and when twelve years of age came to Illinois. He learned the carriage and wagon maker's trade in Plato, Ill. He married Miss Elizabeth Collins, a native of Utica, N. Y. and in 1860 crossed the plains with his wife and three children in a train of twenty-seven wagons drawn by horses, the leader of the train being Captain Clark. Arriving in California, Mr. Soverign had a wagon shop in Eldorado County and later one at Knights Landing; but after six years there he located in Woodland, where he ran the pioneer carriage and wagon shop and made his residence on Court and Fourth streets. There were five children in the family: Emma, Mrs. Boyce; Isabelle, Mrs. J. H. Martin of Fresno; Arthur, who died in Madison, Cal., in 1922; Seth, living in San Francisco, and Charles, in Sacramento. Joshua Soverign died in 1906, his widow surviving him until December 30, 1918, passing away at the age of eighty-one.

Emma Soverign was five years of age when she crossed the plains with her parents and well remembered the incidents of the trip, the fear of the Indians and the interesting occurrences and sights along the way. She was reared and educated in Yolo County. In Las Vegas, N. M., occurred her first marriage when she became the wife of John Freeman, in 1879. He was born near Mansfield, Ohio, came to California in an early day, and was a farmer near Red Bluff, Tehama County. He was stricken and died suddenly in 1896. They had six children: Charles, Mrs. Grace Gum, Mrs. Lillian Arthur, Mrs. Myrtle Turner, Ray and Mrs. Gladys Kastel, all residing in San Joaquin County.

John Boyce passed away June 26, 1913, mourned by his family and friends. He was a great reader and loved books and magazines. He had a fine library of books on all topics, but books of travel and history were his hobby and he had the issues of the Wide World Magazine from the first copy. He was a member of Duroc Lodge No. 50, K. P., and Jefferson Lodge No. 98, Odd Fellows, in Woodbridge in both of which he was very popular. Since his death, Mrs. Boyce makes her home in Lodi, surrounded by her children and many friends, who appreciate her many kindnesses and hospitality.

WILLIAM C. COLBERG.—For a number of years having been closely identified with the business interests of the city, William C. Colberg is a man of keen discrimination and judgment, and his executive ability and excellent management have brought to the Colberg Motor Boats, of which he is the head, a large degree of success. The safe policy which he inaugurated in his business career has secured to the company a patronage which makes the volume of trade transacted of considerable magnitude. He was born in New York City, January 25, 1871, a son of Charles and Katherine (Menke) Colberg, both natives of Germany. The father brought his family to California in 1875 and located in San Francisco, where he worked at his trade of cabinetmaker until 1881, when he removed to Stockton and was employed by the Houser Harvester Company, their plant being located where the Roberts & Clark Planing Mill on South Center Street now stands; later he removed to Los Angeles and again engaged in his trade. There were five children in the family: William C., Kate, Martha, Charles and Henry J. Both parents are now deceased.

William C. Colberg received his education in the schools of Stockton and when the family removed to Los Angeles he learned the cabinetmaker's trade under his father. Returning to Stockton, he secured employment with the Houser-Haines Harvester Company and while in their employ in 1898, ran his first boat to the Delta district. When he first began the transportation business N. P. Anderson was associated with Mr. Colberg in his enterprise and their first boat was a small craft that carried supplies to Bouldin Island. As the business grew, new boats were added until the company now operate and own twenty motor boats on the river. This well handled organization not only operate some of the finest launches in use in the Delta country, but own and operate an extensive, modern shipyard, where they have built boats of all descriptions and keep their own fleet in the finest of seagoing condition, ready for all emergencies, their yards covering several acres. During the past two years the Colberg Boat Works have been exceptionally busy. Orders for boats have been numerous, much new machinery has been added to the various departments, new lathes installed, and several additional boats built for the Colberg fleet, among them the Holland, a beautiful craft, sixty-four feet long, with a speed of fifteen miles, for passenger and freight service. The Colberg Boat Works have also turned out splendid boats for private interests. Among these are the John, a 110 foot twin screw freighter, the Herbert, a powerful towboat, built for the Zuckerman Merchants Transportation Company. Boats were constructed also for the Stockton Growers' Exchange, produce buyers, doing a big Delta business; the Atlantic Produce Company of Stockton and San Francisco; the I. Akaba Company, wholesalers of Stockton, and others. Mr. Colberg is in the near future contemplating the construction of a large excursion boat and several large freighters. During the recent war activities the Colberg yards did contract and emergency work for the Government. Much work is being done for the state in the way of repairs and building of water crafts. The Colberg Motor Boats operate a fleet of powerful passenger and express-freight boats and the patronage extends into all sections of the river country in and out of Stockton, general offices being established and maintained with warehouse and shipping facilities in the heart of the business section of Stockton. Regular schedules are maintained and the highest system of efficiency provided patrons of the organization. The Colberg idea throughout all departments is modern efficiency—a service of the highest class. That this objective has been attained and is maintained is best attested by the growing popularity of the Colberg boats.

The business is owned by William C. Colberg and Henry J. Colberg, the latter having been in partnership with his brother since 1912. After his graduation from the Stanford University he was employed by the Westinghouse Company in the East and later was engineer in the building of the Standard Oil Company's pipe line in California. In his fraternal affiliations he is a Mason and William C. Colberg is a member of the Stockton Lodge of Elks.

The marriage of William C. Colberg united him with Miss Rosamond Gower, a native of Fresno, Cal. Her grandfather, Sewell Gower, was a pioneer of San Joaquin County. Mr. Colberg is ever alert to opportunity, knows the entire Delta country through years of intimate personal connections, keeps pace with the demands of the people and is ever responsive to the call of modern service. His friends know him as a man of genuine worth, and entertain for him a high regard.

LUTHER J. DUBOIS.—Well and popularly known in the business circles of Stockton is the senior partner in the Parisian Dyeing and Cleaning Works of 111 East Weber Avenue, Stockton. He has practically grown up in the business, his father's family before him conducting the same kind of a business in France. Ten years ago he located in Stockton and became an employee of the Parisian Dyeing and Cleaning Works and is now sole owner of the establishment. During the ten years that he has been in business in Stockton he has been a public-spirited citizen, working for the welfare of his community. He was born in Belgium, February 4, 1889, and was a babe in arms when his parents came to America and they located in New Jersey, where he grew up and where he received his education. When a young man he removed to Independence, Kans., where he engaged in the dry cleaning business and in order to give better service to his patrons obtained data of his father's family in France, who were engaged in the same line of work, on the effective French system of cleaning and dyeing. On arriving in Stockton ten years ago he found work with the Parisian Dry Cleaners, which was established about twelve years ago by Glen Berup and B. B. Berup and J. D. Ellsworth with a capital of $300 and their first location was in a small building on North California Street with a downtown office at the present location. Eight years ago Mr. Dubois and Mr. Ellsworth purchased the interests of the Berup brothers and three years ago Mr. Dubois became sole owner of the concern and within that time the business has doubled in volume. Recently a modern cleaning and dyeing plant has been constructed on Lower Sacramento Road and Adams Street, fully equipped with the most modern machinery at a cost of $35,000, and it is among the most modern plants on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Dubois has his brother, William M., associated with him in the business as an equal partner. They are members of the National Association of Dyers and Cleaners.

The marriage of Mr. Dubois united him with Miss Aila S. Bowles, born in Livermore, Cal.; they have two sons, William and Robert, and the family reside in a beautiful residence in Tuxedo Park. Mr. Dubois belongs to the Morning Star Blue Lodge of Masons, the Eastern Star, the Ben Ali Shrine in Sacramento, the Shrine Patrol in Stockton and the Stockton Lions Club.

JOHN W. DOCKENDORFF.—Numbered among the prominent and successful real estate operators of Stockton is John W. Dockendorff, who stands today as one of the foremost representatives of his line of business. A native of Pennsylvania, he was born at Newcastle on September 6, 1876, a son of Robert and Elizabeth (Reed) Dockendorff, the former a native of Maine and the latter of Pennsylvania. The father, Robert Dockendorff, was a contractor and builder and John W. learned the trade under his father, working with him in Pennsylvania, Illinois, eastern Kansas and Indiana. When John W. was nineteen years old his father passed away and for the following two years worked at his trade with other contractors and then located in St. Louis, where he engaged in contracting and building, constructing residences and business blocks; later he settled in Garnett, Kans., and there took a course in architecture which enabled him to branch out into larger construction work and his operations covered several counties throughout Kansas, where he erected court houses, bridges, etc. He erected the waterworks plant at Girard and for a short time worked in Chicago; then he again returned to St. Louis for a time. In the spring of 1906 he located in Stockton and continued his building operations, erecting the Wilkes, Pearson-Kuntzen block on Weber Avenue, two annexes to the Moline Plow Company's block, the Flint building, the First Congregational Church at the corner of Hunter and Park streets, one of the finest church buildings in Stockton; the E. B. Stowe Creamery on Weber Avenue and a number of fine residences. In 1912 he entered the real estate business as an independent operator, dealing in farm lands and city property. Mr. Dockendorff has witnessed many radical changes in the prosperity and development of Stockton since the time when the Stockton Iron Works were located on California Street between Main Street and Weber Avenue, a coal yard stood on the present site of the Elks' building and the Weber Home addition and the Sherup addition were grain fields.

The marriage of Mr. Dockendorff occurred in St. Louis, July, 1897, and united him with Miss Ida Hanson and they are the parents of three daughters, Mildred, Mrs. G. Reed; Bertha and Gertrude. He is a member of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, the San Joaquin County Real Estate Dealers' Association and fraternally is a member of the Knights of Pythias. His interests are thoroughly identified with those of his community and at all times he is ready to lend his aid and co-operation to any movement calculated to benefit this section of the country.

LOUIS RUDOLPH BRANDT.—An industrious progressive and prosperous rancher is Louis R. Brandt, a native of Schaumburg-Lippe, Westphalia, Germany, where he was born on August 22, 1846, the son of Frederick and Phillipina (Schwertberger) Brandt—the former a schoolmaster, who taught for nearly forty years in the excellent schools of his native land. The worthy couple had thirteen children, among whom Louis was the eighth in order of birth. Those older than he were: Edward, Bertha, Henry, Otto, Charles, William and Herman; and those younger were: Julius, August, Matilda, Anna and Frederick.

Louis Brandt attended the grammar schools in his native country, and then served a three-year apprenticeship at the cabinet-making trade, after which he worked as a skilled journeyman at Burkeburg. Afterwards he worked in Berlin for eighteen months, and then in Paris for the same length of time. In 1867 he came to Indianapolis, Ind., where he remained from August to December of that year, and then he removed to Washington County, Texas, intending to settle and continue at his trade. There was so little demand for cabinet work, however, that he took up carpentering instead.

In 1868 Mr. Brandt rode across the plains on horseback, with thirty comrades, by way of Fort Scott, Fort Davis and El Paso, bringing 2500 head of cattle, most of which they sold in El Paso. They then divided and Mr. Brandt and others came on to California. Arriving in San Diego, Mr. Brandt spent just one month in helping to erect the first house built in what was called New San Diego. After that he journeyed north to San Francisco for a visit to his brother Charles, near French Camp, on the San Joaquin River, with whom he formed a partnership for shipping fruit and vegetables, an enterprise in which they continued for seven years. Then Louis Brandt bought a grain ranch of 640 acres, near Clements, in 1877, which he managed for twenty years and then sold. He next bought the ranch of 480 acres he at present owns, two miles to the northwest of Clements, where he engages in dairying. He has eighteen acres of alfalfa and plenty of grain land, and thirty head of milch-cows; and all the improvements on the place he himself has made during the past two decades.

On November 13, 1875, Mr. Brandt was married at Stockton to Miss Anna Bowman, born near the foot of Mt. Diablo, Contra Costa County, Cal., the daughter of John and Jennie Bowman. Her father was a sailor on a schooner plying along the Pacific coast. He came via Panama to California in very early days from Emden, Hanover, Germany. After continuing in coastwise traffic for years, he took up agricultural pursuits near Farmington, in San Joaquin County, and later cultivated land on Roberts Island. Nine children have blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Brandt, and they also have thirteen grandchildren. Their oldest daughter, Jennie, is Mrs. G. J. Christy, of Clements, and the mother of two children, Carroll and Darrell; Phillipina is dead; Anna is Mrs. H. J. Corell, of Acampo and has six children—Mildred Anita, Naomi Brandt, Calvin Harvey, Florence Madeline, Louis William, and Helen Jane; Matilda is deceased; Rudolph, who assists operating the home farm is married to Miss Dora Wilson and has one child, Shirley Rudolph; Louis Jr., also a rancher near Clements, married Lena Murdock, and they have four children—Harold, Marrietta, Eugene and Louis; Emma lives at home; Bernice is the wife of Jacob Wilson, an orchardist of Wheatland; and George Al-

JOHN H. CLANCY.—A well-known citizen and representative orchardist of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County is John H. Clancy, who has worked his way steadily upward from a humble financial position to one of affluence, and the visible proof of his life of industry in his farm of eighty acres, highly improved with modern equipment. A New Yorker by birth, born at Florence, April 21, 1852, he is a son of Daniel and Mary (Falvey) Clancy, the former a native of County Cork, Ireland, and the latter of Newfoundland. There were eleven children in the family; John H., Mary, Hannah, Thomas A., Rena, William, Ella, Emma, Norbert, Almira and James. In 1861 the family removed to California and settled at San Pablo. The father was accidentally killed when he was fifty-eight years old, but the mother lived to be seventy-two years old. On account of being the eldest of a large family, John H. Clancy was called upon to do manual work at an early age. He received a grammar school education, which was later supplemented by a commercial course, graduating from the Pacific Business College at San Francisco at the age of twenty. In 1875 he went to Santa Clara County and found work on a ranch near Menlo Park, where he remained for two years; then went to Santa Barbara County where he was the superintendent of the 2,000-acre ranch of Ellwood Cooper, for the next nine years. In 1888 he removed to Acampo and superintended the ranch of A. T. Hatch for a year and a half. His next move was to San Juan Capistrano where he superintended the ranch of John L. Truslow for one year; then he was induced to return to Acampo and assumed the superintendency of the 800-acre ranch of the Buck-Cory Company, devoted to orchard and vineyard, remaining with this company until 1913.

On April 21, 1886 at Goleta, Cal., Mr. Clancy was married to Miss Fannie M. Towne, a native of Petaluma, Cal., a daughter of Edward and Fannie Towne. Edward Towne was an early settler of California and engaged in farming for a livelihood. When Mrs. Clancy was six years old her parents removed to Santa Barbara and there she received her education. Mr. and Mrs. Clancy have seven sons; Ellwood, Roy, Cecil, Ellmore, Maurice, Dewey and Hull. In 1905 Mr. Clancy purchased twenty acres of land in Christian Colony adjoining the Buck ranch and the following year he added ten acres to his original holdings, and from time to time purchased more land until he now owns eighty acres, all of which is devoted to an orchard of prunes, peaches and almonds. Mr. Clancy served as constable of Acampo for ten consecutive years and was also justice of the peace for four years. Mr. Clancy supports the men and measures of the Republican party and fraternally is a member of Channel City Lodge, I. O. O. F. of Santa Barbara; also Harmony Encampment of Lodi, and Canton Ridgley of Stockton No. 131, F. & A. M. and Woodbridge Eastern Star chapter. Mrs. Clancy is a prominent member and past noble grand of the Rebekahs and past president of the Rebekah Assembly of California and also a member of the Eastern Star of Woodbridge. Recently she was the honored guest at the regular meeting of the Rainbow Past Noble Grands Association, at which time Mrs. Clancy was presented with an appropriate token of the esteem of the members of the association. She related many interesting reminiscences of her experiences gathered visiting Rebekah lodges throughout the state and also imparted many helpful ideas for the future work of the association.

CHARLES CODY.—As one of the early settlers in the now prosperous and thriving section of San Joaquin County in the vicinity of Bellota, Charles Cody well recalls the transformation which has been brought about in the intervening years, for when he first came to make his home here in 1869, grain fields stretched away on every side, which have been replaced by orchards and vineyards. Mr. Cody has not been an idle witness of the improvements, but he himself has been an active factor in bringing them about, and today is classed among the most enterprising and prosperous ranchers and poultrymen in his locality. He was born at Placerville, Cal. October 18, 1855, the eldest son of Patrick Henry and Caroline (Scott) Cody, natives of New York and Missouri, respectively. Patrick Henry Cody was apprenticed as a shoemaker at the time of the Mexican War in 1846 when he ran away to serve with General Scott until the close of the war. In 1852 the four Cody brothers left St. Louis, Mo., with ox teams to cross the plains to California. They settled at Hangtown where they spent a few months prospecting, then James and Charles Cody returned to Missouri, Thomas and Patrick Henry remaining in California.

In 1852 Patrick Henry Cody was married to Miss Caroline Scott who had accompanied her sister, Mrs. Thomas Cody, across the plains to California. Mr. Cody then removed to Carson Creek, near Clarksville, Cal., where he engaged in the stock business and became a prominent citizen of El Dorado County; he also shipped milk and dairy products to Carson City and Virginia City, Nev.; he also freighted over the mountains, much of the time driving the teams himself, until 1869. Patrick Henry and his wife were the parents of three sons and two daughters: Charles the subject of this sketch; Lillian became Mrs. T. J. Baldwin and they had three daughters and one son; Latham H. married and had one daughter and one son; James I. married and had one son, and Mary E. became Mrs. B. N. Smallfield and they have one son. In 1869 Mr. Cody located at Bellota, a station on the Calaveras River Road and here he followed farming. He passed away in 1905, his wife surviving him until 1908.

Charles Cody received his education in the district school near his home and at an early age shared the duties of the home ranch and for twenty-five years was identified with his father in the grain and stock business at Bellota. On September 11, 1904, he was married to Miss Mary Sarah Fanning, born at Bellota. They are the parents of three children. Carvell Scott, deceased in infancy; Henry, and Charles C. Mr. Cody, with his brother, conducted a store at Bellota for two years and was also assistant postmaster; later he was superintendent of the Linden Creamery for two years. Four years ago he entered the poultry business on his Bellota ranch, where he has erected a modern plant, with a capacity of 1,000 hens and he is formulating plans for extensive additions. He has served on the election board of Bellota for many years and is in close touch with every citizen who takes an active part in the affairs of public interest.

GARIBALDI BROS.—Four years ago Frank, John and Joseph Garibaldi purchased the grocery stock of Mignacio & Peirano on East Street and Waterloo Road and have since added hardware and notions. By their strict attention to business and courteous treatment of their customers, they have steadily increased their trade until they have all they can attend to properly. They are the sons of Henry and Cynthia (Cuneo) Garibaldi, both natives of Amador County, Cal., both the paternal and maternal grandparents being pioneers of the Golden State. Henry Garibaldi owned a large ranch in Amador County and he passed away there in 1921; the mother is still living. Five children were born to them: Joseph was born in 1888, Frank in 1897, and John on November 22, 1900, and there are two daughters, Jennie and Henrietta. The children attended the Milligan district school adjacent to their ranch home in Amador County and the Jackson high school. The Garibaldi brothers still own 360 acres of grain and truck gardening land and some range land of the old home place in Amador County.

Frank Garibaldi entered the service of his country during the World War in September, 1918, and was sent to Reno, Nev., where he was placed in the engineering school of the University of Nevada. Both Frank and his brother are unmarried. Joseph Garibaldi was married in Jackson to Miss Pearl Tanner and they are the parents of four children, Ethel, Hazel, Pearl and Ruth.

HOBART J. COUPER.—The progressive spirit and thorough understanding which Hobart J. Couper has displayed in connection with the development of his orchard and vineyard is bringing him most gratifying success. He was born in the rural district of Northfield, Minn., on July 24, 1867 and when but a small child was taken by his parents to Faribault County, Minn., where they settled near Blue Earth, where he grew to manhood and followed stockraising and farming for eight years. In 1897 he came to California and located in Lodi; his parents followed him in the fall of that year and spent their last years in Lodi. Mr. Couper purchased twenty acres of the Woodruff ranch in the Lafayette district west of Lodi; four acres were in young Tokay vineyard and he immediately planted twelve acres to orchard and vines (making sixteen acres under cultivation); on the remaining four acres he built his residence and other buildings and resided there until 1920, when he sold out and removed into the city of Lodi where he has an attractive residence on West Elm Street. Believing in the future prosperity of the Lafayette district, he purchased forty acres which he planted to Tokay grapes in 1901; he added ten acres in 1908, which he planted to peaches and an additional purchase of fifty acres in 1913, thirty of which he planted to Tokays and the remainder to alfalfa. All of his real estate holdings are in section eight and nine of the Lafayette district, adjacent to the city of Lodi. His development work has all been constructive and has added greatly to the progress and prosperity of the county and state.

Mr. Couper's marriage united him with Miss Anna B. Stokes, a native of Minnesota and they have had four children in their family: Henry E., their oldest son, passed away in Lodi at the age of twenty-one; Lillian, Sidney and Charles. Mr. Couper is an active member of the San Joaquin County Table Grape Growers' Association and served on its board of directors soon after its organization. He was one of the organizers of the Lodi Episcopal Church and assisted in the erection of the building and at the present time is the warden of the church.

JOHN C. TAISEN—Prominent among the successful business men of Stockton is John C. Taisen, who, with his brother, Walter H. Taisen, conducts the Taisen Dyeing and Cleaning Works at 422 North Aurora Street. They are sons of John P. and Margaret (Eisenhauer) Taisen, the former a native of Denmark and the latter of Peoria, Ill. Grandfather Adam Eisenhauer crossed the plains to California in 1860, bringing his family; he was a merchant, and was also in the express business in San Francisco, continuing in business until his death. His daughter Margaret even as a child displayed unusual capability, and when crossing the plains with her parents from Peoria, Ill., she drove a team most of the way, doing her share bravely each day to make their journey a success. Arriving in California, they stopped a short time in Sonoma but soon located in San Francisco where Margaret completed her education in the public schools and there she met and married Captain John P. Taisen, a union that proved a very happy one. She has a remarkable memory and it is indeed interesting to hear her relate the incidents of their trip across the plains as well as their early experiences in California. She now makes her home in Stockton with her children, who tenderly care for her.

Captain Taisen was a picturesque figure in early California history, especially in and around San Francisco Bay and the Stockton district. He sailed around Cape Horn into San Francisco Bay from his native land in the early '60s and became personally acquainted with prominent California pioneers in San Francisco who made history in the development of that city and in the building of railroads. Captain Taisen had followed the sea as a young man and when he arrived at San Francisco he continued in this line. He ran a fleet of scows, schooners and barges up the San Joaquin, Sacramento and Mokelumne rivers loaded with freight. These barges were run up the slough in Stockton, back of where now stands the plant of the Wagner Leather Company. There was a drawbridge over El Dorado Street in those days through which the barges passed to the unloading place. He also ran sloops and sailboats up the Mokelumne River and the station of Taisen was named for him. Captain Taisen was widely known among the seafaring men of the Bay cities and river districts and owned several racing yachts which took part in regattas on San Francisco Bay. His sons have in their possession an American flag he won with his yacht Dorenda in a race on San Francisco Bay, July 4, 1876. He was a member of the Master Mariner Society of San Francisco, and of the Druids, of San Francisco, organized in 1871, and also belonged to California Lodge No. 1, I. O. O. F., the first lodge of this order organized in the state, September 9, 1849, and helped build the Odd Fellows Building at Woodbridge.

John C. Taisen

The oldest son of the family, John C. Taisen, was born in San Francisco January 9, 1874, and there he received a good education in the public schools. Entering the employ of the Thomas Dye Works and serving an apprenticeship, he learned the trade of dyer very thoroughly so that he is today one of the leaders in that line in the state. His brother, Walter H. Taisen, had established a dyeing and cleaning works in Stockton and in November, 1904, he joined him and has since had charge of the plant and its operations, while his brother takes care of the business management. He is a director of the California Master Dyers and Cleaners Association, of which his brother is also a member, and they also are members of the National Master Dyers and Cleaners Association.

Mrs. Taisen, who was Miss Alta Little before her marriage, was born at Altaville, a daughter of Harry Little and a granddaughter of George Klinger, a pioneer of '49 who was one of the early ranchers at Linden, where he was also engaged in making saddles and harness, the first American saddles in California being made by him, his shop at that time being in Sacramento. By a former marriage Mr. Taisen has two daughters, Mrs. Mabel Cruze of San Francisco and Mrs. Margaret Zumwalt, of Portland, Ore. Mr. Taisen is a director of the Olympic baths and fraternally is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Loyal Order of Moose, Woodmen of the World. He is deeply interested in civic movements and takes pride in the progress of his adopted city. He served efficiently as park commissioner, taking a decided stand for permanent improvements.

DAN W. BIRD.—An enthusiastic advocate of the superior possibilities of Lodi and San Joaquin County, and a man whose opinions carry weight in development circles is Dan W. Bird of Lodi. He was born in Whitley County, Ky., January 21, 1855, and when he was fifteen his parents moved to Greene County, Mo., where the father engaged in farming and where Dan W. lived until he was eighteen. He received an education sufficient to enable him to obtain a certificate to teach and for ten years he followed pedagogical pursuits in the schools of Missouri. During his residence in that state he was a county school commissioner in Dade County; later he turned his attention to commercial pursuits and became a traveling salesman for a hardware concern, finally engaging in that business at Lockwood for fifteen years. His next venture was in the drygoods business at Greenfield, the county seat of Dade County. Three years later he came West and in 1901 located in Aberdeen, Wash., remaining one year, then spent 1902 in Portland, Ore., and the following year came to California and located at Lodi, where he found very satisfactory business connections as a bookkeeper and salesman for the Northern Hardware Company.

In 1904 Mr. Bird became associated with John Bewley in the real estate business and later engaged in the real estate, loan and insurance business independently under the firm name of Dan W. Bird & Company and with the passing of the years he has been very successful. He has been a witness of many changes in this section of the county; vineyards that sold in 1903 for $300 per acre now easily bring $2,000 per acre; grain land sold for $100 to $150 per acre. When he landed here Lodi had no depot, no paved streets, nor cement walks; now there are twenty miles of walks and sixteen miles of macadamized streets within the corporate limits.

Well satisfied with the general conditions in Lodi, Mr. Bird erected a modern and costly home in the city and is content to spend his remaining years in the valley he has helped to develop. Fraternally he is a Mason, holding his membership at Lockwood, Mo. Active, progressive and successful, Mr. Bird has been a most energetic worker in the county and brought to bear in all his dealings those principles of honesty and integrity that are the real fundamentals of success.

THOMAS F. SCALLY.—A familiar figure on the streets of Stockton and among the business men of that thriving city is Thomas F. Scally, more familiarly known as Tom Scally, the genial proprietor of Scally's hardware store, located at 28 North California Street. A native son of the Golden State, he was born in Stockton on December 3, 1877, a son of Patrick and Mary Josephine (Dennis) Scally, who were both natives of Ireland. His father was an early settler of Stockton, locating here in 1876, and for seven years was with Miller's Warehouse Company, then for twenty-three years was the foreman of the Farmers' Union and Milling Company. At the present time he is the proprietor of the Santa Fe Hotel located on East Taylor Street. The mother has passed away.

Thomas F. Scally began his education in the Jackson school, later entering the Brothers' College. While a young man he was determined to learn the hardware business and entered the employ of Steiney & Ladd, and remained with them for one year; then he entered the employ of the Ruhl Stove and Hardware Company. During 1904 he became a partner of William C. Schuler and Fred Tschierschky in the hardware business, being located at 526 East Main Street. In 1913 our subject sold his interest and started into business for himself where he is now located and his business has grown to successful proportions.

From 1901 to 1913, Mr. Scally made a name for himself as a pitcher in semi-professional baseball in the San Joaquin Valley; he pitched for the Stockton Athletics; also for clubs in Modesto, Livermore, Oakdale and Elk Grove. His team won the pennant in the Valley League in 1902. His marriage united him with Miss Josephine M. Hild, a native of Arcata, Humboldt County, Cal., and they are the parents of one daughter, Josephine. He is a member of the Elks, the Eagles, the Red Men, Knights of Columbus and the Y. M. I. He has always entered enthusiastically into the civic life of the community and is ever ready to put his shoulder to the wheel to help its progress and prosperity.

JOHN M. PERRY.—A worthy representative of a pioneer family is found in John M. Perry, and his prominence in financial circles and civic affairs have placed him in the front rank of the most substantial and dependable of Stockton's citizens. He was born in Stockton, San Joaquin County, December 14, 1872, a son of George and Susannah (Nightingale) Perry, the former a native of New York and the latter of Pennsylvania. George Perry came to California as early as 1852 across the plains in an ox-team train and engaged in hauling supplies to the mines with Stockton as headquarters; later he engaged in the real estate and insurance business and served his community as constable in those early pioneer days. Fraternally he belonged to the Red Men of Stockton.

Six children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Perry: Sarah Elizabeth and George Edward are deceased; John M., our subject, is the third oldest; Frank died at four years of age; Walter A. and Mrs. Stella Washington also reside in Stockton. George Perry died in 1881, his widow surviving him until 1906.

John M. attended the grammar and high schools of Stockton and while a young lad of twelve years he began working before and after school and vacations for William P. Miller, a carriage manufacturer, assisting in the office until he completed school, and then he entered the employ of the Monarch Publishing Company as bookkeeper and clerk, where he remained for four years. In 1894 he was employed by the Union Transportation Company, who were operating daily steamers between Stockton and San Francisco, as assistant to the president, and two years later was elected secretary of the company. During the time of his service with this company, there was a rate war on between the rival steamboat companies, and passengers were carried to San Francisco for ten cents and freight rates were correspondingly low. Mr. Perry worked early and late, his service covering a period of eight years; years of hard, conscientious work.

In 1903 he formed a partnership with G. S. Melone, under the firm name of Melone & Perry, in a grain and warehouse business. As early as 1900 Mr. Perry became interested in farming in the San Joaquin Delta and since that time has been instrumental in the first cultivation of many thousands of acres of virgin soil. He has been extensively engaged in raising beans, onions, potatoes, asparagus and other vegetables, as well as grain, at times cultivating as many as 3,500 acres in a season. This extensive farming is accomplished not only on his own land, but on leased properties. He is also interested in viticulture and as early as 1906 he purchased a tract of raw land near Woodbridge, which he planted to vineyard and almonds, which he operated and had the pleasure of seeing develop into one of the finest vineyards in this section. In 1918 he disposed of this property. Mr. Perry's close connection with the agricultural interests of the county has enabled him to become an authority on land valuations, soil productiveness, irrigation problems, as well as the marketing of the farm products. He is a member of the San Joaquin Farm Bureau; and since 1911 has been a director of the State Board of Agriculture, and during the years of 1915-16-17 served as president of that body, which made him an ex-officio member of the Board of Regents of the University of California. In 1907, Mr. Perry was elected a director of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce and two years later was elected its president and served two terms. This was the time of the bond issue for the improvement of the country roads, when many miles of paved roads were built in the county. He was the first president of the City Planning Commission, serving efficiently until his resignation in the summer of 1921.

The marriage of Mr. Perry, in Stockton, united him with Miss Jennie E. Hogan, a native of Lodi, a daughter of George Hogan, an early settler and farmer of the county. Mr. Perry is connected with a number of the fraternal orders of Stockton, among them being San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M.; Stockton Chapter No. 29, R. A. M.; Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; Islam Temple, A. A. O. N.

M. S., of San Francisco, and of the Sciots; he is a past noble grand of Stockton Lodge No. 11, I. O. O. F.; past president of the Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W. He is a member of three social orders, the Yosemite Club, the Stockton Golf and Country Club and the Olympic Club of San Francisco. He is a director in the Sacramento-San Joaquin chain of banks and a member of the advisory board of the Stockton branch of same, and he was formerly vice-president of the Farmers & Merchants Bank and one of the founders and president of the Morris Plan Bank since its organization. During the late war he was a member of the advisory board under Ralph P. Merritt, food administrator for California; was on the executive committee for all Liberty Loan drives in the county and was county director of War Savings Stamps all through the war, and a member of the State Council of Defense. He is a Republican.

WALTER H. TAISEN.—Belonging to the third generation of California pioneers, Walter H. Taisen of the firm of Taisen Bros., proprietors of the Taisen Dyeing & Cleaning Works, can well take pride in his birth as a native son. He was born at San Francisco March 4, 1876, the son of Capt. John P. and Margaret (Eisenhauer) Taisen, his father being a well-known figure in shipping circles around the Bay in early days, while his maternal grandfather, Adam Eisenhauer, brought his family across the plains in 1860, a detailed sketch of these worthy pioneers being given in the sketch of John C. Taisen on another page of this history.

After completing the course at the grammar schools in San Francisco, Walter H. Taisen entered the employ of the Truman, Hooker Company, agricultural implement dealers, working his way up in the advertising and sales department; later he was with the picture frame establishment of Schussler Bros. for a time, then having a desire for outdoor life he made his way to Nevada and rode the range as a cowboy for two years, enjoying the experience greatly. On returning to San Francisco he was with the Thomas Dye Works when his brother, John C. Taisen, was the dyer. Next he became salesman for the Franklin Watch Company and opened an office for them in Stockton in January, 1904. Becoming acquainted with the city, he decided it would be an excellent place to engage in business on his own account. He purchased the National Renovatory and in June took over the management. He soon determined to enlarge the business so his brother, John C. Taisen, joined him in November of that year and the Taisen Dyeing and Cleaning Works came into being. However, wishing to see more of the West, he disposed of his interest to his brother in 1911 and made a trip into Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, British Columbia, and then went to Alaska, where he pioneered on the government-owned railroad, following merchandising for a year at Anchorage. Returning to Stockton in 1916, he repurchased his half interest in the cleaning works from his brother and has since given his time to the outside and business department, while his brother has charge of the plant. The brothers are stockholders in the Samson Tire Corporation and were the first firm in Stockton to use an auto delivery wagon, now almost universal in the conduct of modern business. They now use two automobiles on their deliveries and sometimes have to press into service their private cars.

Mrs. Walter H. Taisen was Miss Myrtle Little, born at Lone, and she is a sister of Mrs. John C. Taisen. Fraternaly Mr. Taisen is a member of the Moose, the Red Men and Foresters of America. The brothers have built up a splendid business through the superior work and their territory is not confined to Stockton but extends to different parts of the state. Public spirited and progressive, they can always be counted upon to aid every worthy cause.

MELBOURNE E. ANGIER.—A splendid example of what an industrious, enterprising and optimistic man may accomplish, with the cooperation of his gifted wife, is afforded in the sterling lives and substantial accomplishments of Mr. and Mrs. Melbourne E. Angier, whose handsome homeplace, about four miles southeast of Lodi, is one of the famous show-places of the San Joaquin Valley. Mr. Angier was born at Troy, Orleans County, Vt., on March 1, 1863, the son of Silas and Alvira (Conner) Angier, both natives of Connecticut; and he grew up with one brother, Oscar, and a sister, Alberta. Up to his thirteenth year, he attended school six months in the year, and after that three months a year, until he was seventeen, living at home on his father's farm of 100 acres in Vermont.

In March, 1884, he left home for far-off California, but first went on to British Columbia, where he worked in a saw-mill for a season. He then came to San Francisco, and from there he went into the foothills, where he chopped wood, for firing the locomotives on the Placerville branch. He then drove a scraper team on Andros Island, and in February, 1885, he started working for C. W. Norton on his ranch adjoining the place he now owns. He labored there until 1890, and then rented forty acres of land from Judge Norton—the tract being vineyard, which he helped set out in 1888 and was one of the first commercial vineyards of this locality.

The first ranch Mr. Angier bought was comprised of twenty acres, in the Live Oaks school district of San Joaquin County, open land, which he commenced to improve. He added to his holdings from time to time, until now he owns about 530 acres of the finest land in San Joaquin County. This includes 140 acres between Manteca and Ripon, in which he has a valuable equity. That is one of the finest vineyards for bearing Tokay grapes, and is amply supplied with water from the South San Joaquin Irrigation district ditch. The balance, 390 acres is in the Live Oak section, 280 acres still unimproved open land. He has 160 acres planted to shipping plums of different varieties, forty acres in Alicante Bouchet. He has on his home ranch two pumping plants, and he cultivates his ranch with both tractor and horsepower. He is a member of the Masonic Lodge of Lodi, and belongs to the Royal Arch Chapter and Commandery at Stockton, the Ben Ali Temple at San Francisco, Sacramento, and Stockton Lodge of Elks. In national politics he is a Republican.

At Lodi, on August 8, 1901, Mr. Angier was married to Miss Antoinette Hale, a native of St. John's, Clinton County, Mich.; and the daughter of John R. and Dora (Miles) Hale. When she was eight and one-half years old, her father migrated to California with his family, and settled at Lodi, and he became an extensive fruit grower, located three miles southeast of Lockeford, where he lived for about three years. There she attended the Lockeford school; but her father moved to Lodi and went into the fruit trade, and so she attended the Salem school, and rounded out her studies at the Stockton Business College. Her father lived to be ninety years old, and her mother attained the fine age of seventy, and they both died in Lodi. She was one of a family of three children, and she also had a half-brother and a half or step-sister, as follows: John R. Hale, Bessie, (who died at the age of five,) and Frank Orland and his sister, Emma. Six children have blessed this happy union: Harold, taking an agricultural course at U. C. in Berkeley, Addine, Ellsworth, Newell, Antoniette and Lemoise. Mr. Angier very willingly accords to his able and devoted wife much of the credit for their common success and progress, by which they have become among the most useful, influential and representative people in the Valley; for in the course of their ranch-development, there were times when his wife had to cook for as many as fifty farmhands, and that, too, while they were living in a small home. Prior to her marriage, Mrs. Angier was a gifted woman in dramatic expression, and for years conducted a class in that difficult subject. It is pleasant to learn, therefore, that this hard-working and very deserving couple, who so long bore the burden and the heat of the day, erected at a cost of some $30,000, one of the very finest country residences in all the San Joaquin Valley, and which is furnished with the delicate taste for which Mrs. Angier has long been known.

JOHN PERROTT.—San Joaquin County has been very fortunate in the character and ability of the men who have assumed to guide her financial institutions, prominent among whom may be rated John Perrott. He was born near Woodbridge, on the home ranch, in 1858, the son of John and Ann (Greives) Perrott, the former a native of England, and the latter of Massachusetts, and so grew up under the best of California conditions. As a pioneer of the sturdiest type, his father crossed the great plains with ox teams in the famous Argonaut year of 1849, and mined in Calaveras County. He returned East and then came back to California in 1853, locating on a ranch near Woodbridge, where he followed farming. Six children are still living to honor this worthy couple, James R., John, Isabel, Frank, Fred and Emma Perrott.

John Perrott attended the district school as well as the Woodbridge Academy, and after that he took up farming on the home ranch. In 1889, he entered public life, when he became a deputy county assessor with headquarters at the Court House. Later he served under Del Keagle in the County Auditor's office, and his next public work was as assistant to County Treasurer Nate Nevin. Later he returned to the assessor's office, and following this service he became connected with the office of auditor and recorder under the former combined office, and after that he became the chief deputy auditor when the office of auditor was made separate and distinct from the recorder's office. On resigning his chief deputyship to accept the position vacated by W. H. Lorenz, cashier of the First National Bank of Lodi, the Stockton Record of Stockton said: "Few men, if any, in San Joaquin County are better known than Mr. Perrott, who has been in public life at intervals since 1889, for throughout his public service he has been a painstaking, conscientious public servant, kindly and courteous, ever willing to be of assistance to anyone having business with his office, and a host of friends throughout San Joaquin County will wish him every success and happiness in his new field, and will congratulate the institution which has secured his services."

At San Francisco, in 1900, Mr. Perrott was married to Miss Clara Duff, a native of California, and a talented, charming lady who also has her wide circle of friends. Mr. and Mrs. Perrott own a ranch of eighty acres two and one-half miles west of Lodi, which he has developed into a fine vineyard, having fifty acres of producing vines. Mr. Perrott belongs to Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., and to the Royal Arch, No. 28, of Stockton.

CARL W. OSER.—Forty-five years' association with one firm is the record of Carl W. Oser and one in which he can take just pride, and now as superintendent of the shipping and grading department of the Wagner Leather Company, he occupies a position among its most trusted and faithful employees. Since the pioneer days of '49, the name of Oser has been well represented in Stockton through our subject and his father, Alois Oser. The latter was born in Baden, Germany, of a family of high rank in that duchy. At the time of the gold excitement in California he was residing in Missouri, having come to the United States several years previous to this, and with one companion he started out to cross the plains on foot in 1849. They finally reached the coast, but at the cost of untold hardships and privations. While going over Truckee Pass, in the Sierra Nevadas, their food gave out and they were obliged to subsist on such foodstuffs as had been discarded by others who were westward bound.

When they reached Stockton, Mr. Oser was much broken in health, but as soon as he had regained his strength he carried out his plans to go to the mines. He went to Nevada County and mined at Grass Valley and Red Dog for a time, but as his hopes of fortune were not fulfilled, he returned to Stockton. He had thoroughly mastered the jeweler's trade before he left his native land and in 1858 he opened a jewelry store at Stockton under the name of Schmidt and Oser, their store being located on the Levee between Center and El Dorado streets. In 1869 Mr. Oser passed away, leaving a wife and five children. Before her marriage Mrs. Oser was Johanna Meunter, the daughter of a pioneer, Wm. Muentner, who came via Cape Horn in 1849, his wife and children following the same route in 1850; on their arrival they found that the father was dead; he was a victim of the cholera, and was buried on the present site of the City Hall on Market Street, San Francisco.

After her husband's death, Mrs. Oser reared her family of five children in the little home left her standing on Fremont between Hunter and El Dorado, giving them the best education she could in the local school. She now makes her home with our subject and at eighty-two years of age is hale and hearty and well posted on the early days. The second oldest of family, Carl W. Oser, was born February 17, 1862, in Stockton, and attended the local public schools. Meantime, from a boy he worked at odd times assisting his mother, and at the age of fifteen he became associated with the Wagner Leather Company, learning all the branches of the business. In 1890 he was made foreman of the tannery and now he is superintendent of the shipping and grading department. His well-merited promotions from time to time are a substantial acknowledgement of the esteem in which he is held by the heads of the company and his long retention is in itself a high recommendation of his faithful services.

On March 1, 1892, Mr. Oser was married to Miss Emma Stoetzer, and one daughter, Lois, was born to this marriage. Mrs. Oser's father, Henry E. Stoetzer, was born near Stuttgart, Germany, February 12, 1830, the son of Casper Stoetzer, a manufacturer, who followed his son to the United States and died here. Henry E. Stoetzer was interested in railroad work for some time before coming to California in 1860, by way of the Horn. Going directly to Calaveras County he was successfully engaged in mining at Copperopolis for two years, when, in 1862, he returned to Germany and was there married to Miss Bernardine Buehner, in Steinbach-Hallenberg. With his bride Mr. Stoetzer returned to the United States via Panama, but instead of resuming mining, he opened up a restaurant in Copperopolis, the first to be established there. In 1865 Mr. Stoetzer came to Stockton and continued in the same business under the name of the Copperopolis Restaurant, at the corner of Main and Sutter streets, and this was successful from the start. In 1867, however, a fire destroyed the building and Mr. Stoetzer then opened the St. Charles Hotel. In 1870 he purchased another hotel at San Joaquin and Weber streets, first known as the Fairplay, afterwards changed to the San Joaquin Hotel. On this site, in 1909, his two daughters erected a three-story building for stores and offices, greatly improving the property. In his various undertakings Mr. Stoetzer accumulated a competency which enabled him to live retired for twenty years before his death, which occurred June 6, 1900, his wife surviving him until October 30, 1907. They were the parents of four children: Louis F., in Washington, D. C.; Antone E., deceased; Mrs. Emma Oser and Mrs. Lena Berg.

Mr. Oser has many interesting memories of the early days of Stockton, as he has seen it grow from a small town to a beautiful, prosperous city, and he can well remember shooting ducks on Banner Island, opposite Stockton. He was a member of the old Volunteer Fire Department for many years, has occupied all the chairs of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and of the Knights of Pythias, and is a member of the Elks. Mr. Oser has always taken an active interest in public affairs and from 1884 to 1886 was constable of Stockton. In 1911 he was elected to the city council of Stockton, the only Republican on the council, receiving the majority of votes in the second ward over a very strong opponent. He served for two and a half years, up to the time the city adopted its new charter providing for a commission form of government. He was the instigator and carried through the measure to build steel sheds on the wharf to take place of the old wooden ones. This did away with having a fire boat and in the end was a means of great saving. He met with much opposition in this measure, but carried it through. A man of steadfast convictions, he can always be found on the side of the community's best interests and stands high in its esteem. The family make their home in a beautiful residence at 607 North Lincoln Street.

WILLIAM B. WOLLAM.—A resident of San Joaquin County since 1875, where he has made an enviable record for honesty and integrity of purpose is William B. Wollam, a Civil War Veteran, who was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, June 6, 1836. His father, Ratchford Duffield Wollam, who was born in Beaver County, Pa., was a contractor. He married Sarah Watson, a native of London, England, who came with her parents to America, having suffered shipwreck on the trip across the Atlantic. In 1856 the elder Wollam removed to St. Paul, where he followed contracting and building, erecting some of the large business houses of those days. The mother died in St. Paul, but the father returned to New York, where he spent his last days. They had a family of four sons and four daughters and all four of the sons, John, Ford, Harry and William B., served in the Civil War.

As a boy William B. lived in Cincinnati and in Jackson, Ohio, where he received a good education in the local schools. At the age of seventeen he left home to earn his own livelihood, going to Chillicothe, Ohio, where he learned the carpenter's trade. In 1856 he removed to St. Paul, Minn., working at his trade until 1858, and then returned to Chillicothe, Ohio. In 1862 Mr. Wollam volunteered in Company D, 117th Ohio Volunteer Infantry, serving as quartermaster-sergeant until he was transferred to Company D, First Ohio Heavy Artillery, in which he served until he was honorably discharged in Knoxville, Tenn., on July 25, 1865.

On December 25, 1865, at Chillicothe, Ohio, Mr. Wollam was married to Miss Annie I. McDougal, born in that place, after which he engaged in contracting and building in that city until 1875; then he came to California, locating in Stockton, and here he followed contracting off and on for twenty-three years, establishing a successful reputation for building tanks and tank houses. In 1886 he purchased a lot on North Argonaut Street and built the residence in which he still resides. He was bereaved of his faithful wife August 27, 1918, a woman much loved and esteemed by all who knew her. She was a devout Methodist and active in the W. R. C. They were blessed with eight children: Rowena, Mrs. F. E. Goodell of Stockton; Georgia, Mrs. W. J. Sharp, presides over her father's home; her two sons served in the World War; Lloyd-Keyes Sharp served ten months overseas, and Norman Sharp served in the U. S. N. R. F. and was stationed at Goat Island; Ratchford D. lives in Oakland; he served as a lieutenant in the Spanish-American War in the Sixth California Regiment; Delia C. is the wife of Blendin Campbell, a celebrated artist in New York City; Percy V. lives at Pt. Angeles, Wash.; William also served in the Spanish-American War and while a member of the 17th U. S. Regulars, serving in the Philippines with others of his command they were ambushed and he was killed; Dell J. also lives in Pt. Angeles, Wash.; Mrs. Ada Forester is deceased.

In 1878 Mr. Wollam became a member of the Volunteer Fire Department in Stockton as a member of Weber Engine Company No. 1; he served many years, the last three years as foreman of the company, up until the pay department was instituted. He is now vice-president of the Exempt Firemen.

Mr. Wollam has been an Odd Fellow since 1867, being a member of Truth Lodge, Stockton, as well as the Encampment. He is a member of Rawlins

Post No. 23, G. A. R., department of California and Nevada, and of Rawlins Chapter, W. R. C., and Roosevelt Circle, Ladies of the G. A. R. He is also a member of the Daughters of Veterans, an honorary member of the Spanish-American War Veterans. He attends the Department Encampments as well as many of the National Encampments. Mr. Wollam's life is guided by the Golden Rule, to which he strictly adheres.

ROBERT F. NAGEL.—A pioneer vineyardist and horticulturist who resides on his highly improved home place three miles east of Stockton, is Robert F. Nagel. For the past thirty years Mr. Nagel has been located on his present ranch and has overcome all the obstacles that beset the path of the early settler in any community, and his fine vineyard and orchard home is a demonstration of his industry. He was born in East Prussia, Germany, December 16, 1860, a son of Charles Nagel, born in the same province, and the mother, Augusta (Prengel) Nagel, was born in a neighboring province. Charles Nagel was a farmer in his native province in Germany and lost his life while commanding field artillery in the battle of Getzburg, leaving a large estate to his surviving family. Subsequently Mrs. Nagel married Frederick Rhodes, who proved to be a good father to the orphan boys. Mrs. Nagel died in 1872 and Mr. Rhodes died in 1876.

Robert F. Nagel completed the grammar and gymnasium courses in Germany, then entered the Agricultural College at Spitzengen near Koenigsburg, where he spent two years. In 1880 he was appointed superintendent of the Gerken estate in Germany, where he had full charge of the sheep, cattle and dairy business carried on, on this extensive estate; however, after two years he gave up the position to seek a home in a new world. In 1882 he left his native country for America, and arriving in New York he boarded the S. S. Rujia, a coastwise vessel, for Weatherford, Texas, arriving in September, 1882. For the first few months he had a job of plowing for cotton and corn planters, which paid him eight dollars per month. He remained in Texas until 1885, when he started for California, arriving in Stockton September 2, 1885.

On August 20, 1884, at Weatherford, Texas, Mr. Nagel was married to Augusta Goodstight, also a native of Germany, who came to Texas when a young girl; her mother, Anna Goodstight, came four years later and now makes her home with Mr. Nagel and she is ninety-two years of age. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Nagel: Truda died at the age of five years; Louise died at the age of six months; Amalia, a graduate of Elmwood school, presides over her father's home; Anna L. is the widow of Capt. William D. Hatch, who lost his life in the service of his country in 1918 while in France with the A. E. F. They have one son, William. Subsequently Mrs. Hatch married Lieut.-Commander E. M. Patch, and they have one son, Ernest Arthur, and at present are stationed at Pearl Harbor, Hawaiian Islands; Margaret, Mrs. Andrew J. Smith, has one son, Robert. Mr. Smith is the cashier of the First National Bank at Vallejo, Cal. Mrs. Nagel passed away at the family home in 1914.

On arriving at Stockton, Mr. Nagel stopped with his friend, Mr. Stetsinger, proprietor of the San Joaquin Hotel, and soon after his arrival found a job with Ott & Daniels, manufacturers of chicory, where he worked for one year; then he entered the employ of L. U. Shippee, the owner of a large ranch near French Camp, and he soon became assistant foreman, remaining in that position until 1890; he then became foreman for Charles Haas on his ranch three miles east of Stockton, consisting of 240 acres, then a grain field. In 1890 Mr. Nagel planted his first vineyard of five acres and later he purchased six and one-quarter acres more, which he has developed to orchard and vineyard, among the model places in the county. The discouragements, accompanying the planting of the first vineyard, were met with true heroism as he was forced to plant four different times. On one occasion when he set out 3,000 well-rooted vines he found within a few days that the squirrels and rabbits had destroyed them all excepting fifteen vines; however, he continued to plant vines until he succeeded in getting a fine stand. He also has a fine orchard of almonds. In the winter of 1922-23 Mr. Nagel, with his daughter Amalia, made a trip to the Hawaiian Islands on a visit to his son-in-law and daughter, Commander and Mrs. E. M. Patch, at Pearl Harbor, taking in many side trips, among them a trip to Hilo. Mr. Nagel received his U. S. citizenship papers and cast his first ballot for the Republican party in Stockton in 1886. For fifteen years he served as trustee of the Elmwood school and in many other ways has been a progressive citizen.

WILLIAM G. MICKE.—One of the most successful grape growers in Central California, William G. Micke is a native of Missouri, where he was born on April 25, 1874, and reared on a farm until he was twenty-one years of age. In 1895 he removed to Nebraska where he engaged in farming for two years; then he came to California, settling at Florin, Sacramento County, with a capital of three dollars, but plenty of grit and determination. He worked as a ranch hand for a year, then rented the place and ran it for four years, and here he received his first knowledge of grape culture. In 1902 he removed to Lodi and one year was occupied by ranch work and in 1903, in partnership with John Merrill, he purchased the old race track ranch on Cherokee Lane and Lodi Avenue consisting of fifty-six acres, planting his half to Tokay grapes, while Mr. Merrill planted his to peaches. While his vines were growing he bought small crops of fruit and grapes and shipped them through the local packing house. In 1908 he purchased the interest of Mr. Merrill and erected a packing and shipping shed; in 1918 he bought twenty-five acres more adjoining on the south and in 1919 twenty-four acres adjoining on the north, making a total of 105 acres. He ships his products under the "Race Track Brand," which has become a very popular brand in the eastern markets; he also buys Tokays in the open market, and in 1920 shipped 100 carloads from his packing house, receiving $1,000 per acre for his grapes. Recently Mr. Micke purchased the Simpson grain ranch two and a half miles south of Lodi, consisting of 465 acres, 400 acres of which is now planted to grapes; the purchase price of the property was $140,000.

The marriage of Mr. Micke united him with Miss Julia Harrison, a daughter of Bruce Harrison, one of the early mayors of Stockton. It is not an usual thing for a man arriving in a new county with such limited capital to make such a pronounced financial success as has Mr. Micke, but his financial independence is not his only success, for he has been able, by his thorough and expert knowledge of viticulture, to lead many growers to a fuller understanding of grape culture, thereby becoming a most potent factor in the development of the Lodi section.

MRS. SUSAN A. BAWDEN.—All over the United States we find women coming more and more to the front in the different professions and various lines of business endeavor, showing their ability to make a success and to embrace every opportunity afforded them. Such a woman is Mrs. Susan A. Bawden, proprietor of Hale & Bawden, funeral directors of Lodi, one of San Joaquin County's most capable women, and she has a wide acquaintance throughout the northern part of the county, where her business ability is recognized and appreciated. A native daughter of San Joaquin County, she was born on the old home ranch at Acampo, her parents being Peter F. and Susan (O'Mally) Jahant, the latter a native of Ireland. The father, who was born in France, came to San Joaquin County in the early '50s and took up 160 acres of Government land near Acampo, later acquiring another 160 acres near by. This was in its primitive state at that time, covered with brush and trees, but Mr. Jahant persevered in clearing it, building the family home there and raising grain on the virgin soil. He became a large landowner and a wealthy man, and was one of the pioneer fruit growers of the county, setting out one of the earliest vineyards for commercial purposes, and as an experienced agriculturist he exerted a splendid influence for good in the community. Well known throughout this part of the country from his years of association with its development, he was an honored member of the San Joaquin County Pioneer Society. He passed away in 1913, Mrs. Jahant's death having occurred several years before.

Two of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Jahant are deceased and the following are living: Mrs. Frances Murphy, of Lodi; George, a rancher of Acampo; Mrs. Martha Eddleman, of Lodi; Mrs. Eliza Gehan, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Carrie Pattee, of Acampo; and Mrs. Susan A. Bawden, of this review. Reared on her father's ranch at Acampo, she has spent all her life in this community, receiving a good education in the public schools. In 1907, at her parents' home at Acampo she was married to Thomas Leslie Bawden, who was born in Amador County, where he was reared and educated. As a young man he came to Sacramento and learned undertaking with the firm of Miller & Skelton.

After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Bawden resided in San Francisco, where Mr. Bawden was manager for the Truman Undertaking Company for six years. While living there Mrs. Bawden became interested in the study of embalming and having received a legacy from her father she concluded to engage in the business of funeral director, in which she had become deeply interested. In 1912 she came to Lodi and purchased an interest in the business of Mr. Hale, the firm becoming Hale & Bawden, and in 1914 she acquired Mr. Hale's interest. Mr. Bawden from the outset entered heartily into the management of the business, his experience making him one of the most capable men in his line in the county. He is prominent in the Masons, Elks, Knights of Pythias and Native Sons of the Golden West.

In 1914 Mrs. Bawden purchased the large residence of A. J. Larson on West Elm Street, and this they have converted into modern funeral parlors, with reception room, offices, chapel, etc., with garages for their automobile equipment, and they have their residence quarters on the second floor. In 1917 Mrs. Bawden acquired the Lodi Cemetery from Leon Villinger and has greatly improved it, beautifying the lawns with plants and flowers, and seeing that it is well kept. Seeing the need for larger grounds she purchased ten acres adjoining on the east, devoted to a vineyard, which she superintends, but this will eventually become a part of the cemetery. Although very busy in her profession, she finds time to participate in the progressive life of the community, and she is a popular member of the Woman's Club, the Eastern Star, the Rebekahs, the Native Daughters of the Golden West, having been president of the Lodi Parlor, and is a member of the California Funeral Directors' Association. Mr. and Mrs. Bawden have one daughter, Marjorie Alice, a student in the public schools.

G. PEIRANO.—One of the successful, honored and respected citizens of San Joaquin County was the late G. Peirano, who located in the county in an early day, when pioneer conditions existed in this part of the state, the work of improvement and progress having been scarcely begun. He was born in Genoa, Italy, August 18, 1860, and at the age of fifteen left home and native land for America, arriving in San Francisco early in the year of 1875, a stranger in a strange land with very little capital, but a willingness to do whatever he could for a livelihood. His first job was working on the streets of San Francisco and as soon as he had saved enough money he went to the mines in Amador County, where he spent a few months in placer mining, but soon gave it up for the more substantial occupation of farming and year by year he steadily gained a place for himself until he was classed among the most progressive citizens of his community.

Mr. Peirano was married in Stockton to Miss Maria Severi, also a native of Genoa, Italy, born October 15, 1868. She came to California with her six sisters in 1882, all residing in this county, Mrs. Peirano being the eldest. Mr. Peirano was a friend of Captain Weber and farmed for him on his land near Stockton; he also farmed for many years on Rough and Ready and Union islands, raising large quantities of wheat, barley, onions and potatoes, and through his dealings in these products he became financially independent; at one time he owned and conducted a store in Stockton. Mr. Peirano owned and developed a ranch on the Calaveras River about five miles from Stockton on which he pioneered in a vineyard and orchard, later he sold this place to good advantage. In 1906 he moved to the Linden Road, where he bought twenty acres of the John White tract and was the first man to set out a vineyard in this district, as previous to this time only grain had been raised. At the present time the country presents a view of a continuous orchard.

Mr. Peirano passed away October 3, 1915, survived by his wife and five children, namely: Mary A. resides at home; Joseph is married and has one child and is a wholesale commission merchant in San Francisco; he is a prominent member of the Elks; Angelo resides on the home ranch; Adolph and Frank F. In 1916 the two sons, Adolph and Frank F., purchased a twenty-acre piece adjoining the home place, where they have developed a fine vineyard. Both young men being industrious and with a thorough knowledge of viticulture, are succeeding well in their undertakings. Fraternally both are members of Pohono Tribe No. 93, Independent Order of Red Men.

CHARLES JORY.—Among the large manufacturing enterprises which have constituted important factors in the attainment of Stockton's present prestige along industrial lines is that conducted by the firm of Charles Jory & Sons, manufacturers of agricultural implements and tools. Since its inception the undertaking has enjoyed a remarkably rapid growth, due in large measure to the business ability and untiring efforts of its founder, Charles Jory, who is numbered among Stockton's foremost citizens. He was born near Salem, Ore., September 15, 1858, son of Hugh Stephens Jory, pioneer of 1847 in Oregon, who crossed the plains with oxcams. He was born in New Brunswick, and with his parents left Illinois for the trip to Oregon. He went to Illinois and married in 1857 Mary Budd, born in that state. Both died in Salem, Ore., the former in 1912 and latter in 1915, leaving two sons, Charles and Oliver, the latter in Salem. Charles acquired his education in the public schools of that vicinity, afterward serving an apprenticeship to the blacksmith's trade. In 1877 he made a trip to California, working for a year in Marysville, at the end of which time he returned to Salem, where he followed his trade until 1885. On February 22 of that year he located at Stockton, securing employment with Tom Powell and S. L. Gaines, who were building a few harvesters on South Aurora Street. Later he became connected with the Holt Manufacturing Company, working in their blacksmith shop, of which he was afterward made foreman, and he continued to fill that position until 1903, when he embarked in business independently. He opened a small shop at the corner of Aurora and Lafayette streets which he equipped with the necessary machinery, and began the manufacture of agricultural implements and tools. The venture proved a success from the start and he secured the contract to build the Fresno Scrapers for the Holt Manufacturing Company, making many thousands of these, while he also manufactured machinists' and blacksmiths' tools. The superiority of his workmanship secured for him a large trade and in 1918 he was obliged to seek larger quarters, purchasing an entire block at Aurora and Taylor Streets, on which he erected a modern factory building 100x100 feet in dimensions, installing therein the most improved equipment. He purchased from the Holt Company all the stock on hand used in making the Fresno Scraper, which he now manufactures independently, and he also makes plow moulds, in addition to which he has the contract for the construction of the Throop Land Leveller for the H. C. Shaw Company of Stockton. An indication of the growth of his business is shown in the fact that when he established the enterprise he employed three helpers, while he now has from fifteen to twenty assistants. He was a close friend of Benjamin F. Holt, with whom he worked in the experimental shops of the company, and is an expert mechanic, while he also possesses marked creative ability and has invented some minor appliances which are still used in the Holt shops. When he founded his present business in 1903, Mr. Jory's two sons, Charles T. and William S., became partners in the concern, which is conducted under the style of Charles Jory & Sons. They are natives of Oregon and are also skilled mechanics, both having been employed in the Holt shops, where they gained valuable experience, and they have aided materially in promoting the success of the undertaking. Charles T. married Miss Ora Goodrich and William S. married Frances McKenzie and both reside in Stockton.

At Salem, Ore., in 1881 Mr. Jory married Miss Sarah E. Patterson, who was a native of Iowa, and her demise occurred on May 11, 1913. Mr. Jory is a man of resolute purpose and marked strength of character and his life record is one in which notable business ability and the recognition and utilization of opportunity are well balanced forces. His enterprise and initiative spirit have found expression in the development of a large industrial enterprise and he has been active in pushing forward the wheels of progress in Stockton.

MARION TALMAI NOYES.—More than sixty years have passed, bringing with them wonderful progress and development, since Marion Talmai Noyes took up his residence in San Joaquin County. A native of Indiana, he was born on March 24, 1838, the son of Talmai and Nancy Brimhall (Noyes), both natives of that state. Grandfather Noyes was of English descent, while the maternal grandmother, Lydia Gatteau before her marriage, was descended from French forebears. When Marion Noyes was two and a half years old the family removed to Illinois and settled in McHenry County and there he received his education in the log cabin school and Marengo Collegiate Institute. When he was eighteen years old, he took up his residence at Marengo, Ill.

In 1859 Mr. Noyes came to California, spending the first year in Placer County, then came to San Joaquin County, and for a year worked on the Dodge-Cole place of 1700 acres. In the fall of 1860 he went to the Puget Sound country and was engaged in lumbering; later with Pope & Talbot. Returning to California he became interested in the copper mines at Campo Seco. In 1866 he returned to the Dodge ranch, and in partnership with Mr. Dodge, engaged in the breeding of fine horses. Later Mr. Noyes bought a ranch of ninety-five acres between Waterloo and the Calaveras River, which he farmed to grain; an old house which was built on the place in the '50s is still standing. For many years he made this his home, meeting with good success in his ranching operations.

On December 7, 1870, Mr. Noyes was married to Miss Phoebe C. Willoughby, a native of Connecticut, the family tracing their ancestry back to Lord Willoughby of England. In 1905 Mrs. Noyes passed away and three years later, in 1908, Mr. Noyes was united in marriage with Miss Clara Dodge, the daughter of that honored pioneer, Jonathan Holt Dodge, whose biography appears on another page of this history. Mr. Noyes is a member of the Grange and the Union League Club, and a Republican in politics. He has always worked faithfully for the best interests of the community, and has through the years served as county central committeeman and delegate to county and state conventions. In 1858 he was privileged to hear the great Lincoln-Douglas debate at Freeport, Ill., a never-to-be-forgotten incident, and one that has influenced his whole life.

CLAUDE WHITNEY VAN GELDER.—The nursery interests of San Joaquin County are well represented by Claude Whitney Van Gelder, whose home and business is located near Acampo, Cal., and who has been a resident of California since he was two years old. His has been a successful career, and one which indicates the opportunities that are open to young men of determination, laudable ambition and diligence. A native of Morley, Mich., he was born November 14, 1877, a son of Morris and Eva Yeckley (Whitney) Van Gelder. The father was a descendant of the Dutch and English pioneer settlers of New York state; and the mother was a daughter of Columbus Whitney of Seneca Castle, N. Y., who was also an early settler in that state. Morris Van Gelder grew up on his father's farm in Michigan. His natural bent was toward agriculture and horticulture, and when he grew to manhood he acquired his own farm in Michigan and engaged in farming pursuits until 1879, when he sold out and came to California, settling first at Sacramento. He established himself in the nursery business in Sacramento, in 1883, and when he moved to San Joaquin County he bought property near Acampo, in 1887, and there he continued his nursery business, being a pioneer in that industry. He became a prominent figure in the development and improvement of his locality, devoting his energies untiringly to his business, with the result that he wrought a wonderful transformation in his property, which became productive and valuable. Both parents are now deceased.

Claude Whitney Van Gelder began his education in the district school near his home, and then entered the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge, from which institution he was duly graduated. As soon as he was old enough to handle the plow, he took his place in the fields and assisted in their cultivation from the time of early spring planting until after crops were harvested in the late autumn. He grew up in the nursery business, so that he was enabled to follow in his father's footsteps in a thorough and systematic manner.

On October 25, 1902, at Oakland, occurred the marriage of Mr. Van Gelder and Miss Charlotte Maud Jones, daughter of Augustus St. Clair and Bertha (Hadlich) Jones, natives of Australia and California, respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Van Gelder are the parents of three children: Homer Whitney, Edith Constance, and Dorothy Elizabeth. Mr. Van Gelder is, in his political views and adherence, a staunch Republican, and has always been active in support of the party. His fraternal relations are with the Lions Club, the Mokelumne Club of Lodi, and just recently, with the Woodbridge Lodge of Masons. His labors and influence have been effective in promoting the educational, social and material advancement of his community, and he has taken a good citizen's part in the improvements that mean steady advancement.

WILLIAM L. YOUNG.—One of San Joaquin County's progressive and enterprising ranchers, William L. Young was born in Hopkins County, Ky., on June 24, 1859. The Young family were pioneers of the state of Kentucky where Grandfather Young owned a plantation. William L. Young was able to attend the public schools until he was twelve years of age when his father died and his mother removed to California with her three children, William, Burris and Helen, arriving in December of 1871, after the experience of being snowbound in Cheyenne for some time. The family made their home with Mrs. M. E. Bryant, a sister of Mrs. Young, a California pioneer of 1852 who settled about four miles northeast of Lockford on the north side of the river. Mrs. Young later married James L. Christian, a farmer north of Staples Ferry on the Mokelumne River, who owned a half-section of land. Mr. Christian passed away in 1885 and the mother survived him until 1888. William L. Young continued to run the home place until four years after his mother's demise, when he purchased 120 acres one mile south of Lockford known as the old Brakeman place. This ranch was devoted to grain, but Mr. Young set forty acres to grapes, it being the second vineyard in this district. About 1915 he pulled them all out, much to his regret today. This ranch has a well 365 feet deep, which is sufficient for irrigating the entire ranch.

On July 4, 1888, occurred the marriage of Mr. Young, which united him with Miss Caroline Louise Sheridan, a daughter of Frank and Isabella (Epperly) Sheridan, and they are the parents of three children: J. Lilbern is married and has one son, J. Lilbern Jr., and resides in Stockton where he is employed with the Union Oil Company; Burris E.; Anita is now Mrs. Clyde Hamsher and she has two children, Mil-lard Clyde, and De Ette Caroline. Mr. Young has served his locality as school trustee for ten years. Politically he is a Democrat and for the past thirty-five years has been identified with the Odd Fellows and is past grand of Progressive Lodge; both he and his wife are members of the Rebekahs and Mrs. Young is a past noble grand of that organization.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM S. MOSS.—It is interesting to chronicle the life histories of the pioneers who, leaving their comfortable homes and surroundings in the East, braved the dangers of the overland trip across the plains, not afraid to push their way across the trackless waste infested with savage Indians to aid in the conquering of the wilds of the Pacific Coast. Such a pioneer was the late Capt. William S. Moss, large landowner and prominent publisher. Of Scotch descent, he was born in Virginia, where his parents, Zela and Janet (Glassecock) Moss, were planters.

In the early days Captain Moss came out to Illinois, where he became a large landowner and also owned several boats that plied on the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, making his headquarters at Peoria, Ill. Later he was one of the builders of the Peoria & Oquawka Railroad, which became a part of the Burlington System. In 1856 he made his first trip to California, where he spent some time, and becoming very favorably impressed with the country he concluded that as soon as he could dispose of his holdings satisfactorily he would return and make California his home. Having large interests in the vicinity of Peoria it was several years before he could bring his plans to a successful issue, but when this was accomplished he started across the plains with his family in an ox-team train, bringing with him a herd of several hundred cattle and horses. Arriving here he purchased about 10,000 acres in San Joaquin County, near Stockton, which holdings he later naturally increased. At the same time he became interested in San Francisco property and had a fine country residence at San Leandro, Alameda County. He founded the San Francisco Examiner, then an evening paper, which forged to the front and was the leading Democratic paper in Northern California, selecting for his editor Philip A. Roach, famous as an editorial writer on the Coast. Captain Moss was very prominent in Democratic politics and continued as proprietor of the Examiner until he sold it to Senator George Hearst.

The first marriage of Captain Moss united him with Miss Mary Choate who passed away in Illinois, the mother of three children: Mrs. Anna W. Jack, Mrs. Henrietta W. Griffith and Louis Moss, all now deceased. On the occasion of his second marriage, which occurred at Peoria, Ill., he was united with Miss Caroline Buttrick, a native of Massachusetts, whose parents, John and Sarah (Farrar) Buttrick, were early settlers of Peoria, Ill. Miss Buttrick attended a Ladies' Seminary in Massachusetts and was a woman of education and culture who left the imprint of her noble character on every community where she resided. She passed away at their San Leandro home leaving four children: Mrs. Mary Percival, William S. and Bradley, both deceased, and Mrs. Caroline McDougald. Captain Moss was a prominent Mason, being a Knight Templar and a Shriner. Removing to San Joaquin County, he took up his residence on his ranch near Stockton, and there he passed away on March 28, 1883, his death closing the career of one of the most interesting figures in early day history, a man loved and honored by all who knew him.

HENRY MITSCHER.—Among the early settlers of Stockton who has contributed much towards the comfort and convenience of the residents of San Joaquin Valley is Henry Mitscher, a pioneer cabinet-maker and woodworker. He was born in New York City, on May 22, 1855, but was reared and educated in Hillsboro, Wis., whither his parents had moved. His father was a cabinetmaker and under him Henry learned his trade. In the year of 1876 he removed to California and located in Stockton, but not finding just the location he desired he went to San Francisco where he remained for a year and a half; then back to Stockton where he has since resided. He found employment with the Fickett Furniture Company and later with Martin Schneider; and about thirty years ago went into business for himself with R. P. Morrell as a partner, their shop being on San Joaquin Street opposite the old pavilion, where they did job work and furniture making. In 1900 the partnership was dissolved and Mr. Mitscher opened a shop at his present place of business, 446 North Aurora Street; there he built a two-story business block, which was destroyed by fire in 1919; he then erected his present shop where he does repair and cabinet work.

His uncle, Christian Mitscher, a native of Germany, was a pioneer of California who settled in Stockton in 1852. A cooper by trade, he was employed for many years in the City Brewery in Stockton. He was one of the founders of the Turnverein and acquired considerable real estate in the city of Stockton and throughout the county. He passed away in 1903 at the home of our subject.

The marriage of Mr. Mitscher united him with Miss Annie Banz, a native of Baltimore, Md., and they are the parents of six children: Oscar resides in San Francisco; Eda is at home; Mrs. Rose Frankie resides in Stockton; Herman in San Francisco; Ralph in Stockton; and May is at home. Mr. Mit-schler lives in the house that he built over forty years ago and all his children were born in this house. He is a supporter of all measures that have for their goal the advancement of the locality in which he has resided so many years.

HENRY J. KUECHLER.—Standing high among the leading business men of Stockton, Henry J. Kuechler is the founder of the jewelry firm of H. J. Kuechler & Son, whose establishment is one of the finest and most complete in California. Mr. Kuechler is a native of Switzerland and there he received an excellent education, graduating from college, and thereby he was required to serve but one year in the army. When this term of service was completed he came to the United States, arriving in Stockton, Cal., in the early '80s. He had learned the trade of watchmaker and engraver in Europe and soon after coming to California he engaged in this line of business at Pleasanton, Alameda County, Cal. and then went to Yakima, Wash., where he engaged in business for seven years. While there Mr. Kuechler served as mayor of Yakima.

Returning to Stockton, Mr. Kuechler formed a partnership in the jewelry business with Mr. Blau and with a capital of only $400 opened a store on Main street, near El Dorado. He soon bought out his partner and removed to a larger building, and for the past fifteen years he has been located at Main and California streets, where he has a complete stock, catering to the lovers of the beautiful and artistic in jewelry. In addition to his busy life as a merchant, he is an inventor of ability, and has invented a regulating system for watches which is now used by the Waltham Watch Company.

Mr. Kuechler's marriage united him with Miss Jennie Nissen, a native of the Isle of Silt, Germany, and two sons were born to them, F. Will, a member of the firm, and Norman, who passed away at the age of eighteen. In addition to his business Mr. Kuechler has mining interests in the Mother Lode. He belongs to the Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World, the Masons, Elks and Knights of Pythias.

F. Will Kuechler attended the old Lafayette and Franklin schools in Stockton and when fifteen he started to learn the trade of watchmaker and engraver with his father. Later he went to Germany and attended a private school there for a year and a half, and he also spent some time in San Francisco with the leading jewelry firms there, attaining great proficiency in the art of engraving. Some years ago he entered into partnership with his father, the firm becoming H. J. Kuechler & Son. His marriage united him with Miss Jermaine Stewart, a native of Stockton and a graduate of the Stockton high school and the University of California. He is a member of Delta Lodge of Masons and Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Oakland, and has taken both the York and Scottish Rite degrees. He also belongs to the Native Sons of the Golden West, the Anteros Club, the Red Men, the Rotary Club and the Stockton Golf and Country Club. He has always been active in athletics and was a member of the old Stockton Athletic Club and now participates in Y. M. C. A. athletics and is president of The Lambs fraternity of Stockton.

PETER JOENS.—No country has furnished as large a population to the citizenship of San Joaquin County, as has Germany, for many of the residents of this portion of the state were either born in that country or are descended from German ancestry. To the former class belongs Peter Joens, a prominent resident of Victor, San Joaquin County. He was born in Holstein, Germany, on January 6, 1855, a son of John and Christina (Sievers) Joens. His father, John Joens, was a farmer in his native land and was the parent of a large family, of which Peter, our subject, was the youngest.

Peter Joens received his education in the grammar schools of his native country and spent the early part of his life working on his father's farm. After he was seventeen years old, he worked for wages on farms throughout the immediate vicinity of his home place until he was twenty years old, when he determined to come to America. He settled in Dubuque, Iowa, and worked as a farm hand for three years; then removed to Howard County, Iowa, and rented a half-section of land near Elma, which he farmed for the next fourteen years. He then purchased eighty acres in that vicinity, which he added to from time to time until he had 280 acres. This property he farmed until 1902, when he came to Lodi, Cal.

Shortly after arriving in California, Mr. Joens disposed of his Iowa holdings and with the proceeds purchased 156 acres, a grain stubble field at that time, with no improvements upon it, paying $67 an acre for it. This ranch is now among the finest and most productive vineyards in the county, the varieties being Tokay, Zinfandel, and Emperor grapes. Twelve years ago, Mr. Joens began laying concrete pipe for irrigating purposes, and now the entire acreage is piped. He has three pumping plants on the ranch; an eight-inch pump driven by a forty-horsepower motor, a five-inch pump with a twenty-horsepower motor, and a smaller pump driven by a five-horsepower motor, which pumps the water direct from the Mokelumne River, the water then being piped to all parts of his ranch. Twenty years ago, he built a splendid and conveniently arranged house, as well as other farm buildings necessary to carry on a vineyard ranch. Mr. Joens was one of the organizers of the Farmers & Merchants Bank in Lodi, and has been a member of its board of directors ever since; and he is second vice-president of the board.

On April 13, 1882, in Howard County, Iowa, Mr. Joens was united in marriage with Miss Louisa Reckner, a native of Iowa, and a daughter of Charles and Louisa Reckner. Her father, Charles Reckner, was a farmer in Iowa, who settled there about sixty years ago. Mrs. Joens is the sixth child in a family of eight children, and received her education in the grammar schools of Iowa. They are the parents of ten children. Mary is Mrs. Mans of Victor and has two children, Lavern and June; Charles H. Joens resides in Victor, and has one son, Charles Jr.; Amelia is Mrs. J. R. Hale of Lodi, and is the mother of four children, Louisa, Miles, Aloy, and Melbourn; Viola is Mrs. Ernil Beckman of Victor and has two children, Ellsworth and Effiedine; Bertha, is Mrs. Due of Atlanta, Cal., and has two children, George and Floyd; John J. resides in Lodi; Esther has been making a tour of the United States during the last year; Jennie resides in San Francisco; Alfred and Eleanor are at home with their parents. In politics, Mr. Joens is a Republican, and fraternally, he is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. He and his family are members of the German Lutheran Church in Lodi.

THOMAS B. McINTOSH.—This name is well known throughout the Lodi section of San Joaquin County, for here Thomas B. McIntosh has passed his entire life, and here his parents lived since pioneer days of California. He was born in Lodi, September 6, 1870, a son of E. J. McIntosh and his wife, Malancy (Miner) McIntosh, pioneers of the county who engaged in farming pursuits in the Lafayette school district of San Joaquin County. In this district school Thomas B. began his education and later he took a course in the Ramsey & Trask Business College in Stockton. At the age of fifteen years he was thrown on his own resources and found work on various ranches throughout the district. He was industrious and resolute, and these qualities enabled him to overcome the difficulties and obstacles in his path, and soon he rented 160 acres, known as the Earl ranch, which he conducted for a number of years, working his way steadily to the plane of affluence.

On October 2, 1894, in Stockton, Mr. McIntosh was united in marriage with Mrs. Katherine (McPherson) Alamado, a widow and the mother of one daughter, Bertha Alamado, now Mrs. Ralph Clark, who now resides on the seventeen-acre ranch Mr. McIntosh formerly owned. Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh are the parents of one daughter, Ila. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh bought seventeen acres on the Sargent Road adding to it until they had 130 acres. He has set thirty acres to vineyard and 100 acres to almonds. Eight years ago, Mr. McIntosh moved to Lodi from their ranch home and for three and a half years was employed by the Union Oil Company, and then worked three years for the Shell Oil Company. Mr. McIntosh has recently completed a fine, modern home at 118 West Oak Street and a modern apartment house located on the corner of Oak and Church streets, which he completed in 1922; this apartment house consists of ten modern apartments. In politics, Mr. McIntosh is a Republican and fraternally is affiliated with the Woodbridge lodge of Masons and with his wife and daughter is a member of the Woodbridge Eastern Star Chapter.

GUSTAV ALBERT.—For a quarter of a century Gustav Albert has been a resident of San Joaquin County and during those years has in many ways been identified with the best interests of his locality, being a successful vineyardist and a citizen of public spirit. One of California's sons, he was born on the Alameda, San Jose, on October 4, 1867, a son of Adam and Caroline (Wolfrom) Albert. His parents came to California in 1852 and his father became a partner of Mr. Eberhard in the founding of the Eberhard Tanning Company at Santa Clara; his parents later moved to San Francisco and Gustav, the only child, attended the Lincoln grammar school. Several years after his father died his mother married again to Henry F. Stolzenwald and they were the parents of seven children: William, deceased; Henry, Fred, George, Caroline, Ida and Minerva. Mrs. Stolzenwald died at the age of seventy-five on April 25, 1921. When he was sixteen years old, Gustav Albert learned the dyeing and cleaning business in his mother's establishment in San Francisco and later owned his own business there for five years.

The marriage of Mr. Albert occurred at Berkeley on May 10, 1892, and united him with Miss Elizabeth Taynton, also a native of California, born at Clayton, a daughter of William and Susan (Derickson) Taynton. Her father was a native of London, England, and came to California in 1848. He was a seafaring man and was in the U. S. Navy on the frigate Ohio. He was in three battles in the Mexican War and was at Monterey, Mexico, with Commodore Stockton when the American flag was raised. He remained in the service of the U. S. and enlisted in the army with Col. Stephenson and Col. Stoneman to quell the Modoc Indian uprising; later he located at Clayton and took up a quarter section of Government land and in 1884 removed to Berkeley where he worked for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Mrs. Albert's mother came to California via Panama on the Golden Gate, the first steamer plying between Panama and San Francisco. They were the parents of twelve children: Charles, Broderick, Mrs. Elizabeth Albert, Phoebe, Alfred, William, Thomas, Walter, Emma, Carrie, Herbert and Bessie, all living but Phoebe, William, Thomas and Carrie. Mrs. Albert's Great-grandfather Davis fought in the Revolutionary War.

In 1899 Mr. Albert sold his business in San Francisco and removed to Lodi and bought the ten-acre tract of land, where he now lives, one mile south of Lodi on Kettleman Lane. This was unimproved land and Mr. Albert set out every tree and constructed the buildings, and engaged in general truck farming, but later set out a vineyard and installed a pumping system. In politics he is a Republican and he and his wife are members of the Christadelphian Society of San Francisco.

JOHN DUNCAN McDOUGALD.—A man of affairs who aided materially in the development of the natural resources of San Joaquin County was the late John Duncan McDougald, who was born in Ontario, Canada, and descended from an old and prominent family of Scotland. His boyhood was spent on the Canadian farm, where he learned the habits of industry and good management that stood him in such good stead after his arrival in this great fertile valley, where in his optimism he grasped the great opportunity offered to men who applied themselves energetically to the task of producing. In his native place he received a good education in the local schools, but he was not content to remain within the narrow confines of the rigorous East so decided to migrate to California to investigate the opportunities offered in the new country of which he had read such glowing accounts, so he came hither and was an early settler of the San Joaquin Valley, his place of location being near the city of Stockton, where he became a very successful rancher. Aside from becoming a large landowner he did much work in the early days as a contractor, being well qualified in this line, the Modesto Irrigation District being one of the large contracts he handled. He was a very active and enterprising man and could always be counted upon to give his aid and influence to all matters that had for their aim the development and building up of this locality.

The marriage of Mr. McDougald, which occurred in Stockton, united him with Miss Caroline Moss, a daughter of Capt. William S. Moss, a pioneer of California who became a large landowner in San Joaquin County and who was the founder of the San Francisco Examiner, his biography appearing on another page of this history. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Mc-Dougald was blessed with the birth of a daughter, Carolyn, who is the wife of Paul E. Weston of Stockton. Mr. McDougald was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labors to the fullest for he was called by death, November 17, 1898, and when he passed away, the city of Stockton and San Joaquin County lost one of its most loved and honored citizens. He was a popular member of the Odd Fellows and the Elks.

Since her husband's death Mrs. McDougald has continued to reside in Stockton where she has a comfortable residence at the corner of North and Center streets, the lawn and gardens being beautified with many trees and shrubs, among them several majestic oaks, splendid symmetrical specimens which lend an artistic setting to the residence. From her home she looks after large interests left by her husband as well as those she inherited from the estate of her father, the late Capt. Wm. S. Moss. She is deeply interested in horticulture and is also a lover of fine stock and enjoys the great outdoors. Like her husband, she is very enterprising and progressive and is keenly desirous of doing all she can to help build up this fertile section of the garden spot of the world.

JOHN A. MERZ.—A native of Germany, where he was born on April 6, 1867, spending a part of his boyhood there, John A. Merz, long one of the most loyal and optimistic citizens of his adopted land, has the distinction of being the first man in Stockton to commercialize automobile painting, with the result that he enjoyed the most profitable patronage of any expert hereabouts in his line. His father, Baltis Merz, who had married Miss Rosie Ammon, brought his family from Germany in 1879 and arrived at Stockton on May 15, 1880; and it was fortunate for our subject that he had already participated in good educational advantages, for the circumstances of the family were such, after they reached here and Mr. Merz died, that John had to go to work for a living, although only thirteen years of age. From 1880 to 1886, he served at the carriage-painter's trade in the service of M. P. Henderson, while from 1886 to 1890 he was one of the best painters at the William P. Miller Carriage Factory.

In 1890, however, Mr. Merz decided to strike out for himself, and so he built a small shop at 732 East Lafayette Street, commencing with one helper to establish a thoroughly dependable carriage and wagon-painting service. Eight years went by, however, before he painted an automobile for the first time, and this was the well-known machine of C. A. Towne, one of the first owners in Stockton of a motor-car. From that first, luckily successful, experience grew an important business, to carry on which he employed regularly at least seven hands. He also rebuilt and enlarged his shop and his satisfied customers came from all over San Joaquin County, and even occasionally from beyond the county's limits. Taking plenty of time and never allowing even the customer to hurry him beyond what is advisable for the patron's interests, Mr. Merz found it easy enough to produce work of the highest quality, so that it was never difficult to live up to a guarantee. He disposed of his business in February, 1921, and is now living retired.

At Stockton Mr. Merz was married to Miss Magdalena Adams, a native daughter and a member of a well-known Stockton pioneer family. By a former marriage with Miss Lulu Ellen Heeney, daughter of a pioneer, he is the father of one daughter, Lulu Ellen, now the wife of Harry Saner of Stockton. Mr. Merz is popular as a fraternity man, belonging to San Joaquin Lodge No. 19, F. & A. M., Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F., also to the Encampment, and he has made all chairs of the Red Men, and also all the chairs of the Woodmen of the World. For twelve years he was a member of Company A, N. G. C. He was one of the original stockholders of the Union Safe Deposit Bank, and since 1917 has been a member of the board of directors.

THOMAS EUGENE CAMPBELL.—A worthy native son of San Joaquin County who is intensely interested in the development of the state and in preserving its history and pioneer landmarks is Thomas Eugene Campbell, who was born at Farmington, October 18, 1861. He is a son of John A. and Sivilla A. (Funk) Campbell, natives of Ohio and Des Moines, Iowa, respectively. John Campbell was reared in Ohio and Wisconsin until he resolved to migrate to California. When still a young man he joined an ox-team train and crossed the plains in the early fifties. He rode ahead and did the scouting for the train and selected their camping places. On one of his trips he ran across an Indian on horseback and in the fight he killed the Indian and thus saved his train from massacre, for the Indian would have brought the men of the tribe and annihilated the train. On his arrival in California he located in San Joaquin County, and he became a prominent business man at Farmington where he kept the hotel, was postmaster and justice of the peace, as well as road overseer and school trustee, and was a man of progressive ideas and much influence. His death occurred May 21, 1873. The mother came to California across the plains in 1850 in an ox-team train with her parents to San Joaquin County. She married a second time to Milo M. Church, a substantial farmer in Farmington. She passed away in Stockton March 20, 1920.

Thomas Eugene was the second oldest of seven children born to John Campbell and his wife, and spent his boyhood at Farmington where he received a good education in the public schools. From a boy he was interested in mechanics and machinery was his delight, and as early as 1878 he worked on the old centennial combined harvester built by Dave Young and John Hoult, and in 1883 he worked for H. A. Benton, who built a harvester in 1883-84. Mr. Campbell followed farming in partnership with his brother John on the Schofield ranch at Twenty Six Mile; then they ran the Vanscrotan ranch near Westley, after which he dissolved partnership with his brother and engaged in the general blacksmith business at Farmington and at the same time served as constable, deputy sheriff and deputy assessor. He helped H. A. Benton finish the building of his combined harvester in 1889 and then entered the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company, continuing with them for a period of ten years as expert, traveling for them over the Northwest. Resigning his position in 1900 he removed to San Leandro where he was with the Best Manufacturing Company, continuing with them for eight years as expert machinist, traveling eight seasons throughout California, Oregon and Washington. During the earthquake and fire he was a member of the Relief Committee in Alameda County and was also deputy marshal of San Leandro. In 1908 he returned to Stockton and had charge of building the playgrounds in this city when he was solicited by Benjamin Holt to again enter their employ and he then spent two years with them. As early as 1893 he went to Washington for the Holts and put up the first side hill harvester and saw it make a success. From 1917 to 1919 he traveled as an expert for the Harris Manufacturing Company of Stockton. In 1919 he resigned to engage in contracting and building, but later quit to accept the position of sales manager for the Tractor Exchange in this city, a position for which his years of experience well fitted him. In January, 1923, with a partner, P. De Leon, he purchased the business and continued as manager.

Mr. Campbell is a prominent Odd Fellow and a member of Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F., Stockton, since 1882, of which he is past grand. He is also a member of the Encampment and the Oakland Canton. He served as drill master of the degree team in San Leandro in 1905. He is a member of Rainbow Lodge of Rebekahs in Stockton, as well as the Knights of Pythias, in which he has served as keeper of the records and seals.

Always a leader in local matters in social and civil life, he is a believer in protection for Americans so is naturally a strong Republican and always takes an active part in county, state and national politics. He has been a member of the County Republican Central Committee and its executive committee in which he is very prominent and influential. He is well and favorably known over the whole county and has done herculean work for his friends in gaining their political ambition.

WILLIS N. MERRILL.—A native son of California who fittingly represents the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County, Willis N. Merrill was born in Woodfords, Alpine County, May 5, 1869, a son of Willis Perry Merrill, a native of Westport, N. Y. The mother passed away when Willis N. was a young lad and his father subsequently married Miss Mary O'Neil.

During the gold excitement in California, Willis P. Merrill came West and settled at Dogtown where he engaged in mining for a number of years; then he owned a train of pack mules which carried provisions across the mountains from California to Nevada. He finally settled in Alpine County where he opened a general merchandise store at Woodfords, which he conducted until his death at the age of sixty-three years, survived by his widow, who conducts the store left her by her husband. Willis N. is the eldest in a family of four children. Edith died in New York state in 1918; Frank died in infancy; Rnby is Mrs. George Hays and resides at Stockton. Two children were born to the second marriage: Grant and Bernice.

Willis N. Merrill attended the district school at Woodfords and later went to Placerville where he was graduated from the high school, after which he assisted his father in the store. His marriage united him with Miss Jessie Wilkerson, a native of Colusa, Cal., a daughter of R. T. and Charlotte Wilkerson, natives of Missouri and Indiana, respectively; the father coming to California from Missouri in boyhood. After his marriage Mr. Merrill removed to Reno, Nev., where he and Mr. Wilkerson purchased 400 acres of land, which he successfully farmed for nine years. He then sold out and came back to California and settled on a quarter section of land in the Henderson district of San Joaquin County, southwest of Lodi, on the Stockton-Woodbridge Road, where he engaged in general farming. A year ago forty acres was sold, which leaves 120 acres of land. He has a fine stand of alfalfa on twenty-five acres and has thirteen acres in young vineyard, his ranch being irrigated from the Stockton-Mokelumne River irrigation ditch. Mr. and Mrs. Merrill are the parents of eight children: Roy makes his home with his parents; Verla is in training to be a nurse in San Francisco; Rita and Shirley are in high school in Lodi; Mildred; Winifred; Harold and Harriet. In politics Mr. Merrill votes with the Republican party and fraternally is affiliated with the I. O. O. F. Lodge at Lodi and he has served for three years on the board of school trustees of Henderson district.

J. EDWIN McFARLAND.—Wide-awake, foreseeing and resolute, J. Edwin McFarland has become the popular constable of Stockton, and one of the most efficient of San Joaquin County's public officials. He was born on a farm in Floyd County, Ky., on August 8, 1869, and when only fourteen years of age, ran away from home. He went to Texas and there, for years, rode the range as a cowboy, gathering a very valuable experience, particularly among men; and then, for years, he followed agricultural pursuits in the Lone Star State. Wherever he went, whatever he did, he developed all of his natural faculties, gaining a reputation for sincerity and thoroughness.

In 1900, he came to Stockton, and for a while he was with the Southern Pacific Railroad as assistant foreman in construction work, and later became foreman. In 1905 he was in the employ of the Central California Traction Company, and helped to build that company's road; and later he was conductor on the line. In 1912 he carried on a mercantile business, having a store at the corner of Oak and El Dorado streets. He was appointed deputy sheriff of San Joaquin County under Sheriff W. H. Riecks; elected constable in 1915, and in 1919 was re-elected; and although a Democrat, boasted of hearty support within the Republican ranks as well. In the discharge of his duties, Constable McFarland has never known or shown partisanship, and therefore could not fail to have given entire satisfaction.

In Stockton, Mr. McFarland was married to Mrs. Mary Horton, a native of Germany, who had one daughter, Clara. Mr. McFarland belongs to the Morning Star Lodge, No. 68, F. & A. M., and is a member of the Scottish Rite bodies in Stockton, and is a member of Truth Lodge, No. 55, I. O. O. F., Parker Encampment and Rainbow Rebekah Lodge.

GEORGE F. MATTESICH.—Among the grain farmers of pronounced success in San Joaquin County, is George F. Mattesich, a native son of the county, who lives on his ranch three miles south of Farmington; he also operates the 500 acre ranch owned by M. Harrold south of Farmington, besides leasing other grain land aggregating 2,500 acres. He was born at Stockton, Cal., September 21, 1881, a son of Dominic and Catherine (Connors) Mattesich, natives of Austria and Ireland, respectively. Both parents were pioneers of the county and were active in its advancement and development for over a third of a century. There were three children in the family, George F. being the eldest; John Edward; and Lena, Mrs.

Charles A. Seward, who lives in the home place. Dominic Mattesich passed away in May, 1901, and Mrs. Mattesich resides on the home ranch southeast of Farmington. George F. Mattesich attended school in the neighborhood of his home and early in life was instructed in the grain industry and since he was nineteen years old has had his share of the work of the home ranch.

On December 25, 1910, at Lodi, Mr. Mattesich was married to Miss Mae Madelaine Milloglav, a native of Stockton, and a daughter of Peter and Laura Alice (Johnson) Milloglav, vineyardists residing two miles east of Lodi. Two children have blessed the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mattesich, Glen and Lloyd, students in the Wheatland school. Dominic Mattesich had one of the first great Holt harvesters drawn by 32 horses, in 1891 in partnership with Peter Dorland, who was another large grain farmer. Mr. Mattesich died in 1901, and after his death the two sons George F. and John, continued grain farming. Together they bought another combined harvester and this time operated in partnership for twelve years. The two brothers then dissolved partnership.

Mr. Mattesich started with two eight-horse teams and accomplished extensive grain raising until 1913, when he bought his first Holt caterpillar, paying $4,000 for it, and since that time he has sold off his horses and now conducts his work wholly with power machinery. He owns a half interest in 160 acres of land five miles southeast of Colledgeville which was purchased sixteen years ago in partnership with his brother John; he also owns a ten-acre vineyard on the eighty-acre farm near Farmington where he resides. He is an advocate of good roads and the best of educational facilities and is considered an enterprising and progressive citizen of his locality.

MRS. CATHERINE MATTESICH.—Among the old settlers of San Joaquin County who has witnessed a remarkable transformation and who has borne her share of the privations and responsibilities of a pioneer existence, is Mrs. Catherine Mattesich, who has resided on her present ranch since 1884. This ranch consists of 160 acres of fine wheat land, located about six miles southeast of Farmington, San Joaquin County, where for thirty-eight years abundant crops of wheat and barley have been raised. Before her marriage, Mrs. Mattesich was Miss Catherine Connors, a native of County Galway, Ireland, born March 14, 1852, the youngest daughter of Matthias and Nellie (Kenyon) Connors, natives also of the same county in Ireland. Eight children accompanied the parents to America in 1864 where they located at Boston, Mass. Matthias Connors had no small task to support his large family, as he had no trade and had to depend on the wages of a common laborer; however, all of them received a good education. He passed away in Boston, Mass., honored and respected by all who knew him, at the ripe old age of eighty-four. Catherine Connors received a good education in the public schools of Boston and in 1878 when she had completed her schooling, she started for California on an emigrant train, her fare being $228. She came direct to Stockton, as her cousins by the name of McCarthy lived there.

On December 9, 1880, Miss Connors was married to Dominic Mattesich, a native of Austria. At sixteen years of age he became a sailor and thus spent four years, arriving in San Francisco when he was twenty years old, where he stopped with an uncle, who persuaded him to give up the sailor's life and remain in California. He purchased a tract of land south of Stockton and engaged in farming pursuits for four years, when he transferred his operations to the present quarter-section of land some six miles southeast of Farmington, where he raised wheat and barley. This ranch was formerly a sheep range and when Mr. and Mrs. Mattesich took up their residence here, there was only a small cabin on the place and the wonderful development and improvement in this section has been witnessed by Mrs. Mattesich, in which she has borne her part unflinchingly. Mr. Mattesich passed away in May, 1901, survived by his wife and three children: George F.; John Edward; Lena is the wife of Charles A. Seward, and they have one son, Charles, Jr. Mr. Seward conducts the home ranch for Mrs. Mattesich. John E. Mattesich is a trustee of the Wheatland district school, where he received most of his education. Since taking up her residence near Farmington, Mrs. Mattesich has been an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She is a woman of many fine attributes of both mind and heart and is highly esteemed in the neighborhood where she has passed so many active years.

HARWELL WOODROW COALE.—A distinguished attorney in San Joaquin County, Harwell Woodrow Coale is a native of Alabama, where he was born at Mobile, on March 28, 1873, a son of Skipwith and Mary Elizabeth (Harwell) Coale, natives respectively of Maryland and Alabama. The Coale family is a very old family in Maryland, and were members of the Society of Friends. Grandfather Samuel Coale married Miss Susanna Woodrow, who also comes of a very old family of Maryland. They removed to Alabama where Samuel Coale became an extensive planter and reared a large family, of whom Skipwith was the eldest; he enlisted and served four years in the Confederate Army during the Civil War, holding an officer's commission, and was wounded. After his return home he became a cotton factor in Mobile, Ala., until his marriage to Miss Harwell, when they located at Choctaw Corner, Clarke County, where he was a merchant until his death in 1883; his wife survived him just one week. This worthy couple had four children, of whom Harwell W. is the eldest. He was reared at Choctaw Corner until he was left an orphan at the age of ten years, then with the other three children he went to live with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Coale, on their plantation and there, under private instruction was prepared for college. When sixteen years of age he entered the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala., where he was graduated with his degree of B. S. in the class of 1892, having pursued excellent courses in chemistry, pharmacy, and commercial law. He engaged in the drug business in Thomasville, Ala., for two years, then was with the Brunswick Drug Company of New Orleans, traveling throughout eastern Texas for his territory, with his headquarters in his home town of Beaumont; then he moved to Palestine, Texas, and traveled for the Houston Drug Company, continuing with them for a period of four years.

In 1904, he came to California as a salesman for the Coffin, Reddington Drug Company of San Francisco; and since 1905 he has made his home in Stockton. He took up the study of law in his spare time, and in 1917 he was admitted to practice at the bar in California; and he has since been practicing law in

H. W. Coakley

Stockton with offices in the Wilhoit Building. Much of his practice is in the Federal Courts, and he has been very successful.

Mr. Coale married Miss Helen Josephine Booth, one of the fair daughters of Alabama, born in Clarke County, and they have two sons, Dr. Harwell Woodrow Coale, who has offices in the Farmers and Merchants Bank Building, Stockton, and Julian L. Coale, a well known musician in San Francisco. Mr. Coale is a member of Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M., Stockton, and of San Francisco Consistory No. 1, 32nd degree Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of Aahmes Temple A. A. O. N. M. S., Oakland, and with his wife is a member of Stockton Chapter No. 373, O. E. S. He is a charter member of Palestine Lodge No. 873, B. P. O. E., at Palestine, Texas, and is a member of the San Joaquin County, State and American Bar associations. Fraternally, therefore, as well as professionally, Mr. Coale enjoys a very enviable standing.

JOHN S. LADD.—An interesting representative of one of the worthiest of pioneer families is John S. Ladd, of 344 South Sutter street, Stockton, who was born in this city on December 27, 1873, the son of John S. and Mary C. (Swan) Ladd, natives respectively of Vermont and Massachusetts. John Seneca Ladd, the father, was born in Danville, Caledonia County, Vermont, on April 28, 1832, a son of Seneca and Pamela (Estabrook) Ladd, both natives of the Green Mountain State. The mother was born in 1808, and died on August 26, 1846; the father survived her twenty-six years, and died at the age of sixty-eight years. Great-grandfather Samuel Estabrook was of Scotch parentage, a farmer by occupation, and he lived to be ninety-nine years of age. He married Miss Susan E. Colby, and she also attained a splendid old age, dying in her eighty-fifth year. Great-grandfather Colby was a soldier in the Revolution, and he reached the age of eighty-nine. Great-grandfather Warren Ladd was also a farmer and lived to an advanced age. Seneca Ladd, grandfather of John S. Ladd, a blacksmith by trade, left his shop in Danville, Vt., in 1850, and came to California, by way of Panama, and mined for two years on the Tuolumne River, and returned to Vermont in 1852, by way of the Nicaragua route. John S. Ladd, the father of our subject, attended the district school of Vermont, and then he went to the famous Phillips Academy. After that he entered the employ of the Fairbanks Scale Company, in St. Johnsbury, Vt., and in 1851, he too, started for California coming by way of the Nicaragua route, being among the first to travel along that way.

He arrived in San Francisco on April 16, 1851, and for a time found employment there; and on February 15, 1852, he went inland to the mines in Tuolumne County, where he remained for two years. In 1854, he embarked in freighting with his brother, George S. Ladd, under the firm name of Ladd & Brother; and for fifteen years they teamed to the Southern mines. In 1866 the brothers bought 800 acres of land near Collegeville, on the Mariposa Road, eight miles east of Stockton, where they raised wheat and sheep; and in 1870 they divided the land, and later John S. Ladd sold his portion. He then bought 354 acres of land three miles east of Stockton, near the old race-track, and there he farmed, and the ranch is still owned by the family. On March 12, 1863, Mr. Ladd married Miss Mary C. Swan, a native of Methuen, Mass., where she was born on February 5, 1841, a daughter of Cabel and Judith (Pettengill) Swan, both natives of Massachusetts. Mary C. Swan came to California, making the journey via the Isthmus of Panama, in 1860, and it was in San Francisco the young people met and their marriage occurred. Three children were born to John S. Ladd and his good wife. May Alice first saw light on January 21, 1864, and was graduated from the high school and later received a diploma from the San Jose State Normal. She was married in Stockton on July 30, 1887, to Milton H. Kingsbury, Ex-chief of Police, who died, January 7, 1900, and their union was blessed with the birth of twin daughters, Mary Alice and Amanda Gage, and a son Milton L. Pamela Estabrook was born on October 22, 1868, and married Melvin H. Orr, who died on November 8, 1916; he was a prominent attorney of Stockton, and a member of the law firm of Nichol, Orr & Nutter, later Nutter & Orr. John S. our subject is the youngest. John S. Ladd, the father, died December 29, 1912, and was survived by his widow until June 28, 1915.

John S. Ladd, Jr., attended the Stockton schools, there enjoying also the high school course, and then completed the course at the Stockton Business College, and in 1892 he entered the postal service, as clerk in the Stockton post office. Later, he was assistant postmaster under T. A. Nelson. During the Spanish American war, in 1899, he was transferred to Manila as inspector, and he remained on the Islands until December, 1905, his duties taking him all over the Islands, so that at the time of his leaving he had travelled more miles than any other civilian on the Islands. The next year he resigned from the postal service, and then he returned to Stockton, and was a clerk in the city assessor's office, and later deputy superintendent of streets and in 1917 resigned to farm grain on the home ranch; and he has continued a farmer ever since, residing in the house where he was born. On September 15, 1915, he was married at Alameda to Miss Mary C. Conchete, a native of Stockton and the descendant of a pioneer family; and they have one son, John S. Ladd, 3rd, who was born on April 3, 1920. Mr. Ladd is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and as No. 92, he is now one of the oldest members.

WILLIAM H. LYONS.—The devotion of William H. Lyons to the city and county of his birth has been evidenced in his actions, and he has shown the greatest faith in the future growth and prosperity of the state. He was born in Stockton on March 22, 1864, a son of William H. and Georgia (Allen) Lyons, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of New York. The father came to California via the Isthmus of Panama in 1849 and the mother crossed the plains in wagons drawn by oxen in 1852. The father first located in Grass Valley, Nevada County, Cal., and as he was a lawyer by profession, practiced there, confining his practice to land laws almost exclusively. During the years of 1850-54 he served as state senator from Nevada County. The capital of California was then located at Benicia and there he met and married his wife, who was a teacher in the public schools of that state. They were the parents of seven children, Mrs. Virginia Lee Roberts, Mrs. Georgia Cook, Mrs. Miriam Sterling, three sons who died while young, and William H., the subject of this review. Settling in Stockton in 1854, the father practiced his profession until his death in 1885.

Confining his practice to land laws, he became one of the foremost lawyers along that line; he was the land attorney for the Southern Pacific Railroad, having charge of their vast land holdings in the valley. He was a direct descendant of the historic Lee family of Virginia, being a first cousin of Robert E. Lee, the famous general. In time he became a large land holder, reaching as high as thousands of acres. In 1860 he bought the block of land at Eldorado and Poplar streets for $900 and on this land he erected his home, at that time the property being outside the city limits. Here all their children were born. In politics he was a Democrat and was a member of the Masonic order.

William H. Lyons was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1883. He then became a clerk in the county recorder's office where he remained for two years; then for the next five years he was a clerk in the county clerk's office. In 1890 he entered the employ of the Stockton Savings Bank (now the City Bank) as bookkeeper. His first advancement was to the position of assistant cashier; then in 1910 became the cashier of that institution, which position he now occupies with ability.

In 1907 he bought seventy-five acres of land seven miles northeast of Stockton, a part of the L. U. Shippee ranch; this he planted to walnuts, fruit and vineyard, improving with a pumping plant and irrigation system. The purchase price of this property was $150 per acre and today, on account of the high state of development is paying 6% on a valuation of $3,000 per acre. The Lyons home, known as "The Oaks" derived its name from the grove of venerable, gnarled oaks which surround the modern residence; there are extensive grounds and it is one of the handsomest country places in the county. The shrubbery borders are notable, quantities of berry bushes being used. In a glade just in front of the home is a long, irregular shaped pool with large stepping stones across it, affording a unique approach to the front, and a concrete swimming pool with springboard and other paraphernalia is a source of pleasure to the young people in the summer months.

The marriage of Mr. Lyons united him with Miss Ada Huggins, a former schoolmate, and a daughter of Frank Huggins, a California pioneer of 1852; he located in Sonora, Tuolumne County, and followed mining and was the agent for the Adams Express Co. Upon removing to Stockton he entered the employ of the San Joaquin Valley Bank and for many years was the cashier of that institution. Mr. and Mrs. Lyons are the parents of two sons: Frank is married and has three children and is farming 450 acres in San Joaquin County; William H., Jr., is with the Kroyer Motor Company. He attended the first officers' training camp at the Presidio in San Francisco and was commissioned first lieutenant of field artillery of the Ninety-first Division; later he was transferred to the First Division and was with the army of occupation in Germany, serving fourteen months overseas. Fraternally Mr. Lyons is a member of the Morning Star Lodge of Masons and of the Stockton Elks. For the past forty years, since August, 1883, he has been an active member of the N. S. G. W. Parlor No. 7; he is also a member of the San Joaquin Society of Pioneers.

GROVER A. GRIDER.—A pioneer in the electrical business in Stockton, Grover A. Grider is still engaged in his chosen line of work, which he has followed since 1903. The Grider Electrical Company is located at 409 East Weber Avenue, fully equipped to furnish everything in an electrical way; specializing in artistic chandeliers for fine residences and other buildings. He was born at La Grange, Cal., May 2, 1888, but was a babe in arms when his parents settled in Stockton and here he attended the public schools until he was fifteen years old. Leaving school at that age, he entered the employ of Noble D. Powell, the first man to establish an electrical store in Stockton. For the first eight months his wages were two dollars per week, but were steadily increased until he received a foreman's wages; then for the last few years that he was with them he was manager of the establishment, leaving them in 1909 to run a store of his own in Modesto, which he continued until 1912 when he sold out. He then returned to Stockton and two years ago he purchased the business now known as the Grider Electrical Company from N. D. Powell. Some of the first work Mr. Grider did was the wiring of many of the fine old homes in Stockton, among them being the Cobb residence on North Sutter Street; he also wired the old Russ Hotel and many other buildings in the old section of Stockton; he wired the river steamers Mary Garrett, Pride of the River, J. D. Peters and others. Among the later and more modern buildings are the following: A. M. Noble, Chas. Finkbohner, A. A. Sattui residences and the City Tennis Courts at Oak Park.

For the past three seasons Mr. Grider has had the contract for lighting the fair ground buildings for the San Joaquin County Fair held annually in Stockton. Night-time horse shows were made possible by a unique lighting system of which Mr. Grider is the originator. It consists of thirty Ivanhoe reflectors with 1,000 Watt Edison Mazda lamps, spaced 35x35 feet. The reflectors were suspended from messenger wires run between wooden poles thirty feet high set on top of the ground and guyed in place. This lighting system was so constructed as to be easily erected and taken down, which was done each day of the fair. The area lighted was 350x115 feet directly in front of the grandstand and the night exhibits were a pronounced success on account of this excellent system. Mr. Grider received recognition for his splendid work from the manager and board of directors of the fair and this achievement was written up in a special article which recently appeared in the columns of the Journal of Electricity. The electric wiring in all the theaters in Stockton was done by Mr. Grider and only recently he rewired the Lyric Theater; also all of the electric decorations in the new State Theater, including the lighting effects behind the organ and side walls. Mr. Grider uses the best material that can be purchased and his workmanship is of the very highest grade and on all contracts satisfaction is guaranteed. He is actively associated with the California Cooperative Electric Campaign that was formed to educate the people to demand a better and more dependable class of electrical work.

The marriage of Mr. Grider on August 25, 1909, united him with Miss Ethel Sturcke, a native of San Joaquin County, whose father was a pioneer and for many years a deputy sheriff of the county. Mr. Grider is a member of the Weber Avenue Improvement Club, the Red Men, Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., and the Encampment.

CHARLES H. LOUIS.—Among the most prominent pioneer families of San Joaquin County is that represented by Charles H. Louis, a native son of California, born in Stockton, April 29, 1858, the son of Samuel and Ernestine Louis. His parents came to Stockton in the early '50s and their five children were born there. The family left California in April, 1870, removing to New York, where the father engaged in business. Ten years later he retired from active business life, Charles H. assuming the responsibility of the business and continuing until 1911, when he, too, retired. The father passed away in 1907 at the family home in New York. In 1919, that beautifully wooded piece of land, known as "Dad's Point" was purchased by Mr. Louis and presented to the city of Stockton as a recreation park, in memory of his father and mother, those well-known and honored pioneers of Stockton. This tract of land consists of fourteen acres and is located at the junction of Smith's canal and the San Joaquin River, and is now known as Louis' Recreation Park.

