

PREFACE

On the following pages, information regarding the allotment of land to the Concow Indians of Northern California is recorded.

Upon passage of the General Allotment Act of 1887 (24 Stat. 388), it became a general policy to provide each Indian with an allotment of a parcel of tribal land which he was to learn to manage. Upon becoming capable of such management, the Indian was given full control of his land, including the right to sell it.

The Allotment Register was a record maintained by the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) agents of the parcels of land given to each Indian. The relationships given in these records were important because, at the death of an "allottee," the title to the land passed to his or her heirs by way of a fractional interest in that