Mr. Louis in his reminiscences of early Stockton, writes as follows: "When I left Stockton in 1870 it contained a population of about 7000, and I have seen it grow into the beautiful, prosperous city it now is of some 50,000. I have made frequent trips back to my native city, which I have always loved as did my father and mother. To me it seems the most prosperous city of its size in California and bids fair to be one of the foremost cities in the state and one its citizens may well be proud of. When we left in 1870, the Slough ended at Hunter Street where the Hotel Stockton now stands, and which, by the way, in beauty is a credit to Stockton. In those days, the St. Charles Hotel was the leader. The old Franklin school on Center Street stands as it was fifty years ago. Sperry's mill was then a low, frame building in front of which and facing the Slough, we boys hung our clothes on a limb of a tree and went swimming. The same boats, or boats of the same name plied the river to San Francisco, the J. D. Peters and T. C. Walker. McLeod's orchard was a long way from the City Hall. Wagner's Tannery was in existence then. "Helvetia" and "William Tell" Gardens were the resorts then, where the citizens went with their families to spend Sundays. Dr. Sposati and Dr. Langdon were the leading physicians. Holden's drug store was at the corner of El Dorado and Center streets. My father bought out Mr. Milco on the levee; before that he was located on the Levee next to the Sisson Stage line, whose old-time coaches with four and six horses took passengers to and from the gold diggings. Hedges and Buck and Meader's Bank existed then. Fish Harry and Sugar Foot Joe occupied houseboats on the Slough. Wild ducks and geese were plentiful and sold for twenty-five cents a pair; Jerome Meyer was chief of police. I married Miss Fanny Hirsch of Franklin, Pa., March 1, 1881, and she has been my devoted companion and chum all these years. Together we have covered in our travels almost the entire civilized world. I gave this tract of land known as "Dad's Point" to the city in which I was born and which I hold in affection, and to the memory of my parents, who lived and prospered there. I do this as a matter of love and pride and feel I could leave no better monument to my parents than this and the reward will be rich in the knowledge that the citizens of Stockton may have a park or recreation ground, where they can enjoy the fresh air and beautiful scenes. I am proud of the fact that I am a native son of California and prouder that I am a citizen of the United States of America." Mr. Louis lives retired from active business in New York City, but his heart and mind ever reverts to his native state of California.

WILBUR P. MERRILL.—A resident of California for more than half a century, Wilbur P. Merrill was born at Shirland, Winnebago County, Ill., March 10, 1846. His father, Marshfield True Merrill, was a native of Bangor, Maine, and emigrating to Illinois in the early days; he was one of the early settlers of Winnebago County, improving a farm from the raw prairie. He married Miss Della C. Goff, born in Hume, Alleghany County, N. Y., who had come with her parents to Shirland, Ill. The father died in Illinois before the war. Mrs. Merrill was married again in 1871 in Chicago to Wm. H. Dean and they came to California that year. Mr. Dean had been a pioneer of California and was a job printer and one of the early reporters in the state. He was reporter on the Alta Californian and started Mark Twain out as a reporter by having him report a dance. Mr. Dean died in Stockton and Mrs. Dean is now making her home on Fair Oaks Avenue. She was born on September 1, 1820, and lately celebrated her 102nd birthday. She is still able to cook and do her own housework. She is a charter member of Roosevelt Circle, Ladies of the G. A. R. By her first marriage she had three children, Wilbur P. being the only one living. Of her second marriage there was one child, William H. Dean of Sacramento.

Wilbur P. Merrill was reared on the Illinois farm and educated in the public schools. In 1864 he enlisted in Company F, 142nd Illinois Volunteer Infantry, campaigning in Tennessee until the close of the Civil War, being mustered out in 1865 after one year's service. He returned to Chicago, Ill., and learned the machinists' trade in the Illinois Central Railroad shops and then became an engineer running out of Chicago until 1872, when he came to Sacramento and as engineer ran between Sacramento and Truckee, on the Central Pacific. In 1877 he purchased a ranch near Florin and he built the first residence in that newly laid out town. Later he quit farming and made a trip to Mexico where he built a smelting works for a mining company—on his return in 1901 he located in Stockton, where for eight years he was engaged in the second hand furniture business.

Mr. Merrill's first marriage took place in Chicago when he was united with Miss Rebecca Huycke, a native of northern Illinois. She died in Stockton, leaving him two children, Mrs. Janet Estella Horr and Mrs. Minnie Adella Brown. His second marriage occurred in Stockton when he was united with Mrs. Olive (McMurry) Howard, born in Buena Vista, Cal. Mr. Merrill for many years was a member of Warren Post G. A. R. of Sacramento; he is now senior vice commander of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R. Mr. Merrill is a liberal and kindhearted man of a pleasing personality that makes him more friends wherever he goes. It is indeed gratifying to see the solicitude and tender care he showers on his aged mother, looking after her comfort in her old age in every way. Mr. Merrill is a strong Republican dating from the time of Lincoln, of whom he is a great admirer.

LEE A. SHEPHERD.—An experienced and efficient member of the staff of the State Hospital whose spirit of accommodation and never-failing desire to serve has constantly added to his popularity, is Lee A. Shepherd, the wide-awake storekeeper, a native of Stockton, having first seen the light there on June 19, 1890. His father, David C. Shepherd, a native of South Carolina, had married Mata Kuhn, of Calaveras County, Cal., and the daughter of a pioneer of that famous district. Mr. Shepherd is still living, an honored resident of San Francisco, but Mrs. Shepard has long since joined the great silent majority.

When David Shepherd came to California, in 1851, he located at Stockton, and soon established himself as one of the pioneer merchants on the water-front, in the wholesale fruit and produce business. At the beginning, he had a partner, John T. Doyle, but later he operated alone, and eventually he engaged in the wholesale liquor business on the water-front. When prohibition changed the order of things, he retired, after having made an enviable record as a straightforward merchant of thirty years' standing, and as an influential Democrat ready to do his best for the betterment of society and the State. In 1892 he was elected a supervisor of San Joaquin County, and later he was reelected three times; and then, having been defeated once, he was again elected and reelected, serving five terms in all. His name appears on many of the bridges in San Joaquin County, which were erected during his term of office, and it is needless to say that each structure was of the best of its kind. The County Hospital at French Camp was also built during his term of office. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias, and to Lodge No. 218 of the Elks, in each order enjoying an enviable standing.

Lee Shepherd is one of ten children, nine of whom are still living, and all of whom were born in Stockton. These include Mrs. Clara S. Reid, David H., Mrs. A. M. Barrett, Jr., Lindley P., Mrs. Effie M. Pfyl, Lee A., the subject of our review, Mrs. Mildred L. Brandt, and Bessie B. and Jean P. Shepherd; a son, Frank L., having died. Lee attended both the grammar and the high school at Stockton, and after that worked with his father for three years in the produce business. He next associated himself with the Santa Fe Railroad, and was afterward buyer for D. C. Russell, the produce dealer. Some ten years ago he entered the employ of the State Hospital, as clerk in the office of the business manager; today he is the storekeeper for that institution.

At San Francisco, Cal., August 2, 1919, Mr. Shepherd was married to Roberta M. Curry, a native of Georgia; and their union has been blessed with the birth of a daughter, Janet Lee. In March, 1918, Mr. Shepherd entered the field training school of the University of California, for service in the World War, and after that he was at Camp Hancock, in Georgia. He saw overseas service in the Ordnance Department, and was behind the line at Chateau-Thierry, where he was acting sergeant. In April, 1919, he received his discharge from the service, having rounded out a record such as any man might wish to boast of. He is now president of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W.

JOHN E. FUNK.—It is always timely and interesting to write of the personal achievements of men who are doing really big and meritorious things in this wonderful world of progress. In this connection a story of John E. Funk, the well-known inventor, of Stockton, Cal., and a review of his more notable achievements, should prove interesting. He was born in Wellington, Sumner County, Kans., April 3, 1880, and was a lad of seven years when his parents removed to California, settling at San Diego. His inventive genius first came to the notice of the public in 1898 at the age of eighteen years when he invented and built a four cylinder motor, which, according to the records, was probably the first four cylinder engine for automobiles ever built; this was done in a small shop in Riverside, Cal. Next he ran a hoist for the Wedge Mine at Randsburg. He began at the bottom of the ladder and gradually worked his way to the top, working in various mechanical positions. From Riverside he went to Los Angeles and was employed in the shop of Leutweiler & Sons, installing pumping plants for them and doing trouble work on gas engines, then he was with the Hercules Factory in San Francisco. For a year he was oiler and water tender on the S.S. Newport of the Pacific Mail Steamship Co., plying between Panama and San Francisco, learning marine engineering. Next we find him as half owner and manager of a vaudeville outfit on a circuit of thirty-six towns in California, having six different shows, one a week later than the other, giving six shows every night. After a year they found others had entered the same field and competition became so keen they closed out and he returned to his former occupation. He was employed at the Sampson Iron Works in Stockton, installing pumps and engines. Returning to Los Angeles he was with Waite, Bailey & Sons in the same line. He next became superintendent on the old Jones track at Middle River in San Joaquin County for the Rindge Land & Navigation Company, and while working in this capacity he conceived the idea of his now famous ditch-digging machine, for he knew that such a machine would revolutionize the work being done by hand in the big potato, asparagus, onion and celery fields. The Funk ditcher does the work of forty men and requires but one man to operate. Rows may be cultivated right up to the ditches, the dirt being distributed between the rows by the machine, a cylinder-like attachment catching the dirt as it is thrown up by the digger, spreading it in such a manner that it does not interfere with cultivation nor the growth of the crop. These ditches are dug for sub-irrigation and at such a distance apart that the land will be thoroughly saturated. The machine digs a ditch ten inches wide and from twenty to twenty-four inches deep at the rate of from thirty to sixty lineal feet a minute, a great labor-saver as well as a reducer of expense. The capacity of this machine is sixty acres a day, running the full twenty-four hours. The Funk ditch diggers last season were scattered over forty miles of territory in the Delta country at one time, and Mr. Funk visited the district, flying over the working machines in an aeroplane, making the entire trip in an hour or so—a journey that otherwise would have required several days, necessitating the use of power launches and automobiles, and possible afoot part of the time. Mr. Funk is quite a flying enthusiast and intensely interested in

John E. Funk.

B A Fisher

Baker was accidentally killed there and afterwards Mrs. Baker came to Stockton, where she met Mr. Fisher, the acquaintance resulting in their marriage in Sacramento. She is a talented vocalist with a splendid mezzo-soprano voice and is soloist at the Christian Church, and also frequently favors other audiences who enjoy and appreciate her beautiful and sympathetic singing. Mr. and Mrs. Fisher reside at their comfortable home at 925 South Hunter Street, where they enjoy dispensing hospitality and good cheer to their many friends. Mr. Fisher is a lover of outdoor sports, particularly hunting and fishing; being a splendid shot he rarely misses bringing in the limit on his hunting excursions.

MRS. FANNIE V. CARLETON.—On the roll of the honored pioneer women of the Golden State is found the name of Mrs. Fannie V. Carleton who is also a native daughter of California and San Joaquin County, having been born on January 19, 1859, on the Howland ranch near Lathrop, a daughter of Humphrey S. and Barbara (Meyer) Howland, the former a native of New England, while the latter was born in Switzerland. Humphrey S. Howland was born July 14, 1827 near New Bedford, Mass., and when seven years of age was taken by his parents, Henry and Abbie (Sherman) Howland, to Seneca County, Ohio, where they lived on a farm until 1850. In August, 1848, Humphrey S. Howland was married to Barbara Meyer and the following year they moved to Indiana and engaged in farming until 1852, when they started for California. They traveled for many long days, continuing on their way until the weeks had lengthened into months, but at length their eyes were gladdened by the sight of the fertile valleys of the Pacific Coast. The family home was established in San Joaquin County, and they lived much of the time near Lathrop.

Humphrey S. Howland was a typical pioneer settler of California of the class who bravely faced the dangers and privations of life on the frontier. In 1854, he purchased 140 acres from Capt. Charles Weber situated on what was then known as the Slocum Ferry Road, for which he paid three dollars per acre. In the spring of 1857 he sold this farm for six dollars per acre intending to return to his eastern home, but in 1858 he bought 160 acres which he improved and held until 1869 when he sold it to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. He then bought 160 acres from Mr. James Buchanan and lived there until 1884 when he built the house and the home place where our subject now resides. In 1873 the father and mother visited their old home in Seneca County, Ohio, making the journey in six days that had taken them six months to make twenty years before. There were five children born to Humphrey S. Howland and his wife: Mrs. Anna L. Briggs born May 8, 1849, who accompanied her parents across the plains in 1852 and is now the only survivor of that party; Leroscoe and LeRoy twins, were born January 26, 1854. Leroscoe is a farmer at Lathrop and Le Roy passed away in Tulare County in 1907, survived by his widow; Mrs. Fannie V. Carleton is the subject of this sketch; Oliver M., born March 19, 1865, is deceased and is survived by his widow, who resides in Stockton. Humphrey S. Howland passed away May 22, 1899, mourned by all who knew him, his wife surviving him until June 4, 1912, passing away at her daughter's home in Lathrop at the venerable age of eighty-six years.

Fannie V. Howland received a good education at Stockton and grew to womanhood on her father's farm near Lathrop and taught school in San Joaquin County for four years. On November 12, 1882, she was married to Franklin Pierce Carleton, a native of Augusta, Maine, who came to California in 1874. They are the parents of two children: Ida E. is the wife of Lyman L. Huntley and they have five children and reside near Escalon; Ethel Marie is a teacher in the public schools of San Joaquin County. For ten years she was president of the local W. C. T. U. and also the head of the Red Cross work at Lathrop. The comfortable and attractive home of Mrs. Carleton is the scene of good, old-time hospitality enjoyed by her large circle of friends. Since 1920, Mrs. Carleton has been serving on the advisory board of the East Union Cemetery Memorial Grounds near Manteca.

MRS. C. G. SCHNEIDER.—A worthy representative of an old pioneer family, Mrs. C. G. Schneider, who was in maidenhood Alice Smallfield, was brought by her parents to Stockton, Cal., when she was one year old and thus has witnessed the development and progress of her adopted city and county. She has taken a very active part in its educational development for many years, both as an instructor and as a member of the board of education. She is a woman of unusual capabilities, broad-minded and in sympathy with the higher life and in the educational and moral development of the youth she has been the originator of the Prevocation School in Stockton. Her father, August A. Smallfield, a native of Kiel, Germany, came to California via Panama in the early '50s and mined for a time, then settled in Stockton where he purchased the Weber Avenue Hotel; this was later destroyed by fire and he then engaged in the grocery business with Adolph Dohrmann as a partner. He was a member of the Volunteer Fire Department and Charity Lodge of Odd Fellows. He married Miss Regina Steinhilber and they were the parents of five children: Albert A., manager Austin Brothers Hardware Store, Stockton, Adolph Dohrmann, also with Austin Brothers, Mrs. Alice Schneider; Mrs. Carrie Koldinger and Bernard Nathan are both deceased. Her father passed away in 1868 and her mother died in 1902.

Alice Smallfield received her education in the public schools of Stockton and then for eight years was a teacher in the schools of Tehama County; then for the next thirteen years was a teacher in the Stockton schools. For a number of years she was the principal of the Lincoln School, originally on the site of the Little Vineyard school. The Little Vineyard school was the first school she attended and it was on the same site she was principal just before she gave up teaching, at the time of her marriage. Mrs. Schneider is now serving her third term as a member of the Stockton board of education and devotes the greater part of her time to this work. It was through her efforts that the Prevocation School was established in Stockton, which has become so successful. Here the children study one-half day and the rest of the time is given to learning trades, such as woodworking, mechanical art, etc., and in this school many boys have started their trade; she was the first teacher to introduce phonetics, which has now become universal in the schools of the county. She was elected one of the fifteen freeholders at the spring election of 1922 to frame a new city charter for the city of Stockton.

The marriage of Miss Smallfield occurred on September 12, 1901, and united her with Carl G. Schneider, a native of Wurtemberg, Germany, and they have one son, Carl A., a student at the University of California. Mr. Schneider located in Stockton about thirty years ago where he established himself in the harness business. In 1901 he also opened a trunk and leather goods store on East Weber Avenue, where he conducts the leading store of its kind, his stock being large and complete in every detail. Mr. and Mrs. Schneider are active members of the German Lutheran Church.

MADISON J. DRAIS.—The junior member of the firm of Albertson & Draiss, realtors, Madison J. Draiss, is among the city's most progressive and capable business men. He was born in Tulare County, Cal., on April 19, 1876, the youngest of three sons of Alexander S. and Augustine N. (Morrow) Draiss, both natives of Missouri. Alexander S. Draiss crossed the plains, when a boy, with his parents in an ox-team and his father became a grain farmer in the Farmington district. He was a Civil War veteran, serving in a California company stationed at the Presidio, San Francisco, and helped to quell the Indian uprisings on the Coast. He was a member of Stockton Post, G. A. R. He farmed, for a time, in Tulare County and was a resident of Oakland for some time and at the time of his death on March 7, 1918, was living retired in Stockton. The mother came to the Farmington section of San Joaquin County with her parents when she was seven years old and was there reared and educated. Her marriage to Alexander S. Draiss occurred on August 18, 1869, and they were the parents of three sons: Albert S., living in Oakland, Robert A., at Halleck, and Madison J., our subject. Grandfather L. J. Morrow crossed the plains, to California in 1858 locating in the Farmington section where he followed farming; he served as a member of the Missouri Legislature and was also a member of the California Assembly for a number of years. Mrs. Draiss' maternal grandfather fought in the Black Hawk War, while her paternal grandfather fought in the War of 1812 under Andrew Jackson. The mother passed away April 18, 1922, a distinct loss to the community where she was well known for her kindly nature and deeds of charity; she was a lifelong member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The old homestead at Farmington, where she lived and where her parents lived, is one of the old landmarks of the section. T. J. Draiss, of Farmington, an uncle of our subject, is the only living pioneer member of the family.

Mr. Draiss received his education in the schools of Oakland and then engaged in farming near Farmington for a number of years. In 1912 he sold his ranch and the following year he formed a partnership with Ed. Albertson in the real estate business, specializing in farm lands, orchards, and vineyards. He has held an assured position among the reliable and successful men of Stockton for many years, and his personal worth and ability are entirely deserving of the esteem which he enjoys. In 1896 Mr. Draiss was married to Miss Lucy S. Stark, a native of Danville, Contra Costa County, Cal., and they are the parents of two children: Roy E. is married and is a book-keeper in the Bank of Italy, and Pearl A.

LELAND MEYER.—A foremost rancher of the Delta district, Leland Meyer is a pioneer and a son of a pioneer of this section of the state. His residence and home ranch consists of 509 acres on Roberts Island, and not only have his diligent efforts rewarded him in material circumstances but he has also acquired a position of esteem and public worth among his fellow citizens and business associates. He was born September 8, 1866, on the Meyer homestead, seven and a half miles south of Stockton. The father, Andrew Meyer, came to California as a pioneer of 1849, and was among the first to establish the fact that California offers great opportunities to the agriculturist. He was a native of Canton Aargau, Switzerland, born on October 27, 1823. His father also bore the name of Andrew Meyer, and was of Swiss parentage and ancestry. He brought his family to America in 1829, the family locating in Seneca County, Ohio, where Andrew Meyer, the father of our subject, was reared to manhood and made his home until he came to California.

Attracted by the discovery of gold on the Pacific Coast, Mr. Meyer left his Ohio home and came to California, making the journey across the plains in 1849 with mule teams. He engaged in mining and freighting, which he followed until 1852, when he returned East via Panama. In the fall of 1852 he again crossed the plains to California with ox teams, bringing both horses and cattle. He made his way direct to San Joaquin County and settled on a farm near the present site of Lathrop and was among the first settlers in this locality. Here he began the development of his 600-acre farm, transforming the land into richly cultivated fields, while he also raised good grades of stock. He was one of the pioneers in the agricultural development of this part of the state, and his efforts resulted in producing a fine and highly improved farm.

On February 26, 1861, Mr. Meyer was married to Miss Cynthia Cooley, a native of Seneca County, Ohio, a daughter of Orange and Mary (Pettis) Cooley, the former a native of New York and the latter of Massachusetts. Orange Cooley was a pioneer of Seneca County, Ohio, settling there prior to his marriage and taking an active part in the early development. Three sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Meyer: Leland, the subject of this review; Arthur, and Andrew C. Andrew Meyer passed away August 24, 1898, at his home where for many years he was an honored and respected citizen. His widow survived him until May 25, 1921, then over eighty years and six months of age.

Leland Meyer attended the Lathrop grammar school until he was fifteen years old and from that time on worked on his father's farm and stock ranch. In 1892 he purchased seventy acres on the upper division of Roberts Island, one and a half miles from the Brandt bridge and the same year the reclamation district No. 544 was founded. The work of building levees was started at once and for twenty consecutive years, Mr. Meyer was superintendent and trustee of the district. He was superintendent four years and trustee sixteen years and was chairman a part of the time. By the capable management of his business affairs he has added to his holdings from time to time until he now has 509 acres of productive land. Mr. Meyer irrigates his land in the fall of the year by flooding, plants wheat and barley in November and December, and by the latter part of May harvest begins and continues until the middle of August. He has experimented until he has found that Early Bart wheat produces the heaviest crop.

The marriage of Mr. Meyer occurred on May 11, 1892, at Sacramento, and united him with Miss Abbie E. Snapp, a native of Banta, Cal. Her father, Rufus Snapp, was born in Tennessee, coming to California in an early day when he was a young man, locating first at Woodbridge and there he married Miss Nancy Cain, whose parents, George and Martha Abigail Cain, brought their family across the plains when Nancy was a girl; she lived to be a very aged woman, passing away in this county at the age of ninety-eight. The father is also deceased. Abbie E. was the eldest of their five children, four of whom are living. She was reared and educated in Sacramento and has been of much assistance and encouragement to her husband in gaining his ambition. The fortunate union of Mr. and Mrs. Meyer has been blessed with six children: Herbert L. served with the Eleventh Aero Squadron, A. E. F., going overseas with the first 100,000 troops in 1917, serving until May, 1919, when he returned and received his honorable discharge. He is married, has one son, and resides in Stockton; Robert A. served with the Quartermaster's Department in the A. E. F., is a rancher assisting his father and is a member of the Native Sons of the Golden West at Stockton; Joseph L.; La Verne; Wilma and Irene are students in the Stockton high school. In politics Mr. Meyer is a Republican and for seven years served as a school trustee of the Garden district. Mrs. Meyer has also served as a school trustee of her district. In matters of citizenship Mr. Meyer is progressive and takes a helpful part in promoting the progress of the county which has been his home all his life and where he is numbered among the honored citizens.

JACOB JACOBSON.—A prosperous rancher of San Joaquin County who owns forty acres of vineyard and alfalfa three miles south of Lodi, near the Armstrong switch, is Jacob Jacobson. Possessed of the sturdy ability and enterprise native to his race, a man of active energy and constant resolution, his success has been steadily maintained and each year's efforts have increased in extent and importance until he is now enjoying the fruits of his honest labor. He was born in Schleswig, Denmark, November 21, 1859, a son of Jacob and Annie (Morse) Jacobson. The father conducted a general merchandise store in Frederickshoff, Denmark, and lived to be sixty-five years old, while the mother lived to be eighty years old. They never left their native land where they reared seven children: Christina, Hans, Mary, Jorgen, Kathrina are deceased; and Maria Christina still lives in Denmark; Jacob is the subject of this sketch.

Jacob Jacobson received a grammar school education in Denmark up to his fourteenth year, when he went to sea on a sailing vessel, serving four years on the North and Baltic seas on a merchant marine. He then received notice that he was to be taken into the German navy, so immediately laid plans to come to the United States. Arriving here he first settled in Iowa, near the Minnesota line, where he worked for a year on a farm, then moved across the state line into Minnesota and found employment on a farm near Leroy. In 1882 he came to California settling in the Bay district and worked at various kinds of work for the following ten years.

On September 15, 1892, Mr. Jacobson was married to Miss Ellen Nicolson, born, reared and educated in Adserballigskov, Denmark, a daughter of Nicola and Ellen (Christensen) Nicoleisen. Mrs. Jacobson came to California at the age of nineteen years and made her home in San Francisco; later she lived with her brother at Hayward and San Leandro, Cal. There were four children in her family; Mary, deceased, Christian resides at Haywards, Nicola resides at Watsonville, and Ellen, Mrs. Jacobson. After their marriage they resided in Hayward for a year then in 1893 settled in San Joaquin County where Mr. Jacobson bought his present ranch of forty acres, where he engaged in the dairy business for several years. A few years ago he disposed of his dairy and now carries on a poultry and egg business as a side line, having about 500 laying hens. When he purchased his ranch, it was a stubble field; he later set out a vineyard of fifteen acres, which is now bearing, and 1922 he has set out ten acres more to young vineyard; he also has twelve acres in alfalfa. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson are the parents of one daughter, Mary Ella, who is a stenographer in Stockton. In politics Mr. Jacobson is a Republican.

FRANK G. BROWN.—For many years the name of Bramman & Brown has been connected with the building and industrial life of Tracy through extensive handling of plumbing contracts, installation of pumping and irrigation equipment and plants, and doing general repair work in all the lines mentioned. Since the death of Mr. Bramman, Frank G. Brown has assumed the management of the business. He was born at Georgetown, Colo., on January 31, 1877, being a son of Jacob and Minnie (Frotcher) Brown. In 1879 the father met his death by accident in a mine at Georgetown, Colo. In 1884 the widowed mother with her family removed from Colorado to California, settling at first at Lincoln, Placer County, but shortly removed to Hayward, where Mr. Brown's brother-in-law, Benjamin Bramman, who married Miss Maria B. Brown, established a plumbing shop. Benjamin Bramman was a mere child when with his parents he came to America from Germany. He settled with his family at Tracy in 1897, where he established a hardware store and plumbing shop, and was building up a good business when death overtook him. Mrs. Bramman soon after her husband's death took her brother, Frank G. Brown, subject hereof, into the firm. The hardware business was sold to the Tracy Mercantile Company, and the sister and brother, under the firm name of Bramman and Brown, continued to conduct the plumbing, sheet metal, pump and dairy supply business until 1917 when Mr. Brown bought out his sister. Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Bramman became the parents of one child, Minnie Bramman who resides with her mother at Oakland where Mrs. Jacob Brown also resides.

Frank G. Brown was reared and educated in the school of Hayward. He was twenty-one years of age when he came to Tracy. Under the efficient direction of his brother-in-law, the late Benjamin Bramman, he thoroughly learned the plumbing, tinning, sheet metal, pump and dairy supply trade, and ever since Mr. Bramman's death has been the active head of this large and growing business.

Mr. Brown's marriage united him with Miss Elizabeth A. Ewald, a daughter of the late Theodore Ewald of San Francisco. Her mother still resides in San Francisco. They are the parents of one daughter, Bertha. Mr. Brown is a member of the local board of trade and politically is a Republican. He is a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge No. 118 of Tracy. He has encouraged civic and municipal improvements, good streets and roads, and was a loyal supporter of the great irrigation project that has resulted in the success of the West Side Irrigation District and the cutting up of large acreages into small home tracts, and which is creating a new era of prosperity for this city of homes and opportunities.

WILLIAM F. COOK.—Numbered among the prominent and influential farmers and honored pioneers of San Joaquin County is William F. Cook who resides on the homestead that was his birthplace. He has watched the development of San Joaquin County through a long period, noting with interest the changes that have been wrought as its natural resources have been developed and the work of improvement and civilization has been carried forward. He was born on the Cook ranch, June 4, 1855, and is of German lineage. His parents, Frederick and Caroline Cook, were born in Germany and soon after their marriage they came to America and settled in Illinois where their first daughter was born. They left Illinois and started for California with ox teams across the plains and arrived at Hangtown in 1849 so named because of the justice administered there at an early day, and for a time was engaged in mining for gold; later he removed to San Joaquin County and established his home near Atlanta and soon acquired three quarter sections of land, one a homestead, one a preemption and one tree claim. The first house built was a cabin made from timber cut by his own hand and where the family lived and reared their nine children: Emma, William F. of this sketch; Lewis P., Charles, Edward, Adolph, Caroline, Eliza and Lillie. William F. Cook was reared to manhood upon his father's farm in San Joaquin County and has always possessed the progressive spirit of the West—the spirit that has led to the rapid and substantial advancement of the states along the Pacific Coast. He was educated in the district schools in his home neighborhood, enjoying no better privileges than most lads of the period, but he determined to win success, and as the result of his energy he is now the owner of 160 acres where he has farmed for the past twenty-five years. The principal crop is grain and everything about the place is kept in good condition, and the neat and thrifty appearance of the farm indicates to the passerby the supervision of a progressive owner.

The marriage of Mr. Cook united him with Miss Eliza Pope, born in Oakland, Cal., and they have two daughters, Myrtle, the wife of Henry Pratt, has three children, Gene, Margaret and William; Alice, Mrs. William Alsa, resides in the Cook home place. For several terms, Mr. Cook served as school trustee at Atlanta and was formerly a member of the Democratic County Central Committee of San Joaquin County. Mr. and Mrs. Cook are well and favorably known in San Joaquin County where his business capacity has won the admiration of his fellow-citizens, while his strong personal traits of character have gained him their friendly regard.

ANDREW J. MUNCH.—Many years have passed since the family to which this well-known citizen belongs became identified with the interests of San Joaquin County. His father before him took an active part in the development of this section of the state, in many ways promoting its progress and advancement, and this reputation is in no way diminished in the present generation, for Andrew J. Munch is numbered among the leading business men of the county. He was born in Denmark, June 20, 1866, a son of Christian and Lena Munch, both natives of Denmark. In 1876 the family came to America settling in Iowa where the father followed farming until 1881, when he came West to California and located at Stockton, taking up well boring for a livelihood. In those days, the residents of Stockton had wells of their own supplying their homes and the father bored hundreds of them. He was known all over the county as a successful well borer, as well as in other parts of the state. He had a contract with the San Jose Water Company to bore ten deep wells; these were started and bored to a depth of 1,100 feet, but the father did not live to see the contract completed, but it was finished by his son, our subject. The father passed away in 1897 and the mother had preceded him in December, 1893.

Andrew J. Munch completed his education with a course in the Stockton Business College and then became associated with his father in the well-boring business, which has engaged his attention ever since. He has played an important part in developing water on ranches throughout the county as well as in the cities and is a leader in this line of work in San Joaquin Valley. His equipment is modern and complete, having both steam and gasoline rigs. Mr. Munch has drilled wells on Roberts and Union islands; he drilled eighteen wells from 250 to 1,100 feet deep in Stockton for the Pacific Gas & Electric Company and wells at Willows for this company; two wells for the Stockton Glass Works; the Holt Manufacturing Company and the Sperry Flour Mills, and four wells for the Stockton Paper Mills. He has drilled wells for irrigating purposes in the orchards and vineyards in different parts of the county, including the Lodi and Lathrop districts; a 1,600-foot well through rock for the Napa Water Company at Napa, Cal., and one 2,800 feet deep for the Stockton Natural Gas Company. Mr. Munch's contribution to the upbuilding of the county has been far-reaching and productive of great results. In partnership with Antonio Solari, Mr. Munch subdivided eight acres in East Stockton, known as the Edenvale Tract, which has all been sold and on which has been built modern homes.

The marriage of Mr. Munch in Stockton October 25, 1894, united him with Miss Jessie Wilkinson, a native of Springfield, Tuolumne County, a daughter of Hugh and Elizabeth (Williamson) Wilkinson, both born in Ireland of Scotch parentage; they came to New York, where they became acquainted and were married. In 1858, they embarked for San Francisco, sailing through the Straits of Magellan. The father became a mining man in Tuolumne County and made mining trips through Montana and Oregon. Later he settled down to farming in Tuolumne County, where he passed away in 1896. Mrs. Munch attended schools in Tuolumne County, where she passed away in 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Munch had one daughter, Grace, the wife of Charles H.

Broadhurst, who passed away in 1918, aged twenty-three years. Mr. Munch owns a half interest in the Charles H. Broadhurst & Company of Stockton and Lodi, dealers in automobile supplies. Fraternally he belongs to the Iroquois Tribe of Red Men. Mr. Munch is a substantial citizen of his adopted country and deserves and receives the respect which is ever according to recognition of successful and honorable accomplishment.

HON. BRADFORD S. CRITTENDEN.—Among the enterprising citizens of the busy and rapidly expanding city of Tracy, is the Hon. Bradford S. Crittenden. He is a member of the representative law firm of Crittenden & Hench, both of whom are authorities on irrigation laws. A native of Ohio, he was born in the vicinity of Olmsted Falls, on January 20, 1876. His father, Samuel Crittenden, was a pioneer of the Golden West, whose ancestry dates back to colonial days. In 1891 the family removed to Merced County and located on a ranch in the Cottonwood district. Samuel Crittenden married Miss Lemira Bradford, a direct descendent of the historic Governor Bradford of Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Crittenden reside in San Jose, Cal. and he is a prominent member of the G. A. R. of that city.

Bradford S. attended the Newman grammar school, which he successfully finished in 1893. The hardships which befell the ranchers on the West Side during several of the years following made it imperative that he do his share of ranch work, and consequently his education was obtained through hard work and sacrifice, but he was enabled to attend, at broken intervals, the Academy of the Pacific at San Jose. His vacations were spent in doing a man's work in the grain fields on the Crittenden ranch, as well as other hard work; 450 acres of the original tract are still owned and operated by Mr. Crittenden, but improved methods are used in their cultivation. He entered the College of the Pacific in San Jose and was graduated from that institution in 1903 with a B. L. degree; then entered the University of California and in 1907 received his B. A. degree, having completed his work with Dr. Taylor, in charge of the Hastings Law School, which was at that time connected with the University of California. On May 20, 1907, he was admitted to the bar and was also honored with a Master's degree by the College of the Pacific. Mr. Crittenden then opened law offices in San Francisco and engaged in general law practice; and for a time maintained offices in San Jose.

The marriage of Mr. Crittenden occurred in San Jose and united him with Miss Edith McChesney, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. McChesney, who settled in San Jose in 1891. Mrs. McChesney was closely related to the late George Kasson, an extensive land owner of the San Joaquin Valley, located on the lower West Side. Mr. McChesney was the executor of this large estate and Mr. Crittenden became his legal advisor; the estate consisting of some 6,000 acres of land. Mr. McChesney passed away in 1918, his wife surviving him one year. He was born in Ohio, while his wife, whose maiden name was Martha E. Cowdery, was born in New York, where she was also married. Upon coming to California the parents settled at San Jose, and there Mrs. Crittenden attended both the Academy and the College of the Pacific, where she became acquainted with Mr. Crittenden. She graduated from the conservatory of music of the College of the Pacific, and was thereupon engaged as teacher of the piano at her alma mater for two years before her marriage. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Crittenden: Edith Eudora and Bradford M. During 1915 Mr. Crittenden located in Tracy and one year later brought his family from San Jose. His intention was to devote his entire time to his ranch work; but realizing the opportunities of this growing and prosperous community he formed a legal partnership with George M. Hench, a former colleague. In August, 1917, they succeeded the law firm of Neumiller & Ditz as legal advisors of the West Side Irrigation district; they are also attorneys for the Naglee-Burk irrigation district, a corporation comprising some 3,000 acres near Tracy; they handled all matters pertaining to the bond issue for the West Side irrigation district. This able lawyer is also attorney and assistant manager for the River View Land & Water Company, owning extensive property between Banta and old San Joaquin City, a few miles east of Tracy, which includes an irrigation system and power plant. Mr. Crittenden personally owns a tract of 800 acres on the San Joaquin River, near Banta, 300 acres of which were reclaimed by leveling, and on which large crops of barley have been produced. Nearly $10,000 has been spent in improvements.

In politics, Mr. Crittenden has always been a staunch Republican and during 1918 he was appointed city attorney of Tracy; and is also a member of the Assembly for the nineteenth district and is serving on a number of important committees with efficiency and capability. Fraternally he is an active member of the Masonic Blue Lodge, Council, Commandery and Shrine, his membership in the latter being in Islam Temple, San Francisco and he belongs to the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias of Tracy. Mr. and Mrs. Crittenden are members of the Methodist Church of Tracy and have contributed generously to all branches of that organization. Mrs. Crittenden is the president of the Woman's Club of Tracy. She has extensive property interests in San Jose, Cal., which are personally looked after by Mr. Crittenden, while socially always a favorite, she is a prominent member of the Pal's Club at the state capital. During the World War, Mr. Crittenden was active in all the war drives and served as president of the entire committee and was a prominent "four-minute man."

PETER HANSEN.—Born in Denmark, September 4, 1839, in the death of Peter Hansen the Bethany section of San Joaquin County lost one of the last of its very first settlers and the community lost a man who was widely known because of his fine character. Deeply mourning the loss of his life-mate, whose death occurred March 3, 1919, he predicted that he would not survive her a year. Their married life had been an exceptionally happy one and when she died he became grief stricken and passed away August 28, 1919, outliving her less than six months.

Mr. Hansen first came to California in 1857 around Cape Horn and in 1866 returned to Denmark, where he and Mrs. Hansen were married on May 16, 1867, returning to California for their honeymoon journey the same year, coming to Mohr's Landing, which is now Bethany, and settling on the ranch which remained their home. Two younger brothers of Mrs. Hansen, Thomas and John Thomsen, accompanied her on her journey to California. John Thomsen died soon afterwards while engaged in construction work on the Miller & Lux canal, but Thomas lived to become a prosperous farmer at Lathrop and the father of thirteen children, eight of whom are still living. One of the interesting relics of the old days remains still in the back yard of the Hansen home and during the celebration of the golden wedding anniversary of this venerable couple was shown with a considerable degree of pride by them. It is the little house of two rooms to which Mr. Hansen brought his young bride fifty years ago, the lumber being brought up from San Francisco by boat and landed at Mohr's Landing, there being no railroad at that time to the valley. In this little cottage the family of eight children were born and reared, five of whom still survive and were present to join in the golden jubilee festivities. The living children are: Chris, Peter and Tom Hansen, and Mrs. William Von Sosten of Tracy, and Mrs. William Bartsch of San Francisco, who now own and farm the old home place of 396 acres of choice alfalfa land. Besides their own children, Mr. and Mrs. Hansen reared two grandchildren, Clinton P. and Grace A. Odell, who were a comfort and joy to their grandparents. Clinton P. died at the age of twenty-one and within a year, after a short married life of three months, Grace A. passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Hansen had ten grandchildren. During the three days' celebration of their golden wedding anniversary, Mr. and Mrs. Hansen were showered with congratulations by their many friends for miles around. Three persons were present at this celebration who were present at the wedding in Denmark fifty years before.

Mr. Hansen went to sea when a boy of sixteen and traveled around the world considerably, and it was interesting to hear him narrate his early experiences in the various countries he visited. In the fall of 1863 he volunteered in defense of the Union and served in the Second Brigade of California Infantry, and was honorably discharged in 1866.

He lived to see his community grow from the primitive to the advanced civilization, and endured all of the hardships of the early settlers. One of his hobbies was irrigation and he worked untriflingly for the introduction of water before it finally came. He could always be depended upon to be on the right side of any issue coming up for the development of the community he loved. He served for twelve consecutive years as clerk of the board of trustees of the Lammersville school district. He was a staunch Republican and was for twelve years road overseer of the Tracy road district; he also served a number of terms on the grand jury of San Joaquin County. He was a charter member of West Side Lodge, K. P., and belonged to Lincoln Post No. 1, G. A. R. He was a loving father and a devoted husband. His life was upright and honorable in every relation, thereby winning the confidence, good will and high regard of all with whom he became associated, and the community where he lived for so many years miss his co-operation and support.

JACOB P. SNYDER.—One of the leading lawyers of Stockton is Jacob P. Snyder, a native son of California and a man who has always had the best interests of the state at heart and who has done his best to build up and upbuild the section of country where he has spent the years of his useful life. Born at Murphys, Calaveras County, on February 28, 1869, Mr. Snyder is the fourth child in the family of Peter Snyder, pioneer of Calaveras County of 1855.

Peter Snyder was born in Germany on September 9, 1832, the son of Louis and Mary (Steffen) Schneider. As a lad he attended the schools of his locality and lived there until 1853, when he decided that America had more to offer an energetic young man than could be found in his fatherland. Arriving in New York this young emigrant located for two years in the vicinity of Utica, where he followed farming and sawmilling. His desire was to get to California and having saved his money, in 1855 he left the East and came to California via the Panama route. He went direct to the mining section at O'Neill's Bar and he followed mining there and at Murphys with considerable success for ten years. He then bought land and began ranching and set out an orchard and a vineyard and was the pioneer to demonstrate that fruit would successfully produce here. He developed a fine orchard and vineyard and raised high grade stock and in time became a substantial citizen of this part of the state. In 1860 he was married to Miss Barbara Hauselt, born in Germany, and they became the parents of the following children: Lewis, now deceased, was a prominent citizen of Stockton where he served as a deputy street commissioner and as a member of the city council. He left a son, Edwin, who is connected with a prominent architectural firm in Los Angeles. John J. is also deceased. He was formerly district attorney of Calaveras County. Mary married Gus Castrucci and lives at Murphys. Jacob P. is the subject of this review. Anna is Mrs. Alfonse Raggio of San Andreas. Charles P. is district attorney of Calaveras County and also a partner in the law firm of Snyder and Snyder in Stockton. Will G. is an attorney and was formerly district attorney of Amador County. George F. is connected with the well-known law firm of Hoefler, Cook & Snyder in San Francisco. He was formerly a member of the legislature from Calaveras, Amador, Alpine and Mono counties, elected in 1906. Louisa C. Snyder is the youngest and also a resident of San Francisco. It will be seen that the sons in this family have been prominent in political life in this section of California, four having served in the responsible position of district attorney in Calaveras and Amador counties—a record unequalled thus far in the state; and one was elected to the state law-making body and served his term with honors.

Peter Snyder passed away at Murphys' October 6, 1911, and Mrs. Snyder on September 29, 1912. In the later years of his life the father of Peter Snyder came to California and spent his last years, dying in Stockton when in his eighty-fourth year. A daughter of Louis Schneider (as the name was originally spelled until Peter Snyder made application for his first citizenship papers in New York, when it was shortened to its present spelling), Mrs. Anna Meyers, died in Stockton about 1917, and a son named Jacob also died here in 1912. These two, with Peter, were the only members of the family to settle in the Golden State and it was with these three children that Louis Schneider spent his last years in the balmy climate of this state.

J P Snyder

Jacob P. Snyder received his schooling in Calaveras County and at an early age came to Stockton and studied law in the office of Louttit, Woods and Levinsky, being admitted to practice in 1891. He followed his profession in Stockton and in Calaveras County and served as district attorney of his native county for one term. He came to Stockton and opened an office for the continuance of his practice and has as an associate his brother, Charles P. Snyder. Mr. Snyder takes an active interest in all that pertains to the advancement of the county and city and is ever ready to lend his aid to further civic, social and commercial interests of Stockton.

The marriage of Mr. Snyder to Miss Elvira G. Salcido, a native of California, born at San Andreas, daughter of a pioneer settler of Calaveras County, was solemnized in San Andreas, and two children have added joy to their household: Ruth is a teacher in the Stockton public schools; and Peter L. is attending the University of California at Berkeley. Mr. Snyder belongs to Calaveras Lodge No. 87, F. & A. M., of San Andreas; Calaveras Chapter R. A. M., and Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E.; and the San Andreas Lodge of Odd Fellows. Mr. Snyder has a host of friends in Stockton and San Joaquin County who recognize in him a thorough student of the law and accord him a high place among the citizens of Central California.

CHARLES PETER SNYDER.—A member of the well-known law firm of Snyder & Snyder at Stockton, Charles P. Snyder is a native son of California and was born at Murphys in Calaveras County on June 25, 1874, a son of the late Peter Snyder and his good wife, Anna Barbara Hauselt Snyder, both of whom are mentioned at length in the sketch of Jacob P. Snyder to be found on another page of this history. Charles P. Snyder is the fifth child in the family and was educated in the public schools of his native country and at an early age began working on the Snyder ranch and at mining until 1894. From that year until 1901 he taught school in that county. In the meantime he saw service as a private during the Spanish-American War in 1898. He studied law and served as deputy district attorney of Calaveras County from 1903 to 1907, then resumed his private practice, continuing until he was elected to the office of district attorney, his term in office running from 1915 to 1923. In all matters of public import that effect the affairs of Calaveras County, in fact the entire state of California, Charles P. Snyder is found to be taking a leading and prominent part. He is well versed in the law and has been connected with some of the more prominent cases in his native county.

It is worthy to mention that he is one of a family of six sons, five of whom were admitted to the bar and have become prominent in Central California; one was the late John J. Snyder, formerly district attorney of Calaveras County; another, Jacob P. Snyder, now of Stockton, is an ex-district attorney of Calaveras County; a third is Charles P., subject of this review; Will G. served as district attorney of Amador county; and the youngest, George F. Snyder was formerly a member of the State Legislature and is now a member of the law firm of Hoefler, Cook & Snyder in San Francisco. The Snyder family have a record of service to be proud of, four brothers serving as district attorneys during their careers as professional men.

AMERIGO E. GIANELLI. A native son who by his own individual efforts has risen to business prominence and influence in Stockton, is Amerigo E. Gianelli, who was born in Stockton, a son of Joseph Gainelli, one of Stockton's pioneers and prominent business men.

Amerigo E. Gianelli was reared and educated in his native city and is the founder of the A. E. Gianelli Company, prominent among the real estate and insurance firms of Stockton. During recent years he has figured in some of the largest investment transactions, for having extensive financial connections he is in a position to handle the most important deals. He knows the locations and values in the city of Stockton and the fruit, dairy and alfalfa sections surrounding from years of intimate association and knows the Delta country like a book, and so enjoys the confidence of men and women of affairs for whom he has handled large investments. He also conducted one of the largest insurance businesses in Central California, every kind of protective policy being written.

The marriage of Mr. Gianelli occurred in Stockton where he was united with Miss Edna Lamb, a native daughter of California, and a daughter of Charles and Belle (Norcross) Lamb, and they have one child, a stalwart son, Edward. An active upbuilder, Mr. Gianelli has been prominent in the construction of good roads, helping in the building of the Borden Road across the Delta and the highway across Union Island.

JOHN D. MAXEY.—Finely equipped as to business training is John D. Maxey, auditor of San Joaquin County, who in his day has been school teacher, law student, clerk, hospital attendant, land office official, bank cashier, dairy rancher and realty agent. He was born in Smith County, Tennessee, October 29, 1860, reared on a farm, and was educated in and later taught others in the Tennessee schools. At twenty-two, in 1882, he went to Anna, Ill., where he read law with his brother. Though he filled several clerical positions, he abandoned his legal ambitions and did not seek bar admission. Arriving in Stockton, Cal., on April 1, 1890, Mr. Maxey became an attendant in the State Hospital for the Insane, remaining over eight years. Then he was appointed registrar in the United States Land Office in Stockton, in which position he remained until, in 1906, the office was consolidated with that at Sacramento owing to the diminution of government land. The same year he helped organize the Union Safe Deposit Bank and was made its cashier, a position he held until he sold out his interest.

Ranching next occupied Mr. Maxey's attention, and he removed to his 160-acre dairy ranch near Manteca, which he had acquired some time earlier. He resided on this ranch and conducted a first class dairy until 1910. When he bought this place it was not under irrigation, but he had advanced ideas and helped to organize the irrigation district of South San Joaquin. This brought his fine property under irrigation and did much good for the entire district.

As time went on he greatly developed his investment, planting all of it to alfalfa, building a modern cement-floored, glass-sided dairy barn, with sixty-cow capacity, and sanitary and up-to-date in every particular. He also erected a 160-ton hay barn. This property is still his, but at present is rented out. It is deemed one of the best-improved dairy ranches in the county.

In 1910 Mr. Maxey returned to Stockton and, with B. F. Goode as partner, conducted a realty and insurance business until March 1, 1913, when he was appointed auditor and recorder of the county to fill the unexpired term of James A. Kroh, resigned. Until January 1, 1915, these offices were under one head, but they were separated; and as candidate for county auditor Mr. Maxey easily won and he was re-elected in 1918 and in 1922, and is still county auditor. He is a Republican.

Mr. Maxey has been twice married. In 1888 he married Fannie Maple at Anna, Ill., and she passed away in 1901 at Stockton. On November 19, 1902, he was united with Mrs. Lizzette W. Ryan, daughter of the late John C. White, and she was born in Stockton in the house in which Mr. and Mrs. Maxey now live. They have two children, Elizabeth and John D., Jr.

WALTER D. HARRINGTON.—A man of enterprise, practical and progressive, Walter D. Harrington is now serving in the capacity of city engineer of Tracy, San Joaquin County. His birthplace was Virginia City, Nev., and he first saw the light of day on November 16, 1879. His father, John D. Harrington, is of English and Scotch extraction, while his mother, Mrs. Estella Harrington, comes from the old Stover family originating in Perth, Scotland; both were born and reared in New England, whither their parents had removed before the Revolutionary War. Walter D. received his education in the schools of Nevada and after finishing high school entered the University of Nevada from which he was graduated as a mining engineer in 1903. After his graduation he followed mining engineering for a short time; then was engaged as hydraulic engineer by the United States in U. S. Geological Survey; in the fall of 1904 he became an engineer in the U. S. Reclamation Service and this work covered a period of ten years, with the exception of a short time when he was with the war department. He then became construction engineer for the Southern Pacific Railroad Company in California and for the Oregon Short Line at Salt Lake, and finally returned to California and has since followed irrigation and general hydraulic work.

On June 24, 1909, in Provo, Utah, Mr. Harrington was united in marriage with Miss L. Katherine Dobler, a daughter of Jacob Dobler. Her father was at one time an active member in one of the few successful co-operative colonies in western Colorado. In 1919 he and his family removed to California. Mr. and Mrs. Harrington are the parents of three children: Fontaine, Mildred, and Walter Delbert, Jr. Mr. Harrington was appointed city engineer of Tracy in May, 1920, and his expert knowledge has proven him of great value to the community. Fraternally he is a thirty-second degree Mason, a Shriner and Scot, and also a member of the Knights of Pythias. Politically he gives his support to progressive, constructive legislation, regardless of party lines, supporting the best man for public office. In his religious faith he is a member of the Presbyterian Church and is the president of the board of trustees of that body. During the Spanish-American war he served as trumpeter of Troop M. of the Rough Riders in Cuba.

GEORGE E. SNOW.—A native son of San Joaquin County whose entire lifetime has been spent within its confines is George E. Snow, the capable superintendent of the water division of the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. He began to work for this company in 1900, first on plant construction, then in 1905 was appointed superintendent of the water division, a position he has since filled with great efficiency. When Mr. Snow began his service with the company very few wells were needed to supply the customers, for there were but 3,100 services; now the company operates thirty wells and there are 10,000 services or customers. He was born at Colledgeville, Cal., March 19, 1872, the son of William H. and Sarah A. (Adams) Snow, natives of New York and Missouri, respectively. William H. Snow crossed the plains to California in 1852 and soon after arrival settled in San Joaquin County where he worked for Capt. Moss and William Butterick, building levees on the river and farming; later he was married to Miss Sarah A. Adams and they took up their residence at Colledgeville, where the father engaged in the butcher business and was road master for several years; he was also school trustee for the Colledgeville school district, then known as the McKamy district. William H. Snow was interested in fine horses and was a member of the old San Joaquin County Agricultural Society and took an active part in the horse races held at the race track in early days. Six children were born to this pioneer couple, three of whom are now living; William S. resides at Kingsburg, Cal.; George E.; Mrs. J. F. Kidder resides in San Francisco. Both parents are now deceased.

George E. Snow received his education in the district school at Colledgeville; when sixteen he began to work in his father's butcher shop and at farm work; later he and his brother conducted a butcher business in Stockton. In 1900 he began his service with the old Stockton Water Company, owned by private individuals; later this company became the California Gas & Electric Company and was later taken over by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. His service has extended over a period of twenty-two years and at present he is the oldest man with this company in point of service. For five years he worked on plant construction throughout the state, then became the head of the water division in Stockton, a position he has filled to the entire satisfaction of the company.

The marriage of Mr. Snow united him with Myrtle Crawford, born in Amador County, daughter of pioneer parents, and they are the parents of four children; Myrtle is the wife of L. D. Haney and they reside in San Jose; Evelyn is the wife of A. H. Green residing in Stockton; Verna and George E., Jr., are students in the Stockton schools. The family residence is located at 1835 McKinley Avenue. Mr. Snow has been a member of Protection Camp 106 W. O. W. The movements and measures which affect the general welfare are matters of deep interest to Mr. Snow and he has cooperated in many measures that have been forceful and effective factors in advancing general progress.

Geo. C. Snow.

JOHN C. DROGE.—A pioneer of more than ordinary interest is found in John C. Droge, who has been a leader in the development and prosperity of Tracy for the past twenty years, and he is counted among the leading citizens of that prosperous city. He was born near Holm, Schleswig-Holstein, on November 23, 1840, where he was reared and educated. When he reached the age of sixteen he left home to come to America in a sailing vessel and arriving in New York City he set out for Aspinwall on an old tub called the "George Law," which barely crept along, and which, on her very next voyage while well out at sea, went down in calm weather with Captain Herndon and all on board. After crossing the Isthmus of Panama, he took passage on the side-wheeler "Golden Gate," Captain James Whiting became a staunch friend of Mr. Droge during the thirty days occupied by the trip to San Francisco, arriving in that city on June 15, 1857. He had been preceded to America by his brother Peter some four years before, who had been lured to the mines by the tales of the finding of marvelous wealth. John C. soon found his way to Placer County where he located his brother, who had spent several years in the mines, which had not proven very remunerative. The two brothers then returned to San Francisco where Peter Droge followed contracting, married and reared a large family, and passed away in 1918 at the age of eighty-four years.

John C. became a clerk in a grocery store on Geary Street, San Francisco, but not feeling satisfied, he went to San Mateo County and rented a tract of land which he farmed to hay and grain. By 1867, he had saved a sufficient sum of money to buy some government land in San Joaquin County, located near Ellis (now the city of Tracy); this tract of land he leased on shares to grain farmers for thirty years. From time to time he occupied more land, some railroad and some government land, and at times owned as much as 2,500 acres. In 1868 Mr. Droge became a citizen of the United States and in 1869 returned to San Francisco and opened up a small store which he successfully conducted for four years, selling out to good advantage in 1873. He then concluded to make an extensive trip to the homeland, which occupied two years, the greater part of the time spent as a student in the Technical School of Hamburg, Germany, a private, high class institution. Returning to California via New York in 1875, Mr. Droge settled in Monterey County where he opened a general merchandise store at Chualar, in the Salinas Valley, and in connection conducted the post office and Wells Fargo business and eleven years was occupied in this way. Being of a thrifty and economic turn of mind, he invested his money in land and became one of the most extensive land owners in Monterey County; he also did a good deal of surveying of land for others. In 1882 he made a trip to see his father, spending a year, and covering considerable portion of Europe. Returning to California, he disposed of his store and lands in Monterey County and in 1884 returned to Germany to remain with his father until his death in 1889. From 1889 to 1891 he attended the University of Berlin, taking a course in the development of surveying and civil engineering and also traveling extensively throughout Europe, including Norway, Sweden, Italy, etc. Returning to America and California in 1891, he was occupied in Monterey County and San Francisco for four years, settling in Tracy in 1895, where he became an active builder of the municipality. In partnership with Joshua Brown the remaining holdings of the Pacific Improvement Company were purchased, which consisted of valuable town lots and some ranch land just outside of Tracy. In 1909, he founded the Bank of Tracy and served as its president for ten years; in 1910 built the bank building, the American and Central houses; in 1911 built the Central garage and its annex; and in 1922 erected a class A theater building with a seating capacity of 1,000 persons. He has just completed the erection of six store buildings on Central Avenue. Besides his extensive land holdings in San Joaquin County, he owns land in Riverside, Imperial, Stanislaus, Kern, besides ranches near Las Vegas, Nevada. Although retired from active business cares, he still keeps in close touch with his large holdings in a most capable and efficient manner. He is a Republican in politics.

ERNEST GIESEKE.—A man of force and ability, Ernest Gieseke enjoys an enviable record of thirty years of public service as peace officer and constable of Tulare township, San Joaquin County, and his residence in Tracy covers more than forty years. He was born on January 4, 1850, in Hanover, Germany, and was fortunate in receiving a good education before he left his native country. In July, 1868, he boarded a westbound steamer at Hamburg, and in due time reached New York City; however, he had determined on California as his final destination, and soon after his arrival in America he took passage on the steamer San Diego de Cuba for Aspinwall, from there crossing the Isthmus by railroad; thence by steamer up the coast to San Francisco, arriving during August of 1868. He spent two weeks in San Francisco, then took passage on the steamer "Old Julia," a fast boat used on the river for express and passenger service, as the railroad had not been built. He found employment as a ranch hand throughout the county and on a large sheep range near San Joaquin City became well acquainted with the late Hal Fiske, pioneer capitalist and philanthropist. In those early days wild game was in abundance, and Mr. Gieseke enjoyed his share of it.

The marriage of Mr. Gieseke occurred at Stockton and united him with Miss Marguerite Yost, a daughter of the late Mrs. Christian Yost-Ludwig of Tracy. Mrs. Gieseke is a native of Philadelphia, Pa., but came to San Francisco, Cal., with her parents in 1867 and the following year located in Ellis, and ten years later settled in Tracy. Mr. and Mrs. Gieseke are the parents of three children: Henry W. is married and resides in Tracy and is employed by the Southern Pacific Railroad; Albert is married and resides at San Pablo, and is employed by the Standard Oil Company; Pearl is the wife of James N. Lamb, residing at Tracy, and they have one son.

Mr. Gieseke received his U. S. citizenship in Stockton in 1871. He became prominent as an agriculturist and engaged extensively in raising grain on the West Side; he then took up the breeding and raising of thoroughbred stock and in 1878 removed to Tracy and established the Pacific Stables and conducted a livery business. He was noted all over the state for his fine animals and was well known as a trader and breeder of fine horses. During his residence in Tracy, he has acquired some very fine income property, has constructed and owns several fine residences which he rents. Mr. Gieseke has been most active in educational matters and served on the board of trustees for many years. Fraternaly, he helped to organize the Knights of Pythias No. 18, and is a charter member and past officer, and past grand of the Odd Fellows' Lodge of Tracy. In the discharge of the duties of his office as constable, he was daring and relentless; if he started after a criminal, sooner or later he captured him; among them C. Phillips, the jail breaker and criminal, and another the grain sack thief who operated throughout the San Joaquin Valley in 1901. Mr. Gieseke worked in co-operation with Sheriff Cunningham for six years and the association grew into a strong friendship. During the '90s he served as a member of the Republican County Central Committee and was twice a delegate to the state convention. He is a liberal contributor to the Red Cross and other local benevolences and cheerfully gives of his time and means toward all movements for the general progress of his home city.

PAUL WILLIAM HARDER.—A practical and scientific rancher, who draws upon his own valuable experience, and who has the confidence of his associates, because of his conservatively progressive methods, is Paul William Harder. He was born in Germany on November 7, 1865, and when six years old accompanied his parents, John and Magdalena M. (Peters) Harder to America, arriving in July of 1873; the following September his father, John Harder, passed away. The mother, with three sons, of which our subject is the eldest, the second being August, now residing near Byron, and Richard, who died en route to the Klondike on March 8, 1896, resided in San Joaquin County until 1883, when she removed to Marsh Creek, and in October, 1907, she settled in Fruitvale, Cal., where she passed away on March 16, 1912. When Paul William reached the age of fourteen he went to work on the M. Lammers ranch for ten dollars per month and was thus occupied until he started for himself; in 1888 he leased a part of the ranch belonging to Philip Fabian near Tracy, paying for same with a portion of the money from the wheat crop.

On November 23, 1889, Mr. Harder was united in marriage with Miss Minnie Collins, the youngest daughter of the late John W. and Anna (Pruser) Collins. Mrs. Collins was a native of Germany, born at Elmshorn, and was a resident of California for about forty years. William Pruser, a brother, John Collins, a son, and two daughters, Mrs. Annie Linnie and Mrs. Harder, all residing in the vicinity of Tracy, survive her. Mr. Collins passed away in 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Harder are the parents of two children: Anna M. is the wife of Austin K. Felt, a prominent merchant of Sacramento; Paul W., Jr., enlisted in the U. S. Marine Corps on June 4, 1917, as commander's orderly and served at Bremerton, Wash., for seven months, receiving his discharge in 1919. He was married on November 2, 1918, at Seattle, Wash., to Miss Lucile F. Baker, and they now reside in Tracy. Since 1915, Mr. Harder has farmed his present home place; the Western Pacific Railroad has a right-of-way through a portion of it and the shipping point called Belpico affords a convenient loading station for his produce. Mr. Harder is a member of the local Farm Bureau and the Federation of American Farmers. At Stockton in 1883 he received his U. S. citizenship papers and has been a most loyal supporter of the principles of the Republican party ever since. Mr. Harder and his family are members of the Lutheran Church of Tracy.

JAMES P. CARROLL.—Many have been the years that have come and gone and great the changes that have occurred during the residence of James P. Carroll in San Joaquin County; he now makes his home on the French Camp Road some eighteen miles southeast of Stockton at Carrolton Station on the Tidewater Southern Electric Railroad. He was born near New London, Conn., October 23, 1852, and is a twin brother of Michael O. Carroll, a resident of Stockton. His father, Michael C. Carroll, was born in Kilkenny, Ireland in 1828 and at the age of eighteen years came to America and followed the blacksmith's trade in New London, Conn., until 1852, at which time he embarked for California via Panama. He arrived in San Francisco in the spring of 1853 and at once went to the mines in Placer County, where he followed mining for about five years. He then worked at blacksmithing for two years in Stockton, then in 1861 purchased a ranch in Dent township from John O'Malley and from time to time purchased more land until he finally owned 720 acres, which he improved and put under cultivation, and in the fall of 1876 he erected a fine residence. On October 27, 1850, he was married to Miss Mary Mulronee and they had four children, three sons and one daughter. The cause of education found in him a warm friend and he served as a school trustee in his locality. He was a liberal contributor to churches and charities; he was also a strong Democrat and kept well informed on the issues of the day. His belief in and advocacy of irrigation led him to donate a right of way through his land to the Tulloch system of irrigation, used prior to the present adequate system.

James P. Carroll was only one year old when he accompanied his parents to California and he has since resided in San Joaquin County. His education was received in the Van Allen district school and he remained on the farm and did so until he was twenty-five years old, then went to Stockton and was employed for three seasons in the J. Kilpatrick Barley Mills; he also worked on threshing outfits throughout the county.

Mr. Carroll's marriage united him with Miss Nellie C. Dempsey, a daughter of William Dempsey, a pioneer of Stockton. Three children were born to them: Alfred B. married Miss Annie Clinton and they have two children, Dempsey A., and Kathryn; Mamie died at the age of six years; Gwendolyn is employed in the Motor Vehicle Department of the state of California at Modesto. The wife and mother passed away in 1921, beloved by all who knew her. Mr. Carroll has spent twenty-five years of his useful life in public service. In 1880 he became constable and was in close association with Thomas Cunningham, sheriff of San Joaquin County, and for four years he was chief of the fire department of Stockton. Since retiring from public office, he has served for eight years as director of the South San Joaquin irrigation district. His ranch is a model alfalfa ranch, which has been turned over to his son. For four years, Mr. Carroll, was the manager of the Stockton baseball team and in 1888 Stockton won the championship pennant, Coast League.

James P. Carroll

CHARLES H. DAVIDSON.—For the past sixteen years Charles H. Davidson has been the faithful mail carrier of the rural route No. 6 out of Stockton and in the interim conducts two ranches, one on McKinley Avenue south of Stockton and the other near French Camp, the two places containing about sixty-five acres. He is a native son of California, born near Oakdale, February 23, 1876, a son of Marcus A. Davidson, a native of Vermont who pioneered in California, first as a prospector, then as a stock raiser and dry farmer, but before his death engaged in dairying and was a staunch advocate of irrigation. Both parents are now deceased. Charles H. was reared in Stockton and attended the Jackson school. Early in young manhood he started in a small way to retail milk to the residents of Stockton and steadily his business grew until it became very extensive and he conducted it for ten years with fine profit; later he engaged as teamster for the company for five years.

On June 3, 1896, Mr. Davidson was married to Miss Emma H. Hoessel, a native of Stockton and a daughter of George E. Hoessel, prominent pioneer and butcher of Stockton. George E. Hoessel married Miss Carolina S. Wagener, who passed away January 13, 1922, an honored pioneer woman of her locality. Three sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Davidson: Walter W. is a graduate of the public schools and the University of Washington and at present is a veterinary surgeon and state meat inspector; Carleton H. is a rancher; and Charles M. is a student in the Stockton high school. Mr. Davidson owns the old Captain Moss home place on McKinley Avenue, South Stockton, also a fine ranch near French Camp and he spends much of his leisure time at his ranches. Mr. Davidson and his two eldest sons are members of the Stockton Parlor of the N. S. G. W., and Mrs. Davidson was a member of the N. D. G. W.

JAMES FRANCIS COSTELLO.—Numbered among the venerable and honored citizens of San Joaquin County is James Francis Costello who is also an early settler of the county, locating in the Waterloo district of San Joaquin County forty-four years ago. He worked for wages about two years, then went into partnership with M. T. Noyes, raising wheat on the Comstock ridge for several years. He was born at Franklin, Mass., December 1, 1855, and when three years old was taken by his parents to St. Anthony Falls, Minn., where they located on a small farm and there our subject received his education. At the age of fourteen years he went to the lumber camps near the head waters of the Mississippi River on Pokegama Lake and during the five years spent there he learned much of the language and customs of the Chippewa Indians. In 1876 Mr. Costello left Minnesota with a party of four men on their way to Astoria, Ore. and on reaching the lumber region of northern Oregon they spent one season in the camps, enduring hardships and privations. Mr. Costello then came south on a vessel bound for San Francisco and in the early part of 1878 arrived in Stockton and the San Joaquin Valley which has been his home ever since. Later when he located at Lathrop he went into partnership with H. W. Cowell and engaged in breeding and raising thoroughbred cattle of the polled Angus and Galway breeds. They herded their stock over the unsettled land where not a furrow had been turned nor an improvement made and there being no fences, they roamed at will. Mr. Costello was engaged in this line of industry for two years, when he went into the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at the round house at Lathrop and for the following twenty-two years he worked in various departments of the railroad company. In the meantime, Mr. Costello had purchased three small ranches and what time he could take from his railroad work, he spent improving these ranches.

The marriage of Mr. Costello occurred in 1887 and united him with Miss Ida E. McKee, a daughter of Eli and Mary (Dickenson) McKee, sturdy pioneers of San Joaquin County, who came to California in 1873. Eli McKee was a soldier during the Civil War and he passed away in 1901, while the mother is still living and is past eighty years of age, residing at Santa Cruz. Mr. and Mrs. Costello are the parents of three children: Francis Leroy; Eugene Earl is married and has two children; Elmo Wright is married and resides at Oakland. For forty years Mr. Costello has been a member of Linden Lodge of Odd Fellows No. 102 and in politics is a Republican. About three years ago he had the misfortune to lose his eyesight, but he has never lost hope that it will some day be restored. Many years have come and gone during the period of his residence here, and he has ever belonged to that class who uphold the public stability along material, intellectual and moral lines, which is shown by the fact that for twelve consecutive years he served as school trustee of the East Union district.

MRS. LENA EGGERS.—Active alike in public movements and in private charities, Mrs. Lena Eggers, a highly-esteemed native of Germany who has become a patriotic American by adoption, has done everything in her power to bring about new development in agricultural enterprises in the section where she has long made her home. She was born in Holstein on December 12, 1854, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hans Wehde, both natives of Germany and in 1886 she came out to California, after spending a short time, en route, at Omaha. She has been married three times and is now a widow.

In 1874 she was first married to William Harder, and their union was crowned with the birth of four children: Maggie, wife of Julius Kiesling, resides at Omaha, Nebr., and has eleven children; William Harder, Jr., also resides at Omaha, Nebr., with his wife and three children: Emma is the wife of Joseph Gonzales, employed by the Associated Pipe Line and resides in Tracy, and they have one child; George F. died in 1916, thirty-one years old.

In 1886, Mrs Harder remarried at Stockton, her second husband being Hans Gosch, by whom she had one child: Caroline F. Gosch; she married A. J. Irwin, who was accidentally killed in an explosion, while employed on the Associated Pipe Line, March 23, 1922, leaving his widow with one child, Frederick R. Irwin. Our subject was married a third time to Peter Eggers of San Joaquin City. By him she had three children: Robert, Kate and Fred. Robert and Fred farm her place of 600 acres running to grain and sheep. Robert was born April 25, 1891, and is one of San Joaquin County's rising ranchers and stockmen. He belongs to the Knights of Pythias. Kate is at home, while Fred has an honorable war record to his credit. He enlisted and served in the U. S. Marine Corps, as corporal in Company 105, 8th Regiment and was honorably discharged at the Presidio at San Francisco at the close of the war. He is a member of Tracy Parlor, N. S. G. W.

Peter Eggers, who passed away on September 22, 1910, at his home near Vernalis, was born in Holstein, Germany, on August 18, 1854, and was brought out to California in the early sixties. He was an employee of Mr. Holt who was engaged in the raising of stock and sheep, and after a while he acquired a ranch near Vernalis for himself. His first marriage united him with Miss Maria Hagermann, and by her he had five children: Henry died when twelve years old; Annie is the wife of Frank Trebois, employed by the P. G. & E. Company. He resides in San Francisco and has one child: Louisa, wife of H. Raffensberger, resides in San Francisco; Wm. Eggers, a rancher north of Stockton, served in the Marine Corps; Maria died when six years old. At the time of his death, Mr. Eggers was widely known for his extensive farming operations, and since then the enterprise thus splendidly inaugurated by this worthy pioneer has been carried on by the sons, Robert and Fred. The valuable home-place is located on the edge of the picturesque Hospital Canyon, about three miles to the west of Vernalis, and includes some 600 rich and highly-productive acres. The family have made this place their home since 1916, nor could a more desirable site be found in all San Joaquin County.

PAUL L. NESS.—Well known as an able pharmacist, a successful business man and a progressive citizen, Paul L. Ness is the owner and proprietor of the Ness Drug Store at Ripon. He was born at Lofoden, Norway, June 28, 1880, a son of Johan Ness, a physician of that place, but early in life he was bereaved of both father and mother, and so deprived of many of the enjoyments of childhood. He was confirmed in the Lutheran Church and attended the schools of his district, and while a mere youth began the study of pharmacy, starting as an errand boy and holding positions in drug stores at Stockmarknes, Hemmingsver and Kobelvorg, and being an apt student he acquired both a practical and theoretical knowledge of pharmacy.

Coming to the United States in 1904, Mr. Ness held positions at Granite Falls, Minn., and Lily, S. D., until the fall of 1906, when he came to California, where he similarly engaged at Berkeley and Oakland until 1909, when he came to Oakdale, where he soon became the proprietor of a drug store. Disposing of this, he left for an extended visit to his old home in 1914, his tour over Europe covering over seven months. Returning to San Francisco he bought out a drug store at San Rafael, which he disposed of after operating it for more than a year and in 1915 came to Ripon, where he established the P. L. Ness Pharmacy and a few years later, in association with Dr. N. B. Gould, built the Ripon Hospital.

In 1922 Mr. Ness built the beautiful two-story pressed brick building at Stockton and Main streets, Ripon, and this will be the permanent home for his pharmacy. It is one of the best appointed drug stores in the San Joaquin Valley and reflects great credit on its owner. By his uniform kindness, courteous ways and strict attention to business, Mr. Ness has won a success that is well deserved. A naturalized citizen of his adopted land, he works for the best interests of the community in all things.

MRS. NANNIE HALLER CARR.—A well-known and honored resident of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County is found in Mrs. Nannie Haller Carr, who has continuously resided in San Joaquin County since her marriage in 1893, with the exception of a year spent in Council Bluffs, Iowa. She was born at Tazewell Court House, Tazewell County, Va., January 4, 1848, a daughter of Dr. James R. Doak and his wife, Mary Letitia (Haller) Doak, both natives of Virginia. Although James R. Doak was a Virginian, he was a staunch supporter of the Union. He was heartily against secession and voiced his opinion freely until Virginia withdrew from the Union; then he was forced to keep quiet. He was a physician and a large landholder, and was prominent and influential in his community. His services were required by the rich and poor, and no one in need of a physician's care ever was neglected by him. For six years he served as county clerk of Tazewell County. When he passed away at the age of sixty-seven, he was mourned by scores of friends and acquaintances whom he had served. Her mother was a daughter of the noted physician Dr. George Haller, of Marion, Va. She was only twenty-nine years old when she passed away, leaving a family of five children: Reece C.; Nannie, the subject of this sketch; Rachel, Mrs. W. J. Thompson, deceased; James R., deceased at the age of ten years; and William V., who passed away in April, 1922.

Mrs. Carr received her education at the Convent of Ville Marie, Abingdon, Va., conducted by the Visitation Nuns of the Catholic Church. After her father's death she returned to the Convent of Ville Marie and took a four-years course. At the end of her course, she went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, on a visit to friends; then on to Utah, where she visited for a year; and then on to San Francisco, in 1891, to visit other friends. While there she met her future husband, B. J. Carr, and they were married on April 19, 1893. B. J. Carr was born near Memphis, Tenn., a son of Simon and Love (Dillon) Carr, both natives of Tennessee. Simon Carr was the owner of a large plantation on which were a large number of negroes, who were freed by the Civil War. Though raised in the South, Mr. Carr was an abolitionist, like his father. He was too young to enlist, but nevertheless ran away and joined the Union Army. At first he drove a wagon; but he did not like it, for he wanted to be a soldier, so he became a member of Company B, 3rd Illinois Cavalry, and served until the close of the war. Afterwards he was sent with his regiment against the Indians, until he was discharged. He worked for a while in Illinois, and then came to California; and it was in this state he met and married Miss Doak. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Carr removed to Stockton, where they resided for a time. Then they removed to Council Bluffs, Iowa, but the following spring they returned to California. At this time, Mr. Carr purchased a thirty-acre place, known as the Gillingham ranch in the Lafayette school district southwest of Lodi. This they improved to vineyard; and here was the home of this worthy couple until the death of Mr. Carr, which occurred April 27, 1914. Then Mrs. Carr moved to Lodi and leased her ranch until 1921, when she sold it to Henry Perrin. The money received from the sale of her ranch was donated by Mrs. Carr to the building of St. Ann's Catholic school in Lodi. Mrs. Carr is living retired at her residence located at 435 South Sacramento street, Lodi, Cal. Mr. Carr was a Republican, as is also Mrs. Carr. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Masons; and he was a member of Hartford Post, 155, G. A. R., Lodi. Mrs. Carr is a member of St. Ann's Catholic Church of Lodi.

B. J. Carr
Nannie H. Carr

WILLARD HANSEL.—The interesting annals of more than one historic family are called in the life-story of Willard Hansel, the retired rancher and honored veteran of the Grand Army of the Republic. Born in Pickaway County, Ohio, near Circleville, February 2, 1842, he was the son of John and Mary (Burt) Hansel. Mrs. Hansel came from the same town in Ohio, although her parents were natives of Connecticut, while John Hansel came from Rush Creek, Canada. He died in Ohio; and then his devoted widow joined her father's family, who migrated to Illinois in 1844. Willard had only very limited opportunity, therefore to get an education, but attended for a short time a school that was held in a log cabin.

Patriotic by nature, Willard Hansel enlisted for service in the Civil War on the Fourth of July, 1861, joining the 1st Illinois Cavalry, under General Fremont, who had fought in the Southwest. He was taken prisoner at Lexington, Mo., November 20, 1861, and on the afternoon of the next day, was let go again, as the Rebels at that place did not have sufficient numbers to guard the prisoners they had taken. He then served for three months in the 70th Illinois Infantry, after which he was again transferred to the 1st Illinois Cavalry Regiment. On account of some discrepancies in the transfer made, his company was discharged from the army by the governor of Illinois. During the time he did serve, the 70th was on guard duty, caring for some 10,000 Rebel prisoners from Alton to Vicksburg Landing.

In the spring of 1863, the 1st and 2nd lieutenants of the company organized a little band of seven men, including our subject, and crossed the great plains, driving sixty head of horses and mules to Washoe City, nine miles from Reno, Nev.; and there Willard Hansel went to work in the woods. In 1864, he enlisted in the 1st Nevada Cavalry and wintered at Camp Nye; and in the spring this regiment was sent out to quell the Indian uprising near Winnemucca. Many Indians were killed in the encounters that followed, and the Indian forces then there, were completely shattered, the last battle being fought on November 20, 1865. Soon after this encounter the regiment returned to Fort Churchill, and in the same month was discharged.

Mr. Hansel worked in the sawmills in Nevada until 1866, when he came to San Joaquin County, returning to Nevada each summer for the following three years to work in the sawmills, and coming back for the winter to Clements. In 1896, he settled down for good here, and he has ever since resided in the north-eastern part of the county. At Lockeford, on December 15, 1869, he was married to Miss Martha Ellen McDowell, who was born on June 20, 1850, near Van Buren, Ill., the daughter of Jesse F. McDowell, who had married Elizabeth J. Hodge. Mr. McDowell was born in Columbia, Adair County, Ky., on November 18, 1819, his parents being Jacob and Agnes McDowell, both natives of Virginia. In 1840, he migrated to Hillsboro, in Montgomery County, Ill., where he plied his trade as a carpenter for a few years; and then he farmed at Van Buren, Ill., until 1852. In that year, he crossed the untracked plains and settled in San Joaquin County, and for a while continued to work at his trade. In 1856, he took up a half-section of land on the north side of the Mokelumne River, about one mile north of the present site of Clements, at what then was known as Mackville Corner; and a few years afterward he purchased 278 acres, bringing his holdings in 1879 to 598 acres.

In 1870, Mr. Hansel helped Mr. McDowell to build a fine two-story stone house on the ranch at Mackville Corner; and since it then cost about $5,000, it was rightly regarded as one of the best residences in that section of the country. Later on, in the eighties, Mr. McDowell purchased still more land, until he had acquired in the aggregate 1,178 acres. After this he divided 1,000 acres among his children, retaining 178 acres for his own use, which he held until his death, raising horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, wheat, barley, corn, alfalfa, and hay. In 1843, Jesse F. McDowell had married Elizabeth J. Hodge, at Van Buren, Ill., who was destined to pass away in September, 1852, while crossing the plains, her death occurring in Nevada. She was a native of Kentucky, and left behind the enviable heritage of a good name. Several children came of this fortunate marriage: Mary J., the eldest, became the wife of A. J. Burt; Tina A. is now Mrs. George Stacy. Martha Ellen is the wife of the subject of this sketch. In 1864, Mr. McDowell remarried, this time choosing for his wife Miss Margaret Montgomery; and they had one child, Carry, Mrs. Marcus Steely, who resides at the old home. The second Mrs. McDowell died in 1888. Mr. McDowell was a member of the Freemasons and Good Templars of Lockeford, until his death. For years, he was justice of the peace in the Elliott Precinct.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Willard Hansel farmed a part of J. F. McDowell's place, and then he leased the Kerr rancho at Lockeford, a tract of 320 acres, and farmed there for three years, raising for the most part vegetables and grain. He then moved to a ranch on Dry Creek, west of Galt, then called the Yankee Jim Ranch; but he was flooded out by the rising waters of the Mokelumne River, two years in succession, and thereby he lost all he had gained before. He brought his family back to Clements, and there they lived for the next two years while he worked in the sugar pines on Putnam Mountain, in Mariposa County, trying to make another stake. He returned to Clements, and at that time his wife fell heir to her share of the old McDowell ranch, one mile north of Clements. This led to his removal to Clements, in which place he has lived ever since.

Seven children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Hansel, and they have been privileged to see four generations. Oatus was born on September 29, 1870, and died in 1888; Emma first saw the light on May 3, 1872, and is now Mrs. Russell, of Clements; Ella born on March 7, 1877, is Mrs. F. H. Mercer, of Jackson, Mich.; Carrie, born on December 2, 1873, died on March 9, 1877; Franklin was born on August 2, 1875; Alma, Mrs. P. A. Athearn, of Stockton, first saw light on February 13, 1883; and Orrie, born April 13, 1887, died in 1919, at the age of thirty-two. Mrs. Russell married previously, and was the wife of Alvin Raines, now deceased; she resides with Mr. and Mrs. Hansel, and they have through her first marriage five grandchildren. Arthur A. lives at Costello, Cal.; Lester L. is in Lockeford; Velma Florence has become Mrs. Raggio, of Jackson; and Elden and Ellen are both students. Alma Athearn, of Stockton, has one son, Allen; and Mrs. Mercer, of Jackson, has three children, Franklin Earl, Dorothy and Willard. The great-grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. Hansel are as follows: Arthur A. Raines, of Costello, has two children, Arthur Alvin and Nola Mae; Lester Raines, of Lockeford, has three children, Lois Elva, Alta Marie, and Dara June.

Mr. Hansel is a staunch Republican, particularly interested in government aid for industrial development; but he is first, last and all the time an American. He has great faith in California, and is especially optimistic as to the future of San Joaquin County.

NICOLAUS KOSTER.—A representative farmer and stockraiser in San Joaquin County is found in Nicolaus Koster, whose 1600 acre grain ranch is in the New Jerusalem school district, and who in 1919 retired to Tracy, where he resides at No. 145 East Ninth Street. He is a native of Germany, his birth having occurred in Holstein on May 14, 1855. His parents, John and Catherine Koster, were also natives of Germany, and there Nicolaus Koster was reared, remaining in Germany until nineteen years of age, when in 1874 he emigrated to the United States. He did not tarry long in the East, however, but made his way direct to Nebraska and resided for a time near Omaha in that state. In December, 1875, he came to California, was employed for a short time near Nicolaus, Sutter County. Subsequently he spent a brief period in work in Contra Costa County and later he removed to Oregon, where he continued, however, for only a brief time. In 1876 he came to San Joaquin County, and throughout the intervening years has remained here almost continuously, settling upon his present ranch in 1880. He owns 1600 acres of valuable land all under cultivation located in the vicinity of Vernalis, San Joaquin County. He has made many improvements upon the property, and that it is now a valuable ranch, well equipped, is due to his untiring efforts and capable management.

The marriage of Mr. Koster occurred on April 9, 1885, and united him with Miss Wilhelmina C. Hilken, of San Joaquin County, and to them have been born three children: Nicolaus passed away in 1916, thirty years of age; William, born near Vernalis, was married to Miss Elsie M. Dorman of Fresno, on December 23, 1920, and is the active manager of the extensive land holdings of his father. Minnie C. married George Goepfert, a successful merchant in San Francisco, and they are the parents of three children, Vera, Howard, and Tootsie. Mrs. Koster was born May 1, 1865, in San Francisco, Cal., a daughter of John and Marie (Garlish) Hilken, both natives of Bremen, Germany. Her father came to California in 1849, engaged in gold mining and for a time made his home in San Francisco, after which he came with his family to San Joaquin Co. in 1869. He settled near the present site of Tracy and there spent his remaining days, his death occurring in 1878. His wife survived until 1892. They were the parents of the following children: Daniel H.; Gesiene M., the widow of John Rathjen, of San Joaquin County; Fredericka A., the wife of Harry Rhoads of the same county; Mrs. Koster; Sophia M., the wife of the late William Schroeder; Herman; John F.; and Charles H. L. Mrs. Koster passed away on January 24, 1921, shortly after the family had removed to Tracy, not living to enjoy the beautiful and modern residence on East Ninth Street which had been completed a short time before her death. For many years Mr. Koster was a trustee of the New Jerusalem school district, and he and his wife were identified with the Lutheran Church. The educational and moral development of the community are matters of deep interest and concern to him, and he is a loyal citizen who favors every project for local advancement.

ALFRED L. SWETT.—A vineyardist whose scientific, practical methods are as interesting as his exceptional and enviable results, is Alfred L. Swett, who lives one-half mile to the north of Clements. He was born at Newport, Orleans County, Vt., on July 25, 1855, the son of John and Lydia (Prouty) Swett, and had the misfortune to lose his father when he was twelve years old. His mother, however, attained her fiftieth year, passing away in California.

In 1877, Alfred came out to the Coast on an immigrant train such as was then beginning to be a frequent kind of service, and settled at Acampo; and for two or three years he found work here. He then went to Roberts Island and was foreman on Mr. Peters' ranch for a year and a half. Then he engaged in teaming for S. L. Magee, who had the Star Mills, to the mountain towns, Jackson, Ione, and San Andreas, running from Stockton and carrying provisions, while also doing general teaming and hauling.

He was married, in 1880, at the old Athearn Rancho to Miss Fanny Athearn, the daughter of Prince A. and Louise (Hastings) Athearn, the former a forty-niner, after whom the Athearn school was named. Following their marriage, they rented the ranch to the northwest of Clements, now owned by William Hildebrand. Finding this quarter-section insufficient for their growing operations, they rented the quarter-section adjoining. There they farmed for four years; and then they went to Lockeford and leased the Sam Baird place for a couple of years. After that they removed to Colfax, in Placer County, and Mr. Swett purchased a half interest in a mercantile establishment in that city, with a Mr. Williams as partner, and engaged in a general merchandise trade as Williams & Swett. After continuing together for a year and a half, the partners sold out, and then Mr. Swett came to his present ranch of eighty-six acres one-half mile north of Clements, which is a part of the old Athearn Rancho. Here he set out twenty-two acres to vineyard, which today is in splendid bearing form. He set out a family orchard, built a comfortable, attractive home, and otherwise improved the ranch. Mrs. Swett died in August, 1897, mourned by all who had come to know and appreciate her sterling qualities as a woman, friend and neighbor. She was the beloved mother of three children; and six grandchildren have come to gladden their affectionate grandfather. Alice married Dr. C. D. Sweet of Oakland, and their two children are named Clifford and Elizabeth. Oscar A. married Miss Sadie Mohrmann, now the mother of two children, Virgil Oscar and Charles Alfred. Oleta has become Mrs. Dee Frank Akers of Clements; and she has two children, Dee Frank, Jr., and Barbara Frances. Oscar is living with his father; and both father and son are Odd Fellows, affiliated with the Clements Lodge, and have gone through all of the chairs. Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Swett are both Rebekahs, and have gone through the various chairs of that branch. Politically, father and son are Republicans. Mr. Swett has always been interested in the cause of education, and served as trustee of Athearn district for sixteen years.

GEORGE BERTCH.—A prominent agriculturist whose home ranch is located on the French Camp Road is George Bertch, who is an old-time resident of California, with whose various interests and affairs he has been closely identified since the year 1863, when he came out from the East and cast his lot with California. Agriculture in its different phases has been the chief object of his attention since coming here, and his success has brought recognition as one of the representative men of the state. He was born in Hamburg, Germany, December 11, 1841, a son of G. J. and Catherine S. (Faulholver) Bertch, who brought their family to the United States and located in Erie County, N. Y., in 1853. Late in life the parents came to California whither their sons had migrated and here they passed their declining years, enjoying the well-earned rest from their busy cares.

George Bertch gained a good knowledge of English in New York and in 1863 he determined to come to California; he left home in May of that year and came via the Nicaragua route to San Francisco, and going at once to Napa County where he arrived with $10 in greenbacks, which were worth just 50c on the dollar. He at once secured employment on a ranch and worked for one man three and one-half years, then spent a similar period on other ranches, locating in Ventura County in 1870. He came to Stockton as early as 1869, when the country was altogether different from what it now appears, and in 1875 he worked at threshing all over the West Side of the San Joaquin Valley. He and his brother, Fred, bought 100 acres of land near what is now Patterson and farmed successfully; Fred remained there and became a prominent citizen of Stanislaus County, dying May 1, 1921, on his beautiful ranch near Patterson. Mr. Bertch has witnessed many wonderful changes in this state since first locating here and has always been a very public spirited man, helping every worthy project and taking a delight in doing his part to build up the state.

On August 24, 1880, at Stockton Mr. Bertch was married to Miss Caroline C. Minges, a native daughter of California. She is the third eldest daughter of the late and venerable pioneer John Minges, a prominent stockraiser of San Joaquin County. They are the parents of four children: Pearl G., Mrs. F. L. Richardson resides at Hermosa Beach; Carol M. married Miss Eula Stueffelbeen and they reside at Los Angeles; Henry H. married Miss Naomi Bischoen and they have three children, H. H. Jr., Margaret V., and George W.; George Leslie died at French Camp on September 7, 1921, a young man of splendid traits of character. In 1882 Mr. Bertch located in Tulare County, Cal. where he engaged in farming for nearly thirty years; there he owned extensive property interests and he also became very prominent in lodge circles. Then he spent six years in Los Angeles and in 1916 settled in San Joaquin and 1923 will find him settled again in Southern California. In 1885 he became a member of the Odd Fellows and of the Encampment and is a past officer and has been delegate to the Grand Lodge on several occasions. From 1890 to 1894 he served as city trustee of Tulare and he still retains large property interests in the county as well as the city of Tulare. In politics, Mr. Bertch is a Republican and both he and his wife are strong advocates of temperance and are members of the W. C. T. U. while Mrs. Bertch is a member of the Rebekahs. They have during the years of their residence here won the favorable regard, good will and trust of all with whom they have come in contact, and in business circles Mr. Bertch sustains an unassailable reputation, because he has ever been straightforward, prompt and just in his dealings and gets great pleasure in giving aid to those less fortunate than himself.

CHARLES A. FREEMAN.—A prosperous viticulturist of San Joaquin County is found in Charles A. Freeman, who has spent nearly all of his life in this county and belongs to one of the well-known old families of San Joaquin Valley. He was born in Fresno, Cal., November 11, 1890, his parents being John and Emma (Sovereign) Freeman, natives of Ohio. The father was a successful farmer and stock-raiser in Ohio and came to California in an early day, first settling in Fresno. The family removed to Lodi when Charles A. was a small child. The father was a farmer near Waterloo, but was taken ill and died suddenly in 1896, aged sixty-six years, leaving a widow and six children. His widow was married again to John Boyce, born in Ohio and a pioneer here, who owned a 320 acres ranch one and one-half miles west of Woodbridge until his death. He died in 1913 an honored old pioneer.

Charles A. attended the Lafayette and Woodbridge grammar schools. He became connected with agricultural pursuits in youth, assisting his step-father until the time of his death, then remaining on the home place with his mother until he entered the army. On November 19, 1917, Mr. Freeman entered the United States Army and was sent to Camp Lewis, serving in the 363 Infantry, 91st Division. In July, 1918, he sailed for France, and landing in England he crossed the channel to Cherbourg, France, and served as a wagoner in the supply company of the 363rd Infantry in all the offensives in which this regiment was engaged at St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne, and three different battles on the Belgian front. Returning to the United States, he was discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco, April 19, 1919. Returning to San Joaquin County, he worked for one season for the Stewart Fruit Company and then went into the contract tractor work, running his own tractor and working in the vineyards near Lodi.

Mr. Freeman's marriage occurred at Lodi on August 2, 1921, and united him with Miss Frances Ellis, a native daughter of Lodi, Cal., daughter of H. F. and Lochie (Green) Ellis. Her father, H. F. Ellis, is the present city recorder of Lodi and is also the manager of the Stewart Fruit Company. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman have one child, Lochie. In politics Mr. Freeman is a Republican and fraternally he is affiliated with Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, F. & A. M., and he and his wife are members of the Woodbridge Chapter 118, O. E. S. He is a member of Lodi Post, American Legion, and Mrs. Freeman is a member of the auxiliary of that order. Mr. Freeman recently purchased forty-five acres on the Kelly Road about three miles west of Lodi, twenty-four acres of which is in bearing vineyard, one acre in orchard, and the balance in young vineyard. In matters of citizenship he is progressive and takes a helpful part in promoting the progress of the county where he has spent nearly all of his life, and where he is honored and esteemed for his part in the development and prosperity of his locality.

ANTHONY BYRD HUMPHREY.—The march of improvement and progress is accelerated day by day and each successive moment seems to demand a man of broader intelligence and a keener discernment than the preceding, and the successful men must be live men, active, strong, to plan and perform, and with a recognition of opportunity that enables them to grasp and utilize the possibilities of the moment. Among the most progressive and successful horticultural and agricultural representatives in San Joaquin and Sacramento counties is Anthony Byrd Humphrey, who has contributed to the advancement and prosperity of these localities in a most substantial manner. His ancestry dates back to England and the first in this line in America was Michael Humphrey, a son of Samuel and Susannah Humphrey of Lyme-Regis, England. The first record of Michael in America is found in ancient Windsor, Conn., where he was engaged in the manufacture of tar and turpentine, at that time an important industry. He also engaged in a merchandise business to a considerable extent, his goods being shipped to him from St. Malo by his brother Samuel. He married Priscilla, the daughter of Matthew Grant, who was an ancestor of Ulysses S. Grant, and at that time an important and leading citizen of the town of Windsor. The Grants were of Scotch descent. Michael Humphrey was deputy to the General Court of Connecticut in 1670. He died about 1690, leaving a large family of children, among whom was a son, Samuel.

Samuel Humphrey was born May 15, 1656, in Windsor, Conn., and married Mary, the daughter of Simon and Mary (Buel) Mills, who was born December 8, 1662, probably in Windsor, Conn. Lieut. Samuel Humphrey removed from Windsor to Simsbury, Conn., with his father, about 1669, and became an influential citizen there. The hardships attendant upon the settlement of Simsbury were very great on account of depredations of the Indians, and although the family was once forced to flee back to Windsor, when the town was completely destroyed, they returned the following year and remained. Samuel Humphrey held many grants of land and many offices of responsibility. His commission signed by Governor Saltonstall is in the possession still of one of his descendants. Besides his grants of lands he inherited several tracts from his father and purchased others. He died at Simsbury in June, 1736, leaving eight children. His son Samuel is the ancestor of this line.

Samuel Humphrey, the second, was born May 17, 1686. He was married four times and had nineteen children. His wife, Lydia North, daughter of Nathaniel North of Farmington, Conn., was the mother of his son Ezekiel, who is the ancestor of the line under discussion. Samuel settled at Simsbury, Conn., where, like his father and grandfather, he appears to have been a prominent citizen, for his name occurs many times in the town records. He was an ensign and sergeant. About the year 1739 he removed with his wife and family to Goshen, Conn., and settled upon a tract of land which he had bid off at a division of land at New Haven in 1738. This tract was located in the north part of the town, where the family gave their own name to the road on which they lived. It is interesting that up to 1880 nearly all of this land was still in the possession of his lineal descendants. Samuel died in Goshen, October 16, 1759.

Captain Ezekiel Humphrey, son of the above, was born August 28, 1719, in Simsbury, Conn. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Samuel Pettibone, Jr. The Humphrey genealogy says: "Captain Ezekiel Humphrey was a man of remarkable mental and physical stamina and one distinctive mark of the family seems to have come conspicuously to the surface in him and his immediate descendants. He himself stood six feet four inches high and had five sons that averaged over six feet. He also had a large number of grandsons and great-grandsons, all of whom were men of equally large stature. Captain Frederick, one of the sons, was six feet four inches high and weighed 350 pounds. It is rare that so tall a family can be found. These peculiarities—large stature, great physical strength and stamina with courteous manners—renders them worthy successors of their ancestors, the historic Humphrey Knights of Old." Captain Ezekiel was representative to the General Assembly in 1777. He died in 1795. The line continues through his son Elijah.

Captain Elijah Humphrey was born September 20, 1747. He married Chloe Wilcox, daughter of Ephraim Wilcox of West Simsbury and his wife Ruhamah Pinney, widow of Thomas Bidwell, Sr., of West Simsbury. Elijah was a sea captain engaged in the merchant marine between New London and the West Indies. In 1788 he was lost at sea together with all on board, this being his third shipwreck in making the then dangerous voyage to the West Indies. His second son, Allen, carries the line on.

Major Allen Humphrey was born in 1777 and married Polly, daughter of Benjamin Bodwell and his wife Mary Woodbridge of Simsbury, Conn. Allen was a clothier by trade and removed with his family in 1811 to Claridon, Ohio. His was the third family that settled in that town. He bought 300 acres for a farm upon which he lived until his death. He served as major in the War of 1812 and was commander of the post at Cleveland, Ohio, at the time of General Hull's surrender at Detroit. He died December 22, 1825, at Claridon and was buried there. He left nine children, the fourth being Elijah Huron.

Colonel Elijah Huron Humphrey was born in Canton, Conn., June 30, 1805, and removed with his parents to Claridon in 1811. He married Sybil Sophronia Sweat. In early life he was a saddler and harness maker, but afterward became a lawyer and was admitted to the Ohio bar. Colonel Humphrey served in the Civil War on the Northern side and achieved some fame by the capture single-handed of the notorious rebel Scott. He died about 1890, leaving eleven children, of whom the second son was Decius Ervin.

Decius Ervin Humphrey was born August 4, 1836, at Claridon, Ohio. Early in life he became a school teacher in the Ohio schools and while following this profession met his wife, Mary Goodfellow, also a school teacher. She was born in Ballygawley, Ireland, in 1831 and, due to the loss of her father, came to America alone at sixteen years of age. Her parents were Presbyterians, probably of Welsh or English descent. In America she took a degree at Mt. Holyoke College and became a school teacher. This marriage took place about 1860 in Ohio. In 1862 they emigrated to San Francisco, where they both continued to teach school. Mr. Humphrey became the principal of the Hays Valley grammar school, at that time one of the largest schools in town. He was considered an authority on the subject of English grammar and methods of teaching it. His premature death in 1878 following a severe siege of typhoid fever cut short a successful career and left his wife with three young sons. She continued an honored member of the staff of San Francisco teachers until her death in 1889. The names of their children who survived infancy were Anthony Byrd, John and Harry Ervin.

Anthony Byrd Humphrey, the subject of this sketch, was born at Harmony, Ohio, June 27, 1862. With his parents he came to San Francisco when less than a year old and there received his education in the San Francisco public schools under the direction of his teacher parents, who desired him to be educated for a doctor. His father's death when he was sixteen years old, however, caused him to decide that he would not accept the balance of his education from his mother who had two younger sons, one less than eight years old. In addition to this he had always had a longing for ranching as a calling and so after a year he left home and took work with a farmer with the idea of learning to ranch. At first the struggle was hard, for he was a city bred boy and unused to the roughness of the men with whom he toiled. On one occasion when he applied for work he was turned away because they hired Oriental labor; and this incident made such an impression on his mind that he never in later years hired anything but white men on his place. His first venture for himself was made in Texas at Sweetwater. Previous to this in November, 1883, he had married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of John Jones of San Joaquin County and formerly wife of E. A. Hall of Waterford, Stanislaus County, California, by whom she had four children: William Hall, of Waterford; Georgianna, wife of Charles Camp, of Modesto; Alice Maud, wife of Judson P. Ross, of Modesto; and Katherine. Mrs. Hall was well known for her beauty of personality and character and loved throughout the country by all who had ever known her. At Sweetwater, Mr. Humphrey created a sensation by starting a dairy. Although the Texas hills, at that time, 1885, were covered with beef cattle such a thing as a dairy was unheard of and there was much laughing and jeering at the idea; but the milk for which he charged fifty cents a gallon, which at that time was equal to fifty cents a quart today could not be made to cover the demands of the jeering customers, for although the wealthy cattlemen laughed at him, their wives were determined to have the milk at any price and Mr. Humphrey figured to charge enough to cover the fun at his expense. Although the business thrived the health of his wife and infant daughter suffered as a consequence of the severity of the climate and so the Texas property was traded for a place at Anderson, California, and 1886 saw the family back in the Golden State. Within two years the Anderson property was traded again for the ranch at Mayhews, Sacramento County, where Mr. Humphrey is still located and where the success he has achieved has made his name well known throughout the ranks of California farmers. This place, at that time, was known as the Weinstock & Lubin place, because it belonged to the gentlemen of that name who later became such well known merchants in Sacramento.

It is situated on the Folsom Road nine miles out of Sacramento at Mayhews, and since it has belonged to Mr. Humphrey it has been known as Grape Wild Farms. It consisted at that time of 350 acres for which Mr. Humphrey paid the unheard of price of $70,000. In addition to the property traded in he paid a small cash sum and assumed the balance on a mortgage of large proportions. As the ranch had never, up to that time, paid its own expenses, it must have been the courage of pioneer blood that had the confidence to attack such a load, but Mr. Humphrey believed that by the application of certain practical ideas the place would be well worth the difficulties to be overcome and that his confidence was well placed has been demonstrated by the results obtained, for the ranch under his management has produced great quantities of so fine a product that it has made a name for him in Eastern markets and has not only paid its own expenses, but in addition has gone a very long way towards helping to develop into a paying property the land in San Joaquin County which his minor daughters later inherited from their grandfather, John Jones.

In 1889 in collaboration with R. D. Stephens, one of the pioneers in California's fruit industry and at Mr. Stephens' suggestion he arranged to make their own cars of fruit and ship them to Eastern auctioneers under the name of Stephens & Humphrey. They were the first California growers to take this step and it at once repaid them in the increased prices they received and the fact that they were able to take advantage of their knowledge of the conditions of Eastern markets and to control their shipments accordingly. Mr. Humphrey specialized on the table grape, known as Tokays, of which he has sometimes shipped as high as 50,000 crates in a single season. Shortly after he had purchased the ranch he devised a system of tying his grapevines to stakes twelve feet high with cross bars on top and in this way he avoided a large percentage of mildew and decay after the fall rains and exposed the grapes to the sunlight in such a way as to acquire the beautiful red color for which his product has so often occasioned favorable comment in the New York and other Eastern markets. He is a firm advocate of the policy of keeping grapevines off the ground either by stake or trellis system, which he has used on other varieties of grapes on the San Joaquin ranch, a policy which of late years has been adapted by many other growers. He was among the first to realize the necessity for artificial irrigation and to start a system of wells on his place. In the early '90s he began to bore wells. These wells had to be sunk to a depth of 150 to 175 feet, and although they were expensive to bore, supplied a large stream of very clear water when they were once installed. The first power used were the old gasoline engines which were later replaced by electric motors. An underground system of concrete pipe made on the ranch has also in late years taken the place of the ditches, which although attractive to look upon, were difficult to maintain. There are now twelve wells on the place supplying water to every part of the 400 acres which make up the original Grape Wild farm at Mayhews.

Perhaps Mr. Humphrey's most valuable contribution to the industry of California farming was the theory which he advanced, advocated, practiced and demonstrated to be correct, that a fruit ranch can be much more economically conducted in conjunction with a small dairy and stock plant and that alfalfa planted in orchards is a decided advantage. Before 1900 he had planted to alfalfa a large portion of the Grape Wild orchard, his theory being that by so doing he would counteract, in a measure, the bad aspects of artificial irrigation, namely, the tendency of the ground to sour from the surplus water which was not used by the trees and the increased need for cultivation as a result of the application of the water, as alfalfa would consume the surplus water, keep the ground open and introduce oxygen into the soil. In pear orchards it would lessen the danger of spreading the blight which constant cultivation increases. The next difficulty to be met and overcome after the planting of the alfalfa was the constant drain upon the soil from so great a crop as both fruit and alfalfa. To meet this emergency Mr. Humphrey installed a limited dairy which would consume the alfalfa and in turn would supply the cheapest and best form of fertilizer to continually build up the soil. He chose Guernsey cattle because his hay production being restricted over what it would have been in open fields it was necessary for him to have a breed of cattle that would return the most milk for the food consumed, and because he could not run a large herd, he went in from the start as far as he could for pure bred, his idea being to sell breeding cattle. This plan he adhered to and through a number of years has built up an enviable reputation as a Guernsey and Berkshire breeder. The next step was to dispose of the skimmed milk and to do this he went into pure bred Berkshire hogs. Although these herds were started and the foundation laid on the ranch at Mayhews, the ranch with which they are really associated in the mind of the public is the ranch at Escalon, also known as Grape Wild Farms, to which the larger part of the herd was removed in 1910 and where Mr. Humphrey has installed a very complete and modern dairy and hog plant. Each year he exhibits his stock at all the fairs of the state where he never fails to carry off his share of the prizes. At the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco he took the grand champion boar and junior grand champion boar in Berkshires, both of which had not only been raised but bred by himself. The boar was sold to an Eastern breeder at the unprecedented price of $3,000 and the junior boar went to the University of California experimental farm at Davis. He has shipped stock to many Eastern states, to Hawaii, to the Philippines and to China. Visitors have come to see his stock from as far away as Australia.

In 1894 Mr. Humphrey had the very great misfortune to lose the wife who had been his greatest help and inspiration during the first hard years on the ranch at Mayhews. She it was who had day by day walked over the property with him discussing, planning and advising and her genius at making things grow and understanding of plant life in general was a marked quality. It was after her death that his little daughters inherited from their grandfather, John Jones, the ranch at Escalon, which consisted of 800 acres of what had once been very fine wheat land, but which, due to many years of continuous wheat crops had at the time it was inherited come to a state where it seldom produced a paying crop of any kind. When Mr. Humphrey had brought the ranch at Mayhews to a state where he could spare the time and attention, he attacked the Escalon property upon the same principles that had brought so much success at Mayhews. He leveled the ranch so that it could all be irrigated and before the irrigation district was installed had bored four wells and had intended to bore others. One hundred acres were planted to vineyard and olives and as fast as was feasible the balance was put into alfalfa. Then began the system of fertilization which has been so beneficial that a vineyard planted a year ago to cuttings on ground which has been under irrigation, alfalfa and fertilization for some years has made in one year a greater growth than did the original vineyard in several years which was planted on ground that had been impoverished by forty years of continuous wheat growing. The grape which Mr. Humphrey chose for this vineyard is also a discovery of his own. He calls it Lady Finger because of its white color and long slender shape. It is presumably an Oriental variety, which had never been cultivated in this country until he introduced it and which he obtained in some cuttings sent to him years ago by the University of California for experimental purposes. It is very tender, with a thin, inoffensive skin and a very sweet flavor. In reality it contains less grape sugar than any other variety, but it contains practically no acid. It has reached the height of perfection on the Escalon place and is quite popular in the markets. It is Mr. Humphrey's ambition to put nearly all the balance of the Escalon property into vineyard and orchards and towards this end he is devoting his entire time and attention.

Mr. Humphrey is a remarkably active and energetic man, able to stand great strain and heavy labor without showing the effects. He has been and is still so devoted to his calling that for many years he has consistently declined all public and honorary positions as he has always felt that his greatest contribution to society could be made by devoting himself entirely to the calling he has chosen. He was for several years president of the Berkshire congress, but with this exception and possibly one or two other minor ones he has not broken the rule he made early in life. Of late years the two ranches have been thrown together for the purpose of simplification in handling into a close family corporation, the A. B. Humphrey Company. Mr. Humphrey has two daughters, Bessie Byrd, born May 31, 1885, wife of F. E. Greene, a son of the late L. D. Greene of Vorden, Sacramento County, California, and Winnifred Electra, born November 24, 1886, wife of L. B. Landsborough of Mayhews, a son of L. M. Landsborough of Florin, Sacramento County. Mr. and Mrs. Landsborough live on the home place at Mayhews, where Mr. Landsborough is interested with Mr. Humphrey, and Mr. and Mrs. Greene live in Berkeley, where Mr. Greene is interested in a road paving business.

Mr. Humphrey's success can be traced clearly to two or three traits or policies. First is the logical manner of thinking which has developed his practical theories—the quality of reasoning from a given condition and result; second, his prompt application of a principle as soon as it becomes clear to him, his persistence in adhering to a plan, his own strenuous labor and close attention to detail over a period of many years, years in which there have been but few vacations—a developed executive ability and a policy of always delivering the very best quality of goods obtainable and of square dealing in all his relations. A favorite remark of his is that "the customer is always right and he must be pleased."

MRS. LENA S. FAKE.—A highly-esteemed resident of San Joaquin County who has an interesting life-story to tell, is Mrs. Lena S. Fake, the widow of the late and highly-honored Captain George J. Fake, residing at Tracy. She was born near Ingeln, in the Province of Hanover, Germany, on August 18, 1853, the daughter of Henry and Hannah (Dohrs) Seegers, and accompanied them to America in 1868, along with an uncle, Christoph Dohrs, a mining man of prominence and wealth in San Francisco, who had been visiting his relatives in Germany during that year. Fourteen days were required to cross the Atlantic, after which they left New York, aboard the steamship California, bound for Aspinwall. Then they crossed the Isthmus on the railroad up from Panama and came on the steamship George Law, arriving at San Francisco on October 1, 1868.

Henry Seegers was a farmer and shepherd by occupation, and soon after his arrival in the Golden State, he made his way into the San Joaquin Valley, where he formed a partnership for agricultural pursuits with Harry Fisk, near what was known in those early days as San Joaquin City. He took up Section No. 28 of land, and the dwelling and farm-buildings were erected from lumber and materials hauled across the arid plains from Stockton, a distance of thirty-three miles. Fire destroyed the buildings, however, in 1898, and thus a well-known landmark of the sixties was removed. Mr Seegers passed away on August 15, 1900, at the age of eighty-two, and his faithful widow followed him on May 4, 1906, having attained her eighty-first year. Both of these highly intelligent and progressive pioneers left behind an enviable record for their useful lives, and made a substantial contribution toward the California of today.

The second daughter and oldest living of a family of six children, Lena Seegers received a good common-school education; and in 1872 she was married to Captain G. J. Fake, a native of England, who was born at Bury St. Edmund's on November 25, 1824. He was educated at Thetford Academy, and on reaching his eighteenth year, went to sea. Six years later—such were the rapid strides of his advancement—he was made captain of a merchant marine service. In 1853, he sailed his first vessel through the Golden Gate, after a hazardous voyage around Cape Horn, and from that year he maintained a home at San Francisco. He not only became master of his own private vessel, but he engaged in shipbuilding, as well, and constructed such well-known vessels as the schooner "Superior," used in powder and ammunition freighting between Santa Cruz and South America. In this enterprise, he was associated with a brother, William Fake. Several famous vessels came under the captain's ownership, but none are now in service. In 1886, Captain Fake made his last deep-sea voyage on a tour of the Orient, and Mrs. Fake accompanied her husband, as she had on all of the voyages he made after they were married.

On retiring from active sea-life, Captain Fake removed inland to San Joaquin County and in 1889 acquired a productive ranch of 320 acres, near Vernalis, where he built his home and where he and his good wife lived until 1914, when, on account of failing health, he disposed of his ranch. At Tracy, on September 11, 1914, he passed away, thus rounding out an exceptionally useful life as one of the bravest sea-captains who ever stood before the mast. A daughter, now the wife of W. H. Cuthell, resides near Duncans Mills, on the Russian River, in California. Captain Fake was a member of various Masonic lodges; a stand-pat Republican and a sincere believer in the goodness of God and who could have had better reason for entertaining such faith than one who had, for years, coursed the stormy main, sailing through peril after peril into sunshiny open. After her husband's death, Mrs. Fake lived for a short time at Oakland, but in 1919 she erected a comfortable residence at Tracy, deeding the property to the Lutheran Church, with the proviso that she may continue to reside there during her natural life. This is only one of the numerous things she has found pleasure in doing, being active in all church work, charitable pursuits, etc., quietly and modestly pursuing her way, content that virtue and Christian large-heartedness are their own reward.

JUDGE D. M. DENEHY.—A retired merchant whose years of industrious, successful activity and long record of fair-and-square dealing have won for him the esteem and confidence of a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, is Judge D. M. Denehy, ex-postmaster of Acampo, in which town he has been the central figure since early days. Born near the Lakes of Killarney, County Kerry, Ireland, on November 11, 1851, he was the son of Dennis Denehy, an Irish pedagogue teaching in the national schools of that country. He had married Miss Mary Murphy, and they had three children when they came out to the United States and settled in Fairfield County, Ohio. Our subject was then six years old, and he went through the nine grades of the district school.

Striking out for himself as a young man, he went to Iowa, and having learned the trade of a blacksmith in the Buckeye State, he followed his trade there. In 1874 he came to California, working at his trade for different contractors at railroad and levee construction in the San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys, and visiting the Acampo district while thus engaged. In the month of January, 1876, he opened up a blacksmith shop at Lodi. He remained only a few months, however, until May 1, of the same year, when he came up to Acampo. Here he built his blacksmith shop, which he operated until 1890, when he went back to Lancaster, Ohio. There he engaged in the natural gas and real estate business until 1892, when he returned to Acampo, Cal., and for two years resumed his work at the forge. In 1894 he engaged in the general merchandise business at Acampo, and for twenty years successfully conducted a general merchandise store there. He has bought lands at Acampo and in the vicinity from time to time, until he has become a substantial property owner.

In 1894, Mr. Denehy was appointed special agent for the General Land Office, and later he became postmaster of Acampo. Since 1902, also, he has been serving as judge in the Justice's Court, and this responsible office he still holds, although in 1914 he sold his store at Acampo and retired from active business life. He has always been a consistent Democrat.

Judge Denehy was married at Acampo on November 27, 1877, to Miss Lilly Mullen, a native of Placerville and the daughter of Dennis and Bridget Mullen, who came to California in the sixties and settled in the mining section of Placer County. Four children have blessed their union. The oldest was Sylvan; he died at the age of nineteen, unmarried; Annette C. is now the wife of C. W. Howard, vineyardist, of Acampo, and has one child, Naomi Jane, eight years old; Robert E. married Miss Christine Wesner. He served the Southern Pacific Railway Company for nineteen years, nine years as day operator at the Southern Pacific down-town office in Stockton, until he succumbed to the influenza in 1918. He left one child, James Eugene, now twelve years old. Mildred is the wife of Leo Cooper, of Santa Barbara, Cal.

The death of Mrs. Denehy occurred on November 23, 1920, just a year, to a day, before that of her brother. Since her death, Judge Denehy has been making his home with his daughter, Mrs. C. W. Howard. The Judge was long a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Woodbridge. He is patriotic and popular as a justice of the peace, and finds the administration of that office easier, with public sentiment in his favor.

JAMES T. HERBERT.—Milling interests of California have received impetus through the labors of James T. Herbert, who has devoted his entire life to this branch of activity and is now acting as superintendent of the plant of the Sperry Flour Company at Stockton. He was born on a farm in Union County, Ore., August 29, 1880, and when seven years of age removed with his parents to California, the family home first being established in Sacramento. In 1890, they located at Kirkwood, in Tehama County, this state, where the father operated a small feed mill.

In the public schools of Kirkwood, Cal., James T. Herbert completed his education and he has since devoted his attention to the milling business, gaining his first knowledge thereof in his father's feed mill. When twenty-one years of age he went to Marysville, Cal., and entered the employ of the Sperry Flour Company, in whose service he has since continued. He remained at Marysville for less than a year and in 1901 came to Stockton as miller in their plant in this city. Later he became millwright and in 1916 was made superintendent of the mill, in which capacity he has since served. In addition to being an expert millwright he is an able milling engineer and had charge of the work of installing the machinery in the Sperry mills at Stockton, Marysville, Los Angeles, Chico and Fresno, Cal., while he also made the blue print drawings for the machinery. He is the possessor of marked mechanical skill and ingenuity and has invented a number of improvements in milling machinery which are now in use in the Sperry mills. He is an exceptionally capable man and his employers thoroughly appreciate the value of his services.

Mr. Herbert married Miss Gertrude Marx, a native of Stockton and a member of one of its pioneer families. Two children have been born of this union: Gertrude E. and Ralph E. Mr. Herbert's fraternal connections are with Truth Lodge, No. 55, I. O. O. F., and Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E. His enterprise and ability have brought him steadily to the front and as the architect of his own fortunes he has builded wisely and well. His success is largely attributable to the fact that he has concentrated his efforts upon a given line of activity, in which he has gained that specialized knowledge which makes him an authority in his line of work, and his labors have ever been of a constructive nature, contributing to public progress as well as to individual prosperity.

IRA B. LADD, M. D.—A distinguished representative of the medical profession in California whom posterity will always delight to honor was the late Dr. Ira B. Ladd, who was born at Stockton on May 28, 1868, the son of George S. and Abigail (Bourland) Ladd, the former a Vermonter, and the latter a native of Arkansas. George Ladd was born at Danville on May 28, 1832, came out to California in 1853, reaching Stockton by way of Panama on January 14, 1853. He died at Stockton on April 25, 1902. He was one of Stockton's most honored citizens, and was closely identified with educational progress and real estate and commercial enterprises there. As a result of his particular interest in educational movements he was in 1867 appointed superintendent of schools; and he held that office until 1880. He also served as a member of the city council, and was appointed by Governor George Perkins state commissioner of the Yosemite Valley. Mrs. Ladd, the mother of our subject, was born on January 30, 1840, and is a charming lady of enviable accomplishments.

Ira B. Ladd was educated in the public schools of Stockton, was graduated from the Cooper Medical College of San Francisco, and became one of Stockton's leading physicians. He was a skillful surgeon, and built up a large practice. He was city health officer of Stockton for a number of years, and when the Emergency Hospital was opened in Stockton he became surgeon-in-charge, and occupied that position of responsibility until his death, which occurred on June 5, 1913. Then, in his lamented passing, the city lost one of its most progressive and public-spirited citizens. He had ardently loved the city of his birth, and was always interested in any movement that promised to advance its interests. He also enlisted in the Spanish-American War, and served with distinction as chief-surgeon, with the rank of captain, while he was stationed at Manila, in the Philippine Islands. He belonged to the National and State Medical Associations and County Medical Society, and was also prominent in fraternal orders, being a member of Lodge No. 218, Stockton Elks, and also the Masonic and Odd Fellow fraternities. He had a fine tenor voice, and was prominent in musical circles in Stockton, where he often participated with enthusiasm in benefit programs. While attending college he had taken up the study of the pipe organ, and had played in the churches of San Francisco.

Dr. Ladd's first wife, Mrs. Mollie Ladd, was the daughter of Mrs. Christopher Grattan. On December 29, 1910, Dr. Ladd was united with Miss Mabel Elliott, a native of the state of Washington, and this union was blessed with the birth of two sons, Ira M. and Bourland E. Ladd. Shortly before his death, he bought a twenty-acre ranch on the Farmington Road, near Nightingale, which he planted to peaches and walnuts. Mrs. Ladd, upon the demise of her esteemed husband, took charge of the ranch and brought it to a high state of cultivation; and then she disposed of the property. From all of which it will be seen that, distinguished as he was in the medical world, Dr. Ladd was something more than a mere professional man; and active and successful as he was in promoting and caring for his own affairs, he was influential and helpful, as a broad-minded, progressive leader, in giving direction and impetus to movements, and in co-operating with others in public activities, likely to be of the greatest good to the greatest number.

HARRY CARSON FINCK.—One of the foremost representatives of agricultural interests in San Joaquin County, Harry Carson Finck, is an extensive rancher and stock raiser of the Tracy district, his property being located fourteen miles southwest of Stockton on the Lincoln Highway. He was born on his father's ranch about one mile west of the present home place, on Tom Paine Slough, October 9, 1890, a son of the late Henry and Lena (Roady) Finck, prominent and highly respected pioneers of the county. Henry Finck was born at Hanover, Germany, September 5, 1844 and the first fifteen years of his life were spent in his native land. In 1859 he came to the United States with his maternal uncle, Henry Dimmer, and located in San Francisco where he remained until the fall of 1866 when he removed to San Joaquin County, locating several miles west of Tracy, where he engaged in farming and butchering. For four years he was in partnership with the Lammers Brothers, and then continued in the same line on his own account at what is now known as Lammersville. He remained there until 1887, when he settled upon the ranch now occupied by our subject. The ranch consists of 1,900 acres of valuable land. When it came into his possession it was in its primitive condition, hardly a furrow having been turned or an improvement made, but it is now one of the best developed farms in the county, and nearly the entire amount of 1,900 acres has been placed under the plow. He followed butchering for a time as well, but during the last few years devoted his energies entirely to raising grain and stock and to dairying. His labors were untiring, and his life of thrift and industry in the management of his extensive ranch resulted in making him one of the prosperous citizens of the county.

On September 30, 1875, Henry Finck was married to Miss Lena Roady, born near Hamburg, Germany, who came to California at the age of fourteen years. To this marriage were born nine children, six of whom are living: Frederick H., Gesena A. R., Anna D. J., Harry Carson, our subject; Elizabeth C. and Martin L. In politics Mr. Finck was a Republican and fraternally was connected with the Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias of Tracy. For many years he served as school trustee and aided in the progress and development of the county. The father and step-mother were accidentally killed on May 1, 1922, at the railroad crossing on Park Street, Stockton, Cal. as they were going in their automobile to their home on Lindsay Street.

Harry Carson Finck received his preliminary education in the district school at Banta, then took a business course at the Western School of Commerce Stockton, and having grown up on his father's farm he became a partner with his father in 1911, farming 500 acres on shares, which was a highly productive year; then came the flood of 1913 which swept away everything; however, the water did not reach the mark made in the flood of 1906-07, which was the highest in the history of the Finck family. In 1894 the Western Pacific Railroad Company purchased a right-of-way through the Finck ranch, which is now their main line to San Francisco; also the San Francisco Sierra Power Company have crossed their lands with two high tension power lines, carrying power from the high Sierras to the cities and valleys and on to the Bay district. In 1912, Mr. Finck installed a twelve-inch pump and a fifty h. p. motor for the purpose of lifting water from the San Joaquin River for irrigating his land.

Mr. Finck entered the service of his country in the World War on December 22, 1917 at Camp Lewis there he spent seven months in training, operating a Holt tractor as a first class private. On July 4, 1918, he left New York arriving at Liverpool eleven days later and July 20, arrived at Cherbourg, France, where he trained until October 28 when he entered the First Army Corps as wagoner under Col L. E. Bennett, and on November 11 his regiment was in the engagement at Metz, but as the armistice was signed at 10 o'clock on that day, fighting was discontinued. He was with the army of occupation in Germany until February 12, 1919. On March 13, 1919, Mr. Finck's regiment was a part of the guard of honor to President Wilson at Brest and on March 23 set sail for the United States, arriving at San Francisco on April 22, 1919, and on May 5 he received his honorable discharge at the Presidio.

On February 2, 1918, while at Camp Lewis, Mr. Finck, was married to Mrs. Edna (Eickert) Clements, a native of Red Bluff, Cal. After his discharge he returned to the Finck ranch which had been managed by his father during his absence. In politics, Mr. Finck is a Republican and fraternally is identified with the Knights of Pythias and is a past officer of the Tracy lodge and in 1916 was a delegate to the grand lodge; he is also a member of Tracy Parlor, N. S. G. W.

GLEN E. SAXTON.—Among the more recent acquisitions to the business circles of Tracy is Glen E. Saxton, the proprietor of the G. E. Saxton Plumbing Shop, and has already proven himself a valuable asset to the progress and building up of the San Joaquin County. A native of Michigan, he was born at Albion, Calhoun County, on June 30, 1888. His father, Justus Saxton, was a native of Bristol, Pa., and emigrated to Michigan in the early '60s, where he was employed as a painter.

Glen E. Saxton attended the public schools of Michigan, and as a boy sold newspapers at Battle Creek to earn his own way. In 1904 he left home to work in a large implement shop and spent two years there learning the machinist's trade; later he removed to Roseburg, Ore., and for a number of years his occupations were diversified, working in the hemp rope mills, the pine box factories and Sutter's Paper Box factory; later upon removing to Portland, Ore., he took up the plumber's trade, working as an apprentice, and in 1908 he removed to White Salmon, Wash., and established his first plumbing store with repair shop in connection and built up a fine trade, which he continued for a year and a half when he disposed of it to good advantage. Learning of a good opening in Portland he returned there and entered into partnership with Mr. Loupaugh in the conduct of an extensive pumping machinery business, which occupied him for one year. He then became much interested in the Mellon Institute of Pittsburgh, Pa., and upon hearing that a plant was to be opened at Thompson, Nev., he made application for the position of superintendent and foreman in the scientific mining and leaching of copper; five years were spent in that occupation and Mr. Saxton was released with reluctance as the general foreman of this concern.

The marriage of Mr. Saxton united him with Miss Bonnie Moquist, a daughter of A. E. Moquist, of Los Banos, Cal. They are the parents of one child, Ellis Edward. In December, 1920, Mr. Saxton opened his shop in Tracy and the volume of business has so increased that he has sought larger quarters twice, his present location being at 30 West Eighth Street. He owns a comfortable residence in Tracy and has entered into the industrial life of the community with true California spirit, and has already taken a most active interest in the progress and development of the West Side country. In politics he is a Republican, and fraternally is a Mason and has been a member of the Odd Fellow lodge for fourteen years.

HENRY A. MAGHETTI.—A model institution that seems to fill a long-felt want because of progressive operation is the Tracy Creamery at Tracy, Cal., conducted along up-to-date lines by Henry A. Maghetti, where high grade alfalfa produced under irrigation, fed to well-bred dairy cows, results in the best quality of pure milk and cream which is distributed by this house. A native of California, he was born at San Rafael, Marin County, on July 26, 1886, and was reared and schooled there until he went to San Francisco, where he took a course in the Humboldt evening high school. He is the son of Oriollo and Mary (Corti) Maghetti, natives of Italy and Switzerland, respectively, who were early settlers of Marin County, where the father became a very successful dairy farmer, and here Henry received his first lessons in farming and stock raising. After his parents passed away Henry decided to learn the pattern making trade, but he was fond of an outdoor life and could not content himself to stay indoors, as this trade would compel him to do. He then entered the employ of Shafter Howard in his creamery plant at Point Reyes and here he found the occupation to his liking. In 1909 he entered the dairy business for himself and has built up and disposed of several very fine herds of dairy cattle. Removing to Tracy in 1918, he looked the field over and became greatly impressed with the possibilities of the section under the West Side Irrigation system. He purchased the Tracy Creamery, made a number of important improvements, and installed an up-to-date pasteurization plant.

Mr. Maghetti is making and distributing a fine quality of butter, ice cream and cheese. In the conduct of the milk, cream, butter, and cheese industry, Mr. Maghetti uses progressive methods. The plant is thoroughly sanitary and is maintained along advanced lines. An automobile delivery provides quick response to orders from town and outside patrons, immediate service being a special feature. Mr. Maghetti is well pleased with conditions in the Tracy country, and having had much experience in farming he is in position to appreciate the future in this section where the lands are irrigated.

The marriage of Mr. Maghetti occurred in Santa Rosa in 1919 and united him with Mrs. Margaret (Mehegan) Maritzen, a native of San Francisco. They are the parents of three children: Clara, Barbara Jean, and Jack. For the past fourteen years, Mr. Maghetti has been active in the Odd Fellows and is an active member of the Chamber of Commerce.

WILLIAM HEIL.—Conducting his realty operations on a large scale, William Heil has not only made a splendid success in this field since locating in Lodi, but was well known for his extensive development work in several sections of North Dakota before coming to San Joaquin County. Born in Yankton, Dakota Territory, May 6, 1878, he started his business life by clerking in a store at Menno, leaving there in 1899 to locate in Morton County, N. D., where he homesteaded 160 acres of land, which he developed into a stock ranch, a property he still owns. Going to Glen Ullin, N. D., Mr. Heil began his career in the realty business, being a pioneer developer of that section and doing much to develop it, selling land to Eastern speculators, disposing of Northern Pacific Railroad lands and locating homesteaders. In 1910 he helped to build up the town of Elgin, erecting the first store building and residence there, and he founded the town of Heil, laying out the town site and starting the sale of the lots the following spring in what is now a thriving town.

In the fall of 1913 Mr. Heil removed to Bismarck, N. D., and a year later he came to California and located at Lodi, having made his first visit to California and Lodi in 1907. Here he became actively identified with the real estate field under the firm name of The Heil Land Company, operating on an extensive scale in the handling of ranch properties, and has bought a number of vineyards, improved them and resold them at a fine profit. In 1919 Mr. Heil sold the Fink Bros., ranch of fifty-five acres for $1250 an acre, this being the first sale of vineyard land at this high price in the county, and in 1920 part of this same land sold for $2,000 an acre. The Trimberger place of ten acres which he sold for $7,500 brought $27,500 three years later, and the vineyard of John K. Bender, consisting of twenty acres, which he sold in 1919 for $16,000, has changed hands three times in two years, bringing $46,000 the last time, showing the increase in values in this thriving district. The company now holds the Kirschenmann ranch of seventy acres of vineyard and orchard on the lower Sacramento Road, the latter property being brought up to a high state of cultivation under the supervision of Mr. Heil. The company also owns 500 acres of bare land of which Mr. Heil personally owns 480 acres in Merced County.

Mr. Heil's first marriage united him with Miss Magdalena Fink, who passed away in Lodi, leaving three children, Emma, Hilda and Harry. On February 13, 1908, he was married to Miss Augusta Lipelt, a native of Poland, and this union has been blessed with the birth of two children, Loraine and Gerald William. Mr. Heil was one of the organizers of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Lodi and was at one time its largest stockholder, but he recently disposed of his interests in it. Progressive in all his ideas, Mr. Heil has been successful since first coming here, and with his enthusiasm and belief in the future greatness of this favored district, he has contributed much to its prosperity.

JOHN BUNCH.—At his San Joaquin County home, on June 4, 1904, John Bunch surrendered the duties of life and passed to his reward, having completed almost forty years residence in the county. During those years he was one of the most prominent ranchers and esteemed citizens of this section of the state. His life was one of industry, thrift and honest toil, from the years of youth until he had reached the Psalmist's span of allotted years. Besides a worthy family of sons and daughters, he left his aged widow to enjoy a few years longer the comforts which their united efforts for many years had accomplished. She passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Groschlose, at Linden, Cal., on March 30, 1920, surrounded by her devoted family.

Born in Washington County, Ind., July 23, 1826, John Bunch was a son of William and Catherine (McGrew) Bunch. His mother dying when he was four years old, he was reared to his majority in his native county, receiving such educational advantages as the pioneer school equipment of the time and locality afforded. He was at the time of his death one of the few surviving veterans of the Mexican War, having enlisted for that service and having taken part in the battle of Buena Vista, as also in some minor engagements. On his return from war he remained with his father near Salem, Ind. for some time, and then went out to the new state of Iowa and located in Davis County, where he was engaged in farming and stockraising until he came to California. In connection with his other regular pursuits in Iowa, he also for a time conducted a steam saw and grist mill. His father, William Bunch, was born in Virginia in 1804, where his English ancestors had settled in the seventeenth century. In 1854 he removed to Indiana and still later to Iowa, where he passed away in 1870.

On March 4, 1852, John Bunch was married to Miss Mary F. Wallace, who was born near Nashville, Tenn., December 13, 1829, a daughter of John N. and Sarah E. (Hamilton) Wallace, her father a native of South Carolina and her mother of Kentucky. In infancy she was taken by her parents from Tennessee to Randolph County, Mo., where she lived and was reared to the age of fifteen. The family then removed to Platte County, Mo., and made their home there until they settled in Davis County, Iowa, in 1851. John Bunch and wife had nine children: Sarah F., wife of George J. Leffler; Mary E., wife of John A. Swain, of San Joaquin County; Charles F.; David M., deceased; Ann V., wife of Florin C. Swain, of San Joaquin County; Julia C. who became the wife of the late James G. Russell, but is now the wife of Davis Groschlose, farmer and stockman at Linden; Joseph W., of San Joaquin County; Ida D., wife of George Sayles; and Thomas who died July 18, 1906. In 1864 John Bunch brought his family across the plains to California, driving ox and mule teams; and after a short time spent in Tuolumne County he moved to San Joaquin County in 1865, where he rented a ranch from Joe Davis, which he farmed for one year, and then bought 280 acres running from the Eight-mile House to the upper Sacramento Road. He also owned eighty acres two and a half miles east, where he continued his activity until his death. For many years he was a trustee of the Davis school district, and he was noted for his loyal support of all public institutions and enterprises. He was a member of the Methodist Church South of Stockton, in which for a number of years he served as steward. For forty years John Bunch held the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens in this part of the state, and stood for uplift and civic betterment in his community. He was a successful business man, a good manager and financier, and was always reckoned as one of the substantial men of the county.

ADOLPH G. BUSCHKE.—An early settler who has seen much of San Joaquin County grow from a wilderness and who is, therefore, a natural lover of the Golden State, is Adolph G. Buschke, a native of Germany, born near Posen on October 11, 1859. His father, Gottlieb Buschke, made a visit to Tracy early in 1910, and upon his return to his native land of Germany, passed away during May of the same year; and his mother, Louisa Meatzner, in her maidenhood, passed away in 1870. Adolph G. received a good public school education in his native country and was confirmed in the Evangelical Lutheran Church. In 1885 he came to Tracy and entered the harness shop owned by his brother, G. A. D. Buschke, whose sketch is also in this volume; two years later he removed to French Camp and went to work in Brandt's Factory remaining there for about two years; and in 1889 farmed on shares for Mr. Ott, a prominent landowner; two years later he again returned to Tracy and farmed on the William Golden ranch until 1901; during this time he had acquired a ranch near Banta, which was the first land he had owned since coming to America; today he owns three fine ranches adjacent to Tracy.

The marriage of Mr. Buschke occurred in Stockton and united him with Miss Adelaide Golden, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Golden, honored pioneers of San Joaquin County; Mr. Golden came to the county soon after the close of the Civil War and now is the sole survivor of the G. A. R. members of Tracy. He has been a most successful farmer throughout his lifetime. Mr. and Mrs. Buschke are the parents of eight children: Ella is the wife of George Sheppard and has two daughters, the family residing at Stockton; Adolph is married and has two daughters and they reside in San Francisco; Oscar married Miss Marccinni, is a rancher and resides in Tracy; Paul married Miss Noble, and they live in Oakland, Cal.; he served in the U. S. Army during the World War; Herbert married Miss Moffet and they reside at Vernalis, where he is employed as assistant engineer of the Standard Oil Pump Line; he served in the U. S. Army during the World War; Reuben is a student of the University of California in the architectural department; Gussie was married to Mr. O. Perry, a rancher at Tracy, October 14, 1922; Fred Ewald is a student in the West Side Union high school of Tracy. Mr. Buschke received his U. S. citizenship in 1893 in Judge Jones' court at Stockton, and has reared his family according to American ideals, being assisted in this work by his devoted helpmate. He is a Republican of staunch party loyalty and the family have been active members of the First Presbyterian Church, Mr. Buschke serving as elder. The first church service was held in the Willow district schoolhouse and rough candles made of sheep tallow were used to furnish artificial light in those pioneer days; he was one of the organizers of the West Side Bank, since known as the Bank of Italy, but he has disposed of his interest in that institution. Mr. Buschke has been a pioneer in various lines of business; he was the first man to conduct a dairy and for many years supplied the city of Tracy with dairy products, before the establishment of creameries. His prize dairy herd has been his pride, and he has shown as far away as the Tacoma, Wash., Fair his pure-bred shorthorn cattle. In recent years chickens have been his hobby, and he takes great pride in his thoroughbred poultry. A close adherence to the Golden Rule has been the policy of Mr. Buschke throughout his entire life, and his honesty and industry have brought him peace and plenty for the balance of his lifetime.

ROBERT T. MELTON.—For twenty-two years Robert T. Melton was actively and prominently identified with farming interests of San Joaquin County, during which period he made substantial contribution to the agricultural development of this part of the state. He was born on a farm in Monona County, Iowa, November 20, 1862, a son of Jesse C. and Sarah (Nutt) Melton, the former a native of Alabama, while the latter was born in Indiana. In 1875 the family started for California and they were nine days in reaching Stockton, Cal. On arriving in the Golden State they settled in Stanislaus County, where for many years the father followed the occupation of farming. Elias Nutt, the maternal grandfather of the subject of this review, had crossed the plains to California with ox teams in the early '50s acquiring a large acreage near Ripon, on the Stanislaus River. He also brought with him to California a horse, which was still living at the time the Melton family arrived here.

Robert T. Melton remained upon the home ranch in Stanislaus County until he was twenty years of age and then came to San Joaquin County, afterward renting a part of the G. W. Trahern ranch, five miles west of Ripon. He raised grain on an extensive scale, having from 1,000 to 2,000 acres planted to wheat, and later he purchased 1,000 acres of the land, which he subsequently sold. In 1904 he rented the ranch and moved into Stockton, where he has since resided, devoting his attention to the buying and selling of real estate, in which he has been very successful. He has negotiated many important realty transfers and when the San Joaquin Irrigation District was being formed he took an active part in promoting the sale of the bonds and contributed in large measure to the success of the enterprise. He is a director of the City Bank of Stockton and is also a director in the Pacific National Fire Insurance Company of Sacramento, and helped to organize the Bank of Ripon, serving as a director for many years.

Mr. Melton married Miss Mary Silvis, a native of Pennsylvania, and they have become the parents of two children: Oscar T., sealer of weights and measures for San Joaquin County; and Elsie Eva, a graduate of the University of California, class of 1922, now engaged in teaching in Merced County. Mr. Melton has always taken a deep interest in civic affairs, especially in the promotion of educational standards, and served as school trustee of the Ripon district. He joined the Ripon Lodge of Odd Fellows in 1884 and is a member of Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. Elks.

LEON JAMES LUCAS.—For the past thirty-nine years Leon James Lucas has resided on his home ranch west of Woodbridge on the Thornton road. He is a fine example of the enterprising man who came to this state and centered his activity in one locality, and by industry and the best of business management built up a solid and permanent success. He is a native of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, born on June 25, 1859, a son of Isaac and Sarah (Phillips) Lucas, natives of Pennsylvania and Ohio, respectively.

Grandfather Adam Lucas was born in Germany. With his wife he emigrated to America and located in Pennsylvania, later removing to Johnsville near Mansfield, Richland County, Ohio, where he followed farming until his death.

Grandfather Thomas Phillips was born in Vermont, and was a soldier in the war of 1812. He became a farmer in Ohio, and it was then that his daughter Sarah was reared and educated. She was a woman of much amiability and native charm.

Isaac Lucas followed farming in Ohio. In 1852 he moved to Iowa, locating on a farm near Cedar Rapids and continued husbandry there for ten years. It was during his residence there that Leon James was born. In 1862 Mr. Lucas, with his family, moved back to Richland County, Ohio, and there he was a farmer until his death. Eleven children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Lucas: Darius, of Cleveland, Ohio; Upton, in Richland County, Ohio; William and Allen, deceased; Leon James, our subject, and his twin sister, Leah Jane, who passed away when six months old; Jerome, deceased; Thomas, of Richland County, Ohio; Mrs. Emma Rinehart, of Morrow County, Ohio; Mrs. Roby Snyder, and Laura, both deceased.

Leon J. Lucas received his education in the public schools of Richland County, Ohio. He was an adept pupil and good student, so that when eighteen years old he had already received a certificate to teach school. He taught school in that county for two years, and then resolved to come west and cast in his lot with California. In 1883 he came to San Joaquin County, where he engaged in farming.

On September 5, 1888, on the Richard Woods ranch west of Woodbridge, Mr. Lucas was married to Miss Carrie L. Woods, a native daughter of San Joaquin County and a daughter of Richard and Mary Ann (Durbin) Woods, born in Virginia and West Virginia, respectively. Grandfather Thomas Woods was a planter in Virginia. After their marriage in West Virginia, Mr. and Mrs. Woods removed to Lisbon, Iowa, where they farmed until 1863, when they crossed the plains in an ox-team train of about forty wagons, the journey occupying from May until November. They had considerable trouble with the Indians, who seemed intent on getting their stock. At various times, while passing through the Snake River country, when they were corralled at night, the Indians would surround them. The train arranged their wagons in a circle, in frontier style, and dug a large hole in the center for protection to the women and children. One night Richard Woods was wounded in the leg; but it was only a flesh wound, so they were not delayed. It was by surrendering some of the stock that they finally got through that section, and they were all glad when they arrived in California. Mr. Woods located in northern San Joaquin County, then covered with brush and live oak. He purchased 160 acres of land, cleared and improved it, and then farmed until he retired. His wife died in 1903, aged seventy-three.

after which he made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Lucas until his death in 1913, aged ninety years and six months. They had ten children. The first baby, named John, died in West Virginia. The others were Mrs. Barbara Sollinger, of Lodi; Mrs. Addie Perrott, deceased; George A., in Alaska; William A., living in Lodi; Achsa, now Mrs. Hughes of Sacramento; Carrie L., Mrs. Lucas; Charles R., deceased; James A., of Walnut Grove; and Melvin O., living in Stockton.

After his marriage, Mr. Lucas followed grain farming until 1894, when he began orcharding and raising fruits. In 1903 he purchased his present place of ten acres on the Thornton road, one mile west of Woodbridge, which he set out to grapes, and which is today a splendid full-bearing vineyard. He made all the other improvements, including residence and farm buildings, and set out the ornamental trees and small orchard. It is a slightly place and a comfortable home.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucas have four children: Roby, wife of R. N. Welsh, a rancher in this county; Erma, the wife of Ray L. Allen, a civil engineer in Sacramento; Mrs. John A. Roseberry, wife of a rancher at Lodi; and Richard, a rancher at Acampo. Mr. and Mrs. Lucas have nine grandchildren.

Mrs. Lucas is a member of the Woman's Improvement Club of Lodi; the White Apron Club at Lafayette; and the W. R. C. in Lodi, of which she served as treasurer. She is also a member of the W. C. T. U., and is a strong Prohibitionist. In politics, Mr. Lucas is a Republican, and in voting with his party he takes a good citizen's interest in all public affairs. He and his wife are members of the United Brethren Church at Stockton.

HERBERT A. FAIRBANK.—Among the representative men of San Joaquin County, Herbert A. Fairbank is in the front rank, his various interests bringing him in close touch with viticulture, horticulture and commercial activities, for which he is specially fitted. His resourceful business ability has been used in behalf of public improvement, and the substantial upbuilding of the state and county. He was born in Cook County, Ill., on April 19, 1860, a son of John B. and Emily P. (Mack) Fairbank. The father, John B. Fairbank, was a Congregational minister and moved to Morgan County, Ill., when Herbert A. was a small lad. Having had the misfortune to lose his mother when he was two weeks old, Herbert A. Fairbank was sent to Jacksonville, Ill., to live with his grandmother. After the father's second marriage he went to live with his father's family at Fort Wayne, Ind. He began his education in the Fort Wayne public school and in course of time was graduated from the high school of that city. He then entered the Illinois College at Jacksonville, where he remained for three years. The father, John B. Fairbank, passed away in 1881.

After leaving Illinois College, Mr. Fairbank went to Sioux Falls, S. D., and was employed by the Sharp Lumber Company as bookkeeper for three years. He then went to San Antonio, Texas, and was bookkeeper for the William Cameron Lumber Company, which operated twenty-seven yards throughout the state, and remained with this company for two and one-half years. In 1886 he removed to San Francisco, Cal., and for six years was with the California Fruit Union. Then for four years he was employed with the National Fruit Association, and afterwards became identified with the Producers Fruit Company and served in the capacity of president and manager of the company up to five years ago, when he came to Lodi. There he had secured fruit lands previously in the Christian Colony district. Jointly with his son-in-law, W. H. Dement, he owns and operates 220 acres, all amply supplied with water for irrigating purposes by pumping plants. They have fifty acres in vineyard and 170 acres in orchard. After purchasing this property they had remodeled the house into a comfortable and commodious home, but suffered the misfortune of having it burned to the ground during January, 1922.

When the Citizens National Bank of Lodi was organized, Mr. Fairbank was unanimously elected a director of the institution; he is the president of the Lodi Canning Company and also serves as president of the Associated Fruit Growers, Inc., of Lodi.

The marriage of Mr. Fairbank occurred in Sioux Falls, S. D., on September 6, 1882, and united him with Miss Lillian E. Buck, born in Viroqua, Wis., a daughter of I. K. and Sarah Buck. Her father, I. K. Buck, was a hardware merchant in Viroqua. Later he was in the same business in State Center, Iowa, and then moved to Sioux Falls, S. D. Mr. and Mrs. Fairbank are the parents of one daughter, Gladys, Mrs. W. H. Dement. Mr. Fairbank is a Republican in politics, and fraternally is a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons of Lodi, Chapter R. A., and Scottish Rite of Sacramento, and Islam Temple Shriners of San Francisco; and is also a member of the W. O. W. of Sacramento and of the National Union. It is not success alone that has won for Mr. Fairbank the respect, confidence and friendship of his fellow men, but his high character, his devotion to the general good, and his exemplification of manly principles.

EDWIN THOMAS HANNAFORD.—An honored pioneer resident of Stockton, Edwin Thomas Hannaford has made this part of California his home for more than sixty years. He was born on Cape Elizabeth, near Portland, Maine, May 1, 1840, his ancestors being of English birth. In the fall of 1860 he left his native state and sailed on the Star of the West to the Isthmus of Panama, and up the Pacific on the Cortez to San Francisco, landing in the latter part of December, 1860. On January 3, 1861, he arrived at Stockton and for a year and a half he worked on the Foreman ranch, where the town of Linden now stands, grinding grain in a primitive flour mill owned by Rynerson & Wasley. Later he came to Stockton and engaged in the tobacco business with George Houston. They raised their own tobacco on Craig's ranch and cured it, having five acres in this crop. Natural leaf was then selling for $1.00 a pound and smoking tobacco was seventy-five cents a pound. Selling out and dissolving partnership he went to Knight's Ferry, working in the old flour mill of D. W. Tulloch, and when he returned to Stockton in 1865 he entered the employ of the City Flour Mill, located on Main Street and owned by Willard and Austin Sperry and Mr. Burkett. For fifty years he was one of their most trusted employees and at the time of his retirement in 1915 he was presented with a gold service pin by the Sperry Company in honor of his long and faithful service. He filled all positions in the mill except that of engineer and general superintendent. He was superintendent of the cereal mill and later for twenty-six years had charge of the boys and girls employed in the cereal mill. He did all the flour packing in the early days and has seen many changes in the mill's processes and machinery during his long term of service. At a recent banquet at the mill he was the guest of honor and made a fine speech, his name heading the list of veteran employees.

In earlier years Mr. Hannaford was prominent in musical affairs, having a fine basso-profundo voice. He formed two male quartettes and with the three Wheeler sisters made a concert tour throughout the Valley, visiting San Jose and other places. For three years he sang in the choir of the Congregational Church and never missed a Sunday during that time. Hale and hearty in his eighty-third year he is still very active and can dance a jig as well as in his youth. He joined the Odd Fellows in 1863 at Linden; afterwards he was a member of Yerba Buena Lodge in San Francisco. The world is his church and to do good is his religion. He has been a Republican from the time of Lincoln.

Mr. Hannaford was first married in Sacramento to Miss Madeline Bingham, born in Pennsylvania, who died in Oakland, leaving six children, five of whom are living: Mrs. Mary Hihn, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Nellie Andrews, of Watsonville; Edwin T., Jr., of Stockton; Mrs. Jennie Menasco, of Watsonville; Mrs. Lorena Elliott, of Venice. His second marriage united him with Miss Margaret Andrews, who was born in Nebraska. Her parents, John H. and Margaret (Curry) Andrews, were both natives of England, and in 1865 they crossed the plains with mule teams. They settled at first in Oregon and later came to Stockton, where Mr. Andrews opened up a harness shop on South Center Street between Main and Market, and the brick building which he erected is still standing. By this union they have one son, James L., a carpenter in Venice.

JAMES DRACE.—An honored pioneer of San Joaquin County, James Drace passed away at his home at San Jose, Cal. August 8, 1918. He was born at St. Joseph, Mo., April 14, 1834, being a son of James Drace, a pioneer farmer of Missouri who was born after the death of his father in Philadelphia. When nineteen years of age, he started across the plains to California with ox teams. He did what most of the early comers to California did, went first into the mines seeking for gold; then he began freighting from Stockton to the mines driving an eighteen-mule team over the rough mountain roads. He followed this occupation for seven years, then invested his savings in 160 acres of land and built a house on it, residing there until 1866, when he sold out and bought the home place on Mormon Slough, near Linden, now known as the Drace ranch.

At Linden Mr. Drace was married to Miss Jane Potter, born July 3, 1847, a sister of Joseph Potter, a pioneer of Linden. Five children were born to this couple: Charles E.; Dora is the wife of C. H. Needham, of Wesley, Cal.; J. A. is associated with Charles E. in extensive ranching operations and reside in Stockton; Elizabeth is deceased; Alice M. is with the Associated Oil Company of San Jose, Cal. After more than thirty years residence in San Joaquin County, James Drace rented his home place to his son J. A. Drace, and removed to San Jose where he purchased a residence on South Fifteenth Street, and there resided until his death. He was preceded by his wife who died in 1916. He was a charter member of the Scio Lodge I. O. O. F. of Linden, was a Democrat in politics and was a member of the Methodist Church.

ERNEST MAXMILLIAN TSCHIERSCHKY.—

One of the early settlers in California who has contributed his share towards the building up of the commonwealth is Ernest Maxmillian Tschierschky, who was born near Bunzlau, Silesia, Germany, October 3, 1835. Left an orphan when three years of age, he made his home with an uncle in Nausholz, where he received a good education in the public schools. After being confirmed in the Lutheran Church when fourteen, he removed with his uncle to Stettin, on the Baltic Sea. There he naturally went to sea, as was the custom of the youth in that port. He made six trips before the mast in a German vessel to England. Then he went deep sea sailing in the "Mirau," a sailer bound for New York City, in 1858, and from that port he made seventeen trips across the Atlantic. He also sailed in coasting vessels, to the West Indies and South American ports. On the steamer "Liberty" he made twenty trips between New York and Havana.

Mr. Tschierschky was shipwrecked in the Bay of Biscay off the French coast in a sailing vessel, but got ashore in the night. He then traveled by land to Paris and then made his way back to Stettin. He was also in a collision in the North Sea when their ship sunk an English vessel off the coast of England. During the Civil War he served as quartermaster on two different government transports, the "Delaware" and "John Rice," out of New York City, along the Southern coast, transporting troops and supplies.

Mr. Tschierschky was married in New York City in August, 1868, to Miss Caroline Beneker, who was born in Brennerhaven, Germany. In September of the same year he came with his wife to San Francisco via Panama. Landing from the old "Constitution," he quit the sea and located in Stockton, being employed in a lumber yard until 1870. That year the Stockton Lumber Company was started and he entered their employ, continuing with them without interruption for forty-one years. During that time he was foreman for a year and then was salesman until he retired.

Soon after he came to Stockton, he built a residence on North Pilgrim Street, and he resided there for many years. His wife died in 1911, aged sixty-three years. Their union was blessed with ten children: William is postmaster at Tracy; Frederick is in the plumbing business; Herbert is also a plumber; Louis is employed in a planing mill; Alexander is a deputy sheriff. The other children are Laura, Wilhelmina, a graduate nurse, Mrs. Caroline Woleson, Mrs. Freda Sturla, and Mrs. Grant. All live in Stockton, excepting William and Wilhelmina, who make their homes in Tracy and San Francisco respectively.

During the years he was in the lumber trade he was also interested in ranching, having had the foresight many years ago to purchase land near Ripon which he devoted to grain raising and later set to vineyard. After keeping it for a number of years, he sold at a good profit, and later on he disposed of the remainder of his land. He had purchased the original 480 acres in 1875 for $5,000. Some men, considered good business heads, said he was a very foolish man to pay so much; but a few years later, after he had demonstrated it a success, the same men changed their minds and said they guessed he understood land.

Mr. Tschierschky was made a Mason in New York City, and then became a member of the Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M. He was reared a Lutheran, and still adheres to that religious faith.

THOMAS GARNER.—Among the prominent citizens of the West Side section of San Joaquin County, Thomas Garner for the past twenty-seven years has been the superintendent of the Southern Pacific Railroad department of signals and general yardman at Tracy. He was born in Corpus Christi, Texas, on November 28, 1866. When he was about two years old, his father, James L. Garner, was killed by a Mexican while riding the range. His grandfather, John Garner, took Thomas to his home and reared and schooled him until he was eleven years old. John Garner was an extensive land and stock owner in Texas. In 1877 he left his grandfather's home and came to California alone to the home of his mother's sister, Mrs. Thomas Fox, in Sutter County, Mr. Fox being engaged in the cattle business near Yuba City. Thomas found employment on the range and earned fifteen dollars per month and within three years time he had saved enough money to pay the transportation for his mother and sister from Texas to San Francisco, Cal. Mrs. Garner passed away in Tracy during 1910.

Thomas attended the public schools in Yuba City and when the family removed to San Francisco he attended the Lincoln grammar school; and in 1890 finished a business course at Heald's Business College in that city. He then learned the blacksmith's trade and followed it in Yuba City and San Francisco. In 1891 he became a brakeman out of Oakland on the Western division of the Southern Pacific Railroad; three years later he was stationed at Tracy and had the run out of Lathrop to Fresno.

The marriage of Mr. Garner in 1895 united him with Miss Lulu Lisle, a native of Sutter County, Cal., a daughter of John Q. Lisle, a prominent pioneer farmer of Sutter County who passed away in 1912. In the early days he erected and owned the Lisle toll bridge over the American River; the bridge is still standing and in good repair. Mr. and Mrs. Garner are the parents of one daughter, Margaret E., a graduate of the West Side Union high school; she is also a gifted musician, having completed a three years course in piano and harmony in San Francisco; she has a large class in piano at Tracy. In 1898, Mr. Garner joined the Summer Lodge of Odd Fellows and has passed through all the chairs; he is now a trustee of the lodge; he has been high priest of the Encampment for the past fourteen years, with the exception of one term. For the past thirteen years, with the exception of two years, he has been the clerk of the board of trustees of the Tracy schools; this school district recently voted $75,000 worth of bonds for new buildings, for which Mr. Garner is in no little measure responsible. In an article signed by the Tracy grammar school teachers, which appeared in the Stockton Record of March 30, 1922, the teachers warmly endorsed Mr. Garner for re-election. Needless to say he was reelected by a very emphatic majority. Mr. Garner has been the treasurer of the Brotherhood of Trainmen for twelve years and has recently been honored with the twenty-five years service button, in recognition of his faithful and efficient service. His political views are those of the Democratic party. While contributing liberally to all worthy charities, Mr. and Mrs. Garner hold membership with the Methodist Episcopal Church; their home is at 55 West Ninth Street, and they also own a residence and some excellent real estate in the Rosedale addition. In April, 1920, he was elected, by popular ballot, city trustee. He was selected by the city board of trustees as its chairman, and is now serving as mayor of the city of Tracy with ability and dignity.

MRS. MARY CECELIA JACOBSEN.—A native daughter who is giving of her best efforts towards building up and developing her county, Mrs. Mary Cecelia Jacobsen was born on the Selby ranch near Redwood City, San Mateo County, a daughter of Edmund and Sarah (McSorley) Elligott, born in Limerick, Ireland, and New York respectively. Her father came to Minnesota as a lad and when sixteen came to California via Panama. For a time he followed mining and then coming to San Jose he was married to Sarah McSorley. Her parents, James and Mary (Martin) McSorley, born in County Tyrone, Ireland, had come to Oneida County, New York, where the daughter, Sarah, was born and there the father died. The mother then in 1862 came via Panama with the children and she spent the remainder of her days in San Juan. Of the six children in the McSorley family there is only one, Dan McSorley, now living, and he resides on his ranch adjoining Mrs. Jacobson.

Mr. Elligott was foreman of the Selby ranch in San Mateo County, later for Alex. Grogan at Palo Alto. He removed to San Juan, San Benito County, and purchased a sixty acre ranch; engaging in fruit raising. Selling out, he purchased a wheat ranch, a part of the Curran ranch at Gilroy, and when he sold that he moved to Petaluma, where he followed farming and dairying. He came to Stockton in 1880 and in 1881 he purchased 119½ acres and later 27½ more from John Tretheway, and on his 177 acre ranch he farmed until his death, March 5, 1908. The mother had passed away October 21, 1895.

Mary Cecelia, their only child, completed her education in the Petaluma high school, coming to Stockton in 1880. She was married in St. Mary's Church October 3, 1893, to Jacob Jacobsen, a native of Denmark, born December 18, 1860, whose father, Louis, was a farmer, and there Mr. Jacobsen was reared and educated. When eighteen years of age he came to New York State, later removing to Kansas, whence he came to California. Mr. Jacobsen inherited the Elligott ranch and after their marriage they engaged in farming the place.

The Jacobsen ranch is devoted to grain, hay and fruits, some of the acreage being devoted to raising table grapes. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobsen's union has been blessed with two children: Louis E., a graduate of St. Mary's College and Heald's Business College, is now engaged in viticulture and in buying and shipping grapes, as well as managing his mother's ranch. Edmund D. entered service in the World War, June 3, 1918, and was sent to the recruiting barracks at Angel Island and afterwards to Camp Johnston, Fla., and then transferred to Newport News and at Camp Hill served in 312th Remount Squadron. Three weeks later he was sent to Brest, France, where he continued in the service in remount work. During his seven months of service in France he was in the Meuse-Argonne offensive and upon the termination of hostilities his regiment was sent into Germany as a part of the Army of Occupation, and his particular company was stationed about seventeen kilometers west of Coblenz. During the Meuse-Argonne offensive he received a slight shrapnel wound from which later blood poisoning set in and it took three months' treatment in the hospital before the infection was eradicated. Returning to the United States, he received his honorable discharge at Mitchell Field, Long Island, as private, first class. After his discharge he returned to Stockton and for two years was employed with the Holt Manufacturing Company and then he entered his present position with the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. He was married September 17, 1919, to Miss Blanche Duncan, a daughter of Chas. H. and Ethel (Tupper) Duncan, of Linden, and they have a lovely daughter, Meredith, who is the pride of Grandmother Jacobsen. For some years Mrs. Jacobsen was a member of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Loyal Order of Moose. In national politics she is a Republican.

STANLEY D. HERBERT.—Among the more recent additions to the horticultural industry in the Farmington section of San Joaquin County is Stanley D. Herbert, who is the owner of the Littlejohn Creek orchard, consisting of eighty acres in producing orchard of cherries, apricots, prunes and walnuts. He was born in 1879 in Dane County, Wis., a son of A. W. and Sarah P. (Baldwin) Herbert, now engaged in horticulture at Ashland, Ore. The father is a native of the Isle of Wight, England, and Mrs. Herbert was born in Indiana of French-Canadian parents. A. W. Herbert located in Oregon in the '80s where Stanley D. received a good education and was graduated from the Agricultural College at Corvallis, Ore., in 1901, with the degree of B. S. In 1902 he left home and engaged in civil engineer work in eastern Oregon remaining there until 1904 when he entered the University of California at Berkeley, taking a post-graduate course during 1904-5. He then followed civil engineering work in California and Nevada, working on the Truckee-Carson reclamation project and in Solano County and was engaged in this work for about ten years; he then became superintendent of the Natomas Consolidated of California in Sacramento County. During 1916-17 he was in the seed business at Stockton and sold out in 1918 just after entering the service, and after the war he located on his farm southwest of Farmington in 1920.

On October 11, 1919, Mr. Herbert was united in marriage with Miss Ruth Hewitt, a daughter of W. T. Hewitt, a pioneer of the Farmington section, San Joaquin County. One son has been born to them, Edward William. Mr. Herbert served in the World War in the 104th Engineers and was at Camp Humphrey, Va. He was discharged with the rank of captain. Fraternally he is affiliated with Charity Lodge, I. O. O. F. and the American Legion at Stockton; he is a director in the San Joaquin County Cherry Growers Association and is a member of the Prune and Apricot Growers Association and serves as the director of the Farmington Farm Bureau. Reliable in business, loyal in citizenship, he is highly esteemed by his many friends.

MARGARET FARRELL.—A patriotic woman who may well be proud of the record of her family in the late war is Mrs. Margaret Farrell, enterprising and successful vineyardist and rancher, who lives about two miles west of Acampo. She was born in San Francisco, on July 26, 1864, the daughter of Patrick and Maria (Burke) Haley, both natives of County Galway, Ireland, and substantial farmer-folk. Owing to conditions in that country, her parents had little opportunity for education, and her father looked more hopefully toward the future when he came to America in 1859. Her mother came several years earlier, with a married sister. Mr. Haley and Miss Burke were united in matrimony in New York on November 1, 1859. In that city they lived for a couple of years, until they went to St. Louis; and then they engaged in farming in Missouri. From the Iron State they came to California in 1864, and settled in San Francisco, in which city Mr. Haley was a laborer for a couple of years. When they left the Bay City they went inland to Santa Clara County, where they rented a part of the Martin Murphy ranch, east of Milpitas, and engaged in farming.

In the fall of 1869 Mr. Haley removed to San Joaquin County with his family, and for a year rented a ranch near Waterloo; and then for three years they farmed west of Woodbridge. On October 31, 1874, Mr. Haley bought a farm of 220 acres on the Mokelumne River two miles west of Acampo, which soon became known as the Haley grain ranch; and a year or so later he purchased an additional eighty acres, making in all some 300 acres. In 1900, he rented his ranch and retired; and sixteen years later, a couple of days before Christmas, 1916, he passed away, aged ninety-five years. Mrs. Haley, the mother of our subject, had died on November 4, 1901, aged seventy-four, mourned by a large circle of friends. Four of the children of Mr. and Mrs. Haley died in infancy, and our subject was the only one that grew to maturity.

Margaret Haley attended the school at Woodbridge, and finished her education at St. Joseph's Academy in Sacramento. On February 15, 1885, she was married to Edward Farrell, the son of John and Ann (Welch) Farrell, natives of West Meath, Ireland, where Edward Farrell was also born. His parents remained in their native land, and died there; but Ed. Farrell came to California as a boy and settled in Sacramento. He went to school there, and in time became identified with the Southern Pacific Railroad. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Farrell lived in Sacramento, making their home at their residence at 2115 M Street; and Mr. Farrell continued working in the Sacramento shops until the time of his death at Sacramento on January 17, 1914, when he closed a very useful life, the honored father of nine children. John E. is at Sacramento, in the employ of the Southern Pacific; Thomas is a well-known lawyer in Sacramento, formerly deputy district attorney of Sacramento County for seven years, and now in private practice; Edward P. is a plumber of Sacramento; Joseph M. is with the State Highway Commission in that city; James A. is farming and lives at home; Frances died of the influenza on November 4, 1918; Anna is at home; Leo William is a medical student at St. Louis; and Winifred is at home.

After her husband's death, Mrs. Farrell continued to reside in Sacramento and also took charge of the ranch in July, 1915; and now, out of her 300 acres, forty-two are in vineyard, and a part is a young vineyard; and all are Tokay grapes. She also has a home in Sacramento, and thus spends time both at her city residence and at the ranch dwelling. In national politics a Democrat, Mrs. Farrell allows no partisanship to hinder her support of the best men and the best measures affecting local interests.

Margaret Farrell

Mrs. Farrell was privileged to have four sons in the service, and when the Liberty Loan was floated in October, 1918, she marched with some 12,000 women, all dressed in white, in the parade in Sacramento; and as the only woman bearing a four-star banner, she was the recipient of an ovation such as might have been given with propriety to the President of the United States. Edward P. Farrell was a member of Company I, 363rd Infantry, 91st Division. He trained with the division, went to France with them, and also returned with them, a private in excellent standing. Joseph M. served in the 115th Division of Engineers, and was in France from July, 1918, to July, 1919. Leo William was at Camp Pike, in Arkansas, in the officers' training school. At St. Louis, in August, 1918, he enlisted and served until December of that year; and then in February, 1919, he returned to the Medical School at St. Louis University. James A. enlisted in the service on September, 1917, and was sent to Camp Lewis, where he was placed in Company M, 363rd Infantry, 91st Division. He was there for four months, and then was transferred to Company E, 58th Infantry, 54th Division, and was sent to Camp Green, in North Carolina. On May 18, 1918, he went to France, and on July 18 he went into Chateau-Thierry, and later was in the Aisne-Marne, Vesle, St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne, and the Toulon offensives. He went over the top five times, but had the miraculously good fortune never to be wounded. On August 13, 1919, he was discharged with the rank of corporal, having returned to the United States on the first of June. Mrs. Farrell is a member of the Y. L. I. and the Catholic Ladies' Relief.

MRS. CAROLINE M. SMYTH.—A representative pioneer woman of San Joaquin County, is Mrs. Caroline M. Smyth who, for over sixty-two years, has borne her share in the advancement and development of the Linden section of the county, where she still resides, honored and respected for her many admirable traits of character. She resides on the ranch nine miles east of Stockton to which she came as a bride in the year 1860, and where her children were born and reared. Her husband, James H. Smyth, whose useful life came to an end on April 19, 1885, was one of California's forty-niners, and from the period of early settlement until the time of his death was prominent in the agricultural and public life of San Joaquin County. In business he was an excellent and sagacious manager, and in the various affairs of social and community nature he always manifested a large degree of public spirit and showed himself capable of the highest American citizenship.

Mrs. Smyth was born in County Derry, Ireland, November 27, 1833. She was reared and remained in her native land until her marriage with Mr. Smyth, which occurred January 3, 1860, a sketch of this pioneer also appearing in this history. Mr. and Mrs. Smyth were the parents of eight children, six of whom are living; Mary M.; Annie E. has recently returned from a trip to Europe, a member of the Lundy party that toured Europe, where she spent a most enjoyable time; Carrie M.; Herbert is the manager of the home ranch; Helen, and J. Hudson, a prominent medical practitioner of this part of California, who has a son, J. Hudson, Jr. The fourth child, Grace, died when four years old, and the youngest, Samuel Edgar at six and one half years. Mrs. Smyth's ancestors were English who left for Ireland during the reign of Charles I. in order to enjoy religious freedom, and for many generations the family have been Presbyterians, Mrs. Smyth being a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Stockton. For the past thirty years, Mrs. Smyth has spent a portion of each summer at her cottage by the sea, which is located near Capitola. She is a highly esteemed member of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the San Joaquin Society of California Pioneers, and in all her relations of life has proved herself worthy of the esteem with which she is held in her locality.

JAMES H. SMYTH.—The life of this honored pioneer of 1849 had its beginning in County Antrim, north of Ireland, February 9, 1822, and its end came in 1885, after sixty-three years of activity and usefulness. The family which he represented was of prominent lineage in the annals of Ireland, where his parents, Samuel and Mary (Adam) Smyth, held a high position in the most refined circles of society. The mother died at the age of eighty-five years in 1865, and the father, who owned and operated a large farm, was seventy at the time of his demise. Reading had given them a broad culture and they aspired to give their children advantages which they had been denied in their early years. One of their sons, Samuel, was educated for the ministry and at the age of twenty-two he assumed a Presbyterian pastorate at Draperston, where he remained until his death forty years later. Meanwhile he was honored and beloved by the people among whom his lot was cast, and into their homes he went, welcomed alike in times of joy and of sorrow, cheering the sick, helping the sorrowing and befriending the needy.

It was the intention of the parents that their son, James H. also should enter the ministry, and with that ambition in view gave him exceptional educational advantages for that day and locality. However, his tastes were not in the direction of ministerial work and after he had studied some years he decided that he would seek other avenues of activity. Coming to America in 1842, he settled in Texas and there engaged in ranching for five years or more. During 1849 he came to California via Panama. For a time after arriving in this state he mined at Columbia, Tuolumne County, and at Sonora, the same county, but he met with no special good luck. His next venture was in the hauling of freight from Knights Ferry to Columbia and Sonora, and later he had several teams hauling copper from the copper mines to Stockton. In 1859 he bought a raw tract of 970 acres and later increased his holdings by the purchase of 140 acres and another tract of 240 acres.

Returning to his old Irish home in 1859, Mr. Smyth was there married early in the year of 1860, his brother officiating at the wedding, which united his destiny with that of Caroline M. Smyth, who though bearing the same family name, was not related to him. Born in Ireland, November 27, 1833, she was a daughter of John and Mary (Laughlin)

Smyth and traced her ancestry to England on the father's side and Scotland on the mother's side. The wedding trip of the young people was a voyage to America. It had been the intention of Mr. Smyth to settle in Texas, but his wife became ill, and it was then deemed advisable to proceed to California. They came via Panama and settled on the ranch eight miles from Stockton, where they industriously labored in the improvement of the land and the building up of a valuable property. Meanwhile he bore an active part in establishing the early schools and making the first roads through his part of the county. As school trustee he accomplished much in behalf of the common schools. It was his belief that nothing promoted the growth of a district more than good schools and good roads, and his public spirit was evidenced in the energy and sincerity with which he supported these movements. One of his intimate friends was the illustrious Captain Weber, who gave him an opportunity to buy land in his grant, later a part of Stockton, but the difficulties encountered in perfecting the title caused him to hesitate, and he thus lost an opportunity which did not come to him in later years. For years he was active in the membership of the San Joaquin Society of California Pioneers. In politics he voted with the Democratic party.

NEAL S. HOLMAN.—Among those who have contributed to the agricultural development in San Joaquin County is Neal S. Holman, who since a child has made his home in the county and now resides on his fine home ranch two miles southwest of Linden on the Holden Road, where he engages in the grain and stock business. He was born in Randolph County, Mo., March 28, 1872, a son of William Benjamin Holman, a native of Missouri. He was one and one-half years old when his parents started for California, arriving in the Golden State on Thanksgiving Day, 1874, and he assisted his father until he was twenty-seven years old.

On December 5, 1899, Mr. Holman was married to Miss Lavina Abbie Dunton, a native daughter of California, born in Stockton, August 11, 1873. Her parents, Marcus L. and Harriet (Greenleaf) Dunton, were both natives of Westpoint, Maine, and came to California in 1872. Mrs. Dunton was a direct descendent of the John Greenleaf Whittier family. Both parents are now deceased, survived by Mrs. Holman and Mark Alfred Dunton, a resident of Eugene, Cal. Mr. and Mrs. Holman became the parents of two daughters; Claire Estella, a graduate of the Stockton high school, class of 1920; and Avis M., a beloved daughter, who passed away on February 24, 1920.

The same year of his marriage, Mr. Holman began farming on his own responsibility, first leasing the McFarland place, where he engaged in raising horses, mules and cattle, as well as raising large quantities of wheat, continuing on this ranch for ten years; then he purchased his present ranch of 120 acres, a portion of the old Henry place, where his family has since resided. Three years ago Mr. Holman erected a modern residence on his ranch; he owns a complete harvesting outfit and does a great deal of contract harvesting throughout the county, besides on his own place. Mr. and Mrs. Holman are staunch friends of the best along educational lines, both having served as school trustees; at one time Mr. Holman was clerk of the board of trustees of the Home

Union school district. Mr. Holman is an advocate of good roads and is an active member of the local Farm Bureau. The success that has attended his efforts in business is well merited, for he has labored untiring and at all times has been honorable in his dealings with his fellowmen.

MRS. CAROLINE C. GERARD.—An interesting pioneer of San Joaquin County who did her share to aid in the development of the country around Lodi, was the late Caroline C. Gerard, a native of England, where she lived until she was seventeen years of age. Then she came to the United States, making her home in New England; and there she met and married John H. Gerard, also a native of England. He was a mere child when he was brought to America by his parents, who settled in Soco, Maine. The straitened circumstances of the family made it necessary for John H. to begin his self-support when other children of a similar age were attending school. As a boy he was employed in the cotton mills of Biddeford and Soco, Maine; so his education was obtained by his faithful attendance at night school. His duties in the mill were confining, and he felt his restrictions even more keenly as the reports of better prospects in the West came to his attention both by means of the press and by word of mouth from those who had returned to the East from the newly discovered gold mines. In 1855, after his marriage to Miss Caroline Sterling, a young lady who was ambitious and heartily seconded his desire to cast his lot in the Golden State, they made the journey to San Francisco, the same year of their marriage, coming via the Isthmus of Panama route. They went to Calaveras County, where Mr. Gerard mined for a while; and then came to San Joaquin County, locating near Woodbridge, in 1856, where he purchased 183 acres of virgin soil, the clearing of which entailed much hard labor. Later he acquired 640 acres northwest of Lodi and engaged extensively in the stock business. He also owned 300 acres of grazing land in Calaveras County. His ranch near Lodi being heavily timbered he continued to clear off the timber and brush until he had the entire tract under cultivation. Mr. and Mrs. Gerard had the distinction of being the pioneers in the raising of grapes in this locality. In 1862 they set out six acres of vines, at the same time also planting an orchard. They worked together happily, both ambitious to improve their place, and it was a sad blow to Mrs. Gerard when her husband passed away in 1882. He left an only son, James Stevens Gerard, who is making his home on a part of the ranch.

Mrs. Gerard, after her husband's death, continued their ranching enterprise; and in time a goodly portion of the ranch was set out to vineyard, which proved profitable. The place is now divided between her three living grandchildren, Raymond, James Stevens, Jr., and Mrs. Lillian Schleaf, who make their homes on their respective places.

Grandmother Gerard, as she was familiarly known by her friends, was endeared to all who knew her. She continued in the even tenor of her ways, doing all she could to build up and improve this wonderful county and thus bring about the civilization of the present day; and at her passing, at the age of seventy years, she left an honored name and was mourned by her family and all who knew her.

MRS. CAROLINE GERARD

JOHN GEORGE MAISEL.—A man who by honest toil and close application to business made a success and who enjoyed a large place in the confidence and esteem of his fellow citizens was the late John George Maisel. He was a native of Catonsville, Md., was born in January, 1856, and was reared and educated there. After leaving school he learned the butcher's trade at Catonsville in all its details and opened up his shop and successfully operated his business until 1880. In Catonsville on September 7, 1880, he married Miss Mary Ann Hahn, a daughter of Frank and Julia (Simon) Hahn. The young people came to the Pacific Coast on their honeymoon intending to remain only a short time in Stockton, but remained for two years, Mr. Maisel meanwhile working at his trade in the El Dorado Street market. Returning to his native town in 1882, he sold out his interests and in 1884 returned to Stockton for his permanent residence. He established the New California market on El Dorado Street; then in 1893 he moved his market to North Hunter Street, a few doors from the present Maisel market. The Maisel Meat Company is now carried on by the son of the founder and many new branches have been added; the company now owns a chain of four shops in Stockton and have their own slaughter house on the Linden Road.

Mr. and Mrs. Maisel are the parents of one son, Owen L., who married Eleanor Laumeister. During the late war he served with the 319th Engineers in France. Mr. Maisel passed away on April 21, 1917, at the family home in Stockton, mourned by his devoted family and a host of friends. He was at all times interested in the development of his locality, and his sterling qualities of mind and heart made him well liked and esteemed by all who knew him.

CHARLES METZLER.—For the past nineteen years Charles Metzler has made his home in San Joaquin County on his fine orchard and farm one and one half miles north of Linden. All of the improvements on his ranch have been made by Mr. Metzler, and it is now one of the most desirable and profitable orchards in the valley. Forty acres are devoted to peaches, six acres to almonds and twenty acres to French prunes, the balance of the ranch being devoted to diversified crops. He was born near Mergentheim, Wurtemberg, Germany, June 28, 1849, a son of Martin and Catherine (Ohm) Metzler, both natives of that country. His mother passed away the same year he was born and later his father was married to Miss Mary Beckstein, who proved a kind stepmother to the motherless boy. His father passed away in 1856.

From his earliest recollections, Charles Metzler had a desire to locate in America. He received a good education in the excellent schools of his native land and in August, 1872 he arrived in New York City, where he worked for three years in a tannery for nine dollars per week; however, he saved enough money in three years to pay his way to California, arriving in San Francisco in the fall of 1875. He first located at Redwood City, where he conducted a bakery, but later suffered the loss of his property by fire; he then removed to San Jose, where he engaged in farming near Los Gatos for five years. During this time his first wife, Anna C. (Meyers) Metzler passed away, leaving three children: Carl of Arroyo Grande; Fred of Paso Robles, and Mrs. Annie Wilson of San Leandro. He was married the second time in San Francisco, December 6, 1884, to Miss Helena Martens. She was born in Oldenburg, Germany, a daughter of John J. and Helena C. (Von Aschwege) Martens, and the mother and the daughters came to California in 1882. John J. Martens, who was an expert miller, died in 1868, survived by his wife who passed away in Linden, December 24, 1906, mourned by three sons and three daughters.

Mr. and Mrs. Metzler are the parents of five children: Emma, the wife of Adolph Dauth, has three children and they reside in San Francisco; Henry W. represented in this history; Elise married George D. Gill, they have three sons and reside in Bellota; Helena, the wife of John S. Platt, has two children and they reside in Linden; Albert is a rancher. Mr. Metzler completed his U. S. citizenship in 1882 at San Jose. From 1885 to 1903 he was occupied in general farming in Monterey and San Luis Obispo counties and while residing there was a school trustee for the Monterey and Jolon districts, serving for three terms. Mrs. Metzler's sister, Mrs. Frank L. Meier, came to the Linden section in 1876, where Mr. Meier has become a prominent prune grower and is an authority on horticulture in this district. Mrs. Metzler is a staunch member of the Methodist Church in Linden, and the family enjoy the respect and esteem of many friends in San Joaquin County.

HOLMAN BROS.—Prominent among the successful men of affairs whose strenuous lives enable them, while carving out some fortune for themselves, to also serve their fellowmen and help to advance the community, the Holman brothers, grain and stockmen of the Farmington section of San Joaquin County, rank among the foremost in these important industries. They own and operate 1,177 acres of choice wheat land, where they exercise the most modern system of planting, cultivating and harvesting of crops, thus reaping a fine quality and a large quantity of choice grain. The company known as the Holman Bros. is composed of James T. Holman, senior partner, and William Edgar, both born in Randolph County, Mo., members of a family of six children born to William B. and Martha (Prather) Holman, also natives of Randolph County, Mo. The Holman and Prather families came to Missouri from Kentucky in the early '30s and here the father and mother of the Holman brothers were born, reared, educated and married. William B. Holman was a successful merchant and at the same time carried on quite extensive farming interests in Missouri until 1874, when he brought his family to California and settled near Linden, where he engaged extensively in stock and grain raising until his death in 1908, survived by his widow until 1920, when she, too, passed away. William B. Holman spent more than a third of a century in the Linden section and was identified with its development in an unselfish way. Fraternally he was a Mason. After his father's death, James T. Holman, being the eldest of the family, assumed the responsibility of the family and large farming interests left by his father, and his brother William Edgar became partner with him in the stock and grain business, which has been so successfully carried on by them.

On October 18, 1892, occurred a double wedding which united James T. Holman and Miss Luella G. Needham and William Edgar Holman with Miss Lillian V. Needham, accomplished daughters of Charles E. and Olive L. (Drake) Needham, and sisters of Hon. James Carson Needham, judge of the Superior Court of Stanislaus County, residing at Modesto. Mr. and Mrs. James T. Holman are the parents of one son, Earl Leigh, a graduate of the University of California who served in the A. E. F., during the World War, as second lieutenant in the engineers; at the present time he is assistant superintendent and engineer state controller light and power at Sacramento. Mr. and Mrs. William Edgar Holman are the parents of one son, Charles. James T. and William Edgar Holman are members of the Farmington Lodge, I. O. O. F., while their wives are both active in the Rebekah Lodge and all are staunch Republicans. James T. Holman serves as a trustee of the Farmington school.

MRS. LAURA B. VAN LOON.—A leader in social, religious and civic circles, Mrs. Laura B. Van Loon has taken a prominent part in the life of the community since taking up her residence at Ripon in 1906. She was born at Ceres, Stanislaus County, the daughter of Mark and Mary (Horn) Williams; the father, who was of Welsh descent, was born at Fayetteville, Ark., his parents being among the early settlers of that region, while Mrs. Williams was born at Springfield, Mo., of English and Welsh ancestry.

Mrs. Van Loon was reared and educated at Ceres and when twenty-four years old was married to Francis E. McKee, who was then in the general merchandise business at Lathrop, Cal. After a time he sold his store to Reynolds Bros., Sydney W. Reynolds being one of the firm, and went to Le Grand, Merced County, where with Benjamin Eastman as a partner he built up a good merchandise business. In 1902 he sold this business and moved to Pacific Grove, where he resided for some time, and in 1906 came to Ripon, where with Sydney W. Reynolds he established the firm of McKee & Reynolds, buying out the store of E. C. Dickinson, who at that time was conducting the business under the firm name of Yaple & Company. It was the pioneer establishment in its line in Ripon and through the well directed energy of Mr. McKee and his partner, a splendid business was built up. Mr. McKee's successful career was cut short, however, as his death occurred on September 22, 1916, following an operation for appendicitis, leaving his widow and one daughter, Neva Arline, now the wife of H. J. Simmons of Pacific Grove and they are the parents of a son, James Francis Simmons. Mr. McKee's half interest in the business was equally divided between wife and daughter, and the former still retains an active interest in the management of the business.

Her second marriage occurred on February 12, 1919, and united her with L. L. Van Loon, the popular agent for the Southern Pacific Railroad at Manteca, who formerly occupied this position at Ripon. Mr. Van Loon was born and reared at La Crosse, Wis., becoming a telegraph operator at the age of nineteen. He has continued in this line ever since, holding responsible positions on the Salt Lake and Southern Pacific Railroads. Mrs. Van Loon is active in the membership of the Congregational Church at Ripon, and was prominent in the erection of the beautiful new edifice. She is serving as deaconess and was formerly superintendent of the Sunday school, from 1916 to 1920. She usually serves on the election board, and has been president and vice-president of the local W. C. T. U. Though now a progressive Republican, she heretofore voted as a prohibitionist and is proud to have worked for the successful adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment.

MRS. MARIE OTT COOPER.—An honored pioneer resident of San Joaquin County, Mrs. Marie Ott Cooper has been privileged to see and have part in the development that has come about in the past half century, making this one of the progressive and prosperous sections of the Golden State. She was born near the River Neckar, Wurtemberg, Germany, January 23, 1858, the daughter of Frederick and Barbara (Trick) Wille, both natives of that place and well-to-do farmers; the father was born on December 26, 1833, and the mother on December 6, 1835, and they resided in their native land until 1878, when they came to America. They were the parents of four children, of whom three now survive: Mrs. Anne Schneider of Stockton; Mrs. Marie Ott Cooper of this sketch, and Mrs. Barbara Gasser of Eureka, Cal.

Mrs. Cooper was educated in a private school at Reutlingen, Germany, and on August 7, 1875, she was married to Martin Ott, who was one of San Joaquin County's prominent early settlers. He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, February 8, 1837, and in 1853 came with his father and brother to America, settling in Detroit, Mich., where Martin Ott clerked in a mercantile establishment until 1858. Starting to California by way of the Isthmus of Panama, he arrived at San Francisco in June, 1858, and remained there for nine months, when he went to Tuolumne County, where he engaged in mining until 1867. He then came to San Joaquin County and bought 200 acres of land on the San Joaquin River and farmed for a time, but on account of ill health he removed to San Francisco. After two years he returned to his farm where he began cultivating the virgin soil and became extensively interested in raising chicory, and with Carl Dangers established the San Joaquin Chicory Factory on the San Joaquin River, being engaged in this business for twenty-seven years. He made his home on the ranch until his death on January 11, 1897, passing away at the age of sixty, a man of sterling worth, beloved and esteemed by all who knew him. April 4, 1875, he started back to his old home in Wurtemberg and there, as stated above he was married in 1875 and then returned to California with his bride. Mr. and Mrs. Ott became the parents of four children; Minna, a graduate nurse, resides at Stockton with her mother; Fred W., a rancher and deputy county assessor, is represented elsewhere in this work; Emma, who graduated as a nurse at Mt. Zion Hospital in 1903, resides at home; Leonore married H. Barstow; they have a daughter and reside in Berkeley.

Mrs. Ott's second marriage united her with A. D. M. Cooper of San Francisco and San Jose, the noted artist and authority on the American Indian who is well known on both sides of the Atlantic. About fifteen years ago Mrs. Cooper built a commodious residence at 127 West Willow Street, Stockton, and here are to be found some of Mr. Cooper's finest canvases and many Indian curios of great value. A member of the Lutheran Church since her early girlhood, Mrs. Cooper gives much time to its activities and is a generous contributor to its benevolences.

CHARLES PROFIT ANDERSON.—Among the successful vineyardists of San Joaquin County, Charles Profit Anderson has made a decided success of his viticultural activities and his home place near Ripon, known as the Cannan vineyards, has long been known for the excellency of its table grapes, principally Tokays. He is a native of Stockholm, Sweden, born August 15, 1864, a son of Lars and Annie (Anderson) Anderson, both natives also of Sweden. Lars Anderson was born in 1817 and in 1865 came to America. The family consisted of nine children: Ellen, Martin, Betty, Fannie, William, Annie are all deceased; Peter T. resides in Washington state; Nels L. owns a fine citrus ranch at Lindsay, Cal. and Charles Profit, the subject of this sketch. Lars Anderson located at Chicago, Ill. and later removed to Gladstone in the same state. He was a Republican in politics and received his U. S. citizenship at Oquawka, Henderson Co., Ill. The father passed away in 1885, survived by his wife who passed away four years later, in 1889.

Charles Profit Anderson entered the public school at Gladstone, Ill., at the age of six years and finished school at the age of thirteen and at eighteen years of age he left home to make his way in the world. He selected acting as his vocation and his first appearance was in Chicago as an Irish comedian, receiving a salary of sixty dollars per week and expenses; then while in Minneapolis, Minn. he signed up with Sells Bros. Circus for $125 per week and all expenses and during 1885-6-7 received $500 per month for his work and traveled all over the world. After completing his contract with Sells Bros., he took up the study of electrical engineering and entered the shop of Thomas A. Edison at Schenectady, N. Y. where he spent four years; then he went to New Orleans and was employed four months in the installation of an acetylene plant. He then entered business for himself and removed to Corpus Christi, Texas, where he constructed a large light and power plant and also installed an electrical system for a large storage plant.

On November 30, 1891, Mr. Anderson was married to Miss Ella Stewart, a native of Texas, a daughter of James and Eugenie (Gazelle) Stewart, an old New Orleans family, of French descent. After his marriage, Mr. Anderson removed to Fort Worth, Texas, where he became general manager of the Standard Light & Power Corporation at Fort Worth where he remained for five years. Being advised by his physician to engage in outdoor employment he moved to Edmond, Okla., where he purchased 480 acres of land which he farmed to wheat and also engaged in stock raising on a large scale. At the time of the Galveston storm and flood Mr. Anderson lost $6,000 and soon thereafter sold his place and removed to Missouri, locating near Forsyth, and there bought a ranch of 1,000 acres where he extensively raised cattle and hogs. Again Mr. Anderson suffered severe reverses and in 1903 he disposed of his holdings and removed to California, and in going about from place to place was impressed with the advantages of the Ripon section of San Joaquin County, so purchased 160 acres near the town. For two years he was hampered by ill health, but the California climate proved beneficial and he was able to accomplish splendid results in viticulture and he is considered a pioneer in this industry in the Ripon section. His first experience in setting out a vineyard was on thirty acres of his home place where he got a ninety-five per cent stand, thus proving the adaptability of the climate and soil for grapes. Mr. Anderson also owns two other ranches—one of eighty acres near Avena, San Joaquin County, and the other one of twenty acres in Sacramento County, and both places are being rapidly developed.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are the parents of six children: Olive Ruth, the wife of Wellington Manley, employed in the registry department of the Sacramento postoffice and they have two sons; Ella Devie married William Smith and they reside in Los Angeles; Vera C. is the wife of Virgil Merritt and they reside in Williams, Arizona; Charles Arnold is foreman at the Ford garage at Colusa; Eugenie G. is the wife of James Smith and they reside at Sacramento; Zenobia J. is at home with her parents. In politics Mr. Anderson is a Republican and a staunch advocate of prohibition and fraternally is a charter member and a commander of Samson lodge, K. P., of Chicago. Mrs. Anderson is a talented woman, a graduate of Corpus Christi College, Texas, and takes an active part in all civic affairs of her locality and is a member of the executive committee of the South San Joaquin County W. C. T. U. Mr. Anderson finds great pleasure in fishing as a means of recreation and is classed as one of the best anglers in the county.

ED. N. PIERCE.—Capability and efficiency have marked the career of Ed. N. Pierce and as assistant superintendent of the San Joaquin General Hospital, located at French Camp, he conducts its affairs in a most satisfactory manner. He was born in Providence, R. I., December 23, 1859; his parents were also natives of the same state and during the Civil War his father gave his life at the Battle of Pittsburg Landing. At seventeen years of age, Ed N. Pierce enlisted as a seaman on the U. S. S. Pensacola and later was transferred to the U. S. S. Constitution; he followed a seaman's life for three years, then in 1880 arrived in California and was discharged from the service. He then removed to Solano County, where he found employment on a large ranch and in 1883 he entered the Clarke Business College in Stockton where he remained for one year.

At Stockton, in 1884, Mr. Pierce was married to Miss Inez L. Austin and began farming near Calla Corners, remaining there until 1889, when Mr. Pierce became second nurse at the General Hospital at French Camp; later he became head nurse and chief assistant to the surgeon in the operating room. After nine years of service, he resigned and again engaged in farming at Calla Corners, and he was active in bringing about the organization of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District, covering approximately 71,000 acres and he served six years as secretary; he still owns twenty acres at Calla Corners, which he continues to farm. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Pierce: J. Austin; Edna; Effie is the wife of George Murphy; E. N., Jr., is a rancher at Calla, he served with Gen. Pershing in Mexico in the 1st Division of the A. E. F.; Mark W. is a rancher and served his country in the Navy and during the war made fourteen round trips across the Atlantic; Lela is the wife of John Fair, principal of the Gilroy high school; Chester S. is the first superintendent of the agricultural department at the County Farm and during the war served with the motor transport ammunition train of the A. E. F.; Byron served as an aviator and was in training at Rockwell Field. Mr. Pierce is justly proud of his sons' war records. In 1915 he again took up his duties at the County Farm and has been made assistant superintendent of the farm and hospital. Politically he is a Republican and fraternally is a member of Mt. Horeb Lodge of I. O. O. F. at Ripon and is a past grand of the lodge and past district deputy, and twice been a delegate to the grand lodge; he is also a member of Tyrian Lodge of Masons at Manteca, and the Lodge of Perfection, Scottish Rite at Stockton.

ANDREW RIVARA.—The advancement of San Joaquin County and the upbuilding of the city of Stockton had a progressive promoter in Andrew Rivara, whose name has been connected with many of the influences and movements tending toward development along many avenues. Born in Italy, twenty-three miles northeast of Genoa on March 12, 1853, he was there reared and attended school until he was fifteen. His father was a farmer and owned and operated a flour mill. His son's duties were to deliver the grain to the mill on the backs of mules, and take the flour back to the bakery, a distance of seven miles. He made two round trips daily, thus covering twenty-eight miles each day on foot. Tales of the wonderful opportunities of the New World had penetrated to their village and when he reached the age of twenty-one he decided to cast his lot in this new country. In 1874 he married Miss Mary Musto and together they came to America, coming direct to Stockton, Cal., arriving on October 30. He secured employment with Peter Musto, who ran a grocery store at El Dorado and Market streets; his hours were long, working from daylight to nine at night, receiving for his labor twenty dollars per month, which continued three years, when his wages were raised to thirty dollars per month. He then decided to go into business for himself, and opened a small grocery store on North Hunter Street near Lindsay, remaining in that location for seventeen years. He then bought a lot on the corner of Main and Madison streets and erected a store building and for the following twenty-three years carried on his business. During 1915 he sold his business, but is still owner of the property. He is now living retired from active business altogether, his extensive real estate holdings requiring all of his time. In partnership with three other men, he owns a sixty-acre ranch on the San Joaquin River southwest of Stockton, which is now a full-bearing vineyard and orchard, and he is the owner of a ten-acre ranch, seven of which is in vineyard, located near the race track east of town.

Mr. Rivara has built up a competency wholly through his own efforts and foresight and during his forty-eight years of continued residence in Stockton, has witnessed the remarkable and substantial growth of that city. For over thirty years he has been a member of the Italian branch of the Foresters of America. Mr. and Mrs. Rivara are the parents of nine children, of whom only three are living. Mrs. Laura Armanino, Mary, and Edna. They had a daughter, Adeline, Mrs. Mina, who died in 1918, leaving a son, whom Mr. Rivara adopted and is rearing and educating.

MRS. SARAH EMMA BURGESS.—A woman of much native business ability who is making a success of the profession she has chosen is Mrs. Sarah Emma Burgess, who has been a resident of California since December 4, 1868. She is a native of Iowa, born at Maquoketa. Her father, Levi S. Preston, was a native of Pennsylvania. Grandfather Colburn Preston was born in Vermont and he married Sarah Webber. He was a veteran of the War of 1812, while Great-grandfather Preston served in the Revolutionary War.

Levi S. Preston migrated to Iowa when a young man and was married at Maquoketa in 1857 to Viola Haswell, also born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of Nathan B. and Ruth (Webber) Haswell, natives of Vermont. Nathan Haswell was an educator in Pennsylvania and was also a writer and newspaper man. Viola Haswell was engaged in teaching in Iowa. The young couple farmed in Iowa until 1868, when Mr. Preston removed to Eagleville, Harrison County, Missouri, where he farmed for two years and then brought his wife and three children via New York to Aspinwall, then crossed the Isthmus to Panama City and thence by steamer to San Francisco, landing on December 4, 1868. For a time he followed farming near Brentwood, Contra Costa County, and later he resided for a time in Stockton, but spent his last days in Redwood City. His widow survived him until 1918, passing away in Stockton at the home of Mrs. Burgess.

This worthy couple had seven children that grew up, five of whom are living and Mrs. Burgess is the second oldest. Coming to San Francisco when six years of age she well remembers the long journey and interesting experiences of the trip. A studious child, she obtained a good education in the public schools of Contra Costa County. Her marriage occurred in San Francisco April 7, 1882, when she was united with Philip H. Burgess, a native of Massachusetts, born at Ashburnham, near Lynn, October 24, 1848, a son of Joshua and Susan (Piper) Burgess, who were descended from an old Puritan family. In 1856 the Burgess family removed to Mankato, Minn., where Philip was reared on the farm. History tells of the Indian massacre in that region during the period of the Civil War, but fortunately the Burgess family lived some distance back from the river, the line of the Indians' route of massacre, so they were saved. However, this stirred the patriotism of young Philip and he left his books and volunteered in the spring of 1864 enlisting in Company C, 11th Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, being sent into the South where he served faithfully with his command until after the close of the war, being mustered out in the summer of 1865 after a year's service and still only a boy of sixteen years. The following incident shows the difference in the treatment of the soldier boys of that day and the present: When he was returning on the train it was so crowded he was obliged to ride on top of the caboose and he went to sleep and woke finding himself on the edge of the car with his feet dangling over the side and caught himself just in time to save himself from falling.

On his return home he continued employed there until 1875, when he came to Contra Costa County, Cal., engaging in farming near Antioch until 1883, when he located in Stockton. For four years he followed the building business and then July 21, 1887, entered the postal service as a letter carrier, being the first letter carrier sworn in in Stockton. Here he continued faithfully doing most efficient work for a period of thirty-three years, when he was retired on a pension. He had been a student of Christian Science for many years and was a very successful practitioner, so after he retired he gave all of his attention to his practice, serving two different periods as second reader at the Christian Science Church. He passed away on May 10, 1922, mourned by his family and many friends, and particularly of Rawlins Post No. 23, G. A. R., of which he had been a member for thirty-six years.

Mrs. Burgess had for a number of years been interested in pension work, aiding the old veterans and widows of veterans to secure pensions, and in 1917 she was admitted to practice before the Department of the Interior at Washington, and since then as pension attorney has practiced here and has been very successful in her work, her office being at her home, 1643 South San Joaquin Street.

The union of Mr. and Mrs. Burgess was blessed with three children: Irvin H. died in 1900; Herbert and Dwight E., the latter one of the leading contracting painters in this city. They also adopted a niece, Lois E. Burgess, now the wife of Archie C. Toal; they have one child, Vivian Esther. Mrs. Burgess is very prominent in civic and social circles having taken an active part in temperance work in connection with the W. C. T. U., and is a past noble grand of Rainbow Rebekah Lodge No. 97, Stockton, as well as a member of Rawlins Relief Corps No. 23, and Roosevelt Circle, Ladies of the G. A. R. She is a member of the Christian Science Church and is a staunch Republican.

WILLIAM J. RHOADS.—Among the recognized and successful leaders in the realty field of Stockton, William J. Rhoads, of 15 North California Street, is eminent. A native of the great Prairie State, he was born in Pekin, Ill., on November 16, 1850, and as a youth started in railroading with the Pekin, Lincoln & Decatur Railroad, now known as the Illinois Central. He was fireman, and then worked his way to be both locomotive engineer and a master of transportation. In 1874, he made a trip to California, and passed through Stockton on going south, and he worked on the construction of the San Fernando Tunnel of the Southern Pacific Railroad, under Frank Freitas, general superintendent when 4,000 white men, and 10,000 Chinamen were employed on the great work.

Returning to Pekin, Ill., he continued railroading, and later entered the Internal Revenue Department of the United States under President Harrison, acting as gauger, and at the defeat of Harrison, in 1892, he resigned and came to California. He intended to locate at Fresno, but on revisiting Stockton, viewing the waterfront and seeing the heavy shipments of grain and the activity of the place, he perceived that Stockton was destined, in time, to be a large city. He therefore settled here, and here he has ever since had his shoulder to the wheel.

With Oullahan & Adams, he entered the real estate and brokerage business at 108 East Main Street, and after a year with that well-established firm, he set up in business for himself at the corner of Market and San Joaquin streets. He next occupied the basement under the Stockton Savings Bank, and at one time William Dudley was his partner. Later, he occupied a store on North Hunter Street.

Some fourteen years ago, he moved to the corner of California and Main streets, and then he came to his present place in the same block, at 15 North California Street, where some of the notable deals in the history of Stockton real estate have been consummated. For a number of years, and up to death of Mrs. Maria Hubbard, he was agent of the M. S. Hubbard estate. He specializes in country property, nor could anyone be found whose knowledge and word are of more value, in the matter of advice, to the would-be purchaser.

In 1896, Mr. Rhoads made the first subdivision in San Joaquin County—the John Caine Ranch of 160 acres located one and one-half miles east of Manteca; and having bought the property for $8 per acre, it was put on the market at $25—$5 in cash down, and $5 per year, until the balance was paid. Since that time, Mr. Rhoads has sold land in that same tract at $500 per acre. A few years ago, he also sold, by subdivision, the Sharp Tract of 450 acres east of French Camp, which he offered in five to twenty-acres pieces; and all of this tract he disposed of, save 100 acres including the old home site, which he retained and he made his home for eighteen years and then sold. This ranch was known as the Hedgeside Dairy Ranch.

When Mr. Rhoads married, he chose for his wife, Miss Minnie O'Finley, a native of Union County, Ill. and the daughter of the popular sheriff of that county, who had held that office for twenty-five years, and at one time also county clerk, and prominent generally in political life. Two sons have blessed the union: Samuel is with the California Corrugated Iron and Concrete Company of Oakland, and William is in the oil business. There are three grandchildren. Mr. Rhoads is a Mason, and belongs to San Joaquin Lodge No. 19 F. & A. M., Stockton Chapter, No. 28 R. A. M., Stockton Commandery, No. 8 K. T. and Aahmes Temple A. A. O. N. M. S. of Oakland. He was made a Scottish Rite Mason April 26, 1887 in Peoria and holds membership with the Peoria Consistory.

HARRY T. FANNING.—Years before the discovery of gold in California made this the center of attraction for men ambitious to gain sudden wealth, H. T. Fanning came to the state for the purpose of making his permanent residence here. He was not only a pioneer of the state, but was as well, one of the first residents of what is now the city of Stockton. Mr. Fanning was a native of Troy, N. Y., born in November, 1819, and was a brother of the late Howard M. Fanning, also an early settler of Stockton. By way of Cape Horn Mr. Fanning came to California in 1843, and at the time of the breaking-out of the Mexican War he went to the scene of the difficulty and lent his services. He was in Monterey at the time that city was made the first capital of California, on June 3, 1843.

After the close of the war Mr. Fanning came to San Joaquin County and engaged in the cattle business in partnership with Captain Weber, driving his cattle from Sacramento to San Jose; and in so doing he passed the section of country which is now the site of the city of Stockton. After selling their cattle they went to San Francisco and purchased lumber with which to build a house in Stockton, two weeks being required to transport the lumber by boat to this city. With this material they constructed the first house ever erected in the city, this being located on the water front near the present site of the steamboat landing. For a number of years Mr. Fanning derived a good income from the dairy business, which he established here, and later the produce business. This he carried on up to within a short time before his death, which occurred in 1875.

JOHN J. POPE.—A review of the life of John J. Pope shows how potent an element is persistency of purpose in the active affairs of life. Dependent upon his own resources from ten years of age he came to California in the days of its mining excitement and has steadily worked his way upward. He was born in Washington County, Ark., December 22, 1854, a son of Robert and Sarah (Eddlemon) Pope. Robert Pope met an accidental death in 1858. Grandfather and Grandmother Pope were natives of North Carolina. They left their native state when very young and settled in East Tennessee in 1818 and were married there in 1827; they removed to Arkansas in 1841, and in 1861 came to California, both of them dying ten years later. They were the parents of thirteen children, three of whom died before their parents came west. On coming West they left Washington County, Ark. March 10, and with ox teams and with some livestock they crossed the plains and mountains, having some trouble with the Indians on the way, who stole their cattle, two horses and two mules. Thomas Pope, an uncle of our subject pursued the Indians and recovered the cattle, but not the other property. They landed in San Joaquin County, September 6, 1861. Grandfather Pope was made captain of the train to pilot it across the plains and Mrs. Robert Pope, with her family, joined the train. There were ten children in the family: Lee; John J.; Benjamin F. of Lodi; Robert and Tilly, deceased; Nettie resides at Bakersfield; Daisy resides in Arizona; the three younger children died in infancy. Mrs. Sarah Pope later married a Mr. McFadden who settled at Copperopolis and worked in the mines; later they removed to Oakdale where they purchased a home. She lived to be seventy years of age.

John J. Pope had very little opportunity for attending school; however, before leaving his native state of Arkansas he attended school for a short time; then later he was able to attend the old Salem school in Lodi for a short time. After his mother's marriage to Mr. McFadden, his stepfather made life unbearable for him, so he left home when he was ten years old and never returned for any length of time, except an occasional visit to his mother, to whom he was devoted. After leaving home he went to Butte County and worked at various jobs, then he returned to San Joaquin County and worked on threshing machines, hard work for a young boy. In 1876, he and his brother Benjamin F. bought a 250-acre grain farm on the Waterloo Road northeast of Stockton; this place was afterwards sold and Mr. Pope purchased 160 acres across the road from the Harmony Grove school house, where he has since made his home. About twelve years ago the first house erected on the ranch burned down and Mr. Pope erected another on the same spot.

On December 8, 1866, at Waterloo, Mr. Pope was married to Miss Laura Light, a native of Waterloo, Cal., a daughter of Solomon and Mary (Straiter) Light, the former a native of Illinois and the latter of Missouri. Her parents came to California in 1864 and settled three-quarters of a mile east of Waterloo where Mr. Light bought a quarter-section of land, thirty-five acres of which he set to vineyard. They were the parents of six children: Sarah Elizabeth, deceased; Louisa Alice is Mrs. Benjamin F. Pope of Lodi; Lucy Ella is Mrs. M. E. Mason of Waterloo; Mary M. is Mrs. Boucou of Oakdale; Mrs. Pope; George W. resides at Escalon. Mr. Light passed away at the age of seventy-two and the mother at the age of forty-four. Mr. and Mrs. Pope are the parents of three children: Clara, Mrs. Wesley A. Mowrey of Waterloo, has one son, James; Jessie is Mrs. Kay Willits of Linden, and Ila is Mrs. J. P. Milligan of Stockton and the mother of two sons, Roland and John Robert. Mr. Pope has equipped his ranch with fine buildings and other improvements. Of the original quarter section, he now owns 100 acres, having disposed of sixty acres some time ago, and he is now engaged in buying and selling horses and cattle. In politics he is a Republican and with his family are members of the Methodist Church of Lodi.

GEORGE E. FRIOUX.—Numbered among the younger members of the San Joaquin County bar, where he is meeting with success in the practice of law, George E. Frioux is a descendant of one of California's pioneer families. His parents are Louis and Katherine (Waters) Frioux, both natives of Calaveras County. The father, who is now deceased, came from a pioneer French family, and for many years he followed mining, teaming and stage driving in the Mother Lode country. Mrs. Frioux's father, James Waters, is still living in Calaveras County at the age of eighty-eight. A native of Boston, born there in 1833, he left his home in 1849, coming around Cape Horn in a sailing vessel, and landing at San Francisco early in 1850, and he has now been a resident of Calaveras County for more than seventy years.

George E. Frioux was born at San Andreas, Cal., May 7, 1895, and was educated in the schools of San Andreas and Mokelumne Hill. In 1912 he received a teacher's certificate and for three years he was engaged in teaching in Calaveras County; he was also deputy treasurer and tax collector of Calaveras County for two and a half years. During this time he studied law and was admitted to the bar in September, 1917. Two months later he entered the service of his country, and trained at Camp Lewis with the famous 91st Division. He was attached to the Sanitary Unit and went overseas with this contingent, serving with the U. S. forces until July, 1919, when he returned to San Francisco and received his discharge at the Presidio. Looking about for a location he selected Stockton, opened his office in the Yosemite building on January 1, 1920, where he is engaged in the general practice of law.

On June 3, 1922, Mr. Frioux was united in marriage with Miss Nina Caldwell, a native of Kentville, Nova Scotia. He has entered heartily into the activities of Stockton and is a member of the San Joaquin County Bar Association, Karl Ross Post, American Legion, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars; and is also a member of San Andreas Parlor, N. S. G. W. in which he is a past president, and belongs to the Anteros Club. He is president of the Calaveras Society of San Joaquin County.

Geo. E. Trioux

HARVEY M. ODELL.—An efficient public official of San Joaquin County, Harvey M. Odell, the present public administrator, is a descendant of one of the oldest and most prominent pioneer families in the county, his maternal grandfather, Capt. William S. Moss, a native of Illinois and California pioneer being represented elsewhere in this work.

Harvey M. Odell was born November 24, 1883, at Lathrop, San Joaquin County, the son of Dr. Thomas H. and Mary B. (Moss) Odell. The father, who was a physician, was a native of Alabama and came to Stockton in 1880, and here he practiced his profession until his death in 1887. Mrs. Odell, who was born at Peoria, Ill., came across the plains with her father, Captain William S. Moss. She is still living and makes her home at Stockton. Harvey M. Odell attended the public schools of Stockton and Heald's Business College, and went in for grain farming and stock raising on a large scale and is at present farming between five and six hundred acres. He is also engaged in buying and selling real estate.

Mr. Odell was married at Stockton on December 4, 1907, to Miss Susan S. Southwell, a native of Colorado, and they have a son, Clayton H. A Republican in politics Mr. Odell has always taken an active interest in political affairs and in 1918 was elected to the post of public administrator.

LOUIS R. SANGUINETTI.—Prominent among the most enterprising firms of San Joaquin County are Sanguinetti Bros., the successful vineyardists and independent packers of table grapes of Lodi, worthily represented by Louis R. Sanguinetti, a native of that county where he was born on May 13, 1877. His father, Stephen Sanguinetti, a native of Italy, now deceased, came to America in early days and tried his luck at mining; but it did not suit him, so he located in Stockton, in the early '60s. He was given hard work in a vegetable garden at fifteen dollars per month. With his savings he bought land in the Delta district near that city, and engaged in farming; and he erected a brick house of thirteen rooms, and improved the place with flowers, palms and a garden, making it one of the show-places, in pioneer times. Some forty years ago, he bought the old Ayers Vineyard located on the Woodbridge Road, north of Lodi, and both of these places are still owned by the family. Stephen Sanguinetti married Miss Geronima Largomassino, and he was an exemplary husband, father, neighbor and friend. Several children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Sanguinetti: Fred, Louis R., the subject of our review; Henry, and Silvia. A daughter, Anna, married a gentleman of the same family name; Rose became Mrs. Vignola; and Palmira married J. Mezzera.

Louis, after finishing school, worked for awhile with his father on the home ranch, and when it was found that the Ayers Vineyard was not doing well, he was sent by his father to take charge of the place. From that time, the Ayers Ranch began to be a paying property, through the young man's able management; although he was only twenty-one when, in 1898, he took charge of it. This vineyard is one of the oldest in the county, some of the vines being sixty years old. It has sixty-five acres of Black Prince, Mission, Muscat, and Tokay grapes, and there is also a second orchard. With a brother, Henry, Mr. Sanguinetti packs independently, under the brand of Sanguinetti Bros., and this brand tops the prices in nineteen out of twenty cars shipped East. Mr. Sanguinetti has a one-third interest, with W. A. Spooner and James Anderson in a vineyard of eighty-seven acres; he also owns valuable real estate in Stockton, including two business blocks, and in 1922, he completed the Traveller's Hotel at Lodi.

At Stockton, November 27, 1900, Mr. Sanguinetti was married to Miss Tillie Sturla, a daughter of Paul Sturla, an early settler in Lodi, whose rise and success is portrayed elsewhere in this volume. Melvin Stephen, the elder son who graduated at the head of his class at the Lodi high school in 1921, is now a student at Stanford University, and Allen Paul, the younger son, attends the Lodi grammar school.

FLOYD E. GARNER.—A young business man of promising ability is found in Floyd E. Garner, the capable field superintendent for the Earl Fruit Company of the Lodi district. A native son, he was born near Acampo, San Joaquin County, on July 18, 1894, a son of Charles C. and Martha (Blodgett) Garner, the former also a native of California and the latter of Missouri. His paternal grandparents removed from Galena, Ill., to California in 1853 and settled in Tuolumne County and two years later Charles C. was born at Chinese Camp, Cal. In 1864 the family removed to San Joaquin County and settled on the Benedict ranch, which they cleared and planted to grain. The family were located on different ranches throughout the county until in 1878 when they removed to Whitman County, Wash., where they farmed for three years and then returned to San Joaquin County, purchasing a ranch near Acampo and Mr. Garner has the distinction of being one of the first men to plant Tokay grapes in that county. Charles C. Garner has always been interested in horticulture and viticulture and in 1904 established a real estate business in Lodi, and he has won his way to the front by application to business and honest dealings with his fellowmen. He is held in high esteem in the community which he has helped to develop.

Floyd E. Garner was educated in the grammar and high schools of Lodi and completed his education by a business course at Heald's Business College in Stockton. For the past ten years he has been working for the Earl Fruit Company, with the exception of the two years that he served in the World War, and in the fall of 1920 he was made field superintendent. He enlisted in the Marine Corps in the fall of 1917 and received his training at Mare Island and in May, 1918, went overseas with the fourth replacement troops as a member of the 23rd Machine Gun Company, Second Division, as a gunner. Upon his arrival he was sent to the front and from June 12 to September 9, 1918, saw active service on five fronts, taking part in the battle of Chateau Thierry, as well as all the engagements of the Second Division and was fortunate enough to come through without a scratch; on his return to the United States he received his honorable discharge on July 15, 1919. His marriage united him with Miss Georgia Henderson, a native of San Joaquin County and they have one daughter, Dorothy Dean. Mr. Garner owns a fine twenty-acre Tokay vineyard of eighteen-year old vines near Youngstown. He is a member of the Lodi Post, American Legion.

W. SAM CLARK.—The career of W. Sam Clark has been one of remarkable self-achievement and self-advancement. Lack of finances in his early life made it impossible to carry out his cherished ambitions as quickly and as easily as he had anticipated and in the end he made his own way in gaining prominence in his chosen line of work, so that his success is due rather to his energy and perseverance in pushing ahead over obstacles to the goal of his ambition, than to any fortunate circumstances. California is his native state and he was born at Livermore, Alameda County, August 11, 1873.

His father, John W. Clark, was born in Illinois and there he married Jane M. Brady, a native of Indiana, who was descended from a very distinguished old Southern family, being an own cousin of Jefferson Davis, the president of the Southern Confederacy. John W. Clark crossed the plains to California in 1862, locating at Livermore, and there he made his home until his death; Mrs. Clark passed away while on a visit to her daughter in Portland. Seven children were born to this worthy pioneer couple, five of whom are living.

W. Sam Clark received a good education in the public schools and early in life showed a natural bent for horticulture and viticulture. The culture of figs engaged his attention before this fruit became of such commercial value as it now has. In 1895, when twenty-two years old, with but one thought in mind, he set out for Alaska to make his stake, so that he could follow up his cherished ambition to buy land and engage in the culture of figs; this was two years before the discovery of Klondyke. Mr. Clark mined on the Klondyke, then on the Koyukuk River, 250 miles inside the Arctic Circle, in the land of the midnight sun, then in various other sections, among them Fairbanks and the Tanana River, enduring the rigors and hardships of that northern climate. He was a member of the committee formed to maintain law and order and passed through many trying ordeals and narrow escapes in the formation of that frontier country. Seventeen years were spent in the far North and three different times Mr. Clark made a fortune, only to lose it, but he finally came home with enough money to start his experiments in fig growing.

In 1912 Mr. Clark removed to Fresno County and there started his first fig nursery, the variety of figs planted being known as the Kadota. Later he changed the name to Clarkadota and copyrighted it to protect his nursery business, and it is now known the world over. His first planting was eight acres near Dinuba and since that time he has established nurseries and fig orchards in different parts of the state. His large fig plantation near Stockton is one of special interest to the people of this county. The Clarkadota fig is a freak or bud-sport and was discovered by Stephen H. Taft of Sawtelle, Cal., some twenty-five years ago. The first large plantings were in the home orchard of Mr. Clark in Fresno County and were at that time an undeveloped possibility. Climatic conditions in Fresno which were exactly right for all other varieties of figs previously grown proved to be unfavorable for the greatest development of this fig, which is a fresh shipper and preserving fig. Slightly cooler weather conditions as found around Stockton proved to be almost ideal for its greatest production. The ideal shipping facilities by rail and water makes Stockton the natural center for the future development of this fruit.

The first unit of the Clarkadota fig plantations, consisting of 370 acres, was planted four miles east of Stockton in the spring of 1921 and 700 additional acres in 1922, and still further plantings are to be made in the spring of 1923. The original project was financed by Edward S. Munford and J. L. Craig, but Mr. Munford retired from the business at the end of the first year. The plantations were subdivided and sold in tracts of five or more acres under a five year caretaking contract, Mr. Clark furnishing the stock and superintending the planting for the entire project. The early and prolific bearing of this variety of fig makes imperative the establishing of large preserving plants in the city of Stockton to handle this exclusive California product, which practically amounts to a state monopoly, with the whole world as a market and Stockton as the center of production. In addition to his interest in the development of the fig, Mr. Clark has been an appraiser for the Federal Farm Loan Board for a number of years and thus is one of the best-informed men in California on land values. For five years he was a director of the Dry Fig organization of Fresno County and was also instrumental in the organization of the California Peach & Fig Growers Association, with headquarters at Fresno, and at the present time is a director in the Clarkadota Fig Growers Association of Stockton and a trustee of the Antelope Valley Land Development Company of Southern California. This company is developing and planting a tract of over 1,000 acres and bringing into production an orchard of figs and other fruits as well as a vineyard. Personally Mr. Clark has his individual nurseries in the following places: Orland, Byron, San Fernando Valley, Riverside and Phoenix, Ariz. In each of these he is specializing in Clarkadota nursery stock, being the largest grower in the United States.

On December 10, 1906, in Fairbanks, Alaska, Mr. Clark was united in marriage with Miss Frances Miller, who was born in Chicago, a union that has proved very happy and has been blessed with the birth of one son, W. Sam, Jr. Frances Miller was the daughter of Giles Miller, a native of Syracuse, N. Y., who was among the early pioneers of Chicago, first engaging in farming in that city and then in the real estate business. He married Louise Eighme, born in Buffalo, N. Y., and both have passed away. Frances Miller received a good education in Chicago, where she was reared in a home of culture and refinement. In 1906 she made the trip to Alaska to visit her sister, Mrs. M. L. Gleason, who had gone there in the pioneer days of 1898, and in Fairbanks Miss Miller met and married Mr. Clark. Fraternally Mr. Clark was made a Mason in Dinuba Lodge No. 385, F. & A. M., is a member of the Scottish Rite bodies in Fresno and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star. He is vice-president of the Stockton Exchange Club, and ever since he has resided here he has taken an active interest in community affairs, always using his influence to advance the civic, social and moral conditions. Mr. Clark gives much credit for his success to his estimable wife who has taken a deep interest in all his affairs and nobly done her share, encouraging him in his ambitions and ready at all times to endure hardships and make sacrifices to aid him in attaining his goal.

W Lane Clark.

Frances M. Clark.

Mr. Clark well deserves the title of Father of the Clarkadota fig, as he has given many years of his life to its propagation, and his perseverance will bring about the enriching of hundreds of others in the culture of this wonderful fruit.

JOHN ALEGRETTI.—It is a rare occurrence that a man fills a position thirty-seven years with increased efficiency, but such is the case with John Alegretti, who has been superintendent of the gardens at the San Joaquin General Hospital for that period of time. His birth occurred at Chiavari, Province of Genoa, Italy, December 24, 1844, a son of Giuseppe and Elizabeth (Bizanio) Alegretti, both natives of Italy and now deceased. At about eighteen years of age John Alegretti, though unable to speak English, left home for America, arriving in San Francisco in 1862; he entered the employ of his uncle, A. Bizanio, and attended night school in the Bay City. Desiring to start in business for himself, he became a fisherman on the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and for several years continued with fine success; he then located in Stockton and went to work for James Crozzier, in market gardening on Rough and Ready Island, from which were shipped fruits and produce to San Francisco and other markets in California; in 1877 he rented and conducted what was known as the Ten-Mile House on the Durham Ferry Road. In 1888, Mr. Alegretti gave up farming and became superintendent of gardens at the county farm, where he has since remained faithfully and efficiently, performing his duties to the entire satisfaction of the county.

The first marriage of Mr. Alegretti occurred in Stockton which united him with Miss Carrie Ganelli and they were the parents of five children, three living: Giocannia is the wife of M. Pardini; Miralda is the wife of Charles Garrow; and Sylvio. Mrs. Alegretti passed away at the age of thirty-two and in 1893 Mr. Alegretti was married to Mrs. Kitty Carson (Summers) Lloyd, daughter of the late Dr. Summers of Walnut Grove, Cal. She was born while her parents were enroute to California near the sink of Carson River. On July 31, 1871, Mr. Alegretti became an American citizen and has since been a staunch Republican in politics. Mr. and Mrs. Alegretti reside in their comfortable home in the grounds of the hospital at French Camp and are held in high esteem by all who know them.

JOHN W. MONTGOMERY.—A progressive rancher of the type that always profits from experience, is John W. Montgomery, the owner and proprietor of a grain warehouse in Lockeford. A native Californian, he was born near Lockeford on October 26, 1856, a son of Chandler R. and Olive (Whitmore) Montgomery, the father a native of Rocklin and the mother of Camden, Maine. Chandler R. Montgomery came to California in 1850 and for a while he mined at Placerville; later he engaged in teaming between Sacramento and Placerville. For a short time he was at Mokelumne Hill and in 1852 came to a point on the river where he preempted a quarter section of land east of what is now Lockeford, where he engaged in grain and stockraising. From time to time he bought preemptions from several men until he had acquired some 1,400 acres and engaged in raising grain on a large scale. Of their family of thirteen children the following are now living: John W.; Mrs. Alice E. Barber of Deer Isle, Maine; Winifred S.; Olive;

Chandler R., of Lockeford; Florence, Mrs. W. E. Taggart; Elizabeth, a teacher; and Mrs. Carrie Earle of Los Angeles.

John W. Montgomery, the eldest of the family, attended the grammar school in Lockeford, then took a business course at Stockton, after which he engaged in ranching, having acquired 330 acres of land to which he added from time to time until he came to own 400 acres on which he was engaged in raising grain for many years. He still owns 275 acres of this ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Montgomery on May 15, 1884, occurred at Atlanta and united him with Miss Rosa M. Minges, born near Atlanta, a daughter of John and Phillipina (Leicht) Minges, the former a '49er and a well-known man in the early days in San Joaquin County. Three children were born of this union: John M. graduated from the University of California at Berkeley in electrical engineering and won high rank as lieutenant-colonel of the Cadets and was captain of the rifle team, winning the gold medal in 1907, and the silver medal in 1908, for individual shooting. His team frequently was pitted against opponents and easily won their share of medals for markmanship. He died December 31, 1908, at the age of twenty-four. Olive P., graduated from the University of California and taught school in Contra Costa, Yolo and Modoc Counties until her marriage to Robert L. Cooke, now a teacher of the science of radio in the Merced high school. Lester M. is the youngest and after finishing his schooling selected ranching as his field of opportunity and is now meeting with success in his operations near Lockewood. For many years John W. Montgomery has conducted a large grain warehouse at Lockeford, which is equipped with modern machinery for handling grain and he also has a small rolling mill with which he crushes feed for the local ranchers. In his political affiliations he is a Republican and fraternally is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Stockton.

GEORGE W. BROWN.—A representative of the high-class agricultural methods which have made San Joaquin County one of the most prosperous in Northern California, George W. Brown has pursued his active and honorable career in this state for more than thirty years. His valuable and pleasant home estate located about three and a half miles west of Ripon consists of 220 acres of choice irrigated land which is entirely devoted to the raising of alfalfa, the yield averaging one and three-quarter tons to the acre and six cuttings are made during the year. The entire acreage will be eventually set to grapes, and already Mr. Brown is preparing portions of his ranch for that purpose. He was born near Rolla, Mo., November 3, 1866, a son of George Washington and Elma (McCourtney) Brown, the former of French ancestry, born in western Kentucky and the latter descended from an old Scotch family, also born in Kentucky. There were but two children in the family, Mrs. Mary Martin, residing in Rolla, Mo. and George W. the subject of this sketch. Both parents are now deceased.

George W. Brown received his education in his native state and the age of twenty-three, in 1889 came to California. He soon found employment in planting the vineyard owned by the late Judge Norton near Lodi and at the end of the second year assumed the position of foreman of the large ranch, where he continued for four years. During this time he became conversant with many phases of viticulture and he was also able to save enough money to start farming pursuits on his own account, which he did in the Elliott district, where he farmed until 1896 when he removed to Colledgeville and farmed on the Buck & Earl ranch for four years, his principal crop being grain. He remained in this district until 1907 when he leased the Norton & Anger vineyard for ten years.

On September 28, 1892, while residing in Colledgeville, Mr. Brown was married to Miss Frances Pierson, a daughter of Jacob and Rosella (Lindsey) Pierson, both natives of Kansas. Jacob Pierson was a veteran of the Civil War and served from 1861 to 1865. He passed away in Olathe, Kan. The family came to California in 1876. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are the parents of five children: Roselma married James M. Cusick and they have one son and reside in Ripon; Marion is married and has one son and resides in Manteca; Miss Merle is at home; Leland is married and has a daughter and is superintendent of the Norton & Anger vineyard; and Elliott is attending Union high school. Mr. Brown and his son-in-law, J. M. Cusick, are the owners of a fine herd of dairy cattle, which Mr. Cusick operates on shares. Mr. Brown is an authority on viticulture in the Ripon district of the county, having thoroughly tested the soil and climate regarding the growing of extra choice Tokay grapes. In 1920 Mr. Brown erected a comfortable modern residence on his ranch where the family reside; he is a member and past noble grand of Mt. Horeb Lodge No. 58, I. O. O. F., at Ripon and belongs to the Masons at Manteca.

JOHN ALEXANDER PETERSON.—A native Californian and an enterprising and prosperous rancher is found in John Alexander Peterson, who is the owner of a ten-acre vineyard about four and one-half miles southeast of Lodi on Harney Lane. He was born near Oakdale, Stanislaus County, on July 20, 1875, a son of Jacob and Anna Marie (Hanson) Peterson. The father, Jacob Peterson, was born in Schleswig, then a part of Denmark, and was a farmer in his native country. While still a young man, he came to California, leased land near Oakdale, and later farmed a half section of land which he owned at Grayson. In 1885 he removed to Calaveras County, where he died in February 15, 1900, from the effects of an injury received when his horse ran away. Our subject is the eldest of a family of nine children: John Alexander; Mamie, the widow of Fred Schon of San Francisco; Christ of Taft; Jacob resides at Taft; Christina, Mrs. Henry Clauson of Wallace; Bessie, Mrs. Walter Reiger of Taft; Peter of Clements; Henry resides at Mariposa; one child died in infancy.

John Alexander Peterson received his education in the Grayson school in Stanislaus County and when his parents removed to Calaveras County he attended school at Wallace. When he was seventeen years old he left home and worked on different ranches in the neighborhood of his home; then for some eight seasons he worked in the Gwinn mines; then tried his luck in the mines of Tonopah, Nevada, for two years. Not contented with mining life he returned to Lodi, where he bought his home place of ten acres paying $450 per acre (he could have bought the same property earlier for $50 per acre), six acres of which is in vineyard and the balance in alfalfa; he has installed an irrigation system and has built a bungalow.

The marriage of Mr. Peterson occurred at the Gwinn mine on April 14, 1904 and united him with Miss Carrie Ludwig, a native of Sutter Creek, Cal. and a daughter of Albert and Hannah Ludwig. Her father was killed in an accident and her mother is living at the age of seventy-two years. She is one of six children and was educated in the Paloma district at Sutter Creek. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson are the parents of two children: Alice and Ruth. In politics Mr. Peterson is a Democrat; he has made a success of his work here and his ranch is now an excellent property, well improved and valuable.

R. J. PARSONS.—Fifty years have come and gone and great the changes that have occurred during the residence of R. J. Parsons in California, forty-six years being spent in San Joaquin County, a respected citizen and a well-to-do agriculturist. He was born near Thorntown, Ind., September 29, 1844, and was eight years old when he accompanied his parents to a farm twelve miles north of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. His father, Lewis Parsons, was a native of Virginia and migrated to Kentucky in 1831, where he was married to Miss Polly Kersey and in 1838 they removed to Indiana. Grandfather Kersey was a veteran of the Revolutionary War and also fought in the Indian War and was a pioneer of Indiana. At twenty years of age, R. J. Parsons removed to the western part of Iowa, then spoken of as "out west," where he engaged in farming and remained there until his marriage in January, 1871, which united him with Miss Susie Arnett, a native of Iowa, whose parents were pioneers of that state. Her grandfather lived to be 100 years old, passing away in Cedar Rapids, in 1886. On April 14, 1872, Mr. Parsons and his bride arrived in California and upon their arrival in Truckee encountered the heaviest snowstorm in the history of that place, which was not much to their liking, and their journey was continued until they reached Sacramento, then on to San Joaquin County, where Mr. Parsons began farming on the Brock place near the Ross Sargent ranch and remained there for twenty years; he then removed to Butte County where he bought a farm but never lived on it except to plow it. He sold it at a good profit and in 1876 he took up his permanent residence in San Joaquin County where he purchased 160 acres near Woodbridge; two years later he bought another 160 acres. In 1880 he planted eighteen acres to Tokay grapes which have since brought a fortune to the present owner. In 1902 Mr. Parsons sold his ranch and moved to Stockton and for ten years was occupied in street and road contracting work; following this in 1912 he purchased fifty-five acres in the South San Joaquin irrigation district where he has since made his home. Mr. and Mrs. Parsons were the parents of seven children, all born in California. Alfred Nelson Parsons died when about thirty years old, leaving one child; Myrtle Louise is the widow of F. A. Marshall of Yakima, Wash. Clara is the wife of J. S. Hannah of Duns-muir, Calif.; Elmer Robert Parsons, a construction foreman, resides at Stockton; Mabel is the widow of G. Napier of Seattle, Wash.; Lela L. is the wife of J. E. Mahin, who resides on his ranch near Escalon, but is an engineer with the El Dorado Brewing Company at Stockton; Earl Arnett is in the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company. The wife and mother passed away in Stockton in 1904. Politically Mr.

R. J. Parsons

Susan Adelia Parsons.

Parsons is a Republican and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln. He is numbered among the early settlers of his neighborhood, and has witnessed great changes during his residence here as the county has emerged from pioneer conditions to its present high state of cultivation and prosperity.

BERT BETHFORD BANTA.—The descendant of a California pioneer, Bert Bethford Banta can well take pride in the achievements of his progenitors, for it is to their unbounded faith in the future of this part of the country and their many years of arduous labor, that much of the present prosperity of this generation is due. Mr. Banta's grandfather, Henry Banta, who was the father of the late James Banta, came to California in early days and settled in San Joaquin County where he acquired several hundred acres of land, Banta being named for him.

Bert Bethford Banta was born on March 25, 1889, in Merced, but grew up in San Joaquin County, attending school in the Willow district school. His mother, Mrs. Millie (Wacksmuth) Banta is a native of Pennsylvania, who accompanied her parents to California in 1868, her father being Edward Wacksmuth, a pioneer of the county, who was highly esteemed and honored by his friends and business associates. Edward Wacksmuth was born in Germany on January 31, 1834, and in 1857 came to the United States, locating at Pittsburgh, Pa. In 1861 he enlisted in the Union Army and served until 1864 when he received his honorable discharge at Washington, D. C. He saw service in the following battles: Battle of Yorktown, Williamsburg, Seven Days' Fight on the retreat with General McClellan, Battle of Malvern Hill, Battle of the Wilderness under General Hooker, Chancellorsville, Spottsylvania, and Gettysburg under General Meade. He was wounded in the right wrist and breast in the Battle of the Wilderness and was removed to the Base Hospital in Virginia and was cared for until his recovery. Soon after his discharge he removed to Franklin, Pa., where he was employed as an engineer for a short time; then went into the grocery business at the same place. In 1868, ambitious for a field of greater opportunities, he sold his business and embarked for California via Aspinwall, across the Isthmus of Panama and to San Francisco. Remaining in California but one year, he returned East for his family and on their arrival located in Sacramento, but after six months removed to Ellis, a town on the Central Pacific Railroad, where he engaged in the hotel business; he afterward leased the hotel for two years and engaged in the sheep business. However, in 1877 he resumed the hotel business and the following year removed his hotel building into Tracy, where he conducted a first-class house for many years. The Wacksmuth block on Central Avenue, stands as a monument to this man, who pioneered and won success. Besides Mrs. Banta, there are three children: Mrs. Elda Slack of Tracy, Mrs. Mary Grunauer and Eddie Wacksmuth, of San Francisco.

During 1909, Bert. B. Banta was graduated from the California School of Mechanical Arts in San Francisco, and then entered the University of California, taking up the agricultural course, and in 1914 received his B. S. degree. Returning to Tracy he has ever since been engaged in grain farming and stock raising, and is justly proud of the blooded animals on his farms. His extensive land holdings are coming under the irrigation systems and thereby will become not only more productive, but more valuable. Mr. Banta erected a fine residence on a 320-acre tract of land adjoining Tracy where he makes his home; 125 acres are devoted to a fine field of alfalfa, and many acres of corn are also seen on his vast holdings, which are in the West Side Irrigation District.

Mr. Banta's marriage, which occurred in Berkeley, Cal., in December, 1918, united him with Miss Amelia Armstrong, a daughter of Mrs. D. F. Armstrong, a resident of Berkeley. Mrs. Banta is an active worker in the affairs of the Woman's Improvement Club of Tracy and Eastern Star Circles. Mr. Banta is a well known figure in the Masonic Blue Lodge, Royal Arch, and Eastern Star, and is a strong member of the Farm Bureau of San Joaquin County. Both Mr. and Mrs. Banta being great lovers of the outdoors, have spent many happy days in the high Sierras, hunting and fishing, and have visited every National Park in the West, and some of them many times. Mr. Banta is a man of affairs and is ever ready to lend his aid to projects that are for the good of his home town and community.

GEORGE J. LUHRSEN.—An enterprising and successful business man and rancher whose far-sightedness has been of service to others as well as himself, is George J. Luhrsen, who came to San Joaquin County in 1876, where he has since continuously resided. He was born on February 26, 1864, in San Francisco, Cal., the son of Louis and Bridget Luhrsen. His father, a native of Germany, came to San Francisco in 1856 and was employed in the sugar industry, operated by Claus Spreckels at San Francisco, until 1875, when one year later he removed his family to the San Joaquin Valley where he passed away in 1890. The mother, who was born in Ireland, passed away here in 1892. They were the parents of two children, George J., and Mrs. Fred Holloway, who passed away in 1914.

George J. attended the Lincoln grammar school in San Francisco one year, until he was eleven years old, when he became self supporting; however, he was only eight years old when he earned his first dollar. He became employed on the ranch owned by the late Herman Miller, located near the old town of Ellis; at the age of fourteen he took a man's place on the threshing machine and for many seasons covered the West Side section on a header operated in the wheat harvest. In 1878, the year the village of Ellis was moved to Tracy, Mr. Luhrsen drove a thirty-mule team used in hauling the buildings overland two and one-half miles. In 1882 he entered the employ of D. and M. Lammers near Bethany, San Joaquin County, and for the next thirteen years was a successful and trusted employee.

The marriage of Mr. Luhrsen occurred on February 18, 1894, and united him with Miss Matilda Anne Lammers, the eldest daughter of the venerable pioneers, Deitrich and Dorothea Lammers of this county. They have one child, Esther D., the wife of Virgil F. Poet, a native of Pennsylvania, who came to Tracy in 1914; they are the parents of two children, George Franklin and Mabel Dorothea, twins. Mr. Luhrsen owns 320 acres of rich land all under the system of the West Side Irrigation District, of which he is director of division No. 1. For twenty-two consecutive years he has served as a trustee of the Lammersville district school; and with his usual progressive spirit, helped in establishing the West Side Union high school, and he is a member of the board of trustees, having served as such since it started. In his political affiliations he is a Republican, and as a member of the county central committee has had the privilege of doing some excellent work in the choice of candidates. On February 28, 1885, Mr. Luhrsen became a member of the Sumner Lodge of Odd Fellows and for four different terms has held the office of noble grand; in 1896 served as delegate to the Grand Lodge Encampment held in San Francisco; he is past district deputy of the lodge, coming from district No. 7, and was the first man to hold that office; he is a charter member of Encampment No. 49; a member of the Samaritan Rebekah Lodge, Canton Ridgely; a past president of the Tracy Parlor, N. S. G. W.; also a Master Mason of Mt. Osso Lodge No. 460, of Tracy.

MARY ALICE NELSON.—A very interesting and stimulating example of the ability often shown by women to manage their ranch estates, is afforded by Mary Alice Nelson, the owner of a choice Delta farm, embracing 367 rich acres near the Kingston District schoolhouse—one of the finest Delta farms, in fact, in all San Joaquin County. A native daughter naturally proud of her identification with the Golden State, she was born at Douglas Flat, in Calaveras County, on March 9, 1867, the only child of Edward and Jeannette (Powell) Thomas; and in that county she was reared, that is, for the first few years, for in 1870, on the death of her mother, she was taken to the home of William Richards, at Washington Flat, growing up there, and attending both the Angels Camp and Murphys district schools until she was fifteen years of age.

In this connection it is fitting to give a brief history of her foster parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Richards, as it is very interesting. Wm. Richards was born in Cornwall, England, and there he was married to Grace Huskin and they emigrated to Southern Wisconsin and there Mr. Richards was engaged in lead mining. In 1850 he started across the plains in an ox-team home with his wife and five children. En route they were attacked by Indians and lost much of their stock, delaying them so they were obliged to winter in Salt Lake. On a certain day the father and mother had gone into the city for supplies and while they were away two of the boys, the second and third in the family, fourteen and twelve years of age, respectively, went to the Jordan River to gather some wood. In Wisconsin they had been used to skate on the ice and one of them tried it and said it was strong, but he immediately broke through and went under. His brother rushed to his assistance, and both were drowned. To the credit of Brigham Young it must be said he sent men to try to recover the bodies but succeeded in securing only one.

The next spring the family came on to California. They wintered in Stockton, 1851-52, then to Washington Flat, where Mr. Richards had a store and hauled goods and supplies with ox teams from Stockton. His wife kept the store and traded in gold dust and about every sixty days made a trip to San Francisco, where she sold the gold dust to the mint. Mr. Richards was also interested in mining. He remained there until he died, in 1873. His widow survived him until 1880. Of their three remaining children, William died in 1906; Elizabeth, Mrs. Forsyth, resides on the home ranch; Grace died in 1917.

In 1882 Mary Thomas came to live in the home of her father, who had established himself as a prosperous farmer near French Camp, and completed her education in Stockton Business College, from which institution she was graduated June 18, 1885, after which she assisted her father in his business and presided over his home until she was married on June 18, 1890, to James A. Nelson, a native of Sweden, who came to California when nineteen years of age and became a pioneer rancher of San Joaquin County, and from 1890 to 1915 was actively identified with the development of the district. Immediately after his marriage Mr. Nelson had located on leased land on Roberts Island from Woods Brothers and engaged in raising grain. However, he soon purchased land in the district known as the pocket which, with the aid of his family, he improved and brought to a high state of cultivation. Mr. Nelson long served as a very conscientious member of the board of trustees of Kingston School district, and stood high in the Stockton Camp of the Modern Woodmen of America. He was a Democrat in matters of national politics. At the time of his death, he had amassed considerable property, and was a prominent figure in Stockton financial circles. He died on June 22, 1915, survived by his widow and five children.

Ellsworth P. Nelson graduated from the public schools, and is a Mason, belonging to the Blue Lodge and the Scottish Rite order. He has been for years the right hand of his mother in conducting the extensive farming operations, and has more than justified the confidence reposed in him. Edward Thomas Nelson also graduated from the public schools and Heald's Business College. He served in the 347th F. A. in the U. S. Army, A. E. F., and has an enviable military war record with the Army of Occupation, returning to civilian life as a disabled veteran, and having a hard struggle to regain his health. Erwin Nelson, the rancher, was educated at the public schools and Heald's Business College. He served in Company M., 363rd Inf., in lumber camps in Washington, and has an honorable discharge from Camp Lewis. He is now at home on the farm, doing his best to contribute toward the restoration of post-war prosperity. Grace Inet graduated from the Stockton high school; and James Victor Nelson is a student there, where he is a prominent athlete, and represented his school on the 1921 and 1922 football teams. He is also a De Molay member. Mrs. Nelson can be justly proud of her sons and daughters, having been very successful in rearing them to become useful citizens, a credit to their native County.

Mrs. Nelson displays excellent business acumen, and is thoroughly conversant with the modern methods employed on her Delta farm, where there is so much in strong contrast to the conditions of early days. She recalls very vividly the time of her advent to the Delta in 1895, when there were no bridges, and one had to cross the channels by ferry, if one traveled in a carriage or dray, as the ferry did not operate for foot-travelers, for whom a row-boat was employed. She recalls also the first appearance of a top surrey in the Delta in 1893. Mrs. Nelson, as a veritable pioneer, owns one of the treasured $50 gold-slugs made in California in the '50's—one received by her foster father, William Richards, when he sold a yoke of oxen he had driven across the plains. She values this slug highly, and naturally shows it with pride, for few persons own one like it. She is a member of the Congregational Church and of the Auxiliary of the Pioneer Society of San Joaquin.

Mrs. Nelson has also been the owner, for twelve years or more, of desirable residence property at 528 West Oak Street, Stockton, where she spends the winter months, although she has a very commodious, comfortable and ornate home at the ranch. She is a woman of splendid characteristics, and is beloved and highly esteemed, not only by her devoted children, but by her neighbors and business associates as well.

FRANK OLIVER HOUSKEN.—San Joaquin County and the town of Tracy and environs are largely indebted to Frank Oliver Housken, who has aided in laying the foundations on which have been built the present progress and prosperity of this section. He was born in Union township, San Joaquin County on February 17, 1868, a son of George Housken, a pioneer of the county, who settled ten miles northwest of Woodbridge about sixty years ago and who conducted a general merchandise store in that locality. In 1873 the family moved farther down the Mokelumne River to the home ranch northwest of New Hope and there four sons and four daughters were reared and educated, excepting for the schooling received in higher institutions. His father is now past eighty-three years of age and resides with his daughter, Mrs. Fountain, in Oakland, but still retains his ranches and interests in San Joaquin County.

Frank Oliver began his education in the New Hope school at the age of six years and finished his high school course in the San Francisco high school; he then entered the University of Michigan and was graduated from the law department in 1890, received his L. L. B. degree and during the same year was admitted to the bar. Returning to California, he was admitted to practice in 1890 by the California Supreme Court, and later in the Federal Court. He had been commissioned a notary public all that time by each governor of the state, commencing with Governor H. H. Markham.

Mr. Housken limits his practice to civil work, having no inclination toward criminal practice, and is inclined to specialize in real property law, with its numerous fields, including probate law. He conducted the proceedings for the incorporation of the city of Tracy and has been its legal adviser in handling the bond issue.

The marriage of Mr. Housken occurred in 1901 and united him with Miss Anna S. Lammers, a daughter of Diedrich and Dorothea (Hemson) Lammers. Her father came to California in 1859 from South Carolina and was married to Miss Hemson in 1871 at Ellis, Cal. Diedrich Lammers settled in San Joaquin County in 1866 and followed ranching all his life. The Lammers district school was named for Diedrich Lammers and his brother, Martin Lammers. Diedrich Lammers passed away at his home near Tracy in 1890, his wife surviving him until 1917. Mrs. Housken was reared and schooled on the West Side and she and her sister, Mrs. George J. Luhrsen, are the sole survivors of the family. She is prominent in the Rebekahs, being past noble grand and takes a keen interest in public affairs and the welfare of her locality. Politically, Mr. Housken is a Republican, but has ever held principle above party. His interest in the West Side section of San Joaquin County led him in 1921 to found the West Side Pioneer Society; he is an authority on its history. He has in his possession a copy of the first newspaper published in Tracy and all subsequent editions, which he has carefully preserved.

Mr. Housken is a member of the following fraternal orders: Masons, I. O. O. F., N. S. G. W., Foresters of America and the Rebekahs. He has been through all the chairs and in 1904-5 was district deputy grand patriarch of the local district. He is a director in the Pioneer Bank of Tracy. Mr. Housken believes heartily in irrigation, and in 1908 was secretary of the organization to promote same.

ALFRED D. WARDROBE.—An exceptionally interesting and instructive story is that of the pioneer family of Alfred D. Wardrobe, the progressive and successful vineyardist, who lives one and one-half miles to the east of Acampo. He was born in San Joaquin County, near the Live Oak schoolhouse, in Elkhorn Township, on September 15, 1867, the son of S. V. and Eunice (Cobb) Wardrobe. Both his father's and his mother's family came to California from Massachusetts in 1851. Grandfather Charles Cobb was a boot and shoe manufacturer, and just before the outbreak of the Civil War he sold a large consignment of his products to patrons in the Southern States. He was paid Confederate script, which in time proved utterly worthless, and was thus forced into bankruptcy. In 1865, with only $15 as capital, he landed in California, after a journey by way of the Isthmus, having left his wife and children behind in Boston. He obtained a job in San Francisco cleaning a cargo of shoes that had come round the Horn, and had moulded on the way. For this he received $9 per week, and had to board himself. When it became known that he was an experienced shoe-man, he was offered the position of salesman in the shoe-store; and when, later, someone wanted a man to take charge of his shoe-store in Marysville, he was sent there, and he remained in Marysville as manager of the shoe-store for several years. At the end of six years, he was able to send for his wife and family, and they joined him at Marysville. Later, he took up some land between Lodi and Stockton, 160 acres in all, and embarked in farming; and after a while he acquired another tract of 160 acres. He lived to be about eighty-six years old, and came to be worth approximately $10,000 before he passed away. A few years ago the home place was purchased by Stewart Elliott.

S. V. Wardrobe, whose full name was Samuel Valorious Wardrobe, the father of our subject, made three trips to California, the first, around the Horn in 1848, the second in 1850, and the last in 1851, when he yielded to the lure of the moment and went into the mines. Afterward, he bought a ranch in the Live Oak section, and as he was naturally a progressive agriculturist he became quite an extensive grain farmer. In the early days lumber was very scarce. While back home in West Scituate, Mass., a suburb of Boston, on his visit in 1850, he had his brother, Reuben Langdon Wardrobe, who was a carpenter and joiner, frame a 12'x12' house out of Eastern yellow pine, which was shipped in the knock-down to California via the Horn. It was unloaded from a new steamer, at Weber's Point, in Stockton, and by the two brothers was hauled out to S. V. Wardrobe's land, near where the Live Oak schoolhouse is now situated. Later on additions were made and the house was remodeled, but to this day it encloses the first 12' x 12' house, which was converted into a bedroom. The house is still standing, and is in use to this day. In that bedroom our subject's oldest brother and Alfred Wardrobe himself were both born. It is the oldest living-room, which has been in continuous use, in San Joaquin County. S. V. Wardrobe and his devoted wife were blessed with four children. Frank S., the eldest, is in Butte County; Lucy is deceased; Alfred was the third-born; and Eunice, the youngest, is also deceased.

Alfred Wardrobe attended the Live Oak School, and remained with his father until the latter's death, at the age of fifty-six. The mother had already passed away. After his father's death, he and his brother managed the old home place of 627 acres until 1910; and then a division of the property was made, he receiving 307 acres, and his brother 320. He sold this place, and bought twenty acres on the Acampo-Lockeford road, about one and one-half miles east of Acampo, a fine tract of vineyard and orchard, which Mr. Wardrobe has developed with his own pumping plant and irrigation system.

At Sheldon, Cal., on May 6, 1896, he was married to Miss Rebecca Macy, the daughter of Seth and Jane Macy, and a native of Sacramento County. Her father was born in Iowa and her mother in Missouri. In the late fifties, Mr. Macy went into the mines. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred D. Wardrobe have had four daughters, and three are living, Oleta having died at the age of eighteen. Viola and Myrtle are high school students at Lodi, and Vernon is a pupil in the grammar school. Mr. Wardrobe is a Democrat and is a member of Elkgrove Lodge of Odd Fellows.

PETER F. LAMBERT.—A pioneer vineyardist of the Summer Home district of San Joaquin County is Peter F. Lambert, who is recognized as one of the representative citizens of San Joaquin County. His birth occurred near Coblenz, Germany, September 10, 1854, and until he was twenty-one years old he worked in his father's vineyard. The vineyard was in terraces on steep hillsides and portions of it have been in the possession of the Lambert family for three generations.

Peter F. Lambert received a fair education in the public schools of Germany and in 1876 was serving in the Prussian army; he fled to Holland, where he boarded the S. S. Maize bound for New York. Arriving in New York he made his way to Nebraska, stopping at various points of interest en route; he then spent three years in the Black Hills of South Dakota, mining, but with no particular success. His next move was to Miles City, Mont., where he was employed by the Northern Pacific Construction Company and became a foreman for the company and remained there for four years. Gradually he worked his way to the coast, down through Washington and Oregon to this state, locating first near Healdsburg.

The marriage of Mr. Lambert occurred at Billings, Mont., in 1889, and united him with Miss Annie Bohman. Mrs. Lambert passed away at Manteca in June, 1909. In 1897 Mr. Lambert decided to try his fortune in the Klondike and he was one of a party of four to go, remaining there two years when he returned to California and joined his family at Healdsburg. In the spring of 1901 he sold his vineyard home at Healdsburg and located at Manteca, which has since been his home. The second marriage of Mr. Lambert occurred in 1916, uniting him with Mrs. Minnie Fisher, who had two children, Albert and August B., by her first marriage. Mr. Lambert has developed his home place of thirty acres in the Summer Home district to a vineyard, his average yield being eight tons to the acre. In 1879, at Deadwood, S. D., he became a United States citizen and since that time has voted the Republican ticket. In 1917 he became a member of the California Raisin Growers' Association, and from 1915 to 1919 served as a director of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District.

CHRISTIAN NEUMILLER.—Prominent among the sturdy, progressive pioneers of Stockton who will long be pleasantly and gratefully remembered as the representatives of a public-spirited, widely-respected family in the front rank of Californian settlers, was the late Christian Neumiller, who died at his home in Stockton on November 3rd, 1919. He was born at Wolfersheim, Canton Zweibruecken, in Rhenish Bavaria, Germany, on February 16, 1835, and when twenty years of age came to the United States and served an apprenticeship to the baker's trade. When a full-fledged journeyman, he worked as a baker in Baltimore, Md., Alexandria, Va., and Washington, D. C., and in 1858 migrated westward to California, via the Isthmus of Panama. He arrived in San Francisco on October 18, 1858, and after six days in the Bay City moved inland to Stockton where, on New Year's Day, 1859, he entered the employ of the State of California, becoming chief baker in the bakery department of the State Hospital at Stockton. From the beginning he gave satisfaction to everybody; and he continued to discharge that responsibility, at times not altogether light, until September 1, 1908, when he retired, rounding out an enviable record, especially for almost continuous service, for he was with the State Hospital all the time, with the exception of about five years, or from 1867 to 1872, when he was engaged in farming in San Joaquin County. On his retirement, therefore, he completed about forty years of honorable service in the state, during which time Stockton continued to be his home—excepting, of course, the period when he was on the farm, near Colledgeville, about ten miles from Stockton.

In June, 1865, Mr. Neumiller was married to Miss Marie Mey of Sufflenheim, Alsace, then a part of France, who had come to the United States twelve years before and had reached California for the first time in 1863. She died at Stockton on August 18, 1905, esteemed and beloved by all who knew her, the revered mother of two daughters and two sons, Mrs. Mary E. Minta, widow of the late Judge Wesley Minta, of Stockton; Miss Emma C. Neumiller; William C. Neumiller, treasurer and tax collector of San Joaquin County, and Charles L. Neumiller, a member of the law firm of Neumiller & Ditz, elsewhere written of in this work. These worthy representatives of one of the worthiest pioneer families hereabouts continue to reside at Stockton, Charles L. Neumiller and the two daughters making their home at the old Neumiller homestead, and William C. Neumiller maintaining his own home with his family.

WARREN LAMB.—Among the more recent business organizations of Tracy, San Joaquin County, is the Orange Crush Bottling Company, incorporated at $75,000. The main office of the company is at Sixth and B streets, Tracy, and there are branch offices with bottling works in Stockton and Turlock, Cal. The proprietor, Warren Lamb, was born at Charleston, Lee County, Iowa, on March 28, 1857, a son of James and Sarah (Sloars) Lamb, both natives of Richmond, Ind. His father, James Lamb, came to California in 1849, but returned to New York via Panama and thence to Indiana, where he was married. The young people then removed to Iowa in 1855 and engaged in farming and stockraising, and in 1860, with a party of fifteen ox-teams started across the plains; after six months they arrived in Clements, Jackson Valley, Calaveras County, Cal. The company experienced many hardships and adventures, but had no trouble with the Indians. Securing land they began to farm, but in 1862 a disastrous flood almost ruined the settlers of Jackson Valley. In 1863 Mrs. Sarah Lamb passed away and the family was broken up until in 1866, when his father married again and their home was once more established; also their property was reclaimed, and ten years were spent in Jackson Valley, where Warren learned to do farm work, and remained at home until 1880.

Mr. Lamb's marriage united him with Miss Hattie E. Minser, a native of Indiana, but who came West with her parents in 1860. They are the parents of four children, as follows: James N., born in Calaveras County in 1886, married Miss Pearl Gieseke, and they have one son. They reside on Seventh Street, Tracy, and he is a prominent member in the Knights of Pythias, Native Sons of the Golden West, and treasurer of the Foresters of America. He has held a number of public offices in Tracy, and is now the vice-president and general manager of the Orange Crush Bottling Company. Ida M. is the wife of John W. Shaw and they have one son and reside in Tracy; Ethel E. is the wife of A. C. Shaw and they have one daughter and reside in Stockton; W. Ray Lamb is married and has one son and they reside in Stockton; he is a stockholder in the Orange Crush Bottling Company and is manager of the Stockton branch of the company.

Mr. Lamb farmed in the Elliott district of San Joaquin County, and in 1890 removed to Valley Springs where he established a livery and hotel business, which he conducted successfully for ten years. In 1900 he made a trip to Alaska and the following year removed his family to St. Michaels, and the following three years were spent in prospecting and mining, with some success, but on account of health conditions in 1903 he returned to California and settled in Livermore, Alameda County. Here he established a small business for the manufacture of soda water and in 1914 the business had so increased that a branch store was established in Tracy, with James N. Lamb, his son, in charge, known as Lamb & Sons, dealers in soda water, ice, fuel and feed. As representatives of the National Ice Company they do a fine business in the summer with ice and soda. This company owns the exclusive right to bottle and distribute Ward's Orange Crush and Lemon Crush soda drinks in the following four counties: San Joaquin, Contra Costa, Stanislaus, and Merced. The plant at Tracy is equipped with up-to-date machinery and has a capacity of turning out 800 dozen bottles per day. At Turlock the company is constructing a fine hollow tile building with complete modern equipment. More than 500 cases of soda water will be produced daily by the company, and it will be one of the largest and best equipped bottling companies in the valley.

The Lamb family have always been strong advocates of irrigation and have been useful factors in the development of the locality in which they reside. Mr. Lamb owns a thirty-acre alfalfa ranch in the West Side Irrigation District, and is a stockholder and director in the Pioneer Bank of Tracy. He served as a member of the Republican County Central Committee and was one year a delegate to the state convention. For over forty years Mr. Lamb has been an active member of Odd Fellows' Lodge No. 219, and is past grand of same; is a member of the Rebekah lodge and has passed all the chairs and was a delegate to the grand lodge. He is a past officer of the Foresters of America, and past president of the Chamber of Commerce of Tracy.

FRED A. LATTIN.—It is an acknowledged fact that the most important work to which a man can direct his energies is that of teaching, and to this Fred A. Lattin is devoting his time, energies and thought. He was born in Schuyler County, N. Y., on January 12, 1862, a son of Joseph and Josephine (Howard) Lattin, of old English ancestry. The father was a teacher, and also owned and conducted a large farm in Schuyler County. His early ancestors were pioneer settlers in New England and were prominent in early colonial history.

Fred A. Lattin entered the country district school and upon finishing the elementary grades, entered Cook's Academy for one term. At the age of eighteen he taught two terms in his home district school, but desiring a better and more complete education, he entered the State Normal School at Cortland, N. Y., receiving a teacher's certificate in 1884 from that institution. Removing to Hinckley, Ill., he held a principalship for four years; then removed to southern Michigan and for seven years was active in the management of his wife's ranch, and while residing there became active in the state grange.

The marriage of Mr. Lattin occurred in Quincy, Mich., in 1886, and united him with Miss Jessie Cook, a daughter of A. B. and Anna Cook. They are the parents of two living children: Leon C. is married and resides at Lodi; he has one child named Fern; W. George is married and resides at Athena, Ore., and is employed by the Standard Oil Company; he has one child, Jeane; a third child, Bessie, died at the age of thirteen years. In 1894 the family removed to California and settled in Los Gatos, Santa Clara County, seeking a better climate on account of Mrs. Lattin's health. A fruit ranch was purchased near Campbell and he was employed as teacher in the Santa Clara County public schools, remaining there until 1901, when they removed to Lake County and he was principal for two years of schools in that county; the next move was to Modesto, and there he engaged in the general merchandise business for about one year, when he again took up his profession, and the year following removed to Ripon and there taught in the district schools. In 1910 he purchased a five-acre ranch near Lodi on which the family reside. Since 1917 Mr. Lattin has been the superintendent of the Tracy schools, which have shown a remarkable growth under his supervision; in 1917 the enrollment to the Tracy schools was 225 with seven teachers, in 1922 there are sixteen teachers with an enrollment of 520 students. Prof. Lattin has been connected with the public schools for thirty-two years. His political affiliations are those of the Republican party and fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America. Mr. and Mrs. Lattin belong to the Methodist Episcopal Church of Lodi.

ADOLPH H. LINNE.—The determination to win success has been the paramount characteristic in the career of Adolph H. Linne. Though obstacles and discouragements were many, he pressed steadily forward, until he is an influential citizen of the community. His native city is San Francisco, where he was born on June 1, 1871. Very early in life he was thrown upon his own resources as his parents passed away in the early '80s. The necessity of earning his daily bread required most of his time, and his schooling was therefore very meager, but he had learned well the lessons of honesty and industry. In October, 1883, Mr. Linne came to San Joaquin County and found employment on the Henry Fink ranch at Bethany, where he remained for about four years; then he was transferred to Mr. Fink's ranch near Banta, and until 1898 continued to labor upon the Fink ranch, when he went into partnership with his brother, Henry A. Linne. Entering into an agreement with Mr. Fink whereby they could farm 1,000 acres on shares, the brothers began operations. The first year was a very dry one throughout the entire district, and as the systems of irrigation had not been completed, the farmers suffered greatly from the drouth and, in consequence, short crops, but they persevered and became well known for their extensive grain farming. As their income increased, they purchased 640 acres of land south of Tracy, which is today a valuable property, devoted to grain raising, and in 1907 Mr. Linne built a fine residence and other substantial buildings. As time went on the Linne brothers have acquired more land, some of which faces on the Lincoln Highway southeast of Tracy and is now some of the most desirable land in the locality. There was 520 acres in this tract, all under irrigation; 160 acres has been divided off into forty-acre tracts, and sold off. The remaining 360 acres is devoted to grain, but the Linne brothers are preparing it for orchard and alfalfa.

The marriage of Mr. Linne was solemnized in 1901 and united him with Miss Annie Collins, a daughter of the late Capt. John W. Collins, an old sea captain, who married Miss Annie Pruser, a native of Germany, born in 1831, who came to America about 1867. Capt. Collins died near Tracy in 1876. Mrs. Linne was reared and schooled in the Jefferson district, the old school remaining within a half mile of their home until 1915, when it was torn down and the district consolidated with the Tracy public school. Mr. and Mrs. Linne are the parents of two children: Adolph H., Jr., a graduate of the West Side Union high school, class of '21, and Wilma E. Mr. Linne was one of the organizers of the West Side Bank, which is now a branch of the Bank of Italy, and he is a member of its advisory board; also a charter member of the Tracy Parlor, N. S. G. W. No. 186, and an active member of the Knights of Pythias.

Mrs. Collins, who was a sister of the late William Pruser, wealthy pioneer rancher near Tracy, resided with her brother until her death in 1907, his death occurring at a later date. She was well beloved and highly respected, and was the mother of three children: John W. Collins of Stockton; Annie, Mrs. Adolph H. Linne; and Minnie, the wife of Paul W. Harder, a prosperous rancher residing near Tracy.

CHARLES L. NEUMILLER.—A very popular member of the California Bar, distinguished for his legal knowledge and highly esteemed for his unswerving integrity, is Charles L. Neumiller, the senior member of the law firm of Neumiller & Ditz, occupying a spacious suite of well-appointed offices in the Commercial and Savings Bank Building, Stockton. He is the younger son of the late Christian and Marie (Mey) Neumiller, natives respectively of Rhenish Bavaria and Alsace, whose interesting life-stories are given elsewhere in this historical work, and he was born, a native son proud of his association with the great Golden State, at Stockton on October 21, 1873. He was reared and educated in Stockton, attending the public schools there, and was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of '92.

While yet a boy, he began to cherish the ambition to become a lawyer; and this ambition he stuck to despite the fact that his father, as a hard-working man, had not the means of putting his son through college, and particularly of affording him a training in the law. Young Neumiller, therefore, was confronted with the problem of making his own way and at the same time of saving enough to take him through the law school of the University. Upon his graduation from the high school, he entered the employ of the Farmers Union and Milling Company, of Stockton, filling the position of office boy, and by attending closely to the details of the work he was expected to do, he was soon advanced to the position of shipping clerk, both of the mill and the seven establishments called the Eureka Warehouses. In 1893, the Sperry Flour Company acquired the mill and the mill warehouses, but Mr. Neumiller was retained and made superintendent of the grain storage warehouses. In this capacity, he had an abundant opportunity of becoming acquainted with the leading farmers and grain men of San Joaquin County, and some of these associations bore good fruit years later.

The year 1898 was a very disastrous one for the warehouse business—first, because of the great fire, which completely destroyed warehouses No. 5 and No. 6, and secondly because the severe drought caused a crop failure, so that there was no immediate need of rebuilding the structures destroyed by fire. Mr. Neumiller, however, turned this misfortune to good account; he resolved to complete his education and to fit himself for the legal profession. In August, therefore, he matriculated at the Hastings Law School and began to pursue the regular law studies, at the same time taking work in the University of California; and each summer he returned to Stockton, where his former employers gave him work, and in that way he managed to pay his way through college. Applying himself assiduously to his studies, he graduated in 1901, both from the University of California and from the Hastings Law School, which conferred upon him the degree of L.L.B. with the authority of the University, with which the Law School was affiliated.

Being thus duly admitted to the Bar of California, he was retained by his employers to close out their interests and large land holdings in Tulare, Kings, Fresno and Kern counties; and in this he succeeded very well, although the varied work required nearly a year. On June 1, 1902, he returned to Stockton and on July 1, 1902, he entered the district attorney's office, under Arthur H. Ashley, of Stockton, then district attorney of San Joaquin County. On January 1, 1903, the law-firm of Ashley & Neumiller was organized, with offices in the Salz Building, for the general practice of law. This firm built up a good practice, but in 1910 the partnership was dissolved and each partner resumed practice for himself, Mr. Neumiller retaining the offices in the Hale Building on Main Street where the firm of Ashley & Neumiller removed in 1906.

In 1914, George A. Ditz, a graduate of Stanford University and the Harvard Law School, came as a young lawyer into Mr. Neumiller's office, and two years later he became a partner in the law firm of Messrs. Neumiller & Ditz, now enjoying a large practice, making a specialty of corporation work. They are the attorneys for The Holt Manufacturing Company, the Sperry Flour Company, the Samson Tractor Company, the Wagner Leather Company, the Monarch Foundry Company, the Western Union Telegraph Company, the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, the Western Pacific Railroad Company, the Tidewater & Southern Railroad Company, the Rindge Land & Navigation Company, and many other well-known concerns.

Mr. Neumiller is a member of the Masons, Elks, Odd Fellows and Native Sons, and also of Stockton Commandery, No. 8, K. T. In politics, he is a strong Progressive Republican, a warm admirer of the late Theodore Roosevelt, and always has been a close and personal friend of Senator Hiram W. Johnson. Since 1912, he has been a member of the State Board of Prison Directors of the State of California and since 1915 he has served as the president thereof, which speaks for itself, for there, as everywhere else, he has discharged his trust conscientiously and efficiently.

CLARENCE LOYD HUGHES.—A very successful and enterprising rancher, who resides in the vicinity of Manteca, is Clarence Loyd Hughes, who has followed farming pursuits from young manhood, broadening his field of work and material activity and increasing the range of personal usefulness with each succeeding year. He was born near Modesto on the Waterford Road, June 21, 1880, a son of George Teagard Hughes, born October 20, 1845, at Jefferson, Pa., and Elizabeth Agnes (Davison) Hughes, born July 24, 1865, at Benton, Mo. George T. Hughes was the eldest son of William Hiller Hughes, who came across the plains by ox-team in 1853 and settled at Sonora. The mother passed away on May 9, 1918, at the age of sixty-two years.

Clarence Loyd Hughes began his education in the public schools of Stanislaus County, then attended a private school at Stockton for two terms. After finishing school he returned to his father's ranch, where he remained until he was twenty-four years old, when he started out for himself. He purchased some farming land and engaged in general farming and now owns two well-improved, valuable ranches. These landed interests have come to him as the result of his own industry and thrifty management, since he began life without any considerable capital and has relied on his own efforts for his success. Successful in material affairs, he has not neglected the other aspects of life, and has become an important factor in the development of irrigation in the South San Joaquin district.

The marriage of Mr. Hughes occurred October 16, 1908, which united him with Miss Elizabeth Louise Zurcher, a daughter of David and Eliza (Miller) Zurcher, the former a native of Switzerland, the latter born in Illinois, December 19, 1864. David Zurcher, who was born on October 12, 1845, came to America in 1875, and in 1887 was made a citizen at Portland, Ore., where he passed away in 1910. The mother died October 18, 1920, at her home in Manteca, having reared five children. Mr. and Mrs. Hughes are the parents of two children: Frederic Loyd was born at Crow's Landing, May 27, 1911, and George Miller was born at San Jose, Cal., April 16, 1913, and both are attending the Manteca grammar school. In politics, Mr. Hughes is a Republican, and fraternally, a member of Tyrian Lodge No. 439, F. & A. M., at Manteca; a member of the Sciois at Stockton; and also belongs to Manteca Lodge No. 425, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The family are members of the Baptist Church at Manteca. In his chosen line of work Mr. Hughes is meeting with well-merited success and yet he finds time to faithfully perform his duties of citizenship and all who know him respect him for his honorable principles, his upright dealings and his true worth.

PATRICK LYNCH.—A prominent pioneer rancher of San Joaquin County, Patrick Lynch is now living retired at his home, 720 East Lindsay Street, Stockton, while his son, James P. Lynch, is active in the management of their large estate of 400 acres, highly productive and developed. He was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, April 25, 1850, near the village of Lisnaskea, next to the eldest of a family of nine children born to Peter and Mary Ann (Carroll) Lynch. The Carroll family came from County Monaghan, Ireland, and for many generations both the Lynch and Carroll families had been farmers. Grandfather Lynch was an extensive stock and grain farmer in the old country.

Patrick Lynch received a fairly good education in his native country and remained at home assisting his parents in rearing and caring for the large family of children until he was twenty-one years old. Taking passage on the Adriatic he arrived in New York twelve days later and immediately started for California and upon arriving in Stockton he began work on the farms of that section, and during the threshing season worked in the Cowell district. He spent several seasons on the West Side and in 1886 made a purchase of 120 acres in what is known as the black lands, five miles southeast from Stockton; this he eventually sold to R. E. Wilhoit. This property was formerly owned by a Mr. Brown and was a desolate, unimproved portion of the county and at that time there were no roads, no schools, nearer than French Camp, and the outlook for advancement and prosperity in that section was extremely meager. However, Mr. Lynch had a vision of the time when this would be a productive and prosperous community, had the place under plow, and soon after his first purchase he made a second one of 240 acres, formerly the Austin ranch, ten miles from Stockton, and here Mr. Lynch has continuously made his home, having added 160 acres adjoining. In 1889 Mr. Lynch constructed a system of levees which are still in fine repair, showing his thoroughness in all that he has undertaken. His ranch now consists of 400 acres, which is highly developed and in splendid productive condition, the chief crops at the present time being alfalfa and grain.

On November 25, 1880, Mr. Lynch was married to Miss Ella McCarty, a native of County Down, Ireland, who came to California in 1870. She passed away in Stockton March 6, 1923. She had two brothers, William and James McCarty, who reside in Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Lynch were the parents of five children: Agnes J. and Mary C. are at home; James P., the second child, married Miss Margaret McCartan, of Belfast, Ireland, who came to California in 1906, and they have one son, James Joseph. Since 1915, James P. Lynch has had the active management of the home ranch and has made a splendid success of it. Dr. William P. J. is a graduate of the medical department of the University of California, and with his wife and one daughter, Patricia Ellen, resides in Stockton, where he has become prominent in medical circles as a physician and surgeon. Nellie M. died aged about twenty years. Two years ago Patrick Lynch moved to Stockton, where he owns a home at 720 East Lindsay Street, content to spend the remainder of his days in this thriving and beautiful city of the San Joaquin Valley. He became a U. S. citizen in 1880 and in matters of citizenship he is progressive and takes a helpful part in promoting the progress of the county which has been his home for a half century, being numbered among its honored pioneers.

GIOVANNI MARRACCINI.—Well known as an enterprising and successful grain rancher of Tracy, Giovanni Marraccini has also long been prominent among the Italian-American citizens in this part of the Golden State, exerting among his fellow-countrymen and fellow-patriots the most wholesome influence making for better citizenship and more advanced industrial and commercial relations. He was born near Lucca, Italy, on December 27, 1850, and in that long-famous southern country spent his boyhood on a farm, becoming so adept in agricultural pursuits that, on reaching early manhood, he ran the home farm for his parents. In 1874, wishing to find a larger field somewhere in the world, he left home for America, and reached San Francisco in June of the same year. He at once continued on inland to Yolo County, where he located near Capay, and there, for eleven years, he worked hard as a farm hand. He saved his earnings, however, and invested in implements and stock; and for another eleven years he followed farming on his own account.

In October, 1894, he removed to San Joaquin County and located on the G. Bricchetto farm, near Banta; and there he did so well as a rancher that he was able to retire, in 1916, from the strenuous undertakings in agricultural pursuits to which he had for years devoted himself. On November 11, 1882, he had married Miss Eliza C. Canale, a native of Chiavari, Genoa, Italy, where she was born on July 5, 1862. Mrs. Marraccini came out to California at the age of fourteen, and with the exception of eleven years when she was a resident of Capay, she has always resided near Banta. Four children were granted Mr. and Mrs. Marraccini: Rinaldo J. resides with his wife and two children at the ranch home-place, where he is manager of his father's business; Antoinette is the wife of Charles Boltzen, and resides near Vernalis on a ranch; Angie is the wife of Oscar Buschke, and they live near the home place; and Eda is at home. All the daughters are members of the Native Daughters of the Golden West. Rinaldo J. is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Native Sons of the Golden West, and Mr. Marraccini is a charter member of the I. O. O. F. Lodge at Capay, and has lived up to the precepts of the order since he joined the lodge some forty-eight years ago. He was made an American citizen in Yolo County in 1883, and soon afterward joined the Republican party.

GEORGE NELSON.—A man of wide and valuable experience, and exceptional ability, natural and developed, in his important line of work, George Nelson, at present foreman for Messrs. Daniels & Green, Stockton, has been prominent for some years on account of his active and responsible connection with construction work, having much to do with the development of both the city and San Joaquin County. He was born on a farm in Sweden, on October 8, 1883, the son of Jons Nilsson, a farmer, and his good wife, Johanna, worthy folk in moderately independent circumstances, and he was the youngest of five children that grew up. His parents were devoted to their family, and from his sixth to his fourteenth year, he was sent to the excellent Swedish schools,—so famous for "sloyd" and other progressive features,—while at the proper age he was confirmed in the Swedish Lutheran Church. After confirmation, toward his middle-teens, he left home and struck out into the world to make his own living; and for a while he followed various kinds of work, in time learning the trade of a carpenter, and learning it thoroughly, as is customary in his native land.

In 1903, spurred on by the many stories of greater opportunity in the New World, he crossed the ocean sailing from Malmo, Sweden, on July 10, on the "Oscar II." of the Scandinavian-American Line, landing at Ellis Island after a pleasant ocean voyage of two weeks. He did not tarry long in the metropolis, but pushed on toward the West, to South Dakota and Rapid City, at which place his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Nelson, were holding down a homestead. He remained there a week, then found work as a cage tender in the Clover Leaf gold mine at Robaix, S. D., where his brother, Carl J. Nelson, now a building contractor at French Camp, was employed. For a year and a half he worked in their gold mine, sticking to his post as long as the mine was operated.

Thrown again upon his resources, and coming fortunately under the spell of the still more wonderful stories about California, Mr. Nelson in 1905 continued his migration, accompanied by his said brother Carl J., this time to the Pacific Coast, and arrived at Sacramento in the month of March of that year. As he did not find the right kind of work in the Capital City, he went to Camino, in El Dorado County, where he put in a hard year working for the El Dorado Lumber Company, building dry-kilns and other structures. He then secured a job with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company as bridge and house-builder; but after two years of continuous work in that company's service, where he added to his reputation for both skill and dependability, in 1907 he went to work for the Western Pacific Railroad Company, and continued there for a year and a half as carpenter and builder. He helped to build the roundhouse and other much-needed structures, and was sent to Stockton, where he assisted in putting up the Western Pacific roundhouse. From the first he liked Stockton and resolved some day to settle here.

During 1909, Mr. Nelson returned to Sweden for a visit to his parents, who are, happily, still living and prosperous there, leaving here on August 6, and arriving at Malmö, the same month. Sweden looked good to him again, despite the attractions of California, and he remained at his old home for some months. Then, like almost everyone else who has once partaken of the pleasures of residence and life in the Golden State, he came back to California, leaving Sweden on January 3, 1910. He first made his way to England, and there took passage on the great steamer "Lusitania," now immortal through her tragic fate in the recent World War; and in time he arrived safely at Stockton again, greatly benefited, and with an enlarged experience, on account of his wide tour. For a while, he re-engaged with the Western Pacific Railroad. It was not long, however, before an offer from Edgar Woodruff drew him from railroad work to the new "Record Building," the future home of the Stockton Daily Record, and he continued with that leading contractor for a year. He then worked for Tom Lewis, the contractor and builder, for another year, and in 1913 entered upon a four months' service with James Mulcahy, a Stockton contractor and builder who was just then erecting St. Gertrude's Church in Stockton; and he next went to work for Messrs. Daniels & Green, a firm widely known beyond the confines of San Joaquin County. That was in the latter part of 1915, and he has remained with them ever since. Mr. Nelson has steadily advanced in the development of their extensive operations, having been appointed in 1917 foreman of construction, a post he has filled with signal ability ever since. He has thus come to have charge of many of the most important buildings erected in Stockton in recent years, including the brick block at the southwest corner of Main and Aurora streets, known as the City Development Building, an addition to the Harris Manufacturing Company's plant, the basement and vaults of the Commercial Savings Bank Building, the office of the Kroyer plant on Cherokee Lane, and the Levy Bros.' Department Store Building on Main and Hunter streets,—an edifice of five stories, with a basement, erected at a cost of $250,000, which will ever stand as a monument both to the contractors, Messrs. Daniels & Green, and their superintendent, George Nelson, attesting remarkable excellence of workmanship, especially when it is remembered that the old building was torn down and the new one built in the short space of six months, a record in the building line in Stockton. Mr. Nelson also had charge of the remodeling by his firm of the Smith & Lang store building at the corner of Main and San Joaquin streets, and the Raggio building and the structure to be occupied by the Ernest Wilson Company on North Sutter Street, in Stockton.

On April 27, 1912, Mr. Nelson was married to Miss Caroline Johnson, a native of Sweden but at that time living at Oakland, an accomplished woman who has made him just the right kind of a helpmate; and their fortunate union has been blessed with the birth of three children: Elsie Mona, Clara Elizabeth, and George Walter. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson own their comfortable residence at 420 East Arcade Street, Stockton. Mr. Nelson is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and also of the Swedish social and fraternal lodge, the Vasa Ordenen, of Stockton; and those well acquainted with him will agree that there can be no more popular and welcome member in either of these organizations.

MORRIS HENRY GRATTAN.—Among the prominent citizens and leading farmers of San Joaquin County is Morris Henry Grattan, who is also a native of the county, where he has lived all his life and has witnessed the development and improvement from a wild frontier region to one of the best districts of the great state of California. Henry Grattan, as he is best known to his many friends, devotes his ranch of 160 acres principally to grain farming. Born on his father's ranch five miles north of Stockton on the Cherokee Lane Road, April 12, 1857, he is a son of John and Sarah Jane (Davis) Grattan. John Grattan was born in Albany, N. Y., July 4, 1827, and when a mere child his parents removed to Pennsylvania, where he was reared. When eighteen years of age he went to New York City, staying there about six months. In the fall of 1846 he made another trip there and entered the office of his brother Christopher, who afterwards was a prominent physician and surgeon of Stockton.

On March 31, 1849, John Grattan left New York City in company with his brother, Dr. C. Grattan, and his wife, on the sailer Canton, which rounded Cape Horn and reached San Francisco October 5 of that year. He engaged in mining for awhile, then helped his brother in the private hospital which he had established in Stockton; then in 1855 turned his attention to farming, buying 160 acres on Cherokee Lane Road, six miles from Stockton, where he lived until his death. From 1861 to the day of his death, John Grattan was a staunch Republican; prior to that he had been a Democrat in national politics. The only public office he ever accepted was that of inspector of customs from 1872 to 1876. On October 19, 1854, he was married to Miss Sarah Jane Davis, a native of Missouri, daughter of Judge Anderson Davis, a pioneer of San Joaquin County, who crossed the plains with ox-teams in 1852. They were the parents of six children, of whom Morris Henry is the only one now living. During the dry season of 1864, when everything was dried up, Mr. Grattan, together with C. M. Weber and others, commenced to try to get water from the Calaveras River by making ditches through to his place, obtaining the right of way. The first water was turned on Grattan's place and this was the commencement of the irrigation system in this county. He might be called the father of the gravel roads, for he took the initiatory steps toward their construction. He was a member of both the Odd Fellows and Masonic orders in Stockton. He lost his wife in 1896, aged fifty-six years. He spent his last years with his son Henry, and on January 17, 1917, he passed to his reward, aged ninety years and six months.

Reared in San Joaquin County, Henry Grattan received his education in the schools of his neighborhood and in the Stockton high school, and since his school days were over has led an active and profitable career in this section of the state. For two years he was a clerk in the well-known grocery establishment of Southworth & Grattan, a firm that did a large business some years ago in Stockton. In the fall of 1884 he went to Stanislaus County and leased the Dr. Grattan grain ranch of 1,600 acres near Hickman, where he farmed for eighteen years. His farm work was done by four ten-mule teams and his harvester required a thirty-six-mule team. In 1902 he purchased his present ranch of 160 acres north of Stockton on West Lane, which is principally devoted to grain raising, although he has a five-acre Tokay vineyard on the place.

On New Year's Day, 1890, in Stockton, Mr. Grattan was married to Miss Edith L. Brownell, born in San Rafael, Cal., a daughter of Fred and Sarah Brownell, early settlers of California. Fred Brownell was a truck farmer on Roberts Island and he and his wife were the parents of a large family. Mr. and Mrs. Grattan have three children: Roland H., Mrs. Edith L. Foster, and Beulah M. Mr. Grattan is a staunch supporter of the public school system and served as a member of the board of trustees of Lincoln school district. He is a Republican in politics and is a member of the Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F., in Stockton.

JOHN BALDWIN.—For over thirty years John Baldwin was a pioneer settler and prominent citizen of San Joaquin County. He passed away at the home of his daughter in San Francisco, April 27, 1913, aged almost ninety. He was associated with many of the early events in the county, as well as with its later progress and improvement and to the activities of these early settlers the generation of today owes much. He was born in Potosi, Mo., May 29, 1823, a son of William John and Ann (Kirkpatrick) Baldwin, natives of Mississippi and Tennessee, respectively. The Baldwin family were originally from Holland, while the Kirkpatrick family were from Scotland, both families coming to America soon after the eventful voyage of the Mayflower. John Baldwin received a good education in the private schools of his native state and remained at home with his parents until he was twenty-five years old, when he crossed the plains over the Oregon Trail to Oregon City, Willamette Valley. The next year he came to California, arriving in May, 1849, and engaged in mining on the American River until 1851, when he returned to his home in the South via the Isthmus of Panama. One year later, with his mother and sister, he again crossed the plains to California, this time settling in Yolo County, where he engaged in general merchandising at Knights Landing on the Sacramento River, remaining there until 1860, when he removed to San Joaquin County.

On March 29, 1855, at Knights Landing, Mr. Baldwin was united in marriage with Miss Louisa Kirk, a native of Missouri. Mrs. Baldwin accompanied her brothers, John W., Thomas, James and Joe Kirk, to California; and they purchased and settled on a ranch near Bellota, known as the Bluett ranch; later, in 1860, this ranch was purchased by Mr. Baldwin. Here he and his wife spent over thirty years of their married life, and here all their children were born. Eight children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin, five of whom grew up. Thomas J. married Lilla Cody; John K. married Myrtle Berry; Edward L. married Mary M. Jacobs; Maude A. became Mrs. Walter E. Bidwell; and Henry G. is now deceased.

In 1899, Mr. Baldwin left his ranch and removed to Stockton, where he lived with his son, John K., and on April 27, 1913, he passed away at the home of his daughter in San Francisco. He was a prominent member of the Grange Lodge, and in politics voted the Democratic ticket. His church affiliations were with the Baptist denomination. Mr. Baldwin worked his way gradually upward to prosperity, and his life history exemplified the statement that success has its foundation in earnest and honorable labor.

CHAS. J. BENDER.—An enterprising, progressive and highly successful farmer whose specialty is that of vineyarding, is Chas. J. Bender, a native of South Russia, and now one of the highly esteemed residents of San Joaquin County, where he cultivates a trim estate three and one-half miles to the northwest of Acampo. He was born near Odessa on March 17, 1869, the son of John Bender, who married Miss Christina Bender, a lady of the same name but of no blood relationship. His father was a farmer, and there were nine children in the family, those now living being Charles J., Margaret, John and Bertha. The father had fled his native land to get away from military oppression, and he came to America with his family when the oldest child, our subject, was a small boy of four years.

Arriving safely in Yankton County, Dakota, in 1873, John Bender bought 173 acres of land three miles out of Yankton; but the time of the great flood on the Missouri River in 1881, swept all of his property away, stripping him of everything. He then moved to Hudson County, S. D., and there homesteaded 160 acres, as well as locating a timber claim of like amount. He was successful at farming and purchased land adjoining, and when he left that state for California in 1903, he owned 800 acres of fine land. Arriving at Lodi, he purchased twenty acres and there he resided until his wife died in 1908, after which he resided in Lodi until his death, July 6, 1916.

The oldest of their nine children, four of whom are living, Chas. J. Bender, remained at home, faithful to his parents, until he married, in the meantime having profited by such educational advantages as he could obtain at the public schools in Yankton and in Hudson County. He was married at Menno, in Hudson County, on December 23, 1891, to Miss Elizabeth Ulmer, who was also born in South Russia, not far from the birthplace of her husband. She is a daughter of Jacob and Caroline (Mutchelknous) Ulmer, who came from their birthplace near Odessa, Russia, in 1873 with their family and located on a homestead near Menno, S. D., where the father became a large landowner and successful stockman. He passed away in 1917, his wife having preceded him in 1893. Mrs. Bender was born in 1871, and when one and one-half years old was brought by her parents to the United States, and out to South Dakota, where they settled near Menno. There she was reared and educated, as one of a family of seven, each of whom received the best advantages their devoted and industrious parents could afford.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Bender operated a half-section grain farm for five years, and then Mr. Bender went in to Menno, where he engaged in the dray and livery business. Selling out, he came further west to California, in 1903, where he bought 400 acres of land about three miles to the northwest of Acampo. Today, he uses 300 acres of this land, forty acres being devoted to a vineyard, in which he has twelve acres set out to Tokay grapes, and the balance equally to Mission and Zinfandel grapes. He has twelve acres in alfalfa, and the rest is open farming land. His ranch is so piped that he can well irrigate both the vineyard and the alfalfa pastures. Mr. Bender has deeded fifty acres to each of his elder sons, and each is running his own ranch. This valuable ranch of 400 acres was formerly an altogether different prospect; for 160 acres were in a field ranch, while 240 acres were known as the Ing Bros. ranch, all of which was purchased by Mr. Bender. In 1908 he became one of the original stockholders in the Lodi Cooperative Winery, that built the winery at Lodi, and he continued interested in it until it was sold to West & Son. In 1922, he became a stockholder in a company of ranchers that bought it again.

Six children have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Bender. Theodore is the popular and proficient dentist at Lodi; then comes Eugene; Alma has become Mrs. Koenig; while Calvin, Edna, and Ella are at home. Mr. Bender is a Republican, but first, last and all the time an American, broadminded enough, especially in matters of local import, to cast partisanship to the winds when it is necessary to support some other candidate or measure conceded to be the best. He is a member and trustee of the German Reformed Church in Lodi, and a member of the order of Sons of Herman.

HOWARD MALCOLM FANNING.—The life of this pioneer of 1850 began in Troy, N. Y., June 3, 1826; and in his passing, April 23, 1906, the city of Stockton lost an esteemed and honored citizen. Howard Malcolm Fanning grew to manhood in the vicinity of Troy; and on October 4, 1848, he assumed domestic responsibilities at the early age of twenty-two, being then united in marriage with Miss Laura Louise Butts, of Delaware County, N. Y. In July, 1850, the young couple started for California, reaching their destination the following October. They made their way via the Isthmus of Panama, and Mr. Fanning was compelled to walk across, there being a scarcity of mules. Mrs. Fanning was the only woman on the ship from Panama to San Francisco. By the time they reached the Pacific side, many of the party had been taken sick with Panama fever, but fortunately all recovered. They had expected to be met by a steamer to take them to San Francisco, but were disappointed in this and were compelled to take passage on a sailing vessel. Severe storms drove them back almost to the Sandwich Islands after San Francisco had been sighted, and the superstitious sailors wished to cast Mrs. Fanning overboard; for since she was the only woman on board, they believed her presence to be the cause of all their misfortunes. From San Francisco, Mr. Fanning and his wife came direct to Stockton, where they were met by his brother, Harry T. Fanning; and here for a time he was engaged in the butcher business, and later worked at the carpenter's trade, receiving sixteen dollars a day.

Harry T. Fanning, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work, was one of California's earliest pioneers, arriving in 1843. He was a sailor, taking to the sea when but sixteen years of age. He served throughout the Mexican War. He became a very good friend of Captain Weber, whom he met at Monterey, Calif. Together, they drove cattle from Sacramento to San Jose, and in so doing crossed that section of the country which is now the site of the city of Stockton. They camped under the old oak tree, situated at a spot which is now bordered by Sutter, San Joaquin, Park and Flora streets. Harry T. Fanning cut his name in the old oak tree, which was later cut down to make way for the growing city. He and Captain Weber then and there resolved to locate permanently at Stockton. They went to San Francisco in a sailboat, bought lumber, which required two weeks to bring back to Stockton on a river sailing vessel, and with it built the first frame house in Stockton.

In 1858, Howard Malcolm Fanning purchased a ranch of 250 acres near Stockton, a part of an old Spanish grant, and here he engaged in farming and raising fine horses, which he sold to the government during the Civil War. At that time O'Connor's regiment was camped near the ranch, and Mr. Fanning delivered milk to the soldiers from his dairy, and also made and sold butter. When Mr. Fanning sold out the butcher business, he bought a lot on Weber and California streets which is now occupied by the Majestic Market; here he started to build a home, which he soon sold at a profit of $1,000, and this was the first $1,000 he ever acquired in California. He then bought another lot, where Gummer's furniture store on East Weber Street is now located, and proceeded to build another house, which became the Fanning home; and there the two oldest and the two youngest children were born. The Fanning home was the scene of much hospitality in the early days, and no stranger was ever turned away from their door. Mrs. Fanning was the third white woman to settle in Stockton, and for a time was the only woman attending the Presbyterian Church. With her husband she entered heartily into the life of the community, to which her death, on August 1, 1906, came as a distinct loss.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Malcolm Fanning became the parents of six children. Clara Louise is now Mrs. Clara F. Bugbee. She married Mr. F. M. Bugbee, a son of the Stockton pioneer, Wm. Delos Bugbee, who came to California in 1853, and settled two miles northeast of Stockton. Together with her sister, Miss Delia J. Fanning, she resides at their beautiful home at 1724 Mt. Diablo Avenue, Stockton. Mrs. Bugbee was born at the Fanning home on East Weber Avenue, and according to Dr. C. C. Grattan was the fourth white girl baby born in Stockton. The two Fanning sisters have always been favorites in their native city, and are true types of Stockton's pioneer generation of daughters. They keep a beautiful garden with plenty of flowers, and are in love with nature and the great out-of-doors. Mrs. Bugbee is an accomplished painter, having produced many art-works of unusual merit. She is, furthermore, gifted with originality and rare executive ability, and it was she who drew the plans for their present beautiful residence, which contains many unique and exclusive built-in features. Frank Albert, the second child, died at the age of three years. Delia Jane, who was born on the old Fanning ranch south of Stockton, has always been prominent and active in Stockton's musical circles, and is a member of the Stockton Musical Club, as well as of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Before coming to California, Mr. Fanning had learned the cabinetmaker's trade in his native state. Miss Fanning has in her possession a mahogany sofa made by her father in Vermont in 1846. She also has an old chest made by him in the East in the year 1843, while Mrs. Bugbee has in her possession the first rocking-chair ever brought to Stockton, and a washstand made by her father in the East. It was shipped around the Horn. Another heirloom is a set of China dishes which was bought by the mother at the first state fair held in Sacramento in the early sixties, with the proceeds of her prize-winning butter, made and exhibited by her at the fair, where it won the first prize. Harry Howard Fanning was born November 15, 1865, also on the old Fanning ranch. He married Catherine Ortman, of Stockton, by whom he had one child, Louise Fanning, who on July 6, 1917, married

Curtiss M. Robbins, and is now the mother of one child, Richard Marshall Robbins, born November 22, 1922. Mr. and Mrs. Robbins, with their child, are residing at the corner of Sutter and Oak streets, in Stockton. Harry Howard Fanning passed away on November 21, 1918. Bessie and Mary Alice died in infancy. Mrs. Catherine Ortman Fanning is still carrying on the fine Fanning orchard and vineyard on the Jack Tone road, eight miles east of the city of Stockton.

Few citizens were more deeply interested in the welfare of his home city than was Mr. Fanning, towards whose betterment he was ever lending his best efforts. For a number of years he served as supervisor of his township. He was a prominent member of the Pioneer Society, serving as its president, and in fraternal life was a Mason.

SAMUEL L. MARTIN—The story of a real pioneer family is to be found in the record of Samuel L. Martin, who came to California in 1857, and from that time until he died was counted among the real builders of the county. A native of Tennessee, he was born in Hardin County, May 22, 1833, and when he was but nine years old he was taken by his parents to Arkansas and there reared and received such education as possible at that time and place. On March 22, 1857, he started for the Golden West, all alone, with his blankets thrown on the back of his mule. After traveling a few days he overtook a large train westward bound and joined them, doing his share of the work in driving stock. In this train was the Scott family, Kentuckians, and here he met his future wife, Miss Ala Scott, who was born in Kentucky, on July 16, 1835. As soon as they reached California, the young folks were married, in October, 1857. Some members of the train decided to choose the well-beaten trails, while others who were over anxious to reach California, took a shorter route and were murdered in the Mountain Meadow massacre.

Arriving safely, after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Martin began housekeeping on a ranch six miles southeast of Lockeford, opposite the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Cole, who were Forty-niners, Mrs. Cole being sister of Mrs. Martin. Mr. Martin acquired 260 acres of the Pico Grant, and here he developed and improved a good ranch, carrying on grain and stock-raising with a fair degree of success. Nine children came to bless their home: William T., the eldest, was born on the Dodge place, where the parents stopped a short time; the others, born on the old Martin ranch, being Joseph H., Susie, Mary J., Samuel L., James H. H., Elizabeth, Carrie M., and Ellen V. The survivors of the family are William, James, Carrie, Mrs. Lewis Morcing, Mrs. McCall and Ellen. Mr. Martin died in December, 1914; Mrs. Martiu passed away on April 3, 1898.

The first seven years after locating on his ranch, the crops were a failure owing to the overflow of the river. Mr. Martin, with others of his locality, put through the drainage ditch into Martin's Slough, and ever since, there has been no difficulty with water. He was a friend of education and helped build the Calaveras schoolhouse and served as a trustee of the district for many years. Mr. Martin was a whole-souled man, generous to a fault, ever ready to do his share to develop the interests of the state, county and locality.

GUSTAVE A. GERLACH.—An active participant in the business affairs of Lodi is found in Gustave A. Gerlach, the vice-president and part-owner of the Henderson Hardware Company. He was born at the mining camp known in early days as French Gulch, located about three miles from Murphys, Calaveras County, Cal., on June 7, 1864, a son of Gustave A. and Christina (Gunther) Gerlach, natives of Prussia and Bingen, Bavaria, respectively. The father arrived in California in 1850, coming via Panama, and settled at Vallicita, Cal., where he engaged in mining. There he married Miss Gunther, who had made the trip to California via Panama in 1852. For several years he was in the bakery business at Angels Camp and Vallicita. The family came to Stockton in 1877, where the father was employed with the Simpson & Gray Lumber Company until he purchased a ranch eight miles from the city on the Linden Road, after which he engaged in viticulture until his death in 1896, aged seventy years. The mother passed away in 1899, at the age of seventy-one years. There were seven children in the family. Louis and Julius are deceased; Lena, Mrs. J. M. Harry, resides in Stockton; Emma died at the age of seven years; Gustave A. is the subject of this sketch; Fred W. died at the age of fifty-two years; and Amelia is the wife of Dr. C. R. Harry, and resides in Stockton.

Gustave A. Gerlach began his education in the grammar schools of Angels Camp and completed it at the Washington school in Stockton. His school days were over at the age of fifteen, when he began to make his own living, at first working at anything he could get to do, until he was sixteen. Then he was apprenticed to learn the tinsmith trade in Stockton with Robert Rowe, at the corner of Main and Sutter streets. After completing his apprenticeship of four years he worked as a journeyman for Mr. Rowe another four years, and during this time learned the plumbing trade as well as the trade of sheet metal worker. After this he worked for John Jackson for eight years, until 1896, when he located in Lodi. Here he entered the employ of Henderson Bros. Co., who had taken over the hardware business of John Collins; and Mr. Gerlach took charge of the sheet metal and plumbing department for the company and has continued in that capacity ever since. When Henderson Bros. Co. was incorporated, in 1906, Mr. Gerlach was solicited to become a member of the corporation. He bought an interest and became a director, still continuing in the same capacity. In 1909 W. A. Spooner and E. G. Steacy purchased the interest of the Henderson brothers, and then Mr. Gerlach was elected vice-president of the company. Their location is at 13 and 15 North Sacramento Street. They deal in all kinds of hardware and are equipped to do sheet metal, plumbing, and steam fitting work of all kinds, employing twenty-one men in shop and store work. Mr. Gerlach is a stockholder in the Lodi Investment Company, that built Lodi Hotel and Lodi Theater.

On August 6, 1885, in Stockton, Mr. Gerlach was married to Miss Kathryn Morton, a native of that city, and daughter of Freeman and Kathryn (Brown) Morton, the former a native of New York and the latter of Germany. The mother was eight years old when she came to America with her parents, and grew to young womanhood in New York, where she met and married Freeman Morton. In 1847 the father came to California as a member of a New York regiment under Colonel Stevenson, to serve in California during the Mexican War. With his wife and one daughter he came around Cape Horn landing at Monterey, and served with the regiment as a sharpshooter until the close of the war. He was honored by being presented with a silver-mounted rifle. After his discharge he mined for a time at Mokelumne Hill, after which he returned to Stockton and engaged in the draying business until his death in 1868. His widow survived him until 1900, passing away at the age of seventy-three. This worthy pioneer couple were the parents of eleven children: Elizabeth, Samuel, Harriet, John, Mary and Tillie (twins), Cornelia, Emma and Alice (twins), Louis, and Kathryn (Mrs. Gerlach). Mrs. Gerlach was born, reared and married, and her two children were born, in the same house in Stockton.

Mr. and Mrs. Gerlach had two children: Christine, a graduate of Chico Normal, who is teaching in Stockton; and Gustave A., Jr., who met a tragic death by drowning at the age of twenty-three. With two companions he was in a rowboat on the Mokelumne River just below the Woodbridge dam, when one of the company fell overboard. The river was at a high water mark in flood season; and when Gustave A., Jr., endeavored to save his companion, both were drowned, and it was several hours before their bodies were rescued from a whirlpool in the river bottom.

Mr. Gerlach was a charter member of the Lodi volunteer fire department, and has served in various offices. In 1913 he was elected president of the department and he has been retained in that position ever since. He is prominent in fraternal circles, having been made a Mason in Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M.; and he is a member of Lodi Chapter, O. E. S. He is past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias Lodge in Lodi; a member and past president of the Eagles, of Lodi; and a member of Lodi Parlor, N. S. G. W., and Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E. Mrs. Gerlach is a member of Lodi Chapter No. 150, O. E. S.; past president of Ivy Parlor, N. D. G. W., and a member of the Woman's Club and the Congregational Church in Lodi. Mr. Gerlach has served as a school trustee of the Salem district. He votes with the Democratic party and keeps well informed on the issues of the day. His success in business is well-merited, and has served as a source of encouragement and inspiration to others. His life has been characterized by unflagging industry, and it is upon this foundation that he has builded his present prosperity.

WILLARD J. BUZZELL.—A native son of California, and a representative of one of the earliest pioneer families, is Willard J. Buzzell, tower foreman of the Southern Pacific Railroad bridge at Mossdale since 1907, without a single accident to mar his record. He is a son of W. J. Buzzell, a native of France, who was a seaman on a whaling vessel sailing the seven seas. In 1840 the father made a trip to the Pacific Coast; and while his vessel lay at Half Moon Bay, Cal., he and a companion deserted and made their way to shore under cover of night and a few days later he engaged to work as a trapper in the mountains along the coast. Coming to Sutter's Fort in 1844, he was married to Miss Frances Kelsey, a daughter of David Kelsey, a pioneer who settled near French Camp, San Joaquin County, in August, 1844.

Here David Kelsey built a tule-house on land given him by Mr. Gulnac. The agreement was, that if David Kelsey would live on the land for one year, Mr. Gulnac would give him a square mile of land on the Mokelumne River. This Mr. Kelsey agreed to do and built his house, the second house built in what is now San Joaquin County, the first being that of Thomas Lindsey, also constructed of tule. Soon after the family were settled in their new home, Mr. Kelsey visited an Indian who had the smallpox, contracted the disease, and died a short time later from its effects. The mother also was a victim of the dread disease. She became blind and later passed away, leaving their two children, America and Frances, alone in that unsettled, pioneer country. They were cared for by herders, and there Frances later met W. J. Buzzell, her future husband. The other sister, America Kelsey, is a noted character in California history, famed in song and story, and immortalized as the heroine in Dave S. Matthews' historical novel, "America Kelsey, a Romance of the Great San Joaquin Valley," from the press of the Stockton Record, 1915. In his foreword to this story, the author says:

"This is a fictional story of life in the great San Joaquin Valley, based on actual historical facts. The heroine is America Kelsey, the first white girl to live in the section of California now known as San Joaquin County.

"The names in most instances are those of people who actually lived there during the strenuous days depicted. The Indian tribes, history tells us, were as described.

"The author has used the writer's license in weaving a romance that demands the use of fiction throughout. In fact, it's not a history—it's a romantic story of California life. To possible heirs of characters whose names have been used in this story, I beg their indulgence."

W. J. Buzzell met Captain Weber at San Jose, and together they came to Stockton; and the two men were closely associated until 1850, when Mr. Buzzell sold his tavern and removed to Santa Cruz. There were six children born to him and his wife. Helen was born at Sutter's Fort, August 2, 1845, and married H. A. Reed, of Half Moon Bay; she now resides with her daughter, Mrs. Max Brown, at Burlingame. David died at the age of two years. Elizabeth A. was born at Stockton, September 9, 1847, and was the first American girl born at Stockton. She married Christopher Grattan, and they had two sons and one daughter; after his death she married L. A. Gunn, and she is now a widow residing at Berkeley, Cal. Willard J. was born at Santa Cruz, June 10, 1850. Joseph was born at Santa Cruz, August 8, 1852, and was reared and received a good education in that place. He became a farmer and married Miss Mary Lawrence, in 1888, at Stockton; and they had two children. Later he became deputy sheriff under Thomas Cunningham, and on November 28, 1895, was shot and killed near Paradise Cut, while in the discharge of his duty. The home he built for his family at Mossdale was swept away in the flood of 1911. Subsequently to his death, his widow became Mrs. O. A. Seamands. Mary Teresa is now Mrs. Abe Nichols, of San Francisco, and has one daughter. Mrs. William J. Buzzell passed away at the age of thirty-four, while residing at Half Moon Bay. The father later married again and had one son, Herbert, now residing at Half Moon Bay. The former was accidentally drowned in Half Moon Bay, close to the spot where he entered the Golden State in 1840.

Willard J. Buzzell received a good grammar-school education, and since he was thirteen years old has been making his own way in the world. He grew up on his father's ranch near Purissima, and for several years was employed as a stage driver through the La Honda and Pescadero territory. In 1865 he settled at Stockton and found work on the Dr. Grattan ranch east of the city, and while there attended the public school on Cherokee Lane. From 1869 to 1871 he was employed on the Clowes ranch. In 1872 he removed to San Francisco and entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, in the freight department, at Third and Townsend streets, where he remained about one year. Then he went to Silver Reef, Utah, and engaged in placer mining, with his headquarters at Salt Lake City; he spent ten years in that locality and made and lost a fortune. Returning to San Joaquin County, he was employed by E. C. Clowes as foreman on his extensive grain ranch, and this job occupied him for eight years. On May 16, 1907, he became the bridge tower foreman at Mossdale on the Southern Pacific Railroad bridge. Mr. Buzzell belongs to the Fraternal Brotherhood. He is a stockholder in the Home Builders Association at Salt Lake City, and in the Coast Tire & Rubber Corporation of Oakland.

MARQUIS LAFAYETTE McCALL.—A highly esteemed business man and rancher of San Joaquin County, residing on the Waterloo road, is M. L. McCall, who was born in Jefferson County, Mo., March 24, 1882, the son of M. L. McCall, a native of Ohio, who had married Annie Eliza Williams, who bore him five children: Clarence; Llewellyn, now deceased; Jennie, Mrs. Percy L. Bliss, of Oakland; Marquis Lafayette, of this review; and Lyman C. In 1890, the McCall family came to California; and soon after settling at Stockton, Mr. McCall built the Aurora flouring mill on East Weber Avenue, which he conducted until he retired in 1904. Those who remember him recall a wide-awake, high principled man who was ever ready to lend his aid to all worthy projects for the development of his adopted city and county. He died on May 10, 1914, at Stockton, at the age of sixty-eight years. Mrs. McCall passed away at the age of sixty-three years, on December 10, 1913.

M. L. McCall, the subject of this article, attended the Jefferson school and the Stockton High School. He worked with his father in the mill from the age of thirteen, at the same time attending school. In 1904, the father turned the mill over to his two boys, M. L. and Clarence A., who carried on the business until 1910. The mill had a capacity of 150 barrels of flour per day; it usually was operated on a capacity basis.

At Stockton, on November 24, 1915, Mr. McCall was united in marriage with Miss Ellen Victory Martin, born on the old Martin homestead; and part of the house in which they live was built in 1853. After their marriage the young couple began their married life by settling on the old Martin ranch, about ten miles from Stockton, which is now owned by them and consists of 180 acres of fine farming land. Mr. McCall is a member of Charity Lodge, No. 6, I. O. O. F., and politically supports the best men and measures regardless of party lines. He is ever alert to do what he can for the betterment of his locality and believes that the interests of one should be the interests of all.

HENRY D. BINGER.—More than one third of a century has passed since Henry D. Binger became a resident of California, his arrival in the state dating from 1888. He was born at Rodenburg, Hanover, Germany, on December 6, 1852, a son of Christopher and Elizabeth (Hauschild) Binger, who were also natives of Hanover. The father followed his trade of blacksmith in his native country, but in 1862 he came to America. He arrived at Castle Garden, New York, with his wife and four children, the eldest son Charles having preceded them to Ohio. Christopher Binger, after purchasing the railroad tickets for the family to their destination, Napoleon, Ohio, had only five dollars left. However, as soon as he arrived in Napoleon he went to work, as did also each member of the family, so they soon had secured a foothold in the new country. He died at eighty-six years of age and the mother passed away when past eighty years. They were the parents of six children, five of whom grew up: Mrs. Anna Hogrefe, of Napoleon; Charles, living in Humboldt, Kan.; Mrs. Mary Rohrs, deceased; Mrs. Katie Rohrs, of Napoleon, and Henry D., the youngest, and the subject of this review.

The education of Henry D. Binger extended from the time he was six years old until he was nine, when he came to Napoleon, Ohio, with his parents, in 1862. On the voyage across the ocean he had a comrade, John Bockelman, several years older, who on arriving in New York City, while on the steamer, before they landed, enlisted for service in the Civil War. Unfortunately, Mr. Bockelman died from pneumonia brought on by exposure while in the service.

On his arrival at Napoleon, Ohio, Henry D. Binger immediately began the battle of life, working on his father's ranch and also on other ranches, giving his wages to his father to help support the family, until he was twenty-one years of age. In 1875 he made the trip to Stillwater, Minn., where he was employed at rafting logs down the Mississippi River for a season, then was employed two years in a stone quarry. In 1878 he returned to Napoleon, Ohio, and there bought a forty-acre place and farmed it until 1886, when he sold it and leased a farm for a couple of years. Coming then to California, he settled on thirty acres two miles east of Lodi on the Lockeford road. Twenty-four acres he planted to Zinfandel grapes, the first wine grapes planted to the east of Lodi. In 1898, Mr. Binger installed an irrigating system consisting of a No. 5 Sampson pump driven by a twelve horsepower engine. He was the first man to irrigate his land east of Lodi. That year was unusually dry and it cost Mr. Binger $400 to irrigate his vineyard, but it was the means of saving it. Three years later, he set out almond trees on his remaining six acres. Mr. Binger was the architect and builder of his two-story house, constructed of concrete blocks.

Mr. Binger was married in Ohio on April 28, 1878, to Miss Dora Boling, a native of Hanover, Germany, and daughter of Christopher Boling, who was a farmer in Ohio, where he passed away. Mrs. Binger is the second eldest in a family of four children, Anna, Dora, Mary and William. Mr. and Mrs. Binger are the parents of three children. William and Carl reside in Lockeford, and Gertrude is Mrs. Barker of Lodi. She has two children, Dorothy and Charles. Mr. Binger is non-partisan in his political views, preferring to vote for the candidate best fitted to perform the duties of the office for which he was selected.

H. D. Binger

Mr. Binger and his family are members of the German Lutheran Church in Lodi. He has made two trips back to his old home in Ohio, first in 1911 and again in 1920. Each time, however, he was glad to get back to his own home and enjoy the wonderful country and climate of California. He may well be called a self-made man, and is numbered among the progressive agriculturists of San Joaquin County.

EDWARD B. CARROLL.—A pioneer of more than ordinary interest and distinction was Edward B. Carroll, in whose memory Carroll Hollow was named. A native of New York City, N. Y., he was born in 1820 and had the privilege of a fine education in that state before enlisting in the United States Army, in 1835, and serving as first sergeant in a company sent to Florida to quell an uprising. After this task was completed he settled in Charleston, S. C., and was for three years occupied as a steel engraver. He was a member of the National Guard of that state, but saw no service. Early in 1846 he enlisted for service under General Scott, and owing to his activities he was advanced to the position of first lieutenant under Capt. L. S. Gallagher and Col. W. B. Burnett, and was with the troops when they entered Mexico City. Three years later, in 1849, Mr. Carroll came to California in advance of Stephenson's regiment. During the journey he endured severe hardships in crossing the desert and mountains, but finally reached southern California, where he found employment in the mines. A few months sufficed to show him that he was not going to make his fortune there; so he gave up mining in those parts, and we next find him in Sacramento, Cal., whence he went to the mines in Tuolumne County. Among his party were two men, Brighton and Wright, who afterwards came into notice in 1850, when they erected a rude-looking building with sides and roof of zinc, located at what was then known as Rio Buenos Ayres, but which later became known as Carroll Hollow. During the early fifties, there came to California two men named Green Patterson and Grizzly Adams in quest of bear, and he became a lifelong friend of these men. Mr. Carroll was a noted rifleman, known in every part of the state as a crack shot. Through his strategy, daring and thorough knowledge of the habits and haunts of the bear, he captured and caged the largest bear ever in captivity; later this bear was taken East by Grizzly Adams, and while on an exhibition tour in Massachusetts became so troublesome that Mr. Adams was compelled to shoot him.

During the year of 1850 Mr. Carroll located in the natural pass in the mountains between Livermore and San Joaquin valleys, and built his cabin by the side of a beautiful stream of water. Here, three years later, he erected a fine tavern, a portion of which is standing today in what is known as Carroll Hollow. Those were the days of marauding bands of outlaws who traversed the country murdering and pillaging; history records fourteen murders which occurred in this natural pass, during those troublesome times, and how many more there were will ever remain unknown. Green Patterson, the well-known pioneer, was murdered in this canyon early in 1866; also six members of the Golden family were killed by ruffians, who were never brought to justice. Green Patterson became intimately associated with Edward B. Carroll in the early days of Carroll Hollow. He was a half-breed Cherokee Indian who had served in the Mexican War. He became wealthy, owning some sixty thousand acres in San Luis Obispo County. It is believed that his brother-in-law, "Sandy Simpson," was murdered for his money at Carroll Hollow. Among the other very early associates of Edward B. Carroll, were William Bright and Horatio Wright, who were among the very earliest settlers at Rio Buenos Ayres—now Carroll Hollow. They were there before Edward B. Carroll. Horatio Wright became a partner with Mr. Carroll in running the store and roadhouse. They were among the first to become interested in the Tesla coal mine and brick and tile factory about seven miles up the gulch from Carroll Hollow. Coal and clay are found in close proximity at this place. Horatio Wright had a brother, George Wright, who was a banker in New York City. Desiring to obtain more money with which to develop this project properly, Horatio Wright went back to New York City to see his brother, the banker; but he never returned and was never heard from again. In all likelihood he was murdered. Designing capitalists soon precipitated the project into litigation, and the original owners, of whom Mr. Carroll was one, were defrauded of their holdings. Mr. Carroll, in company with John O'Brien, Joseph Conn, and William T. Coleman, was among the first to reach the Tesla coal mines; but through this fraudulent litigation they were never able to take out enough to make it pay, and whereas each one should have been wealthy, they all died poor.

Mr. Carroll's marriage occurred in 1875, and united him with Mrs. Thomas Clarig, whose maiden name was Anna Morley. She had three children by a former marriage, who were adopted by Mr. Carroll; and the family made their home in Tesla, a few miles from the place where Mr. Carroll first built his rude cabin. He passed away in 1881, survived by his widow and three adopted daughters. Mrs. Carroll then removed to Oakland, Cal., where she passed away on September 14, 1918, a highly honored pioneer woman. She was one of the survivors of the ill-fated steamship "Central America," which went down off Cape Hatteras, September 12, 1857, with $4,000,000 in gold and several hundred passengers in a very severe storm on her trip from Havana to New York City. Mrs. Carroll, who was then Mrs. James Reading, was one of the few passengers rescued. The "Central America" was originally the "George Law," which had been refitted and rechristened "Central America," and was being used as a Pacific mail steamer. She was an old hulk—in reality unseaworthy.

The eldest daughter, Mrs. Mamie (Carroll) Burns, owns and resides upon eighty acres where stand the original buildings, erected by Mr. Carroll in 1850. It is one of the most interesting places, historically, in the San Joaquin Valley. She was born at San Francisco, was orphaned by the death of her father when she was a little girl, the mother being left a widow with three children: Mamie, Elizabeth, and Maggie. Upon the mother's marriage, in 1875, to Edward Baldwin Carroll, all the three little girls were adopted by him, and all of them grew up in Carroll Hollow. Mamie was married in the month of April, 1902, to Mr. James Burns, who was born at San Francisco. He is and for the past fourteen years has been a state fire warden, working out from their historic old home at Carroll Hollow. Elizabeth is the wife of Jack Elmhorn, chief engineer on an ocean liner plying in the Pacific to the Hawaiian Islands, and resides in San Pedro. Maggie became the wife of Harry W. Teeple, who was a well-known Southern Pacific conductor. She makes her home for the present at Los Angeles, Cal., with her only son, Harry C. Teeple, who is in the employ of the Shell Company at the corner of Lincoln and Mission roads in the southern metropolis. At the breaking out of the late World War, Harry C. Teeple was the youngest man on the San Francisco Chronicle office force to enlist. He has an honorable record, having served for the period of the war in the United States Navy on the steamship "Pueblo." The history of Carroll Hollow constitutes an interesting chapter in the annals of San Joaquin County, and no one knows more of it than its oldest living inhabitant, Mrs. Mamie Carroll Burns.

HARVEY SMITH CLARK.—In the long years since Harvey S. Clark came to California, he has taken an active and helpful interest in the development of the central section of the state, being numbered among the prominent and influential citizens of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County. He was born at Janesville, Wis., May 8, 1869, a son of Harvey Spencer and Mary (Smith) Clark, both natives of Michigan. The maternal grandfather Smith was a frontiersman in the lumber region of Michigan, and the father, Harvey Spencer Clark, was born and reared there. When he was married to Miss Mary Smith, he moved to Wisconsin, where he worked at his trade as a printer; later he moved his family to Detroit, Mich., and worked at his trade there. In 1875 the father came to California, and a year later was followed by his family. He engaged in farming in the vicinity of Lodi; later he was appointed postmaster of Lodi, and served in that capacity for sixteen years. There were three children in the family: Luella, Mrs. Burkholder; Harvey S., of this sketch; and Wallace, who died in October, 1922, all of Lodi. The father passed away at the age of seventy-eight years, while the mother is still living at 315 East Pine Street, Lodi.

The father purchased a quarter-section of land in the Elliott district, two and a half miles northeast of the Elliott schoolhouse, and Harvey S. attended this school for three years; after the family removed to Lodi he attended the Lodi grammar school. Three years were spent in learning the printing trade with the Lodi Sentinel. Then he became a journeyman printer and worked at Woodland and Sacramento, afterwards coming to Stockton and working two years on the Stockton Independent. On account of his father's failing health, he then returned to Lodi and assisted his father in the postoffice. He was appointed postmaster several years before his father's death, and served for thirteen years, during which time the city and rural delivery system was inaugurated. When a change came in administration he was succeeded by a Democratic postmaster. Mr. Clark was then elected to the office of city clerk, and served for seven years, resigning this position on February 1, 1921, to devote his entire time to his ranch, southeast of Lodi on Wyandotte Avenue, consisting of thirty-five acres planted to vineyard of the Tokay, Alicante and Cornichon varieties of grapes, with some fruit and alfalfa. He has a fine and complete irrigation system, consisting of one five-inch and one three-inch pump, driven by a twelve-horse-power and a seven-and-a-half-horse-power engine, respectively.

The marriage of Mr. Clark occurred on June 25, 1916, in Sonora, Cal., where he was united in marriage with Mrs. Minnie I. Murray (nee Chaney), born and reared in Des Moines, Iowa. Mrs. Clark has one son, Paul Murray, a graduate of Stanford University, class of 1922, where he majored in geology. Mr. Clark is a Republican in politics, and is prominent fraternally, being a member of the Masons, a past chancellor of the Knights of Pythias, and a member of the Modern Woodmen, of Lodi.

ROBERT BLACKSTONE FORSYTH.—A native son of California, who from early manhood has been active in the reclamation and protection districts of the county, is Robert Blackstone Forsyth, born at New Hope, San Joaquin County, August 3, 1875, the eldest son of a family of three children born to Robert Blackstone and Julia (Posey) Forsyth. A brother, Daniel Forsyth, resides at Thornton; and a sister, Carrie Bell, is Mrs. Ray, of Sonora. The father, Robert Blackstone Forsyth, came to California from Illinois in 1858 via Panama and settled on a ranch in the Ray school district. He lived to be seventy-nine years old, but the mother passed away at the age of twenty-eight years, when Robert was a small boy of six summers.

Robert Blackstone Forsyth received his education at the Ray district school and was engaged in general farming pursuits until he was twenty-four years old, when he and his brother Daniel started in the dredging business, constructing a dredger, and helping to build levees in the reclamation district of the county. They worked along the Stockton levees in the Victoria, Staten and Lisbon districts as chief engineers; and later they built a dredger at Yuma, Ariz., for the California Development Company and ran it, helping in the canal work on the Colorado River irrigation district through the Imperial Valley, which has become one of the most productive districts of California. The brothers continued in partnership in the dredging business until 1906, when Robert Forsyth sold his interest to his brother and settled on a forty-acre ranch a quarter of a mile south of the old Ray district schoolhouse. Most of the forty acres was unimproved land, which Mr. Forsyth set to a vineyard of Zinfandel and Tokay grapes. This vineyard is now a fine, productive one, irrigated by a six-inch pump driven by a fifteen-horsepower motor.

On August 6, 1908, in Los Angeles, Mr. Forsyth was married to Miss Hazel Hack, born in Freeport, Sacramento County, on the Sacramento River, a daughter of Nathan D. and Lavina (Kirtland) Hack, both natives of California. The father was a rancher at Freeport. His father, George Hack, a native of England, crossed the plains to California from Wisconsin in the fifties. At Freeport, on January 3, 1881, Nathan D. Hack was married to Miss Lavina Kirtland, the eldest daughter of Thomas and Narcissus (Tucker) Kirtland. Great-grandfather Kirtland was a native of England who settled in Ohio at an early date and came to California in the pioneer days. Thomas Kirtland, the grandfather of Mrs. Forsyth, was a blacksmith at Jenny Lind, Cal., and later moved to Freeport, where he had a blacksmith shop. George Hack owned a 300-acre farm at Freeport, and there he resided until his death. N. D. Hack, the father of Mrs. Forsyth, owned 100 acres of land at Freeport, on which he reared his family of five children: Hazel, Mrs. Forsyth; Pearl Irene, Mrs.

York of Sacramento; Nathan D., at Live Oak; Blanche, Mrs. Stokes of Stockton; and Mabel, Mrs. Crawford of Freeport. For four years after Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth were married, they lived on the dredger in Merritt Island District. In 1912 he built a comfortable residence on his forty-acre ranch, which has since been their home. They are the parents of one daughter, Bernice, attending the Ray school. For many years, Mr. Forsyth has been a trustee of the Ray school district. In politics he is a Democrat, but independent in local matters; and fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias of Lodi.

HENRY F. ELLIS.—A leader in every movement for the advancement of his home district, Henry F. Ellis of Lodi, manager of the Stewart Fruit Company here, had an interesting career in the newspaper field before becoming associated with the fruit industry. A son of California pioneers, Mr. Ellis was born in Napa County, January 23, 1866, his parents being Ralph and Caroline (Everets) Ellis, both now deceased, the former a native of New York, while Mrs. Ellis was born in Indiana. Ralph Ellis came to California in the gold-mining days and located at Downieville, Sierra County, where he was agent for Wilson and Evarts, who conducted a bank there. Gold dust was then used to a great extent as a medium of exchange, and Mr. Ellis used to carry it across the country to Marysville, making frequent trips through this wild, unsettled district. He was for some time county clerk of Sierra County, and on removing to Napa County held the office of sheriff there from 1865 to 1870. He also farmed in that county and built and operated the first grist-mill in the state at St. Helena. In 1870 he came to San Joaquin County and for seven years farmed south of Stockton, going then to Lodi, where he ran a flour mill. He sold this in 1881 and established the "Lodi Sentinel," a weekly newspaper, displaying characteristic versatility and initiative in taking up this entirely new line of endeavor. Later he turned this paper over to his son Frank, and with another son, W. R. Ellis, went to Woodland and bought the "Woodland Mail." He was a charter member of the Lodi Lodge of Masons, and was its first master. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ellis were the parents of five children: W. R. Ellis, of Sacramento, former secretary of the California State Highway Commission; Frank, of Stockton; Henry F., of Lodi; Mrs. Freeman B. Mills; and Mrs. Margaret E. Porter.

Henry F. Ellis was fourteen years old when the family came to Lodi, and he was educated in the public schools and at Woodbridge Academy. He entered newspaper work with his father on the "Lodi Sentinel," becoming its editor, and later went to Woodland, where he was city editor of the "Woodland Mail," spending ten years there. In 1909 he gave up newspaper work and became local agent at Lodi for the California Fruit Exchange, a position he held for twelve years. In 1904 Mr. Ellis represented San Joaquin County at the St. Louis Exposition, having an attractive exhibit in the Agricultural Building, and he brought back fifteen prizes.

In January, 1918, Mr. Ellis became district manager for the Stewart Fruit Company, this being one of the largest concerns in this line in the state, with shipping and packing houses all over California. They ship strictly on a commission basis, and in 1920 sent out 410 cars of deciduous fruits and grapes from Lodi. About six years ago Mr. Ellis bought an eighty-acre vineyard for $20,000, and improved it, putting in a pumping plant; and at the end of four years he sold it for $64,000. In 1909 he purchased sixty acres of raw land, planted part of it to Tokay grapes, and later set out the remainder to prunes. In 1920 the grapes produced six tons to the acre, and he has refused $2,000 an acre for the property.

Mr. Ellis was married on August 11, 1887, to Miss Lochie Green, a native daughter of San Joaquin County and a member of an old pioneer family. Two daughters have been born to them: Carrie E., a graduate of the Lodi high school, the San Jose Normal and the University of California, is the teacher of domestic science in the Lodi high school; Frances M. graduated at the Lodi high school and the San Jose State Normal, and teaches in the Lodi grammar school. Prominent in educational affairs, for ten years Mr. Ellis served as trustee of the Lodi union high school and of the Lodi grammar school. A Republican in politics all his life, he is now city recorder of Lodi; and he is also a member of the board of trustees of the Lodi Public Library. During the World War he took an active part in all the Government programs, and was secretary of the Lodi Liberty League. He became a charter member of Lodi Parlor No. 18, N. S. G. W., when he was only eighteen; and he and George E. Lawrence are now the only living charter members of the lodge. Well-known in Masonic circles, he is a member of Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M.; Stockton Commandery, K. T.; and Islam Temple, of San Francisco.

J. O. BEAUCHAMP.—A worthy representative of one of the pioneer American families is J. O. Beauchamp, the well-known rancher and realtor living about three and a half miles to the west of Escalon, where he owns nearly forty-six choice acres. He was born in Pike County, Mo., on April 18, 1865, the son of James W. Beauchamp, a native of Pike County, long active as a farmer and stockman in Missouri, in which state he has spent his days. He is still living, 92 years of age, while his wife (whose maiden name was Susan S. Nalley), also born in Pike County, is eighty-two years old. Her father, Davenport Nalley, was born in Virginia, and settled in Pike County in pioneer days, where he became a prosperous farmer and stockman. Mr. Beauchamp's paternal grandfather was born in Kentucky, brought out his family to Pike County, and there settled upon a farm. He was a member of the Christian Church, and a local preacher, and his influence for widespread good was recognized in Pike County. Mr. Beauchamp's mother was his father's second wife. They had six children, five of whom grew up; Mr. Beauchamp is the eldest, and is the only one residing in California. The maiden name of Mr. James W. Beauchamp's first wife was Sally Biggs, and by her he had two children.

J. O. Beauchamp attended the public schools, including the high school, in his home district, at Payasville, Mo., and then went to a business college at Bowling Green in the same state, a town identified with the career of his second-cousin, Champ Clark, now so distinguished in American history. He was the son of John Hampton and Aletha Jane (Beauchamp) Clark, and his full name was James Beauchamp Clark; but when he began practicing law in Bowling Green, he abbreviated his name to Champ, and by that shorter appellation he was later known.

Senator Champ Clark, while on a lecture-tour to the Pacific Coast, visited Mr. Beauchamp at his home in Santa Rosa; the relationship was confirmed and the two worthies had a delightful time together.

On Christmas Day, 1889, Mr. Beauchamp was married at Clarksville, Mo., to Miss Elizabeth Jeans, of that town, a daughter of Newton Jeans, a farmer who was born and reared in Pike County, and who came out to California with Mr. Beauchamp and here breathed his last. His wife's maiden name was Margaret Watts; the Jeans, Watts, and Beauchamp families were all Missouri pioneers. John Watts, an uncle of Mrs. Beauchamp, came to California in 1849, and became interested in a project for supplying water to the miners in the mining country in which he lost about $80,000; later, he went into business at Stockton, and later still settled at Blocksburg, in Humboldt County, where he owned a stock farm, and where he died. He lived to be seventy-three years old, and died well-to-do. These families were all originally from Kentucky.

After their marriage, Mr. Beauchamp bought his father's home-place in Pike County, Mo.; but on account of his wife's ill health, he sold out, and came to California in 1899. Settling at first in Humboldt County, he spent the next three years at Santa Rosa, Sonoma County, where he ran a dairy-ranch just outside of Santa Rosa; and later on he moved into the city and subdivided the "Roseland" tract, realizing a good profit from his venture. He moved to his present place in 1917, and now deals quite extensively in real estate, mostly farm lands and ranches near Escalon. He is an exceptional judge of land values. Two children have been granted Mr. and Mrs. Beauchamp: Ruth is now the wife of G. R. Shriver, rancher and insurance agent at Santa Rosa; and Margaret is at home. The family attend the Christian Church.

DIEDERICH LAMMERS.—A successful agriculturist whose long residence in San Joaquin County won him a high place in the esteem of his community was Diederich Lammers. A native of Germany, he was born on July 11, 1837, his parents being Henry and Marguerita (Dascher) Lammers, worthy residents of that country who spent all their lives there.

Coming to America as a young man, Mr. Lammers at first located at Charleston, S. C., where he worked as a grocer's clerk two years before coming to California in the fall of 1869. He spent some time in San Francisco, and in 1870 came to San Joaquin County, where an older brother, Martin Lammers, had already located upon a farm in Tulare Township.

In 1871 Mr. Lammers was married to Miss Dorothea Hensen, also a native of Germany, who came to California in 1870. They became the parents of two daughters: Matilda Amelia is the wife of George H. Luhrsens; and Annie Gesena married F. O. Housken, well-known attorney of Tracy; and sketches of both appear elsewhere in this history. Mr. Lammers became the owner of 320 acres of valuable land near Bethany, and this he developed into a fine ranch, meeting with splendid success in his farming operations. He passed away on May 30, 1900, his wife surviving him until March 13, 1917.

HENRY BRUCE BARKIS.—A representative citizen of San Joaquin County who has helped to make the San Joaquin Valley one of the most prosperous farming districts in the state of California is Henry Bruce Barkis, the owner of a fine vineyard of twenty-five acres one mile east of Lodi on the Lockeford road. He was born at Union, Boone County, Ky., on August 9, 1858, a son of Andrew Jackson and Mary Elizabeth (Robinson) Barkis, his paternal grandmother being a descendant of Alexander Campbell of West Virginia, dating back to Colonial days. Henry Bruce Barkis is the eldest in a family of four children, the others being Ida May, now Mrs. Churchill; Emmett L., residing at San Francisco; and Fred Ira, deceased. The father lived to be seventy-eight years old, and the mother passed away in 1898.

Henry Bruce Barkis as a boy received but little schooling, and was only thirteen years old when he began earning his own way, working first as a waiter in the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad Company's restaurant at North Vernon, Ind., where he remained for three years. He then went to Meade County, Ky., where he hauled rock from a quarry to build a mill race for a flour mill; and later he drove a yoke of oxen and broke up 100 acres of land. His father removing to New Albany, Ind., Henry Bruce went along and worked at odd jobs until he decided to become a millwright. Going to Louisville, Ky., he was apprenticed to W. T. Pine, mill constructor. Applying himself to his task, he soon became proficient in his work, and from an apprentice earning four dollars a week he became foreman over the men and received three dollars per day; and later he became general superintendent for Mr. Pine in mill construction work, and remained with him for eight years, building flour mills in Kentucky, Tennessee, and southern Indiana.

Mr. Barkis' first marriage occurred on March 2, 1882, at Greenville, Ky., and united him with Miss Fanny Love, a daughter of Col. S. P. and Jane (McConnel) Love. Mr. and Mrs. Barkis were the parents of one infant daughter, who passed away at the age of six weeks, a short time after the death of the mother. The mother and child were both buried at Greenville, Ky.

During March of 1885, Mr. Barkis, in company with a number of his friends, attended the inauguration of President Cleveland, and upon his return to his Kentucky home, was greatly disappointed and dissatisfied with the East and the Middle West; so he turned his face toward the far West and California. Arriving in San Francisco, he secured employment with Wagner & O'Brien as a journeyman in mill-building, which occupied him for three months, after which he began the rebuilding of the Del Monte mills for Thomas Parsons, which he completed in 1885. Then he went to Stockton and began work for the Sperry Company as miller, and was with them for twelve years. He next went to Knights Ferry and helped to rebuild the flour mill for Charlie Tulloch, which required one year to complete. He spent a few months in South Vallejo as miller for the McNear Company; and from 1899 to 1904 he was superintendent and outside man for the Wagner Manufacturing Company, after which he withdrew from the company and engaged in the millwright business for himself. During the great fire and earthquake in 1906 he sustained considerable losses, but soon had his plant rebuilt and in working order. He overhauled the Long Syrup and Refinery Company's plant, and then as a millwright installed machinery in printing plants, elevators, etc. When his lease ran out in San Francisco, he traveled throughout the state, building mills and installing machinery, his last job being for the Colusa Milling Company in 1912. In 1910, Mr. Barkis brought his family to Lodi and established his home on his ranch, known as the Tokay Home Ranch, located about one mile east of Lodi. The thirty acres which he purchased was a stubble-field, which he developed into a vineyard and family orchard. Later he sold five acres of this tract, and then the traction line cut through his ranch, so that it now contains about twenty-three acres. Besides building a house and ranch buildings, he has installed two irrigation plants, both equipped with five-inch pumps, one having a ten-horsepower motor and the other a twelve-horsepower motor. Mr. Barkis has suffered many reverses in business, but his indomitable energy and optimism won out and he is now enjoying the reward of hard work and patient application to business. He has recently refused an offer of $50,000 for his fine vineyard and home place.

The second marriage of Mr. Barkis occurred on November 18, 1888, at San Francisco, uniting him with Miss Mary G. Kelly, a native of County Donegal, Ireland, and they are the parents of three children: Alilia May, now Mrs. Kavanagh, of San Francisco; Fred Ira; and Henry Bruce, Jr. In national politics, Mr. Barkis is a Democrat; and he has served on the Victor election board for the last ten years. He is thoroughly progressive in his political views as well as in his business affairs. Fraternally, he is a Mason, having joined that order in 1887 while residing in Stockton; he is also a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge, No. 11, of Stockton.

He has built a packing-house on his own ranch on the Valley Springs branch of the Southern Pacific Railway, which runs along the southern border of his place. Here he packs his own products, under the now justly famous "Big-Boy" label. His brand of Big-Boy Flame Tokay table-grapes, grown and packed by himself, are unequaled in quality and command the highest prices in the markets of the East. Public-spirited and generous to a fault, Mr. Barkis helps along every worthy cause and dispenses a whole-hearted hospitality.

HARRY H. LADD.—Horticultural Commissioner Harry H. Ladd has rendered signal service to San Joaquin County's diversified domain, where hardly an acre can be found not suitable for profitable culture. As state quarantine guardian he has kept parasites from entering, and as horticultural commissioner his skill serves to stimulate crop production. Born in Ottumwa, Wappello County, Iowa, July 15, 1875, Mr. Ladd came West to Vacaville, Solano County, with his father; and there, on his father's fruit ranch, developed that authoritative knowledge of plant life that has made him a quoted expert. At the age of twelve he learned to know fruit, picking it when he had to stand on boxes to reach the lower limbs. He became thoroughly acquainted with every department, watching the cultivation, drying, picking, packing, orchard processes and shipping of the fruit. For four years thereafter he was foreman of a fruit ranch near Vacaville, owned by New Yorkers, and conducted many interesting and valuable experiments.

In 1900 Mr. Ladd located in Stockton, his first employment there being with the William Wills wholesale and retail fruit interests. About that time, in a small way at first, began the horticultural commissioner's work in San Joaquin County, the three commissioners serving without pay, yet doing much to put forward the county's increasing horticultural activities. He was a member, and ever since has been identified with this bulwark of California's prosperity. Along in 1908 the law was changed, and under state examination a state official was assigned to San Joaquin County. William Garden was the first commissioner. Mr. Ladd served as chief inspector; and in 1914, on Mr. Garden's death, he was named by the San Joaquin County supervisors as commissioner, which position he occupies today. He has ten men under his jurisdiction.

Mr. Ladd is a firm believer in and advocate of the profuse use of fertilizer in orchards to keep up the standard of the trees. His theory is, that if the trees are strong and sturdy, attacks from disease and parasites will be far less menacing. In recent years San Joaquin County has made notable strides horticulturally, especially in the production of cherries. While all kinds of fruit are grown abundantly, the county has won a world-wide reputation for Tokay grapes. Thousands of acres of this famed variety are under cultivation here. Mr. Ladd believes that only a beginning has been made, and that the future will dwarf the past. The irrigation systems have grown rapidly; and with practically no waste and useless acreage in the county, no limit can be set. As commissioner, Mr. Ladd has rigidly maintained packing standards which are highly regarded in the East.

Few persons realize how, as state quarantine guardian, he has to maintain an endless fight against the importation of dreaded pests and parasites, whether through shipments by mail, parcel post, and express, or otherwise, from other states and from abroad, innocently or maliciously. Even livestock is inspected to guard against the introduction of parasites. Mr. Ladd's administration has saved millions to fruit growers, and his counsel has been freely at the disposal of any seeker, which accounts for his unquestioned popularity. Since irrigation has started in south San Joaquin County, this section has entered a new era, in which growers directly and indirectly share the wealth and stimulate the prosperity of the entire district. In his fraternal associations, Mr. Ladd maintains membership in Morning Star Lodge of Masons, at Stockton.

GEORGE MARION MARKHAM.—A successful business man and one of the leading citizens of Ripon, San Joaquin County, is George Marion Markham, who for the past thirty-eight years has been a resident of this thriving town. He was born in the rural district near Dycusburg, Ky., a son of George Washington and Nancy (Kelly) Markham, of English and Irish descent, but natives of old Virginia, both now deceased. George Marion Markham had little opportunity for an education, and at the age of thirteen began to make his own way, selecting farming as his vocation, which he followed until he was twenty-two years old. His half brother, Prof. J. W. Wells, had come from Dycusburg, Ky., to Ripon, where he was engaged to teach in the public school. He was accompanied by his half-sister, Helen Markham, who now resides in Ripon. J. W. Wells was a Baptist minister as well as a school teacher. Mary E. Markham, sister of Helen, arrived in Ripon on May 10, 1883; their younger brother, George Marion Markham, joined them in 1884.

Arriving at Ripon Mr. Markham found employment on the William H. Crow ranch in the harvest field, and in the warehouse in Ripon, which occupied him for three years. At that time, the town of Ripon consisted of a blacksmith shop, a small schoolhouse, and two saloons. There was no bridge across the Stanislaus River, Murphys Ferry being used until 1887, when the county bridge was built. Mr. Markham was employed as a ranch hand on farms throughout the county until 1901. With his sister Mary, he then started farming, Mary acting as housekeeper. They purchased their first acquisition of California real estate from their half-brother, J. W. Wells, and Mr. Markham invested in fifty acres in the Whitmore subdivision near Ceres. In 1912 they erected the Markham Hotel. On November 1 of that year it was ready for occupancy and was opened to the public. This is one of the best hostleries in San Joaquin County. The ground floor is devoted to stores, the hotel being on the second floor. Mr. Markham used one of the storerooms as a restaurant, which he operated for five years, while his sister managed the hotel, considered one of the most comfortable and sanitary houses in the city. At the same time they developed the Ceres property, which was sold in 1914 to good advantage. They are also the joint owners of the building occupied by the First National Bank, which was completed in 1921. The building where the postoffice is located, and other stores connecting, were completed in 1922. They are the owners of choice ranch property in the Ripon district, and have been active in the development of irrigation in their locality, and in the organization of the First National Bank of Ripon.

Both Mr. Markham and his sister have manifested in all their undertakings, whether in private or in public affairs, a spirit of progressiveness and enterprise which has brought them success and the confidence of all with whom they have had dealings. Mary Markham is a person of exceptional diligence and excellent business ability, and works in perfect harmony with her brother, whose judgment in regard to finance, land values, and business matters at Ripon, is regarded as being very accurate. They are very kind, and considerate of others. At the death of their half-brother's wife, they helped to bring up and put through school his three children, Ellen, Ernest and Winnie Wells, who are all married and doing well at the present time. They have also helped a great many unfortunate children, among whom was Charles Woods, an orphan boy, whom they brought up from the time he was five years old. He is now married, and resides with his family at Madera, Cal., where he is in the employ of the American Express Company. They have also reared Alvin Hensen, an orphan boy, since he was five years old. He has resided in their home for nineteen years and has received a high school education and encouragement to develop his voice and musical talents. Mary Markham is a member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the First Congregational Church in Ripon.

ADELBERT M. COWELL.—A resident of Stockton since 1886, Adelbert M. Cowell is so well informed on local conditions and affairs that he is among the most sanguine in his hopefulness for the future of Central California, and especially of Stockton and the San Joaquin Valley. He was born in Auburn, N. Y., on June 29, 1844. He is a son of Myron and Melvina (Sanders) Cowell, natives of New York, where the father was a grain merchant and stock buyer. Adelbert M. is second oldest of their six children. His opportunities for schooling were extremely meager and while still a young lad he learned the stone and brickmason and plasterer's trade; he then removed to Washington, D. C., where an older brother, Albert, resided, who was a brick contractor, and our subject worked with his brother on the construction of buildings after the close of the Civil War, during the administration of President Grant. Then going south to Richmond, Va., he found employment with the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad on construction work at Lynchburg, Va., and also on similar work for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad in West Virginia; he also did work for the U. S. Government at Memphis, Tenn. He then returned to his native city of Auburn, N. Y., and remained there for one year, when he went to Wichita, Kans., and engaged in contract brick work. During the year of 1885 he arrived in California and located in San Diego, where he did contract construction work for the San Diego Flume Company. The following year, in 1886, he arrived in Stockton, where he has since made his home. Among the more notable buildings on which he did the brick work, are the H. C. Shaw Company building; the Central Methodist Church; the John Jury building on Weber Avenue; the brickwork on all the principal buildings on Main, Market, Center, Weber Avenue and other business streets; he also constructed a number of ovens for bakeries throughout the city. His construction work has not been confined to Stockton alone, but has extended to other counties; he erected two school houses in Fresno; a schoolhouse and business block in Porterville; a paper mill and twenty houses and one hotel in Floriston, above Truckee in the high Sierras; has built furnaces and set boilers in mining towns through northern California, and was in charge of the construction work of the dam and reclamation project at Six Mile bar, near Knights Ferry. Mr. Cowell erected two modern residences of his own on North Stanislaus Street, in one of which he makes his home.

The marriage of Mr. Cowell united him with Miss Sarah Hollingsworth, a native of England, and they are the parents of ten children, nine of whom are living. An unusual condition exists in his family, a death not having occurred for fifty-two years. Their children are as follows: a daughter, Frances, died in infancy; Arthur W. is a brick contractor in Stockton; Ernest; J. Eugene and Myron are bricklayers; George is an actor; Esther is the wife of E. W. Butters of Stockton; Anna is at home; Mrs. Eva Peek resides on a ranch near Stockton; Mrs. Maude Weber resides in San Francisco. Mr. Cowell is now living retired from active business cares. He and his family are members of the Central Methodist Church and for many years Mr. Cowell served as trustee. He joined the Methodist Church at Auburn, N. Y., in 1860, and has been a member ever since; he has always taken an active part in its benevolences and has served as classleader, while Mrs. Cowell has been a member since ten years of age, and has been active in the work of the church, also as classleader, and in foreign and home mission work. She was the first woman to speak to the prisoners at the San Joaquin County jail, caring for and looking after the families of the men in jail, visiting the homes of the destitute and buying food and clothes for the needy. Mr. and Mrs. Cowell are highly esteemed in the community.

L. A. MILLS.—Prominent among the professional men of San Joaquin County is L. A. Mills, popular attorney at 710 Commercial Bank Building, Stockton, and widely known on account of his activity on behalf of the principles and aims of the Progressive Business Club, now recognized as one of the most effective organizations making for higher commercial and civic standards in the United States. He was born at Mt. Palatine, Putnam County, Ill., on March 8, 1878, and attended the public schools of his native city. He pursued courses for a couple of years at the State Normal School, and after that took a course for three years in engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Boston. He followed electrical engineering for a couple of years in Boston, and from 1904 to 1913 was in the wholesale electrical supply trade at Peoria, Ill. In 1913, he came West to San Francisco, and the following year removed to Stockton, where he had charge of the electrical department of the Sperry Flour Company. In 1915 he started the Mills Mercantile Agency, commencing in a small way by sending out cards from his home, and building up a large business, which now requires a suite of offices in the Commercial and Savings Bank Building. During this time he also studied law, and on April 1, 1919, he was admitted to the California Bar. He enjoys a lucrative law practice—the result of ability and dependability.

Mr. Mills is a director and past president of the Progressive Business Club of Stockton. This is one of the leading luncheon clubs, and is active in furthering the best interests of Stockton and vicinity. It is affiliated with the national organization. Two members from each line of business or profession are eligible to membership, and every Thursday there is a luncheon, when public speakers of repute are entertained and live topics of the day are discussed. The club aims to spread the doctrine of true Americanism, to disseminate the high principles and patriotic ideals of the United States Government, to promote interest among different local clubs in proposed legislation, to foster the spirit of fraternalism among members and between local clubs, to encourage each local Progressive Business Club to pledge its active support to all meritorious civic movements and co-operate in every way for the benefit of local conditions, and to promote and encourage the living of the Golden Rule in private, civic, social and business life.

Mr. Mills' faith in Stockton is such that he invests every dollar he can spare in Stockton real estate. He rendered valuable service on the committee appointed to secure a suitable camp-site for recreational purposes for the people of Stockton, which resulted in the selection of a beautiful site of thirty-one acres at Silver Lake, in Amador County. He also rendered valuable services to his municipality, as chairman of the City Council's Committee of thirty, in drafting the new building law pertaining to building restrictions and zoning. He is a member of the mayor's unemployment committee under Secretary Hoover, and is giving much time and attention to securing employment for those in need of it. He is very active in encouraging "Stockton First" investments. Through smart salesmanship, thousands of dollars have each year been taken out of Stockton and San Joaquin County. In order to keep the money at home for building up the home city, Mr. Mills interested himself in the organization of the Mort Investment Company, which has for its purpose the erection of business buildings in Stockton. The company was recently incorporated with a capital stock of $350,000. Mr. Mills is serving on its directorate and also as its general counsel. Its first building will be known as The Mort, which will be a two-story-and-basement reinforced concrete building, 101 by 303 feet, extending clear through the block from Stanislaus to Weber Street, between Webster and Main. Mr. Mills is the chairman of the new charter general committee composed of thirty-six members chosen from twelve local organizations; it has for its object the adoption of a new charter for the city of Stockton, embodying the managerial plan of city government. He is vice-chairman of the forum committee of the Chamber of Commerce, a member of the Merchants' Association and Advertising Club, and also a member of the executive board of the South Stockton Improvement Club. He is an able promoter of Stockton's material interests.

EUGENE MYRLE GRAHAM.—The family name of Graham is well-known throughout San Joaquin County. The paternal grandfather of Eugene M. Graham was an early settler here, and here the present efficient county clerk of San Joaquin County, Eugene D. Graham, was born and reared, as were also Eugene M. Graham of this sketch, and his two brothers, hereinafter mentioned, all prominent in Stockton's professional, political and business circles. Grandfather Robert L. Graham, who settled here in 1852, was a native of Kentucky, born of Scotch lineage, while the maternal grandparents were of German descent. Grandfather Graham left Kentucky with an emigrant train bound for California in 1852, and upon arrival located upon a ranch near Lodi. Of his four children, Eugene Douglas Graham, the father of Eugene Myrle Graham, was the youngest. He was born on his father's ranch north of Stockton in 1866, and in 1888 was married to Miss Frances E. Mann, a native of Iowa, who had accompanied her parents to California in 1869, being then a babe in arms. Eugene Douglas Graham farmed for seven years after his marriage, or until 1895, when he removed to Stockton to take up the duties of deputy county clerk under Otto Grunsky. He continued in the office for five years, when he resigned to engage in grain farming near Lodi. In 1902 he was nominated on the Republican ticket and elected county clerk of San Joaquin County. Since taking the oath of office in 1903 he has served continuously and efficiently in that office, being held in high esteem by the citizens of the county. Three sons have blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Graham: R. Ellsworth, deputy county clerk in Department 2 San Joaquin County; Lloyd L., engaged in the grocery business in Stockton; and Eugene Myrle.

Eugene Myrle Graham was born on September 13, 1896, at Stockton. His preliminary education was obtained in the grammar and high schools of his native city, and after graduating from high school, in 1915, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons in San Francisco, where he was graduated with the class of 1918. During the World War he served in the United States Navy Hospital Corps and was sent overseas on the hospital ship Mercy. After the armistice was signed he returned to his home in Stockton, where he began the practice of his profession. He has won for himself an excellent position as a representative of the dental fraternity. He is a thorough and discriminating student, and his judgment is rarely at fault in matters pertaining to his profession. Fraternally, he is a member and second vice-president of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and a member of the Delta Blue Lodge Masons. He is a member of the San Joaquin County Dental Association. A man of broad learning and culture, possessing the progressive spirit of the day, he has won an enviable place in the social and professional circles of Stockton.

EMIELIE MEYERS.—A widowed mother of a large and highly respected family, Mrs. Emielie Meyers, of Lodi, left the rigors of North Dakota to bring up her family in the delightful climate of California. Mrs. Meyers is the widow of Frederick Meyers, who passed away at their North Dakota farm home, September 27, 1904.

Frederick Meyers was born at Mensguth, Prussia, January 20, 1859. While yet a very young boy he was brought by his folks to Russia, as a result of a colonization project of German people in the Czar's dominions. He grew up in Russia in the colony of German people, and was schooled in the German language and brought up to farm work, his forebears having followed agricultural pursuits for several generations. Desiring to better his condition in the land of freedom, he emigrated to Dakota Territory, settling near what is now Madison, S. D., where on September 20, 1888, he married Miss Emielie Poelke, born at Wolinige, Russia, a daughter of Carl and Amalie Poelke, who were born and married in Germany and after their marriage went to join the German colony at Wolinige, Russia. The Poelke ancestors, in addition to being thrifty farmers, had for generations been craftsmen and carpenters and joiners; they manufactured spinning wheels and were adept in woodwork and building. Of seven children born to Mrs. Meyers' parents, only one brother and one sister besides herself are now living, namely: Mrs. Amalia Matz, of Fessenden, N. D., and Rudolph Poelke, a carpenter and builder in Los Angeles. Mrs. Meyers is the youngest of the family.

About one and a half years after their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Meyers moved to Wells County, N. D. There the young couple worked hard, prospered, and became the owners of a large wheat farm and the parents of ten children: Elliott E., who receives biographical mention elsewhere in this work; Albina L., the wife of Ed Whittleton, a farmer at Tracy; Emma, Mrs. G. D. Smith, of Lodi; Oscar, who died at Lodi in 1921, at twenty-five years of age; Rudolph, residing at home in Lodi; and Lydia E., Hildah, Minnie M. and Henry A. (twins), and Mertha E., all residing at home with their mother. Mrs. Meyers still owns the large wheat-farm of 640 acres in Wells County, N. D.

In 1906, with her family, Mrs. Meyers moved out to Lodi, Cal., and has since nobly worked to keep her family together and to bring up her children in a Christian manner, according to the best of American ideals. In this she has succeeded in the highest degree. Mrs. Meyers has built a commodious and up-to-date residence at 524 East Locust Street in the city of Lodi. Her home is a center of hospitality and of true domestic happiness. In religion, Mrs. Meyers is a Baptist; in politics, a Republican.

JAMES W. COLEY.—A man of unusual ability and great strength of character, is James W. Coley, who has closely identified himself with the best interests of San Joaquin County and more especially with the Escalon section of the county for the past fifteen years. He was born near Gate City, Va., October 9, 1872, his parents being George W. and Virginia (Agnor-Vineyard) Coley, natives of North Carolina and Virginia, respectively. There were seven children in the family, James W., the subject of this sketch, being the oldest. He received his education in the public schools and Kingsley College, a private school. When he was eighteen years old he became associated with his father in farming pursuits, raising splendid crops of buckwheat, corn, and also high-grade stock.

The marriage of Mr. Coley occurred in 1896, which united him with Miss Belle Ramey, born at Gate City, Va., and they are the parents of seven children: Roy W. enlisted in August, 1917, in Battery C. at Stockton, was assigned to the 143rd Field Artillery and trained at Camp Kearney for seven months; then transferred to the first division of the Fifth Field Artillery and was sent overseas, reaching France in July, 1918, and became a part of the A. E. F., being in four major engagements and for nine months was in the Army of Occupation at Coblenz, Germany. He received his honorable discharge in September, 1919, and immediately joined his family. He is now a merchant in Escalon; Verne died at the age of eighteen years; her twin sister, Ona, is now the wife of Oscar Franklin and they have one daughter, and they reside in Escalon; Vonley enlisted in Battery C at Stockton and was transferred to the 144th Field Artillery and sent to Camp Kearney for training. On account of being under age he was discharged; later he re-enlisted in the Coast Artillery at San Pedro and went overseas. On account of illness he was sent home, but later re-enlisted at Camp Lewis in the Coast Guards and served until the end of the war. After his discharge he remained at home for a few weeks, then enlisted in the U. S. Marines and has since been at Pearl Harbor, Philippine Islands; Clarence, Joy and Grady are the younger children.

When James W. Coley located at Escalon in 1907, the place was merely a railroad station and our subject and his brother, John A. Coley, were the first men to build a business block in the town; they also invested money in vacant property, which is now all built up. Mr. Coley has also built a number of residences and has developed two ranches in the South San Joaquin Irrigation District; after the fire in 1917 he erected a business block on Main Street and he also owns valuable real estate on Coley Avenue. He has always been a strong advocate of irrigation and has given his untiring effort to the perfecting of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District. In politics he is a staunch Republican.

Jameson, Coley

HENRY STIER.—It is seldom the privilege of a biographer to write a review of the life of a centenarian, and it is with pleasure that we record the activities of Henry Stier, a resident of Stockton for nearly sixty-five years. He took a great interest in the affairs of city, state and nation, and it was indeed interesting to converse with him on matters pertaining to the long ago. A native of Germany, he was born on October 20, 1819, fifty miles from Frankfort-on-Main, and learned the trade of shoemaker in his native land. He immigrated to America and landed in Baltimore, Md., on November 22, 1845. For ten years he was in various cities of the East, among them being Lancaster, Pa.; New York City; Cincinnati, Ohio; Nashville, Tenn.; and St. Louis, Mo.; and successfully followed his trade. In 1854 he started for California via the Nicaragua route. Landing in San Francisco during the same year, he engaged in his chosen occupation. He was a member of the famous Vigilantes. In 1857 he removed to Stockton, and in 1860 opened a shoe store on North El Dorado Street. He was occupied as a shoemaker up to about twenty years ago, when he retired from active business life. Mr. Stier well remembered seeing the first railroad engine enter the city over the Central Pacific (now the Southern Pacific) tracks in 1868.

The first marriage of Mr. Stier occurred in Germany, in 1840, and of that union was born one son, John, now deceased. Mr. Stier's second marriage occurred in 1850 in St. Louis, Mo., and united him with Miss Helena Belt, a native of Illinois, who passed away at Stockton April 1, 1904. They were the parents of three children, all living: Leroy Henry, of Fresno; Edward James, in Alaska; and Clara A., who was educated in the schools of Stockton and was graduated from the Stockton high school in 1876.

Since 1877 Clara A. Stier has been a teacher in the public schools of Stockton. She has witnessed many changes and introduced many new methods in the schools during her forty-three years of faithful and efficient service. She has been active in all educational matters, and is now teaching in the Lafayette School. For many years she was soprano in the Episcopal Church. Her mother was an excellent business woman, and the daughter has no doubt inherited much of her mother's ability. She has been successful in her various business ventures, and owns valuable real estate in Stockton and a productive forty-acre vineyard near Manteca, which she planted in 1907. She is past president of San Joaquin Parlor No. 5, N. D. G. W.

Henry Stier was always a stalwart Republican, and voted for eighteen Presidents of the United States. He cast his first vote for President Pierce in 1852, having become a naturalized American citizen in 1851; twice he voted for Abraham Lincoln; and he voted for President Harding at the last election. He was a well-informed man, kept abreast of the times, and gained a valuable store of knowledge by reading the best of literature, being especially interested in science and art; and he was a great lover of music. He was always temperate in all things, which accounted for his remarkable physical and mental activity, and his unusual longevity. He was liberal and enterprising, and was always ready to assist worthy enterprises and movements for the betterment of conditions in the community. He died March 1, 1922.

JOSEPH GIANELLI.—Prominent in the business life of Stockton for half a century, and an active participant in the upbuilding of the city, Joseph Gianelli is an outstanding example of what can be accomplished by a poor lad coming to a foreign country and achieving success through his own unaided efforts. A native of Italy, he was born near Genoa, March 23, 1853, the son of a farmer, and was reared in his native place, early in life fitting himself for a business career, buying and selling stock for an uncle, a merchant. The newer world beckoned him, however, and in 1873 he made the long trip across the ocean, landing in New York and coming direct across the continent to California, and with characteristic energy he immediately secured employment in a country store ten miles from Stockton, the neighborhood being sparsely settled in comparison with its thickly populated country district of today.

On May 5, 1875, Mr. Gianelli entered the employ of Basilio Laogier, who kept a small grocery store at the corner of Hunter and Market streets. November 14, 1876, he embarked in the grocery business for himself in partnership with his brother, the late Ben Gianelli, and they conducted a grocery store at the corner of California and Fremont streets. This partnership was later dissolved, and in 1879 Joseph Gianelli established his store at Hunter and Market streets and here the business has been continuously conducted since that date. The volume of business was small in those early days, as was his store, but he gave it his undivided attention, and soon a steady growth began, his stock being enlarged from time to time until now this store carries everything for the home and ranch. Groceries, light hardware, household goods, agricultural and farming implements are among the merchandise carried, and the establishment is headquarters for Delta ranch owners, sheep raisers and cattlemen and others of this rich section, where opportunity welcomes new homemakers and investors.

Mr. Gianelli's success was attributed largely to his capacity for detail and familiarity with every feature of the grocery business. It was said of him that he could walk through his big store where scores of clerks were employed and at a glance tell just what was necessary at the moment; he gave his directions in a quiet, friendly manner and every part of the business responded to his knowing and steady management. An active man, he was often at the store before his clerks arrived and he could be found in his office long after business hours, studying the various angles of his big business.

Mr. Gianelli's marriage united him with Miss Louisa Sanguinetti, and they were blessed with a family of seven children: Joseph, Jr.; Basilio R.; Amerigo E., the well-known realtor of Stockton; Reuben; Rudolph; Mrs. Edna Dooley and Mrs. Rachel Schofield. Two of the sons were associated in business with their father, Joseph being vice-president of the corporation, and Basilio R., president of the Stockton Merchants' Association, is the secretary and treasurer, the store being under his active management. Mr. Gianelli was a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks; for years he was a prominent figure in the Italian Benevolent Society and other Italian organizations. In earlier years Mr. Gianelli owned several ranches, but his inclinations were for business and he sold them to give all his time to his store. He was a self-made man and his prosperity was acquired solely through his own efforts. He died February 20, 1923, at his home at San Joaquin and Flora streets, mourned by a wide circle of friends and by his numerous relatives.

HERBERT J. WOOCK.—Prominent among the outstanding figures in the business circles of San Joaquin County is Herbert J. Woock, who was born on March 22, 1894, at Acton, in Los Angeles County, California, the son of Julius and Elizabeth (Nickel) Woock, natives of Germany. Julius Woock came to California about thirty-five years ago and settled in Los Angeles County, where he was married. He and his wife are now residing in Lodi, and are the parents of four children: Hattie; Walter R., a rancher near Lodi; Herbert J., of this sketch; and Eric M., secretary of the Superior Iron Works, Inc. Julius Woock is the owner of two vineyards at Lodi. He was a bee-keeper and rancher in Los Angeles County for some time, but has followed ranching and horticulture since he came to Lodi.

Herbert J. Woock received his early education in the public schools of Los Angeles County, and in 1904 came with his parents to Lodi. He was raised on his father's farm; and in time he and his brother Walter R. Woock, went into the electrical wiring, engine repairing, and pump business, starting in a little shop on their father's farm, which is located one and one-half miles southeast of Lodi. They did general pump repairing for the neighbors until they became the general sales agents for the well-known Monarch Pumps manufactured by the Monarch Foundry. These two brothers invented the elbow check-valve and the "Superior" Pump. They are now the manufacturers of the celebrated Superior centrifugal and turbine pumps, one of the leading pumps for irrigation purposes. They are also the manufacturers of the Superior line of pumps for domestic and municipal purposes. As their business expanded, the Superior Manufacturing Company was incorporated with Walter R. Woock as president and Herbert J. Woock as sales and shop manager. The name was changed to the Superior Iron Works, Inc., upon reorganization of the company, January 1, 1923, and Herbert J. Woock then became president as well as general manager. The factory, which is located at 420 North Sacramento Street, Lodi, is a fine brick and steel structure, having a frontage of 450 feet. The main building, built in 1920, is 206 by 139 feet, and the grey-iron and brass foundry building, which was added in 1922, is 50 by 80 feet. This plant is considered one of the best equipped machine shops in San Joaquin Valley.

The Superior Iron Works, Inc., is capitalized at $600,000, and its annual output is $200,000. The company's business is expanding, and they employ approximately fifty men in full season. They do general jobbing in both the foundry and the pattern-making department. Through the efficient management and co-operation of the brothers, this concern has become a thriving and successful business house. Herbert J. Woock is a member of the Lutheran Church and the Luther Walther League, of Lodi. He is also a prominent member of the Business Men's Association and the Mokelumne Club.

WILLIAM WILSON HURON.—A venerable pioneer citizen, William Wilson Huron has been a resident of San Joaquin County for almost half a century. His life work and success have been closely identified with this section of the state and the esteem of his fellow-citizens reflects the industry and ability which he has displayed in his career. He is living retired from active business life at his home, 117 Olive Street, Lodi. He was born in Boone County, Ky., September 6, 1844, a son of William Huron and his wife Lydia (Coleman) Huron. The father was a carpenter by trade and he and his wife were the parents of eight children: Elizabeth, Mrs. Farrell, deceased; Francis Marion, deceased; Maria, Mrs. Bradford, resides in Boone County, Ky.; Madison, deceased; William Wilson of this sketch; Malinda and Nancy are deceased; Thomas A. lives in California.

William Wilson Huron at the age of eighteen entered the service of his country in the Second Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry and served under Generals Morgan, Forest and Wheeler until April, 1865. After the Civil War was over he removed to Virginia and on October 1, 1868, at Jeffersonville, now Tazewell, Tazewell County, he was married to Miss Louise Thompson, a native of that place, a daughter of James and Lavisia Thompson, farmers in Virginia. Mr. Huron engaged in farming in Virginia until 1874, when he came to California by train, the journey consuming about ten days. He settled first at New Hope, where he farmed for a year, then in 1877 went to the Woodbridge section of San Joaquin County, where he purchased a quarter-section of land three miles west of the town. In 1879 he bought another quarter section and farmed the 320 acres to grain until he was obliged to give it up on account of the drought. He then took a contract to develop 160 acres to vineyard for Mr. Thompson, receiving seventy acres for doing so. On this ranch Mr. Huron built a house and lived until 1917 when he leased his vineyard. In 1920 he disposed of it, and now lives in Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Huron were the parents of one son, James, who is now deceased. Mrs. Huron passed away in 1901, and in Merced, January 3, 1914, Mr. Huron was married a second time to Mrs. Levisa (Smith) Thompson, a native of Tazewell County, Va., a daughter of James and Rebecca Smith, prosperous farmers, of old-time families of the South. Levisa Smith was first married to Jas. H. Thompson and they came to California in 1875 and in time came to own 640 acres six miles east of Galt. There Mr. Thompson passed away in 1911. They had twelve children, ten of whom grew up. Rebecca and Mrs. Bessie Thomas are both deceased; Mrs. Mary Connor lives near Wilton; Edgar H. is a rancher near Clements; Wm. of Acampo; Clarence served overseas in the World War, being stationed in England, and now resides in Stockton; Reese is a rancher near Elliott; Mrs. Josephine Chapdelaine of Woodbridge; Mrs. Florence Galt of Stockton; Walter lives in Christian Colony. After her husband's death Mrs. Thompson sold the ranch and resided in Stockton until her marriage to Mr. Huron. Mr. Huron is affiliated with the Masons and is a past master of Woodbridge Lodge and with his wife is also a member of the Eastern Star; in politics he is a Democrat.

EDWARD REYNOLDS.—Among the old-timers of San Joaquin County, Edward Reynolds occupies a prominent position and is among the oldest living pioneer citizens of California, where he arrived in 1853, and almost continuously has employed his energies for half a century in the wholesome and honorable occupation of farming near Lathrop, where he has been highly successful. He was born near Ellenboro, Grant County, Wis., December 2, 1844, a twin brother of Eldridge Reynolds, who now lives in Stockton. Edward Reynolds is the youngest son of James and Martha (Ramsey) Reynolds. His great-grandfather, in the Reynolds line, was a soldier of the Revolutionary War, and his maternal grandfather, David Ramsey, displayed equal valor in defending American interests in the War of 1812. The father, James Reynolds, was born in Fleming County, Ky., November 30, 1806, where he received a fair education, and in 1826 was married to Miss Martha Ramsey, who was in the same county, and was born February 6, 1804. In 1828 James Reynolds moved to Indiana, where they remained but a short time, then going to Illinois. In 1830 he returned to Indiana, where he engaged in farming for a year, then moved to Grant County, Wis., where three of their children were born. James Reynolds was an expert brick and stone mason and followed his trade until 1853, when he and his family became members of a party under Captain Cutler Salmon which started across the plains in April, 1853, reaching California in October of the same year. Following are excerpts from a letter written by Cutler Salmon and dated at French Camp, Cal., October 30, 1853, and addressed to James Borah, his brother-in-law in Grant County: "I landed at Hangtown on September 8. I found no difficulty in crossing the plains. We took our time for it, made every day count for itself. I have settled seven miles southeast of Stockton on the main traveled road to Sonora. I bought a farm, paid $3,000 for it, was offered $1,000 for my bargain, would not take $10,000 for it. Stockton is a shipping town, from two to four steamboats every day. I have 200 acres under fence. Our timber in the valley is oak—rather poor for fencing and building. The mountains afford any amount of the best pine and cedar. We can raise any kind of grain and vegetables that can be raised anywhere. A sample of corn grew fourteen feet to the first ear and twenty feet to the top of the stock. It grew on the T. Clark ranch. Large horses, for instance, such as I sold Ashley, are worth $1,000; oxen are worth $200 and $300 per yoke, cows $150. I got all of my horses through, even to the General—that is my colt—he stood the trip the best of everything I had. I started from the Missouri with fifty head of cattle, got through with thirty-two. I have seen the wild oats as far as the eye could see, standing just as thick as it could with thousands of Spanish cattle feeding on it. The weather here this morning is as pleasant as ever I saw in midsummer in the states. I think I shall be amply paid for my sacrifices that I made in leaving that country. I think I have got my family where they can enjoy life, though the trip across the plains is a tedious trip. We were over six months, but nothing very hard about it. We started with twenty men in the company and we stood guard every night and day from the time we left the Missouri till we got to Hangtown. Had no trouble with the Indians nor nobody else. My son, James Salmon, stopped at Hangtown, have not heard from him since. I will now tell to those who intend crossing the plains next season, if there be any, to fetch the lightest and best horses that you can get—oxen the same—cows of the very best quality. My wagon that William Runk made is worth $400. The best wagons I ever saw are made in Stockton, they carry from four to six tons and are drawn by ten mules, all valued at $5,500. As far as the mines, I know but little about them—the boys are teaming and make ten dollars per day each; they drive four horses each and receive three dollars per team per day—common labor mechanics receive from seven to ten dollars per day. We have the greatest salmon in great abundance, elk, antelope and wild fowls of all kinds. I will not advise anyone to come to this country yet. I will now close by advising you to stay in the East some little time." The location mentioned in this letter is known as Dutch Point and in the early days was a freighting station and hotel on the road between Stockton, Sonora and the Southern mines.

James Reynolds came to San Joaquin County in 1854, having stopped one year at Placerville. He settled near French Camp, acquiring lands under pre-emption and later became an extensive grain farmer with unusual success; he also became a strong advocate of irrigation, planting and developing one of the first orchards and vineyards of the valley. The Reynolds home became the headquarters for the emigrants from Grant County, Wis., for almost a quarter of a century. In 1855 the first school was organized and the first schoolhouse was built on a portion of the Reynolds home place; the first year there were fourteen pupils in attendance, coming from four to eight miles, riding horseback or in wagons, as the Spanish cattle were numerous, as well as dangerous. James Reynolds passed away July 22, 1867, survived by his widow and seven children: Eliza, Richard, David R., Rosana, James A., Eldridge and Edward, the latter two being twins.

Edward Reynolds received a good education in the district schools of San Joaquin County and grew to young manhood on his father's farm. Returning to Grant County, Wis., in the fall of 1869, he waited until the close of the spring term of school, 1870, and on April 7, 1870, married Saluda Campbell, his childhood sweetheart, who was teaching near Ellenboro, Wis. She was born October 23, 1851, the youngest daughter of William Campbell, born of Scotch parents in the North of Ireland, and Susan (Maloy) Campbell, who was born in New Brunswick. Mrs. Campbell was reared in New Brunswick and the state of Maine, and came to Grant County, Wis., with her parents, in 1848. Edward Reynolds returned with his bride to California, in April, 1870. Six days were spent in making the trip from Wisconsin to California, which sixteen years before had required six months. They are the parents of three children. Edwin M., a rancher and dairy farmer, married Bertha May Salmon, of French Camp, and resides between Manteca and Lathrop. Sydney W. married Mabel Fisher and they had one child, Eleanor Lucile; Mrs. Reynolds passed away January 20, 1910, and Mr. Reynolds was married a second time to Mrs. Byrd Birmingham, of Ripon, where he had a large general merchandise store known as the McKee & Reynolds store, and also has large farming interests in South San Joaquin County. Jessie Viola was married to William A. Ryhiner, of Lathrop, a farmer and rural delivery mail carrier, and for years treasurer of the State Mail Carriers' Union; he is a grand-nephew of Capt. C. M. Weber, founder of Stockton.

Mr. Reynolds has been identified with every movement for progress and development and has endeavored to keep to the standard set by his father along agricultural and dairy lines and success has rewarded his years of perseverance and toil. He was a pioneer mover in the establishment of the Manteca Creamery and bought the first block of stock. In politics he was a staunch Republican early in life, but later became affiliated with the Prohibition party. For twelve consecutive years he served as school trustee of the East Union school district. Since 1902 Mr. Reynolds has lived a less active life, his sons assuming the responsibility of the home place. Both Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds have been active in the temperance work of their district and have contributed both time and means toward its success. They rejoice that they have lived to see the adoption of the Eighteenth Amendment. Mrs. Reynolds has been an active and Mr. Reynolds an honorary member of the W. C. T. U. of San Joaquin County for the past thirty-five years, Mrs. Reynolds having served as president of local and county work, and as state superintendent of departmental work.

On April 7, 1920, Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at the Brethren Church at Lathrop. The following original poem from the pen of O. B. Parkinson, an old-time friend of the family, was read:

"Here's to our grand old neighbor,
 Good friend of yours and mine,
 Who has beat a goodly path
 Through the corridors of time,
 Straight on the center guide line
 Toward the pearly gates sublime,
 A path which we may travel
 And be sure to reach the goal;
 Ghosts of his good deeds shining
 O'er our heads into the soul.
 To the wife who traveled with him
 And whose feet the path have trod,
 And whose voice and hand uphold him
 On their journey on toward God,
 May the sunshine of her presence
 In the future as in the past,
 Play around them on their journey—
 Play each day until the last."

ERNEST M. McKINDLEY.—Among the well-known fruit culturists of San Joaquin County is Ernest M. McKindley, whose career in that industry has been markedly successful. He was born at Sutter Creek, Cal., January 7, 1884, a son of Josiah McKindley and his wife, Emma A. (Mattice) McKindley, natives of Missouri and Illinois, respectively. Josiah McKindley was a babe in arms when his parents crossed the plains to California in 1853. The story of his life may be found in this history.

Ernest M. McKindley went to school at the Lee district school of Sacramento County, and his earliest recollections are those of helping with the farm work on his father's farm. In 1901 his father settled on his present place, and Ernest has assisted in cultivating, planting and caring for the orchards and vineyards since his youth. In 1919 he purchased a thirty-acre ranch on the Terminous road, fifteen acres of which he set to vineyard, and further improved it, and in January of 1922 sold it at a fair profit. For the past six years he has had charge of the 300-acre stock ranch owned by his father on the Mokelumne River, but makes his home on Poplar Street in Lodi.

On Christmas Day, 1909, Mr. McKindley was married to Miss May Tenney, a native daughter of California, born in Monterey County, but educated in the schools of Acampo. She is the daughter of John and Mary Tenney and the oldest of a family of four children, the others being Jose, Edith and Lester. John Tenney was the proprietor of a hotel in Acampo, and was in that business at the time of his death in 1913. Mrs. Tenney resides at the present time in Healdsburg. Mr. and Mrs. McKindley are the parents of seven children: Mahlon, Irma, Edna, Ruth, Ray, Cecil and John. In politics Mr. McKindley is a Democrat, and fraternally he is affiliated with the Lodi Parlor, N. S. G. -W.

WILLIAM THOMAS FRANKLIN.—Among the most thorough and practical viticulturists of the Lodi section is William Thomas Franklin, who has been reared on a farm and has studied grape culture from all angles. He was born on his father's ranch six miles west of Lodi on July 25, 1864. His father, Rufus Franklin, was born in Arkansas and made his first trip to California, crossing the plains with an ox-team, in 1848; however, he returned to the East and when he came back to California in 1853 he came via the Isthmus of Panama. As a young man, he worked on ranches throughout San Joaquin County and in the early '60s took up a Government claim of 160 acres six miles west of Lodi, on which ranch our subject was born; later he acquired more land, in the same vicinity, on which he raised grain. He planted the first large vineyard of wine grapes, principally Zinfandels, in the county, consisting of eighty acres, his cuttings coming from Napa County. He was a member of the Jefferson lodge of Odd Fellows in Woodbridge. He married Miss Elvira Lynch, a native of Missouri, and they became the parents of eight children, three of whom are deceased; the five living are: Mrs. J. Burrill of Berkeley, Jessie Louis of Stockton, Amos W. on the home place, William Thomas, our subject, and Mrs. Florence E. Wood of Oakland.

When a boy, William Thomas attended the district schools of San Joaquin County and when he was ten years old learned to plow and do other kinds of farm work. After the death of his father he took charge of the home place; he planted 165 acres to Tokay grapes and in 1919 sold his interest in the home farm.

Mr. Franklin married Miss Niletta M. Thompson, a native of Kansas, and they have two children, Niletta C. and Harold W., who is married and has two children. In 1914, Mr. Franklin became outside man for the Pacific Fruit Exchange of Lodi, in which capacity he is giving most efficient service, for his years of experience and close touch with the grape industry make him invaluable. Fraternally he is a member of Woodbridge Lodge, No. 131, F. & A. M. He is an upright and honorable citizen in every sense of the word and has the good will of all with whom he has come in contact.

EDWARD M. DRAIS.—Among the notables of early San Joaquin history who have passed to their reward and after lives of conscientious, upright living and successful endeavor in material affairs have been called to the next higher realm of existence, is Edward M. Drais. Mr. Drais was a representative of the best class of men of the early fifties who streamed into the Golden State and sought fortune and home on the sunny western slope of the continent. When he died on April 6, 1918, the county lost one of its best citizens, a man of great individual worth and excellence, who had performed the tasks allotted to his years with credit, and who left behind him a family who, themselves an honor to his name, will cherish his memory and works till the peaceful end of their own human lives. He was born back in the old state of Missouri, in Platte County, February 17, 1842. His father, Madison J. Drais, a native of Virginia, during early manhood moved with his parents from Virginia to Illinois. He was employed in the butcher trade for a time at Chilli-cothe, Ill., whence he subsequently moved to Platte County, Mo., where he was married. In 1852, with his family, he emigrated across the plains, by way of Salt Lake, to California, and came directly to San Joaquin County, settling at the present site of Farmington. He was thus among the very earliest settlers of that region, and for many years was a well-known citizen and prominent rancher of that locality. At his death on October 26, 1896, San Joaquin County lost a worthy pioneer citizen, one who had passed a life of most successful effort and gained for himself the lasting regard of those around him. He was a Democrat, and was identified with the Masonic order.

Edward M. Drais was ten years old when the family migration took place from Missouri. He was able to perform a good share of the labor of that journey, and he often recalled the events connected therewith perhaps more vividly than any subsequent scenes of his life. They drove ox-teams, and from the time they left St. Joseph, Mo., until Stockton, Cal., was reached, they were three months and fifteen days on the road. From the time he arrived in this state until he had attained to man's estate he lived at Farmington. He was equipped with a fair common school education, and from his earliest years he was identified with agricultural pursuits and stock-raising. In 1864, he settled on a ranch in Stanislaus County, where he resided for more than half a century. He had a fine, commodious residence on his ranch, and the bloom of prosperity was upon his career for many years and in all departments of his work. For a number of years Mr. Drais served as a trustee of the Home Union school district in his neighborhood, and his interest in education was promoted by his regard for the welfare of his own children as well as by the public-spirited interest which he felt for the community in general. While he was not identified with any particular church denomination, he lent his aid and approval in a generous manner to all public institutions and causes for the good and advancement of his community.

On August 11, 1864, Mr. Drais married Miss Rosa Gann, a native of Missouri, and a daughter of John and Eliza Gann, both natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Drais was brought, in 1859, by her parents from Buchanan County, Mo., to San Joaquin County, Cal., the trip being made across the plains in emigrant fashion. Mrs. Drais passed away on December 31, 58 1906, and on April 6, 1918, Mr. Drais died. They were the parents of seven children, four sons and three daughters, all of whom survive them. These are: Birdinia N., wife of R. C. Gruell, farmer at Peters, Cal.; George E., executor of the Drais estate; Walter, who assists in running the home farm; Minnie P., wife of W. D. Mobley of Farmington, represented in this volume; Henry H., a farmer in the Farmington district, married Annie Alders, and now resides at Hotel Phelan in Stockton; Elizabeth E., widow of Louis Stuart, son of J. D. Stuart, well-known farmer in the Eugene section; and Madison James, who helps to operate the Drais home place.

George E. Drais was appointed executor of his father's vast estate; and he and his brothers, Walter and Madison, in partnership, have successfully conducted the large Rock Creek farm for years. All are men of fine character and sterling worth, and are worthy sons of a worthy father.

GEORGE C. LAWRY.—One of the pioneer families in the Golden State is that which finds a worthy representative in San Joaquin County in George C. Lawry. The Lawrys have ever borne their part in the upbuilding and development of this region, and have invariably been exponents of progress. Mr. Lawry was born on his father's ranch on Harney Lane, July 9, 1872, a son of Benjamin H. and Sarah (Pope) Lawry. The father was a native of North Anson, Maine, born in 1829, but was reared in Boston and there learned the machinist's trade. In 1859 he came direct to California and settled in Stockton, where he was engaged in the flour mills as engineer; later he was engineer at the Linden flour mill. He then went to Stockton and opened a machine shop and his family lived on the ranch on Harney Lane which he had purchased, first a quarter-section, and then later added another quarter-section of land, which was devoted to general farming, after the brush and timber had been cleared away. Mr. and Mrs. Lawry were the parents of four children: John M., Cora E., wife of W. J. Hunter; George C., the subject of this sketch, and Susie I., Mrs. F. W. Coblentz. The father passed away on July 5, 1883, at the age of fifty-three years and seven months. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Lawry superintended the farm in a very creditable manner, her management showing ability and resourcefulness. She passed away in May, 1908.

George C. Lawry received his education in the Live Oak district school and after finishing the eighth grade attended the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge. After finishing school he helped his mother about three years with the management of the ranch, and at the same time he leased a grain ranch of 200 acres near Lockeford and engaged in farming for three years. In 1894 he leased some bottom land on the Mokelumne River and began to raise potatoes. With his season's crop of about sixty tons of baled hay, 300 sacks of barley and 400 sacks of potatoes he went to Mokelumne Hill, hauling all this produce to the mountains with teams and opened a grain, feed and livery stable business. He also engaged in farming, leasing 300 acres in one tract and a section of land from Mrs. Leota, where, besides raising hay and grain, he started in the stock business and got his first experience in that work.

Remaining at Mokelumne Hill for seven years, Mr. Lawry then went to Valley Springs and there bought 640 acres of land and within three years added 320 acres to his holdings in that vicinity, also leasing 2,000 acres of range land, and engaged in the stock business, his average never falling below 250 head and many times going over that. During the first four years of his residence at Valley Springs he teamed and hauled provisions to the mines. Mr. Lawry also acquired 700 acres below Lodi in the tule land, which he still owns. The family resided at Valley Springs for seventeen years, then came back to Lodi and now live on a fifty-acre ranch, a portion of the old home place, deeded to him by his mother. When Mr. Lawry received it it was a stubble field; he put in nine acres in Tokay vineyard and the balance in Zinfandel grapes; he has laid three-quarters of a mile of concrete pipe for irrigation purposes and has a five-inch pump with a twenty horsepower motor. In 1921 he built a fine, new, modern bungalow on his place.

At Lockeford on December 5, 1894, Mr. Lawry was united in marriage with Miss Sarah M. Hart, daughter of Edward and Mary Jane (Ralph) Hart, both born, reared and married in England, where their first two children were born, the others being native Californians. Their names are: Arthur J., deceased; William, living near Clements; Edward lives at Elliott; Sarah M., Mrs. Lawry; Eletha A., Mrs. George Olson of Linden; Harry J., of Elliott; and Albert, of Clements. Edward Hart and his family came to California in 1871 and located on a ranch near Clements, which he purchased and on which he lived until his death, as did his wife. He was a fancier of bronze turkeys, exhibiting at nearly all the fairs held in Northern California and always taking first prize; he also shipped birds to various western states and to New Zealand and Australia. He was a highly respected citizen and at the time of his death was mourned by a wide circle of friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawry have had six children: George Melbourn worked with his father on the home place until he entered the service of his country in the World War. After receiving his discharge from the army, he helped his father that season, then located on a ranch of forty acres nearby for a year. He then managed a 280-acre ranch near Stockton, running about 1,400 head of sheep and a dairy; soon after he took his sheep to a 1,000-acre ranch in the hills, controlled by his father, and when he sold off his flocks he went to Los Angeles and engaged in the foundry business. Having a natural mechanical talent, he has succeeded in his undertakings. He married Miss Imogene Hawkins of Lodi and they have a daughter, Vallerie June. Irene Lawry married Lester Magellan of Stockton and has two children, Betty Vern and Billy; Hazel is the wife of E. H. Hawkins of Acampo and has one child, Gerald; Alma became the wife of Otto Sapp of Stockton and the mother of Robert and Lawrence Lester; Ethel and Theodore are at home with their parents.

Mr. Lawry has always been interested in the advancement and development of the educational system of San Joaquin County and was one of the organizers and was clerk of the board of trustees for the first four years of the Oak Grove district at Valley Springs. Thirty years ago he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church and in politics he is a Republican. By diligence and enterprise Mr. and Mrs. Lawry have improved their opportunities and they have become very substantial citizens.

GEORGE WIGGINTON.—A resident of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County, George Wigginton came to California in 1886. He was born in Steubenville, Ohio, on October 24, 1844, a son of George and Anna (Hottel) Wigginton, the former a native of Kentucky and the latter of Virginia. The family of Wigginton dates back to the sixteenth century. During the War of the Rebellion they were strong abolitionists and Mr. Wigginton served under General Schofield in the Army of the Potomac in Company C, of the 157th Ohio Infantry, and was stationed at Fort Delaware on the Delaware River for four months.

George Wigginton is next to the youngest of a family of ten children. He received his education in the public schools of Ohio and assisted his father with the farm work until eleven years of age, when he began to earn his own living. He went to Pittsburg, Pa., and there learned the cigar-maker's trade, which he followed in various places for fifty years, having his own business a great part of the time. Mr. Wigginton vividly recollects the grandfather of Harry Thaw—who then lived in Pittsburg near the cigar factory, where he worked as a lad of twelve—and his own boyish pranks in shooting beans and putty-balls at the old eccentric in his perambulations past the factory. He also recalls the occasion of Abraham Lincoln's first visit to Pittsburg at the beginning of the Presidential campaign in 1860, when he made a strong plea for home manufactures and the iron and steel industry, then taking up the slavery question, he made a powerful argument in favor of abolition. After hearing the address, young Wigginton ventured the prediction that the speaker's looks would probably never put him into the Presidency, but that he would go in with a smashing vote just the same.

The marriage of Mr. Wigginton to Miss Sarah H. Owen occurred at Steubenville, Ohio, on December 13, 1870. Miss Owen was born at Steubenville, a daughter of Richard and Eliza Owen, and received her education in that city. Richard Owen was a tailor by trade, who came to California in 1849 and settled in Calaveras County on the Mokelumne River, where he resided until his death. Mrs. Wigginton met a very tragic death at Lodi, August 4, 1900, at the age of forty-eight, as the result of injuries sustained in a runaway accident on the 26th day of the preceding month. Mr. and Mrs. Wigginton became the parents of two children, Lillie and Emma, who are both living at the family home on South Quinby Avenue, in Lodi—a home where true filial affection abounds. Lillie has charge of the telephone exchange at the Beckman Grocery, in Lodi; while Emma is employed in the office of the Hotel Lodi.

Lillie Wigginton married Mr. George W. Spink, who became master mechanic for the Key Route Company at Oakland. On the 15th day of November, 1903, while in the performance of his duty, he was accidentally injured while passing through the subway at Oakland. He died from the injury received, on November 17. Two children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Spinks: Aline, wife of Harold Deal of San Francisco; and George, who resides with his widowed mother at Lodi.

Emma Wigginton married David E. Otis, who became superintendent of the municipally owned and controlled incinerator at Portland, Ore. On September 14, 1913, while in consultation with Mayor Albee at the City Hall in Portland, his life came to a very abrupt end, as the result of a stroke of apoplexy. Mr. and Mrs. Otis became the parents of one child, Norman Otis, who married Miss Glory Emery of Los Angeles. Norman Otis is now with the Ford agency at Eagle Rock, a suburb of Los Angeles.

In 1886, Mr. Wigginton came to California, and first settled in Oakland, where he worked at his trade for nine and a half years for Fibush Bros. Altogether the family lived in Oakland about eighteen years. Mr. Wigginton then went to Stockton, where he worked at his trade for two years; then went to Fresno for a short time, and then to Benicia, where he remained for six months. In 1890 he located in Lodi and purchased eight acres west of town, for which he paid $115 per acre. When he sold the property he received $800 per acre for it. He then went to Portland, Ore., and worked for the City Creamery, his son-in-law, Mr. Otis, being the superintendent of the plant. He remained there for five years. In 1917 he returned to Lodi and bought his present two-acre home on Quimby Avenue, on which he built his residence, and where he has since resided. In politics, Mr. Wigginton is independent, and fraternally he is a member of the Masonic Lodge of Terre Haute, Ind., and the Ancient Order of Foresters of Oakland.

JAMES STEVEN GERARD.—In a record of those who have been prominently identified with the development and progress of modern California, it is fitting that definite consideration be granted to James Steven Gerard, for he has been a prominent representative of the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County, and has so ordered his life as to gain and retain the confidence and esteem of his fellowmen. He was born at Dutch Flat, Cal., on July 11, 1856, and was the only son of that sturdy pioneer, John H. Gerard, who married Miss Caroline C. Sterling. Both parents were natives of England. They are represented on another page in this history.

James Steven Gerard received his education at the school located at the four corners south of Woodbridge, known as the Burton Towne corners, and in 1878 was married to Miss Annie C. Penny, a native of Massachusetts, a stepdaughter of the late Capt. Thomas Chapman, who was captain of the Pacific mail steamer "San Blas" for twenty years. After marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Gerard removed to San Francisco, where he was employed by freight and transportation companies out of Stockton to San Francisco. They are the parents of six children: Caroline, Mrs. Shirkie, died in San Francisco; Leon died in San Francisco; John, deceased; Lillian, Mrs. Schleaf; Raymond; and James Steven, Jr. The last three reside on their ranches near Lodi.

Mr. Gerard was agent for the Union Transportation Company, working under James Gillis; then he was clerk under Division Superintendent W. W. Prugh of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; then spent some time working for the California Transportation Company in bay and river steamer work, and later was agent for this company at Oakland for three years. During the great San Francisco fire of 1906, Mr. Gerard lost his entire belongings, house and personal effects. Mrs. Gerard passed away a number of years ago and our subject now makes his home at Woodbridge, dividing his time among his sons and daughter on the old Gerard home place. Mr. Gerard has many warm personal friends who have been attracted to him by his many sterling traits.

JAMES STEVEN GERARD, JR.—Among the younger generation of horticulturists in the San Joaquin Valley, few names are more prominently associated with the agricultural development of the county than that of James Steven Gerard, Jr., the owner of 170 acres of orchard and vineyard one and a half miles west of Lodi on the Sacramento Highway. His fields and vineyards are indicative of his careful supervision and progressive methods, and thus he is numbered among the leading agriculturists and fruit-raisers of San Joaquin County. A native son of California, he was born in San Francisco on September 24, 1893, a son of James Steven and Annie C. (Penny) Gerard, natives of California and Boston, Mass., respectively, and a grandson of John H. and Caroline (Sterling) Gerard, natives of England, who were pioneers of San Joaquin County, and are represented elsewhere in this work.

James S. Gerard, Jr., began his education in the old Mission grammar school in San Francisco and then entered the Wilmerding School of Mechanical Arts. Then he took up the study of law at the St. Ignatius Law School and in the offices of Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck of San Francisco, but not being very much enthused over that study, gave it up. When he was seventeen years old the family returned to Lodi and settled on the old Gerard home place. Upon the death of Grandmother Gerard, our subject inherited 104 acres, a portion of the Gerard ranch. Twenty-five acres of this ranch was in vineyard and the balance has been developed into an orchard of cherries, pears and almonds. The entire ranch is piped for irrigation with concrete pipe, the water being supplied by two pumps, one a six-inch pump and the other a four-inch pump, driven by a fifteen horsepower and seven horsepower motors. He has sold thirty-four acres, retaining seventy acres.

In 1915, Mr. Gerard built a comfortable bungalow home on this ranch, and on June 4 of the same year was married to Miss Mildred Levisa Stannard, a native of Lodi, Cal., and daughter of H. B. and May (Carleton) Stannard. Her parents came to California some thirty years ago from La Crosse, Wis., where her father was a merchant. The father passed away in Lodi, but the mother still resides there. Mrs. Gerard received her education in the Lodi public schools of her native town of Lodi. They are the parents of one daughter, Janet May. Within the last year, Mr. Gerard has purchased 100 acres in the Merced irrigation district, which has been set to orchard and vineyard. Mr. Gerard is a Republican in politics, and fraternally is a member of Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, F. & A. M., of which he is a past master. He is also a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., Stockton Council Royal and Select Masters, and Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T., as well as Ben Ali Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in Sacramento; and with his wife is a member of Woodbridge Chapter, Order of Eastern Star. Mr. Gerard is past president of Lodi Parlor No. 18, N. S. G. W., and is a member of the Lions Club, Mokelumne Club of Lodi, and the Woodbridge Gun Club.

Mr. Gerard entered the service of his country, enlisting in the Navy in August of 1918, and was sent to Goat Island, where he trained as an apprentice seaman for six months. Then he was sent to Harvard Radio School, Cambridge, Mass., and attended three months. He was then stationed at the Fire Island radio station, N. Y., as an electrician's mate, radio second class, remaining there until he was returned to California and discharged at Goat Island in May, 1919. He is a member of Lodi Post No. 22, American Legion.

FRED D. BURLEIGH.—Among the progressive and enterprising men who are very optimistic and see a great future for the San Joaquin Valley is Fred D. Burleigh, manager of the Fred Hartsook studio at Stockton. He is a native of Illinois, born at Taylorville, Christian County, in 1873. His paternal ancestors are traced back to England and descended from a very old family of the nobility. George N. Burleigh, the father of Fred D., was born in Macon County, Ill., and Grandfather Burleigh served in an Illinois regiment during the Civil War.

George N. Burleigh was a photographer in Taylorville and there he married Miss Mary Murphy, who was also born near that place; later Mr. Burleigh located his studio at 111 West Side Square, Springfield, Ill., in the place adjoining 107, the location that was formerly the law office of Abraham Lincoln. George Burleigh was a successful photographer, continuing his business in the Capital City until he retired. He spent his last days in Newark, N. J., while his widow now lives at Daytona, Fla. This worthy couple had three children, of whom Fred is next to the oldest. Until the age of twelve he lived in Taylorville, where he attended school, when his parents moved to Springfield, Ill., and there in due time he was graduated from the Springfield high school. Gifted by nature with an artistic temperament he displayed from the time he was a lad much interest in his father's studio and soon after his graduation he studied photography in all of its details, learning the art under his father's preceptorship. On reaching the age of twenty-one he entered the employ of the Eastman Kodak Company of Rochester, N. Y., as traveling demonstrator over the West, his territory extending from the Gulf to the Canadian border and from Chicago to the Pacific coast. This vast territory kept him very busy, but he found it very interesting, giving him an experience that was indeed instructive and comprehensive.

In Iowa Mr. Burleigh made the acquaintance of a beautiful and accomplished lady whom he married at Fort Dodge. She was Miss Ida May Johnson, a native of Fort Dodge, who was a graduate of Highland Park University at Des Moines, Iowa, and was a cultured and refined woman. However, her health became impaired, so thinking she might be benefitted by the mild and salubrious climate of the Pacific coast he transferred his headquarters to San Francisco in 1902, from which place he traveled the entire Pacific Coast. He liked climate and conditions in this state as well as its people, so very wisely he finally concluded to make his future home in this land of sunshine and flowers. Resigning his position with the Eastman Company in 1912 he removed to Sacramento, where he accepted the position as operator and manager of Fred Hartsook's studio. Success crowned his efforts and it was his fortune to build up the business until it became the largest and most popular in the Capital City. After six years of successful endeavor he was transferred to the Stockton studio, and here his ability has been appreciated, so that the studio has been brought to the same high standard. The business place is located at 531 East Main Street, where they have a large and well furnished studio and where they accomplish the most artistic and satisfactory work. A large proportion of the portraits in this work are from photographs taken at Hartsook's studio.

Mrs. Burleigh on coming to California for a time improved in health, but in time she began to fail and although she had the best of medical attention and care she succumbed and passed on June 7, 1919, a woman much loved and mourned by her family and many friends. Their union had been blessed with one child, a lovely daughter named Effiean.

Fraternally, Mr. Burleigh is prominent in local Masonic circles. He was made a Mason in Mt. Nebo Lodge No. 76, A. F. & A. M., Carlinville, Ill. On coming to California he demitted and is now a member of Delta Lodge No. 471, F. & A. M. He is also a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., Stockton Council No. 10, and the Order of Sciots.

Mr. Burleigh is a firm believer in protection, the fundamental principle of the Republican party, hence he casts his influence and works for the good of the country under that banner. He fully appreciates the wonderful resources of California, and takes pleasure in assisting in its civic and social development.

REXFORD B. RICHMOND.—A progressive young man of superior business qualifications who has been identified with the automobile industry for the past seven years, Rexford B. Richmond has made for himself a distinct place in Stockton's business circles. Quick to discriminate and swift to grasp the opportunity for success, his selection of San Joaquin County as the scene of his operations in the automobile field has been well rewarded.

He was born in Malvern, Iowa, on May 23, 1885. His father being a harnessmaker he learned the trade with him. In 1907 the family removed to Colorado and father and son took up a homestead near Sterling, and our subject remained there four years and was engaged in farming and at the same time worked at his trade as harnessmaker. In the year of 1911 he came to California and located in Merced and was employed in the harness department of the Barcroft Hardware Company. When this company opened a branch store at Chowchilla, Mr. Richmond was sent there in charge of the new store. In 1913 he removed to Stockton and two years later established his own business, that of making automobile tops. He started in a small way at 28 South American Avenue with a capital of fifteen dollars. As his business grew and expanded he was obliged to seek larger and better quarters and removed to 228 East Miner Avenue, where he manufactures auto tops de luxe, with stationary top and disappearing curtains. Mr. Richmond has the exclusive contract for San Joaquin County for the Gillig sliding curtains, in celluloid and glass. The Richmond perfected auto top is made of extra superior materials, has overhead light, beveled glass, tonneau windshields, pockets for flowers, dust brushes, etc., and is built to give long service without becoming loose in the frame, the heavy ash sills being reinforced with metal braces. Mr. Richmond is also distributor for the Hartford tonneau windshield; he also manufactures seat covers and conducts a modern upholstery department.

The marriage of Mr. Richmond united him with Miss Ada Patmon, a native of Holyoke, Colo., and they are the parents of four children: Ruth, Charles, Evelyn and Glenn; the two youngest children are natives of California. Fraternaly Mr. Richmond is identified with Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., and the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a wide-awake booster and is a worker for good roads and harbor improvements.

FRED W. WURSTER.—A distinguished member of the banking profession in California is Fred W. Wurster, the assistant manager of the Bank of Italy of Stockton, in which city he was born on May 12, 1866. His parents were Chris and Anna M. (Follert) Wurster, both natives of Germany, and both now deceased. The father died in 1876, while the mother survived until 1903. Mr. Wurster came to California in the early '50s by way of Panama, and being a carriage painter, he followed that trade. He always took an active part in the old Volunteer Fire Department, and in time became prominent, and he was among the most popular members in the Stockton Lodge of Odd Fellows. Besides the son, the subject of our review, a daughter, Louise, also survives this marriage. On the death of her husband, Mrs. Wurster became the wife of Charles A. L. Grunsky, and to her second union was born a daughter, Anna Pauline Grunsky.

Fred Wurster had the good fortune to attend both the excellent Stockton public schools, and then, on September 17, 1883, he entered the employ of Fred Ruhl, the hardware merchant. On May 10, 1886, he became associated with the Stockton Iron Works. On October 10, 1898, however, he entered banking circles when he became a clerk in the San Joaquin Valley Bank, where he rose until he became assistant cashier; and when, on January 19, 1916, the bank became a national institution, he was made cashier of both the commercial and the savings departments. A year later, on November 27, the Bank of Italy took over the San Joaquin Valley National Bank, and then Mr. Wurster was appointed assistant manager, and this position he now holds. Thus Mr. Wurster has been associated for close to a quarter of a century with banking institutions in Stockton, and it is fitting that he should be on the executive committee of the Stockton Merchants' Association. He is also an active member of the San Joaquin County Farm Bureau, representing therein the city of Stockton center. When the San Joaquin Fair was revived in 1919, Mr. Wurster was made president for that year, and he contributed his share to making the Fair held in Oak Park a success in every way. This Fair is still held annually, and Mr. Wurster is an honorary director. In early days he was active in developing the Southern San Joaquin irrigation district, and helped to put 70,000 acres of land under water; he was then a large landowner there, and he still retains a small alfalfa ranch in that district. All his life he has had an active part in civic affairs, and he has taken especial pride in working for the best interests of the county.

On November 16, 1894, Mr. Wurster was married at Stockton to Miss Maude E. Wilson, who was born at Brewer, Penobscot County, Maine, but was reared in Stockton, where she attended the high school. Two children were born to this union. William Wilson Wurster was graduated from the University of California with the class of '19, having specialized in architecture; Helen graduated in December, 1921, at the University of California, Department of Household Science. Mr. Wurster is one of the trustees of the Congregational Church, and he is also treasurer of the congregation. He is both a member and a past president of the Stockton Parlor No. 7 of the N. S. G. W., and a member of Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F.

MRS. CHARLOTTE BABSON WHEELER CLOWES.—Among the well-known pioneers of San Joaquin County is Mrs. Charlotte Babson Wheeler Clowes, the owner of Cooper Oaks, an excellent ranch of 354 acres, 60 acres of which is in alfalfa and the intention is to plant more land to alfalfa. She is a good business manager, and since her husband's death has most creditably borne the obligations and duties laid upon her. She is a native daughter of California, having been born in Stockton, June 8, 1863, a daughter of Roscoe and Helen Mar (Babson) Wheeler, both natives of Gloucester, Mass. At the age of seventeen Roscoe Wheeler left his native state and came to California via Panama, starting in 1849, and arriving early in 1850, and here he married Miss Babson, who came hither in the fall of 1860. Mrs. Clowes is the eldest in a family of five children, the others being Helen M., deceased; Roscoe Wheeler, who resides in Berkeley, Cal.; Susannah and Charles are both deceased. Roscoe Wheeler followed the freighting business on the San Francisco Bay and San Joaquin River and at the time of his death owned a tug and several vessels for freighting. In 1872-73 the family made their home in Gloucester, Mass., and in 1875 they took up their residence in Oakland, Cal., and while residing there the father passed away at the age of seventy, the mother living until she was seventy-eight.

Charlotte B. Wheeler received her education in the Gloucester and Stockton grammar schools and the Oakland high school, from which she was graduated, and on June 11, 1889, in Fruitvale, Cal., she was married to Edward Cooper Clowes, also a native of Stockton, born June 9, 1859, a son of Benjamin S. and Mary Lester (Cooper) Clowes, natives of New York and Hempstead, Long Island, respectively. The maternal grandfather, Thomas Cooper, was a brother of Peter Cooper, the great American philanthropist. Benjamin S. Clowes was killed by an explosion in Stockton, while the mother lived to be eighty-two years old. Edward Cooper Clowes was one of a family of ten children and received his education in the Stockton grammar and high schools, then spent two years in the University of California. After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Clowes lived on the Cooper ranch on the north bank of the Calaveras River on Cooper Lane. This ranch was originally owned by J. B. L. Cooper and upon his death passed to the eastern heirs. Mr. Clowes was a nurseryman by trade and was engaged in that line while living on the Cooper place, but found that the heavy black soil of that ranch was not so suitable for his nursery business, so moved it to Woodbridge. He passed away on the home place on March 28, 1902, after which Mrs. Clowes assumed the management of the ranch, and by her able management has paid off the mortgages and now the fine ranch of 354 acres is clear of incumbrance. There were three children in the family: Helen, a graduate of the University of California, with the M. A. degree, ably assists her mother in the management of the home place; Edward Cooper died at the age of seven years; and Roscoe Wheeler is a member of the senior class of the University of California. Mrs. Clowes conducts a dairy of 150 head of stock all tuberculin tested and high-grade Holstein cows, and the milk supplies customers in Stockton, from eight to twelve men being employed in the handling of the cows and milk. On the ranch is a fine, up-to-date dairy barn, equipped with the most modern and sanitary machinery for handling milk. Mrs. Clowes is a Republican in politics and a member of the Pioneer Auxiliary Society of Stockton.

MRS. ELIZA DEMORETTA FORE.—Among the pioneer women of San Joaquin County is Mrs. Eliza Demoretta Fore, residing two miles west of Lodi on the Kelly Road, where she owns an excellent ten-acre ranch all under cultivation. She is a good business manager, and since her husband's death has most creditably borne the obligations and duties laid upon her by that event. She is a native of Cameron, Mo., a daughter of John and Catherine (Nave) Miner, both parents being natives of Kentucky, where her father plied his trade of saddlemaker and also engaged in farming pursuits; later he became a merchant. There were six children in the family, namely: Malissa, Cassa, Winfield Scott, Eliza, our subject, and Joseph. The father lived to be seventy-five years old and the mother ninety-five.

Eliza Demoretta Miner received her education in the grammar schools of Cameron, Mo., and on March 4, 1877, was married to Millard Henry Fore, also a native of Missouri, a son of Charles Fore, who was a farmer. Mr. Fore owned eighty acres in Linn County, Mo., and on this farm the young married couple lived until 1882, when they sold it and came West to Oregon, where he purchased land and resumed his farming pursuits, also leasing 250 acres. However, they resided in Oregon only one year, then removed to Woodbridge, where he made his home until his death in 1909. Seven years ago, Mrs. Fore built a house on their ten-acre vineyard property, where she now resides.

Mr. and Mrs. Fore were the parents of eight children: Charles Rucker is married and a rancher; Clarence Lester is married and has one daughter, Phyllis Lucile; Jewell Pearl, Mrs. Grimsley, has one daughter, Golden Maude; Goldie, Mrs. Guy C. Lewis, has two sons, Torrence and Roland; Millard L. resides on the home place; Claude Elmo is married and has three children, Claude Elmo, Jr., Burdette Marion, and Dorothy Lorraine; Burdette Cornell lives at home; and Noble D. resides at Stockton. Three of the sons serve their country during the World War. Millard served in England as a cook in the officers' department; Burdette served in France in Company C, 145th Machine Gun Battalion of the 40th Division; and Noble was in Company 10 A of the recruit camp at Camp Kearney.

Mrs. Fore is a Democrat in her political affiliations. She is a member of the Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion, the Women's North Side Club, and the White Apron Club of Lafayette Hall district. Mrs. Fore has favored all measures for the promotion of the social, material, intellectual and moral welfare of her community, where she has made many friends. During the forty years of her residence in San Joaquin County, she has seen many changes and has watched the development of San Joaquin County as it has emerged from pioneer conditions to become a factor in the progress and prosperity of the state.

PAUL OARD.—In the Oard Radio Laboratories, Stockton possesses an industry that is decidedly out of the ordinary. Located in a handsome plant at South and Aurora streets, this concern, specializing in the manufacture of radio apparatus of a very high quality, distributes its product across the entire United States.

Paul Oard, the founder of this concern, one of the pioneer radio men of the industry, and an inventor whose devices have contributed materially toward the progress of the radio art, was born in Salem, Ore., October 28, 1894, the son of Sherman and Edith (Pelton) Oard. In a sudden and distressing accident three years later, the father met death while with the Northern Pacific Lumber Company of Portland, leaving Mrs. Oard the breadwinner of the little family. In later years, Mrs. Oard, visiting friends in California, met and married H. R. McCoy of Stockton, now a retired Delta farmer.

Mr. Oard while still in Stockton high school, became fascinated with the possibilities of the radio art, which at this time, 1911, was emerging from the experimental stage into its present commercialized form. In 1912, passing the Government radio examination with flying colors, he entered the services of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company as a ship operator, and while with this concern for the following two years visited the major part of the globe.

In 1914, barely out of his teens, Mr. Oard resigned from the Marconi Company, and returning to Stockton, opened his first place of business. Shortly afterwards he put his first radio patent through the Patent Office. The business prospered in a modest way until the United States entered the World War, and all privately owned radio stations were closed by Government order. In view of Mr. Oard's thorough knowledge of the radio art he was appointed radio instructor by the Government and by the state of California for Stockton high school, and in this capacity took active part in the training of operators for the Government service. As a result of his untiring services, Stockton furnished a larger proportionate number of radio operators than any other city in the state of California.

With the close of hostilities and the resumption of radio activity Mr. Oard plunged actively into the manufacture of radio apparatus again. It was at this time that the Oard Radio Laboratories came into existence, with Mr. Oard's stepfather, H. R. McCoy, as the silent partner. Shortly after the organizing of the concern, possession was gained of what is now conceded to be one of the most valuable of wireless patent licenses, the famous Armstrong Regenerative circuit, which gave the Oard Radio Laboratories a commanding position in the radio world.

In 1921, George A. Turner, prominent capitalist of Stockton, and also an inventor, became interested in Mr. Oard's work, and incorporated the Portable Wireless Telephone Company for the express purpose of acting as distributors of the Oard radio apparatus. Under his able and capable direction a strong organization was launched which in a short while was distributing through the medium of several hundreds of dealers across the United States. Prominent among the radio devices is the now famous Phantom Radio Receptor, one of Mr. Oard's inventions which possesses the property of being able to receive radio messages over distances of several thousands of miles without the use of outside aerial wires or connections.

Although the bulk of business done comes from east of the Rocky Mountains, and although several flattering offers have been received relative to establishing the manufacturing plant on the Atlantic Seaboard, Mr. Oard prefers to keep the industry in Stockton. At this writing, the books of the company show that over one thousand dealers and jobbers are handling the Oard products, the concern not handling any retail trade. A national advertising policy is also followed.

The marriage of Mr. Oard united him with Miss Lucial Garrow, a daughter of Alexander Garrow, whose life history is to be found in these pages. Mr. and Mrs. Oard are the parents of one daughter, Ruth Lucial. In politics, Mr. Oard is a Republican and is a member of Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Stockton.

HENRY A. FRERICHS.—A wide-awake believer in irrigation and development, Henry A. Frerichs as president of the board of directors of the West Side Irrigation District uses his influence in creating a new era of prosperity for the enterprising city of Tracy and environs. He was born in San Francisco on August 9, 1868, and a few months later was taken by his parents, John and Magdalena (Schneider) Frerichs, to San Joaquin County, making the trip by boat to Mohr's Landing, near Bethany, then by wagon across the country to a tract of government land just south of what is now the thriving city of Tracy. Mr. and Mrs. Frerichs were venerable and honored citizens of this county, numbered among the worthy pioneers to whom the county owes a debt of gratitude for what they accomplished in reclaiming its wild lands. John Frerichs died on November 7, 1907, having been preceded by his wife, who passed away on October 14, 1907.

Henry A. Frerichs attended the Ellis district school and finished his schooling in the Willow district, which has since been incorporated in the Tracy schools. Henry A. Frerichs has always been identified in farming enterprises since he was old enough to help his father, and subsequently he has been active in perpetuating the policies of his father, who was a most successful man. At the time the first survey was made in the West Side Irrigation District, Mr. Frerichs was active in making the system cover 60,000 acres, but due to the great opposition this was cut down, so that now about 12,000 acres are benefited, which means a loss to the county of many thousands of dollars. Mr. Frerichs owns 160 acres of the original homestead settled on by his father in 1868, which has been developed into a model alfalfa ranch.

The marriage of Mr. Frerichs united him with Miss Susie C. Lingenfelter, a native of San Francisco, where she was reared and educated. They are the parents of three children: Myrtle is Mrs. Henry C. Fiske, a rancher near San Joaquin City, and they have one child; Harry J. married Miss Marion Johnson of Los Angeles, Cal., and they reside in Tracy. He served in the Ninety-first Division for ten months; then with the 316th M. P. overseas for twelve months; then he returned to the United States and was honorably discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco, in 1919; Claude J. was corporal during the late war in the 13th Division, 75th Infantry, Company L, and received his honorable discharge in January, 1919, and is now at home with his parents on the ranch. Mr. Frerichs is a charter member of the N. S. G. W. of Tracy, and his sons are also active members; he is also a member of the Woodmen of the World. Politically he is a Republican, a trustee of the West Side Union high school for many years; also serves as county deputy assessor, which position he has filled for the past six years. He gives his support to every worthy project for the betterment of his locality and is highly interested in the affairs of the local Farm Bureau.

JOHN W. FREDERICK.—A native son and life-long resident of San Joaquin County, who is also a prosperous and enterprising agriculturist is John W. Frederick, residing on his 160-acre ranch three miles west of Ripon, which he farms to wheat and barley. He was born on the place where he now resides, November 4, 1871, a son of John and Nancy (Underwood) Frederick. John Frederick was born in Indiana and later was taken to Iowa by his parents, where the family lived until 1860 when they crossed the plains with an emigrant train to California. The Frederick family located near Stockton, on the Peter Clapp ranch, where they remained for one year; later they removed to the salt grass land and range country three miles west of Ripon. At that time the land was thought to be worthless for farming. John Frederick had married in Iowa Miss Nancy Underwood, a daughter of Philip Underwood, born in Iowa, and the Underwoods accompanied the Fredericks to California in 1860. Seven children were born to this pioneer couple: Mary Ellen resides at home; Flora, Mrs. Frank Stephenson, has two daughters and one son, and are ranchers on the homestead near Ripon; Mrs. Birdana Curtis resides in Ripon; Ida, Mrs. H. A. Buchanan, resides at Folsom, and has four sons; Eliza, Mrs. John Garrison, resides in Ripon and has four daughters and four sons; John W., the subject of this sketch, and James W., resides with his wife in Modesto, where he is engaged in the real estate business and ranching.

John Frederick homesteaded 160 acres and purchased 160 acres, making 320 acres, which he farmed to grain; he also raised considerable stock on his ranch. He bought ten acres of timber land near Taylor's Ferry on the Stanislaus River, which is now owned by our subject. John Frederick served as a school trustee of San Joaquin school district until he passed away in 1885. The mother and sons managed the ranch until 1896, when our subject took full charge of it and leased other lands on which he raised large quantities of wheat and barley, besides having considerable stock. In 1900 the original house built by his father more than a half century ago, was replaced by a more commodious residence which stood for seventeen years and then was destroyed by fire; three years later Mr. Frederick built his modern residence where he and his family now reside. The mother passed away in Ripon in 1916, and John W. became administrator of the estate.

In 1920 John W. Frederick was married to Miss Kathryn Nutt, a daughter and third child of thirteen children born to Henry D. and Sarah M. (Hull) Nutt, natives of Indiana and Iowa, respectively. Mr. Frederick purchased the interests of all his brothers and sisters and owns the original 160 acres, as well as the ten acres of timber land on the Stanislaus River, which his father purchased so many years ago for the permanent home of the Frederick family.

The irrigation activities of San Joaquin County has always found an ardent supporter in Mr. Frederick and his influence for the advancement of his particular locality has been given enthusiastically.

CHARLES EDMUND WILLIAMS.—An enterprising business man of Stockton, whose foresight and optimism have been of real service in the development of the important commercial interests of the Gateway City, is Charles Edmund Williams, one of the founders of the firm of Williams & Moore, pioneer shippers of wool, hides and tallow, and manufacturers of soap, of 148 South Aurora Street. Mr. Williams was born at Batesville, Independence County, Ark., the son of Robert and Eliza (Ridgway) Williams, the former a native of Virginia, the latter of Pennsylvania, and both now deceased. His father passed away while Charles was a baby; and his mother, with five children, in 1853, crossed the plains in an ox-team to California, locating at Stockton.

Here Charles attended the local schools, and in this city he secured his first employment, in a grocery store. Then, in partnership with B. W. Owens and and E. Moore he engaged in raising sheep in Central Nevada, and also in San Joaquin Valley, and in this enterprise he continued for ten years. Early in the '80s he formed, with Edward Moore, the partnership of Williams & Moore, and they began to deal in wool, hides and tallow, becoming one of the pioneer concerns in that field. Mr. Moore died about thirty years ago. In recent years the firm has added to their plant a soap manufacturing department, under the name of the Stockton Soap Works. The plant is located in the industrial district, on South Aurora Street, and there are manufactured the well-known and popular soap products: "Stocktonia," a laundry soap, and "Angora," a borax favorite used for toilet and bath, and also a general line of laundry soaps for the trade. In partnership with James Jamieson, Mr. Williams has become one of the owners of a muscat vineyard of 130 acres south of Fresno, which was developed from raw land and is now in full bearing. Mr. Williams is a member of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers, and is a director of the Harris Harvester Works of Stockton.

As one of the oldest living pioneers in the county, Mr. Williams has witnessed many of the most important and interesting changes that have taken place in this part of the Golden State. He was a member of the Hook and Ladder Company of the Stockton Volunteer Fire Department in early days, and served one term in the city council as a representative from the Second ward and two terms as councilman-at-large. He was elected mayor of Stockton in 1903, and served until 1905, one of the best mayors the city ever had. He is a staunch Republican.

At Stockton, in 1881, Mr. Williams was married to Miss Lillian Wood, a native of New Jersey; and they have been blessed with three children. Maude is the eldest; Hazel, the second-born, has become Mrs. George M. Burton, of Stockton, and the mother of one daughter, Catherine; and the youngest is Byna. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are communicants of the Central Methodist Church. Mr. Williams has been through all the chairs of Charity Lodge, I. O. O. F., and is a member of the Independent Order of Foresters.

JOHN W. HIEB.—An enterprising contractor of Lodi whose thorough training and dependable workmanship have brought him a high degree of success in his chosen line of work is John W. Hieb, who for a quarter of a century has been numbered among the residents of the Lodi district. A native of South Dakota, born August 2, 1880, he was reared at Menno, his native place. His father, William Hieb, who was born near Odessa, Southern Russia, came to Lodi from South Dakota in 1897 and bought thirty acres of raw land one mile south of Lodi and planted a vineyard, one of the first to be operated on a commercial scale in the district. After living there a number of years and bringing the place to a high state of development, he disposed of it and now makes his home in Lodi, retired from active business. He was the founder of the Salem Reformed Church and has always been active in its affairs. The following are his eight children: William W., a rancher; John W., the subject of this review; Jacob W. is a partner in the firm of Hieb Bros., contractors; Mrs. Magdelene Kost; Mrs. Katie Youpp; Mrs. Alida Bender; Albina, deceased, and Mrs. Pauline Walder.

John W. Hieb was educated in the public school in Menno, S. D., and at the same time from a boy assisted his father on the old homestead. He was a natural mechanic and worked as a helper to a carpenter, building residences, barns and churches. He was seventeen years of age when he arrived in Lodi and he assisted his father in the planting of the vineyard and in its care. He then took up carpenter work, and first was with a bridge construction crew for the Southern Pacific Railroad, and later he received a careful training in his trade with O. Corbin, one of the pioneer builders of Lodi, being five years in his employ, and holding the position of foreman for the three last years of that period. During this time he superintended the construction of a number of fine residences, among them the homes of Frank Beckman, Mrs. Anna Hudson and Dr. Tennyson. Mr. Hieb then entered business with August Marklein, and during their partnership they built the grammar school at Franklin, St. John's Episcopal Church at Lodi, and practically all the business section of Victor, in addition to the Evangelical Church there and many of the homes. Later this firm was dissolved and Mr. Hieb took in his brother, Jacob W. Hieb, as a partner.

Mr. Hieb has been connected with the contracting of over 500 residences and business blocks in and around Lodi, and for some of the homes he has drawn his own plans and specifications. Among his work we note the following: Seven churches in Lodi, the Congregational Church near Victor, the Farmers & Merchants Bank and the White Front Store at Lodi, the residences of H. J. Cooper, Dr. A. C. Boehmer, G. G. Hieb, J. G. Hieb, Max Elbert, all of Lodi, and a $24,000 residence for Louis Chapdelain one mile west of Lodi, one of the best in the county. He just completed the Evangelical Church, Lodi, at a cost of $25,000, and the William Spooner residence, costing $12,000. He has had an average of twenty-one men in his employ in recent years and his reputation for fine work has brought him all the business he can handle. He owns a number of lots in Lodi on which he expects to build residences later. He is also a stockholder in the Farmers & Merchants Bank.

In 1900 Mr. Hieb was married to Miss Caroline Hieb, a native of Menno, S. D. She is the daughter of Gottlieb and Magdelene (Mettler) Hieb, who were also born near Odessa, Russia. They emigrated to Menno, South Dakota, where Mr. Hieb was engaged in the mercantile business for twenty-five years, until he disposed of it and located in San Joaquin County on a farm near Victor, where he engaged in viticulture until he retired to Lodi where he and his wife resided until their death. They had five children: Jacob G. resides in Oakland; Mrs. Magdalene Handel of Lodi; Mrs. Christine Ulmer of Lodi; Mrs. Caroline Hieb and Gottlieb, a resident of Oakland. Mr. and Mrs. Hieb are the parents of three children, Leon, Herbert and Bernice. Mr. Hieb and family are members of the Salem Reformed Church and he has served as trustee for several years. For the last twelve years he has done more building in Lodi and vicinity than any one engaged in the building business. He has made a study of his line and also has studied architecture, and draws the plans for residences, churches and public buildings.

John W Hieb

GEORGE ALLEN LADD.—San Joaquin County owes much to such well-organized, well-conducted business concerns as the Ladd Dairy farm in the Montezuma district in the vicinity of Stockton, whose proprietor is George Allen Ladd, a worthy representative of a pioneer family of California, dating back to 1853. He was born on the ranch where he now resides, March 25, 1875, a son of Walter Eugene and Juliette Estella (Ayers) Ladd, and is the eldest of a family of four children, the others being Walter E., Elmer A., and Juliette. His grandfather, George Samuel Ladd, was a New Englander by birth and reached California, with his brother Ira W. Ladd, also represented in this history, in 1853, and both were prominently associated with educational and commercial enterprises of the county. George Samuel Ladd married Miss Abigail Bourland, a native of Arkansas. She survives her husband, who passed away in 1902, and she resides in Stockton.

Walter Eugene Ladd, the father of our subject, was born in 1859 and in 1885 he was married to Miss Juliette Estella Ayers, a native of Lodi, San Joaquin County. Walter Eugene Ladd passed away in September, 1918, the mother still surviving.

After finishing the grammar school in the Montezuma district, George Allen Ladd attended Heald's Business College in Stockton, where he took an electrical course; later he was employed in an electrical supply establishment in Stockton where he remained for four years; he then entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad as machinist, continuing with them for a period of three years. He then accepted a position with the Southern Sierra Power Company as operator, but three months later on receiving word of his father's death, he returned to Stockton and assumed control of the ranch interests left by his father, continuing to operate the dairy established by his father a number of years ago and steadily improving his herd of dairy cattle; he is much interested in the new and progressive methods of handling his dairy and gives his personal attention to all the details of the business.

The marriage of Mr. Ladd united him with Miss Nellie M. Whitmore, a native of Ceres, the daughter of Col. Richard Keith and Annie (Pagels) Whitmore, pioneer ranchers of Stanislaus County. Mrs. Ladd may well be proud of the civic and the military record of her father, Col. R. K. Whitmore. He came from New Jersey to California about 1875, and while still a young man undertook the farming of grain at Stockton. After a while he moved to Ceres, and quite naturally assumed leadership in the early days of that town. He married Miss Annie Pagels, and she, too, has her share of the credit as a founder of the promising town. More and more he became active in public affairs, and for twenty-five years he served in the California National Guards. He was for a while major of infantry, and he was mustered out as colonel of the Sixth California Regiment Infantry after seeing creditable Spanish War service. In Ceres, honored by all, he passed away in 1911. Mrs. Ladd's brother, Richard Keith Whitmore, is cashier of the American Bank of Modesto. Mr. and Mrs. Ladd have one daughter, Alice W. Mr. Ladd is a Republican in matters of national politics; but when it comes to boosting Montezuma district and San Joaquin County, he is always willing to throw aside narrow partisanship if by so doing he may be able to advance any good cause.

MRS. MARY A. LEWIS.—Among the honored pioneers of San Joaquin County is Mrs. Mary A. (McHugh) Lewis, who resides on a portion of the old McHugh ranch on the Upper Sacramento Road eight miles from Stockton. This ranch contains 136 acres of rich and fertile land, which is devoted to fruit and grain raising. She was born at Columbia, Cal., September 22, 1865, a daughter of Patrick and Elizabeth (O'Connor) McHugh, natives of Ireland. Both parents crossed the plains to California in early days and were married in San Francisco and went to Columbia, Tuolumne County, where Patrick McHugh engaged in mining. Mr. McHugh worked nine years for one man in St. Louis, Mo., at seven dollars per month and even then saved money so he could defray his expenses to California. He had three brothers, Timothy, John Bernard and Mike, who also came to California. The two former came to California with Patrick, mined together for a while and then began farming in San Joaquin County in 1868 and owned about 1,100 acres of land together. All have now passed away; Patrick McHugh died in February, 1893, his widow surviving him until April, 1906. Six children were born to this pioneer couple: Anna died at the age of one year; Katherine, Mrs. Pat Dolan, resides near the old home; John died at the age of forty-eight years; Mary A. is the subject of this sketch; Elizabeth, Mrs. Odor, resides on part of the old McHugh ranch; and Arthur J. makes his home with Mrs. Lewis.

Mary A. McHugh received her education in the Calaveras district school and remained at home until her marriage, which occurred in Stockton on May 11, 1890, and united her with Jefferson D. Lewis, a son of Peter and Susan Lewis, natives of Virginia and Nebraska, respectively. Jefferson Lewis was a lad of twelve years when his parents settled in San Joaquin County. He worked for the Holt brothers for many years during harvest time, then he rented an eighty-acre ranch in the Waterloo district which he farmed to grain. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis were the parents of two children: Arthur J., a farmer near the old home, has three children; Jefferson assists his mother and has one child. Mrs. Lewis reared a cousin, Katherine O'Connor, from nine months old, who has been brought up as her own. Mr. Lewis passed away in September, 1893. Mrs. Lewis inherited 136 acres of the old McHugh ranch on which she built a fine residence in 1917, and where she now makes her home. Twenty acres is devoted to orchard, ten acres to vineyard, and the balance is hay and grain land; the ranch is irrigated by means of a pumping plant. Mrs. Lewis is a Republican in politics and a member of the Catholic Church, and is numbered among the representative and well-known pioneer women of her locality, enjoying the good will and esteem of her many friends.

W. D. MOBLEY.—A representative and successful wheat grower of San Joaquin County is W. D. Mobley, who is one of the best authorities on wheat and its production in the state of California. His home ranch is situated three miles southwest of Farmington, and consists of 330 acres of rich grain land. His business career has been crowned with a gratifying measure of success that has been honorably won, and because of his prominent position in the agricultural community he certainly deserves mention in this volume. He was born in Vernon County, Mo., February 19, 1873, a son of Thomas R. and Mary (Reese) Mobley, both natives of Kentucky. Thomas R. Mobley, with his wife and six children, left Missouri for California in 1875, arriving in the Golden State the same year. They settled near Milton, where the mother still resides, the father having passed away in 1900. W. D. Mobley received a good education in the schools of Calaveras County, supplementing with a year's course in the Linden high school.

Mr. Mobley has been closely associated with his brother, William P. Mobley, a prominent mining man of Calaveras County, where he has operated for the past fifteen years, and the two brothers are still active in locating and proving up on mines in California. For ten years Mr. Mobley managed the large Mobley home ranch, consisting of 1,400 acres, on which he raised large quantities of grain and stock. Mr. Mobley has always used the most modern equipment for plowing, planting and harvesting his great crops of wheat; and since he transferred his activities to his present ranch, he has employed the same up-to-date methods of farming.

In 1911 at Farmington, Cal., Mr. Mobley was united in marriage with Miss Minnie P. Drais, a daughter of Edward M. and Rosa (Grann) Drais, prominent pioneers of San Joaquin and Stanislaus counties. Edward M. Drais was a man of influence in his locality and for a number of years served as trustee of the Home Union school district, Stanislaus County, in his neighborhood, and gave his aid in a most generous manner to all public institutions and causes for the manifest good and advancement of the community. Both are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Mobley are the parents of one son, Willie A.

Five years ago, Mr. Mobley acquired his present ranch of 330 acres, which is a portion of the original homestead of James Dunham. Mr. Mobley is an active member of the local Farm Bureau; he is president of the Farmington Mutual Telephone & Telegraph Association, and in 1922 served as chairman of the grain committee of the San Joaquin County Fair Association. Mr. Mobley has exhibited and received blue ribbons at the county fairs for his fine quality of wheat and oats. As a public-spirited citizen, a friend of progress and promoter of general advancement he has long enjoyed the thorough confidence of his fellow citizens.

WILLIAM H. KNOWLES.—A man of exceptional ability and experience in the wool industry of California, William H. Knowles is the capable general manager of the Tryon Wool Scouring Plant. This plant consists of a warehouse and scouring department and covers two and a half city blocks. Here fully sixty per cent of the wool clippings of California, and many more thousands of pounds from British Columbia, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, the Hawaiian Islands and Old Mexico, are gathered annually; these are scoured, cleaned, graded and prepared for the markets of the world. William H. Knowles was born in Wansted, England, December 17, 1877, a son of William and Charlotte Ann (Craven) Knowles, both natives of England. When our subject was one year old he was brought by his parents to the United States, where they first settled in Connecticut; later they removed to Massachusetts where the father has since been identified with the woolen industry and is now one of the officers of the American Woolen Company at Lawrence, Mass. Nine children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Knowles, of whom William H. is the eldest; Albert, Charlotte, Lowrie, Edith, George, John, Clara and Annie are the others. The mother died about fourteen years ago at the family home at North Andover, Mass.

The education of William H. Knowles was obtained in the schools of Lowell and Lawrence, Mass. While still a young lad he began to learn the wool industry, running errands during vacation time for the Butler-Robinson Woolen Mills, and at fifteen years of age he entered their employ as a regular worker; during the years of his service with this company he went from one department to another, becoming proficient in all branches of the industry. He then entered the Washington Mills in Lawrence and was put in charge of the spinning and winding department; later he was in the wool department of this concern. He then took charge of the wool sorting department for M. T. Stevens & Sons of North Andover, Mass., where he remained for nine years. In 1907 he came to California and soon found a position with the Century Mercantile Company of Berkeley as outside man, buying the wool for this firm, covering his territory with a horse and buggy. When he removed to Stockton he became wool grader and buyer for Mr. Tryon. When the Stockton Woolen Mills failed, Mr. Tryon in connection with Mr. Knowles and others took over the business and Mr. Knowles became secretary and general manager; one year later Mr. Tryon purchased the interests of the other members of the company and Mr. Knowles was retained as general manager.

On December 21, 1910, at Sacramento, Cal., Mr. Knowles was united in marriage with Miss Veda Belle Hull, a native of Kansas, a daughter of O. H. and Nancy M. Hull. O. H. Hull was the senior member of the firm of Hull & Stewart, dealers in pianos and school supplies in Stockton; previously he engaged in the nursery business in San Joaquin County; later he removed to Oakland and engaged in the real estate business until his death. Mrs. Knowles is the third oldest in a family of five children, the others being Herschel, Merrill, Sophronia and Leland. Mr. Knowles is a Republican in politics and fraternally he is a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of Morning Star Lodge, F. & A. M., and the Sciots of Stockton, and Aahmes Shrine in Oakland, and with his wife is a member of the Eastern Star Lodge of Stockton; he is also a member of Loyalty Court of Amaranth, the Stockton Rotary Club, the Elks, and the Stockton Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. H. Knowles.

Mrs. William H. Knowles.

MRS. VEDA BELLE HULL KNOWLES.—

Prominent among the distinguished women of Northern California is Mrs. Veda Belle Hull Knowles, the gifted wife of William H. Knowles, of Stockton, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. With her husband, she is intimately associated with the business progress and social life of Stockton, and her social and patriotic activities have given her a wide acquaintance and celebrity.

Mrs. Knowles was born at Smith Center, Kans., and came with her parents to Stockton when six years old. Her father, Octavius H. Hull, was born at Grafton, W. Va., and grew up in Virginia until his seventeenth year, when he enlisted in Company H, of the 12th West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and served throughout the war, receiving after eighteen months of service an honorable discharge. In May, 1883, he came to California and settled at Stockton and became a popular dealer in pianos and organs, and also in school, hall and church furnishing supplies. He was married at New Sharon, Iowa, to Miss Nancy M. Baldwin and died at Oakland, in 1914, age sixty-nine. Mrs. Hull is living at 6027 Telegraph Avenue, Oakland, which for many years has been the family home. There were five children in their family: Herschel is blind, but is nevertheless very successful as the proprietor of an extensive express and storage business at Berkeley; he is a graduate of the Deaf and Dumb Institute in that city. The others are Merrill, a carpenter and builder at Madera in Madera County; Veda Belle, of this review; Sophronia, the wife of William H. O. Smith, paint contractor at Oakland; and Leland, who met a tragic death on December 5, 1921, from injuries received when he was kicked by a horse while at work on his extensive grain farm at Farmington. He served for four years in the United States Navy, where his patriotism, courage, manliness, and good fellowship endeared him to all.

Veda Belle Hull grew up in Stockton, where she attended the Stockton high school with the class of 1904. She was athletic and a great lover of the out-of-doors, and won laurels locally as an equestrienne. At the same time, she was an apt student of the voice and piano, and excelled in elocution. From childhood she took important parts in dramas, concerts and public entertainments, and became known outside San Joaquin County. She has never relinquished interest in her art, and is at present pursuing her studies in elocution under Miss Ella M. Henderson of Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Knowles reside at their beautiful home at 401 West Poplar Street, Stockton, which has long been a center of the most enjoyable social functions. She is a member of the Stockton Chapter of the Eastern Star, of which she is associate matron; and a member of Loyalty Court, Order of Amaranth, of Stockton, of which she is the standard-bearer. She is also a member and past president of Rawlins Woman's Relief Corps. For two years she served as vice-president of the Woman's Relief Corps Home of California, and was on its board of directors for three years, and she was department senior vice-president of the California and Nevada Woman's Relief Corps during 1917 and 1918. She organized and mothered the Mary B. Hancock Tent of the Daughters of Veterans of the Civil War, National Alliance, and was unanimously elected the first president. In national political affairs, she works as a Republican, her counsel being sought by candidates and party heads.

During the late World War, which called for such heroic endeavor on the part of American women, Mrs. Knowles was very active in Red Cross work. She held the exalted position of General of the Army and Director of the Red Cross, of San Joaquin Chapter, San Joaquin County, and is at the present time one of its directors. Gifted with a beautiful voice, she became a member of the M. E. Church choir, at Stockton, as a high school girl, and later for many years was its soloist and leading soprano. Her interest in social and public affairs has never waned. She is prominent as a member of the Historical Association of San Joaquin County, and is an active worker and a prime favorite in the Philomathean Club of Stockton, a Federated state club of California. For three years she was a member of the Associated Charities. Her work in appearing before the California Legislature and the State Board of Control in collaboration with Mrs. Geraldine Frisbie, president, Mrs. Farwell, secretary, and other active workers for the Woman's Relief Corps Home of California, has borne very good fruit. The corps may now buy its fine home property at Santa Clara, known formerly as the Dr. Osborne Sanitarium, where relief and the best of care is given to daughters and relatives of soldiers of the Civil and other wars. Mrs. Knowles has visited Washington, D. C., in furtherance of the Woman's Relief Corps interests; she has crossed the continent six times, and has attended national conventions at Portland, Ore., Columbus, O., Indianapolis, Ind., Boston, and Los Angeles. In 1920 at Washington, D. C., she had the honor of attending the President's reception given to the diplomatic corps and workers of the various countries allied in the World War. Gracious, kind and generous, she is truly a leader in political, fraternal and social circles.

EVERETT H. WOLF.—A progressive native son, whose advancement has been steady, is Everett H. Wolf, the capable president and general manager of the Stockton Paint Company, located at No. 547 East Main Street. He was born in Stockton, Cal., on August 24, 1888, a son of William and Hermina (Rothenbush) Wolf, both natives of California, and numbered with the pioneers of San Joaquin County. His father was in the grocery business in early days with the Hedges Buck Company; later he was superintendent of streets at Stockton; after retiring he lived in this city until he passed away, being survived by his widow. The only child was Everett H., who attended school at the Weber, Fremont and El Dorado grammar schools and was graduated from the Stockton high school with the class of 1906. As a boy he worked in the Stockton Paint Company store and after finishing his education entered their employ as a regular. He learned the business thoroughly and worked his way up until he became president and general manager, a position he has filled since 1912. The Stockton Paint Company was established some twenty-five years ago, carrying a general line of paints and doing contract painting. In 1904 they started the manufacture of "Old Mission" paint, which has become very popular throughout the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys, Southern Oregon and Nevada, the territory covered by their traveling men. The present members of the corporation have owned the business since 1912. Besides the manufacture and selling of their own products, they carry on a retail business and jobbing lines of Eastern goods.

The marriage of Mr. Wolf, at San Francisco, united him with Miss Evelyn Watts, a native of Modesto, Stanislaus County, Cal., and they are the parents of two children, Marjorie Jane and Mary Evelyn. In fraternal circles Mr. Wolf is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, Elks; of the Anteros Club, the Rotary Club of Stockton, the Chamber of Commerce, and Merchants' Association.

JOHN OWEN McKEANY.—Concentrating his activities upon his business affairs, John Owen McKeany has carried forward to successful completion whatever he has undertaken, and today his influence for good is felt in his locality. He was born at Morristown, N. J. on November 5, 1871, a son of Ed. McKeany, a native of Ireland who came to America in 1862. In 1882, the family migrated to California, settling in Livermore, Alameda County, where the father founded and conducted the McKeany nurseries and engaged in landscape gardening, which he followed for many years. Disposing of his nursery business, Mr. McKeany removed to Oakland, Cal., living in retirement fifteen years prior to his death in 1917.

Coming to California when only nine years old, the greater part of John Owen McKeany's education was obtained in the Livermore school; then for a year and a half he was occupied in learning the blacksmith's trade; later he learned the butcher's trade and for ten years followed that occupation, his retail shop being operated along successful and progressive lines. During the year of 1895, removing to Tracy, he entered the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and was soon promoted to the position of engine foreman of the yards.

The marriage of Mr. McKeany occurred in Stockton, Cal., on February 16, 1896, and united him with Miss Mary Passler Knollenburg, a daughter of Mrs. Mary P. Knollenburg, and a stepdaughter of the late Peter Knollenburg, a sturdy pioneer of San Joaquin County. Mrs. Knollenburg is now eighty-two years old and resides with her daughter in Tracy. Mr. and Mrs. McKeany are the parents of three children: Lysle married Miss Mary Golden of Mississippi and they have two children, Jacqueline and Lysle, Jr. He enlisted in the United States Navy on June 20, 1917, serving as clerk in the department of pharmacy, his service covering a period of twenty-two months. Suffering a severe breakdown he is being cared for in the U. S. Hospital at San Diego, where he is gradually regaining his health. Francis, the second son, married Miss Gladys Quinlin, and they reside in Tracy; Roy attends the University of California where he is a student in the law department; he was the first president of the high school student body at the West Side Union high school, from which institution he was graduated with the class of 1921; he was popular in all affairs of the school, especially in athletics, and is a member of the Del Rey fraternity house. For the past twenty-two years, Mr. McKeany has been a member of the Woodmen of the World, and of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen; the family reside at their home at No. 224 West Tenth Street, Tracy.

CHARLES KIMBALL BAILEY.—The pride and strength of any country, its mainstay and support, is the farmer, whose toil produces food for the masses, and without whose labors poverty and ruin would soon come to the nation. The hardy frontiersman of America had much greater tasks before him than the mere tilling of the soil; he had forests to raze, rivers to bridge, roads to make, privations and hardships innumerable to endure, yet rarely did he falter in the grand and noble work, the work which meant civilization, progress and prosperity. In the mighty work of rendering the great state of California a fitting place for mankind Charles Kimball Bailey certainly performed his share of the task, and no one was more deserving of praise than he. He passed to his reward in November, 1905, honored and beloved by all who knew him, for his life had been useful and productive of great good to his locality.

Mr. Bailey was born in Andover, Mass., June 9, 1830, a son of Samuel and Prudence (Farmer) Bailey. The father, a Massachusetts farmer, lived to be seventy-five, the mother sixty-three years old. Grandmother Bailey was over eighty years old when she died, and her brother, Jesse Trull, was eighty-five years old. Grandfather Bailey also died at an advanced age. The Bailey, Farmer and Trull families are believed to be long settled in New England. Charles K. went to school more or less until the age of twenty years, but after he reached the age of fourteen he drove a market wagon in spare hours, and when there was no school. His father was a farmer and market gardener, and the son had early opportunity to learn the business. In 1851 he went to work in a grocery store in Lowell, and in June, 1853, he came to California via the Nicaragua route. After one month in San Francisco he went to mining at Mokelumne Hill, and followed this business in that section for nearly ten years.

On January 8, 1863, at Mokelumne Hill, Mr. Bailey was married to Miss Mary E. Belknap, born near St. Louis, Mo., March 4, 1846, a daughter of James D. and Rachel (Rhoads) Belknap. James D. Belknap brought his family across the plains with ox teams and covered wagons to California in 1850, the journey occupying seven months and eight days. Arriving in San Jose, they remained there a short time, then removed to Mokelumne Hill. The mother, a native of Pennsylvania, died four years ago, aged ninety-three years, and Grandmother Barbara Rhoads lived to be 104 years old. In 1863, Mr. Bailey bought 160 acres of land in partnership with C. W. Carpenter. Mr. Carpenter was a native of Vermont, born in 1830, and came West to California in 1852, where he was associated with Mr. Bailey in mining enterprises and later in stockraising, the partnership being maintained until the death of Mr. Carpenter in 1883, aged fifty-seven. Mr. Bailey became an extensive landowner, owning at the time of his death in 1905, 5,360 acres, besides a large number of fine horses and 6,000 sheep. He was survived by his wife and five children and a sister, Mrs. Perrin, residing in Lowell, Mass., aged eighty-seven years.

The five children of Mr. and Mrs. Bailey are as follows: Nettie Orilla, the widow of James A. Louttit; Addie Mabel, Mrs. E. D. Middlekauff; Hattie Maud, wife of Dr. E. A. Arthur; Edward Franklin, and Mamie Ethel. Mr. Bailey was a member, in high standing, of the Mokelumne Hill Lodge, I. O. O. F.

Charles K Bailey

Mary E. Bailey

In 1917 Mrs. Bailey with five others left Stockton in an automobile for Detroit, Mich., making the journey in fifteen days, a marked contrast to the journey she made seventy-three years before. Mrs. Bailey has retained a portion of the home ranch for herself as long as she lives and the balance has been equally divided among her children. She is still an active member of the Methodist Church at Linden and is alert and interested in all matters pertaining to her locality. Mr. Bailey achieved success through honorable effort, untiring industry and capable management, and his true nobility of character and deference for the opinions of others gained for him many warm personal friends. Mrs. Bailey is well preserved and does not show the years of pioneering she went through. She reads, sews and works without the aid of glasses and is in good health. A cultured, refined woman of pleasing personality and charm, she still resides on the old Bailey homestead where she went as a young bride over sixty years ago and is held in the highest esteem throughout the county where so many useful years have been spent.

HENRY MOHR.—The good old days of the pioneer are recalled by the life story of Henry Mohr, the early settler long honored throughout San Joaquin County, and especially so as the founder of Mohr's Landing, known now as Bethany, on the San Joaquin River. For over a half century he had resided in California and San Joaquin County. He was born in Holstein, Germany, on March 12, 1829 and was bereft of his parents when only nine years of age. A neighboring family cared for him for the next six years, when he went to sea on a German merchant ship and several years were occupied on voyages to the Dutch East Indies, West Indies and other islands and countries of the world, sailing a number of times around the Horn and the Cape of Good Hope. Sailing through the Golden Gate in 1851, he determined to give up a seaman's life and locating at Hayward, Alameda County, he made that his home for several years, when he removed to San Joaquin County and secured lands near the river and established the only means of transportation to and from San Francisco there. He established his first home on Union Isle and engaged in raising grain and stock until the winter of 1861-62, the year of the disastrous flood that inundated the island and caused great financial loss to the farmers. With the brave spirit and strong will which characterized his whole life, Mr. Mohr set about to retrieve his lost possessions; engaging in the lumber and ferry-boat business on the river, he soon had made up all he lost. In 1868 he acquired the farm near Bethany which has been the home place ever since, and which responded to his excellent farming methods with bounteous crops each season.

In 1873 occurred the marriage of Mr. Mohr to Miss Dorothea Lindemann, a native also of Holstein, Germany, born September 29, 1848, who came to California via the Isthmus of Panama, in company with three girl friends, arriving in San Francisco in 1869, and going to Livermore, Alameda County, where a sister, Mrs. Emma Rose, resided. Of the five children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mohr only one survives, Mary, the wife of William C. Brown, a native of San Joaquin County, a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Brown, prominently and favorably known ranchers of the upper division of Roberts Island; the other children, Henry, Dora, William and George, are deceased. Mohr's Landing was, until the coming of the railroad in 1869, a most flourishing business center, as the river was the chief means of transportation and the farmers availed themselves of it, and the straightforward business methods used by Mr. Mohr made him a business man with few equals. He was a staunch Republican and few men in this portion of California were more familiarly or favorably known, and when he passed away on December 16, 1909, the community lost one of its most progressive citizens and a loyal friend to all who were privileged to know him. Mrs. Mohr still lives on the old home place, now conducted by her son-in-law, W. C. Brown.

FRED B. MOORE.—A pioneer resident and a prominent grain farmer of San Joaquin County, Fred B. Moore has been profitably engaged in the ranching industry in the Colledgeville district of San Joaquin County for a continuous period of thirty-five years. Many other interests have likewise taken his time and attention, and he is spoken of throughout the county as a public-spirited, genial and upright man. He was born at Woodbridge, one-half mile east of the Sargent place, March 27, 1863, a son of T. S. Moore, a native of New York who migrated to Grinnell, Iowa, in 1847, and two years later, in 1849 crossed the plains with ox teams to California. T. S. Moore was a butcher and carpenter by trade and for several years after arriving in California he worked at his trade at Coloma. In 1863 he removed to San Joaquin County and farmed near Lodi; the following year, 1864, he purchased a ranch west of Lodi where he farmed for thirteen years, then sold to J. L. Hudson. In 1877 he removed to Washington, then a territory, where he engaged in farming for four years; then returned to San Joaquin County and located at the old Five-Mile House on the Lower Sacramento Road. His last days were spent in Stockton, where he passed away about twenty years ago. Fred B. Moore received a fairly good education at the Lafayette district school and was a young lad when he started at farm work. For the past thirty-five years he has been farming in the Mt. Carmel and Colledgeville district of the county and his perseverance and industry have been well rewarded.

The marriage of Mr. Moore occurred in 1885, and united him with Miss Eliza E. Carey, born on the Carey Road six miles southeast of Stockton, a daughter of the late Wilson Carey, a prominent pioneer and grain and stock farmer of the Mt. Carmel district. Mr. Moore owns 280 acres of fine wheat land located five miles southeast of Stockton, on which was formerly located the old Six-Mile House on the Mariposa Road. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have one son, Arthur W., born on the old Wilson Carey ranch near Stockton, January 7, 1888. He received his education in the Mt. Carmel school and since he was old enough has helped his father with ranch work. For the past three years he has managed the extensive grain farm. On February 28, 1919, at Stockton, he was married to Miss Laura Cox, born July 28, 1888, in Linden, Cal., a daughter of W. E. Cox, pioneer farmer of Linden. Both father and son believe in the most up-to-date methods of grain farming and their equipment consists of the latest improved machinery known, which greatly facilitates their extensive grain growing operations.

GEORGE E. MINGES.—In the history of agricultural development of San Joaquin County mention should be made of George E. Minges, whose business career has been crowned with a gratifying measure of success that has been honorably won. He is a native son of both California and San Joaquin County, where he was born April 22, 1864. His parents, John and Philipena (Leicht) Minges were natives of Germany, who emigrated to America in 1849. When John Minges landed on the Atlantic Coast, he made his way westward, crossing the plains to the Pacific Coast, and first located in Southern California, but in 1850 located in Stockton, where he conducted a gunsmith shop. He also conducted one of the first bakeries in Stockton and was likewise proprietor of a hotel, and his name became closely identified with the development and substantial upbuilding of the town. In 1859 he removed from Stockton to Atlanta, where he remained for many years. He also resided for several years on the west side of the San Joaquin River in Stanislaus County, but subsequently returned to Stockton, where his last years were passed, an esteemed and honored pioneer of the county. His death occurred November 23, 1893. He was a Republican in politics and his religious faith was that of the German Methodist Episcopal Church. Nine children were born to this worthy pioneer couple of whom George E. Minges is the youngest.

George E. Minges was reared to man's estate in San Joaquin County, and acquired his early education in the public schools near his home. Later he attended the San Joaquin Valley College, at Woodbridge, Cal., and there, on the completion of a course in the business department, he was graduated. Early in life he became familiar with all the duties and labors attendant on the life of an agriculturist, for he assisted in the farm work of the old family homestead. Throughout the greater part of his life he has followed farming and stockraising, and in buying and selling stock he has realized a handsome competence. For several years he has taken a very active interest in the matter of irrigation throughout the county, and is recognized as among the most prominent advocates in its behalf. He labors untiringly to secure the adoption of irrigation methods in the district, realizing the value thereof in promoting agricultural interests. His former extensive holdings of 1,120 acres are nearly all under irrigation and his fields are now extremely productive. In all of his farming methods he has been progressive, and so gained a very desirable measure of prosperity.

On November 24, 1887, Mr. Minges was married to Miss Birdie Williams, of Woodbridge, California, a daughter of Richard W. and Amanda (Ireland) Williams, early settlers of San Joaquin County. They are the parents of eight children: Georgia Avis, deceased; Eva May, Mrs. Cary Nicewonger, has four children and resides at Palo Alto; Beulah, Mrs. Bernard Grogan, has three children and resides at Atlanta, Cal.; George W., resides at Orange Cove, Cal. He served in the World War as a machine gunner in Company B, Thirty-ninth Infantry, Fourth Division A. E. F., and was honorably discharged, August 18, 1919; Leslie A. is a rancher at home;

Walter is also a rancher on the home place; Leland and John Richard. The family is prominent in social circles and the Minges household is noted for its generous hospitality. For a number of years Mr. Minges served as a trustee of the Castle school district and for a portion of the time was clerk of the school board. Mr. Minges and his wife are members of the Atlanta Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he has served as steward, and his wife as president of the Aid Society; she is also a member of the W. C. T. U. and the Y. W. C. A. and both are interested in the local farm bureau. In October, 1922, Mr. Minges traded his ranch for improved property in Stockton, where they now reside.

HAZARD ZOLLIE BARDIN.—A rancher of Upper Roberts Island, numbered among the enterprising agriculturists of his locality, is Hazard Zollie Bardin, the owner of a choice Delta farm of 100 acres, which was formerly a portion of the Pescadero grant, highly cultivated and well improved. He was born at Parler, S. C., Aug. 23, 1881, a son of Hazard and Ida J. (Exum) Bardin, natives of South Carolina of English and French descent. Hazard Bardin, Sr., was a merchant in Parler, S. C. and was also a manufacturer of turpentine, owning a factory which he conducted for forty years. In 1892 he removed with his family to Ft. White, Fla., also in the yellow pine woods, the same as at Parler, so he again engaged in manufacturing turpentine until he gave up active business about five years ago. He was bereaved of his wife in 1899. Eight children were born to them, seven of whom are living, Hazard Zollie being the eldest. As a lad he received a good education in the public schools and a military school at Palatka, Fla., remaining at home with his parents until 1901, when he went to Jacksonville, Fla., where he was occupied in the offices of the Southern Express Company for five years. In 1907 he came to San Francisco and entered the employ of the Wells Fargo Company as messenger, traveling throughout California and continuing in that position for seven years. He was thus able to judge the different localities of California by actual observation and San Joaquin County was selected as the place for his permanent home.

On October 6, 1914, Mr. Bardin was married to Miss Louise Undine Kuckuk, Union Island, the first white child to be born on that island. She is the daughter of Fred and Lena (Ellebrock) Kuckuk, early settlers of San Joaquin County. Her parents were pioneers on Union Island and Mr. Kuckuk aided in reclaiming the Delta country where he is still engaged in farming. They have two children living, Fred Jr., the eldest, and Louise Undine, who received her education in the Byron school, riding a pony eight miles to school every day. In 1908 she purchased 100 acres with money she had made in the sheep business and in 1914 she and her husband took up their abode on this tract of land, then a swamp covered with tule. At the present time it has been reclaimed and planted to alfalfa and general farming products, and hogs and sheep are being raised profitably. Mr. Bardin is a member of the American Federation of Farmers and he and his wife in their political preferment are independent, preferring to vote for principle rather than party.

FREDERICK G. MENKING.—For almost his entire lifetime, Frederick G. Menking has been a resident of San Joaquin County, for he was about three months old when his parents brought him to California. He was born at Hoboken, N. J., May 23, 1868, and in August of the same year his parents removed to Stockton, Cal., coming via the Isthmus of Panama on the S. S. "Golden State" to Aspinwall, then across the Isthmus on mule back, and there they took passage to San Francisco on the S. S. "Arrow." The father purchased property from Captain Weber on Pilgrim Street and Miner Slough, Stockton, where he erected a house; here he engaged in the lumber and freighting business. He married Miss Katherine Tons, a native of Germany and a sister of John Tons, and she passed away in 1917, while the father died in San Francisco in 1921.

Frederick G. Menking received a fairly good education in the public schools of Stockton and when a very small boy learned to handle horses successfully. Thereby an intense love for this four-footed animal was created and throughout his lifetime he has been known as an authority on horses. In the fall of 1882 he became a driver for the Moore & Smith yards, and during all the years he followed teaming he has worked for but three firms. Of recent years he was employed by the city of Stockton. Two years ago he retired to take up farming on account of poor health, and purchased fourteen acres of the L. U. Shippee homestead near French Camp. By hard work and a determination to succeed, he has made of his ranch a fine and productive fruit and alfalfa farm; here he devotes much of his time to raising fine horses, for which he is particularly well fitted.

The marriage of Mr. Menking united him with Miss Sadie Ray, a daughter of David Ray, prominent building contractor of Stockton; and they are the parents of two children: Ada and Edna. In fraternal circles he is a member of the I. O. O. F. and the W. O. W.

JUDGE SAMUEL S. McLAIN.—A native of West Virginia, Judge Samuel S. McLain was born at Parkersburg, on October 21, 1866, the youngest son of Milton and Mary (Stukey) McLain. His father, Milton McLain, was born in Ohio of Scotch parents, and removed to West Virginia where he became a very prominent citizen and engaged in farming and stockraising extensively; in partnership with his eldest son, Frank H. McLain, he was well known throughout the Eastern States as a stockman, doing an extensive business in cattle shipping during the '80s and '90s.

On March 4, 1885, Mr. McLain left his home and settled in Springfield, Mo., where he spent two and a half years, then came to California, going first to Pomona, but soon removed to Chico, Butte County. Securing a position as chief clerk in the Burns Hotel, he remained there for ten years, filling the position with efficiency, and during his residence in that city won many friends by his congenial and pleasant manner. He was also an active member of the California National Guards in 1889 and '90. He then went into the mines of northern California and spent three years in practical mining; then for several years he was connected with various hotels throughout northern and central California.

On January 15, 1900, he settled in Tracy, then a village of scarcely 300 inhabitants, and he has been an eyewitness to the wonderful growth and prosperity of this thriving city. On 1902 he was married to Miss Ella Hart, a daughter of the late George Hart, prominently known for his fourteen consecutive years of service as sheriff of Sonora, Tuolumne County, Cal. During the World War, Mrs. McLain took a prominent part in the Red Cross and war relief work in Tracy and the West Side of San Joaquin County. Mr. McLain had control of the issuance of all licenses respecting firearms, powder, etc., and also was active on the liberty loan committee. Politically he is identified with the Democratic party and fraternally is a member of the Elks No. 218, Odd Fellows and Encampment of Tracy, and has served three times as delegate to the grand lodge of the Knights of Pythias. During the past eight years, Judge McLain has administered justice for his community, having been elected to the office of justice of the peace in November, 1914, and was re-elected without opposition in November, 1918. On account of his thoroughness he has never had a decision reversed after an appeal to a higher court. Judge and Mrs. McLain own their residence in Tracy as well as other valuable real estate. As a member of the Chamber of Commerce, he takes an active interest in all matters that come to the attention of the organization.

FAY REED ZINCK.—Holding the record as one of California's youngest contractors, Fay Reed Zinck is also numbered among Stockton's most successful builders. A native son, he was born at Oakdale, Stanislaus County, February 17, 1890, and when a child accompanied his parents, Christian and Ora (Reed) Zinck to northeastern Oregon, and later resided in Seattle. The father was a contractor and builder. He erected the Sperry flour mill at Stockton and has followed the building business for many years. Returning to California in 1902, the family settled at Stockton, and here Fay attended the El Dorado Street school until he was fourteen, when he entered the employ of Robert Powell, the pioneer contractor. In 1905 he went to San Francisco, where he took up architectural drawing in the office of a prominent architect, and later was with the well-known contracting firm of Brunton Bros. After the great fire of 1906 he worked in San Francisco, helping rebuild the city after the holocaust that swept over it.

In 1908 Mr. Zinck returned to Stockton and for a time was associated again with Robert Powell, and later with Lewis & Barling. In 1911, although but twenty-one, he started in the contracting business for himself, but through his ability and the application he had given to his work he was even then far better equipped than men many years his senior. Successful from the start, he has erected in the neighborhood of 200 houses in Stockton, most of these being in the best residence sections of the city, and has erected many office and business blocks for the well-known real estate firm of Triolo & Calesini. He has had the contract for a number of school buildings, which he has completed most satisfactorily, among them the Lottie Grunsky school, the Jefferson Manual Training school, remodeled the high school and the Lathrop school; and on Washington Street he built a theater and garage.

With R. F. Shutes, Mr. Zinck formed the firm of Shutes & Zinck in 1919, and they conduct a planing mill on North Commerce Street, near Weber Avenue, having already built up a good business. Mr. Shutes was formerly a resident of Minnesota and has had a wide experience in the lumber business both there and in California. They built the South Sewage Disposal plant for the city of Stockton, under the supervision of Fred S. Tibbetts, engineer of San Francisco, a $108,000 contract. The partners have erected a two-story reinforced concrete building for the First National Bank of Los Banos, and a two-story brick building block and office building at the corner of California and Market streets, Stockton, for which Mr. Zinck drew the plans, as he has also done for many of the homes he has built. They own their own concrete equipment which is considered the best in the valley owned and operated by contractors. The firm holds membership in the Progressive Business Club, and so assist in all programs for the upbuilding of this favored section.

Mr. Zinck's marriage, which occurred at Stockton on May 4, 1912, united him with Miss Nellie I. Twitchings, a native of England, who came to California in 1898; and they have one son, Edgar Reed.

HENRY THOMAS HUBERT.—Since 1876 Henry Thomas Hubert has resided in San Joaquin County, where he has extensively engaged in farming and stock raising and has steadily increased his land holdings until he now owns 560 acres twenty miles east of Stockton, near Waverly Station, on the Copperopolis railroad. He was born on the Isle of Guernsey, England, November 10, 1849, a son of Daniel Hubert, a native of the same place, who was a pilot on the boats that plied the English Channel, for many years. He married Miss Martha D. Garis and they were the parents of ten children, of whom Henry Thomas, our subject, is the second son. Daniel Hubert lived to be sixty-one years old, while his wife was fifty-four when she passed away.

Henry Thomas Hubert was reared on a farm in England and received his education in the public schools, and before leaving home for America he had three years of military service. In 1874 he left home on the steamship Atlantic and arriving in Ontario, Canada, he worked for two years at farm work; in the spring of 1876 he arrived in San Francisco and came direct to San Joaquin County, where he was employed for ten years on various ranches in the Linden section of the county. Meantime, in 1882, he made an extended visit to relatives and friends, returning in the fall of the same year to California, content to make his permanent home here.

On September 9, 1886, Mr. Hubert was married to Miss Jessie Lane, born in Texas, January 26, 1867, a daughter of Cornelius Lane, who had come to California in 1879 and settled near Lockeford, where he passed away. Mrs. Lane, a native of Tennessee, was Miss Louisa Gill. Mr. Hubert's first purchase of land was in 1886 on the Calaveras River below Jenny Lind, where he engaged in general farming with Fred Shelton for about six years. He then sold this ranch and invested his capital in his present ranch, buying first 120 acres, then additional land, until he now owns 560 acres of good, productive soil on which he raises a fine quality of wheat and barley; for the past fifteen years he has also conducted a dairy, as well as raising poultry and other livestock. Mr. Hubert became a U. S. citizen at Stockton and for thirty-five years has been a member of the Linden Lodge of Odd Fellows.

JOHN DUNCAN McKELLAR.—Over a quarter of a century has passed since John Duncan McKellar came to California and he has watched its development through all these years, noting with interest the changes that have been wrought as its natural resources have been developed. His labors have largely been put forth along agricultural lines until about three years ago when he retired to his home in Stockton, 1126 South California Street. He is a Canadian by birth, having been born at St. Thomas, Ontario, October 20, 1853, the son of John and Mary (Thompson) Duncan, natives of Glasgow, Scotland, who immigrated to Ontario, Canada, and were farmers near St. Thomas. The mother died when John D. was a little child. The father afterwards removed to Saginaw, Mich., where he followed farming until he died. Of this union two children were born, Mary who resides in Detroit and John D., our subject. He came to Michigan in 1861, remaining a short time, then went back to Ontario where he attended school. In 1871 he came to Saginaw, Mich., and was employed at lumbering, getting out logs and driving them down the Titbowasse, Old Gray, Salt and Tobasco rivers. Young, agile and strong, he could ride the logs with ease and swim like a duck and became an expert in the art of snubbing the rafts of logs. He was employed in this line for a period of eight years; then he followed sawmilling near Mason, Mich., and during the threshing season he was in that line of work. Desiring to see the West, in 1881 he came out to Wood River, Idaho, where for three years he engaged in sawmilling.

In 1884 he arrived in Stockton and worked on Roberts Island for A. S. Blossom and Ira Saunders, and while there passed through the trying times of the floods when the levees gave way and flooded the entire island; he recalls the time when Chinamen used wheelbarrows to repair the breaks in the levees. By hard work and economy Mr. McKellar saved some money and finally began to farm for himself and at different times farmed from 400 to 1,700 acres of grain. He farmed the Woods brothers' land, the John Wilkinson ranch, land on the middle division of Roberts Island; also the Keagle place, now the Westgate property, farming the latter place of 960 acres for eight years. One year he used five Holt harvesters and harvested 60,000 sacks of grain. One season his crop of 1,644 sacks of grain sold for forty-four cents a cental, and he lost a year's hard work. During later years he raised large quantities of pink, Lady Washington and Cranberry varieties of beans, which proved of great profit. He owned a farm on the island where he resided until wishing to retire. He sold his place and located in Stockton in October, 1918, purchasing his present comfortable home on South California Street.

Mrs. McKellar was in maidenhood Sarah Cook and was born in Jasper County, Mo.; her marriage ceremony occurring in Stockton, October 17, 1899. She was the daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Abbott) Cook, natives of Kentucky and Tennessee, respectively. They were farmers in Jasper County, Mo., where they spent the remainder of their lives. This worthy couple had six children, three of whom are living. Mrs. McKellar, who is the third oldest, came to San Joaquin County in 1880. A woman of a pleasing personality and much business acumen, she has been a real helpmate to her husband. By a former marriage Mrs. McKellar has a daughter, Mrs.

J. D. McKellar

Sallie Holman of Oakland. Mr. McKellar is a strong Republican and he is greatly esteemed and respected for the part he has taken in the development of this section.

A. J. NOURSE.—A native son of California and the only surviving member of his immediate family, A. J. Nourse has resided continuously in San Joaquin County and the Ripon section since 1897, where he is well and favorably known for his cooperation in every movement for the welfare of his locality. He was born at Coulterville, Cal., January 19, 1865, a son of A. J. Nourse, a native of Kentucky and a pioneer of California. A. J. Nourse, Sr. came across the plains to California in 1853 in search of gold and located at Sonora. There were thirty-five people composing the emigrant train and all survived the hardships of the six months' journey, arriving at Hangtown in October, 1853. In 1860 the father removed with his family to Mariposa where he established a business as wheelwright and for five years built the wagons used by the freighters to the mines; then he engaged in the stock business and farming near Keystone, where he preempted Government land and was among the very first to settle in that locality; he was also employed at the Shawmut mines until these were closed by the failure of the San Francisco banks. He continued in the stock business until 1876. There were five children in the family, of whom A. J. Nourse, the subject of this sketch, is one of three survivors. The mother passed away at Shawmut in 1887 and the father in Stockton in 1895. A. J. Nourse, our subject, attended the public schools until the age of fourteen and from that time was associated with his father in mill work and farming until he was twenty-five years old. In 1889 he entered the Stockton Business College for a year's business course and returning to Mariposa County, he entered the employ of G. W. Hobron & Son as superintendent of their mill during the summer months and during the winter he went to Stockton and worked at his trade.

On August 25, 1896, Mr. Nourse was married to Miss Edna May Cady, born on the Cady river ranch located on the Stanislaus River, a daughter of Stoel and Nancy J. (Pringle) Cady, natives of New York and Illinois, respectively. Stoel Cady was a '49er and engaged in mining on the north fork of the American River. He spent a few months in Sacramento, and from there went to Stanislaus County, where he took up land and put in one crop, when he found that the title was not sound; he then removed to Dent township, in San Joaquin County, and bought 1,100 acres which he farmed extensively to grain and stock. In 1853 he returned to Illinois and brought back overland about 1,000 head of cattle; later he discontinued stock raising and devoted his entire attention to general farming. His marriage to Miss Nancy J. Pringle occurred in 1854; she had come to California the previous year with the Ewing Johnson family, who settled at the Blue Tent ranch, twenty-two miles southeast of Stockton, which is the present site of Escalon. Mrs. Cady passed away in Stockton, March 11, 1895, survived by her husband, who passed away in Susanville, Cal., on November 7, 1909. Mrs. Nourse has one brother, Frank P. Cady, proprietor of the Lassen Water Company.

For three years before he bought it in 1900, Mr. Nourse conducted the Cady ranch, which consists of 800 acres, for which he paid twenty-five dollars per acre, the same land now being worth $500 per acre. Mr. Nourse purchased 320 acres four miles north of Ripon, which he subdivided and sold in small acreages, disposing of the last three years ago. Mr. Nourse owned and operated the A. J. Nourse & Company hardware store in Ripon from 1914 to 1919, when he sold out the business to Davis Bros.; he has served three terms as a director of the South San Joaquin irrigation district, was a stockholder in the Ripon Lumber Yard until 1920, is now vice-president of the Bank of Ripon and was one of the founders of this institution in 1910. Since 1913 he has been developing the Ripon Water Works, and he is a member of the Farm Bureau and the Ripon Merchants Association. In politics he is a Republican. Fraternally, he is a past noble grand of Mt. Horeb Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Ripon and Mrs. Nourse is past secretary of Rebekah Lodge No. 229, at Ripon. Both Mr. and Mrs. Nourse were actively identified with the war relief work and Liberty Loan drives in south San Joaquin County. Mr. and Mrs. Nourse are the parents of two children, Ruth Lucille and Ralph C. Mr. Nourse has led a busy and useful life and his readiness and willingness to serve his community have classed him among the public-spirited and substantial citizens of his locality.

JAMES GRANT MURRELL, M. D.—An honored pioneer physician of Tracy, Dr. James Grant Murrell located here during 1891, when a few cottages constituted the town. His first office was in a small shack on Eighth Street, and during an epidemic of diphtheria, in the handling of thirty severe cases, Dr. Murrell lost but one patient. Dr. Murrell served as city health officer, and city physician, and when it was decided to make two offices, he was retained as city physician. He was born in Georgetown, S. C., on March 11, 1843, and while a young lad was thrown on his own resources. Leaving home with five dollars in his pocket, he made the trip to Charleston in three days. There he found employment in an office. Near the close of the Civil War he reached New York City, where he found a friend who worked for the U. S. Government, and there Dr. Murrell secured a job at five dollars per day making coffins for the burial of the soldiers, later removing to Boston, Mass., where he remained for the next thirteen years. After attending the centennial of the Battle of Bunker Hill held in Boston in 1875, he removed to the Pacific Coast and located in San Francisco and three years later entered the Eclectic Medical College in Oakland, Cal. and completed his three year course in 1881. He opened his first office at Lincoln, Placer County, Cal., and remained there for one year, when he removed to Kern County, active in the practice of his profession there until 1891.

The marriage of Dr. Murrell united him with Mrs. Alice (Minter) Wilkes, a daughter of Monroe and Louisa (Arnold) Minter. Her father was a sturdy pioneer of Kern County, who crossed the plains with ox teams from Shelby, Mo., when he was seventeen years of age; he spent several years in the mines and then located in Kern County where he ranched near Glennville. Her mother came to California across the plains with her parents in 1854, coming by way of Los Angeles, then to Kern and Mariposa counties. Both of Mrs. Murrell's parents lived to a fine old age, and are well remembered by the old residents of Bakersfield, as the father conducted a general merchandise store there for several years. By her first marriage Mrs. Murrell had three children. Ida, now Mrs. B. E. Grady of Stockton, has two children, Jack and Bobbie; Charles R. is married and resides in Bakersfield and is chief deputy county clerk of Kern County; Mrs. Clytelle Hewitt resides in Stockton and has two children, Leslie and Nadine. Mrs. Murrell is past officer and an active member of the Tracy N. D. G. W. and a member of the Tracy Rebekahs, and has just received the degree of Chivalry of that fraternity. During the recent war she was active in the canteen work and in the local Red Cross chapter. Both Dr. and Mrs. Murrell have been liberal with their time and means and have assisted in building churches and other local institutions. Dr. Murrell volunteered his services during the late war, and on November 9, 1918, he was enrolled by the Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker, as a member of the Volunteer Medical Service Corps, having been authorized by the Council of National Defense.

HENRY THOMAS OHM.—A prominent citizen and an extensive grain farmer, Henry Thomas Ohm has a fine farm and residence three miles northeast of Vernalis, and as a practical farmer and business man he has achieved a most desirable degree of success. He was born on the Ohm ranch near Vernalis on December 29, 1881, the only son of Thomas and Mrs. Rebecca (Riecks) Ohm, natives of Bremen and Holstein, Germany, respectively. The father passed away July 19, 1886. The mother still resides upon the old home place, and her sketch also appears in this work.

Henry Thomas Ohm grew up on the grain ranch, and received a good education in the New Jerusalem district school, supplemented by a course in the Adams Cosmopolitan School at San Francisco and the Polytechnic high school, continuing his course of study for three years. He then became a clerk in the office of Bovee, Toy & Sonntag, real estate and insurance brokers of San Francisco, where he remained for a year and a half; then, at the solicitation of his widowed mother, he returned to the home ranch, which he managed on shares. From time to time, Mr. Ohm has made an investment in lands, until he now owns extensive holdings near Vernalis, all devoted to grain raising, that yield abundant crops each season. Mr. Ohm, besides farming his own land, also operates the ranch belonging to Sheriff W. H. Riecks, a half-brother of our subject, who is a resident of Stockton. About one year ago, Mr. Ohm was one of the prime movers in, and brought about the election for, the foundation of an irrigation district, and is a member of the board of directors.

The marriage of Mr. Ohm occurred at Stockton on March 4, 1914, and united him with Miss Lillie Ohm, a native of California, born near Woodbridge, a daughter of John Ohm, of a prominent and influential family of San Joaquin County, and they are the parents of one daughter, Evelyn. Politically, Mr. Ohm is a Republican and fraternally is affiliated with the Stockton Elks, No. 218. His entire life has been spent in the San Joaquin Valley, with the exception of the time spent in acquiring his education at San Francisco, and his business career has been imbued with the spirit of enterprise which is so characteristic of the far West and which has led to its wonderful and rapid development.

CHARLES LEVER VAN BUSKIRK.—A long life of service to his community and to his fellowmen was that of Charles Lever Van Buskirk, who throughout his successful and busy career showed a signal integrity of purpose, and who probably did more than any other one man toward the building up of the business district of Lodi, the buildings he erected now standing as monuments to his progressiveness and faith in the future of this city. Born in Nova Scotia, September 29, 1845, Mr. Buskirk came to Wisconsin when a youth and started to work as a logger in the Wisconsin woods when he was only fourteen years old. He continued in this work for many years, meeting with rapid advancement, and became known as one of the leading lumbermen of Wisconsin.

The lumber business brought Mr. Van Buskirk to California in 1893, when he and his brother, George W. Van Buskirk, bought extensive timber lands in Calaveras and Amador counties. Soon afterwards Charles L. bought out his brother's interests, and later he sold three-fourths of his holdings to the Brown Bros. Lumber Company of Rhinelander, Wis., and recently the remainder to Charles F. Ruggles, a Michigan lumberman, still retaining a certificate of investment in the holdings.

When Mr. Van Buskirk came to Lodi, in 1893, he had the foresight to recognize the possibility of its growth and future business prospects. Backing his judgment, he bought a number of corner lots in the city, five of which are now in the main business center. He designed and built the Lodi opera house, since remodeled and now occupied by M. Newfield & Sons, the Van Buskirk Building, the Davis Building, the Telephone Building, the Sentinel Building and the School Street Garage. He took an active part in obtaining the first public library that Lodi had and afterwards put forth his efforts to secure the Carnegie Library. All matters pertaining to schools, charitable organizations, the paving of streets, building of churches, and other institutions of public benefit were not only encouraged but received his assistance. He made a strong fight against vice and intemperance and with others had the satisfaction of seeing Lodi rid of saloons.

While a resident of Wisconsin, Mr. Van Buskirk was married to Miss Angie B. Crocker, a native of that state, who was a loyal helpmate to her husband in all his undertakings, for four years she was county president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and is an active member of the Lodi Woman's Club. Both she and her husband were devoted members of the Lodi Congregational Church, Mr. Van Buskirk being one of its trustees for many years and a leader in all its good works. Two sons were born to them: Charles Raymond, a vineyardist, and Erle Lever, manufacturer of the Vaus pump, both married and residing in Lodi. Throughout his entire life Mr. Van Buskirk was interested in every movement that was progressive, aiding every community in which he resided. At his passing, October 7, 1920, Lodi lost one of its most enterprising and progressive citizens, one who was deeply interested in the civic, social and moral uplift of the community.

JOHN A. RATHJEN.—Among the agriculturists of San Joaquin County John A. Rathjen has made a fine business and industrial record at Tracy. He is engaged in general farming, but makes a specialty of the raising of barley and wheat. He annually harvests fine crops and has become one of the foremost representatives of the grain-raising industry in this section of the state. He was born on the John Rathjen ranch May 24, 1884, his father being the venerable pioneer who settled in San Joaquin County in 1872, and whose life history likewise appears below, on this page.

John A. Rathjen received a good public school education in the Banta district school, finishing in 1901. Inheriting the traits of industry and thrift from his forebears, he worked at home and on neighboring ranches on combined harvesters and at ranch work, when a mere lad, working many seasons for Hans Christian Lorezen on his river ranch. He is the eldest son in a family of six children and naturally his father looked to him to assist in the management of the home ranch, the birthplace of all the children. Since the death of his father on June 14, 1919, he has resided on the home place with his mother and been the active manager of the extensive grain farm, consisting of 320 acres devoted entirely, at the present time, to the raising of barley and wheat. Mr. Rathjen is a strong advocate of irrigation and is, at the present time, assisting in the establishment of an irrigation district that will transform the Rathjen acres, so that other crops can be planted. Mr. Rathjen is a staunch Republican in politics, and has favored all worthy institutions and causes, being especially loyal to the public school system and the cause of irrigation. Having spent his entire life in this locality he is well known and has many friends.

JOHN RATHJEN.—One of the successful, honored and respected citizens of San Joaquin County, John Rathjen located here at an early day, when the work of improvement and progress was as yet scarcely begun. As the day with its morning of hope and promise, its noontide of activity and its evening of accomplished and successful effort, ending in the grateful rest and quiet of the night, so was the life of this worthy man, who in his business career directed his labors so carefully and intelligently that he gained prosperity, and so honorably that he won the confidence of all with whom he came in contact. He engaged in general farming near Banta in San Joaquin County, where he owned 320 acres of land, on which he had made his home since 1872, and was a representative of that class of worthy citizens that Germany has furnished to the new world. He was born at Holstein, Germany, on September 21, 1843, and his parents were also born in the same locality. The father, Hans N. Rathjen, remained a resident of the old world until 1872, when, leaving his native country, he crossed the Atlantic to America and spent his last days in Nebraska, his death occurring in Washington County on October 17, 1903.

John Rathjen spent the days of his boyhood and youth in his native land and acquired a fair education. Experience and observation added greatly to his knowledge and gave him broad practical information that enabled him to successfully transact business affairs. In 1865 he sailed for the United States and made his way to Scott County, Iowa, where he remained for a short while. After visiting various portions of the West he came to California in 1868, settling in San Joaquin County, and in 1872 he took up his abode upon the present ranch, the home place of his wife and eldest son, John A. Rathjen, whose sketch also appears in this work, and here he remained until his death on June 14, 1919, making a continuous residence of forty-seven years. His labors were devoted untiringly to the improvement of his farm and the cultivation of his fields, and whatever success he achieved resulted from his own efforts.

The marriage of Mr. Rathjen occurred March 24, 1879, and united him with Miss Gesine Hilken, who was born in San Francisco, Cal., and is a daughter of John Hilken. This worthy couple were the parents of six children: Clara married Joseph Smith and they have one son and reside in Tracy; Feda, Mrs. W. J. McArdle; John A.; Charles is married and resides on a ranch near Tracy; Amy, Mrs. T. A. McCloskey of San Jose; Ida married James C. Caselman and they have one daughter and reside near Tracy. Mr. Rathjen never sought to figure in any public light, caring not for political preferment nor anything else that would cause him to occupy a place in public attention, but he had the qualities of the good and loyal citizen, and upheld the business interests and stability of the county; and he always felt that he made a wise choice when he determined to make San Joaquin County his permanent home.

MRS. REBECCA OHM.—One of the few survivors of the early day settlers of San Joaquin County, Mrs. Rebecca Ohm has borne an important part in its development. Although advanced in years, she has maintained her association with the progressive, alert, and constructive element of the locality where she has resided since 1867. With the exception of three years passed in San Francisco, Mrs. Ohm has continuously resided on the home place located about ten miles south of Banta. She is a native of Bremen, Germany, born on January 14, 1846, her parents being German and Rebecca (Segelkin) Von Bremen, who were also natives of Germany. Mrs. Ohm was reared in her native country, where she remained until her twentieth year, when with a brother and two sisters she came to the United States, sailing from Bremen to New York City, and then via the Isthmus of Panama she made her way to San Francisco, Cal., the trip covering a period of six weeks.

The first marriage of Miss Von Bremen occurred on February 12, 1869, and united her with William Riecks, a native of Hanover, Germany, and to them were born three children: William H., the sheriff of San Joaquin County; Herman A. and Carl F. In 1868 William Riecks, who was born at Kiel, Germany, settled upon the ranch upon which our subject now resides and was one of the early residents of the neighborhood. He had come to California in boyhood, crossing the plains in 1856. He first engaged in agricultural pursuits in the Livermore district, and subsequently settled in San Joaquin County. He passed away on June 9, 1879, and was numbered among the worthy pioneers who took advantage of the natural resources of the state and who in carrying forward his own business interests also promoted the general prosperity and welfare of this portion of California. On August 14, 1881, Mrs. Riecks became the wife of Thomas Ohm, a native of Holstein, Germany, where he was born December 29, 1842. He came to California in 1866 by way of the Isthmus route, and settled in San Joaquin County in 1868. In 1881, following his marriage, he settled upon the farm now occupied by his widow, and continued there until his death on July 19, 1886. Besides being an extensive grain farmer, for many years he was engaged in the general merchandise business as a member of the firm of L. Borach & Company at Banta, Cal. He was a public-spirited citizen and was widely known in his locality, because of his devotion to the general good. He favored all measures for the promotion of the social, material, intellectual and moral welfare of his community, and he held membership in the Lutheran Church. Mrs. Ohm is also a member of that church and is among the representative pioneer women of her district in San Joaquin County. She has made many friends, and her own home in the New Jerusalem school district has always been noted for cordial hospitality. Mrs. Ohm has seen many changes during the long period of her residence in California and has watched the development of San Joaquin County as it has emerged from pioneer conditions to become a factor in the progress and prosperity of the state. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Ohm, Henry Thomas, who operates the home place; Bertha M., and Antonia A.

MRS. WILLIAM H. POPE.—An exceptionally interesting and highly-esteemed resident of Tracy is Mrs. William H. Pope, the youngest of a family of five children surviving their parents, Frenz and Margaretha (Warch) Huck, both pioneers of this county, who settled in the New Jerusalem district about 1868, coming in by way of the river and Mohr's Landing. She was born in this county, and attended the New Jerusalem School, and grew up in a comfortable home; her father, who was a native of Germany, and a man of sterling qualities, spent a part of his life in the Southern mines in Tuolumne County. He passed away at Tracy, on April 9, 1904, mourned by many who had come to know and appreciate his worth. Miss Margaretha Warch had come to California alone, and had located at San Francisco; and in the Bay City she met Mr. Huck, and there, in 1862, they were married. Mrs. Huck passed away in December, 1906, survived by Mrs. Eva Schmidt, Mrs. Caroline Jepsen, Mrs. Margaretha Schmidt, F. W. Huck and Julianna Augusta, now Mrs. Pope, the subject of our story.

On September 29, 1901, Julianna Augusta Huck was married to William Henry Pope, who was born at San Francisco on August 10, 1877, the son of Gustaf and Christina (Schlichtman) Pope, and who was reared in San Francisco. He had worked at the blacksmith trade in Alameda County, and had then come to San Joaquin County; and from 1901 to 1907 had engaged in ranching. Later, he acquired the West Side Garage business on the Lincoln Highway at Tracy, to which city he naturally then moved, and there, while enjoying the pleasant companionship of his family, he met his death without a moment's warning, when, on September 15, 1921, he was accidentally killed in a collision of his automobile with a railway train, his death proving a great shock to the community. Since his death Mrs. Pope has disposed of the thriving garage business, but the ranch she has leased out on shares. He left two children, Frenz William and Nola C.

Residing in her delightfully attractive home, which she had built in 1922, Mrs. Pope is and has been very active in the Lutheran Church, and she leaves nothing undone whereby she may advance the best interests of the town and the county.

HENRY W. SCHROEDER.—A native son of San Joaquin County who finds recreation in his leisure hours in the study of history, particularly in historical research of the state of his birth, is Henry W. Schroeder, the successful proprietor of the Habit Cleaners & Dyers, at 2315 North California Street, Stockton. Mr. Schroeder was born at Tracy, September 2, 1890, his parents being William and Sophie M. (Hilken) Schroeder, the former a native of Germany, while Mrs. Schroeder was born in San Francisco; both are now deceased. William Schroeder was an early settler in the Tracy district, where he rented a part of the Sargent ranch and later purchased 640 acres of it, farming there for many years. He was the father of seven children, six of whom are living.

Henry W. Schroeder attended the Tracy schools, the Western School of Commerce and the Western Normal School, both at Stockton, and receiving a teacher's certificate, he taught for one year in Mono County. Returning to Tracy, he farmed the home place and in addition rented land. He then took up mining for a time, after which he engaged in the car renting service in Stockton. During the World War he served as quartermaster on the U. S. S. Beaver, in the submarine service, being stationed in Panama waters, and after his term of service was finished, he spent a year and a half at Los Angeles with the Standard Oil Company and the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. About two years ago he returned to Stockton and opened up in business for himself as the Habit Cleaners & Dyers, and from a small beginning he has built up a large patronage and a fully equipped plant, his business requiring two auto delivery wagons.

Mr. Schroeder's marriage united him with Mrs. Catherine (Felt) Newman, a native of Fortuna, Humboldt County, Cal., and she is the mother of two children by a former marriage, Ruth M. and Robert E. Newman. Mr. Schroeder is a member of Mount Osso Lodge, No. 460, F. & A. M., of Tracy and of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., and Karl Ross Post, American Legion.

ARTHUR ROBERTS.—Thirty-one years ago Arthur Roberts arrived in California and decided to make the Golden State his permanent home, and for twenty years he has been identified with Ripon in a representative way. He was born in London, England, November 19, 1864, a son of James and Jenny (German) Roberts, the former a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, and the latter of London, England. James Roberts was born in 1821, and his father, Thomas Roberts, removed to England in 1823. There James Roberts became a well-to-do hardwood timber merchant, until his decease.

Arthur Roberts was sent to a private school in London and at the age of fourteen was sufficiently advanced to hold a clerkship in his father's establishment; then for two years he was employed as a messenger by the Postal Telegraph Company of London. On February 6, 1884, he enlisted in the British army for general service in the Royal Artillery. After a year's training at Woolwich and Portsmouth he was transferred to Second Battery, Second Brigade, South Irish Division R. A., afterwards known as No. Ten Mountain Battery, for service in Egypt. He was soon promoted to corporal and for the next three years was stationed in Egypt. He went through the Soudan War with the troops with Major Kitchener in the recovery of the province of Dongola, the conquering of the Mahdi tribes and the final recovery of General Charles G. Gordon. The final battle in December, 1885, at Giness, was fought with heavy losses, but with victory for the British troops. Returning to England in November, 1887, Mr. Roberts was given a bronze star war medal by the Khedive of Egypt and a silver medal by the Crown of England. The last three years of his military career were spent as sergeant under Maj. F. W. Ratcliffe at Aldershot and Newport, Monmouthshire. Soon after receiving his honorable discharge, on February 6, 1891, Mr. Roberts came to America, arriving in San Francisco March 15, 1891, where his brother Frank was engaged in the upholstery business. Early in 1892 he went to La Grange, formerly known as French Bar, to prospect for gold; Lyons Gulch proved to be a better place and here he met with considerable success for two years when an epidemic of malaria forced him to leave, and for the next six years he was manager of the general merchandise store of Percy Davis at La Grange.

Henry W. Schroeder

On February 9, 1898, at San Francisco, Cal., Mr. Roberts was united in marriage with Mrs. Mary Jane (Withington) Roberts, the widow of his brother, Frank Roberts. She was born in Pennsylvania, a daughter of A. L. Withington, a Civil War veteran who passed away in 1898. Mrs. Roberts is the mother of three sons by her first marriage: Leland J., who resides in Stockton, went to work for George West & Sons, viculturists, when only fifteen years old and rose to be superintendent of their large interests. Frank W. enlisted in the Aviation Corps and served in France during the World War. Returning to the United States, he entered the employ of A. B. Shoemaker, commission merchant at Modesto, as buyer; later he became buyer for the Hume Fruit Company and is now in business for himself at Modesto. He recently married Miss Florence Bates, a daughter of Mrs. Ora R. Bates of Modesto. Earl W. enlisted in the U. S. Navy and served on the U. S. Battleship Arizona, which served as an escort to President Wilson on his first trip to France, and also did patrol duty at Smyrna, Asia Minor. He is associated in business with his brother Frank but makes his home at Ripon. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Roberts have one daughter, Violet V., a graduate of the Ripon high school, class of '20.

Mr. Roberts received his U. S. citizenship papers at Modesto in 1898 and since 1899 he has been engaged in agriculture, first near Copperopolis, then five miles east of Farmington. In 1902 he settled near Ripon, where he bought twenty acres, and this he has developed into a model fruit ranch. For two and a half years Mr. Roberts served as justice of the peace of Dent township and he has been a trustee of the Ripon school district. He became the first president of the first Board of Trade in Ripon. For the past twelve years he has been deputy county assessor and in 1910 and 1920 he took the U. S. census. He was one of the organizers and a charter member of the Farm Bureau of San Joaquin County, of which he served as director for three years; he also served as trustee of the San Joaquin unit of the American Federation of Farmers for two years. He also served for two years as tax collector of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District. He has been an active worker for better educational facilities and has labored untriflingly for the new Ripon Union high school and the fine grammar school there. In politics a Republican, he is a strong advocate of irrigation and is working for the development of the South San Joaquin Irrigation system, embracing 71,000 acres. Mrs. Roberts was brought up in the old Covenantor Church and Mr. Roberts in the Church of England, but they now worship at the new Congregational Church at Ripon.

MRS. FAUSTENA MONTORA ROLERSON.—

A distinguished resident of Stockton who enjoys the esteem of all who know her is Mrs. Faustena Montora Rolerson, who was born near Belfast, Lincolnville, Me., on January 5, 1845, the daughter of Harrison P. and Ruth (Herrick) Taber, natives respectively of Kennebec and New Brunswick, Maine. Her father was born in October, 1820, and her mother in March, 1822; he was only nine years old when he was thrown upon his own resources, the son of a farmer upon a rocky hillside farm. However, at the age of twenty-five, he was able to marry, and to well establish himself in New England agricultural pursuits. Mr. and Mrs. Taber were blessed with twelve children, eleven of whom attained maturity; and our subject was the eldest of the number. She inherits exceptional qualities from her father, who was a man of resourcefulness, and who gained success to a marked degree before he passed hence, in 1887, at the age of sixty-seven. Mrs. Taber lived to be eighty-four, and in 1904 made a visit of twelve months to California and this county.

At Waldo, Maine, in 1868, Miss Taber was married to Benjamin F. Rolerson, who was born on July 1, 1844, at that place, and was also reared on the same kind of rocky, hillside farm. At the age of eighteen he enlisted in Company I, 14th Regiment, Maine Volunteer Infantry, under Captain J. B. Gardener, signing up on November 27, 1861; and as a soldier in defense of the Union he served three years of the Civil War, and on January 13, 1865, received his honorable discharge at Augusta, Maine. Then he worked at farming, and three years later was married.

In 1875, Mr. Rolerson came out to California, arriving at Stockton in May; and three years later, Mrs. Rolerson, who had been visiting her folks in the meanwhile, devotedly followed her husband to the Golden State. They went to a farm on Rock Creek, Stanislaus County, and there spent three years; and in 1882, they moved into San Joaquin County and took up their residence on Roberts Island. They bought a ranch of 350 acres, and started to develop it; but on account of floods and storms during three seasons, which drowned their crops, they had hard, uphill work. They persevered, however, in Delta reclamation endeavor, until success came their way, and they operated so extensively until 1908 that now their names stand out prominently among those who wrought the great changes there. Mr. Rolerson died at Stockton on August 1, 1909, shortly after he had sold his ranch and moved into the city, an honored pioneer, known to be generous to a fault, and in excellent standing, as a Mason, an Odd Fellow and an Elk. He was also past commander of Rawlins Post, G. A. R., of Stockton. He was active in politics; always a staunch Republican, he served on the county committee and as a delegate to conventions. He also served as deputy assessor for many years. His religion was the Golden Rule; and he lived up to it, doing unto others as he would be done by.

Five children were born in the family; but only four survived their lamented father. Lois is Mrs. L. E. Ammons, and lives at 731 North Edison Street, Stockton. She has one daughter, Mrs. Ina Ames of San Francisco, who has one son, Charles Ames. Elmer C., who won many friends, is deceased and left a daughter, Mrs. Ruth Mead, of Ventura. Edith A. is the widow of Henry Banta, and has a son, Ralph, of Stockton. Flora M. is the wife of John Smith, and resides at Geyserville. Berdena married R. J. Heeney, of Roberts Island, whose life is also sketched in this volume. Since 1909, Mrs. Rolerson has resided in Stockton, making her home with her daughter, Mrs. Ammons, who with herself is much interested in the work of the College of the Pacific, not long ago removed to Stockton. Mrs. Ammons has served as treasurer of Circle No. 64, Ladies of the G. A. R., and both she and her mother take an active part in the work of this order. Mrs. Rolerson never tires of doing good, eager alike for the enlightenment of the young and the old.

FRANCIS DELBERT REYNER.—An excellent representative of the agricultural interests of San Joaquin County is found in Francis Delbert Reyner, whose energy, determination and enterprise have carried him to a well-to-do and influential position among his fellow men. His ranch and residence are located one and a half miles south of Banta, and he has been a progressive and industrious member of the farming class since young manhood. A native son of California, he was born on the Hinkle ranch near the New Jerusalem district school, on September 17, 1874, and is the only son of Francis and Lousia A. (Travis) Reyner, natives of Maryland and Missouri respectively. His father was a pioneer of California in 1861 and his life history will be found elsewhere in this work.

Francis Delbert Reyner received a good education in the schools of Banta, from which he was graduated in 1897. At the age of fourteen years he was able to take a man's place on the headers during harvest time. After finishing his schooling he went to Stockton, where he was employed by Noble D. Powell. While working there he learned the electrical supply business, and thereafter for the next three years engaged with the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company as lineman and in other capacities; then he went to Alaska and there he helped to establish the Alaska Fishing and Development Company and also conducted a fish saltery, this venture engaging his attention for a year and a half. He then returned to San Joaquin County and engaged in farming on the old home ranch and since 1907 has made this his home.

The marriage of Mr. Reyner united him with Miss Anna M. Vail, a daughter of Platt and Almira (Horton) Vail, early settlers of Stockton. Her father came to California in 1849 and was engaged in mining until 1854, when he returned to the East and engaged in farming near Elk Point, S. D. In 1889 they returned to California and in March, 1903, he passed away, the mother surviving him until February 24, 1922. Two daughters survive them, Mrs. Reyner and Mrs. H. C. Haslan. In politics Mr. Reyner is a Republican; and all movements and measures which affect the general welfare are to him matters of deep interest.

FREDERICK W. SCHIMMELPFENNIG.—A decidedly proficient and influential official of Stockton is Frederick W. Schimmelpfennig, the chief engineer of the Stockton Water Works, which are owned by the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. He was born in Stockton on July 11, 1863, the son of Adam and Frederica (Pffor) Schimmelpfennig, both natives of Germany, and both now deceased.

Adam Schimmelpfennig came to the United States in the late fifties, and located at Troy, N. Y., where, as a cabinetmaker, he worked for the Pullman Car Factory for five years. In 1859 he came out to Stockton, by way of the Isthmus, and bought a tract of land at the corner of East Weber Avenue between Ophir and Sierra Nevada streets, extending from Main Street to Weber Avenue, making the purchase from the late Captain Weber, in a section then out in the country. He planted grapes and all kinds of fruit-trees, and erected a residence which has been moved and is now located at Fair Oaks, an interesting landmark for sixty years. He followed the carpenter trade. Many years later, the property was divided among his children. Mr. Schimmelpfennig was twice married. By his first wife, Frederica Pffor, he had a son John, now deceased; a daughter, who is Mrs. Katherine Muller, of Monterey; a son, George W.; a daughter, Mary E., who married Robert Kelly, of Santa Rosa; a son, the subject of our interesting sketch, and Lena, who is the wife of Harry L. Horn, an attorney of San Francisco. This first wife having died, Mr. Schimmelpfennig married her sister, then a widow named Mrs. Reiss, and their union was blessed with three children. Fredericka Louisa is the wife of C. K. Smith, of Stockton, and she has a brother, Adam Henry of Oakland, and a sister, Sarah Elizabeth of Stockton. Adam Schimmelpfennig died on March 1, 1910, at the age of eighty-six and Mrs. Schimmelpfennig passed away on July 19, 1913, at the age of seventy-six.

Frederick W. Schimmelpfennig attended the Vineyard and Jefferson schools in Stockton, and when seventeen years of age, started to work in Fitzgerald's Planing Mill. Later, he went to San Francisco, where he worked in the engine room of the old Palace Hotel, in time becoming the hotel's engineer. For fifteen years he was in the engineering department of the Southern Pacific Railroad in Sacramento; and when he came to Stockton, he worked for J. M. Kroyer for six months. He then accepted appointment as engineer for the Buffalo Brewing Company at Sacramento, and later at Stockton; and on June 6, 1906, he entered the employ of the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, taking a position in the engineering department, first as assistant engineer, and then, on February 12, 1913, as chief engineer, on the retirement of George C. Turner.

At Stockton, in 1895, Mr. Schimmelpfennig was married to Miss Gertrude Solomon, the ceremony taking place on the 20th of July, the gifted lady having come to Stockton from Germany, where she was born, when she was six years of age. Two children have been born to this union, Ruth H. and Naoma.

FREEMAN B. MILLS—A representative vinticulturist of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County, Freeman B. Mills was born on the ranch where he now resides, near Woodbridge, on March 28, 1860. He is a son of Freeman and Minerva (Grace) Mills, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Massachusetts. The mother's people date back to the Revolutionary War period. His father came to California in 1853, across the plains from Illinois, and was engaged for a time in mining gold in Sierra County and then in business in Colusa County. In 1857 he came to San Joaquin County and located at Woodbridge and bought a squatter's title to eighty acres; later he added another eighty acres adjoining. In time he became an extensive grain farmer and was thus engaged until his death on September 20, 1875, at the age of 63 years. He was a prominent man in San Joaquin County, and for one term he served in the office of sheriff of the county. He was a charter member of Jefferson Lodge, I. O. O. F., at Woodbridge, and was generally public-spirited and enterprising in all that concerned the welfare of his county. The mother survived her husband about twenty years and passed away at the age of eighty-two years. There were six children in the family, as follows: William G., deceased; Mary L., Mrs. Barron of Lodi; Mrs. Charity S. Kincaid, deceased; George A., deceased; Alice G., Mrs. Taylor of Los Angeles; and Freeman B., of this sketch.

Freeman B. Mills was reared in his native county, and was fifteen years old when his father died, after which for several years he remained at home and assisted his mother in the conduct of the home place. He began his education in the public schools of Woodbridge; then attended the Los Angeles Academy, which the next year became the University of Southern California; then in 1881 he was graduated from the University of the Pacific at San Jose with the degree of B. S. He then returned to Stockton where he received his diploma for teaching, and first taught at the Salem school, the only school in Lodi, two terms; then in the Woodbridge grammar school for three years, and two years at the Houston district school. Since then he has been exclusively engaged in his present absorbing pursuit of grape culture, in which he has gained fine success.

Mr. Mills was married August 11, 1885, to Miss Carrie C. Ellis, of Lodi, a daughter of the late Ralph Ellis of that place. Her father was a former sheriff and member of the board of supervisors of Napa County, and was prominent in state politics and also one of the pioneers of California, coming to the state about the same time as the father of our subject. Mrs. Mills received her education in Napa Seminary, a private school for girls. She is one of a family of five children: Wilson R.; Frank, at Stockton with the Morris Plan Bank; Henry; Carrie C., Mrs. Mills; Mrs. Margaret E. Porter of Woodland. Ralph Ellis lived to be sixty-five years old and his widow survived him until 1921. Mr. and Mrs. Mills are the parents of two children: Everts F., a rancher at Lodi, and Ralphine. When Mr. Mills started his agricultural pursuits he owned thirty-five acres of unimproved wheat land. About thirty years ago he set this to table grapes and was among the first men to plant a vineyard in the Lodi section for commercial purposes. From time to time he added to his holdings until he now owns and operates 250 acres in bearing vineyard in the Lodi and Woodbridge sections. Mr.

Mills has installed a thorough irrigation system, the entire 250 acres being piped with concrete water main. About three years ago Mr. Mills built a modern two-story stucco house on his ranch in the suburbs of Lodi. In 1921, Mr. Mills was interested in organizing the Woodbridge Fruit Company, of which he is president; this company purchased 400 acres of land lying due north of Lockeford on the north side of the Mokelumne River, one-half of which is rich bottom land. They have improved the tract until it is nearly all in vineyard and peach orchard. Mr. Mills was the organizer and now serves as president of the Rio Oso Fruit Company that recently purchased 900 acres of grain land on the Bear River near Wheatland. This land is under development; over one-half of it has already been set to peach trees, and the intention is to have it all set out by 1924. Mr. Mills is a member of the board of directors and is secretary of the California Fruit Exchange at Sacramento since its reorganization about twenty years ago, and a director in the Citizens National Bank of Lodi. In politics he is a Republican, and fraternally is a member of Woodbridge Lodge No. 131, F. & A. M., and is a past master of the lodge.

WILLIAM R. MOLL—A successful business man of Stockton, whose business was begun in a small way and by diligent and intelligent effort has become a profitable venture, is William R. Moll, the proprietor of the squab farm at 1540 South Aurora Street, where he has about 4,000 birds. He is a native son of San Joaquin County, his birth occurring at Atlanta on February 6, 1879, a son of Joseph and Margaret (Bedford) Moll, natives of New York and Iowa, respectively. Joseph Moll settled in California in 1875 and began farming in Atlanta, San Joaquin County; later he removed to Eugene, Stanislaus County, where he farmed until he retired. His wife passed away in 1917 and he is still living in Stockton at the age of eighty years. William R. Moll received his education at the Lone Tree district school, and at seventeen years of age started out for himself; he became a steam engineer on dredges in the Bay region; then he worked two years at Blue Lakes, Alpine County, running a hoist for the Standard Electric Company. Returning then to Stockton, he opened a cigar store on California Street, which he operated for ten years; during this time he had become interested in pigeon raising, and his business grew to such proportions, that his quarters became too small, so he moved his pigeon farm to 1559 South Hunter Street. In three years' time it also became inadequate for his needs on account of his rapidly growing business. Wishing to devote all of his time to pigeon raising he sold his cigar business and about 1914 purchased his present property, consisting of three lots on South Aurora Street, where he built suitable buildings for pigeon raising and also rebuilt the house on the place into a modern residence. He is equipped to handle 5,000 birds at one time, which is a source of good income; his birds have taken first prize not only at local fairs but also at different county fairs where he has made an exhibit. He is breeding the birds for excellency and size so as to command the highest price in the market. He ships squabs principally to Chicago and New York City. Mr. Moll was the first individual in California to ship dressed squabs to Eastern points, his object being to obtain higher prices. In this he was successful as his returns were doubled. Others in his line heard of it and came to him for advice in shipping. He is today the largest squab breeder in Central California.

In August, 1905, in San Francisco, Mr. Moll was united in marriage with Miss Ora E. Stoughtenburgh, a native of Stockton, the daughter of John and Mary (Davis) Stoughtenburgh, born in Woodland, Cal., and Concord, Iowa, respectively. The mother died in Stockton, and the father now resides in Sacramento. Mr. and Mrs. Moll are the parents of one son, Irving. Mr. Moll has been a member of the Stockton Red Men for about twenty years.

JAMES BURNS.—Prominent among the best informed ship-builders in California may well be rated James Burns, the efficient and popular superintendent at the shipyards of the California Navigation & Improvement Company at Stockton. He is a native of Belfast, Ireland, and when a boy worked in the shipyards along the Clyde, in Scotland. In 1882 he came to the United States and worked for a short time at the Cramp shipyards in Philadelphia; but in July of that same year he left the City of Brotherly Love and sailed on the steamer Queen of the Pacific, through the Straits of Magellan and up to San Francisco. His first trip to Stockton was in October, 1882. He was not long in finding employment on the steamer Roberts Island and the barge West Side, owned by H. J. Cochrane, and he also worked on the steamer Empire City, owned by the Cornwall Company. He quit steamboating for a time and worked at the Crown Flour Mill in Stockton, until 1898; and then he was assistant superintendent of the building of the steamer H. J. Cochrane, a passenger and freight vessel which ran in connection with the People's Railroad, later taken over by the Santa Fe System. The steamer was the fastest river boat on the Coast, and had the largest boilers and engine; and she made the round trip daily from San Francisco to Stockton.

Since 1901, however, James Burns has been in the employ of the California Navigation & Improvement Company in charge of the boat building and repairs at their yard in Stockton; and there, on the average, some fifty men are regularly employed, and this number is sometimes increased to even 100 men. Usually two steamers are rebuilt yearly, new boilers and new machinery being installed, and among the craft turned out there, the Capital City, a new steamer running between Sacramento and San Francisco, was repaired at a cost of about $60,000. The steamer McDona'd was built at the plant, as were also three steamers for the Yukon River traffic in Alaska. The plant is fully equipped for all such work with the most modern machinery. After forty years of continuous service on the San Joaquin River, our subject may be credited with a knowledge of conditions hereabouts well worth possessing.

When James Burns married, he chose for his wife Miss Annie E. McGahan, a native of Ireland; and their union has been blessed with the birth of three children: John J., James E., and Mary Theresa. He belongs to the Yosemite Club and to the Lodge No. 218 of the Elks at Stockton, where he spends half of his time, residing the other half in Oakland.

CARL A. WALTER.—Highly esteemed in his lifetime, and honored above many after his demise, Carl A. Walter, the sturdy, progressive pioneer, earned for himself an enviable place among those who will always receive their meed of praise for what a grateful posterity acknowledges they really did in helping to found the great California commonwealth. His contemporaries, who knew him face to face, were intimately and accurately acquainted with his ideals, his toil and his accomplishments, largely as the result of hard, intelligent labor; and now those who weigh and balance the records of the early, self-sacrificing settlers, will not fail to accord him all the credit he deserves.

On September 26, 1849, in the year when so many thousands were rushing as fast as the slow and the inadequate conveyances of those days could bring them to California, Carl Walter was born in Holstein, Germany, where he grew to young manhood. In 1873, when he was twenty-four years of age, he sailed for America, and on May 14 arrived at Banta Station in San Joaquin County, and almost immediately embarked in extensive agricultural enterprises on the West Side, with which he was destined to be identified until 1912. On September 10, 1890, at Tracy, he was married to Miss Melanie E. Gunder, who was born in Silesia, on February 3, 1868, and had come out to California in 1887, arriving at Midway, in Alameda County. She joined the family of Reinhold Haera, who had come to California in 1866 with her brother, Frank, and had become farmer folks.

In 1890, Mr. and Mrs. Walter took up farming near the Whitehall estate, in Pescadero Grant, with which they continued occupied until 1905, and there Mr. Walter operated extensively on the West Side as a grain farmer, until 1912, when he sold out and removed to French Camp, where at present his son Carl, who resides on the home property, is farming. In December, 1921, he and Mrs. Walter moved to Stockton, and on November 9, 1922, after months of ill-health and suffering, he passed away, mourned and survived by his wife and five children, and a host of appreciative, devoted friends. His residence was at 1422 East Sonora Street. He always exerted an enviable influence in civic affairs as a broad-minded but staunch Republican. He had served for ten years as a trustee in the French Camp school, where he was chairman of the board; and he was prominent as a member of Sumner Lodge, I. O. O. F. He was past chancellor in the Knights of Pythias, at Tracy, and his funeral, which was largely attended, was conducted jointly by these two lodges.

Several children blessed the happy union of Mr. and Mrs. Walter. Carl Walter is married, and has a wife and two children, Carl Clifton and Muerl Lois; he is with the Harris Harvester Company at Stockton, and is a member of the Tracy Parlor, N. S. G. W. Margaret is employed by Levy Bros. Melanie has become the wife of Clifton Kroyer, of the Kroyer Motors Co., Inc., of California, and resides at Long Beach. Freda is a graduate of the Stockton high school, and also of the Western Normal School, having been a member of the class of 1916. She also graduated from Heald's Business College in 1918, and has followed teaching in the public schools of San Joaquin County for the past six years, enjoying the esteem of her colleagues. She is a member of the WESLEY A. MORRIS.—An experienced contractor well known to Stockton and vicinity as an expert builder of bungalows, who made Stanislaus County the scene of his operations for a period of two years, but who returned to Lodi in the summer of 1921, is Wesley A. Morris. He was born near Independence, Jackson County, Mo., on February 14, 1855, the son of John Morrow Morris, a Kentuckian who hailed from Greenville and came into Missouri in early days. He farmed there, and also worked as a mechanic capable of building all kinds of wagons. He married Miss Lucinda Maze, and she died when our subject was four and one-half years old. Grandfather Jesse Morrow Morris and his wife, who was Polly Ann Johnson, were reared at Louisville, Ky., but came to Missouri in the early days. An uncle of Wesley Morris, William Maze, left Missouri and came to California some years before the Civil War. During the Civil War John M. Morris moved his family to Leavenworth County, Kansas, and in 1861 purchased a farm about seven miles to the southeast of Leavenworth; and shortly after that, he died there. He had married a second time and his wife, who survives him, makes her home at Independence, Missouri.

Wesley was sent to the rural district school near Independence, and when only fourteen years of age, he started to earn his own living, and left the home of his sister, Mary, the wife of John G. Smiley, a sergeant in the Civil War. He worked for wages on various farms until he was seventeen years old, and then he studied the mechanism of the Singer sewing machine, and became one of the company's adjusters at Kansas City, remaining there until in 1877, when he went to Independence and was in the employ of G. M. Nichol & Bro., until 1880, when he came out to California.

He intended to continue in the employ of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, but after thirty days with the Stockton agency, he took up carpentering and building with D. M. Chapell, and did so well in the new field that he was very active in Stockton as a carpenter until 1897. Then he went back to the vicinity of his birthplace, and after spending a year in the Middle West, in 1898 he returned to Stockton, but soon went to Lodi, and there worked as a contractor until 1909, when he went to Florida. At Orlando and Jacksonville he again followed building, but in 1919 returned to California. He stayed a short time at Lodi, and then, in June, 1919, moved to Modesto, where he once more took up contracting and building.

Mr. Morris has been twice married. At Kansas City on April 22, 1877, he was united to Miss Josephine E. Pierce, a native of Jackson County, Mo., and the daughter of John and Mary A. Pierce. Her parents came from Knoxville, Tenn., and were early settlers and farmers in Missouri. Again, at Orlando, Fla., on March 13, 1911, Mr. Morris chose a wife, the lady being Mrs. Mary (Temperence) Houston, a daughter of an Alabama planter. She died on January 30, 1916, near Orlando, Fla. Of Mr. Morris' three children, two are still living. Orie Bliss was well known at Lodi up to 1918 as a poultryman, but he is at present engaged in real estate transactions in Los Angeles. He married Miss Irene Genevieve Woods and they have four children. Mary Effie, the second child born, has become Mrs. Harry Lansing Boswell of Los Angeles; Mabel Gertrude died at the age of eleven months. Mr. Morris's grandchildren are Gladys Genevieve, Eunice Erma, Nadine Naomi, and Raymond Russell, the offspring of Mr. and Mrs. Orie Bliss Morris; and Harry Lansing, Jr., the child of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lansing Boswell. A great-grandchild is Erma Stella Pearson, the daughter of Roosevelt R. and Gladys Genevieve (Morris) Pearson. Mr. Morris is a member of the Seventh Day Adventists, having been a member of that congregation since 1897. In politics he is strictly non-partisan, voting for the best men and measures regardless of party affiliation.

STITH A. PEARSON.—Prominent among the early-day residents of Waterloo who will always be held in loving remembrance, as they were in their life-time in high esteem, first on account of their high ideals, and secondly because of their years of hard work, self-denial and sacrifice to see those ideals realized, was the late Stith A. Pearson, who passed away, on April 13, 1922, about one month after he had celebrated his ninetieth birthday, from injuries sustained in a fall of fifteen feet from his windmill. He was born in Meade County, Ky., on March 1, 1832, and at the age of eighteen left the home place and engaged in boating upon the Mississippi River, so that tales of his varied and sometimes thrilling or amusing experiences with the river craft and river folk of that time were his delight in after years. He was a witness to a good deal in the seamier side of life, and in particular to the ravages of several of the cholera epidemics which swept New Orleans and the lower Mississippi nearly a quarter of a century ago.

In 1851, Mr. Pearson left for California with six head of oxen, and arrived at Stockton in 1852. He remained here a few months, and then left for San Jose; and after a short season of work there, he went to Michigan Bar, where he mined for two years. Buying a team, he freighted to Virginia City; and when he returned to Stockton, he worked as a farmhand for Cole and Dodge, big wheat farmers on the Lockeford Road, beyond the Calaveras River.

On June 3, 1859, Mr. Pearson married Miss Susan Willis, also a native of Kentucky, and they then made their home on the farm seven and one-half miles out on the Waterloo Road. Mrs. Pearson, whose noble character and charming personality always attracted to her a circle of devoted friends, preceded her husband to the grave in 1913, dying on April 12; and when Mr. Pearson came to breathe his last, he too passed away on the twelfth day of April. Their farm home was purchased from Captain Weber, and was a very desirable one in many respects; and Mr. Pearson became both a successful general farmer and a noted lover of, and breeder of horses, in early days raising many of the best horses in the community.

Mr. Pearson was one of the oldest members of Valley Lodge No. 135, A. F. & A. M., and was an ardent Mason, whose life reflected the ideals of his fraternity. Two sons and three daughters survived him: Charles B. and Jesse W. Pearson are both of Stockton, as is Mrs. P. W. Owen, in maidenhood Nellie Pearson; while Juanita Pearson became Mrs. Henry Harnay of Lodi. Miss Violet Pearson still resides at Waterloo. Two of Mr. Pearson's sisters also survive. One is Mrs. Amanda Owens, of Porterville, and the other Mrs. Mildred Collins, who lives at Farmersville, near Visalia. The late W. R. Pearson of Lodi, who passed away in 1920 at the age of eighty-nine years, was Mr. Pearson's brother.

ALBERT A. GRAY.—One of the most enterprising citizens of Tracy is found in Albert A. Gray, the senior partner in the firm of Gray & Strahorn, doing a transfer and heavy trucking business. He was nicknamed "Billy" Gray the day he started school at Linden, and has ever since been called by that name. He was born at Linden, just east of Stockton, San Joaquin County, on October 16, 1877, the only son of the late William J. Gray, a native of Indiana, who was reared in Iowa and crossed the plains to California with his party in 1862. He located in San Joaquin County and engaged in farming and in years became very wealthy and an extensive landowner. He married Miss Zula Prather, a native of Missouri, a daughter of the late Philip Prather, who was a pioneer of '49. Just before his death, William J. Gray suffered severe reverses and he passed away in 1890. His wife survived him and now resides in San Francisco.

Albert A. was only thirteen years old when his father died. He realized his responsibility as the main support of the family, and so took up the farm duties, but through no fault of his, after three years of hard work, he was forced to give up the ranch. He then hired out to the McCormick Brothers of Stockton, who were then running a butcher business and a stock business, and there young Gray, then about eighteen years old, did everything from butchering to herding sheep, for about a year. He next went to work for his aunt, Mrs. Matilda Prather, who was then one of the largest sheep operators in the county. The next year he served as foreman on the Conrad Ranch.

After his marriage the next fall, he rented the Gilman Chase place at Valley Springs. In the fall of 1902 he leased the dairy and farmed the Sargent Tract, west of Lodi. He operated extensively as a dairyman and at general farming, and things were coming nicely his way when the flood of 1904 drowned him out and he was worse off than broke. He started in again, moved to Bellota, where he ran 150 milch cows. Feed became short and he was obliged to move seven times in eight months to procure feed for the stock. About this time he fell heir to enough money to start him in farming again, from his father's brother, Tillman Gray. With this money he then rented the George Klipple place at Linden but on account of the dry year following he went broke again. Almost discouraged, he sold off what stock and implements he had and moved to Linden and took charge of the Linden Creamery for two and one-half years and then he went to work for the Associated Pipe Line at Linora until he moved to Tracy in June, 1909. He entered the employ of the S. P. Ry. Co. in their car department, but lost his job in the strike of 1911. He then went to work around town wheeling brick, laying sidewalks, doing carpentering, sewing sacks on threshing machines—anything at which he could make an honest dollar. Those were trying times indeed.

In 1918, in partnership with Mr. J. F. Strahorn, he bought out the Tracy Transfer, which they have since operated under the firm name of Gray and Strahorn.

Mr. Gray's marriage occurred in Stockton on October 11, 1900, and united him with Miss Lillian M. Sinclair, a native of Calaveras County, Cal., and they have one daughter, Ramona. Mrs. Gray's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair, are pioneers of California and now reside at Jenny Lind in Calaveras County. Mrs. Gray has been the successful proprietor of the Hotel Francis in Tracy since 1917; they also own some desirable property in Roseville, Cal. The transfer and trucking business has gone through some hard years, but by persistence and industry, the business has been brought to a paying basis. Fraternally Mr. Gray is a member of the Elks, Sumner Lodge of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias No. 118, and Modern Woodmen of America. In politics he is a progressive Republican, and he was elected trustee of the city of Tracy in April, 1922.

ROBERT FRANKLIN WILLIAMS.—A representative pioneer citizen and farmer of San Joaquin County, where he has spent his entire life, is Robert Franklin Williams. He owns a beautiful estate of thirty-seven acres seven and a half miles north of Stockton, land which constituted a part of the Williams homestead since his father purchased it in pioneer times. He was born on this ranch, where he now makes his home, June 19, 1855, a son of Miles and Martha J. (Reed) Williams. Miles Williams was a native of Broad Top, Pa., born September 28, 1801, and was thirteen years old when his parents settled on a farm in what is now Mansfield, Ohio, where he remained until he was married, in 1835, to Miss Martha J. Reed, a native of Ohio, when he engaged in the mercantile business at Mansfield, Ohio, in company with his brother Robert. He moved from Ohio to Illinois, remained a year, and then went to Batesville, Ark. He engaged in the furniture business and farming, remaining there fourteen years, until 1853, when he started, with his wife and children, for California. They made the trip overland with a large ox-team train and arrived in San Joaquin Valley after a journey of six months. They camped six and a half miles from Stockton on the place where Septimus Williams had located in 1849, making quite a city of tents. Septimus Williams was one of the first to settle in this part of the country and he became a very prominent man, serving as supervisor. He was known as Captain Williams, having been a steamboat captain. Miles Williams, the father of our subject, made his home on the ranch purchased in early days, until the time of his death, which occurred November 26, 1870, at the age of sixty-nine years; his wife survived him until 1901, aged eighty-three.

Mr. and Mrs. Miles Williams became the parents of nine children, seven growing to maturity. E. G. died in 1916, and W. C. also passed away here. Malinda A. was the wife of W. B. White and she passed away in Stockton; Eliza S. was the wife of Alden Spooner, a shipbuilder; she resides at the old home; Sarah E. was the wife of J. P. Spooner, the pioneer photographer in Stockton, and she also resides on the old home place. John E., who was born while the family were crossing the plains, resides on part of the old home ranch, and Robert Franklin is the subject of this story. He attended the Elkhorn district school and from early boyhood learned the practical lessons of agriculture by doing them. As his share of the estate of his parents, he received thirty-seven acres, on which is the house where he was born and which is today one of the old landmarks in the county. Mr. Williams is engaged in fruit growing and stockraising on his portion of the ranch, and is meeting with merited success.

THOMAS RICHARDS.—A well known and honored resident of the vicinity of French Camp is Thomas Richards, who has continuously resided in San Joaquin County since 1872, where ten years later he purchased his present ranch, located on Lathrop Road five miles south of Stockton, where he owns a large farm devoted to raising of grain. He was born at Devonshire, England, March 9, 1847, and there received a good education. When twenty years of age he came to America, stopping at Geneseo, N. Y., where he remained for four years, coming to Stockton in 1872, where he entered the employ of the Stockton Lumber Company, which occupied him for ten years. Desiring to better his financial condition, he purchased 177 acres of the Traylor ranch and, in 1884, ninety-eight acres known as the Gallagher ranch; later he bought an additional sixty-two acres of the Gallagher ranch. Enterprise and intelligent labor have gained for him an influential position among his fellow citizens in San Joaquin County, and he is reckoned as one of the most substantial men of affairs in his community.

In March, 1884, Mr. Richards married Miss Emily Abell, a native of Wisconsin and a daughter of George Abell of Stockton, who came West in 1868. Her father was born in London, England, in 1819 and married Mary Ann Marks. Two sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Richards; William Arthur married Naomi Rolerson, who died in 1915, leaving two sons, Forest and Arthur; Oscar resides at home and conducts the home place. Mr. Richards has many warm friends in the county, where he has established a reputation as an excellent agriculturist.

ST. PATRICK'S PARISH.—In the spring of 1878 the little church known as St. Patrick's was built at Atlanta, seventeen miles southeast from Stockton. The land for church and cemetery was donated by the late John B. O'Malley, and soon the church, which has become a landmark, was completed and dedicated by Joseph Sadoc Alemany, first archbishop of San Francisco. Father W. B. O'Connor, of Stockton, at that time pastor of all the Catholic churches in San Joaquin and Stanislaus counties, was in charge. Before 1878 the nearest church was in Stockton and occasionally the pastor came and held services in the homes, but for the most part the sturdy pioneers brought their families on Sunday to the parish church in Stockton. In the early '80s a parish was formed at Modesto with Atlanta as a part and Rev. P. Walsh became the pastor. Upon the death of Father Walsh in 1884, Rev. Father McGuire became pastor and remained so for several years, when the well beloved Father O'Connor, under whose direction the church was built, became the pastor. At this time a new front was built and the interior of the church decorated. Father O'Connor passed away December 26, 1911, and was succeeded by Father W. E. McGough, and during his administration more land was donated for cemetery purposes and improvements. Also the beautiful stained glass windows which adorn the church today were donated by Father McGough. They previously belonged to St. Agnes Chapel in Stockton and are gifts of the pioneers whose names they bear. Four years ago a new parish including Manteca, Lathrop and Atlanta was formed with Rev. John Marchisio as pastor. Recently the church has been thoroughly renovated, newly painted and more furniture added, the work being done under the direction of the pastor. It is worthy of note that through all the vicissitudes of time from 1878 to the present this church at Atlanta has remained free from debt and in good standing, and no small credit for this is due to the pioneers, among them being John O'Malley, Michael Carroll, Peter Vinet, Daniel Brennan, Patrick Brennan, Thomas Brennan, Michael McCormack, Lawrence Hearty, John Murphy, Cornelius Lamasney, John Gannan, Michael Donnelly and Vincent Brignolia.

ELI H. RIDENOUR.—In the long time that has passed, covering more than forty years, since Eli H. Ridenour came to California he has taken an active and helpful interest in the substantial improvement and development of the central section of the state, more especially along educational lines, and is numbered among the honored pioneers whose intelligently directed efforts in early days enabled them to lay a foundation for a commonwealth, upon which has been builded a superstructure of which they have every reason to be proud. His advantages in youth were limited, but he has worked his way upward through perseverance and diligence, overcoming all difficulties and obstacles in his path, and is now one of the substantial residents of San Joaquin County. He was born near Johnstown, Pa., January 1, 1853, a son of George and Martha (Miller) Ridenour. The father, George Ridenour, removed to Clayton County, Iowa, when Eli H. was a small child of a year and a half, and was a frontiersman in that country, purchasing 240 acres of land from a Mr. Potts, who was the original settler of Clayton County. There were eleven children in the family: James, Thomas, Samuel, Alexander, deceased, Emily, deceased, Mary Ellen, Anna Liza, Mark and Richard, deceased, Emanuel and Eli H. The father passed away at the age of fifty-five, the mother surviving him until she was eighty-five years old.

Eli H. Ridenour began his mental training in the public school in the vicinity of his home and after finishing the grammar grades secured a school near his home where he taught for three terms, living at home with his parents during that time. In 1872, he entered the Western College, now Coe College, at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, working his way through this college and graduating in 1880. Immediately after graduation, he received a telegram from the San Joaquin Valley College at Woodbridge offering him a position as instructor of mathematics, which he accepted, remaining in that position for one year, when he returned to Iowa and in 1881 was married to Miss Deilah Harris at Postville, her native town. She was a daughter of Elisha Harris, an extensive farmer in the vicinity of Postville, and there Mrs. Ridenour began her education, finishing at Western College. Returning to California with his wife, Mr. Ridenour continued as the professor of mathematics at the San Joaquin College at Woodbridge until 1894, when he settled in Stockton and became the principal of the Weber school for one year. Then he became an instructor in the Stockton high school, where he taught for twenty-four consecutive years, resigning his position in 1919 to give his attention to his vineyard west of Woodbridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Ridenour are the parents of seven children: Mildred Athena died in infancy; Rheda, Mrs. Buell of San Jose, has two children, Warren Henry and Robert Allen; Hazel resides at home; Alice is Mrs. Woodhull of Stockton; Edith Mignon is Mrs. Del Monte, and with her husband resides on her father's ranch; Dr. Harris Ridenour is an instructor in the Affiliated College of Dentistry of the University of California at San Francisco; Dr. Irving Ridenour is a practicing dentist at Lodi. In 1902 Mr. Ridenour purchased twenty-eight acres of undeveloped land west of Woodbridge, which he has developed until it is now a full bearing Tokay vineyard; this ranch is under the Stockton-Mokelumne ditch. For many years the family have resided at 1900 North El Dorado Street, Stockton and the active management of the ranch is entrusted to Mr. and Mrs. Del Monte. Mr. Ridenour gives his political allegiance to the Republican party and fraternally is identified with the Masons Lodge No. 19 of Stockton. His daughter Edith is a member of the O. E. S. In citizenship he is loyal and progressive and favors everything that tends to improve the county, elevate society and advance the educational interests of his state. He and his family are identified with the Central Methodist Church of Stockton, and his influence has ever been given in behalf of public progress and improvement.

FRED J. SCHLEEF.—A native son and lifelong resident of California, Fred J. Schleeef is an enterprising agriculturist and vineyardist residing on his beautiful ninety-one-acre orchard and vineyard located on the Lower Sacramento Road one mile south of Woodbridge and one and a half miles west of Lodi. His undertakings have been unusually successful, and he is esteemed for his co-operation with all movements for the good and advancement of his community. He was born in San Francisco, October 28, 1883, the son of John and Lena (Brack) Schleeef, natives of Germany and California respectively. The father, John Schleeef, was a young man when he left Germany for America. Arriving in California in 1863, he settled in San Francisco, where he engaged in the wholesale merchandise business. The mother is a daughter of that sturdy pioneer of 1849, Jacob Brack, whose interesting biography can be found on another page of this work. They are the parents of three children: Fred J., Anna and Margaret. His parents are living retired in San Francisco at present.

Fred J. Schleeef attended the grammar schools of San Francisco and the California School of Mechanical Arts; then entered the University of California, where he studied hydraulic engineering, but did not remain until he had graduated. Removing to Lodi he farmed 750 acres of the Brack estate, which was devoted to garden truck and grain farming, and which engaged his attention for eight years. He then went to Lathrop and rented 726 acres, engaging in stock-raising and dairying, having an average of 250 cows. Success crowned his labors and industry until the great flood of 1909, which wiped him out completely, so that he was compelled to abandon his dairy. The next year, 1910, he returned to Lodi and built and developed the James Henderson dairy at Brack Station, where he had 200 acres of land and sixty head of Holstein cows; and he operated this dairy for six years. From 1913 to 1916 he was superintendent of the Stockton and Mokelumne Ditch Company, and from 1916 to 1919 devoted his entire time to the affairs of this company.

The marriage of Mr. Schleeef occurred in San Francisco, Cal., on April 5, 1918, and united him with Miss Lillian Gerard, the daughter of James Steven and Annie C. (Penny) Gerard, and a granddaughter of that old and prominent pioneer, John H. Gerard. She received her education in the schools of San Francisco. Mr. and Mrs. Schleeef are the parents of one daughter, Jean Caroline. In 1919 Mr. and Mrs. Schleeef moved to their present home containing ninety-one acres, eighty acres of which Mrs. Schleeef inherited when her grandfather's estate was divided, this being a portion of the Gerard tract one and a half miles west of Lodi on the Lower Sacramento Road, now entirely devoted to young vineyard. Mr. Schleeef owns a five-ton and a two and a half ton truck, and engages in hauling building material for the various contractors of Lodi. In politics he is a Republican, and fraternally belongs to the N. S. G. W. of San Francisco and the Elks, No. 218, of Stockton.

MRS. CANDIDA GIANNINI.—A pioneer of 1877 is Mrs. Candida Giannini, who arrived in Stockton on January 6 of that year. Before her marriage, Mrs. Giannini was Miss Candida Bertazzi, the daughter of Joseph and Louise (Rosselli) Bertazzi. Her birth occurred July 7, 1851, at St. Gotthard, Canton Ticino, Switzerland, where her parents were also born. Mrs. Giannini is the only surviving member of a family of four children. Joseph Bertazzi was a school teacher and a well-to-do farmer in his native country who passed away when his daughter Candida was only nine months old. When she was twenty-four years old she left home for America with a party of friends and upon her arrival in New York she went to live with her sister, Mrs. Rosselli, who had preceded her to America by two years. On January 6, 1877, she arrived in Stockton and on the 27th of the same month was married to John Giannini, also a native of Canton Ticino, Switzerland, born March 19, 1837, in the village of Quinto. His parents, Antone and Johanna Giannini, were farmers and were the parents of twelve children. When John Giannini was eighteen years old he accompanied his brothers, Joseph, Balthisar and Andrew and two sisters, Elizabeth and Mary, to America. John Giannini came direct to San Francisco and later engaged in mining in Tuolumne and Calaveras counties; in the sixties he came to Stockton, where he purchased land in partnership with his brothers Joseph and Andrew, and engaged in grain raising on land now known as the Sunnyside Addition to Stockton. In 1877 the holdings of the brothers were divided, John Giannini receiving twenty-two acres as his portion, a part of which is still owned by Mrs. Giannini. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Giannini; Albina, the widow of Adolph Carigiet, who assists her mother to preside over the home; Alfred, deceased, and Celia who also resides at home. Mr. Giannini received his U. S. citizenship papers in Stockton and was a staunch Republican. He passed away on March 1, 1892, honored and beloved by all who knew him. Since her husband's death, Mrs. Giannini has handled the property in a most conservative and businesslike manner and it has become one of Stockton's most favored residential sections. In 1908 Mrs. Giannini completed her beautiful home on Cherokee Lane, where she now resides, surrounded by her many friends.

Candida Giannini

JESSE W. PEARSON.—A progressive rancher whose enterprise, foresight and scientific methods have brought him enviable success and abundant prosperity, is Jesse W. Pearson, now residing on the old Stith A. Pearson home ranch where, in the comfortable home of his parents, Stith A. and Susan Pearson, he first saw light—the former a very substantial Californian whose life-story naturally forms a part of this historical volume. Nine children were born to the worthy couple; Richard Bell, now deceased, being the eldest, and Stith and Harry, also both deceased, coming next. Charles B. lives at Stockton; Nellie, resident in the same city, is Mrs. P. W. Owen; while our subject was the sixth in the order of birth. Mrs. Henry Harney, of Lodi, was Juanita Pearson before her marriage; and Violet is Mrs. Eubanks of Stockton. The youngest child died in infancy.

Jesse attended the best grammar school to which he could be sent, the long popular Greenwood school, and then he helped his father on the home farm until 1913, when he rented and managed the home place of two hundred acres devoted to grain-farming. Now he owns for himself thirty-five acres of that ranch, under fine cultivation. He is aggressive in his management, and as a good student, is always alert for the last word of science; he uses the most up-to-date methods, and approved implements.

At Stockton, on July 8, 1912, occurred the wedding of Mr. Pearson and Serena Hannah, a native of Canada, where she was born near New Brunswick, the accomplished daughter of John and Agnes Hannah. She had accompanied her father and mother to California when she was six years old, and they settled in the Waterloo district. Mr. Hannah died about ten years ago, survived by his devoted wife. The esteemed couple had a family of five children, and Serena continued her schooling in the Calaveras district. One child has blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Pearson, a daughter, Jesslyn. Mr. Pearson is a staunch Democrat, and never loses an opportunity to improve, by his broadminded sentiments and healthful influence, the status of politics, particularly as they affect local conditions.

MRS. KITTIE L. MUNFORD.—Liberal and kindly, a woman who is much interested in charitable and civic organizations is Mrs. Kittie L. Munford, who is a native daughter of the Golden West, born in Stockton. She was in maidenhood Kittie Crofton, a daughter of John and Margaret Crofton, who were born in Ireland and came to Cincinnati, Ohio, in their youth and there they were reared and educated. In the fall of 1852 Mr. Crofton came to California, crossing the plains with ox-team and wagon. His wife joined him eighteen months later, coming via the Isthmus of Panama. Mr. Crofton and family were pioneer settlers in Stockton and Mr. Crofton took an active part in the affairs of the growing city. He served as constable of the city and was an able conscientious and efficient officer; he died in 1873, aged forty-six years. He was a member of Charity Lodge of Odd Fellows. His widow survived him until 1881.

This worthy pioneer couple had six children, as follows: Mrs. Elizabeth R. Lillis of San Francisco; Margaret, Mrs. McDougald passed away in Oakland;

Mrs. Kittie Munford, the subject of this review; Ella C., Mrs. Harrell, died in Palo Alto; John died in San Francisco; Mrs. Laura Stanford resides in San Jose. Kittie Crofton attended Dr. Hunt's Seminary for several years, then the public schools until she graduated.

She was first married to Brooke C. Crawford, who was a successful merchant of the firm of Rosenbaum and Crawford and passed away March 22, 1895. Her second marriage in 1900 united her with Philip Barry Fraser. He was a prominent banker and influential man of affairs in Stockton until his death in 1910. In July, 1919, she married Edward S. Munford of Washington, D. C., now living retired in Stockton.

Mrs. Munford has always taken an active part in civic and social circles in Stockton. She is a member of the Philomathean Club and is one of the seven women who organized it. She was very prominent in the founding of the Stockton Day Nursery, being one of three women who started it, October 1, 1918, being president of its board of directors, and her efforts of those early days stand out prominently in the history of the organization.

PHILIP BARRY FRASER.—A brilliant and successful man who rose to a foremost position as a banker and financier was the late Philip Barry Fraser of Stockton. He was born in Montreal, Canada, October 12, 1841, of Scotch parentage, and received a good education in his native city.

After his school days were over, having become interested in the land of the Stars and Stripes he crossed over into New York State, where he studied telegraphy and followed that line of work in different cities in the East during the period of the Civil War until 1864, when he determined to come to California. In the summer of that year he crossed the plains with team and wagon, taking in what is now Yellowstone Park en route.

On his arrival in California he located in Stockton, where in due time he became manager for the Western Union. Here he established an enviable record for promptness, integrity and honesty of purpose, so that when the First National Bank was started he was selected for the position of cashier. This he accepted and filled the place with exceptional credit and was retained in the position for many years. In 1889 he resigned and with two business friends he founded the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Stockton, being elected its first president and manager and guided the destiny of the institution with such ability it became one of the strong financial establishments of the city. He also gave much time to other local enterprises, assisting every worthy movement that had for its aim the improvement and building up of the city, giving freely of his time and means toward civic improvement and the betterment of the conditions and enhancing the happiness of its citizens. He continued as president and manager of the Farmers and Merchants Bank until his demise on July 2, 1910.

Mr. Fraser's first marriage occurred in Stockton, when he was united with Annette Parker, who passed away in 1897, leaving three children: Mrs. Mary Pitman, Alfred P. and James C. Fraser. Three years later, in 1900, he married again, being united with Mrs. Kittie L. Crawford, a native daughter of this city, the interesting and accomplished daughter of John and Margaret (Lenchan) Crofton, pioneers of Stockton, and the widow of Brooke C. Crawford. Mr. Fraser was prominent in fraternal circles, being a Knights Templar Mason and an Elk.

Mr. Fraser was a well-read and well-informed man in literature, civic and national questions, keeping abreast of the times. Having a retentive memory and being a ready talker, he was always an interesting conversationalist.

CHARLES F. SMITH.—An enterprising rancher, who is also a native son, is Charles F. Smith, who was born on the ranch upon which he is now living about two miles west of Clements, on January 9, 1876. He is a son of John and Caroline (Megerle) Smith, the former a native of Tennessee, from which state he went to Cherokee County, Texas, and from there came to California and for some years drove stage from Sacramento to Stockton, Sonora and Benicia. Mrs. Smith was the daughter of the pioneer, Christian Megerle, who came to California the first time in 1849 and after remaining here about a year went back East for his family and to settle up his affairs, after which they came to the Coast in 1852, settled on the Mokelumne River, about three miles from Staples Ferry, about a mile west of what is now the town of Lockeford, where D. J. Staples, J. F. Staples, W. H. Nichols and a number of other pioneers had located in 1849. Mr. Megerle turned his attention to ranching and during his lifetime acquired about two sections of land, upon which he raised grain and stock. On his trip to this state he brought six of his seven children; the oldest son, C. H. Megerle, had made a start for the coast country with another train and lost his life in 1851. Those who accompanied him were Caroline, the mother of our subject; Henry J., who was killed in a fight with Indians in 1856; Ernest P., Louis J., Philip L. and Fred C. Mr. Megerle was a fine old character, influential and public spirited. He died in 1872, at the age of sixty-nine, on the ranch where he had settled in 1850. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. John Smith, who were married in Sacramento, were ten in number; William A., died in Montana in 1913; Laura E., died in 1889; Olive G. married P. W. Compton of Modesto; Fredricka, became the wife of W. S. Allen and died at Sutter Creek in 1921; Minnie I., lives in Modesto; Carrie V., is the wife of C. H. Bacon of Placerville; Charles F., of this review; Claude M. is in Oakland. Two children died in early childhood.

Charles F. Smith received his education in the Athearn school at Clements and when he was eighteen years old became the practical head of the family and has resided upon the old home place where he was born, with the exception of about five years when he was engaged in mining in Goldfield, Nevada. He now owns eighty acres of fine bottom land, which was originally owned by his Grandfather Megerle, and engages in general ranching.

The marriage of Mr. Smith in Stockton on July 29, 1915, united him with Miss Leva Murray, a native of Tazewell County, Ill., who came to California in 1904. She is a daughter of Thomas and Ella Murray, natives of Kentucky and Illinois respectively and farmers in the state of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are the parents of one son, Charles Morris. The ranch home was built in 1891, but in 1915, before his marriage, Mr. Smith remodeled it into a modernly equipped home. In politics he is a Republican and fraternally is a member and past grand of the Odd Fellows at Clements and a member of the N. S. G. W. of Lodi. Mr. Smith stands in his community as an example of honest, exemplary citizenship.

FRANK A. GUERNSEY.—A leader in the financial circles of Central California, Frank A. Guernsey, the president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Stockton, occupies a post of high responsibility in directing the affairs of this notable financial institution, recognized as one of the strong and reliable banks of the state, since its establishment more than forty years ago, Mr. Guernsey's father being one of the founders.

A descendant of two substantial old New England families, Frank A. Guernsey was born at Stockton on October 17, 1879, the son of Darius A. and Nellie (Hatch) Guernsey, the former born in the picturesque town of Lancaster, N. H., on the Connecticut River, while Mrs. Guernsey was a native of the state of Maine. Darius A. Guernsey located in San Joaquin County in the early '70s, and for a while he was a clerk in Stockwell's store at Stockton. He then went to work on the Gardenhire ranch, and he stated at that time that some day he would be the owner of this property, which prediction was fulfilled when, in later years, he was able to purchase this fine ranch of 1100 acres; he also owned several other ranches and became one of the large landowners of the county. He was prominent in the business life of Stockton, being one of the founders of the Guernsey and Allen Book and Stationery store. Later he started a piano business in Stockton, selling pianos to the farmers throughout the county. One or two pianos would be loaded on a wagon and they would start out and drive until these were sold, frequently returning to Stockton with a string of horses which they had taken in payment for the pianos. On October 1, 1888, in partnership with P. B. Fraser and D. S. Rosenbaum, Mr. Guernsey established the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Stockton, and it is interesting to note that these three men held successively the office of president of the bank.

Mr. and Mrs. Darius A. Guernsey were the parents of three children: Frank A. Guernsey, whose name heads this sketch, Mrs. Pliny E. Holt and Mrs. Harriet Du Bois. Mr. Guernsey attended the public schools, graduating from the Stockton high school in 1900. His first business venture was a clerkship in a clothing store at a very small salary. During the Pan-American Exposition held in Buffalo, N. Y., he was sent as a representative from San Joaquin County in charge of their exhibit, where he remained a year, and on returning to Stockton he entered into partnership with E. C. Dickinson under the firm name of Dickinson and Guernsey and established a grain business. At the end of a year Mr. Guernsey disposed of his interest and became the secretary of the Farmers Union & Milling Company, continuing until 1907, when he entered the grain business for himself.

On January 1, 1916, Mr. Guernsey was elected president of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, and since assuming the duties of this office he has shown unusual wisdom, progressiveness and capability in guiding the affairs of this powerful banking institution. The Farmers and Merchants Bank owns its handsome nine-story banking and office building, erected in 1917, and representing an investment of nearly half a million dollars. It stands in the heart of the business district of Stockton, towering like a beautiful monument in tribute to the officers, directors and stockholders, attesting the confidence these men have in the present and future of this city of opportunities. The bank occupies the entire lower floor of the building and it is finished in a material called "wood marble"—blocks of wood made to represent marble. This was after Mr. Guernsey's own idea, to get away from the stereotyped banking institutions of stucco, gold and silver ornaments, etc. The bank is equipped with a combination cooling and heating apparatus; in the summer this reduces the temperature and in the winter the same apparatus is used for heating. On September 30, 1919, the combined capital stock was $640,000, undivided profits, $58,883.44, deposits, $5,109,119.33. The officers of the bank are as follows: President, Frank A. Guernsey; vice-president and cashier, Will E. Morris; directors, E. F. Davis, Hillard E. Welch, George Finkbohner, Dan N. Gilmore, S. B. Coates, Frank Cox, John M. Perry. The bank maintains a branch at Oakdale with E. D. Heron as manager.

When he became president of the bank, Mr. Guernsey, who was in the grain business at the time, incorporated his interests as the Frank A. Guernsey Grain Company, with the following officers, J. W. Schuler, president; P. J. O'Connell, vice-president; H. J. Mann, secretary, but he still retains a large block of stock in this corporation.

Mr. Guernsey's marriage united him with Miss Wagner, a native of Oregon, and they are the parents of two sons, D. Albert and Frank C. Mr. Guernsey's especial hobby is his finely developed ranch of 400 acres on Rough and Ready Island; this he is developing into one of the finest dairy and orchard properties in the county. He has 100 acres of Bartlett pears, and he is building up a herd of fine, blooded stock for his modern dairy. On this property he has erected a beautiful home, which with the surrounding ranch developments, makes this one of the show places of the county. Mr. Guernsey is a member of Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. E., of Stockton.

CHARLES OSCAR WEBER.—A successful California rancher of whom the progressive agriculturists in San Joaquin County may well be proud, is Charles Oscar Weber, living two and one-half miles to the south of Clements, near which place he was born on April 7, 1878, the son of Charles Kimball and Louisa Mohrmann Weber, born in New Hampshire and Iowa respectively, who came to California about sixty years ago, early enough for them still to render the state some worthwhile service as pioneers. Mr. Weber settled on a ranch about two and a half miles south of the site of the present Clements, when Lockeford was the post office and one had to take a long, far look to discern a neighbor. Six children came to gladden Mr. and Mrs. Weber. Minnie has become Mrs. G. Linn; Charles O. is the subject of our interesting sketch; Carrie is Mrs. Daniel Linn, of Stockton; Elsie is Mrs. Clarence McPherson of near Lockeford; Mamie is Mrs. Pettengill, and lives at San Jose; and Bernice is Mrs. Clifford, also of Lockeford.

Charles O. Weber attended both the Grant and the Brandt schools, and when the road past his father's house became a county highway and a bridge was erected across Bear Creek, he attended the Athearn school at Clements. Still later, he profited by an excellent commercial course at the Stockton Business College. He remained home assisting his father in farming and stockraising until he was married on the Dilmond Steacy Ranch, west of Mackville, on December 20, 1908, to Miss Marietta Crawford, a native of the Brandt school district, San Joaquin County, and the daughter of William B. and Minnie (Anderson) Crawford, born in Illinois and Denmark respectively and married in California. Mrs. Crawford died when Marietta was eleven years old, and her father passed away in her twelfth year, one year and one day after the mother's death, leaving her and a brother named Morgan. Then she was reared by the Dilmond Steacy family, where she lived until she was married. While her parents were yet living, they had moved into Stockton, where the family lived for a while; and so it happened that she attended the Washington school. Then her folks removed to Murphy, in Calaveras County, and there she attended the Peppermint district school.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Weber bought the old Weber home place of 160 acres. In 1916 they added 160 acres, and in 1920 acquired another half-section. The 160 acres and the 320 acres are in the Bellota district in the eastern end of San Joaquin County, and are used as grazing land; while the half-section is farm land and can be cultivated. Mr. Weber has twelve head of work horses, and is well equipped with the most modern of farm appliances. He also leases from his father at Lockeford and is engaged in grain and stock raising. He is a Republican in matters of national political import, and is ever ready both to "boost" the local section and to support any well-endorsed measure likely to work for the prosperity of the country as a whole. Mr. Weber is an Odd Fellow, affiliated with the Clements lodge, No. 355, I. O. O. F. He has two children, Melvin Oscar and Lester Kimball, who are attending the Athearn school.

CHARLES E. ROSIN.—A highly-esteemed pioneer, whose useful life, serving unselfishly his day and generation, was duly appreciated by all who knew him, was Charles E. Rosin, a native of Pomerania, Germany, where he was born on December 8, 1861. He enjoyed a good education in his native country, and came out to the west coast of America, by way of Cape Horn, on the steamship Miranda, in 1890, stopping for a brief visit at Valparaiso. Arriving at San Francisco, he made his way into the San Joaquin Valley, and located in the Jefferson district.

In 1882, he was married to Miss Christine Lorenzen, who was born at Satrup, Holstein, Germany, on October 12, 1860, and remained behind in Europe when her husband ventured to establish himself in the New World. In 1893, she came out to Chicago and the World's Fair; after which she progressed westward, to join her husband, who had set himself up as a carpenter and builder at Tracy, and who, from 1895 to 1898, owned 160 acres in the Jefferson district. Five children were born to this union. Augusta has become the wife of Joseph Armstrong and they reside at Byron with their three children. Mary is the wife of William Kelso, and they reside in Contra Costa County with their two children. August F., who is single, is a driver for the Pacific Gas and Electric Corporation, and he has an enviable record for overseas service during the World War. He enlisted on August 7, 1917, with the 86th Aero Corps, and served for eleven months, in action from Variincourt to Behonnee, in park-squadron salvage, and in the supply department of aircraft in action; and on June 6, 1919, he received his honorable discharge. William H. Rosin also has an enviable record. He served with the 13th Ammunition Train in training at Camp Lewis, and received an honorable discharge on January 19, 1919. Emma is the wife of Glenn Perryman, and the mother of one child; and they reside at Stockton.

Rich in a wide circle of admiring and devoted friends, Mr. Rosin, who had always been an active Odd Fellow and was a past member of the Encampment, passed away on August 24, 1914, at the Rosin residence on Sixth Street, which had been their home since 1910. Mrs. Rosin is a member of the Rebekahs.

CHARLES A. RUSSELL.—A native son and life long resident of San Joaquin County, Cal. Charles A. Russell has a fine estate of 110 acres four miles south of Stockton on the Tracy Road. He is the eldest son of C. C. and Julia (Bush) Russell and was born at Knights Ferry, July 20, 1865. The parents were natives of Kentucky and Massachusetts, respectively. The father, C. C. Russell, was born in 1830 and while still a young man settled in the vicinity of Cairo, Ill., and was a charter member of the I. O. O. F. lodge at that place. The mother's family migrated West to Illinois from Massachusetts in 1846. Early in 1849 the Russell family started across the plains for California, but on account of illness they were forced to stay in Missouri and so did not reach California until 1852. The father mined for three years, then moved to Galt where he engaged in farming, having as his partner a Mr. Harvey, and among the historical landmarks of the Galt section is what is known as the Russell and Harvey pocket. In 1869 the family removed to Copperopolis and were principally occupied with stock raising until 1876 when they moved to Farmington and there conducted a hotel until 1885. C. C. Russell then disposed of his hotel business and began ranching near Farmington where he remained until his death in 1904, the mother passing away on April 18, 1908. The father was a staunch Democrat. He had two brothers who served in the Union Army during the Civil War and one brother who served on the Confederate side.

The education of Charles A. Russell was begun at the Farmington school and finished with a business course at Stockton. On April 16, 1885, occurred his marriage with Miss Sarah E. Smalling, a native of San Joaquin County, daughter of Isaac G. Smalling, prominent cattle man of this section.

Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Russell. Charles C. married Miss Mina Biochenberger of Lodi, and they have two children, Eva and Harold. He is an expert electrician and mechanic and graduated from the State Mechanical Department at Santa Barbara and is at present engaged as a teacher in manual arts at the high school at Yuba. The younger of the family is Myrna A. Russell. In 1892 Mr. Russell located at Stockton and followed building contracting for five years, then engaged in farming. In 1905 he purchased thirty acres on which he erected a residence and since that time has bought eighty acres more, which he has developed into a rich productive ranch, constituting one of the good farms of the neighborhood. He also owns desirable real estate at Stockton and Fresno.

MRS. MARIA SANGUINETTI.—Since 1879 Mrs. Maria Sanguinetti has been a resident of California, and has borne her full share of the duties and responsibilities that were the lot of successful Californians from the early days to the present. She resides on her forty-one-acre orchard and vineyard home seven miles northeast of Stockton, on which she has built a modern bungalow home. She was born at Paggi in the province of Genoa, Italy, April 28, 1867, a daughter of Gio Batta and Anna (Podesto) Podesto, also natives of that town, who were substantial farmers. Her father was a soldier in the Italian army for eleven years and was a veteran of the war with Napoleon. He received a silver medal from the government, a mark of honor for distinguished services in the war. He resided on his home farm until his death in 1910 at the age of eighty-three years, leaving a fine and honorable record, a much esteemed and highly respected man; his widow is still living at the old home at the age of seventy-seven years. Maria is the eldest in a family of five children, the others being Katherine; Louise, deceased; another daughter Louise who became Mrs. Sturla, living in Italy; and Stefano, deceased. Maria Podesto was educated in the private schools near her home. She had an uncle in Buenos Ayres named Louis Podesto and another, Albert Podesto, in California, and so had an opportunity to go to either South America or California, finally deciding to come to the land of gold and sunshine on the Pacific Coast, a decision she has never regretted. On June 12, 1879, Maria Podesto left her native land for California in company with her uncle, John Podesto, her mother's brother, and after her arrival in California kept house for him for a year, then she worked at various places until her marriage. In Stockton, on February 5, 1882, she was married to John Sanguinetti, also a native of Genoa, Italy, a son of Augusto and Katherine Sanguinetti, farmers in Italy. John Sanguinetti was educated in Italy and was a horticulturist and viticulturist. He first married Miss Maria Prato in Italy and they had three children: Angelo, deceased; Anna and Jennie, of Stockton.

John Sanguinetti and his first wife came to California while young and settled at Stockton where John Sanguinetti engaged in truck gardening on land where now stands the Sperry Flour Mills, and his wife passed away while residing there. Subsequently he met and married Maria Podesto and they purchased a ranch about six miles northeast of Stockton in the Morado section, consisting of twenty-seven acres of bare land, which was developed to orchard. John Sanguinetti died on that place November 21, 1896, aged fifty-one years, and the home place was divided equally between Mrs. Sanguinetti and his two daughters by his former marriage. Mrs. Sanguinetti received thirteen acres as her share of the estate, and two years ago she sold her portion of the old home place. Twelve years ago she had purchased twenty acres in the Morado precinct where she now resides, and she has added to her original purchase until she now owns forty-one acres in orchard, vineyard and hay land, which is well irrigated by an electric pumping plant, thus making it productive, so it brings a fine income. While Mrs. Sanguinetti leases most of her ranch, yet she has demonstrated her ability to make good along agricultural lines. In politics she is a staunch supporter of the Republican party. She has seen a great improvement in the county in the forty-three years of her residence here, Stockton having grown from a small place to a large city with handsome buildings and paved streets. She loves her adopted state and would not be content to live elsewhere.

JOSEPH F. STUART.—In 1912 the Ripon Nursery & Improvement Company was established and since that time Joseph F. Stuart has been president and general manager; this company deals extensively in handling large stocks of fruit and nut trees, with headquarters on the Cactus Ranch on the Tracy-Lathrop highway. At the present time this company is featuring the Stuart Prolific Almond as well as the Stuart Prune, both being originated by Mr. Stuart several years ago. He was born near Silvertown, Solano County, October 19, 1864, a son of Daniel S. and Lydia Ann (Philpot) Stuart. Daniel S. Stuart was a Californian forty-niner, who started West, but was shipwrecked at Acapulco, Mexico, and packed and walked across the Isthmus; they encountered severe hardships, and many died from the Panama fever. He arrived in San Francisco, Cal., and went to Amador County, where he engaged in mining, meeting with considerable success on the North Fork of the American River; in 1850 he returned East and spent seven years at his home in Bangor, Maine; then in 1858 he came around the Horn to San Francisco with his wife and five children and they located on the south end of Grand Island in Sacramento County, where he became a successful horticulturist. The flood of 1862 completely inundated Grand Island and Mr. Stuart and family lost all their personal property as well as the houses and barns, horses, cattle, hogs, etc., including 1000 cords of wood, which was swept away into San Francisco Bay. Thus bankrupt, he removed to Solano County, and started in anew at Silvertown. He and his son A. V. went into the mines again for two years and made a good clean-up. The rest of his life was devoted to farming, and at the time of his death he was rated at from $60,000 to $100,000.

Nine children were born to this worthy pioneer couple: A. V., resides in Ripon; J. E., is a well known artist of San Francisco; Annie, deceased; A. W., resides in Sacramento; Mrs. E. V. Coleman, resides in Antioch; Mrs. Walter Brady; Joseph F., the subject of this sketch; Annie, deceased; and Nancy Hunt, resides in Los Angeles. In 1883 Joseph F. and his two brothers A. V. and A. W. Stuart removed to Stanislaus County and engaged in grain farming southwest of Oakdale on the lands owned by T. K. Beard, which they farmed for four years. In 1887, the mother of our subject and A. W. Stuart bought 200 acres near Oakdale, and in 1888 Joseph F. was put in charge. Here he developed a fine orchard of almonds, peaches, apricots and pears. It was while on this Oakdale ranch that he originated the Stuart almond and the Stuart prune. The Stuart prune is a very valuable contribution to California horticulture. The original tree propagated by Mr. Stuart near Oakdale, Stanislaus County, is now twenty-seven years old and is still healthy and a good bearer. It is a seedling of the Silver prune, crossed with the Tragedy prune, taking its flavor and color from the Tragedy, but retains the meat, size, and sweetness of the Silver. It is an easy dryer, drying in less time than any other prune of its size. The university test discloses 53 to 55% of sugar—the highest of any prune known. Mr. Stuart has several acres in bearing and finds that the Stuart ripens earlier than the Silver, but a little later than the Tragedy. It takes less lye to cut them than the French, and they dry quicker and heavier than any other prune.

Thus far, the Ripon Nursery has been unable to supply the demand for this variety, owing no doubt to the fact that growers have found that it returns a greater profit than any other prune. Mr. Stuart continued his operations at Oakdale until 1904, when with his brother A. V. Stuart, he bought 320 acres near Ripon, known as the Ruhl tract; two years later the partnership was dissolved and A. V. Stuart continued in the olive industry and Joseph F. devoted his entire time to orchard development, which was later incorporated in 1912, as the Ripon Nursery & Improvement Company.

On October 9, 1888, Mr. Stuart was married to Miss Jennie E. Mann, born near Silvertown, daughter of Daniel L. and Jane E. (Southern) Mann, both natives of Iowa, who came to California in 1869. The Stuart home was at Ripon until four years ago when they removed to Stockton. Six children have been born to them: Arthur L., is a merchant at Ripon; Ernest F., is a peace officer at Stockton; Raymond S., resides in Ripon; Allen E., resides at Ripon; Wesley W., is associated with his father; and Evelyn is the wife of Loren McMullin and they reside in Stockton. Mr. Stuart is a Republican and has always been a strong temperance man and is highly esteemed by all who know him.

THOMAS H. STAGG.—A representative business man of San Joaquin County whose influence in commercial circles has increased each year with his own interesting activities, is Thomas H. Stagg, the pioneer harness dealer and auto trimmer of North Main Street, Manteca. He was born in Allegany County, N. Y., on October 24, 1851, the son of Jacob D. Stagg, who came across the plains to California in 1853, and settled at Stockton. There, in partnership with R. B. Lane and H. S. Sargent he established and conducted a flour mill on Weber Ave., between San Joaquin and Sutter streets.

Our subject accompanied his mother West by way of the Isthmus of Panama, arriving in Stockton on New Year's Day, 1856. He attended the public schools of Stockton and Santa Cruz, and in 1868 returned to Stockton and entered the harness shop of the late Thomas Cunningham, the pioneer and ex-sheriff, where for seven years he worked daily. In 1877, he went to Portland to become a foreman in a large factory; but in 1879, he went to Seattle and was in business until 1885. In 1885, he returned to California and settled at Modesto, and was the foreman for B. Weil & Son, until 1900; on January 1, that year he became a stockholder and department manager in the Turner Hardware Company, at Modesto, and for twenty-one years he was with that firm at Modesto.

At Merced, on April 5, 1875, he was married to Miss Julia Robbins, a daughter of Norman Robbins, a prominent and influential pioneer capitalist at Stockton. Four children were born to this fortunate union. Florence married and is the widow of Fred Post; and she resides with her daughter at Stockton. Harry is vice-president of the Turner Hardware Company, at Modesto, and has a wife and two children. Robin has become Mrs. J. C. Adams, and she resides at San Francisco with her two daughters. And Raymond Stagg has a wife and three sons, and is a prominent commercial photographer, with a well-known studio at Los Angeles, being one of the leading artists in his line. Mrs. Stagg passed away at Modesto on June 4, 1917, mourned by a wide circle of admiring friends.

After living for thirty-four years in Stanislaus County, Mr. Stagg in September, 1919, removed to Manteca, where he opened a first-class harness and leather-goods shop on North Main Street. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Manteca, is prominent as a Republican and has served on the County Central Committee of that party, and he has been president of the California Retail Harness Manufacturing Association for the past three years.

JOHN MILAN THORNTON.—For more than a half century John Milan Thornton has been a successful agriculturist in San Joaquin County, his ranching activities being in the locality of Escalon. He has been an eyewitness of the growth and development of this portion of the county and in no small measure has aided in its advancement. He was born in Van Buren County, Iowa, January 9, 1850, and is the youngest son of a family of seven children, three sons and four daughters. His father, Calvin S. Thornton, was a native of New York, who migrated to Iowa with his wife in 1840 with wagons drawn by ox teams. In 1861, Calvin S. Thornton with his wife and family started West; their mules and horses were commandeered by the rebel forces and the party was delayed in Missouri for some weeks and when they were ready to resume their journey, their wagons were drawn by oxen. Captain Brown was in charge of the train of 100 wagons. Six months were spent on the way, and they narrowly escaped the Mountain Meadow massacre. Of the 100 wagons that started from Missouri only about twelve completed the journey to California, the others remaining in Oregon. The Thornton family took up their residence on the John Pollock ranch near Bellota and experienced the great flood of 1862, but remained there until 1864; then they farmed near Waterloo until 1865, when they settled in the Lone Tree district. The original purchase was 160 acres of government land, which was mostly farmed to wheat; the first schoolhouse was built on a portion of this ranch and there the Thornton children attended school. Since John Milan Thornton was fifteen years old he has been interested in farming. He was associated with his father, and on his father's death, February 2, 1894, he continued to farm the home place for his mother until she passed away ten years later. In 1878, Mr. Thornton bought eighty acres in the Elliott district of San Joaquin County and this he farmed in conjunction with his father's place.

On January 4, 1886 in Modesto, Mr. Thornton was married to Miss Laura Peatross, a native of California, born near Bodega, July 26, 1863, a daughter of William W. and Hester (Phelps) Peatross, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Illinois; and the father was a California forty-niner. They are the parents of four children: Frank Sumner, also represented in this volume; Ethel H.; Elmer P.; Merle E., resides in Utah. Mr. Thornton has served as trustee on the school board and also on the board of trustees of the Methodist Church at Escalon. He owns a choice ranch of ninety acres near Escalon and owns a fine residence in town where he makes his home; he also owns other valuable real estate. His labors have been effective in promoting the educational, social and material advancement of his community, and he endorses every measure which tends to advance the general welfare.

MR. AND MRS. JAMES HAMLINE HIGH.—In August, 1905, Mr. and Mrs. James Hamline High located in Lodi, Cal., and bought a fifteen-acre ranch in the Kettleman tract, on Cherokee Lane, now known as the High Ranch, where they passed their sunset days in peace and quietness. James Hamline High was born in Hillsdale County, Mich., on April 16, 1844, a son of Hiram and Rebecca P. (Kellogg) High, the former a native of Lyons, N. Y. and the latter of Connecticut, both families living close to the state lines of Connecticut and New York.

The first marriage of Mr. High occurred on December 11, 1867, at Sharon, Mich., and united him with Miss Phebe A. Peck, a native of Michigan and the daughter of Wait and Lucinda (Mills) Peck, both natives of Connecticut, their forbears dating back to Revolutionary days. They were pioneers of Michigan when it was still a territory and the patent to their land was signed by President Andrew Jackson. Mr. High with his young wife settled on a small farm in Cass County, Mo., where they endured the hardships of pioneer life in a new country, starting at the bottom round of the ladder. The first great sorrow that entered his life came in March 1870, when his wife died and left him with an infant daughter only ten days old, now Mrs. P. H. Walker of Lodi, the mother of two daughters, Irene and Elizabeth. Mr. High manfully entered into his new task and became a devoted, loving father and tenderly cared for the little life entrusted to his keeping. He was of the hardy, vigorous, energetic type and entered into farming and stock raising with zeal and determination, and success crowned his efforts.

Mr. High's second marriage occurred on April 18, 1871, near Harrisonville, Mo., and united him with Miss Elizabeth A. Cook, a daughter of John and Mary (Campbell) Cook, both parents descendants of early Virginian stock who had migrated to Missouri in frontier days. She assumed the responsibility and care of the daughter and reared her with all the loving care of a mother. After a lapse of fourteen years, during which time the family came to California intending to locate, the conditions not being favorable he, with his wife and daughter, moved to North Dakota, where he engaged in agriculture and sheep raising on a large scale. His land was in the hard wheat belt and products from that vast prairie district were mentioned as coming from the "bread basket of the world." After the hardships of twenty years in the extreme cold north, both Mr. and Mrs. High began to feel the inroads of the severe winters on their health and felt a change was necessary, so they sold the land and stock and after traveling a few years, settled down once more, this time in the beautiful fertile county of San Joaquin, and here Mr. High made a new venture, in a new place, that of viticulture. When they located in this vicinity they became an integral part of all that was good and best in the community. They united with the Congregational Church and devoted their lives to the welfare and uplift of humanity and for the furtherance of the Kingdom of God; they loved their neighbors and friends and always extended the cordial hand to the stranger for the betterment of those around them.

Mr. High was a faithful member of the Masonic order, being a Knight Templar and a Shriner, but his favorite place was among his brothers of the Blue Lodge and he carried its teachings throughout his life; his "compass" pointed to truth and veracity and his life was measured on the "square" to his fellowmen. Mr. and Mrs. High enjoyed, beside their church affiliation, the social order of the Eastern Star where they found enjoyment in mingling with men and women interested in the affairs of life. In politics he was a Republican, but maintained the independence of personal thinking where he put man above party and principle above platform. He was always vitally interested in local, national and international affairs. He was a student of moral policies and was ever alive for the moral, social and industrial welfare of our country.

As the sun goes down on the Western horizon, so he went down at the close of a well-spent life and his posterity rise up to call him blessed. He passed away on October 23, 1917. Mrs. High tarried a few years, but the empty void in her life bore down upon her frail body after her husband departed this life and she quickly succumbed to the ravishes of disease and joined him on July 6, 1920, in "a home not made by hands, eternal in the heavens." Her life was gentle, sweet and lovable and she was endeared to all who knew her. Where her body was frail her mind was strong in the faith of God. While their ashes have returned to the dust of Mother Earth, their spirits have taken flight to the God who gave them and the sweet memories of their lives will abide and live in the hearts of all who knew them.

Lives of great men oft remind us,
We can make our lives sublime
And departing leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

FREDERICK R. POLENSKE.—Since coming to Lodi in 1914, Frederick R. Polenske has built up a splendid business entirely through his own efforts, and now as proprietor of the Service Laundry, his patronage is steadily increasing. Mr. Polenske is a native of Nebraska, and was born at Kenesaw, Adams County, December 25, 1890. His father, Emil G. Polenske, is one of the largest brick manufacturers of the Middle West, and was the founder of the firm of Polenske Bros. & Schellak Brick Manufacturing Company, their plant at Hastings, Neb., having a capacity of 20,000,000 brick per year.

The family removed from Kenesaw to Hastings, Neb., and here Frederick R. Polenske attended the public schools, later taking a business college course. From the age of fifteen he was associated with his father in the brick manufacturing business, remaining there until 1914, when he came to California, locating at Lodi. Here he entered the employ of the Lodi Steam Laundry and after a few months bought a half-interest in the concern. He operated this laundry until August, 1920, when he started a laundry business of his own, under the name of the Service Laundry, of which he is the sole owner. He purchased a lot at 505 North Sacramento Street and there erected a modern building, especially equipped for this business, and he has been successful from the start, two wagons now being kept busy in handling his increasing trade. He has solicited all his business personally, and still continues to give individual attention to all its details, a feature much appreciated by his patrons. His first week's receipts were $147, and the twenty-first week showed a business of $480, while the 112th week showed a business of $900, dem-

On July 7, 1914, at Humboldt, Iowa, Mr. Polenske was married to Miss Olga Kuchnast, who was born in Fort Dodge, Iowa, and they are the parents of two children, Emma Louise and Virginia. Progressive in all his ideas, Mr. Polenske can be depended upon to contribute to any movement for the upbuilding of his community, and is a member of the Lodi Business Men's Association and the National and State Laundrymen's Associations, and the Exchange Club of Lodi of which he is a director.

FRANK SUMNER THORNTON.—One of the esteemed and helpful citizens of San Joaquin County is Frank Sumner Thornton, who occupies the position of assessor and collector in the South San Joaquin Irrigation District, having been elected to this office in February, 1919. To his effective work as promoter may be attributed the rapid growth of the business and he has proved his exceptional qualifications for the duties imposed. He was born on his grandfather's ranch near Sebastopol, Cal., October 18, 1883, a son of John Milan and Laura (Peatross) Thornton, natives of Iowa and California, respectively, whose sketch will be found elsewhere in this history.

Frank Sumner Thornton was reared on a farm and began his education in the district school known as the Lone Tree district, San Joaquin County. In 1905 he was graduated from the San Francisco Business College. He then found work as a stenographer and bookkeeper in the Bay City for a short time, when he went to Folsom, where he found employment with the Folsom Development Company, which occupied him for eighteen months; he then removed to Los Angeles to take charge of the Southern California branch of the California Moline Plow Company, and in 1907 was transferred to Stockton in the employ of the same company. On account of impaired health he gave up his position within three months after arriving in Stockton and went to ranching on his father's place near Escalon. The following year he returned to the business college in San Francisco, where he took review work, then went to Siskiyou County, and there worked for six months for the Northern California Lumber Company; then he received an offer from the Natomas Consolidated Company at Folsom as billing and shipping clerk, and while in their employ billed out the rock and gravel used on many highways in Central California, the shipments reaching thirty car loads per day. Returning to Escalon, Mr. Thornton again took up the realty business until 1911, when he purchased the Escalon Tribune. This he successfully operated for some four years, when he sold his interest to Mr. Morgenson. Mr. Thornton has also successfully engaged in the real estate and insurance business in Escalon.

On August 16, 1911, Mr. Thornton was united in marriage with Miss Edna E. Early, born near Stockton, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Early, ranchers and pioneers of the Weber district, six miles southeast of Stockton. Mr. and Mrs. Thornton are the parents of three children: Lucille, Evelyn E., and Mildred Marie. Mr. Thornton is secretary of the Escalon Water & Light Company and is now a stockholder and director of the company; he was the vice-president of the Escalon Commercial Club and chairman of the board of trustees of the Escalon grammar school, who have just completed a new $18,000 building. Fraternally, he is a past noble grand of the I. O. O. F., at Manteca and Mrs. Thornton is active in the Parent-Teachers Association of San Joaquin County, the Home Department of the Farm Bureau, the Woman's Improvement Club and the Ladies' Guild of the Presbyterian Church in Escalon. Both Mr. and Mrs. Thornton are enthusiasts of the outdoor life and a portion of each season is spent in the high Sierras or at the seashore with their family.

JOSEPH C. MARSHALL.—A vineyardist of exceptional experience, the outcome of varied and successful enterprise, is Joseph C. Marshall, better known as Charles Marshall, and in business matters usually signified as J. C. Marshall, a native of Washington, Pa., and now residing on his ranch at the corner of Cherokee Lane and the Galt-Elliott road, some seven miles north of Lodi. He was born on March 8, 1878, a son of Frederick and Elizabeth (Clark) Marshall, natives of Somersetshire, England, who reached America on the sailing vessel "Underwriter," only after surviving three shipwrecks. Frederick Marshall was a coal miner in England. He was an orphan, who worked his way up, step by step, until he became a coal operator in the Pennsylvania mines. In early life he belonged to that class of heroic workmen, laboring under the most trying of conditions, to whom society owes so much for its advancement as well as for its very preservation. He became well-to-do and operated his coal mine on Chartiers Creek, in Pennsylvania, but when the Johnstown flood came, it flooded his mine and ruined him financially. Ten children, five boys and five girls, made up the family of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall; and owing to the large number to be fed and clothed, J. C. Marshall early did what he could to aid his parents, and from his eighteenth year made his way alone in the world.

He first became an iron-moulder in Pennsylvania, and later removed to Ohio; then he went to the Mannington, W. Va., oil fields and became a driller. In 1908 he reached California, and for the next ten years he was at Maricopa in the West Side oil fields of Kern County. He then went to Desdemona, Texas, and later went to Oklahoma and was in the Duke field soon after going to Texas, where he worked in the Desdemona oil fields as a driller.

At Washington, Pa., on April 17, 1900, Mr. Marshall was married to Miss Ellen McClain, a native of that same district, the daughter of Samuel and Clara McClain, and of Scotch-Irish descent. One of a family of six children, she was reared at Washington, Pa., and there attended the grammar school, the high school, and business college. From Duke, Okla., Mr. Marshall returned to California, on December 1, 1920. He had a ranch of twenty acres on the Cherokee Lane road, about six miles north of Lodi; and having sold that about a year ago, he purchased the old John Quiggle ranch at the corner of the Galt-Elliott road and Cherokee Lane. This ranch has a vineyard of eleven acres on it, and is amply irrigated from an independent pumping plant owned by Mr. Marshall, who likewise maintains a small dairy there.

Two children were born in the Marshall household. Elizabeth has become Mrs. Harry Dart, of Sacramento; and Grace is the wife of Earl Dart, of Sacramento, both girls having married brothers. Elizabeth has one son, Marshall Dart, born November 18, 1921. Mr. Marshall is a member of Masonic Lodge No. 257, of Galt.

LOT LACHENMAIER.—Industry, thrift and frugality, coupled with a judicious management of one's financial affairs, are traits that usually bring success to the man who practices them in whatever line of business he may be engaged. To these characteristics in the life of Lot Lachenmaier, the popular and influential vice-president of the Farmers & Merchants' Bank of Lodi, is due his substantial prosperity. He was born in the southern part of Russia on May 3, 1863, at a country place near Odessa, on the Black Sea, a son of Frederick and Barbara (Bauer) Lachenmaier, who were well-to-do agriculturists owning their own farm. The great-grandfather, Jacob Lachenmaier, brought his family from Wittenberg, Germany, to Odessa at the time of the settlement there of the German colony, his son Frederick, Lot's grandfather, then being eighteen years of age, and the family thrived and became well-to-do.

Lot Lachenmaier had read and heard much concerning the opportunities that awaited young men in the United States, so he emigrated to Scotland, S. D., where he found employment on a farm at twenty dollars per month during the summers, while winters he worked for his board. In 1886, deciding to take advantage of securing a homestead, he located a claim of 160 acres in McIntosh County, N. D., and also a timber claim of like amount. This was then a desolate, wild prairie country and he was fifty-five miles from a railroad, hauling his supplies from the nearest town with an ox-team. He was a pioneer in that part of the country, and he had many hardships and discouragements, but with true pioneer spirit he farmed his land to grain and raised cattle; later he fenced his property and from time to time acquired more land until he was among the largest and most successful grain growers and cattle raisers in the state. He was also district assessor of the county. He still owns a section and a half of land in that county, which he has leased. In 1889 he removed to the town of Lehr, a place started when the railroad came through, and he built the first store and conducted a general merchandise business. When the town was incorporated he was a member of the first board of trustees and was instrumental in building up the locality until 1910, when he arrived in Lodi. His first constructive work was the starting of the town of Victor, four miles east of Lodi on the Valley Springs branch of the Southern Pacific railroad. He bought five acres and built the first store building and started the first store, engaging in general merchandising; he also built two residences.

Mr. Lachenmaier's activities in the buying and selling of ranches have been considerable. At the present time he owns a four-acre vineyard in the west end of Lodi which is now within the city limits, and which he expects to subdivide into residence lots. He started the petition for the erection of the Victor school and the bridge across the river and it was through his influence and work that these projects were carried to completion. He was a member of the board of trustees of the Victor school up to 1915, when he removed to Lodi. He was one of the organizers and has been the vice-president of the Farmers' and Merchants' Bank of Lodi since its organization in 1916 and he has won the esteem and respect of the entire community.

The first marriage of Mr. Lachenmaier occurred in South Dakota in 1884, uniting him with Miss Margaret Fichtner, of whom he was bereaved in February, 1914. About a year later he was married to Mrs. Louisa Handel. She was also born near Odessa, and both are active members of the Evangelical church. Mr. Lachenmaier was for many years superintendent of the Sunday school in this community as well as in South Dakota, and he was also a trustee of the church, being treasurer of the building committee at the erection of the new $40,000 church in Lodi. He can justly feel proud to be called a self-made man, because of the splendid success he has made by his own unaided efforts. In politics he is a Republican.

Mr and Mrs Lot Sachermaier

OSCAR ALLEN SEAMANDS.—Since 1861, Oscar Allen Seamands has been a citizen of San Joaquin County, being but two years old when he accompanied his parents to California. He was born in Gentry County, Mo., January 14, 1859, a son of Joshua and Josephine (Andrews) Seamands, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Illinois. Joshua Seamands, the father, grew to manhood in Iowa and prior to 1861 served as sheriff of Boone County for two terms. Early in the spring of 1861 the family set out for California with covered wagons drawn by oxen and on arriving in the state settled at Stockton. In 1868 Joshua Seamands became the superintendent of the Stockton Rural Cemetery and served in that capacity for ten years; he also served as coroner of Stockton for one term. There were four children in the family, of whom our subject is the youngest, and he is the only one surviving. In 1884 the father located in Tulare where he bought a ranch and became a successful farmer until his death in 1892. The mother passed away on February 25, 1869, and in 1874 the father was married to Miss Mary Nevin of Lodi and three sons and one daughter were born of this union, all of whom now reside near Tulare. Joshua Seamands was a Mason and an active member of the Knights of Pythias.

Oscar Allen Seamands received a good public school education at the old North Eldorado school in Stockton and his boyhood days were spent on the farm. At seventeen years of age he entered the employ of Ed. Clowes, the nurseryman, as book-keeper, where he remained for six years when he gave up office work to take a position with the Stockton Street Railway Company, and remained with them for five years. In 1898 the tales of the riches of the Klondike country caused him to resign his position and in company with Woods and Curtis make the trip to the frozen North. For five years he bore the privations and hardships of that region, most of the time being spent near Dawson and Nome, prospecting. Mr. Seamands recalls the pleasure he experienced in receiving a package from a Mission Indian runner, containing six copies of the Stockton Record, on which he paid $5 express charges. On opening the package he found that the papers were two years old, but none the less welcome. Times were good in the Klondike, but the privations and extreme cold proved detrimental to Mr. Seamands' health; so he returned to the states and on June 21, 1905, was married to Mrs. Mary (Lawrence) Buzzell, born near the Mossdale bridge, San Joaquin County, on August 4, 1869, a daughter of Joseph and Nora (Gallagher) Lawrence. Joseph Lawrence was a native of Portugal, and when a lad of twelve years went to sea on an English whaler and followed that life until he was twenty-five years old. Her mother was a native of Ireland, who came to California in 1867, and she and Mr. Lawrence were married at San Leandro at the Moss home on October 6, 1867. Joseph Lawrence was employed by Capt. Moss, who owned and conducted a ferry on the river prior to the coming of the railroad, and remained with him for eleven years. They were the parents of four children: Mary, Mrs. Oscar A. Seamands; Frank E. Lawrence is married and resides at Stockton; Mrs. Anna E. Walker died October 17, 1919; Thomas Lawrence was drowned in the San Joaquin River June 24, 1875, being three years and three months old. Mrs. Seamands' father passed away on March 10, 1916, his wife surviving him until June 13, 1916. Miss Mary Lawrence was first married at Stockton on June 12, 1888 to Joseph Buzzell, a native of California of French and American descent whose father came to America in 1840, and they were the parents of two children, Helen and Lawrence. Mr. Buzzell became deputy sheriff under Tom Cunningham and he was killed on November 28, 1895, near Paradise Cut, San Joaquin County while in the discharge of his duty. Fraternally Mr. Seamands is a member of the Fraternal Brotherhood and since 1892 has been a member of the Stockton Lodge of the Knights of Pythias, and politically he votes as a Republican. He has served as a trustee of the Mossdale school for three terms, and Mrs. Seamands has served for two terms, and it was during her second term as trustee in 1918 that the present school building was finished. Mr. and Mrs. Seamands have an adopted daughter, Verna, a girl of thirteen. On January 1, 1907, Mr. Seamands became superintendent of the San Joaquin River bridge at Mossdale in the employ of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company; this bridge is a fine structure completed January 25, 1896; the Bell telephone and telegraph station is also located at this point. For the past twenty years, Mrs. Seamands has had charge of the U. S. Weather Observation Bureau station at Mossdale. Both Mr. and Mrs. Seamands are representative citizens of their locality and have contributed to its upbuilding and improvement.

MRS. GRACE J. SOUTH.—One of the pioneer families in the Golden State is that which now finds a worthy representative in San Joaquin County in Mrs. Grace J. South, the only daughter of the late Franklin Lafayette Johnson, who came to California in 1851. Mrs. South has inherited many of the sterling qualities that made her father such an influential man in his locality and since the death of her husband, C. W. South, has continued the management of his interests at Ripon in a most capable manner. Grace Johnson was born near Elliott, Cal., and is the only child of Franklin Lafayette and Una A. (Paulk) Johnson, natives of Georgia and Ohio, respectively. Mr. Johnson was born in 1834, in the village of Griffith near Atlanta, Ga., and in 1851 joined a party for California via Panama, the journey requiring ten weeks to complete. The party experienced some sickness enroute to California and when the California coast was reached, Mr. Johnson was so ill that he was obliged to land at San Juan, where he remained until he had recovered. He then went to Santa Clara Valley and worked for a year, then engaged in freighting to Carson City, Nev. His work was rewarded and he concluded to engage in farming. On March 2, 1876, he was married to Miss Una A. Paulk, a native of Ohio and a sister of Judge C. C. Paulk, a prominent lawyer in the early days of Stockton. Mrs. Johnson was a finely educated woman, a teacher by profession, having taught in her native state of Ohio, then in Iowa and after her removal to California taught in the schools here. For her activity and long years of teaching she was granted a life diploma, which is now in the possession of her daughter, Mrs. South. Besides his farming pursuits, Mr. Johnson kept a general merchandise store at Elliott, where he was also postmaster. Later he moved to San Jose, where he likewise was engaged in merchandising pursuits. Then he removed to Modesto, and farmed northeast of that city. Selling this farm he went back to San Jose where he had retained his interests in the store. His next move was to Stockton, where he had a home, but soon had a farm on the Mokelumne River, near Clements, and moved out there when Mrs. South was a little girl of three and a half years; selling that farm to good advantage he moved back to San Jose and lived there retired from active business for a number of years. His next move was to Valley Springs, in 1895, where he conducted a store. In the meantime he had purchased lands near Ripon. He moved onto his place near Ripon, in 1898, but he was not permitted to enjoy the fruits of his labors very long, for he passed away in 1899. After the father's death, the mother and daughter removed to Pasadena, Cal., where the mother resided for many years. Grace Johnson received an excellent education in both public and private schools and took the literary course at the College of the Pacific, in San Jose, Cal., and while at Pasadena, specialized in elocution and physical culture, and later taught those branches and gave numerous private and public readings.

On October 8, 1901, at Pasadena, Miss Johnson was united in marriage with C. W. South, born near Newman, Cal., May 23, 1873, a son of Albro W. South, an honored pioneer of the West Side, Stanislaus County. The young couple made their home on their ranch near Newman, where they engaged in stockraising and farming until 1903, when they removed to Ripon and took charge of the Johnson ranch, and here Mr. South was with the late J. S. Moulton among the first to engage in alfalfa raising in the South San Joaquin Irrigation District. On August 25, 1915, Mr. South met with a tragic death when his automobile turned over killing him instantly. At the same time their son Laurence Albro, aged four years, who was riding with his father, was killed. The death of the husband and son was a most severe shock to the family, but with true heroism, Mrs. South has continued the management of the farm and is rearing and educating her children in an excellent manner. Five children were born to Mr. and Mrs. South: Marie E. was graduated from the Ripon Union high school with the class of '22, and during the spring of 1922, she taught the first year classes in Spanish in the same school; Donald F. graduated from the Ripon high school in 1921; Louis Watkin died in infancy; Laurence Albro as noted above is also deceased; Arthusa Aurelia is a student in grammar school in Ripon. The South family reside near Ripon in a beautiful and comfortable residence and are highly respected and influential in social and educational circles. Mrs. South serves as vice-president of the Parent-Teacher's Association at Ripon, and was a member of the board of trustees of the Ripon Union high school and of the Ripon branch of the W. C. T. U. The family attend the First Congregational Church at Ripon.

WESLEY ALBERT YOUNG.—San Joaquin County and the section surrounding Lodi are largely indebted to the efforts of the late Wesley Albert Young, who was a continuous resident of that section for twenty-two years, and aided in laying broad and deep the foundations upon which has been built its present progress and prosperity. He was a native of Geneseo, Ill., born December 5, 1858, but was taken by his parents to Iowa, where they settled near Jefferson, Green County. His father, George Young, was a brick manufacturer and contractor. There our subject grew to manhood and followed in the footsteps of his father and was a brick manufacturer. Later he bought land, becoming one of the prosperous and influential farmers of Green County. He made a specialty of raising thoroughbred Poland China hogs, and when he decided to remove to the West in 1899, he brought with him some of his famous breed of hogs. For many years he continued the breeding and raising of these pedigreed hogs in San Joaquin County and took many prizes at fairs throughout the state. In 1915 he secured first prize at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco; also exhibited at the State Fair at Sacramento and the San Joaquin County Fair at Stockton, never failing to receive premiums for his fine stock.

Upon his arrival in Lodi, Mr. Young purchased a ten-acre tract of land on East Pine Street just outside the city limits, which he planted to fruit trees and vines; later he sold this ranch and engaged in the lumber business on East Pine Street. As his business grew he bought land on Stockton and East Locust Streets and enlarged his plant. Some twelve years ago he disposed of his business and leased the yards to give his time to stock raising. Mr. Young had many interests and engaged at one time in the building contracting business, erecting over 300 buildings, including residences, barns and other buildings, in and around Lodi; he also erected the Emerson school building. In local affairs he was one of the founders of the Lodi Chamber of Commerce and was always active in civic matters. He was progressive and public spirited and gave his most hearty support to any movement for the betterment of Lodi and San Joaquin County. He was the founder of the town of Youngstown on the traction line four miles north of Lodi, where he erected a store building and maintained a lumber yard. He purchased a 120-acre ranch in the Christian Colony district, which he set to vines and orchard, improving it with an up-to-date irrigating system; this ranch is still in the possession of the family; two of his sons now own thirty acres each and his widow retains the remaining sixty acres.

The marriage of Mr. Young united him with Miss Adell Richardson, a native of New York state, born near Canton, St. Lawrence County, a daughter of Melville and Nancy (Pitt) Richardson, born in New York. Mr. Richardson served in the 142nd Regiment New York Volunteers in the Civil War as orderly sergeant. In 1868 he removed to Iowa, locating at Jefferson. While on a trip back to New York Mrs. Richardson passed away. Mr. Richardson came on to California and spent his last days with Mrs. Young, passing on in 1914, nearly eighty years of age. He was a prominent Mason and G. A. R. man. Mr. and Mrs. Young were the parents of four children, Arthur G., of Lodi; Harold M., employed by the Pioneer Fruit Company of Lodi; Ross M., of San Francisco; and Mrs. Lydia Pope, of Lodi. Fraternally Mr. Young was a member of the Lodi lodge of Odd Fellows No. 267 and his religious faith was that of the Baptist Church. In politics he was a Republican. Mr. Young passed away on January 9, 1921, mourned by his family and a large circle of friends. His career was one of highest purpose and in his death Lodi lost a valuable factor in her development.

W A Young

WILLIAM THEODORE TSCHERSCHKY.—A well-known ranchman, William Theodore Tschierschky has not only made a signal success in the cattle business, but has shown his aptitude in the successful management of the postoffice in Tracy, San Joaquin County. During his administration business has so increased that an additional rural route has been installed and the postoffice has become a second-class one. A native of California, he was born in Stockton on April 11, 1870, a son of Ernst Maximilian Louis and Meta Gesina Carolina (Beneker) Tschierschky. His father was born in Prussia on October 3, 1836, while his mother was born on May 7, 1850, in Hanover, Germany. His father went to sea when he was sixteen years of age and followed that life for sixteen years; he made his first trip to America in 1857 on a vessel bound for New York from Marseilles; in 1863 he was employed on the steamer Delaware, chartered by the government, to carry supplies to various points, with headquarters at Port Royal, remaining with them for one year when he went to work on the steamer Liberty, engaged in Havana, Cuba and New York trade. On October 1, 1868, he arrived in California via Panama; settling in Stockton he entered the employ of W. M. Boggs in his lumber yard and before the end of 1869 had constructed his own residence on Pilgrim Street, where his nine children were born and reared, the subject of this sketch being the oldest. He owns considerable real estate in the Dent and Elliott districts of this county, which he has leased. He has always been an active, public spirited citizen, and a loyal supporter of the land of his adoption; he is now living retired in Stockton.

William Theodore Tschierschky received his education in the public schools of Stockton and later entered the Stockton Business College and was graduated in 1888; then he was employed at the L. Smith lumber yard in Stockton as a salesman, for five years. Desiring a change of occupation he entered the State Bakery and there learned the trade of baker and confectioner. From 1896 to 1899 he was foreman at the Naumkeag Bakery. In 1898, Mr. Tschierschky had grubstaked a man to go into the Klondike country with the understanding that he was to have an interest in all claims that were staked out. The months went by and no word was received from his partner, so late in the summer of 1899 he set out for the Klondike country. Reaching the Manook country, 1,000 miles up the Yukon, he spent a terrible winter, endangered by hunger and hardships, but was fortunate to survive that terrible experience. In the spring came the news of the rich strike at Nome; his party built boats and floated down the Yukon river with the first break of ice, hoping they would reach Nome among the first seekers, but upon arriving they found a city had sprung up as if by magic. In the fall of 1900 he returned to California and remained in Stockton until the spring of 1901, when he again set out for the Nome gold fields. Some rich deposits were located, but sluice mining on the shores of the rivers brought them the best returns, the average for the short season being $250 per day. Mr. Tschierschky had received all the thrills of adventure that he cared for, and as the season advanced returned to California content to remain. He opened a bakery and confectionery at Port Costa and after two years sold out and returned to the old homestead at Ripon and farmed his father's ranch to grain and stock five years.

While residing at Port Costa, Mr. Tschierschky was married to Miss Marie Mecklenberg, born in Davenport, Iowa, a daughter of Mrs. Doris Mecklenberg of Tracy. They are the parents of six children: Helen, Leland, Greta, deceased in infancy, Thelma, Freda, and Florence. In 1908 the family removed from the ranch to Tracy where Mr. Tschierschky opened a bakery and confectionery store, conducting same in modern up-to-date manner, continuing for five years when he sold out to take a much needed rest. During 1905, Mr. Tschierschky set out a vineyard of Tokay grapes in the Ripon district, it being one of the first in that locality; he also has considerable real estate in Tracy. Mr. Tschierschky, about two years ago, began breeding registered Holstein cattle on his alfalfa farm, one mile south of Tracy, the stock being selected from the best herds in the west. He is a member of the California State Holstein Breeders Association and the American Holstein Breeders Association. He was very active in the organization of the General Milk Company's condenser at Tracy, which will soon produce 50,000 pounds of manufactured product per day.

In 1914 Mr. Tschierschky received appointment as postmaster of Tracy and his service has been entirely satisfactory to the community; his conscientious and efficient work receiving the approval not only of the community which he serves, but the administration at Washington. He has been the vice-president of the Western Loan & Building Association since its organization at Tracy, in 1921. In politics he is a Democrat. Fraternally, he is past grand of Tracy Lodge, I. O. O. F., a member of Tracy Encampment and the Canton at Stockton, as well as the Grand Lodge.

FRANK J. STEPHENSON.—Born in California during the pioneer days, Frank J. Stephenson has been for many years one of the foremost ranchers of San Joaquin County, now living retired on his home place three miles west of Ripon. He was born at Douglas Flat, Cal., October 30, 1860, and his education was obtained in the public school at Murphys. His father, Samuel Stephenson, was a native of Wisconsin, who came to California via Panama in 1849 and was engaged in mining and prospecting; he also worked as cook at the Yosemite House and the State Hospital at Stockton. He was married in Michigan to Harriet Allen, who joined him in California, in 1853. He passed away in 1908 and Mrs. Stephenson died in Stockton, about 1918. Frank J. Stephenson learned the butcher trade at Jackson with Samuel Bright, which occupied him for three years; then for a time worked at his trade in Merced. In 1879 or 1880 he came to San Joaquin County and was employed in the harvest fields near Ripon during the harvest season. He then went to Stockton and for three years worked for the River Express Company, then came back to Ripon, and has since resided there.

The marriage of Mr. Stephenson united him with Miss Flora Frederick, a native of San Joaquin County.

a daughter of John and Nancy (Underwood) Frederick, pioneers of the county, both now deceased. Three children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Stephenson: Hattie B. is Mrs. Joseph Barker and lives at Dudley, Kern County, Cal.; Frank S. is in business in Los Angeles; Irma Edna is the wife of L. Marion Cowell and they have one daughter, Geraldine R., and the family reside at Manteca. Since 1886 Mr. Stephenson has continuously resided in this section of San Joaquin County and for eleven years served as trustee of the San Joaquin school district. He joined Stockton Lodge, No. 11, I. O. O. F., in Stockton, but for the past twenty-five years he has been identified with Mt. Horeb Lodge, No. 58, I. O. O. F., at Ripon. Mr. Stephenson owns forty acres of choice irrigated land, which he improved in every way and has farmed for many years and on which he successfully conducted a dairy. Four years ago he leased his ranch to his son-in-law L. Marion Cowell, who farms it and runs a dairy. Mr. Stephenson has always been a progressive citizen and is particularly enthusiastic for his own locality near Ripon, believing in the future prosperity of this section implicitly.

WILLIAM F. VON SOSTEN.—A thoroughly experienced farmer, whose intelligence and industry have earned for him and others a well-merited prosperity, while his uprightness of character and general dependability have won for him the confidence of all who know him, is William F. Von Sosten. He was born on his father's ranch four miles west of Tracy on January 4, 1871, the eldest son of the late Frederick and Anna (Finck) Von Sosten, honored pioneers of the West Side.

William F. received his education in the Lammersville district school. While yet a youth the farm work became so heavy that he was obliged to leave school and devote his full time to the ranch work, and this he did until his marriage.

Mr. Von Sosten's marriage occurred September 7, 1898, and united him with Miss Kathrine Hansen, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hansen, honored pioneers of the West Side section of San Joaquin County, whose sketch appears elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Von Sosten was born on the Hansen ranch and was reared and schooled in the Lammersville district school, she and her husband being school mates. They are the parents of four children: Fred W., passed away at the age of six years; Edna C.; Ethel A.; and Hazel Marie. All their children were born on the ranch near Bethany and all are being educated in the schools of Tracy. During the years of 1898 to 1900, Mr. Von Sosten engaged in farming at Union Island, the chief crops being wheat and barley. In 1901 he returned to Bethany and successfully engaged in grain farming and stock raising and is the owner of 236 acres of rich farming land, in the West Side Irrigation District. In 1911, a modern family residence was completed from plans drawn by Mrs. Von Sosten and on Thanksgiving Day of 1911 a house warming, christening and family reunion was held in the commodious residence, located on Eleventh Street, Tracy, which is beautiful in appointment and furnishings. Fraternally, Mr. Von Sosten is an active member of the Knights of Pythias, having served as secretary of that organization for eight consecutive years. He has been an active advocate of irrigation and was the first secretary of the West Side Irrigation District, serving until 1917; from 1914 to 1916 he served as city trustee of Tracy; and he also served as school director while residing in Bethany and in Tracy as well. He is a member of the West Side Pioneers Society and politically he is a Republican. Mrs. Von Sosten is a charter member of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, of Tracy Parlor, and is past chief of the Pythian Sisters of Tracy. Both Mr. and Mrs. Von Sosten have contributed generously to churches and benevolences and are members of the Red Cross. The family stand high in the whole community, a tribute to their useful citizenship.

CAPTAIN JOHN T. CURREY.—A pioneer master mariner, who has seen many years of service on San Francisco Bay and its tributaries, Capt. John T. Currey is widely known in the Delta district and a familiar figure in shipping circles. Jack Currey, as he is familiarly known by his friends, was born in Lebanon, Ky., February 5, 1868, a son of James Edward and Mary Ellen (Hayes) Currey, natives of Ontario, Canada, of Scotch and Irish descent. James E. Currey was the superintendent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and made his home meanwhile in Kentucky. During the Civil War he served as a non-commissioned officer in the engineering department. Contracting a disease during the service he passed away soon after the war. His widow afterwards moved to Minnesota, where she passed away. Jack Currey received his education in the public schools and St. John's Academy in Louisville, Ky. In 1882 he went to St. Paul, Minn., and entered the railroad business with the Northern Pacific Railroad, working in the various departments and gaining an extensive knowledge of the transportation business. For some time he was traveling auditor for the company, but resigned in 1892 to come to California.

Locating in San Francisco, Captain Currey was for five years engaged in the coal and grain brokerage business. In 1897 he entered the employ of the California Navigation & Improvement Company, and since that time he has been prominent in transportation circles of the Bay. He ran on the steamboats from San Francisco to Stockton for about ten years, occupying various posts, as mate, purser, pilot and captain, and so became familiar with every development of this part of the Bay. The last boat of which he was captain was the Leader. In 1907 he became associated with Capt. Ben Walters in the organization of the Island Transportation Company with headquarters at Stockton. The officers are among the best-known men in shipping circles on the Bay and Captain Currey is the efficient traffic manager. The splendid service rendered by this well-organized company has been a great aid to the steadily expanding Delta country.

The plans for the development of Stockton harbor, giving it advantages comparable in many ways with that of San Francisco, will add millions of dollars' worth to the freight and passenger traffic of Stockton, and the Island Transportation Company will keep pace with this development by increasing the equipment and efficiency of their passenger, express and freight service, constructing larger terminal facilities and expanding their service into new territory. Operating throughout the Delta and surrounding sections of Stockton and other points, this company has provided a rapid and regular service, which is giving general satisfaction. The Stephens Brothers' Shipyards of Stockton have built for them a number of new boats, among them being Delta,

Geo. F. Peck

Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6, elegant and comfortable boats constructed for passenger service. They are twin screw motor vessels, costing about $15,000 each, with a speed of 22 miles an hour and having a passenger capacity of 125 each. Six powerful tug boats, the Island Emperor, Island Empress, Island Count, Island Countess, Island Duke and Island Duchess, each of 100 horsepower, enable the company to handle any contract in this line with efficiency and expedition. The fleet is headed by the well-known steamer, H. E. Wright, and commodious offices are maintained by the company on Stockton Channel. No small degree of the success this company has made is due to the popularity of Captain Currey, whose years of thorough experience in the field of transportation and his special knowledge of the demands of this section have made him an invaluable asset. Popular in fraternal circles, he is a member of Stockton Lodge No. 218, B. P. O. Elks, and of the Yosemite Club, Country Club, and Kiwanis Club of Stockton, and the Merchants Exchange Club of San Francisco.

WILLIAM SCHLOSSMAN.—A deep student of political economy who has become a strong advocate of irrigation, and has thereby wielded an enviable influence for the public good, is William Schlossman, president of the board of trustees of the West Side Union high school. He was born in North Riga, on the Baltic, on June 22, 1866, and owing in part to the foresight of his father and mother, received what was then called a good common schooling; and after graduating from the Gymnasium at Riga, he entered the College at Dorpat, in 1884, majoring in economics. Owing to family reverses, however, he was forced to abandon his college course; and when death took away his mother, early in 1887, he entered the employ of a large wholesale and importing house of raw-silk stock and other products of the East Indies, China and Japan, and for two years he was engaged in the purchasing agent's department. He made two trips to the Far East, by way of the Suez Canal.

In February, 1889, Mr. Schlossman landed at San Francisco, after a boisterous trip around the Horn, intending at first only to make a short visit and then to return to his post as purchasing agent; but after a careful survey of conditions in San Francisco, he resolved to tarry indefinitely. In April of that year he pushed inland into the San Joaquin Valley, and with the exception of five years, from 1902 to 1907, when he was engaged in real estate in San Francisco, he has made Tracy his headquarters and home. The fire, following the earthquake of April 16, 1906, swept away his fortune; and in 1907 he removed to San Joaquin County for good. He took up construction work with the engineers' department of the Western Pacific, and was for five years in charge of the Stockton-Livermore division. In 1908 he acquired his ranch of 160 acres, and he has since devoted a part of his time and energy to agriculture.

Naturalized at Stockton by Judge J. H. Budd, in 1896, since which eventful moment he has worked for better citizenship under the banners of the Republican party, William Schlossman has made a worth-while contribution to the building up of the West Side. He has been particularly active in laboring for better schools, and were it not for such men as the late Dr. J. S. West, one of the broad-minded and progressive veterans who helped to lay the foundations of this region, George J. Luhrsen, and our subject, the movement in 1910 for a West Side Union high school might never have taken place. Now the section enjoys an institution said by many to be at least fifteen years ahead of the average high school to be found in other like localities in the state. Mr. Schlossman has served as president of the board of school trustees since 1917.

At San Francisco, on February 16, 1903, Mr. Schlossman was married to Mrs. Matilda Gerlach, who has resided in California since 1880, and one child was born to them, Elsie. She is the wife of Arthur F. Michel, and they have two children, Billy and Florence, and reside at Oakland. Mrs. Schlossman's maiden name was Matilda Grell, and she was born in Saxe-Meiningen, being a daughter of Christian and Katherine (Lammerhard) Grell, her father being a prominent mason and storekeeper at Saltzungen. Her mother died when she was only thirteen years of age. She was married to her first husband, William Gerlach, July 7, 1881, and became the mother of four children by her first marriage: George is a rancher residing in the West Side Irrigation District; Ford is in Napa; Rudolph died when thirty years of age at Tracy; Frieda is the wife of Francis Jack Norman and resides in Oakland. Since 1904, Mr. Schlossman has been a member of the I. O. O. F., and is a past noble grand of the Sumner Lodge of Tracy, and only recently he resigned the office of secretary, after five years of continuous service, whereupon, on the evening of July 16, 1921, he was presented with a beautiful silver tea service as token of the high esteem in which he was held by his fellow Odd Fellows. He is also a member and a past officer of the Encampment. Mr. Schlossman was secretary of the Tracy Chamber of Commerce for ten years. He resigned that position in 1910, in order to take up the secretaryship of the Banta-Carbena Irrigation District, which comprises 18,000 acres.

WARWICK W. WEST.—On Central Avenue, in the heart of the prosperous city of Tracy, is found Joseph S. West & Son's handsomely appointed confectionery and ice cream parlor, one of the most popular places of the West Side country. The business is now owned and conducted by Warwick W. West, who was, for many years, associated with his father, the late Joseph S. West, a pioneer merchant, a man whose name is endeared to the people of the Tracy country because of his many charities, and kindly, noble acts.

Warwick W. West was born in Colusa, Cal., on March 21, 1884, a son of Dr. Joseph S. and Anna Augusta (Hasker) West, both now deceased. Warwick was reared and schooled in his native city and was graduated from the Colusa high school in 1905, when he removed to Tracy, whither his parents had preceded him the year before. He obtained employment with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company which occupied him for a short time; then entered the employ of the Mt. Diablo Light & Power Company, and still later the Pacific Gas & Electric Company at their power house at Colgate and De Sabla, these positions covering a period of six and a half years. He then returned to Tracy and became a partner in his father's business and has taken the active and sole management of same since 1914.

The marriage of Mr. West united him with Miss Ruth A. Moore, a daughter of Mrs. Virginia Moore of Tracy, who came to California in 1918 from Kansas City, Mo. They are the parents of one son, Walker W. Mr. West is a member of the Chamber of Commerce of Tracy and was recently initiated into the Tracy Lodge of Odd Fellows. He is one of the most energetic young business men of Tracy and is a loyal worker for its steadily growing interests.

WEST SIDE UNION HIGH SCHOOL.—Few institutions of learning have done more to help shape the destiny of the younger and fast growing communities than has the West Side Union high school. The excellent standing of this institution as an accredited high school admitting students to colleges and universities without further examinations meets the entire satisfaction of all concerned. The high standard of this school is partly due to the scholarly and untiring work of its former principal, George Wadsworth.

The grounds include ten acres facing the recently completed Lincoln Highway. A group of fine concrete buildings have been erected at a cost of $200,000 and are an excellent monument to the energetic citizens of Tracy and the West Side. There are excellent facilities for athletics, including a new gymnasium, concrete tennis courts together with football gridiron, baseball ground and field for track and all other events. The gymnasium that has just been completed represents a financial outlay of $45,000, the equipment of this department being modern and complete in every sense.

The high school course includes four years' work, beginning with the ninth and extending through the twelfth grade. There is also an opportunity for a year's post-graduate work and it is expected that this will be extended as the opportunity offers itself. As a modern high school the program includes in addition to the regular academic courses, a commercial department, a department of home economics, music department, manual arts, including machine shop, auto mechanics, woodwork and mechanical drawing. The physical education and athletics department is under the supervision of a man employed especially for that work.

All student affairs are in charge of a representative body known as the executive committee; with the approval of the administration their decision is final. The high school at present is under the administration of H. O. Williams as principal and the remainder of the faculty is as follows: vice-principal, L. E. Richards; Mr. Richards has charge of the science department; Miss Leila Sloan, History; Miss Ruth Templeton, home economics; Miss Elizabeth Wetmore, commercial department; Miss Minerva Turner, English; Miss Alice Sharp, Spanish; Mr. W. F. Drew, manual arts; Mr. A. J. Fagin, physical education department; and Mr. A. A. Graham has charge of the instrumental music and is the conductor of an orchestra of twenty-five pieces. Each one in the faculty is a specialist in his department and the citizens of the West Side have every reason to feel proud of the continued advancement that has been and is being made by the school.

Vocationalized ideas of education are growing in high schools through the country and the West Side Union School is not lacking along this line in the opportunities it has to offer students. The most excellent opportunities in all departments are being offered not only in the day school but in the evening classes as well. In addition to the regular day school courses that are offered, courses in Americanization are taught in the evening school. Gymnasium classes for the business men and women are proving very attractive. From the present indications the West Side Union high school promises to keep abreast with the modern ideas of education.

CHARLES A. BLACK.—One of the most sagacious, versatile and public-spirited men who have assisted materially in bringing the city of Lodi up to her present position among the municipalities of California, is Charles A. Black, conspicuous for his worth and ability. He was born in Alleghany County, Va., in 1851, and when three years of age, his parents removed to Monroe County, where he was reared and educated, remaining there until 1881, when he removed to Tazewell County, Va., and engaged in farming in the Abbs Valley. He started a dairy with five cows and when he sold out in 1904 he had 323 acres of fine land in native grass, well stocked with cattle, sheep, hogs and dairy cows, and was one of the most prominent and influential men in the county. He was a member of the road fund committee and served for two years, using his efforts and influence for a bond issue of $100,000 for road improvements; he also served for nine years as a member of the school board and through his efforts the school district became solvent. Mr. Black, from early boyhood, was obliged to depend on his own resources and by thrift and industry won an enviable position in the community. When he arrived in Tazewell County, he was in debt, but honest toil and close application to business brought him the reward he so richly deserved. When he purchased his farm, an old colonial house was on the place; this he improved with additions and made it one of the finest residences in the county. In 1881 he drove the first stake for the survey of the Pocahontas coal district which has become the famous steam coal district of Virginia. The first vein opened was twelve feet thick and produces the best steam coal in the world.

Mr. Black first visited California in 1901; and in looking for a location in which to make his permanent home, he selected Lodi as being best fitted for his needs. Returning to Virginia, he disposed of his holdings for a handsome sum and in 1904 he permanently settled in Lodi, purchasing the Steven Williams place east of the city, consisting of ten acres in Tokay grapes, with a new house on the property. At the time of purchase he paid $750 per acre, the highest price paid for a vineyard at that time. Two years later he sold his farm at a good profit and purchased a block in the city on South School Street, consisting of two and one-half acres. He has since disposed of all of his real estate with the exception of his home place. Mr. Black then became actively associated with the fruit and grape packing industry, his first active work being with Wilson H. Thompson in the Pacific Fruit Exchange; later he was with the Acampo Packing Association and also with the San Joaquin County Table Grape Growers Association of Lodi. He was made chairman of the standardization committee of Lodi, whose duties were to pass on the fruit and grape packs. He was elected chairman of the board, thus becoming mayor of the thriving and prosperous city of Lodi. During his last term of office, many substantial and permanent improvements were made, among them being the municipal bath house, and the land for the city park was purchased and improved, adding greatly to the attractiveness of the city and comfort of the citizens.

C. A. Black
Princess.. Black

Much-needed improvements were made on the streets during his tenure of office that are of lasting value to the city.

Mr. Black's marriage on November 17, 1880 united him with Miss Princess Palmyra Moore, a native of Virginia, a descendant of the historic Moore family of Tazewell County, who settled there in early days, suffering the privations and discouragements of pioneer life. Mrs. Black is a daughter of Andrew P. and Nancy Cummings Moore, farmers in Tazewell County, Va. Her grandfather, James Moore, was captured by the Indians when a lad of fourteen years and taken to Ohio. At Chillicothe the Indians traded him to a French Canadian for an old gray horse and he was taken to Canada. In due time his relatives discovered him and he was returned to his old home. Meanwhile, two years after his capture, the Indians made a raid into the settlement. Great-grandfather James Moore was shot and killed and the great-grandmother of the subject was burned at the stake and several of the children were killed. Mr. and Mrs. Black are the parents of three children: Mrs. Ora L. Stille; Glen A., a graduate of Heald's Business College and an all-round mechanic, who during the war was for four years in the employ of the Holt Manufacturing Company as a mechanic; now he is field superintendent for the Pacific Fruit Exchange; Charles C. completed his education at Heald's Business College and when eighteen years of age entered the First National Bank of Lodi as bookkeeper, being later promoted to assistant cashier of the Central Savings Bank. When the Citizens Savings Bank was established he accepted the post of assistant cashier, a place he has since filled. The three children are all residents of Stockton. Fraternally Mr. Black is a member of Lodi Lodge No. 256 F. & A. M., while Mrs. Black is a member of the W. R. C.; both are members of the Methodist Church.

JOHN F. LAYMAN.—Of the hardy pioneers who settled in the wilds of the Golden State in the early days none were more worthy than the late John F. Layman, who passed away February 25, 1922, at the age of eighty-eight years. He was born in Ohio, January 7, 1834, a son of John and Francis (Fry) Layman, who were farmer folk there. At Bloomfield, Iowa, March 19, 1861, Mr. Layman was married to Miss Phoebe Dieffenbach, a native of Bavaria, Germany, and a daughter of Jacob and Katherine (Nauert) Dieffenbach, both born in Germany, and farmers there. When Phoebe was eight years old, her parents left Germany for America. They first settled in St. Louis, Mo., where they remained only three months, and then moved to Lee County, Iowa, and later to Davis County, where Phoebe met and married John F. Layman. Mr. and Mrs. Layman's eldest son, Joseph, was born in Iowa, and when he was six months old Mr. and Mrs. Layman started across the plains intending to go to the state of Washington but en route they changed their minds and came to California, arriving here in the spring of 1863 bringing with them two spans of horses. The family traveled over the central route through Utah and Nevada where the Union Pacific Railroad now runs. By chance they stopped at what is known as the Fowler Ranch, southwest of Lodi, where Mr. Layman was asked, in keeping with the early California hospitality, to remain a few days until his teams were rested. It was during this period that he made a trade with a man named William Spencer for 160 acres of land for a span of his horses. The land was then all covered with brush, so thick in places that a passage could hardly be forced through it. West of his land, however, there were more open places sprinkled with magnificent oak trees. As Mr. Layman's ranch was covered with brush, he leased several acres from a man named Wardrobe, who owned the land east of his, and went into debt for seed barley at one dollar a bushel, purchased from John Levinsky at the store in Woodbridge. His bill at the store this year was $700, including seed and groceries, which at the end of the season he paid for in full. He then purchased eighty acres more of land at two dollars and fifty cents an acre. During this first year Mr. and Mrs. Layman lived in a little rude cabin without a floor, and with the crude furniture of the time. It was located near what is now known as Sacramento Street on West Walnut Street. Mr. Layman in time came to own what is now most of the western part of the city of Lodi, including 240 acres lying west of what is now the Southern Pacific Railroad tracks and north of Lodi Avenue and the Sargent road. However, in 1867, he sold his entire holdings to Allen Ayers for $6.50 an acre. He then removed to Merced County, and later to Lake County, but finally came back to Lodi, where he leased 160 acres from John Pope and raised a crop of barley. Then he returned to Merced County and bought 500 acres of wheat land. Mr. Layman crossed the plains, or a good part of them, several times. He was in the mining business in Colorado in 1859, and returned from there to Iowa and was married. He passed away at his home at 333 East Walnut Street, Lodi, on February 25, 1922, leaving his widow, Mrs. Phoebe Layman, and six children. Joseph D. Layman, librarian in the University of Nevada at Reno, is married and has five boys: Randall, a civil engineer, of Los Angeles; Harold, a professor in the schools of Kansas; Oliver, a C. E., residing in Los Angeles; Everett, an attorney in San Francisco, and Theo., at school; Harold, Oliver, and Everett were all in the World War. Mary F. Layman, born in Lodi, married Nathan Bartlett, who was a farmer near Ukiah. There Mr. Bartlett died, leaving a son, William L. Bartlett, who served in the World War and is now in San Francisco. Mrs. Bartlett resides on her ranch in Ukiah. Edward Layman resides in Ukiah. He is married and has two children: Lawrence, also in the World War; and Leona. Daniel Layman also lives in Ukiah. Anna Elizabeth Layman became the wife of J. M. McKisson, of Ukiah, and has a child, Phoebe. Lulu N. Layman, the youngest daughter, was born in Lakeport, Cal., and received her education in the Ukiah and Merced grammar schools. On August 9, 1904, she was married to James W. Hake, a native of Wisconsin, who came to California in 1900. They became the parents of four children: Mary Phoebe, now Mrs. Doster; Lilly Elizabeth; and Ruby and Jewel, twins, deceased at the age of three months. Mr. Hake is a carpenter by trade, and the family reside at 333 East Walnut Street, Lodi.

LESTER ORVILLE WISLER.—The world instinctively pays deference to the man whose success has been worthily achieved and whose prominence is the result of natural talents and acquired ability, and among Stockton's business men Lester Orville Wisler occupies a position of distinction as a representative certified public accountant.

Among the distinguished old families of Elkhart County, Ind., none are more worthy of mention than the Wislers. The founder of the family in this section was John Wisler, a native of Bucks County, Pa., where he first saw the light of day in 1800, his parents being Christian and Susan (Halderman) Wisler, the former of whom was born during the Revolutionary period in the State of Pennsylvania, of Holland parents. He made his home in the state of his nativity until he paid the last debt of nature, and there reared to honorable maturity a family of ten children, leaving them, upon his death, not only a good property to be divided among them, but what was rather to be desired than great riches, the heritage of an honorable name. The names of the members of this family were as follows: Jonas (who died when young), John, Elizabeth, Anthony, Hannah, Jacob (who settled in Harrison township at an early day and became the father of John W. Wisler, an extensive importer of horses), Samuel, Mary, Sarah and Susan. The most of these children married and moved west, and a number settled in Elkhart, Ind. Their father died in 1830 and the mother in 1835, in Ohio, at which time both were quite aged. Of their children, John was the one to establish the family in Elkhart County, Ind., as above stated. When a young man of twenty summers he went to Columbiana County, Ohio, where he entered some government land, opened up a farm and made his home for a number of years. In 1824 he gave his heart and hand to Miss Sophia Stauffer, a daughter of Henry and Mary Stauffer, who were early pioneers of Ohio from Westmoreland County, Pa., the former's birth occurring February 8, 1776, and the latter's July 15, 1779, and their respective deaths taking place February 20, 1854, and August 5, 1824. They reared eight children, as follows: Joseph, born December 6, 1796; Elizabeth, July 14, 1799; John, November 27, 1800; Jacob, May 18, 1804; Sophia, August 12, 1806; Mary, April 1, 1809; Henry, Aug. 8, 1812; and Abraham, September 12, 1814. Most of these children reached mature years and several of them settled in Indiana. In the spring of 1849 John Wisler and his family emigrated to Elkhart County, Ind., and settled on the farm which was later owned by Jacob H. Wisler, on the line of the Union and Locke townships. His wife, Sophia, was born in 1806 and died in Elkhart County in 1876; she was a member of the Mennonite Church, and in every sense of the word a helpmate to her husband. She bore her husband the following children: Mary A., later the wife of Samuel Hoover, of Union Township; Henry; Isaac; Jacob; Jonas; Sarah, wife of Samuel Ruckman, of Nappanee; Anthony; John S.; Alpheus, and Cornelius. Two children died young. John Wisler tilled his large farm until 1870, when he sold it to his son Jacob; his grandson, Samuel, at present resides on it with his family. The life of John Wisler is a good illustration of the old saying that "there is no royal road to fortune," for throughout his long and well-spent life he found that in his case wealth could be accumulated only by the exercise of brain and muscle; and for this reason he labored early and late in order to acquire a competence for his family, and in the confidence, respect and affection with which his wife and children regarded him, he realized that the end justified the means.

Isaac Wisler (grandfather of Lester O. Wisler), one of the elder children of the worthy John Wisler, was born in Columbiana, now Mahoning County, Ohio, February 14, 1829. During his early boyhood he assisted his father on the farm, but later gave his attention to blacksmithing, which he followed for some years, and also became an intelligent machinist. He became a resident of Elkhart County, Ind., at the age of twenty years, and in the country in the vicinity of his home, he worked at his trade, first opening a shop at Waterford in 1850, and afterward in Locke in 1853, at which time the place was known as Wisler Town. After some time he and his brother Jonas started a woodenware manufacturing establishment, making a specialty of wooden bowls, which business he successfully continued until 1864, when he sold his interest. He then followed his trade of machinist and blacksmithing, as well as farming. He was always quite active in the political matters of his county, and always supported the men and measures of the Republican party; and being also public-spirited, he supported schools, churches, and in fact all movements tending to benefit the section in which he lived. His own education was obtained in the public schools of Ohio, and that system of education found in him a substantial and earnest supporter. He was justice of the peace of Locke Township from 1854 to 1865, was township trustee for a number of years, and also held the position of assessor. He may be said to have been a self-made man, for he began the battle of life for himself on a heavily wooded tract of government land, but later became financially independent. In 1858 he was married to Miss Rebecca M. Winder, daughter of Caleb and Margaret (Bloomfield) Winder, the former of whom was born in Pennsylvania, a son of Joseph Winder, a prominent farmer of that state. Caleb's early life was spent on his father's farm, but in early life he also learned the latter's trade, which he followed for some time. After his removal to Stark County, Ohio, following his marriage, he taught school and there he improved a good farm and reared his family. He died in 1840, at the age of forty-four years, his wife's death occurring in 1842, at the age of thirty-six years. She was born in Crawford County, Pa., a daughter of Andrew Bloomfield, and she and her husband were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the latter being one of its class leaders, in politics a Whig, and a soldier in the war of 1812. To Caleb and wife seven children were born: Louis, James, Warren (deceased), Samuel (deceased), Eli, Susan (Mrs. Truex,) and Rebecca, the wife of Isaac Wisler. She was born in Ohio, October 30, 1837, and in 1858 her union with Isaac Wisler took place, which eventually resulted in the birth of seven children: Oliver P., born November 13, 1859 (married Elzina Bilely, and they had six children: Lester, Otis, Morris, Glenn, Thelma, and Greetice); James M., born July 24, 1861 (married Della Doromus, of Michigan, and they had three children); Albert, born on August 24, 1863; Mary, born on August 1, 1865 (married Jacob Defrees, and they have one child, Albert); Lizzie, born January 16, 1867 (married M. D. Jacobs, by whom she has three children: Harry, Ralph and Roland); Edith, born September 23, 1871, and died at the age of three years; and Addie, born September 23, 1877 (married

Lester O. Nisler

Harry Irwin Pearce, and they have one child, Harry Jr.). Isaac Wisler died on September 14, 1900, and his wife, December 10, 1918.

Oliver P. Wisler (father of Lester O. Wisler) is the eldest child of Isaac Wisler. That he has inherited many of the most worthy qualities of his people is acknowledged, and his numerous friends testify to his honesty, kindheartedness and energy. He was born on the farm owned by his father in Locke Township, near the town of Locke, on the 13th of November, 1859, and while growing up attended the schools of Locke, where he laid the foundation of a practical education, later finishing his scholastic training in the public schools of Syracuse, Ind. On his father's farm he learned lessons of industry and honesty, and while attending school acquired a decided taste for books, which qualities admirably fitted him for the calling of a school teacher, whose responsibilities he took upon his shoulders at the youthful age of seventeen. During the two terms that he followed this calling he was quite successful, but gave it up to follow other pursuits. Many of his youthful days were spent in the woodenware factory belonging to his father; but in later life he became the owner and manager of a threshing machine, which he conducted for about seven seasons, and at the same time followed farming and bought and sold timber. In the management of these enterprises he showed that he possessed fine business qualifications, for his efforts met with abundant reward. Since he attained his twenty-second year he has farmed for himself, and at present he is on a ranch in Yuba County. On the 20th of September, 1884, he was united in marriage to Elzina Bliley, an adopted daughter of Louis and Sarah Bliley, born September 16, 1867. They have six children: Lester O., who was born August 13, 1885; Otis H., born December 6, 1886; Morris C., born June 7, 1888; Glenn M., born October 23, 1889; Thelma M. C., born July 15, 1897; and Greetice R., born August 13, 1900.

Lester O. Wisler was born on a farm in Elkhart County, Ind., on August 13, 1885, and received his early education in the schools of that county. Then he entered the Technical High School at Cleveland, Ohio, where he was graduated in 1903. On removing to Calgary, Canada, he was in the commercial business there for eight years. From there he went to Salt Lake City as advertising manager for the Wood-Clifton Mercantile Company, one of the leading firms of the city, and in 1915 came to Sacramento, Cal., and took charge of the advertising department of Weinstock, Lubin & Company. In February of the following year he went to Manteca and became associated with F. M. Cowell, vice-president and manager of the Manteca Canning Company. Later Mr. Cowell sold his interest in the cannery, and with Mr. Wisler organized and built the Manteca Packing Company, Mr. Wisler serving as secretary of the company. During the World War he established the cost price on canned goods in that zone and was secretary of the Manteca Council of Defense.

Severing his connection with the company, in the spring of 1918 Mr. Wisler removed to Stockton and became the office and credit manager of the Stockton Dry Goods Company, and two years later he founded the Wisler Audit Bureau. He compiled the first financial report of the city of Stockton, a document of 250 pages; he is under contract for ten years to audit the books of the Oakdale Irrigation District, and with Joe Cavis has audited the books of the South San Joaquin Irrigation District. Mr. Wisler is auditor of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, and in 1920 made the first thorough report the organization ever had. He is also the deviser of the Masonic Membership Ledger in use all over the United States and Canada. The Wisler Audit Bureau maintains offices in Stockton, Fresno and Sacramento, where specialized service is offered in public accounting and auditing in all commercial, industrial, and municipal branches.

In Stettler, Alberta, in 1906, Mr. Wisler was married to Miss Marguerite Jessie Lawrence, a native of Union, Iowa, and a daughter of William Horton Lawrence and Ida Mason Lawrence, who is a sister of the famous Al P. Mason of Union, Iowa, state auctioneer of thoroughbred livestock. Mr. and Mrs. Wisler have four children: Oliver P., Jr., born July 15, 1907; Margaret Helen, born December 17, 1908; Lester Orville, Jr., born April 22, 1913, and Velma Ione, born February 17, 1915.

In 1916 Mr. Wisler graduated from the Emerson Institute of Efficiency of New York. He is the president of the California Chapter of the National Association of Certified Public Accountants, a charter member of the Stockton Accountants Society, and chairman of its publicity committee. He belongs to the Lions Club and the Stockton Golf & Country Club. In his fraternal affiliation he was made a Mason in Apollo Lodge No. 27, A. F. & A. M., in Stettler, Alberta, in 1906, holding the office of Senior Warden; demitting, he became a charter member of Stockton Lodge No. 498, F. & A. M., and was its first Worshipful Master. On becoming Past Master he was elected Secretary of the Lodge, which office he has since filled. He is a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T., and Aahmes Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., Oakland; Charter Oak Lodge, K. P., of Stockton, and a Past Chancellor of that Order; Past Noble Grand of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Stettler, Alberta, as well as District Deputy Grand Master, and is a member of the Knights of Khorassan and Past Imperial Representative at their meeting at Chattanooga, Tennessee. Mrs. Wisler is a member of Stockton Chapter, O. E. S. and is Most Excellent Chief of Damon Temple, Pythian Sisters, and a past Noble Grand of the Rebekah Lodge at Stettler, Alberta. Mr. Wisler has attained high rank in his profession, and has risen to a prominent place among the substantial citizens of the county.

ALLAN R. POWERS, M. D.—Recognized as one of the leading physicians of the state, Dr. Allan R. Powers occupies a merited position of prominence among his contemporaries. In Tracy, where he has made his home for the past six years, he has so thoroughly interested himself in questions concerning the physical welfare of the community that he has brought about results of incalculable benefit, and as director of the city health department has brought about many needed improvements for the sanitation of the city. He is unquestionably a man of much native ability and with this has brought to bear in the prosecution of his profession an application and earnestness which have given to him a merited success.

Dr. Powers is a native California, having been born at San Rafael, Marin County on May 23, 1881. His father, Dr. George H. Powers, was a native of Massachusetts, who served through the Civil War and in 1869 came to California, settling in San Francisco, where for twenty-five years he practiced his profession and became a very prominent specialist in eye, ear, nose and throat diseases. He passed away in May, 1913, his wife, Mrs. Nellie (Chapman) Powers, a native of New Haven, Conn., surviving him until 1917. They were the parents of two sons and two daughters: Mrs. Katherine Powers Chapman resides in Detroit, Mich., and has two sons, Russell and George; George Herman, Jr., ear, nose and throat specialist of Boston, married Miss Madeline Davis of Boston, and has two daughters, Katherine and Dorothy; Allan Raymond, of this review, and Miss Ruth Powers, a talented musician widely known on the Pacific coast, who died in June, 1922.

Allan R. entered public school at the age of six years, and nine years later was graduated from the Hitchcock Military Academy at San Rafael, when he entered the University of California and in 1901 received his B. S. degree; then entered Cornell University and spent a year in postgraduate work, and the following year he spent in Yale, receiving his M. F. degree in 1904 from that institution. Being a lover and student of the great outdoors, he had selected for his life's work that of Forestry, and upon becoming personally acquainted with Theodore Roosevelt his interest and determination to follow it increased. After completing his higher education he became a member of the U. S. Forestry service and was sent to the Pacific Northwest, where he spent three years of most varied and interesting experiences.

At the request of his father, he left the forestry service and entered the University of California Medical School in 1907 and in 1912 received his M. D. degree from Cooper Medical College. His graduation was followed by a term as intern at the Southern Pacific hospital in San Francisco; the same year, 1913, he opened his own office at Rio Vista, Solano County, and practiced there for two years. He was then appointed district surgeon of the Sacramento Electrical Railroad. He then removed to South San Francisco, San Mateo County, and entered the employ of the Pacific Coast Steel Corporation as surgeon, where he remained for one year. During the following six months spent at Lake Tahoe as surgeon for the Tahoe Tavern and railroad, his experience proved both profitable and pleasant. In November, 1916, he removed to Tracy, where he purchased the practice of Dr. S. E. D. Pinniger; he also received appointment as district surgeon of the Southern Pacific Railroad. This being a large railroad junction and terminal, many were his responsibilities. He still retains this position. In 1919 he established his offices on the second floor of the Bank of Tracy building and assumed his duties as director of the city health department.

The marriage of Dr. Powers in Sacramento in 1913, united him with Miss Edith Marie Eaton of Los Angeles, a cultured and gifted young woman, a leader in social, lodge and civic affairs of Tracy. They are the parents of one son, A. Raymond, Jr. During his college days, Dr. Powers was identified with the S. A. E., the T. N. E. and Skull & Keyes. He is master of Mt. Osso Lodge No. 460, F. & A. M., of Tracy; patron of the Eastern Star; and member of the Knights of Pythias and the Natives Sons of the Golden West of Tracy. In politics Dr. Powers is a Republican of the Theodore Roosevelt type. From 1917 to the present time he has served as chairman of the Red Cross of Tracy and the West Side section and his splendid service is highly appreciated by the residents of the county. For the past three years he has been a director in the Chamber of Commerce. He is a valued member of the State Medical Association, and of the San Joaquin County Medical Association.

ARTHUR W. HEWITT.—The farming interests of San Joaquin County find a worthy representative in Arthur W. Hewitt, who makes his home on the ranch where he was born, two miles west of Farmington. Hay and grain are his principal crops, which he raises in abundance. His entire life has been spent here; and he has been so thoroughly identified with the life and progress of the community that few men are held in greater esteem, and he has made a reputation as a man of integrity and utmost reliability in all business and personal transactions. He was born October 23, 1877, on the Hewitt home place, two miles west of Farmington, the eldest son of Martin L. and Florence N. (Harrold) Hewitt, pioneers of this county. Martin L. Hewitt was born in Ohio in 1844, and at the age of nine years crossed the plains, in 1853, with his parents, being the second eldest in a family of six children. The mother was born in Missouri and crossed the plains to California in 1851, and the family settled near Oakdale. Her parents, Jacob and Martha Harrold, were well-known pioneers of California.

Arthur W. Hewitt spent his boyhood days on the Hewitt ranch and attended the Shady Grove school. He then entered the Stockton high school, and later took a business course at Heald's Business College in Stockton. From 1895 to 1897 he attended the University of California, taking a course in mining engineering, and on August 4, 1897, he took passage on the steamship Noyo for Dyea, Alaska, then packed over Chilcoot Pass to Lake Linderman, built a boat and came down the Yukon to Dawson. He spent two and a half years in the Yukon country, mining, storekeeping and trapping. He was at Dawson and Indian River, and afterwards at Nome. After spending two and a half years in the Northland, he returned to California via St. Michaels, arriving again in Farmington November 3, 1899.

The marriage of Mr. Hewitt occurred at Stockton, June 27, 1900, and united him with Miss Ida L. Church, a daughter of M. M. Church, a pioneer of San Joaquin County, who is now a resident of Stockton. She was born at Farmington and they were schoolmates in district school and at Heald's Business College. Mr. and Mrs. Hewitt became the parents of one son, Milo Lester, a student in the Stockton high school, class of 1924. Mrs. Hewitt was a leader in civic and social affairs in the community. A woman of pleasing personality, much loved and esteemed, she passed away on March 31, 1923.

In 1902 Mr. Hewitt purchased 400 acres of Lafayette Funck, fourteen miles southeast of Stockton, where he raised great quantities of grain. He operated this ranch until 1904, when he sold it and immediately bought 857 acres of the old Hewitt homestead on Littlejohn Creek, where he had been born and reared. Mr. Hewitt entered enthusiastically into grain raising and has operated five different grain ranches, aggregating 5,000 acres. For many years he carried on his farming with teams of horses and mules, but now his harvesting is done by the most improved power machinery to be had. In 1911 Mr.

A. J. Bennett,

Hewitt started with twenty Blackhead sheep, and now he owns about 3,000 head, most of which are of the Merino breed. Eleven years ago he leased government land in the Kennedy Lake region in Tuolumne County. This is used for summer pasturage for his sheep, and the winter quarters are at Copperopolis. Mr. Hewitt is known, and rightfully so, as the father of the horticultural industry at Farmington. For many years he had been experiencing heavy losses in grain along the edges of the slough of Littlejohn Creek on account of the high water. In 1912 he experimented with the planting of cherry and plum trees, and the soil was found to be adapted to these fruits; then he put on the market 260 acres, known as Hewitt Tract No. 1, a subdivision of slough land on Littlejohn Creek, and has experienced no difficulty in disposing of these lands, which have been planted to orchards of cherries, prunes, plums, peaches, apricots and pears. Afterwards he put on the market Hewitt Tract No. 2, consisting of 60 acres of choice land near the Sonora Highway, three miles west of Farmington, and is selling it in small tracts to new settlers, and their products find a ready market. In his subdivisions he planted and took care of the orchards for the purchaser until they were brought into bearing. Mr. Hewitt realized when he began subdividing for orcharding that he would have to sell the land at a price so low that prospective purchasers could be induced to make the necessary improvements; therefore he placed the tract on the market at $75 an acre. Now the orchards are valued at from $400 to $1,000 an acre. He is planning in the near future to set out forty acres on his ranch to prunes, apricots and peaches. Mr. Hewitt has stood for the best interests of the community at all times, and for two terms has served as trustee of the Shady Grove school district. In political life he is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of Farmington Lodge No. 296, in which he is a past grand. He is a member of the Rebekahs, and Mrs. Hewitt was also a member and a past noble grand. Mr. Hewitt is a very successful man, and the results of his past energy and diligence have placed him among the leading men of affairs in this part of the state. He heartily favors and is willing to aid any enterprise which promotes the general welfare, and he has cooperated and led in the work of obtaining better roads for his locality. He donated the Hewitt Road from the highway to the Littlejohn Creek, a distance of three-fourths of a mile.

GEN. WILLIAM THOMAS LITTEBRANT.

—Among the native sons of Stockton who rose to prominence and influence in the United States Army was the late Gen. William Thomas Littebrant, who was born in Stockton, March 27, 1865, the only son of Hartman and Catherine (Cunningham) Littebrant who are represented on another page in this work. He had two sisters, Mrs. Katherine McCoy, deceased, and Miss Christene Littebrant, of Stockton. After completing the grammar school, he attended the Boys' High School in San Francisco until he was appointed a cadet to West Point, at the age of nineteen. He was graduated from the U. S. Military Academy in 1888. He was at first assigned to the infantry, but a few months later was transferred to the 10th Cavalry, where he served with General Pershing, with whom he had been a school-mate at the military academy. He was promoted to the 7th Cavalry in 1896, and afterwards served in other cavalry regiments, among them the 1st, 9th, 11th, 12th, 15th, and 23rd. His earlier service was on the frontier, and his training there fitted him physically for the strenuous army life which he had selected as his calling. Before he had been two years in the service he had won the first Gold Medal on a tri-departmental revolver team; and from that time on he excelled in both rifle and pistol shooting, and his name appeared frequently in departmental teams.

As regimental quartermaster he equipped his regiment for the strenuous Cuban campaign of 1898. On account of the difficulty of getting supplies, this proved a hard task; but his regimental commander testified that the regiment left for foreign service perfectly equipped in every detail. After service in Cuba, General Littebrant accompanied his regiment to the Philippines, and on returning therefrom again went to Cuba with the Army of Pacification for another tour of two years, in 1908 and 1909. He was a member of the Cavalry Equipment Board in 1910. In 1911 he became a student of the Army School of the Line, from which he graduated in 1912. He was assigned to duty in the Yosemite National Park, where as superintendent he displayed those same able qualities which had previously served the government so well. On July 10, 1914, the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Franklin K. Lane, stated in his report: "In this connection I desire to express my sincere appreciation of the very satisfactory success rendered by Major Littebrant in the administration of the affairs of the Yosemite National Park during the time that he has been assigned to that duty."

General Littebrant next served as a lieutenant-colonel in the recruiting service at St. Louis, Mo. Shortly after the war with Germany was declared, he was promoted to a colonelcy and was assigned to the 23rd Cavalry. The organization of this regiment was under way when he joined it, and he carried the task to completion. Later the regiment was changed into artillery, and General Littebrant asked to be sent to Fort Sill, Okla., for a special course in artillery instruction. After this, he rejoined his regiment, now the 81st Field Artillery, and took up the strenuous training which he felt would be needed to fit the regiment for service on the battlefields of France. On October 1, 1918, he was appointed a brigadier-general and assigned to the 19th Field Artillery Brigade. This organization was scheduled to sail for France in December, 1918, but the armistice put an end to his hope of leading his brigade in battle. His failure to get to the front was the greatest disappointment of his life. He was honorably discharged as a brigadier-general, March 1, 1919, but remained at Camp McClellan, Ala., where an experienced officer was needed in demobilizing the troops. For the last two years his health had not been good. He died of heart failure at his home near the camp, July 2, 1919, leaving a widow and two daughters: Laura, the wife of Capt. C. Palmer Clark, of the air service; and Marian, wife of Frederick M. Kealor, of St. John, N. B. Thus ended the earthly career of a distinguished soldier who spent more than thirty-five of the best years of his life in the service of his country.

General Littebrant was a man of fine appearance and notable military qualities. Tall, well proportioned, and of soldierly bearing, he displayed outwardly those physical attributes which, added to his mental qualities, united to make him a successful leader of men. His kindly disposition, his unflinching sense of humor, and his devotion to his friends and family, were other qualities that made for him many friends. His family, and his native city and state as well, may justly be proud of his record.

GEORGE WADSWORTH.—Prominently identified with the educational matters of the West Side section of San Joaquin County is George Wadsworth, the efficient principal of the West Side Union high school. He was born in Brooklyn, Iowa, on November 7, 1886, a son of George and Mary (McMurray) Wadsworth, both natives of County Antrim, Ireland. His father came to America about 1835 and settled at Rock Island, Ill., where he remained for a few years then removed to Iowa, where he was married. His mother came to America at the age of eighteen with a party of friends and became a sturdy pioneer woman of the Middle West. Prior to the construction of the railroads in the Middle West, George Wadsworth, Sr., operated a stage route from Rock Island, Ill., to St. Paul Minn. When the great gold excitement in Colorado was at its height, he freighted from Iowa to Cripple Creek, Colo., and built up a fine and profitable business. He was a prominent Republican in his day and was a man of sterling qualities. While residing at his home in Iowa he was killed by lightning during a severe electrical storm in 1909.

George entered the district school in Brooklyn, Iowa, at the age of five years and in 1900 had finished the grammar department; three years later he was graduated from the high school; the following two years he taught school, being only eighteen years of age. He then entered the University of Iowa and in 1910 received his A. B. degree; the following year he removed to Victor, Iowa, where he became the superintendent of the city schools, and in this capacity proved himself capable and successful. In 1911 he removed to Glenn's Ferry, Idaho, and became much interested in the development of the country schools and acted as district superintendent. At the end of one term, however, he withdrew to enter the real estate business. Having acquired a half interest in the Glenn Ferry Gazette, he was editor of this weekly newspaper of the Snake River Valley; he also founded the Glenn Ferry Realty Company, which is today a widely known firm. The citizens of this new section showed their appreciation by electing him city clerk and as such he made some very difficult decisions, which were upheld by the higher courts when appealed. During the period of fourteen months he proved up on a 160-acre homestead and did some excellent pioneer work in the matter of irrigation development. Mr. Wadsworth was most successful as editor of the Glenn Ferry Gazette, but in 1914 returned East and entered the University of Chicago law school, completing the three-year course in two and a half years, receiving his J. D. degree in 1916. He then returned West and during 1916 and 1917 was superintendent of schools at Grangeville, Idaho. In April of 1917 he was admitted to the bar at Lewiston, Idaho, but during the fall of that year he removed to Tracy and entered upon his duties as principal of the Union high school, at the time the new buildings were completed, and filled the position of principal to the entire satisfaction of the citizens of the West Side section. In the latter part of March, 1922, Mr. Wadsworth resigned his principalship and formed a partnership with Leland S. Kepler in the practice of law and the new firm is enjoying a fast growing practice.

The marriage of Mr. Wadsworth occurred in September of 1921 and united him with Miss Marguerite Humphrey of Fresno, a daughter of Mrs. Anna Humphrey. Mrs. Wadsworth is a graduate of the University of California. Fraternally, Mr. Wadsworth is a member of the Sumner Lodge of Odd Fellows and of the Masons, and is secretary of the Lions Club.

FRANK DE LA RALLS.—Among the foremost representatives of the agricultural industry in San Joaquin County is Frank De La Ralls, who for the past eighteen years has been the capable and efficient manager of the Sargent estate. Energetic, progressive and public-spirited, he has been successful in his own private ventures and has done much for the welfare of his county and state. A native son of California, he was born at Woodbridge, October 13, 1871, a son of W. A. G. and Laura (House) Ralls, the former a native of Missouri and the latter of Kentucky. The father came to California with his parents when he was four years old and grew up and lived in San Joaquin County all his life. The mother passed away when our subject was six years old, while the father lived to be seventy-six years of age.

Frank De La Ralls received his early education in the Woodbridge grammar school, and then entered the San Joaquin Valley College, completing his education at the age of fifteen, when he took up the butcher trade at Woodbridge. He worked for Thompson & Folger in their shop in Woodbridge for eight years; then became associated with the Earl Fruit Company of Lodi as a clerk, and later as outside man, working for the same company for a number of seasons. For one season, also, he was with the Valley Fruit Company, after which he went into the fruit business for himself, having his headquarters in Lodi and buying and selling grapes and fruit. Eighteen years ago he became the manager of the Sargent estate for the late Dr. J. P. Sargent, but for two years thereafter continued his own business of buying and selling fruit. For the last sixteen years he has devoted his entire time to the management of the vast Sargent estate.

The marriage of Mr. Ralls occurred at San Francisco, March 10, 1904, uniting him with Miss Mary Susan Sollars, born near Clements, San Joaquin County, a daughter of Solomon and Martha (Giles) Sollars, natives respectively of Indiana and Missouri. Solomon Sollars came to California with his parents, who crossed the trackless plains with ox-teams, the toilsome and tedious journey lasting six months. Solomon Sollars and his wife were married in Jackson in 1867, on September 25, and were farmers at Clements, where the mother died. Mr. Sollars spent his last days in Lodi, where Mary Sollars attended school. Mr. Ralls owns a very productive sixty-two-acre ranch on the Terminous road, under the Stockton-Mokelumne irrigation system. The ranch is devoted to the growing of wine and table grapes. In politics Mr. Ralls is a Democrat, and for a number of years has been a member of the Democratic central committee of San Joaquin County. He is also a deputy sheriff of the county for land and crop protection work, and was deputy horticultural inspector of north San Joaquin County for one term. Fraternally, he was made a Mason in Woodbridge Lodge No. 131.

F. S. Ralls

F. & A. M. He is a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M.; Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T.; and Lodi Parlor, N. S. G. W. He has a wide acquaintance in the county of his nativity, and his success in business is well-merited and has served as a source of inspiration and encouragement to others.

WILLIAM E. O'CONNOR.—Thirty years ago William E. O'Connor became a permanent citizen and business man of Stockton. He is the proprietor of a wholesale cracker and candy business, an enterprise he directs with most gratifying results. He is the exclusive agent in northern San Joaquin Valley and southern Sacramento Valley for the products of the American Biscuit Company and the Pacific Coast Candy Company. He was born in the Wild Horse Valley, Solano County, Cal., November 19, 1868, a son of James and Mary (Bray) O'Connor. James O'Connor was an early pioneer of California. He mined at Indian Creek, Calaveras County, and as early as 1852 was in Stockton and shot ducks where the courthouse now stands. Later he settled in Wild Horse Valley, where he followed farming and stockraising. In 1883 he sold out and located near Pismo Beach, San Luis Obispo County, and there followed farming until his death. Wild Horse Valley was famous in the early history of Solano County, and received its name from a band of wild horses that roamed the valley, led by a beautiful stallion so fleet of foot that he eluded capture for a long time. In a very early day a cavalcade of 100 horsemen formed in Wild Horse Valley, at the spot where Mr. O'Connor was born, for the purpose of lassoing this beautiful wild stallion. They formed a cordon across Wild Horse Valley and came down the ridge in a circle, thus closing in and driving the band of wild horses before them, down through Green Valley Falls to a point on the bay opposite what is now Mare Island. While they were attempting to lasso the stallion, a mare about fourteen years old raced wildly up and down, and finally plunged into the bay and swam across to the island, and she was for several years the only living thing known to be on the island; it was named "Mare Island" and is so chronicled in the original deed passing title to the first American owner.

William E. O'Connor attended the Harmony school and afterwards the Central public school in Napa until the family removed to San Luis Obispo County. He assisted his father in the ranch work on the home place near Pismo Beach, and later was employed in driving an eight-mule team between San Luis Obispo and Shandon over what was known as the Rocky Canyon road, over Cresto mountain and across the San Juan River to the southeastern part of the county, hauling grain, lumber, etc. In the harvest season he worked with threshing outfits and engaged in farming. In 1890, wishing to enlarge his knowledge, he attended Heald's Business College in San Francisco, where he was graduated in 1891. In January, 1892, he located in Stockton, where he worked for C. V. Thompson, a produce shipper, for two years; then he clerked in a general store and was agent for the Shasta mineral water in Stockton. In 1895 he became associated with E. E. Rowe as agent for the Shasta water and the American Biscuit Company. Two years later he bought his partner's interest, and has continued the business alone. He is now representing the American Biscuit Company and the Pacific Coast Candy Company, his territory extending from Galt on the north to Merced on the south.

The marriage of Mr. O'Connor united him with Mrs. Ellis Viola (Lyman) Brown, a native of Columbus, Ohio. In 1898 Mr. O'Connor was elected city assessor of Stockton on the Democratic ticket, serving two years. He has been a very active member of Stockton Parlor No. 7, N. S. G. W., is past president and has frequently been a delegate to the Grand Parlor. Mr. O'Connor was grand marshal of the Native Sons' parade at Stockton on Admission Day of 1912, said to be the most interesting and memorable parade of Native Sons ever held in California. He is past exalted ruler of Stockton Lodge No. 218, Elks, and was delegate from the local lodge to the grand lodge convention held in Boston in 1917, and is a member of the Woodmen of the World, and of the Stockton Rotary Club, the Chamber of Commerce, and the United Commercial Travelers. Mr. O'Connor has always been greatly interested in athletics, particularly horsemanship, in which he excels, and naturally has been frequently selected as marshal of parades and big days in Stockton. Politically, he is a Democrat, and has been a member of the county committee, as well as a delegate to county and state conventions. His life has been an active, useful and honorable one, and has been crowned by successful accomplishments.

FRANCIS R. HAMSHER.—A progressive and successful rancher, now living near Youngstown, is Francis R. Hamsher, born in Monroe, Wis., on July 24, 1866, a son of Francis and Katherine Elizabeth (Denis) Hamsher, and the grandson of a sea captain in His Majesty's navy, who saw service in the War of 1812. Later, he became a frontiersman, settling in Wisconsin in early days. The father died when Francis R. Hamsher was five years old. The mother lived to be seventy years old. They had a daughter, Edith, who is also deceased.

When Francis R. Hamsher was fifteen years old, he went to South Dakota, then a part of Dakota Territory, and settled near Aberdeen, where his mother took up a homestead and also taught school. He lived there until he came out to California, in 1888. Here he settled near Red Bluff, in Tehama County, and worked for a year, and then came into San Joaquin County, arriving in the fall of 1889. He drove the bus for the Yosemite House of Stockton, and later, for nineteen years, he was engaged during the harvest season in the threshing of grain, buying and operating a Holt combined harvester and thresher. He farmed about one thousand acres of land on the islands near the terminus for seven years during that time, and then purchased a place on the Lower Sacramento road, near Kingdon, a grain farm of forty acres. In 1911, Mr. Hamsher came to his present location, where he bought 120 acres of land, one-fourth of which was in vineyard. Since then he has sold off eighty acres, leaving forty acres. He is just completing a fine new bungalow, into which he and his wife will move.

On October 13, 1890, Mr. Hamsher was married in Stockton to Mrs. Florence F. (Hitchcock) Upton, the daughter of Charles N. and Elizabeth Hitchcock. She was born near Baton Rouge, La., and came to California with her folks in 1876. She had previously married Walter Upton, and they became the parents of a son and a daughter: Harvey Upton, ranching on a part of the old Northrup ranch; and Cecil, now Mrs. Rea, of Stockton. Her father was a native of New York, and a Grand Army veteran, who was wounded five times during the Civil War. After marrying in Louisiana, and there establishing a household, he came on to California, and Mrs. Hamsher attended the grammar schools of Stockton. Three children have been granted Mr. and Mrs. Hamsher: Katherine, now Mrs. Buskey, who is living at home with her one child, Olive; Clyde, who is at Oakdale and has two children, Millert and Caroline Deete; and Bessie, Mrs. K. O. Glover, who has one child, an infant. Mr. Hamsher has put ten of his forty acres into alfalfa, and he has a fine irrigating well on his ranch. Some time ago he felt that he ought to straighten out his ranch lines; so he purchased a tract of six acres adjoining, and now his ranch embraces forty-six acres in all.

JOSEPH G. WHITE.—A successful farmer and dairyman is Joseph G. White, the progressive agriculturist residing about two miles south of Tracy. He was born in the little village of Calietta, on the Isle of Pico in the Azores, on November 5, 1868, under conditions which threw him upon his own resources since his seventh year, on which account he had to shift as best he could with far less schooling than most boys enjoy. In 1884 he left his native land and came out to California, following his brother, Manuel, eight years his senior, and his sister, now Mrs. Perry, who had reached California five years earlier. On reaching San Francisco in the fall, Mr. White made his way to the home of his relatives in Siskiyou County; and in that vicinity, for about three years, he busied himself with work on ranches. In 1887 he went to San Luis Obispo County for a while, but he soon returned. In 1888 he took up 160 acres under the Homestead Act, and proving this up, in 1905 he made a successful exchange for some orchard property in the Cupertino district of Santa Clara Valley, where the family lived for six years, near San Jose, when he was occupied with horticulture.

In the fall of 1911, Mr. White sold out and removed to Tracy, purchasing ninety acres in the Burk Tract, which he set out into alfalfa, building there a sanitary dairy of the best type. About five years later, he again made a change, this time acquiring 160 acres near the southern limits of Tracy, in partnership with his son-in-law, Joseph Teixeira. He received his citizenship at Yreka in 1890, and since then he has been a staunch Republican.

At Scott Valley, in Siskiyou County, in 1890, Mr. White was married to Miss Louisa Silva, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph N. Silva, who were early pioneers in Siskiyou County. Thirteen children were born to this happy union. Mary is the wife of Joseph Teixeira and the mother of three children. Manuel lives at home. Julia is Mrs. Joseph Melo of San Jose, and the mother of one son. Emma died at the age of sixteen. Joseph is single. Louisa is the wife of Joe Vierira, and they have one son and live near Gustine; Wilhelmina comes next; Josephine is the wife of Antone Seemias, and they reside near Hanford; Carlos is the ninth; and the others are George, Emile, Bernice and Edward. Mr. White is a Roman Catholic and the president of the I. D. E. S.; and he has also served as president of the S. E. S. of Tracy.

WILLIAM EDSON HANKS.—Prominent among the most interesting of early pioneers in San Joaquin County is William Edson Hanks, the retired contractor and brick-mason, who was born at Augusta, Maine, on April 2, 1854, and accompanied his mother and sister to California. They set out from New York, intending to cross the Isthmus of Panama, but when once on the Atlantic, their vessel, an old side-wheeler, was struck by lightning and disabled, reaching Aspinwall after thirty days. From the Isthmus, the Hanks party came up the Coast of the Pacific on the steamer, "Star of the West," landing in San Francisco in the fall of 1862. His parents, Robert and Delia (Hudson) Hanks, were also both natives of Augusta, Maine, and Grandfather Hanks was prominent in early Colonial history as a sea-captain. He was master of the ship "Augusta," and was known far and wide as "Captain Bob." Robert Hanks, the father, was a sailor, but he had learned ship-carpentering as a trade.

Robert Hanks had come on ahead to California, seeking gold in 1856, and he came direct to the mines via Panama and went near Table Mountain, Tuolumne County, and for twelve years was successful in prospecting. He moved to Stockton in 1867, and with Steve Davis at Lindsay Point, Stockton, followed his ship-carpentering trade. Robert Hanks also served as deputy sheriff in Tuolumne County under Dan Patterson, and on coming to Stockton was prominent for years in political circles. He lived to reach the age of eighty-seven, passing away on May 20, 1916. Mrs. Hanks had died in 1872.

Ed. Hanks, as he is familiarly called by all who know him, enjoyed the best obtainable educational advantages, attending the Franklin and Lafayette schools at Stockton. Then he entered the employ of William Confer & Bro., brick masons, and when two years with them, he started in business for himself, soon taking as a partner Sol. Confer, son of his former employer. They built the Union Mill in 1890, and then completed the county jail in 1891. They also erected the Southern Pacific Depot in 1900-01, and put up the Clark-Henry Building in 1900, and scores of other fine buildings in Stockton and the County. In 1901, however, Mr. Hanks had the misfortune to lose his partner, by death. He next operated alone for six years, and after that he entered into partnership with H. E. Robbins, and during 1907 and '08, they did an extensive business in rural buildings, going away as far as Fresno, Mr. Hanks holding a unique position as an authority on the construction of fireplaces, and he has been called to very distant cities to supervise their installation.

At Modesto, in 1884, Mr. Hanks was married to Miss Harriet Bacon, who was born at Pine Log, Tuolumne County, daughter of pioneer parents, and four children were born to them. Edward W., Delvin O., William Robert, and Emma. Edward resides in Oakland engaged in the insurance business. Mrs. Hanks passed away on October 2, 1916, leaving a void in the home difficult to fill. Mr. Hanks has been an eyewitness to the remarkable growth of Stockton and San Joaquin County, in which he himself has so actively participated, and it is not surprising to find him a member of the Exempt Board of Stockton firemen. He has served for nine years as president of Union No. 4, International Bricklayers Union of America. Since 1891, Mr. Hanks and his family have resided at 228 East Clay Street.

HARVEY F. UPTON.—A highly progressive and very successful young rancher, making a specialty of vineyarding, is Harvey F. Upton, who was born in Stockton on October 22, 1886, a son of Walter and Florence (Hitchcock) Upton. When two years old, he lost his father. His mother afterwards married Francis R. Hamsher, whose life-story is elsewhere sketched in this volume.

Harvey F. Upton was sent to the schools in Stockton and Aberdeen, and when he was fourteen years of age began to make his own way. He learned the machinist's trade, both iron work and auto repairing, and worked at various times in the Sampson Iron Works, Sterling Iron Works, and Stockton Iron Works, becoming thereby an expert mechanic. His service with the Sampson Iron Works extended through eight years, and he also worked in several of the leading garages in Stockton. In the harvesting season he ran a Holt harvester for his stepfather for many years.

In January, 1921, Mr. Upton began to improve the forty-five acres of land that had fallen to his wife, a part of the old Northron estate. In 1913 he was married to Miss Mildred Northrop, a daughter of George L. and Elizabeth (Van Valkenberg) Northrop, both of whom were born in San Joaquin County. He has twelve acres in vineyard, one-half in Zinfandel and one-half in Tokay grapes. He has sunk a well, and has a good five-inch pump.

Mr. Upton endeavors to follow only the latest, most scientific and practical methods, and to use only the most up-to-date apparatus.

GEORGE THOMING.—Among those who have contributed largely to the agricultural development in San Joaquin County is George Thoming, who since 1866 has made his home in California and now resides in the New Jerusalem school district, where he owns 520 acres of fine land under a high state of cultivation. He was born in Holstein, Germany, December 28, 1843, a son of Michael and Wiebke (Thode) Thoming, who were also natives of Holstein. In his native country the son was reared and in its public schools received his education.

In 1886 he came to America, taking passage at Hamburg on a steamer for New York, and thence he came via the isthmus route to California. He left Hamburg on June 2 and arrived in San Francisco on July 13, 1866. He remained in the neighborhood of that city for a short time and then removed to Solano County, whence he came to San Joaquin County in 1868, where his older brother, Thias Thoming, had come in 1864 and had taken up land under a Government preemption. In 1870 he took up his abode on the ranch in the New Jerusalem school district, which has since been his home, consisting of 520 acres, all of which is under cultivation and yields him good crops in return for the care and labor which he has bestowed upon the fields. Mr. Thoming received his U. S. citizenship at San Francisco on July 8, 1871.

In 1875 Mr. Thoming was married to Miss Lena Mashoff, a native of Holstein, Germany, and they became the parents of the following children: Jacob is manager of the Thoming ranch; Anna Maria, who is now Mrs. Francis Huck, has three children; Charles conducts a contract farm and power machine business at Stockton. Mrs. Thoming passed away on March 24, 1883, at the family home. In community affairs Mr. Thoming has always been deeply interested and has been the champion of his locality and county. For thirteen years he served as a trustee of the New Jerusalem school district, eleven years of that time serving as clerk of the board. He is unfaltering in his advocacy of the principles of the Republican party and most loyal in his support of everything that tends to advance public progress and elevate society. He belongs to the Lutheran Church and is identified with the Knights of Pythias lodge at Tracy; he is also a member of Sumner Lodge No. 177, I. O. O. F., at Tracy, and of Tracy Encampment, and in his life exemplifies the helpful spirit which is the basic element of that fraternity. Mr. Thoming has made two visits to his native land, one in 1905 and the other in 1913, returning to California in February, 1914. In 1921 he retired from active business life, after fifty years of activity in the agricultural development of the county and the management is now entrusted to his son, Jacob. Coming to America when twenty-three years of age, Mr. Thoming has never regretted the step then taken, for in this land, with its varied opportunities, he has gained success and has won the confidence and good will of those with whom he has been associated.

HERMAN VOLLBRECHT.—San Joaquin County is largely indebted to the intensive farmer for its remarkable progress and development; and to this class belongs Herman Vollbrecht, whose excellent vineyard of twenty acres is among the best-improved and most successfully managed ranches in the county. He was born in Iowa, near Riceville, Mitchell County, on September 30, 1881, a son of William and Anna Vollbrecht. William Vollbrecht was born in Germany and was brought to America by his parents when he was three years old. Herman Vollbrecht is one of a family of twelve children: Martha, deceased; Herman, of this sketch; Amanda; Jennie; Emma, now Mrs. Merrill; Minnie; Charles, residing at Lodi; and Lillian, Clara, Cora, Jack and Robert, of Stockton. His father and mother still reside in Iowa.

Herman Vollbrecht received his education in the Iowa grammar schools. When he was twenty-one, he left the parental roof, but remained in Iowa, farming until 1907, when he came to California and settled at Lodi, where he purchased ten acres in the vicinity of Victor; later he added ten acres to it, so that he now has twenty acres in a fine vineyard. He has a fine ranch house on this property, and it is equipped with a good irrigation plant, with a four-inch pump driven by a ten-horsepower motor, which is sufficient for the cultivation and irrigation of his entire twenty acres. He also owns an interest in 106 acres just north of the Mokelumne River in partnership with C. W. Hoag, of Christian Colony, and J. J. Schmiedt, of Victor. At the present time, this property is undeveloped; but it will be improved, and probably set to vines.

The marriage of Mr. Vollbrecht occurred on November 14, 1906, at Elma, Iowa, and united him with Miss Laura Miller, a native of Iowa, born in the vicinity of Elma, and a daughter of Henry and Bertha Miller. Henry Miller passed away on March 8, 1920, at Lodi; the mother still lives at Lodi. Mrs. Vollbrecht is the oldest of four children, the others being Dorothy, Roy and Bertha. Mr. Vollbrecht is a Republican; and fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias.

HARRY H. McCOMB.—A vineyardist who has been successful in his agricultural operations is Harry H. McComb, the owner of a thirty-acre vineyard four and one-half miles northeast of Lodi and three-quarters of a mile east of Dougherty Station. He was born in Jackson County, Iowa, on January 10, 1870, a son of Joseph and Martha (Livingston) McComb, both natives of Pennsylvania, from which state they removed to Iowa, and later to Nebraska, when they homesteaded a quarter-section of land. There were seven children in the family, as follows: William F., Flora B., Armenta D., Harry H., Fannie H., and two other children, who died in infancy.

Harry H. McComb received his education in the country schools of Nebraska. His agricultural training was also received in that state, on his father's farm. On March 1, 1892, he came to California and settled near Dos Palos, San Joaquin County, but had remained there only a short time when he went to San Benito County, where he worked on a ranch for the next eleven years. Then he removed to San Joaquin County, where he bought a five-acre peach and alfalfa ranch directly west of Lodi, on which he resided for two years, and then sold out and removed to Lodi. One year later he purchased twenty acres east of Dougherty Station. He continued to reside in Lodi until twelve years ago, and then removed to his ranch, and has since made his home there. In 1918 he purchased a ten-acre peach orchard lying east of his vineyard, on which he has installed a four-inch irrigation pump with a ten-horsepower motor, which is adequate for the irrigation of his thirty-acre tract.

The marriage of Mr. McComb occurred in San Francisco on April 16, 1903, and united him with Miss Julia Rivers, born in Hollister, a daughter of William and Katherine Rivers. Her father engaged in the stock business for many years, and then engaged in the teaming business in San Francisco. Mrs. McComb passed away in 1907. Fraternally, Mr. McComb is a member of the Modern Woodmen and the Improved Order of Red Men, of Lodi.

MRS. HATTIE (GRUPE) HOLMAN.—The daughter of a well-known pioneer, and herself a native daughter of the Golden State, Mrs. Hattie (Grupe) Holman was born in San Joaquin County on the Linden road about nine miles from Stockton. She is the eldest daughter of Carsten and Margaret (Behnke) Grupe, natives of Hanover and Bremen, Germany, respectively. Carsten Grupe came to California around the Horn in 1849. Settling in San Joaquin County, he mined in the hills east of Linden, and later he purchased 1,300 acres of grain land in the same section of the county. Eight children were born to these California pioneers: Hattie, of this sketch; Katherine, now Mrs. Ramsay of Stockton; Doris, now Mrs. Stowe of Stockton; Henry, residing in Linden; John, also of Linden; Mattie, Mrs. Smith, who resides in Linden; Charles, deceased, and George, of Stockton.

On September 12, 1876, Miss Hattie Grupe was united in marriage with Herman C. Holman, a native of Germany, son of Henry and Margreta Holman. Herman C. Holman came to California in 1862 and engaged in farming. He removed to Stockton and became the proprietor of the old United States Hotel; later he rebuilt it, and it is the present United States Hotel on South Center Street. In 1905 he erected his splendid residence at 307 East Oak Street and retired from the hotel business, his sons, George and Leland, assuming the management of the hotel. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Holman: Charles, a dairyman in Stockton; George; Leland of Stockton, and Hattie, residing at home with her mother. Charles, the eldest son, married Miss Bertha Salbach, of Stockton, and they have two children, Herman and Katherine. Mr. Holman died in 1910 at the age of sixty-seven years, a highly respected citizen. Mr. Holman was a friend to the cause of education and served four terms as a member of the board of education. He was a Republican in politics, and fraternally was a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge and of the Encampment and Ridgely Canton, Stockton, and also a member of Stockton lodge, No. 218, Elks.

WILLIAM J. S. HICKOX.—Prominent in business circles of Stockton, William J. S. Hickox has made an outstanding success in the different activities in which he has been engaged. A native son, he was born at Castroville, Monterey County, on March 16, 1873. His parents, both native of New York, were Frank G. and Clorinda (Sarles) Hickox, and both are now deceased. Grandfather Jeremiah Sarles came around the Horn to California in 1851, and Mrs. Hickox was only three years old when she arrived in California, coming by way of the Isthmus in 1852. There were only seventeen women in Stockton at that time and she was the first white child. Jeremiah Sarles teamed to the Southern Mines in the early days and later ran a dairy, delivering milk there in 1862. He bought the J. C. Smith ranch on the Sacramento Road, which he later sold, and he also followed sheep raising and mining for a time. In 1872 he ran for sheriff of San Joaquin County, and was defeated by only one vote. Frank G. Hickox, our subject's father, was one of Stockton's pioneer painting contractors, coming there in the early days of the town and actively engaging in his trade.

William J. S. Hickox was only one year old when his parents brought him to Stockton. He was fortunate in receiving a good education, attending the University of California after he had completed his work in the public schools. Returning to Stockton after his University days, he was employed as a book-keeper for a time, and then learned the trade of painting and became a partner with his father in the business, continuing for himself after his father's death. He gradually drifted in to the business of house wrecking and general contracting, and in these lines he is now engaged. He owns two lumber yards in Stockton and a number of apartments and residences, and has been very successful in his undertakings, due to his hard work and his progressive methods of business.

In Stockton on May 5, 1896, Mr. Hickox was married to Miss Annie S. Smith, a native daughter of California, born at Angels Camp, Calaveras County, and they make their home at 528 North American Street. Mr. Hickox enters enthusiastically into all public-spirited movements and he is especially well known in fraternal circles, being a member of the Woodmen of the World, Red Men, Court of Honor, Yeomen, and Royal Highlanders.

J. F. RILEY.—One of the growing business firms of Stockton is the Pacific Transfer and Storage Company; and as its manager, J. F. Riley is taking his place among the responsible and energetic business men of this city. Mr. Riley was born at Cincinnati, Ohio, July 25, 1891, and in 1905 accompanied his parents to Los Angeles, Cal. Here he gained his education in the public schools, taking a business course in the Polytechnic High School and participating actively in its athletics, being a member of the football team. In 1915 he located in San Francisco and entered the employ of the Irvine Music Company, owned by his uncle, R. S. Irvine, remaining there until the spring of 1922, when he accepted the position of manager of the Pacific Transfer and Storage Company and took up his residence at Stockton. This company was started in 1904 by R. S. Irvine, one of the early settlers of Stockton, and at that time the equipment consisted of one horse and wagon. As the business has grown, new equipment has been added; and now nine motor trucks and four drays are in constant use. The warehouse at 110 South Aurora Street is used for the storage of household goods, an extensive branch of the business. In recent years long-distance draying has been a large factor in their activities, loads being taken from Stockton to distant points and delivered direct to the house. They have transported goods as far as San Diego, and make frequent trips up the valley and to the bay cities; and during the season fruit hauling forms a large item of their business.

Mr. Riley's marriage, which occurred at Los Angeles, January 12, 1912, united him with Miss Florence Morrill, a native of Buffalo, N. Y.; and they are the parents of two children, Helen and Donald, both born in California. An enthusiast for the state of his adoption, Mr. Riley is particularly optimistic over the future of the San Joaquin Valley.

THOMAS J. RAINES.—A familiar figure in the business circles of Lodi is Thomas J. Raines, the genial and accommodating yard foreman for the Fuller Lumber Company, a position he has occupied for the past nineteen years. Mr. Raines is a man of enterprise, and has been engaged in steady and worthy endeavor ever since boyhood. Like most successful men, he began with small capital, and his own character and ability are the sources of what he has gained. He was born on the Holly Oak ranch at Napa, Cal., September 12, 1873, a son of Harry and Marilla (Mathews) Raines, natives of England and Canada, respectively. In 1869, Harry Raines came to California and settled in Napa County, where he farmed for four years. Then he removed to Ontario, Canada, and engaged in farming until 1884, when he returned to California and settled near Vallejo, where he owned and conducted a ranch. Two years later, in 1886, the family came to San Joaquin County, settling in the vicinity of Clements; and the father rented 385 acres, which he farmed to grain for five years. Then he moved back to Vallejo, and there rented a farm. Returning to San Joaquin County, he purchased the Baird ranch north of Clements, the ranch of 385 acres which he had formerly leased. He farmed this place for six years and then sold it and moved to Lodi. There he bought a home on South School Street, where he lived until his death, May 18, 1922. There were four children in the family: Alvin, deceased at the age of forty-nine; Nellie, Mrs.

Drake; Thomas J., of this sketch; and Arthur E., employed in the navy yards at Vallejo, Cal.

In 1904 Thomas J. Raines entered the employ of the Young-Smith Lumber Company in Lodi, and was soon made foreman of their yards; later, when Mr. Young purchased Mr. Smith's interest, Mr. Raines continued in the same capacity; and when, in 1910, Mr. Fuller bought the lumber yards, Mr. Raines again retained his position.

On August 18, 1908, in Jackson, Cal., Mr. Raines was married to Miss Cora Wrigglesworth, a native of Amador County, Cal., a daughter of George and Augusta (Hubble) Wrigglesworth, the former a native of New York and the latter of California. Grandfather Hubble came to California in 1849, from Illinois, and settled in Amador County, where his daughter Augusta, as well as his granddaughter, Mrs. Raines, was born. Mrs. Raines is the youngest in a family of three children: Orville, residing in Oakland; George, and Cora, now Mrs. Raines. Cora Wrigglesworth began her education in the grammar schools of Amador County, and later attended school in Berkeley, Cal. She was engaged in teaching school for eleven years, three of which were spent in the schools of Lodi, just previous to her marriage to Mr. Raines. Her father died at the age of seventy-four, and her mother at fifty-four years of age. Mr. and Mrs. Raines had one son, George, who died at the age of three months. In politics, Mr. Raines is a Democrat. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Masons and the Eastern Star of Lodi; while Mrs. Raines is past worthy matron of Lodi Chapter, Order of Eastern Star.

FREDERICK AUGUST RUHL.—To a considerable degree the present prosperity of California may be attributed to the German-American citizens of the state, men who came to the West in an early day and gave their most earnest endeavors to the upbuilding of the country. With them they brought the characteristics of the German race, thrift, economy and industry, which have contributed to their success. These traits, supplemented by the American quality of enterprise, brought prosperity to the late Frederick August Ruhl, who came to the United States in 1860, and to California in 1867. In 1869 he settled in Stockton, and for many years carried on a hardware and plumbing business, but eventually disposed of his interests and retired.

Mr. Ruhl was born in Prussia, November 8, 1839, a son of Matthew and Edna Ruhl; and there he attended school between the ages of six and fourteen, and from then until he was eighteen served an apprenticeship in the plumber's trade in Hesse-Cassel. Upon the expiration of his time he began to work as a journeyman plumber, and in that capacity he traveled throughout his native country. Crossing the ocean in 1860, he settled in New York City and secured work at his trade. When the first call came from President Lincoln for 75,000 men, he offered his services to his adopted country, and was accepted as a private in the 5th New York Infantry, with which he was ordered to Washington and detailed to act as guard of that city. At the expiration of four months he was honorably discharged, and upon his return to New York City resumed work at his trade. In 1867, Mr. Ruhl came to California via the Isthmus and settled in Sacramento, where for two years he worked at his trade. During the year 1869 he removed to Stockton and with his savings of $950 opened a plumbing shop in a building that stood on the site of the old Mansion House. Later he became interested in the hardware business and thereafter continued the two kindred enterprises with growing success for a long period. In 1903, Mr. Ruhl suffered the loss of his store and contents by fire, which entailed a loss of $10,000. About that time, with his oldest clerk, F. E. Goddell, he organized a company and incorporated what was known as the Ruhl-Goodell Company, Mr. Ruhl being the president. Soon afterward he sold his interest to his partner and retired from the business. He then became the president of the Security Land Company of Stockton, but was mainly retired from active labor, enjoying in quiet content the comforts accumulated by long years of industry. After retiring from business, in 1907, he took a trip back to his old home in Germany.

Mr. Ruhl's marriage united him with Miss Mary Christ, a native of Germany; and they were the parents of one daughter, Hattie, who married William H. Lorenz, the president of the First National Bank of Lodi. On account of his war service, Mr. Ruhl was a pensioner of the government. All movements for the betterment of Stockton or the advancement of the state received his staunch support, and he was always ready to aid worthy projects to the extent of his ability. Mr. Ruhl served four years in the city council. With many of his fellow-countrymen he enjoyed the activities of the Turn Verein. Upon the organization of the Improved Order of Red Men he became one of its charter members, and he was also a member of Stockton Lodge No. 11 of the Odd Fellows. Long connection with the business interests of the city gave him a wide acquaintance throughout Stockton and vicinity, and his death was a great loss to the community.

HARRY C. STANLEY.—A representative of the bar of San Joaquin County, Harry C. Stanley is a native of Iowa, born at Lewis, Cass County, December 1, 1877. He is a son of Horace M. and Sarah (Upson) Stanley, the former a native of Iowa and the latter of Illinois, who now have five living children: Harry C.; Mrs. Maude Mill, of San Francisco; Arthur E., of Tuolumne County; Fred R., a deputy county clerk of San Joaquin County; and Mrs. Grace Goodwin, of Lodi. The family came to California in 1879, locating in Tuolumne County. There the father followed mining, in later years coming to Lodi, where he engaged in building operations.

Harry C. Stanley attended school in Tuolumne County, and later the Stockton Business College, Heald's Business College in San Francisco, the Y. M. C. A. Law School in San Francisco, and the law department of Highland Park College, Des Moines, Iowa. He was admitted to the bar of California, January 15, 1906, and began practicing law on November 1, 1909. During the interim between 1906 and 1909, Mr. Stanley was engaged as instructor in the commercial and normal departments of the Stockton branch of Heald's College. He opened up his first law office in the Stockton Savings and Loan Bank Building, November 1, 1909. He served as assistant district attorney of San Joaquin County under District Attorney Charles Light, who died while in office. He pursues a general law practice and maintains offices in the Farmers and Merchants Building.

At Stockton, Mr. Stanley was united in marriage with Miss Cora E. Sperry, a native daughter of that city, whose father, Nelson Benjamin Sperry, was one of Stockton's pioneer residents, coming here in 1858. Prominent in fraternal circles, Mr. Stanley is a member of Morning Star Lodge No. 68, F. & A. M.; is Past Noble Grand of Truth Lodge No. 55, I. O. O. F.; has passed through all chairs of Parker Encampment; and is past commander of Yosemite Tent No. 35, K. O. T. M.

JAMES C. JOYCE.—The son of a worthy and esteemed early settler of Stockton is James C. Joyce, who was about a year old when with his mother and brother he arrived in this city, coming via Panama. Born in Waltham, Mass., on October 15, 1862, he is the son of Alfred and Margaret (McFarland) Joyce, both natives of Ireland; his father was a baker by trade who came to California via the Isthmus of Panama in the spring of 1863 and settled in Stockton. Three days out of the week he worked on the levee and the other three days made yeast and sold it from house to house; later he was cook in the What Cheer Hotel, which stood at the corner of Center and Main streets; and then head cook at the State Hospital, remaining there for nine years. After he had saved some money he went to Captain Weber's office and told his clerk, L. M. Cutting that he wanted to purchase a lot for a home. Mr. Cutting recognized him as a man he had known in Waltham, Mass., and the friendship was renewed. Mr. Joyce purchased a one-fourth of a block for $500 on East Oak Street at the corner of Sacramento, and he there erected his house and barns and later his bake shop, which was called the Pacific Bakery. This was the only house in that part of town and was considered out in the country at that time; he carried on his business until 1910. There were four children in the family: John F.; Lizzie; James C., our subject; and Mary, the widow of the late Jacob R. Koch, cashier of the San Joaquin Valley Bank. Alfred Joyce, the pioneer, passed away in 1913; the mother made her home with the children at the old home until her death, March, 1922, aged ninety-three years, hale and hearty till her last illness of only a month's duration.

James C. first attended the Vineyard school at the corner of Park and Pilgrim streets; later when the Jefferson school was built he attended there, and during odd times he helped his father in the bakery and thus learned the trade. As his father grew old, he and his brother, John F., took over the business and ran it as the Pioneer Bakery until 1917 when they closed out the business and retired. They built up a large business, running three delivery wagons, and were among the oldest in this line of business. Having followed the bakery business from twelve years of age, since 1874, Mr. Joyce retired after forty-three years. However, wishing to again have something definite to occupy his time, he entered the employ of Oranges Bros.' Garage. Mr. Joyce was a member of the Volunteer Fire Department in early days, foreman of Hose No. 4, which was dubbed the "crazy four." He is loyally interested in everything that pertains to the advancement of the community which has been his home for so many years of his life.

J. C. Joyce

CHARLES R. RUTLEDGE.—A man of enterprise and rare business qualifications, Charles R. Rutledge is a leading citizen of Woodbridge, Cal., and is in close touch with the horticultural interests of San Joaquin County, occupying the position of field representative of the Woodbridge district for the Earl Fruit Company. A native son of California, he was born at Woodbridge on the Robert Boyce ranch on August 10, 1870, a son of Edward G. and Mary C. (Farmer) Rutledge, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Missouri. His father crossed the plains to California in 1852 and settled at Acampo, San Joaquin County. He formed a partnership with the late Senator Langford and entered into a contract with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to cut wood, and thousands of cords of wood were cut and delivered to the railroad company. When the contract was completed, in partnership with a brother and their father he opened a general store in Woodbridge under the firm name of John Rutledge & Sons; later, in partnership with Mr. McLeran he bought out the store of John Rutledge & Sons and continued the business for some years as Rutledge & McLeran. Then he located at Sonora and became watchman in the gold mines, and while thus occupied met death by accident. The mother crossed the plains with her parents in an early day; and her father, Washington Farmer, became a prominent agriculturist of Woodbridge. They were the parents of five children, all of whom are living: John W., of Tuolumne; Charles R., of this sketch; Benjamin F., of Monterey, Cal.; Edward, with the Standard Oil Company, at Richmond, Cal.; and Clarence, a rancher living in Woodbridge.

Charles R. Rutledge received his education in the public schools of Woodbridge, and then spent three years on a ranch in Tulare County. Following this he spent eight years in the mines in Jerome and Bisbee, Ariz. On his return to his native county he entered into a partnership with his cousin, George Rutledge, and for some years conducted a general store in Woodbridge, during which time he received his appointment as postmaster of Woodbridge. He resigned the postmastership when he sold his interest in the store in 1914, having served for twelve years. For the past sixteen years he has been the representative of Guggenlime & Company of San Francisco, in this district, buying dried fruits from the orchardists throughout the valley on a brokerage basis. As field representative of the Earl Fruit Company he goes from orchard to orchard supervising the farm work necessary for the production of the crops of fruit, etc. His duties give him ample opportunity to keep well posted on the fruit industry of the county.

The marriage of Mr. Rutledge occurred on July 8, 1894, and united him with Miss Bertha Lee Sargent, a native of Plymouth, Cal. Mr. Rutledge relates an interesting event that occurred on the day of his marriage. The big railroad strike was then on and the San Francisco "Examiner" sent a bundle of papers by boat to Stockton; from Stockton they were carried to Sacramento on a bicycle, and he purchased a paper for twenty-five cents as the paper man passed through Woodbridge. Mrs. Rutledge's stepfather, the late Mr. Amos McClelland, was a well-known character in California in the early days; he was a pioneer railroad man and helped to build the railroad to Valley Springs, and was conductor on the line for many years. Fraternally, Mr. Rutledge is a member of the Woodbridge Lodge of Masons, No. 131, and also of the Woodbridge Eastern Star, and of the Stockton Elks, No. 218.

JOHN W. SHATTUCK.—A leader in the commercial circles of Lodi, and a prominent lumberman of the San Joaquin Valley, is John W. Shattuck, the enterprising president of the Business Men's Association of Lodi. He was born in Lawrence, Mass.; and when he was but a small lad, his parents removed to Pittsburgh, Pa., where he was reared and educated. He came to California in 1886, took up architectural drawing, and found employment with the Valley Lumber Company, of Fresno, Cal. Later he was with the Kings River Lumber Company, of Sanger; the L. W. Blinn Lumber Company, of Los Angeles; and the Wending Lumber Company, of Hanford. His years of experience in the lumber business gave him a thorough knowledge of all branches of the industry. Removing to Washington, he went into business for himself at Arlington, manufacturing shingles and doing a general lumber business. He then returned to California, stopping at Vallejo Junction, and was employed by the Port Costa Lumber Company; afterwards, for a time, he was employed by the Hidecker Company, of Oakland. During the year of 1910 he settled in Lodi and entered the employ of the Morehead Lumber Company, the pioneer lumber company of the city, established in 1884 by A. W. Simpson of San Francisco; and later he was taken into partnership. This company changed hands a number of times, and on January 1, 1921, the name was changed to the Reliance Lumber Company and Mr. Shattuck became manager and president of the company, with a controlling interest in the business. The company also operated a planing mill in connection with their lumber business, and were thus able to turn out finished products of their own manufacture. A disastrous fire on July 2, 1921, destroyed the Reliance Lumber Company's property at Lodi, and Mr. Shattuck's savings of a lifetime were utterly wiped out.

Mr. Shattuck has been connected with the lumber industry in California and Washington for thirty-three years, and built up an institution that was one of the largest in the county. He is active as a member of the Western Retail Lumbermen's Association of the Pacific Coast, of the San Joaquin County Lumber Association, and the Sacramento Lumber Association. At present he is the manager for the Valley Lumber Company at Lodi. The business men of Lodi, recognizing his unusual capabilities, elected him president of the Business Men's Association for the year of 1921; this association was organized in 1914 and considers all matters connected with the growth and improvement of their city and county. At the April election in 1922, Mr. Shattuck was elected as a member of the board of trustees of the city of Lodi for a four-year term. Upon the organization of the board, he was selected chairman; and he is now functioning as "Mayor of Lodi," in a most creditable manner.

The marriage of Mr. Shattuck united him with Miss Meta E. Hovey, a native of Arkansas; and they are the parents of one son, Lyle, a lad of seven years. Fraternally, he is connected with the Masonic Blue Lodge, No. 256, of Lodi.

EMERY A. THOMPSON.—A representative of a family who were early settlers of the San Joaquin Valley may be found in Emery A. Thompson, field man for the Earl C. Anthony Company in the Lodi district. He was born in Douglas County, Kan., on October 5, 1866, a son of John and Catherine (Shank) Thompson, the former a native of the state of Pennsylvania. His father worked as a tow-boy on the Erie Canal, and in his young manhood removed to Illinois and was occupied with farming pursuits; and while residing there he met and married his wife. During the year 1864 he drove across the country from Illinois to Kansas with an ox team, and during the Civil War did teaming from Kansas to Missouri. He remained in Kansas for ten years, during which time he engaged in farming, and in the fall of 1874, with his wife and five children, started for California on an immigrant train. The first stopping-place was at Lathrop, where their stay was short, and thence they went to San Jose. He then bought a place near Linden, which he sold within one year and with his family started north to Woodland in a two-horse wagon; but being undecided, they turned back and located at Tyson on the Rees Thompson ranch. Later he rented the John Bennett ranch and farmed there for three years. In the year of 1877 he bought 160 acres situated four miles northwest of Woodbridge. This became the home place, and he farmed it successfully for many years, planting it to grapes. It is now one of the oldest vineyards in the county. He was a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Woodbridge. There were seven children in the family, and the following are living: Elmer E., living in Stockton; Emery A., of this review; Wilson H., residing in Lodi; Ana Isabel; and Letty.

Emery A. Thompson attended the Linden, Bellota and Ray schools, and later was a student in the old Woodbridge College. At the age of twelve he began work on a header, and by the time he was fourteen could do a man's work in the harvest field. He also hauled grapes to the West winery, a distance of seventeen miles; it was an all-day trip, for when he reached the winery there were from fifty to seventy-five wagons ahead of him waiting to be unloaded. Grapes were selling at that time for $6 per ton and in Stockton at $10 per ton. Since he left the home place, at the age of seventeen, he has followed various lines of work. At one time he was a photographer in Stockton; afterwards he was with the River Express Company of that city; then he went to Tulare County and worked on a farm; and later he worked as a salesman for the Sampson Iron Works of Stockton, selling gas engines. He then became connected with the first fruit-packing establishment in Lodi; and he has also been in the employ of the Frank H. Buck Company and the Pacific Fruit Exchange, as field man, and at the present time serves in that capacity for the Earl C. Anthony Company, for the Lodi section. In various real estate transactions, also, he has bought, developed and sold a number of vineyards throughout the county.

Mr. Thompson's marriage united him with Miss Mattie Christie, a native of Ohio. Fraternally, he is a charter member of the Lodi Lodge, No. 848, Fraternal Order of Eagles, and has passed through all the chairs; and is also a member of the Knights of Pythias.

JOHN CHARLESWORTH.—A representative business man of Stockton, John Charlesworth is a man who not only has achieved individual success but has also public-spiritedly devoted himself to the general welfare of his fellow-citizens, and has been foremost in advancing enterprises and improvements which will prove of lasting benefit to the city, county and state. He was born near Homedale, Wayne County, Pa., on January 28, 1869, but was reared and educated in the state of Kansas. His father, Firth Charlesworth, was born in England and came to the United States when he was twenty-two years of age. He located in Southern Illinois where he was married in 1858 to Amanda Breakbill, who was born in Kentucky and comes of an old Virginia family, her ancestors being among the earliest settlers of Jamestown and some of them served in the Revolution and the war of 1812. Firth Charlesworth served as a captain of Company L 6th Illinois Cavalry, in the Civil War. In 1871 he brought his family to Mitchell County, Kans., and became a pioneer homesteader on Salt Creek near Beloit; later he disposed of his farm and engaged in mercantile business in Beloit. Although sixty-two years of age at the time of the breaking out of the Spanish-American War he raised a company and was commissioned captain of Company C, 22nd Kansas Volunteer Infantry, serving until the regiment was mustered out. He was prominent in G. A. R. and Spanish-American War Veterans' circles. He was a very prominent man in Kansas politics, serving as assemblyman in the legislature, and he was quartermaster-general of Kansas with the rank of colonel at the time of his death twenty-two years ago. His widow makes her home in Topeka; she was the mother of six children, five of whom are living, John being the fourth.

His education was obtained in the public school and he was graduated from Beloit High in 1887, after which he learned the trade of sheet metal worker in Beloit; later he established a hardware business in Scottsville, Kan., continuing about seven years. After he sold his business he became a grain buyer with headquarters in Quenemo, which occupied him for six years. In 1908 he decided to try his fortune in the West, where he worked at his trade in Utah, Idaho, Washington and Nevada, and in 1914 came to Stockton to manage the sheet metal department of the Stockton Plumbing Supply Company, which position he has filled most capably to the entire satisfaction of his employers.

In January, 1921, Mr. Charlesworth was chosen by his fellow members of the San Joaquin County Building Trades Council to fill the position of president, where his natural bent for organizing and his ability as a presiding officer have been satisfactorily demonstrated; he is also chairman of the Conference Committee of the council. He keeps in direct touch with all matters of importance to the council and cooperates with every enterprise and measure for the welfare of the city.

Mr. Charlesworth was married in Beloit, Kan., to Miss Mary Hodler, a native of that city, a union that proved very happy until Mr. Charlesworth was bereaved of his faithful wife in 1908. She left two sons: Firth, at the age of eighteen volunteered and served in the 35th Division in the World War, being sent overseas, and served for a year in the Argonne and other places on the French front. He is now engaged in business in Hesston, Kans. Elwin has just been discharged from three and one-half years' service in the U. S. Navy and also makes his home in Hesston, Kans.

During his residence in Quenemo, Kan., Mr. Charlesworth was a member of the city council and later was elected mayor of the city. At the city election in Stockton on May 2, 1922, he was one of the fifteen freeholders selected to draft a new city charter for the city of Stockton. Having had considerable experience in city government he threw himself into the work and took an active part in originating the city charter now before the people particularly on the franchise committee, but he was also on the powers of the council, police, fire department, law, civil service and contracts committees. He is an active member of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce.

STEPHENS BROS.—The manufacturing industry carried on successfully by Stephens Bros., that of boat designing and building, is of great importance to the community of Stockton. Their business was started in a very small way in 1901 and has grown steadily to its present large dimensions. On the Stockton Channel, they now own a frontage of 380 feet, the greater portion of which is under roof; and their manufacturing plant is equipped with the most modern machinery, and is under the direct supervision of the brothers composing the firm. Both brothers are native sons of California, born on the old Stephens homestead on the Calaveras River near Stockton; Theodore J. on March 30, 1882, and Roy R. on January 3, 1884. Their parents, Thomas J. and Jessie (Moreing) Stephens, are pioneer residents of Stockton and are also represented in this history. Both of the Stephens boys were reared in San Joaquin County and received a good education. At an early age they became interested in river navigation, and built their first boat in their back yard, a yacht named "Dorothy," with four-passenger capacity, which they used for eight years on San Francisco Bay and for pleasure cruises. In 1901 both boys entered the employ of their uncle, C. Moreing, who owned a string of power-boats on the Stockton Channel, and operated two tug barges, one of which, called the "Wildwood," was the first gasoline power-boat used for commercial purposes on the San Joaquin River. The following year, 1902, the boys bought equal shares in the business; and as the Delta farms developed, their business increased rapidly and their string of boats were known as the Mosquito Fleet, so well-known in the Delta on the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers. The Stephens brothers hauled the first supply of oil for the dredger on Grand Island in 1901. In 1902, they began their boat-building business, selling their interests in the towing business and purchasing an old barge, which they floated near the present site of their plant on the Stockton Channel. Their building operations were begun in a small way; and their first boat, named the "Queen," is still in operation on Tomales Bay, as a passenger boat from the railroad station at Point Reyes across the bay to Inverness. Following the completion of the "Queen," a number of boats were constructed and put in operation, many of which are still being used in the Delta district of the county. They also purchased property from time to time until their frontage is 380 feet, and their plant includes a large lumber warehouse where material is seasoned for boat construction; the designing of their craft is done within their plant. Theodore J. Stephens oversees the operation of the shops, while Roy R. Stephens has charge of the office. Recently this firm completed a consignment of twelve boats for a commission house in San Francisco. During the World War forty-five men were steadily employed in the building of craft for the transportation of foodstuffs. The Stephens brothers' plant is complete in every detail, and the brothers devote their entire time to its supervision.

The marriage of Theodore J. Stephens united him with Miss Evelyn Gershbacher, a daughter of Mrs. Joshua Gershbacher, a pioneer of Stockton; and they are the parents of three boys: Theodore J., Barry, and Richard. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Stephens are members of the Stockton Country Club.

Roy R. Stephens was united in marriage with Miss Lucille Budd, daughter of the late J. H. Budd, a prominent attorney of Stockton; and they have one daughter, Sylvia Lucille. Mr. and Mrs. Roy Stephens are members of the Yosemite Club. Both brothers are members of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce.

JOHN THOMPSON.—Among the respected and successful agriculturists of San Joaquin County, the late John Thompson devoted his energies to farming for over thirty years. He was a man of great individual worth and excellence, who performed his tasks with credit, and who left behind him a family who, themselves an honor to his name, will cherish his memory and works. Since 1900 Mr. Thompson had resided at his pleasant home in Lodi, relaxing in a measure the strenuous activity which characterized and brought success to his younger years, although he continued to be an important factor in the agricultural life of the county up to the time of his demise. His beautiful ranch of 160 acres situated four miles northwest of Woodbridge bore visible evidence of his labors and sagacious management. He was born in Northampton County, Pa., September 22, 1838, a son of James and Elizabeth Thompson, natives of Ireland, who emigrated to Canada in early life and settled near Montreal. Later they removed to Northampton County, Pa., where the father died. The mother passed away in Philadelphia.

John Thompson was reared and educated in his native county, but the school advantages of that day were rather meager, and were limited in his case to attendance for about three months in each year until he was sixteen years old, when he went into the practical school of experience and real life. In 1856 he left his native state and went to Carthage, Ill., where he followed farming for two or three years. About 1861 he removed to Douglas County, Kan., where he pioneered and at the time of the sacking of Lawrence by Quantrell, in 1863, he was one of the men who hurriedly rode to the next town appraising the citizens of Quantrell's approach and advising the men to hide in the woods till his bushwhackers got by. In 1874, he removed from Kansas to California. Before settling on his 160-acre farm in the Woodbridge district, he farmed near Lathrop and Linden.

Mr. Thompson was married in Carthage, Ill., February 24, 1859, to Mrs. Catherine Shank, born on September 3, 1837, a daughter of Christian Shank. Both of her parents were natives of Germany. In infancy she was taken to Lee County, Iowa, where her parents remained until she was eight years old, then removing to Illinois and locating near Carthage, where she grew to womanhood and was married. For a number of years Mr. Thompson served as a trustee of the Ray school district, San Joaquin County, in which he was a former resident. In politics he was a Republican. He was a member of the Jefferson Lodge No. 98, I. O. O. F., at Woodbridge, and he and his wife were members of the Rebekahs at Lodi. Mrs. Thompson, also deceased, was a member of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Congregational Church at Lodi, and also of the Woman's Relief Corps of the same place. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson were the parents of seven children, five of whom are still living: Elmer E., represented elsewhere in this work; Emery A., residing in Lodi; Wilson Henry, also residing in Lodi, and represented in this work; Anabel, Mrs. William Lossing; and Letty M., Mrs. William Franklin. Mary Thompson, the third child, is deceased; and the first child died in infancy.

WILLIAM H. WILSON.—A native son of California, who has made good along agricultural lines, is William H. Wilson, whose sixty-acre ranch with thirty acres in vineyard is located about five and one-half miles northeast of Lodi. He was born on his father's ranch near Farmington, San Joaquin County, on February 14, 1879, a son of James and Sarah M. (Jones) Wilson, both natives of Ohio. James Wilson came to Woodbridge, San Joaquin County, about 1875, bought 240 acres on the Acampo-Lodi Highway, and engaged in grain farming; later he sold 160 acres of his ranch to P. B. Armstrong. There were six children in the family: John Allen, residing at Cloverdale, Cal.; Sadie, now Mrs. Erickson; Mary, Mrs. Gillespie, of Centerville, Cal.; Elizabeth, Mrs. Keeling, of Acampo; B. M., deceased, and William H. The father lived to be seventy-five years old; the mother died in 1911.

William H. Wilson, as a lad, had very little opportunity for an education, his time being taken up with work on the ranch. After his father's demise, he purchased his brother's interest in the home place, and now has sixty acres, twenty-five of which is in Tokay grapes, five acres in Zinfandel and Mission grapes, and the balance of thirty acres in alfalfa, etc. He has two irrigating wells on his ranch, with a four-inch and a five-inch pump, driven by a gas engine and electric power. Mr. Wilson and his father personally built all the farm buildings, including the house, barn and smaller buildings.

The marriage of Mr. Wilson occurred in Stockton on December 10, 1911, and united him with Miss Glessie Martin, a daughter of J. and Anna (Ewell) Martin, her mother a direct descendant of General Ewell. Mrs. Wilson was born in Garfield, Wash., and is the eldest of a family of five children, as follows: Glessie, Myrtle, May, now Mrs. Waucope of Lodi; Ruby, wife of Ellis Frink, a mineralogist now engaged at Clarkdale, Arizona, and Herbert, of Sherwood, Ore. Mr. and Mrs. Martin removed to Idaho, and Mr. Martin there conducted a sawmill, and while residing there, Glessie attended school up to the seventh grade. When she was thirteen years old, her parents removed to the Live Oak district, in San Joaquin County, and there she finished the grammar school; then she entered the Lodi high school, where she remained for two years. While residing in the Live Oak district, the family lived on the old Elliott place in the house built in 1850, which has just recently burned down. Mr. and Mrs. Martin are now living in Sherwood, Ore. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are the parents of three children, William Woodrow, James Martin, and Francis Marian, who died on February 11, 1923, at the hospital at Lodi, as the result of a surgical operation. Fraternally, Mr. Wilson belongs to the Ione Lodge of Odd Fellows, and politically he is a Democrat. Mr. Wilson takes pride in advancing the general interests of his town and county and is regarded as one of the progressive citizens of the community.

HENRY J. ARMBRUST.—A representative of an old pioneer family who is an enterprising and progressive citizen of Stockton, Henry J. Armbrust was born near Stockton February 21, 1865, the eldest son of Henry and Mary Armbrust, natives of Germany and Switzerland respectively. Henry Armbrust, the father of our subject, left Germany for America in 1863 on a small sailing vessel, the journey taking sixty-five days to New York; from that port in company with his brother Louis, he came via Panama to California, arriving in San Francisco late in 1863 and the same year settled in Stockton, where he found work on the Potter ranch on the French Camp Road. In 1864 he entered the employ of Jacob Wagner and for four years was foreman in the tannery. He was first married in 1854 and two children were born of the union, Henry J., our subject, and Emma, wife of Charles Fritsch, who now has four children and resides in Portland, Ore. In 1867, Mrs. Armbrust passed away and the following year Mr. Armbrust resigned from the tannery and bought ten acres near Stockton on West Lane, which he developed to a high state of cultivation. In 1869 he was married to Miss Christina Christenson, a native of Denmark, and to them there were born three sons and two daughters, all of whom reside in and near Stockton. Henry Armbrust was among the pioneer fruit men of California and a successful viticulturist. In 1914 he retired from ranch work and in 1920 he sold his property and settled in Stockton, where he passed away on October 25, 1921.

Henry J. Armbrust attended the Old North school and from an early age was associated with his father in the fruit business, having charge of the local marketing of the ranch products. His first marriage was blessed by two daughters, Lola, the wife of G. Cinato, residing in Oakland; and Mary, the wife of Percy Van Pelt, residing in San Francisco. Mr. Armbrust later married Miss Mary Steinbacher, born in Woodland, a daughter of John Steinbacher, pioneer merchant of that city. Six children have been born of this union: William, Carmelita, Elenor, Marguerite, Henry, Jr., and Francis. In 1924, retiring from ranch work, Mr. Armbrust entered the employ of the street department of the city of Stockton, where he has since been a trusted employee. In 1908, Mr. Armbrust built his residence at 1345 East Park Street, where he has since resided. Politically he is a Democrat. Fraternally he is a member of Stockton Lodge 218, B. P. O. E., and for the past thirty-five years has been a member of the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a past chancellor.

GEORGE FRANCIS THOMPSON.—A distinguished Californian to whom the citizens of the Delta district near Stockton owe much for his great work in the development of that important section—a task which would have been impossible except for optimism and courage, and hard, almost heroic work—is George Francis Thompson, the well-known pioneer farmer now residing at 1138 North Center Street, Stockton, in which city he was born on July 24, 1866. He was the son of J. W. and Margaret (Carlin) Thompson, both natives of Ireland and both now deceased. The father crossed the great, untracked plains to reach California in the famous Argonaut year of '49; and after mining for a while, he teamed to Sonora in Tuolumne County, and as a veritable pioneer, did much to open the way for those that came after him. Five children were born to this worthy pioneer couple: Anna, Mrs. Gofield, of Stockton; James, who died at sixty-two years; W. J., of Stockton; Sarah Jane, who died when fifty; and George Francis, of this sketch. The father died about 1870, and Mrs. Thompson afterward married Sol Hurey, a fruit grower on Roberts Island; later they sold out and returned to Stockton, where they both passed away, the mother at the age of sixty-five years.

George Francis Thompson attended the Franklin school at Stockton, and later the Stockton Business College, where he graduated in 1884. As a boy he went to Roberts Island and there learned the rudiments of farming on the ranch of his stepfather. Later, with John O'Brien as a partner, he rented 320 acres on Roberts Island and farmed it to grain, continuing until they were operating 3,000 acres. Later still, the floods ruined their crops, and then Mr. Thompson bought 160 acres on the Island and also worked for Frank Lane, farming a large acreage. In 1898, with Ralph P. Lane as a partner, he farmed 3,000 acres on Union Island, using a steam tractor, and they were among the first to break the soil after the reclamation of this island. They raised grain and vegetables and were very successful until 1906, when the land was again flooded. While farming on the islands Mr. Thompson was through seven different floods, but he persevered and in time made a success, raising grain, cattle and fine Percheron horses. He has gone through the different phases of California agriculture, from the old header to tractors and combined harvesters, and at times has raised crops of as high as 90,000 sacks. When he was twenty-two years old, he spent a year at Huron, Fresno County, as superintendent for Bowles & McNear, in developing water to prove up six sections of land, tapping Big Cantua Creek and bringing the water by ditch to the land.

With Dr. C. L. Six as a partner, Mr. Thompson rented the Gillis ranch, 320 acres of the Woods brothers' tract, and 598 acres of the St. Catherine ranch, all on Roberts Island. They also operated the Jacobs & Flack ranch of 720 acres, raising potatoes there in 1912; but owing to the low prices of that year, they lost heavily. In partnership with Peter Dentoni and J. Campodonico, he at length bought the St. Catherine ranch, and in 1915 he bought out his partners and then sold a half-interest to Mr. Ruess; and now, with Robert T. Melton, present city commissioner of Stockton, as a partner, he owns the other half. He also farms 320 acres on Woodward Island. Mr. Thompson has invested a portion of his profits in Stockton real estate and is now the owner of a fine flat building and two residences besides his own home, on Center and Rose streets. He is one of the best-informed men on land values in the Delta district, for all his life he has farmed there.

On Roberts Island, November 26, 1897, Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Clara Fox, a lady of many accomplishments, a native daughter of Lodi, and three children have been born to them, Ralph, George and Ruth. Mrs. Thompson's father, William Morgan Fox, who was born in Clark County, Ohio, served in the Civil War and was a prisoner at Andersonville for nine months. He was married in Canton, Ill., to Miss Mary J. Sproul, and in 1867 they came to California via Panama, settling at Stockton. He was a shoemaker, but followed farming here. He passed away at Manteca, survived by his widow, who makes her home near Oakdale. Of their six children, Mrs. Thompson is next to the youngest. Mr. Thompson is a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Loyal Order of Moose, and the Native Sons of the Golden West. Always interested in the community's progress, he served as public administrator of San Joaquin County from 1907 to 1911, and he has been on the Democratic County Central Committee.

WILSON HENRY THOMPSON.—It is interesting to chronicle the life history of the successful business man who has risen by his own individual efforts from the bottom rung of the ladder, step by step, until after years of honest endeavor and well-directed energy he has acquired not only an affluence but a rich experience and far-reaching influence, making him a leader both in his own line and in the affairs of his community. Such a man is Wilson Henry Thompson, the genial and popular vice-president and one of the organizers of the Citizens National Bank of Lodi, which has its home in a new $100,000 structure on a site he selected on School and Oak streets.

Mr. Thompson was born near Lawrence, Kans., September 27, 1868, a son of John and Catherine (Shank) Thompson, the former a native of Pennsylvania. The parents brought their family to California in 1874 and were pioneer farmers and fruit growers near Lodi until their passing. Coming to California in his sixth year, Wilson H. Thompson was educated in the public schools of San Joaquin County, and supplemented his secondary schooling with a three-years course in Woodbridge College. His first business experience was gained as a clerk in Bentley's general merchandise store at Woodbridge, where he remained for one year. He then became associated with A. L. Cowell, and together they conducted a general merchandise store and hotel at Woodbridge for the next four years.

Selecting Lodi as his future place of operations, Mr. Thompson came here in 1896 and started a grocery store. In 1899 F. W. Beckman became his partner, and the firm was known as Thompson & Beckman; but shortly afterwards they took in H. E. Welch, their bookkeeper, as a third partner, and on February 24, 1904, were incorporated as Beckman, Welch & Thompson, Inc., and thereafter branched out into the various lines of general merchandising. Mr. Thompson was president of the company, and his years of experience and wide acquaintance enabled him to build up a business second to none in the county in this line. In order to provide larger and more suitable quarters, Mr. Thompson erected a brick business block 70x160 feet on South Sacramento Street. He continued as president until 1918, when he sold his interest. With Mr. Beckman, Mr. Thompson also erected the Beckman & Thompson Building on School Street. In 1910, with others, he established the Pacific Fruit Exchange, with headquarters in Sacramento, and became vice-president of the company and local manager of the Lodi district.

Recently Mr. Thompson disposed of his interest in the First National Bank, in which he had been vice-president and director for some years, and with others organized the Citizens National Bank of Lodi, being elected its vice-president. He saw a splendid location for the new bank and business houses on the corner of Oak and School streets; so he purchased the three corners and turned them over to the City Improvement Company, which was organized for the purpose of building up all the corners with substantial two-story store and office buildings and the bank home. The bank building is a Class A concrete and terra cotta building 50x75, and is devoted entirely to the use of the bank. The City Improvement Company also built the new post-office building on Oak Street. Mr. Thompson's associates are all local men, like himself acknowledged for their integrity and worth, and represent a diversity of interest and wide experience, their influence being of especial value to the institutions with which they are associated. Mr. Thompson is interested in viticulture, his holdings being principally in the vicinity of Lodi. He is a director of the Stockton Home Builders' Association, and the Masonic Temple Association in Stockton; is president of the Lodi Investment Company, which erected the Lodi Hotel and Lodi Theater; is president of the Lodi Public Library Board; and was formerly a member of the Lodi Board of Education.

Mr. Thompson was first married on November 11, 1892, to Miss Mary Eliza Fowler, a native of this county and the daughter of Joseph and Eliza Fowler, pioneer farmers near Lodi. She passed away in February, 1900; and on December 9, 1903, at Crocker Station, he was united in marriage with Miss Celia M. Crocker, a native of that place, the daughter of Henry and May (Hall) Crocker, natives of Massachusetts and pioneers of California. Mr. Crocker came here in 1853 and engaged in mining until he established Crocker Station, on Big Oak Flat road, leading into the Yosemite Valley. There he continued until his passing away. He was survived by his widow. Mrs. Thompson was reared at Crocker Station and received her education at Woodbridge College. They have a son, Henry Allen, a graduate of the Lodi high school, class of 1922.

Fraternally, Mr. Thompson was made a Mason in Lodi Lodge No. 256, F. & A. M., and is a member of Stockton Chapter No. 28, R. A. M., Stockton Council, R. S. M., Stockton Commandery No. 8, K. T., and Ben Ali Shrine, A. A. O. N. M. S., of Sacramento; and with his wife he is a member of the Eastern Star, of which he is a Past Patron. He is also a member of the Knights of Pythias, Woodmen of the World, and Elks, and was a charter member of the Lodi Rotary Club. Naturally progressive, Mr. Thompson has engaged in many enterprises looking to the development of the city, regardless of pecuniary benefits to himself.

FRED D. NAYLOR.—Although for many years identified with the flour milling industry and well known all over the United States through his inventions in this line, Fred D. Naylor has made an outstanding success in the automobile business as agent for the Ford car and Fordson tractor for Stockton and vicinity. Mr. Naylor was born at Woodstock, Canada, July 6, 1869, the son of James Naylor, who married Nancy Maria Outwater, and moved with his family to Columbus, Neb., in 1874, where he became a pioneer, owning a farm near that city and at the same time plying his trade of blacksmith in the town. He died there in 1904, after having done his part to help build up his section. Mrs. Naylor died in 1921, leaving four daughters and two sons, of whom Fred D. is the only one in the West. He attended the local schools in his district and learned the trade of blacksmith with his father, but he did not follow it; instead he engaged in the grocery business at the age of nineteen. Later he learned the trade of miller in the Elevator-Roller Mills at Columbus, Nebr., and having mastered the business thoroughly he was advanced to the position of head miller, and was with this concern for ten years. While there he invented and patented a flour bleacher, called the Natural Refiner, and with this he traveled all over the United States, installing the same in flour mills.

In 1909 Mr. Naylor came to Stockton and for a year and a half was with the Crown Mills, and in 1911 he entered the employ of J. L. Whitmore as a salesman for the Chalmers car. About this time Mr. Whitmore took the agency for the Ford car, and later he turned it over to Mr. Naylor without a cent of expense, as he could not see any future for it. Mr. Naylor had the good judgment to grasp the opportunity and thus virtually had a gold mine presented to him. In 1912, the first year he had the agency, Mr. Naylor sold sixty-nine cars, and in 1920 his contract with the Ford Motor Company called for 600 Ford cars and 150 Fordson tractors. In early days he was limited to eight square miles of territory, which included Stockton, but in 1920 the limit was removed from his territory. In 1922 he took the agency for the Lincoln car, Mr. Ford having succeeded to the ownership of the manufactory. At 317 North El Dorado Street, Stockton, Mr. Naylor erected one of the largest and finest buildings in the West for a garage and sales room, the plant being 100x300 feet in size and modern in every appointment, making an ideal business place for his expanding custom.

Mr. Naylor's marriage united him with Miss Nellie E. Brown, a native of Hastings, Nebr., and they have two daughters: Esther, who graduated from the University of California in 1920, and is now the wife of Irwin Barbour, married on December 22, 1921; they reside at Glenn Cove, N. Y.; and Helen, who attended Miss Head's School in Berkeley and the Bishop's School at La Jolla, Cal. Mr. Naylor belongs to Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E., and to the Knights of the Maccabees; he is an enthusiastic member of the Stockton Golf and Country Club, and holds membership in the Chamber of Commerce, the Merchants' Association and the State Automobile Association. After several years of hard work in building up a successful business, in 1922 Mr. Naylor decided to take a needed rest and accompanied by his wife and daughter, Helen, left Stockton on June 15, took an extended Mediterranean cruise and visited many interesting points in Europe, returning to Stockton on September 21, 1922.

JAMES E. THORP.—A native Californian who has added to the wealth of the Golden State by his intelligent and successful breeding of pure-bred Jersey cattle and Duroc hogs, is James E. Thorp, a rancher and stockraiser of San Joaquin County. He was born in Santa Rosa on March 1, 1879, a son of John Bailey and Jennie (Zimmerman) Thorp. In young manhood John Bailey Thorp came to California with an ox team from Texas and located near the town of Wallace, Calaveras County. While living there, he enlisted, when only nineteen years old, for service in the Civil War. His service consisted wholly in quelling Indian outbreaks. He became an extensive stock and sheep breeder and for many years was the dairy superintendent at the state asylum at Stockton. There are four children in his family: Mrs. M. J. Beck; Mrs. Josephine Cheesewright; James E., of this sketch; and Charles, who was in the employ of the United States government in the transportation paymaster's office in the Philippines at the time of his death. The father and mother reside about three miles from Stockton on the Waterloo road.

James E. Thorp attended the Stockton grammar schools and completed his schooling with a commercial course in the Stockton high school. At the age of sixteen, having been reared in the environment of farming and dairying, he took up ranch work and became especially interested in creamery work. In 1900 he took a dairy course at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, and while there determined to become a stock-breeder. Upon finishing his course and returning to California, he purchased a couple of Jerseys, and as the years have passed he has developed his own herd, mostly of the "Raleigh" and "St. Lambert" strains of Jersey cattle, although he has some of the "Financial King" breed, and now has about fifty pure-bred Jersey cattle. He also has some twenty Duroc brood sows. Mr. Thorp has had the good fortune to breed prize-winners, and possesses one cow, now twelve years old, that is a champion. This cow he has exhibited for the past ten years at various fairs in California and Oregon, and she has been grand champion at the State Fair several times. In 1921 he took this cow to the Portland fair, and there she took second place against a strong competitive field. Other cattle, as well as Duroc hogs, were exhibited with much success. He was the first Jersey breeder from California to enter the competitive lists at the Pacific international exhibit at Portland. In March, 1922, in partnership with L. K. Marshall, Mr. Thorp bought the famous Locke estate, consisting of 370 acres, located just north of Lockeford, which is being developed to a fruit and stock ranch.

Mr. Thorp's marriage occurred on August 15, 1906, and united him with Miss Theresa Locke, a daughter of Dr. Dean J. and Delia Locke, whose life history appears in this work. Mrs. Thorp was born in Lockeford and attended the grammar and high schools of Stockton; later entering the Woman's Hospital, San Francisco, from which she was graduated. They are the parents of two children: John Willard and Delia Marcella. Politically, Mr. Thorp is a Republican.

He is an active member of the California Jersey Breeders' Association and the California Duroc Hog Breeders' Association. He is also a member of the Milk Producers' Association, with headquarters at Modesto, and has served as president of the board of directors for two years. He is a charter member of the Lodi Lions Club. Mr. Thorp's foresight and industry have been potent factors in the growth and improvement of dairy stock in the San Joaquin Valley, for which the central portion of California has become famous; his optimism and belief in the future of San Joaquin County have enabled him to win success both for himself and for the entire county.

ANDREW EUGENE WAKEFIELD.—Another successful vineyardist who has attained an enviable place in the history of California agriculture, is Andrew Eugene Wakefield, who lives about one-fourth of a mile to the north of Youngstown. He was born in Brownfield, Maine, on December 26, 1853, the son of Henry and Lucy Ann Wakefield, whose families both date back to Colonial days. His father was a farmer in the timber country of Maine, and Andrew attended the Brownfield school. He was one of three children. His brother William still lives in Maine; and Charles, who also came out to California, lives to the north of Lockeford. When only seven years of age, Andrew lost his father, who was killed by a falling tree. His mother remarried, eleven years later, becoming the wife of Abner Wakefield.

Andrew Wakefield remained at home until he was twenty-one, and then went to Boston and for a year worked for wages on the farms. After that he returned to the old home place and worked there again for a few years. Then, in 1880, he came out to California. Here he first leased a quarter-section of land north of Lockeford, and in 1882 farmed at New Hope; but he was completely washed out by the great flood, after which he returned to the vicinity of Lockeford. In the fall of 1883 he went back again to Maine, and remained there for eight years; and during that time, on July 12, 1885, he was married, at Hiram, to Miss Madeleine Bennett, who was born in Boston, on February 26, 1861, the daughter of John and Margaret Augusta Bennett. Her father was a cabinet-maker, who had settled at Whitehall, N. Y., where he died; then the family moved to Gorham, Maine, when she was about seven years old, and there she grew up and was educated, attending the grammar and high school. She was the only child. Her father died at the age of sixty years; but her mother lived to the age of seventy-four.

In 1890, Mr. Wakefield returned to California and purchased a quarter-section of land three miles to the north of Lockeford; but he lost this ranch after ten years. Then he went to the Black Land district on the Islands, and leased 320 acres for eight years. After that he leased a half-section of land near Clements, and farmed there for three years. Nine years ago he purchased the place where he now resides. It consists of twenty acres, one-half of which is in orchard and eight acres in vineyard, and is improved with a fine home and farm buildings. He has developed water, having an irrigation well with a fifteen-horsepower motor and a five-inch pump. He himself set out the orchard of Elberta and Lovell peaches. He also owns fifty acres of vineyard near Elliott.

Two sons have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield: Harry Alton, born on May 6, 1886, at Brownfield, Maine; and Walter Harmon, born at the same place on January 20, two years later. The two sons are farming at the Lyons place, north of Lockeford. Both are members of the Clements Lodge of Odd Fellows. In their political affiliations, Mr. and Mrs. Wakefield are Republicans.

WIRT ELDRED WILDER.—A very progressive pioneer whose demise in 1919 caused wide-spread regret, was the late Wirt Eldred Wilder, who was born in Martin, Allegan County, Mich., on January 26, 1862, the son of Ebenezer and Belinda (Eldred) Wilder, and one of a family of six children, three boys and three girls, among whom he was fourth in the order of birth. His father was a general farmer, raising grain and stock, and Wirt grew up in a comfortable country home, while he pursued his studies in the district school.

About 1889, he came out to California and settled in the Acampo district, where he worked for Mr. Van Gelder until he went into the nursery business. Later, he formed a partnership with Eli S. Ferguson, and they had one of the crack nurseries in the country. At Acampo, on December 31, 1895, he was married to Miss Lucy Langford, the daughter of Ira J. and Mary M. (Sweany) Langford, the former of Holland descent, but a native of Tennessee, and the latter a native of Missouri, born near St. Joseph. Mr. Langford came to California in 1846, when he was fourteen years old, traveling by way of the Isthmus; while Mrs. Langford came across the plains, in the great gold-rush of '49, journeying in a prairie schooner drawn by an ox team, and settling with her people near Nevada City, Placer County. Lucy Langford was born near Hollister, in San Benito County; and when she was four years old her father, who had gone from the mines to San Benito County, removed again to Sacramento County. It was there that she received her education in the district schools. In 1886, Mr. and Mrs. Langford retired and took up their residence in Acampo; and there Miss Langford lived with them until she was married. She was one of seven children, the elder being Robert C., who died on May 9, 1918; Anna N., who became Mrs. Fitzgerald and died April 12, 1888; James S., who died in Alaska; Maymie V., who married and is now a widow, of Acampo; and Nellie, who is Mrs. McArthur, of the same place. Samuel Langford of Oakley, Cal., is the younger brother.

Mr. Wilder, while a partner of E. S. Ferguson, had acquired sixty acres, on ten acres of which he built the home where his family still reside. Mr. Ferguson also took ten acres; but the balance, or forty acres, is owned jointly with Mr. Ferguson. Besides her ranch, Mrs. Wilder owns property in Berkeley, a handsome heritage, some day, for her four accomplished and promising daughters. Mary Belinda is a teacher in the Woodbridge school; and Vivian Langford, Nina Aileen, and Bonnie Wirt Eldred are students in the high school at Lodi.

Mr. Wilder was a Democrat. He was a member and Past Grand of the Odd Fellows, and a member of the Rebekahs, of Woodbridge. Mrs. Wilder is a member of the same lodge of Rebekahs, and is a Past Noble Grand. She is a devoted member of the Methodist Church.

JOHN P. WATKINS.—For nearly fifty years John P. Watkins has been a resident of the great state of California and during that time he has borne his full share of the responsibilities that have been the lot of successful Californians from the early days to the present. A native of Georgia, he was born near Atlanta on September 1, 1855, the son of Allen and Martha (Burnett) Watkins. The latter was a second cousin of Alexander H. Stephens, vice-president of the Southern Confederacy. Allen Watkins was born in the vicinity of Atlanta on April 2, 1829, and became a man of prominence in his locality. On June 6, 1861, he organized Company A, Twenty-first Georgia Regiment, and was commissioned 2nd lieutenant; on July 27, 1862, he was promoted to be 1st lieutenant, and on September 1 of that same year became a captain. On September 23, 1862, he was killed at Chancellorsville and was survived by his widow and two children, Mary Frances and John P. The war left the Watkins family without resources and John P. became the sole support of his mother and sister, hence he was unable to get just the kind of schooling he desired. As he grew to manhood he educated himself by self-study and qualified to teach school, which he did in Douglas County, Georgia, for two terms. From the savings of his years of labor he invested in a small farm in Douglas County and there the family lived until 1878, when John P. decided he could better his condition by coming to California. His mother afterwards made her home with her daughter at Whitesburg, Ga., where she died on October 6, 1922, having reached the age of ninety-one years; her son fortunately reached her bedside before she passed away.

John P. Watkins reached Sacramento in 1878 and the following year he was united in marriage with Miss Catherine Boggess, daughter of Ahas Boggess, who, as secretary of the state of Georgia, signed the secession papers at the outbreak of the Civil War. Mrs. Watkins died in 1880, leaving a son, Arthur, who now makes his home with his father in San Joaquin County. In 1889 Mr. Watkins was again married, this time to Miss Catherine Grother, born in Pilot Hill, Cal. She passed away and left one son, Louis Edwin, now a resident of San Francisco. On September 21, 1898, the third marriage of Mr. Watkins united him with Mrs. Effie Henderson, who came with her parents from Mississippi in 1893. Of this union two children were born: Agnes B. and George Stanley. Agnes B. graduated from the State Normal School at Chico, class of 1920, and at once took up teaching in Glenn County where she is principal of the Cordora school. George Stanley enlisted for service in the World War as a mechanic in the aviation corps and trained in Texas. He now resides in Michigan.

When Mr. Watkins arrived in Sacramento in 1878 he soon found work on the 40,000-acre ranch owned by J. B. Hagin & Company, and in time was promoted to be an assistant foreman of the famed Rancho El Paso, known to all lovers of fine horses, for it was here that some of the world's record-breakers were raised and trained. After spending twelve years in the employ of this company, Mr. Watkins resigned to enter the employ of Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst, and in 1898 was sent to Mexico as her personal representative, with full power of attorney to look after the landed interests of the Hearst Estate. During the five years that Mr. Watkins spent in Mexico he became well acquainted and very friendly with President Diaz. In 1903 he resigned his position with the Hearst Estate, returned to California and located near Lodi, San Joaquin Co. He bought a ranch, improving it during the following five years, and sold to good advantage and then settled at Ripon and planted one of the first orchards in this vicinity. He is still a resident of this productive section of California.

J. P. Merdians

Realizing his lack of educational opportunity in his younger days, Mr. Watkins has ever had the welfare of the rising generations at heart. It was through his untiring efforts that a union high school district was organized at Ripon, and as president of that body he was largely instrumental in planning and bringing to completion the handsome Union High School building at Ripon, of which mention is made on another page in this history. Mr. Watkins was a charter member of the San Joaquin Farm Bureau and served as a director and vice-president until in 1919. He has always been a staunch advocate and supporter of good roads and of all irrigation movements in the county, and has worked for every cause for elevating the social, moral, educational and financial standing in the county and locality where he has lived. During the World War he served as a member of the San Joaquin County exemption board under the appointment from President Wilson and for the duration of the war he made daily trips from his ranch to Stockton to attend to the duties of that position. Mr. Watkins is a self-made man in the truest sense of the word and by his upright and honorable methods he has won the esteem and good will of all who know him or have had dealings with him. Always active for every good movement he will long be remembered as one of the foremost citizens of San Joaquin County.

DAVID WILLIAMS.—A retired orchardist who was rated, in the days of his interesting, progressive activity, as very successful, is David Williams, who now resides about one-half mile to the east of Acampo. He was born in Wales on January 7, 1846, and his father was William Williams, a farmer, whose wife, Sarah, lived to be sixty years old. They were the parents of eight sons and two daughters. David, the second in order of birth, partly because his help was needed at home, did not have the best chance to attend school in his native land, so that, when he left home and his native land, in his twentieth year, to cross the ocean for the New World, he ventured with a certain handicap. He reached New York in the spring of 1866, and without his knowledge was actually in the metropolis when his oldest brother, William, who was a sailor, was also there, en route to Australia from England; and without meeting him, David left for Wisconsin, where he arrived in April.

He had worked on farms in Wales, and when he reached the Badger State he found no difficulty in getting employment. He worked for the first summer near Oshkosh, and during the following winter enjoyed the only actual schooling which he ever had, working mornings and evenings for his board, while attending school. In the spring of 1867, he went to Cambrai, Wis., and remained there until October; and then he came out to the Coast, the first of his family to come to California. He settled in Calaveras County, and worked the following winter. In the summer of 1868 he went to Stanislaus County, and worked near Modesto until 1872; and then he returned to Calaveras County.

On December 14, 1872, at Sonora, Mr. Williams was married to Margaret Roberts, an accomplished and attractive lady, a daughter of John and Jane Roberts, and a native of the same home district in Wales in which Mr. Williams first saw the light. He had known her before he left Wales. Her father had three brothers who came to California about 1853, and John Roberts followed them a few years later. But his health failed him, and it was thought best for him to return to Wales, which he did; and there he died, shortly after. Her mother then came out to America with five young children, and joined her brothers in California, making her home at Douglas Flat, in Calaveras County. Mr. Williams farmed near Vallicita, in Calaveras County, for about seventeen years, and then sold out his holdings and moved to Tulare County; and there, near Pixley, he bought a small ranch. Later, he bought more land until he owned 1,500 acres. During the first part of the early land-boom he sold his ranch; but he soon bought another tract of 1,500 acres near by, on which he lived until 1912, when he sold out and retired, moving to Acampo, where he bought a small home place of four acres, with a fine orchard of apricot trees. Two children have added to the domestic happiness of Mr. and Mrs. Williams. Sadie married the well-known attorney Hugh McNoble, of Stockton; and they have one son, Herbert. John R. is teaching in the El Dorado School at Stockton; he is married, and has two children, Margaret R. and Ruth. Mr. Williams is a Republican. Fraternally, he is a member of Delano Lodge No. 356, I. O. O. F. The family attend the Episcopal Church at Lodi.

ANDREW A. FITZGERALD.—A native son and a successful rancher, living about three miles northeast of Clements, Andrew A. Fitzgerald has some 500 acres of the finest stock and grain land. He was born at Stockton, September 27, 1877, the son of Bernard and Emma Fitzgerald. His father was a native of St. Johnsbury, Vt., the son of Andrew and Mary (Burns) Fitzgerald; and his grandparents, on his father's side, were sturdy Green Mountain farmer folks. Five children made up their family: John, the eldest, is deceased; Bernard, retired, is still living in Stockton at the age of seventy-three; Peter is also deceased; Mary is with her brother, Andrew J., who resides on his farm on the Mokelumne River, northeast of Clements. Mrs. Andrew Fitzgerald, Sr., was born in Amador County, Cal.

Bernard Fitzgerald came to California about 1873 and settled at Stockton. Later he went to northern San Joaquin County, and purchased a ranch at Harmony Grove. He then bought a second ranch, and had in all a quarter-section. He farmed to grain, and also did teaming between Stockton and Lockeford. He and his wife have four children: Andrew A., of this review; Nellie, now Mrs. Carter, of Long Beach; Marie, the wife of Mr. Scott, who has an auto-repair shop at Stockton; and John, of Stockton. Mrs. Fitzgerald is also alive, aged sixty-two.

Andrew A. Fitzgerald attended the Harmony Grove and Lockeford schools, and when sixteen years of age started to work for his uncle, Peter Fitzgerald. After Peter died, another uncle, Andrew J., and his sister Mary, took over the place. Andrew A. Fitzgerald had purchased eighty acres of the Peter Fitzgerald ranch previously to his uncle Peter's death, and later he bought out his own father's share, making his holding 430 acres; and now he has about 510 acres. He is engaged in raising grain and stock, chiefly cattle and sheep, and also has a four-acre vineyard on the ranch.

At Stockton, on August 29, 1906, Mr. Fitzgerald was married to Miss Carrie Moore, who was born near Ione, in Amador County, the daughter of James Moore, a native of Ireland, one of the earliest settlers in that section. Her father died in 1919, at the age of ninety-three. His wife had passed away many years before. There were five children in their family. Besides Mrs. Fitzgerald, they are: John Moore, of Stockton; Annie, now Mrs. William Amick, of Ione; Susie, Mrs. Wesley Amick, of Ione; Marjorie, now Mrs. Mason, also of Ione. Mrs. Fitzgerald attended the Ione grammar school. Mr. Fitzgerald is a Republican. Fraternally, he is a member of the Ione Parlor, N. S. G. W., and also a member of the Woodmen of the World, at Clements.

WALTER A. FLOYD.—A successful vineyardist of the Lodi section is found in the person of Walter A. Floyd, the owner of a twenty-acre tract north-east of Lodi, which he has highly improved and cultivated and which is yielding most satisfactory returns for his labor. A native of Iowa, he was born near West Liberty, Muscatine County, on December 21, 1889, the second oldest in a family of seven children. The father, A. H. Floyd, is a native of Ohio, who married Miss Henrietta Walter and was engaged in the grocery business at West Liberty, Iowa. They were the parents of the following children: Louise, deceased; Walter A., of this review; and Aileen, Carl, Josephine, Carol, and Morris. Later the parents removed to Rice County, Minn., and purchased a quarter-section of land near Faribault, where they engaged in farming until they removed to California. They are both living, and reside near Lodi.

Walter A. Floyd received his education in the West Liberty grammar and high schools, and after finishing his education helped his father on the farm and became conversant with Minnesota agriculture. On January 14, 1915, at Faribault, Minn., he was united in marriage with Miss Emily Durland, a native of Minnesota, and a daughter of George and Elizabeth (Miller) Durland. Mrs. Floyd was educated in the schools of Faribault. The young people, soon after marriage, rented a one-hundred-sixty-acre grain farm, and later a one-hundred-twenty-acre farm, which they successfully farmed for three years. They then removed to California and purchased a twenty-acre vineyard about two and a quarter miles northeast of Lodi. The ranch is irrigated by a four-inch pump equipped with a ten-horsepower motor, and Mr. Floyd has just completed a splendid modern bungalow, thus making it a comfortable and attractive home place. Mr. and Mrs. Floyd are the parents of one son, George Allen. The family are active members of the Methodist Church of Lodi. Politically, Mr. Floyd adheres to the principles of the Republican party. Both Mr. and Mrs. Floyd are deeply interested in the welfare and upbuilding of the community in which they make their home, and both are esteemed for their genuine worth.

STOCKTON PLUMBING SUPPLY COMPANY.—One of the leading and enterprising establishments that is helping to make industrial, building and development history for Central California, is the Stockton Plumbing Supply Company, 327 East Miner Avenue, operated by men thoroughly familiar with the territory in which they do business. This company does general contracting in plumbing, heating and sheet metal lines, and installs plumbing and heating equipment in business houses, office buildings, schools and educational institutions, homes, etc., anywhere in Central California. Many well known buildings in Stockton and vicinity are evidence of the splendid work of this company, who give careful attention to all specifications and details. Among some of the most important contracts completed by the company are the following: Lodi Union high school, Pacific Telephone Company Building, Tracy grammar school, Escalon grammar school, Roosevelt grammar school, Grant school, El Dorado school, High School auditorium, the last four being in Stockton. The apartment house on California and Lafayette streets, Gordella Building, the White Hotel, and many other buildings, were contracted by them.

The senior partner of the Stockton Plumbing Supply Company, Edwin H. Grogan, was born in Trinidad, Colo., February 29, 1888, and received his preliminary education in his native city. In 1904, at the age of sixteen, he came to California and located in Stockton and finished his education at the Stockton Business College; then learned the plumber's and sheet metal worker's trade with E. A. Whale, who had established his business thirty years ago. Mr. Grogan worked at his trade in the plumbing shops of Stockton until 1915, when he took over the mechanical department of E. A. Whale and worked in this capacity until January 1, 1919, when in partnership with Lester A. Alling, another employee of the same company, he purchased the above-named business and established the Stockton Plumbing Supply Company.

The marriage of Mr. Grogan united him with Miss Emma Hansen, a native daughter of California, born in Stockton, a daughter of a pioneer family. They are the parents of two children, Edwin H., Jr., and Virginia. Fraternally Mr. Grogan is a member of the Red Men.

Lester A. Alling, the junior member of the firm, is descended from an old pioneer family of California, and was born on his father's ranch eight miles east of Stockton, June 23, 1896, a son of Lucius E. and Kate (Utt) Alling, both natives of California and both living. He was educated in the public schools of the country district and later took a business course at Heald's Business College in Stockton. In 1914 he entered the employ of E. A. Whale and became manager of the company and was so employed for three years. When the recent war broke out he enlisted in the navy as a seaman in the naval reserve and trained at San Pedro, Pelham Bay Park, N. Y., and at the rifle range in the Catskill Mountains, N. Y. He became attached to the mine sweeping division, Tompkinsville, N. Y., on board the U. S. S. Ripple, and saw service in eastern waters; these mine sweepers sailed ahead of the transports keeping the sea clear of mines and other disturbing elements. The marriage of Mr. Alling occurred in Stockton April 7, 1921, uniting him with Miss Maude Hoffman, who was born at Linden, this county. Mr.

E. H. Hogan

S. A. Alling

Alling is a member of Karl Ross Post, American Legion.

Wholesale and retail dealers in plumbing merchandise, the company carries on display in the tastefully arranged show rooms a large and modern line of accessories and employs only the most capable and experienced men to take charge of the installation work. No order is too large for them to handle, and the same careful attention is given large and small contracts, and they have one of the most complete establishments of the kind in the San Joaquin Valley. As a company they are members of the Stockton Chamber of Commerce, the Builders' Exchange and the Master Plumbers' Association, E. H. Grogan being president of the latter.

THOMAS EVANS.—A most interesting veteran of the Civil War, and among the most highly esteemed members of the Grand Army of the Republic, is Thomas Evans, a native of Niles, in Trumbull County, Ohio, where he was born on March 19, 1837, the son of Thomas Evans, a member of a well-known Pennsylvania family who had migrated to Ohio. He was of Welsh descent, and he married Miss Nancy McCallister, of Scotch-Irish lineage, both families long resident in the United States, the great-grandfathers having crossed to the New World. There were nine children in the family, among whom he was fifth in the order of birth; and of all these only one brother, now in Missouri, has survived.

Thomas Evans commenced his education in a district school in Ohio; and since his father was both a blacksmith and a farmer, he worked with him in the shop and learned the blacksmith's trade. In the fall of 1860, he went to Laporte, Ind., leaving his parents, who lived to be each fifty-six years of age, and thereafter he soon enlisted in the 5th Volunteer Indiana Regiment, Battery of Light Artillery, commanded by Captain Simondson. He trained for about two months in Indianapolis, and then went to Louisville, with the Army of the Cumberland; and he was in the battles of Lookout Mountain, Chickamauga and Chattanooga, or until the Fall of Atlanta, in the autumn of 1864. He served as private, and was No. 1 on the gun crew. He handled the loading of the cannon, and was twice severely injured—once by the kick of the cannon, due to the premature explosion of the powder, and the other time by the kick of a mule! At the end of a loyal service of three years and two months, he was honorably discharged on November 23, 1864, when he came back to Indiana.

He took up again the trade of the blacksmith; but soon turned aside to farming, and for many years followed agriculture in Indiana, cultivating at times from 40 to 160 acres. From Laporte he removed to Michigan and farmed in that state for six years; and then he went to Kansas, and again on to Missouri, and in 1883 he came to California and settled at Visalia. He farmed for four years, when he again moved on to Stockton, and in 1887 lived here for one summer. He then moved onto the Barnhart ranch at Woodbridge, and for four years conducted their farm of 300 acres. After this, he moved onto the Sharp orchard of twenty acres east of Lodi, and took care of this for one year; when he again moved, to the Drury orchard below Woodbridge, which he ran for about one year. He next came to Acampo, where he bought a home place of one acre; and there he lives today.

Mr. Evans has been twice married. Near Laporte, Ind., in 1858, he was united with Miss Rosana Williams, who was born in Indiana, near Laporte, the daughter of Joseph Williams; and nine years later she closed her beautiful, useful life. In the same vicinity, near Laporte, on June 15, 1872, Mr. Evans married Miss Sarah E. Davis, who was born at Laporte, the daughter of Caleb and Sarah (Wagner) Davis. Her father came from a family of Indiana frontiersmen, and was of Welsh descent, and far back in 1832 he went from Wheeling, Va., to Laporte. Miss Davis was one of ten children, four of whom are living today; she was the ninth child of the family. One of her brothers is Eugene Davis, who is hale and hearty at the age of 91. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have four children. Franklin is at Minneapolis; Hattie is Mrs. Winifred Sims, of Merced; Mamie is Mrs. Atchinson, of Acampo; and Luther is in Trinity County. Mr. Evans is a Republican, and a member of the G. A. R. at Lodi.

ARTHUR W. COWELL.—The advancement of San Joaquin County and the upbuilding of the city of Stockton have a progressive promoter in the person of Arthur W. Cowell, the energetic brick and concrete contractor, who has a record of erecting one business block each month for a year. He was born near Richmond, Va., on August 16, 1870. His father, Adelbert M. Cowell, was born in Auburn, N. Y., in 1834, and learned the stone and brick mason's trade; and upon his removal to Washington, D. C., he engaged in the contracting business. Later he did construction work for several railroads in the East. In 1886 he arrived in California and located at San Diego, where he worked for the San Diego Flume Company. The following year he located in Stockton, and here he has been actively engaged in construction work of various kinds. He married Miss Sarah Hollingsworth, and they are the parents of ten children, nine of whom are living. Mr. and Mrs. Cowell reside in one of the residences he erected on North Stanislaus street.

Arthur W. Cowell, the oldest of his parents' living children, came to California with the family when sixteen years of age and took up the trade of brick mason with his father; and within four years he was able to start in business for himself. Following is a partial list of the buildings he has erected since 1900: the main high school building, the San Joaquin Valley Bank (now the Bank of Italy) on Hunter Street, the Elks building, the Y. M. C. A. building, the Stockton Savings & Loan Bank, the Wilhoit building, the Lincoln Hotel, the Clark Hotel, the Henry Apartments, the Home Apartments, and Hotel Philson. He also remodeled the Commercial Hotel and built the Smith & Lang building on South San Joaquin Street, the Salvation Army Hotel, and the Oullahan & Littlehale block on Weber Avenue. Then there are the Belding block, Hotel Marion, the Sanguinetti block on Market Street, the Solari block, Steed Brothers' garage, the Flannigan block, the Turner block, the Russell block on California Street, the Stockton Ice & Fuel building, the Ruhl building, and the Gnekow block. He erected the entire block of brick buildings on the south side of Main Street between Stanislaus and American Avenue, which includes the five-story Bronx Hotel, and also the Crane block of buildings on south San Joaquin Street, which includes the Hotel Dale; as well as the Presbyterian Church at the corner of 131 Dorado & Vine, and the new five-story Levy Building at the corner of Main and Hunter. His building operations extend throughout the entire county, and he has erected many substantial and imposing buildings outside of his home city, among them being the Lodi National Bank and the Farmers & Merchants Bank building at Lodi.

The marriage of Mr. Cowell united him with Miss Margaret Willis, a native of England, and they are the parents of three children: Margaret, William A., and Arthur W., Jr. During the late war, William A. Cowell served as sergeant of Company L, 363rd Infantry, at Camp Lewis, and later was commissioned lieutenant; however, he was not sent overseas. Fraternally, Mr. Cowell is a member of Lodge No. 218 B. P. O. E., and Charity Lodge No. 6, I. O. O. F.

FRED L. CONKLIN.—Among the pioneer families of 1852 in the Golden State is that which finds worthy representatives in San Joaquin County in Fred L., James E. and Chester W. Conklin. Fred L. Conklin was born at Battle Creek, Mich., a son of James E. and Rhoda (Loder) Conklin. Grandfather James E. Conklin came across the plains to California in 1852 and engaged in mining until 1855, when he returned to Michigan and spent the remainder of his days. Fred L. Conklin was the eldest of seven children, the others being Loder, Tilly, Clara, George, Eunice, and Arthur. James E. Conklin lived to be sixty-seven years old, and Rhoda Conklin died at the age of seventy-seven. In 1876, Fred L. Conklin came to California, stopping at Stockton to visit an uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. T. K. Hook, and settled first at Santa Barbara, where he spent one winter; next he went to Sacramento and for six subsequent years worked at various kinds of jobs. In 1882 he moved to Stockton, where, one year later, he became an employee of the Sperry Milling Company, first as a laborer; later he became one of the millers, and in 1912 was advanced to head miller, remaining in that position until 1921, when he retired. In 1883 he married Miss Nettie Eldred, a native of Michigan, a daughter of Chester W. and Evelyn (Dean) Eldred. Her father was a Michigan farmer and the father of a large family. Mr. and Mrs. Conklin are the parents of two sons, James E. and Chester W. In 1905, the father purchased a ten-acre Tokay vineyard west of Acampo, and some time afterwards purchased twenty acres two and a half miles west of Acampo, on the Mokelumne River, which is devoted to an orchard of prunes and peaches. The father is a member of Truth Lodge, No. 55, I. O. O. F., and of Parker Encampment, also a member of the Rainbow Rebekahs, while Mrs. Conklin is past noble grand and past district deputy of the Rainbow Rebekahs of Stockton. She died in 1917.

James E. Conklin received his education in the grammar and high schools of Stockton and attended the summer school session at the University of California for several years. For the past seven years he has been the physical director in the Lodi high school, a position he is most capably filling to the entire satisfaction of everyone. Whatever has tended to benefit his community has also received his endorsement and co-operation, and he has been a witness of much of the growth and development of his native county. His marriage united him with Miss Hattie Coburn, also a native of Stockton, a daughter of Frank and Jessie (Button) Coburn. Mrs. Conklin was educated in the Stockton schools and they are the parents of one son, James E., Jr.

Chester W. Conklin was born November 5, 1889, graduated from the Stockton high school, and is now in the undertaking business in Stockton. He married Lizzie Owens, daughter of John and Sarah Owens, and they have one daughter, Janis.

FRED N. FOSTER.—A pioneer in the field of auto painting, Fred N. Foster was the first man to commercialize this work successfully in Stockton, and now this line of activity has so increased that a dozen or more firms are profitably engaged in it. A native of New York state, where he was born October 1, 1864, Mr. Foster at the youthful age of fourteen started to learn the trade of coach painter with the firm of Harvey & Wallace of Buffalo, N. Y., one of the largest and best known firms in the East in the days of coach making. In those times, Mr. Foster relates, it took from a year to fifteen months to complete the painting of a coach, and to show the improvements that have been made in this line, he now turns out a complete and satisfactory job of auto painting in four weeks.

Mr. Foster was with Harvey & Wallace for five years and at the end of that time he was an expert and finished workman. He then became associated with some of the leading firms in Buffalo as superintendent of their painting departments, among them the Pierce-Arrow Automobile Company, the Thomas Flyer Automobile Company, and the Babcock Electric Company. He next located in Chicago, where he followed this line of work until he came to the Pacific Coast. He spent a short time in Seattle before settling in Portland, Ore., where he was engaged for three years. In 1907 he gained such a reputation as an expert that he was called to Stockton to take the superintendency of the painting department of the Sunset Carriage Factory, a position he held most efficiently for three years.

Recognizing his ability and the fine quality of his work, Mr. Foster's friends induced him to go into business for himself, and he opened up an auto painting shop at 105 West Channel Street in a building erected for him by Andrew Simpson. The day he started business he found three cars ready for him to work on, and he has had a prosperous and thriving trade ever since, both in painting and lettering and monogram work, in which he is expert. Mr. Foster has four grades of work, A, B, C and D, and the first of these receives his absolute guarantee that the job will be even more satisfactory and durable than when the car came from the factory, all the original paint being removed. The water in Stockton being alkali, provision is made for that condition by using the hardest drying varnish known, this serving to resist alkali, oil and water. He employs from five to sixteen men in his business.

While living at Buffalo, N. Y., Mr. Foster was united in marriage with Miss Mary Albert of that city, and they make their home in the beautiful residence erected by Mr. Foster on Yosemite Terrace. He is a member of the California Auto Trades Association, the San Joaquin County Auto Trades Association, being a member of the executive board of the latter for four years, the Merchants and Manufacturers Association, the Progressive Business Men's Club, and in fraternal circles belongs to the Elks, Odd Fellows and Eagles. Enthusiastic over the business possibilities of Stockton, where he has made such a success, Mr. Foster is public spirited in all his views and takes an active interest in civic affairs.

JOHN ELTRINGHAM—A rancher whose specializing in vineyarding and orcharding has met with great success is John Eltringham, a native son from Calaveras County, who is now living three miles to the northeast of Acampo. He was born at Douglas Flat, on January 13, 1874, a son of John and Elizabeth (Reese) Eltringham. His father was an early settler in California, who came from Pennsylvania in 1848, and mined in Tuolumne County. He was of English descent, but the mother's people were of Welsh extraction. They also came West in the early days, crossing the plains, as did the father, in order to reach the Golden State. Mr. Eltringham mined all his life. He lived to be eighty-eight years of age, and was the father of nine children. Hattie has become Mrs. Zwinge, and lives in Valley Spring, Cal.; Mary is Mrs. Seibert, of Lodi; Katherine died at the age of ten; Henry is at Wedge Flat, in Calaveras County; Will is farming at Stockton; John was the sixth-born; Walter is deceased; David is at Douglas Flat, on the old home place; and Vina is at Angels Camp, Cal.

John Eltringham left home when he was fourteen years old and worked for three years for P. A. Buell, in the planing mill at Stockton. Then he became an engineer, working for the Wagner Leather Company for thirteen years. The next three years were spent at Topman & Brant's planing mills at Stockton. In 1914, he bought twenty-three acres of open land, which he developed as an orchard, growing apricots and prunes. An excellent pumping plant furnishes a seven-inch stream of water.

At Stockton, in November, 1898, Mr. Eltringham married Miss Lena Seifert, who was born at Stockton, the daughter of Lorenz and Lena Seifert, whose life-story is elsewhere sketched in this work. She was reared and educated in Stockton, and grew up at home. They have one son, Reese Eltringham, who assists his father. They operate their own farm, and also lease of Mr. Van Valkenberg some sixty acres in vineyard, ten acres in alfalfa, and fifty acres of open farm land. Mr. and Mrs. Eltringham are Republicans. Mr. Eltringham belongs to the Woodmen of the World at Stockton.

CAPT. CARL CONRAD FREWERT.—Although many years have passed since the death of Capt. Carl Conrad Frewert, he is still well remembered among the older residents of San Joaquin County, for his genial nature and sterling traits of character gave him a high place in the esteem of all who knew him. He was born March 12, 1824, in Westphalia, Prussia, and in 1849 was married at Hamburg, Germany, to Miss Eulia Agers, of that city; and in the summer of 1850 they sailed for San Francisco, coming around the Horn. A brickmason by trade, he followed this line of work in San Francisco until 1851, when he came to San Joaquin County and preempted land in Tulare Township; afterwards he became the owner of a place on the San Joaquin River, improving and developing the land. Some of it is still in the possession of the family; and a small cabin, made of material he brought with him on his voyage, is still in good repair on the old home place now occupied by his daughter, Mrs. Bertha A. Gaul. In addition to his farming activities, Captain Frewert also started a ferry over the San Joaquin River in 1877, and this for a number of years was a busy place. During the crection of the Capitol building at Sacramento he assisted in laying the brick, being an expert in this line.

Mrs. Frewert survived only a short time after coming to California, passing away in 1853. Ten years later Captain Frewert returned to Germany, and there he was married, on June 2, 1867, to Miss Amelie Hager. She died December 24, 1872; and on May 14, 1873, he was married at Stockton to Miss Johanna F. Tabert, a native of Posen, Germany. Captain Frewert passed away in 1884, at the age of sixty years, his death being caused by an illness contracted through exposure during the severe flood of that year, which caused such devastation in the vicinity of his ranch, the levee breaking through at that point. A Mason of many years standing, Captain Frewert stood high among the members of that fraternity. Of the children of his last marriage three survive: Charles Frewert, of Pendleton, Ore., has for many years represented the Holt Manufacturing Company in that state; Mrs. Matilda A. Peterson has one son, Harold, and resides at Burlingame; Mrs. Bertha A. Gaul is the mother of three children, Herman, Mrs. Emma Claussen, and Vera. After her husband's death, Mrs. Frewert was married to Emil Krenz, who passed away at Stockton. She survived him until April 13, 1915, when she died at Burlingame. She was a Lutheran.

CHARLES ALBERT JAHANT.—The annals of San Joaquin County pioneer history would not be complete without the story of the life of Peter F. Jahant and his son, Charles Albert, who passed away on July 25, 1918. Charles Albert Jahant was born on his father's ranch one mile north of Acampo, April 21, 1874, and was the third oldest in a family of eight children. Peter Jahant was born in France in 1827 and when he was about six months old his parents came to the United States and settled in Akron, Ohio; he was one of a family of eleven children. At the age of twenty-three, he started for California across the plains with mule teams, arriving about the first of July, 1850. Arriving in California he had five cents in his pocket and he set about to find work to do; after hunting for work all day, and having nothing to eat, he finally determined to seek advice. He went to Dr. Sargent, of Sargent Brothers, who kept a store, and told of his condition, whereupon he was told to help himself to whatever he wanted and that he could pay when he could, as was the custom of the country in those days. Dr. Sargent also gave him some work to do and at the end of four days he had a chance to go to the mines, where he remained about two months, then went to Sacramento and with his savings bought a mule team, but after two months he was taken ill with cholera, the expense of which took all his hard earnings and also his team, and when he recovered he was again penniless. After that he returned to mining on the Yuba until the stormy wet winter of 1852-53, when he returned to Sacramento, which he found inundated, and finally settled in San Joaquin County, where his brother Victor lived, and where he took up Government land. In 1865 he sold his place to his brother and removed to Stockton, where he bought a livery stable, in which business he continued until 1871. He then returned to his old neighborhood and bought 540 acres of valuable land, and in 1885 he erected a handsome residence. In 1867 he was married to Miss Susau Maley, of Irish descent, but reared in Boston, Mass. He passed away in 1911, at the age of eighty-four years.

Charles Albert Jahant was educated in the schools of Acampo and Stockton and assisted his father on the home place. At his father's death the home place was divided among the heirs and our subject received as his portion eighty acres; later he purchased sixty acres, making 140 acres, 130 acres in vineyard and the balance devoted to an orchard.

On March 12, 1901, in Lodi, Mr. Jahant was married to Miss Marian Hutchins, a native of Lodi, and a daughter of John and Anna (Nevin) Hutchins, the latter born in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. John Hutchins was a native of Canada and in 1853 crossed the plains to California, the journey consuming six months, and with four associates he bought the site of the present thriving city of Lodi. He raised grain for many years and later planted one of the first commercial vineyards in this district. Mr. Jahant passed away on July 25, 1918, in the prime of his manhood and his death came as a shock to his family and the community, where he was highly esteemed. Mrs. Jahant, who is a member of the Lodi Parlor, N. D. G. W., makes her home at 24 West Lodi Avenue.

JOHN D. SOWLES.—A veteran of the Civil War and a resident of California since 1868, John D. Sowles has contributed his share to the development of this section since his removal here in 1880. He was born in New York State, but was taken to Eaton County, Mich., where he was reared. His father was Nathaniel Sowles, a farmer of Michigan, who came to California in 1853 and went into the mines at Marysville on the Feather River. The opportunities for schooling were meager and John D. attended school for a limited time, but years of experience in brushing up against the world have afforded him a liberal and practical education.

In October of 1861, Mr. Sowles enlisted in Co. B., Tenth Michigan Infantry, U. S. A., and served in the Army of the Cumberland under Generals Thomas and Sherman, serving throughout the duration of the war and was discharged in 1865. Then he returned to his home in Michigan to remain until 1868, when he set out for California coming via the Panama route. Reaching California he settled on Sherman Island and rented 200 acres on which he produced grain for six years, the venture proving a success; then he went to the West Side between Byron and Tracy, and still later, about 1880, he came to the Elliott district of San Joaquin County and has continued his operations in this locality to the present time. He now leases a tract of land comprising ninety acres.

The first marriage of Mr. Sowles occurred in 1873, on Sherman Island, and united him with Miss Emma Ward, a native of Pennsylvania, who passed away in 1877. Mr. Sowles' second marriage occurred in Stockton on December 20, 1915, and united him with Mrs. Gladys Morgan, who before her marriage was Miss Selkirk, born in San Francisco, a daughter of W. R. and Adell (Aldrich) Selkirk. The father, W. R. Selkirk, was a newspaper man. His father came to California in 1849, during the gold rush, and mined at Gold Hill, where he resided for many years. W. R. Selkirk became an active figure in politics and was the editor of the Mountain Democrat; later he removed to San Bernardino, and edited the San Bernardino Sun, and still later the Alta Californian at San Francisco. When Mr. Selkirk settled in the northern part of San Joaquin County he had charge of Reclamation District No. 548 of California, and in association with George Athearn had full charge of this work. Mr. Selkirk now resides in Seattle, Wash., at the age of sixty-four. Mrs. Sowles inherits her literary tastes from her father, for she is a frequent contributor to the Sacramento Bee and various stock papers on the care of farm animals. Politically, Mr. Sowles is a Republican, and fraternally is a past grand of the Odd Fellows Lodge of Lockeford. He is a man of true worth, and both he and his estimable wife are popular in the community because of their generous, liberal views.

JOHN CRAWFORD.—Thirty-one years ago John Crawford had his first view of the Golden Gate and has since been content to make this state his home. He was born in the maritime village of Carnoustie, Forfarshire, Scotland, October 22, 1859, and is the youngest of ten children born to James and Elizabeth Crawford, both natives of the same village. James Crawford was a market gardener and followed that trade in Scotland until his death at the age of sixty-five years. John was thrown on his own resources at the age of thirteen, working as a milk peddler and receiving small wages; as soon as he was large enough he found work as a farm hand near his home village and during the next ten years he had saved sufficient money to pay his passage on the S. S. Roma bound for Australia. Arriving there he found plenty of work as a farm laborer, and later on railroad construction, and he helped to build the large docks at Melbourne. He remained there until 1891, when he took passage to the United States, and on April 6, 1891, his vessel steamed through the Golden Gate. Immediately after his arrival, Mr. Crawford went to Sacramento, where for eighteen months he was engaged in cement contracting; then he removed to Stockton and bought a small tract of land in east Stockton where, at that time, there were only three houses. Mr. Crawford engaged in cement contracting, being the trusted and faithful foreman for Craven & Barber for many years and he handled concrete contracts in San Jose, Lodi, Sacramento and Stockton; he has also been in charge of the workmen for the Clark & Henery Company and for A. B. Munson.

In July, 1899, Mr. Crawford was married to Miss Amanda Noren, a native of Stockholm, Sweden, born January 30, 1857. Mrs. Crawford came to America in June, 1889, stopping in Chicago until December, 1893, when she arrived in San Jose, Cal., and the following year came to Stockton. Mr. Crawford has invested his money in Stockton property and now owns twelve lots besides his fine residence at 2525 East Weber Avenue. Mr. Crawford became a United States citizen in Stockton in 1902 and since that time has cast his votes with the Republican party. Mrs. Crawford is an active member of the Fair Oaks Woman's Improvement Club. In early days, Mr. Crawford farmed the land to hay and grain where now stands the Fair Oaks Club house. He is still interested in farming, but is enjoying the competence so richly deserved and earned through years of industry and good management.

WILLIS WARE STACKS.—Ability and industry, combined with a good practical head for business, are among the qualities that have brought success to Willis W. Stacks, rancher near the Elliott school, where he was born on March 11, 1884, the son of Thomas Jefferson and Mary Jane (Hickey) Stacks, both natives of Jasper County, Mo. In 1872, Thomas J. Stacks came to California where he worked at anything he could find to do until after he was married, when he engaged in farming in the Elliott district. The mother was a daughter of Joshua and Sarah F. (Crow) Hickey. Joshua Hickey came to California in 1861 and settled on a 160-acre ranch in the Elliott district in San Joaquin County. He passed away in 1865, and his widow, with her four daughters, went back to Missouri and in 1873 came back to California and here married John Hickey, who died in 1908. Grandmother Hickey died at the age of eighty-five on April 30, 1922, leaving three girls, Mary Jane Stacks, Mrs. Emma M. Wilson and Mrs. Elizabeth Aldrich.

The father, Thomas J. Stacks, farmed 500 acres of grain land in the Elliott district; 200 acres is an inheritance from John Hickey, which is still owned by Mrs. Stacks. In 1908, a country residence was built on this property and there the family reside. They were the parents of eight children: Nancy F. is Mrs. R. Declercq, of Fresno; Minnie H. is Mrs. S. S. Strobridge, of Lockeford; Willis W. is the subject of this review; Annie is Mrs. Chas. Emslie, of Stockton; William T.; Bessie is Mrs. James Lewis, of Sacramento; Jennie is Mrs. Eli Springer, of Lodi; Dora is Mrs. Harry Ritchie, of Lodi. There are ten grandchildren in the family. T. J. Stacks died February 17, 1915.

W. W. Stacks received his schooling in the Elliott district and grew to young manhood on his father's farm, where he learned lessons of thrift and industry so necessary to success in any undertaking, and he carries on the home ranch with his mother. In politics, Mr. Stacks is a Democrat.

EDWARD H. NOACK.—Commercial activity finds a worthy representative in Edward H. Noack, president and manager of the Monarch Foundry Company, of Stockton, Cal. He was born in San Francisco on March 9, 1875, and as a child lived in Stockton. During the year of 1883, his parents removed to Walla Walla, Wash., and our subject became a messenger boy with the Western Union Telegraph Company. During the summer of 1894, the family left Washington with a four-horse team and wagon and drove to Stockton, leaving on June 12 and arriving in Stockton on July 31. His first work in Stockton was in a photograph gallery operated by Frank Elliott. Then he became an apprentice to learn the pattern-maker's trade with the Globe Iron Works, and later with Matteson & Williamson; from September, 1898, to September, 1900, he worked at the trade in Sacramento with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Returning to Stockton, he entered the employ of J. M. Kroyer, who had just started the Sampson Iron Works, and he got out the first patterns for their gas engine. In September of 1906, in partnership with R. J. Quinn, Charles Foreman and George Snell, he started the East Street Foundry Company, and in 1907 the business was incorporated as the Monarch Foundry Company and moved to the present location on East Oak Street and Sacramento Street. In 1812, R. L. Quisenberry bought the interest of George Snell. Later, Quinn and Foreman sold out to the Monarch Foundry Company, and about 1916 Quisenberry sold his interest. The present officers of the company are Edward H. Noack, who has been the president since 1912 and manager since its incorporation in 1907, and who holds the majority of the stock; and L. L. Ventre, the secretary of the corporation. The company started with a very small capital, paid $35 per month rent for the East Street building, and employed from twelve to twenty-five men, whereas they now employ from 125 to 150 men. Their original building on East Oak Street was 75x100 feet. Additions have been made until the buildings now cover an area of 150x300 feet, with a separate machine shop 50x100 feet; additional property was purchased, and the plant now covers half a block. During 1915 an electric furnace for making steel castings was installed, and Mr. Noack spent some time throughout the East making a thorough study of the steel business. In 1908, the company began the manufacture of centrifugal pumps. Among their other products are gray iron castings, electric steel castings, and general pumping machinery; they are the sole manufacturers of the Monarch Ames deep-well, double-acting plunger pumps, and their trade covers the entire Pacific Coast and extends into Mexico.

During the World War, Mr. Noack was very active in all bond drives at times being away from business an entire week. He is president of the Stockton Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers Association and an active member of the Stockton Rotary Club. Fraternally he is a member of the Charity Lodge of Odd Fellows, Stockton, and is a member and trustee of the Stockton Lodge, No. 218, B. P. O. E.

ROBERT B. OULLAHAN.—One of the most successful business men of Stockton is Robert B. Oullahan, the energetic and reliable realtor and insurance broker. A careful student of real estate in all its phases, and of land and realty development, Mr. Oullahan has become well and favorably known throughout the State of California, and his expert judgment is frequently sought as to land values and soil productiveness. He was born in Gold Hill, Storey County, Nev., on June 27, 1865, a son of D. J. and Julia F. (Baine) Oullahan. His father was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1824. His paternal grandfather, Robert Oullahan, was a prominent civil engineer. D. J. Oullahan received a college education, which equipped him for his various enterprises throughout his lifetime. He was a pioneer of California, arriving in the early fifties and locating in San Francisco. He was always a stalwart Democrat, and served as State Treasurer of California while Stoneman was Governor. Julia F. Baine, Robert's mother, was a native of Jackson, Miss., a daughter of Judge A. C. Baine, a Virginian who migrated to Jackson, Miss., and became a prominent attorney. On the discovery of gold in California, he came to San Francisco via Panama in the days of the early gold rush, and was joined a few years later by his family. Locating in Stockton, he became a prominent and leading attorney and was editor of the San Joaquin Republican. Associated with him in his practice in early days were T. T. Bouldin and David S. Terry. Julia Baine's education was principally obtained in the Stockton schools. There she met and married Mr. Oullahan. A cultured and refined woman, she emanated an influence for good. Her passing occurred in 1881. She left a husband and five children, of whom Robert B. was the eldest.

The family lived in San Francisco when Robert was a small boy; then, in 1873, they removed to Stockton, and he received his education in the public schools, and later entered Santa Clara University, which thoroughly prepared him for his entrance into business life. On completing his studies he took a position as assistant secretary of the state senate in 1886-1887, after which he entered the office of the State Comptroller at Sacramento under J. P. Dunn, and occupied that position for four years. He then returned to Stockton, and in 1891 began the insurance and real estate business, in which he has been remarkably successful. In 1903 he became associated with C. E. Littlehall, under the firm name of Oullahan & Littlehall Company, in the real estate and insurance business; and for seventeen years this firm were the foremost realtors of Stockton, and were very active in all real estate developments. Among the most outstanding were the Sunny Acres Tract, a subdivision of a large tract near Turlock, Stanislaus County; the Knight Tract, a subdivision north of Lodi on the Mokelumne River; and the Moreing and Oullahan Tract, a subdivision east of Stockton on the Linden road. This company also put on the market the Nile Garden Colony, an extensive subdivision south of Manteca. Mr. Oullahan divided the Calaveras River holdings of Miss Julia Weber, a daughter of the late Capt. Charles M. Weber, the founder of Stockton; made partition of the Weber estate between the two heirs; and took charge of the large holdings of Miss Weber. He pioneered in subdividing the northwestern part of Stockton on Rose and Madison Streets; and promoted the sale of the present Stockton high school site, consisting of four city blocks, selected in a competitive campaign from four different sites. He also specialized in industrial sites in the water front and railroad districts, and has made large sales in farm and city property. Since July, 1920, Mr. Oullahan has been operating alone, and his years of experience and careful estimate of valuations assure him of continued success in his undertakings. An important undertaking of the firm of Oullahan, Littlehall and Company was the development of that section of the business quarter of Stockton located on the west side of California Street, near Weber Avenue, and the abutting property on Weber Avenue, into modern brick buildings for mercantile purposes.

During the recent war, Mr. Oullahan was one of the eighteen captains in the liberty bond campaign in San Joaquin County, and a member of the County Council of Defense. He is a member of the advisory board of the Stockton branch of the Bank of Italy, was one of the organizers of the Chamber of Commerce and served on its first board of directors, and later served two more terms in the same capacity.

The marriage of Mr. Oullahan united him with Miss Albertena Parker, a native daughter of Stockton, Cal., whose father, J. B. Parker, was a Stockton pioneer. Fraternally, Mr. Oullahan has been a member of the Stockton Lodge, No. 218, Elks, for twenty-two years, and takes an active part in all the events of the order. He is also a member of the Knights of Columbus and Yosemite Club. He is an active member of the Stockton Realty Board, being a member of the appraisement committee, and is also a member of the State Realty Board. While attending to his own business affairs, Mr. Oullahan always finds ample time to lend his influence to all movements that have for their aim the advancement of the city, county and state.

JOHN J. SCHMIEDT.—Among the additions to the substantial citizenship of California is John J. Schmiedt, a prosperous vineyardist of the Victor section, in San Joaquin County, residing on his 200-acre ranch and vineyard three-quarters of a mile north and one-quarter of a mile east of Victor. He is a progressive and enterprising man in all his undertakings; and he has been successful, gaining and retaining the respect and confidence of his fellowmen wherever his home has been. He was born in Hutchinson County, S. D., on July 14, 1879, a son of John and Dora (Foda) Schmiedt. His father was an early pioneer of South Dakota, where he had settled upon arrival from his native country of Russia. There he homesteaded 160 acres and also a timber claim of like amount. In 1890 he removed to Eugene, Ore., where he farmed for five years. He then located near Biggs, Butte County, and later came on to Manteca, San Joaquin County, where he was among the first to engage in intensive farming and helped improve that section. He and his wife now live in Lodi, retired and in the enjoyment of a competency. They were the parents of twelve children, of whom John J. is the oldest.

John J. Schmiedt received his education in the public schools of South Dakota and Oregon. When he was seventeen years of age his parents moved to California, and he immediately started working on large farms, driving the big teams in the grain fields. He worked for George W. Pierce, west of Davis in Yolo County and soon became his foreman, a position he held for a period of four years. Resigning his position to begin farming on his own account, he came to Lodi in 1902 and bought twenty acres of unimproved land, twelve acres of which he set to vineyard and the balance to orchard of peaches, pears, plums and apricots. Later this property was sold and he purchased thirty acres north of Victor, stubble field which he improved to an orchard and vineyard. In partnership with Herman Vollbrecht he owns 105 acres due south of the Christian Church, of rich river-bottom land, where the partners have an eighty-acre vineyard, the balance being set to Bartlett pears. With Charles W. Hoag he owns two ranches, one of thirty and one of forty acres, in the Christian Colony section, all devoted to vineyard. Individually he owns a ranch of eighty-two acres three-fourths of a mile east of his home. Twenty acres of this is in vineyard and the balance he will set to orchard. Then he owns a seventeen-acre vineyard and a sixteen-acre cherry orchard and vineyard, both near Victor, and also twenty-three acres of plums and vineyard just south of Victor. He is progressive and constructive and has erected and owns business and residence property in Victor. He is a stockholder in the Woodbridge Vineyard Association and the Community Winery of Lodi. Mr. Schmiedt has also made a good success as a salesman from the auction block and is both a bonded and licensed auctioneer.

On December 27, 1902, at Lodi, occurred the marriage of Mr. Schmiedt, which united him with Miss Barbara Erfla, born in Russia in the vicinity of the city of Odessa, a daughter of David and Barbara (Fink) Erfla. Her father is a farmer who on coming to America settled in North Dakota and homesteaded a tract of land. He now resides in Lodi. Mr. and Mrs. Schmiedt had eight children: Pauline, Freda, deceased; George, Gus, Henry, Clifford, Melvin and Virginia. Mrs. Schmiedt is a woman of much native ability and business acumen. Some years ago, receiving a legacy of $300, she invested it in land, and by selling and buying land and crops she has been very successful. Her profits on the different deals have accumulated until she now owns a full-bearing sixteen-acre vineyard, a splendid source of income. Mr. Schmiedt has surrounded his family with comforts and plenty. The fine modern home he has just completed is much enjoyed by the family, and his thrift is shown by the fine orchard and vineyard, and irrigation system, the results of his industry and good management. In politics he is a Republican, and fraternally he is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America at Lodi. They are members of the German Baptist Church in Lodi, of which he is a trustee. He is also trustee in Victor school district.

ROBERT C. TUBBS.—As an authority in horticultural matters, Robert C. Tubbs is well-known throughout San Joaquin County, having been connected with the County Horticultural Commission for eighteen years. He is now deputy horticultural inspector for the Lodi district, his territory including all the locality lying north of the Eight-Mile Road. He was born in Lee County, near Keokuk, Iowa, on July 20, 1855, his parents, both now deceased, being George L. and Nancy (Fitzsimmons) Tubbs, the former a native of Ohio, the latter of Pennsylvania. The family removed to California in 1860, settling on an eighty-acre claim near Tyson, in the Woodbridge district, which Mr. Tubbs bought from B. DeVries. Here he engaged in farming and breeding fine horses, becoming known all over this part of California for his love of blooded horses, and his pride in them. After seven years here he sold out and moved to Amador County, purchasing the Buena Vista Ranch in Jackson Valley, and here he continued to breed trotting, running and carriage horses. An expert judge of horse flesh, he had a string of blooded animals there, among them the Duke of Alexes, Winnie Winters, Jack Hawkins, and Jim Corbett, all famous in their day and well-remembered by the early settlers. He was a personal friend of Ross Sargent, the famous horse king of San Joaquin County. Mr. Tubbs' ranch in Jackson Valley was on rich bottom land, highly improved, and was one of the show places of the county. He later planted a deciduous fruit orchard of fifty acres, being one of the first men to commercialize fruit growing in Amador County. After many years on this ranch he finally disposed of it and removed to Lodi, where he passed away in 1919 at the age of eighty-eight years. A fine type of the sturdy pioneer settler, he was a familiar and well-known figure on the streets of Lodi, driving one of his fine horses, his love for them lasting to the last years of his life. Of the nine children of Mr. and Mrs. Tubbs, four are living: Robert C. of this sketch; Warren, who lives at Sonora; and Melissa and Edgar, of Lodi.

In the pursuit of his education, Robert C. Tubbs first attended the Ray school at Tyson and the Buena Vista school in Amador County, and then took a course in the Stockton Business College. For a time he followed farming on his father's ranch in Amador County, and then, in partnership with C. H. Pease as Tubbs & Pease, bought the Sedgwick Express in Stockton, which they renamed the River Express, carrying on their business on the river boats between Stockton and San Francisco. Selling out later, Mr. Tubbs went back to the old home ranch in Amador County and took up horticultural work, planting a large orchard to peaches, prunes, and plums, and carrying on the business under the firm name of G. L. Tubbs & Son, the company being stockholders in the old California Fruit Union, one of the earliest fruit-marketing organizations in this part of California.

In 1899 Mr. Tubbs sold out his holdings and moved to Lodi, where he became foreman of the Satsuma Orchard owned by M. P. Stein & Company, of Stockton, consisting of eighty acres of deciduous fruits and grapes. He continued in this position until 1907, when he bought a small orchard near Lodi, which he developed into a fine property. He disposed of it in 1920. During all these years he continued to make a thorough study of horticulture and viticulture, particularly of the problems encountered in this part of California, and his years of experience have made him an authority. Since 1903 he has been connected with the San Joaquin County Horticultural Commission; and now, as deputy horticultural inspector, he has charge of a large territory, his duties including quarantine inspection of all new nursery stock brought into the district, standardization and inspection of green fruit, and rodent control. His work has grown until he requires from three to seven deputies.

Mr. Tubbs was united in marriage in San Francisco, Cal., to Miss Nellie H. Green, a native of Petaluma, Cal., and a daughter of Frank and Mary (Wharff) Green, who were born in Massachusetts, and were pioneers of California in 1849 and 1852, respectively. Mrs. Tubbs was reared in San Francisco. They are the parents of two children: George F. is a merchant at Livermore, Cal.; and Edna is the wife of J. D. Yates, of Turlock, and the mother of one daughter. Mr. Tubbs, who was a charter member of Truth Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Stockton, is now a member of Lodi Lodge, No. 267, I. O. O. F., and a Past Grand; and also a member of Harmony Encampment.

HENRY C. KINNEY.—When Henry C. Kinney arrived in California, in 1876, the San Joaquin Valley was one vast plain covered with native grass, where thousands of head of fat cattle ranged with no fences to detain them, herded and guarded by the cowboy of frontier days. Soon afterward the railroad was built through the valley and changes from frontier conditions to the present high state of cultivation began, in which Mr. Kinney took an active part. He was born in Joliet, Ill., February 13, 1853, a son of George H. and Caroline Elizabeth (Burnham) Kinney, and early in life was taken to Madison County, N. Y., where he was reared and educated. In the fall of 1876 he came West and located at San Jose, where he remained for two years. He then removed to Placer County and there entered the employ of Towle Brothers, prominent lumbermen of that county, who ran large lumber mills, and with whom he remained for seventeen years. Twenty-six years ago he came to Stockton, where he purchased land south of the city and set out an orchard of walnuts, cherries, figs, etc. Later he sold his ranch and devoted his time to walnut-growing in the San Joaquin Valley. His years of study and experience along this line have made him one of the best-informed men in California on soil and climatic conditions best suited for the successful growth of walnut trees. His success in grafting and budding of fruit and walnut trees has been attained by his characteristic thoroughness and industry. At one time he grafted 250 walnut trees in the city of Stockton without the loss of one. He has top-grafted trees throughout the county, and is an authority along this line of horticulture. His work has been productive of better orchards, more abundant crops, and finer quality of fruit, a most substantial contribution to the development to his community.

The marriage of Mr. Kinney united him with Miss Adelaide L. Willard, a native of New York; and two children have blessed their union, Clinton P. and Mary Grace. While residing in Placer County, Mr. Kinney was a member of the county board of education for ten years. Fraternally, he is a member of the Woodmen of the World. He and his estimable wife are among the well-known and representative pioneer people of this section of California, and enjoy the warm regard of a large circle of friends.

THOMAS S. LOUITTIT.—Typical of the opportunities which the city of Stockton offers to its native-born sons is the life of Thomas S. Louttit, who has risen to a foremost position at the bar of his home town. Here he was born on July 11, 1876; here the foundation of his education was laid in the public and high schools; and here, too, he began the study of the law under the talented preceptorship of his father, the late James Alexander Louttit. Upon the completion of his studies he was admitted to the bar, in 1903, before the supreme court of California in San Francisco, and at once commenced professional work in partnership with his father under the firm title of Louttit & Louttit, which connection continued until the death of the senior partner three years later. A sketch of the life of Jas. A. Louttit will be found on another page in this history. After his father's death in 1906, Thomas S. Louttit formed a partnership with De Witt Clary under the name of Clary & Louttit, in which he continued until the death of Mr. Clary; then, in 1919, he formed a partnership with Gordon A. Stewart, the firm name being Louttit & Stewart.

Mr. Louttit was married in 1898 to Miss Anna Jane Hunter, a native of San Joaquin County, and a daughter of H. M. & Anna J. (Ortman) Hunter. Her mother came of one of the pioneer families of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Louttit are the parents of one son, Thomas Hunter. Fraternally, Mr. Louttit is a member of Stockton Parlor, No. 7, N. S. G. W., and San Joaquin Blue Lodge, No. 19, of the Masons. He is also a member of the Stockton Elks, No. 218. He was a charter member and the first president of the Kiwanis Club of Stockton, and is a member of the Stockton Golf and Country Club and the Yosemite Club. He is a director in the Morris Plan Bank of Stockton, and a director in the Bank of Manteca. At the city election on May 2, 1922, he was elected secretary of the Board of Freeholders to frame a new charter for the city of Stockton.

WILLIAM PRESZLER.—Among the successful vineyardists of San Joaquin County, one who has spent the greater part of his life in the county is William Preszler, the owner of a fine thirty-seven acre vineyard near Victor. He was born in Hutchinson County, S. D., on December 25, 1896, a son of George and Margareta (Schnaidt) Preszler, both parents natives of South Russia who were born near Odessa, and came from their native country and settled in Hutchinson County, S. D., when very young. His father, George Preszler, farmed a half-section of land in Hutchinson County until 1901, when he came to San Joaquin County and purchased his home place, which he improved to vineyard, and has purchased other ranches in the vicinity of Victor. The parents of his mother were farmers in Russia who also settled in Hutchinson County, S. D. William Preszler is the third oldest in a family of eight children, as follows: Edward; Emma, Mrs. Kirschenmann; William, our subject; Henry, Allina, Ida, Martha and Lenhardt.

William Preszler obtained his education in the Lockeford and Victor district schools, but reading and observation supplemented his schooling. He assisted his father on the home ranch until he started out for himself, and it has been due to his own inherent qualities of manhood and character that he has won a successful career.

The marriage of Mr. Preszler occurred on April 2, 1920, and united him with Miss Leontina Heil, a daughter of Peter and Caroline (Neuhardt) Heil, both natives of Russia. In 1887 Peter Heil came to America and settled in South Dakota, where he obtained work on the great Dakota farms. In December of 1906 the family came to California and located on land near Victor, and at once planted it to vineyard. Since that time, Mr. Heil has bought, improved and sold a number of ranches throughout San Joaquin County, which have netted him a good profit. Besides his farming interests, Mr. Heil is an independent packer, shipping through the Peppers Fruit Company, and his investments and activities have made him independent financially. There were eleven children in the family, only seven of whom are now living: Emanuel, Ella, now Mrs. Edward Preszler, Leontina, now Mrs. William Preszler, Freda, and Theodore were all born in the Dakotas; Eugene and Regina are natives of California. Mrs. Preszler received her education in the Alpine and Victor schools. She also studied piano and organ, being talented in music. Mr. and Mrs. Preszler are the parents of one son, Neil William.

Mr. Preszler served seven months in the United States Army. Enlisting on August 1, 1918, he was sent to Camp Lewis in Company E of the First California Infantry, and after seven months service was discharged at the Presidio, San Francisco, and immediately returned to his home in San Joaquin County. He has recently completed a fine modern bungalow on his ranch property and his vineyard is irrigated from the irrigation plant owned by his father, his brothers, and himself—a large twelve-inch pumping plant, thirty-horsepower motor, pumping water from the Mokelumne River and giving them a flow of water sufficient to irrigate 170 acres. This system is a very valuable asset to his vineyard. He is a stockholder in the Northern California Fruit Company, Inc., that handles the fruit grown by ten members, who are independent packers and shippers. He is a member of Lodi Post No. 2, American Legion. He and his wife are members of Salem Reformed Church in Lodi, and take an active interest in its benevolences. The neat and thrifty appearance of his ranch, coupled with the handsome competence which he receives each year from his harvests, plainly indicates that his vocation was wisely chosen and that success has rewarded him for his labor. In 1923 Mr. Preszler purchased two vineyards comprising $15\frac{1}{2}$ acres, both highly improved and located near his home ranch.

Wm Preszler

ALDEN HAMMOND.—A California pioneer of 1849, Alden Hammond was born in Newport, R. I., August 5, 1834, a son of Moses and Abigail (Marble) Hammond, who were merchants in Newport. Moses Hammond came to California and located in Stockton, engaging in the lumber business here.

Alden Hammond was a lad of fifteen when he came to California. He was employed in the lumber yard, and later became a farmer. He was married in Stockton to Miss Elizabeth B. W. Gorham, born in Nantucket, N. Y., who came with her pioneer father to California when young. The mother was a woman of very loving and affable disposition, and was endeared to everyone. She passed away in August, 1910. Five children were born in the family: Mary Elizabeth (Mrs. Southrey), Martha Gorham (Mrs. Wheeler), Cynthia G. (Mrs. Adams), and George G., all of Stockton, and Mrs. Emma Nason, deceased. The father resided on the old home place till the time of his death, January 4, 1923.

JAMES A. PIERCE.—Among the excellent ranch properties four and a half miles northeast of Acampo, San Joaquin County, is one that is owned and cultivated by James A. Pierce, who has made his home in this section for the past thirty-seven years. A native Californian, he was born at Pleasanton, Alameda County, on September 17, 1871, a son of David and Rose (Monahan) Pierce, the former a native of Pennsylvania and the latter of Ireland. During the year of 1853, David Pierce came to California and went into the mines at Hangtown, remaining there until he removed to Modesto, where he engaged in the hotel business for a few years. He later removed to Alameda County and there remained until his death at the age of sixty-seven. Mrs. Pierce passed away at the age of sixty-four.

James A. Pierce obtained his education in the district schools of Alameda and Sacramento counties and when seventeen years of age began working as a farm hand in the orchards of San Joaquin County and by his hard work and economical habits saved enough money to purchase a fifteen-acre orchard and vineyard, which he has operated ever since.

Mr. Pierce's marriage occurred on June 7, 1905, and united him with Miss Mary McTucker, also a native Californian, born in the Elliott district of San Joaquin County, a daughter of Nathaniel and Ione (Watson) McTucker. Her father, Nathaniel McTucker, made his first trip across the plains in 1848, bringing with him cattle and horses, and he was the first importer of fine horses to the Pacific Coast. On his last trip to Illinois he was married to Miss Ione Watson, at Berry, Pike County, and came back to California via Panama, settling in the Elliott district of San Joaquin County. Her father passed away at the age of sixty-seven; her mother still lives at the age of eighty-seven and is one of the few pioneers of that locality. They were the parents of six children, Mrs. Pierce being the youngest child. Mr. and Mrs. Pierce are the parents of two children: James Francis and Mary Alberta. Politically, Mr. Pierce gives his support to progressive, constructive legislation, regardless of party lines, supporting the best man for public office. Fraternally he is a member of the Knights of Pythias of Lodi.

EMERSON B. HERRICK.—One of the best-known and most popular citizens of the Lodi section of San Joaquin County is Emerson B. Herrick, who on May 16, 1922, was appointed postmaster of this thriving city. He is endowed with the talents which make for leadership among men, and his executive ability and clear-headedness make him a valuable incumbent of the office of postmaster, in which he gives universal satisfaction. He was born in Jackson, Amador County, Cal., June 30, 1894, a son of Dr. Charles A. and Lilly Virginia (Robertson) Herrick. Charles A. Herrick was born in Arcola, Humboldt County, Cal. Grandfather Isaiah Herrick left his native state of Maine in 1855 and crossed the plains by ox-team train to California. Arriving in California, he went to ranching and in time became an extensive land owner in Humboldt County. The mother of Emerson Herrick was born in San Andreas, Calaveras County, California. Her father, Elisha Bryant Robertson, was a planter in Tennessee, and in 1852 came around the Horn to California and settled at Copperopolis, where he mined for gold and was fairly successful in placer mining. He married Miss Lucy Sherman, who came via Panama to California. Elisha Robertson was one of the first graduates of the Toiland Hall, a college of medicine in San Francisco. He spent many years practicing medicine among the Indians of Amador and Calaveras Counties, and learned their language and customs. No call for a physician ever went unheeded by him. Dr. Charles A. Herrick and his good wife reside in San Francisco, where he has a lucrative dental practice. He has been secretary of the state board of dental examiners since 1901.

Emerson B. Herrick was reared and received his early education in Jackson, after which he moved with his parents to San Francisco. He then entered the Lowell high school, and after his graduation entered the agricultural department of the University of California, graduating in 1917 with the B. S. degree. During the late war, Mr. Herrick was placed in the United States Geological Survey, Western Department, including the territory west from Colorado and New Mexico to the Pacific Coast. The work of this survey was to reclassify lands in the public domain according to soil and vegetation. Completing this work, he removed to Lodi in November, 1918, where he took charge, as field manager for the Alameda Sugar Company, of their entire acreage of 1,600 acres in the Lodi section, devoted to raising beets, etc. Mr. Herrick remained in charge for one year, and then leased a vineyard of fifty acres seven miles northwest of Lodi, and also 150 acres of grain land, which he farmed for a year. In 1921 he was with the Tracy-Waldron Fruit Company, and one season was spent with the Pacific Fruit Exchange at Lodi. He then purchased an eighteen-acre vineyard on the Terminus road, where he has installed a five-inch pump with a ten-horse-power motor which affords ample irrigation for the entire acreage.

On May 1, 1918, at Santa Rosa, Cal., Mr. Herrick was married to Miss Adah Smith, a native of that city, and a daughter of J. C. and Mae (Gibson) Smith, natives of Sonoma County and Calaveras County, respectively. Mr. Smith is serving his third term as county assessor of Sonoma County, and for fourteen years preceding he was deputy assessor of the same county. Mr. and Mrs. Herrick have two children, Adah Virginia and Robert Emerson. Mr. Herrick is a Republican in politics; and fraternally, he was made a Mason in Lodi Lodge, No. 256, F. & A. M., and is also a member of the Eastern Star of Lodi. He is the president of the Lodi Lions Club and a director of the San Joaquin County branch of the Federation of American Farmers. Mrs. Herrick is a member of the Eastern Star. Both she and her husband are members of the Episcopal Church in Lodi.

GEORGE TEAGARD HUGHES.—Among the pioneer residents of San Joaquin County, nearing four score years, is George Teagard Hughes, who came to this state in boyhood and has always been an active participant in the industrial activity which has marked his career. For fifty years he followed farming pursuits on a farm east of Modesto, Cal., his interests centering in stockraising and dairying. He was born in Greene County, near Jefferson, Pa., October 20, 1845, a son of William Hiller, born June 6, 1821, at Jefferson, Pa., and Margaret Loyd (Hill) Hughes, also a native of Pennsylvania, born at Uniontown. The Hughes family are of Welsh origin. When Hugh Hughes, an early ancestor of our subject, was driven out of Wales for rebellion, his descendants scattered over England, Scotland and Ireland, this branch coming from Scotland and settling near Reading, Pa. Great-grandfather Hughes was a soldier in the Revolutionary War. After the war was over he was sent with a small army west of the Alleghany Mountains to quell what was known as Shay's Rebellion, caused by men refusing to pay the Government tax on whiskey manufactured there. When this was accomplished he left the army and moved west, settling in what is now Greene County, Pa., and was the founder of the town of Jefferson, where he lived and died, being buried in the Cumberland Presbyterian burying ground there. He was a life-long member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church as was also the grandfather and father of our subject. In 1853 the father, William Hiller Hughes, moved from Missouri to California and settled in Tuolumne County at Sonora, where he engaged in mining. From there he moved to San Joaquin County in 1857 and settled near where Ripon now stands and there reared a family of seven boys and five girls.

George Teagard Hughes received only a limited education in the schools of Tuolumne and Stanislaus counties, but the practical knowledge and experience gained on his father's ranch were of inestimable value in later years. The first piece of property owned and on which he began his farming pursuits is the land where now stands the town of Ripon, and from the beginning of his agricultural activities he was successful, continuing from 1865 to 1912. In 1912, Mr. Hughes sold all of his farming interests and went to Medford, Ore., where he purchased a pear orchard; this engaged his attention for four years when he returned to California, settling at San Leandro, where he has since resided.

The marriage of Mr. Hughes occurred April 28, 1875, and united him with Miss Elizabeth A. Davison, a daughter of James and Elizabeth Davison, born near Benton, Mo., on July 24, 1856. Her parents came to California when she was two years old and settled on the Tuolumne River eight miles east of Modesto, and the young people were married in the same house the parents had moved into in 1858. They were the parents of nine children: William Leland; Valora U.; Ruth L., Mrs. Roy S. Cameron; Myrtle M. married Martin C. Wolfe, deceased several years ago; Estella J., Mrs. Henry A. Schadlich residing at Oakdale; Clarence L. is married and lives at Manteca and is a farmer; Ethel F., Mrs. L. T. Young; George R., is married and lives in Eureka; and Mabel B., is the wife of W. H. Cavill. Mrs. Hughes passed away May 9, 1918, at Madera. For ten years Mr. Hughes was secretary of the Grange at Modesto and as a firm believer in the principles of the Republican party, he has taken an active part in the political affairs of county, state and nation. For a great many years he was a member of the Wildey Lodge, No. 149, I. O. O. F., of Modesto. For the past thirty-five years he has been an active and substantial member of the Baptist Church, holding the office of deacon, trustee, financial secretary and other positions of trust and responsibility. He enjoys the regard of his fellow men, and is widely known and esteemed in Central California.

JAMES M. PRENTICE.—The youngest packing house manager in San Joaquin County at the time of his appointment, when but twenty-seven years old, James M. Prentice, nevertheless made a splendid success from the start and is now a leader in the fruit packing and shipping business of the county. Stockton was Mr. Prentice's birthplace, the date of his birth being June 4, 1890; and his boyhood days were spent in the Weber, Jackson, Fair Oaks and Lafayette schools. He continued his education at the Lodi union high school, graduating from that institution. He then entered the employ of the Wells Fargo Express Company, and later of the Biggs Fruit Company, in Lodi. After two years with them, he entered St. Mary's College at Oakland for a three-years' commercial course, being graduated in 1916. While there he was very prominent in athletics, making the baseball, basketball and football teams the first year.

Coming to Lodi immediately after his graduation, Mr. Prentice entered the employ of the Biggs Fruit Company as office manager. In 1918, when the T. H. Peppers Company entered the packing field in San Joaquin County, Mr. Prentice, although young in years, was selected for the position of district agent, covering all of San Joaquin County. Ambitious and energetic, he was successful from the beginning, shipping 160 cars the first year, 660 cars the second year, and 1230 cars in 1920, leading all the packers in the county; and unstinted credit is due Mr. Prentice for this output. This company owned 360 acres of vineyards in San Joaquin County, and operated 900 acres on lease, having ten packing houses in the county. In 1920 they shipped 25,000 tons of Tokay and wine grapes, their business extending all over California. In 1921 the T. H. Peppers Company was absorbed by the American Fruit Growers Inc., and Mr. Prentice was continued in charge. In 1916 Mr. Prentice was married to Miss Delma Wakefield, a native daughter of San Joaquin County, whose father, J. W. Wakefield, was a pioneer farmer at Youngstown, in this county. Besides his responsible managerial position, Mr. Prentice is extensively interested in viticulture, having some very valuable properties. He is the owner of a sixty-acre vineyard at Youngstown, known as the Titus ranch, and a twenty-acre vineyard at Victor, a part of the Green ranch. Both are highly improved to Zinfandel and Tokay grapes, and are in full bearing, averaging six tons to the acre in 1920. Numbered among the most progressive young men in the district, Mr. Prentice is a member of the Eagles at Lodi and the Elks of Stockton, as well as the Lions Club at Lodi.
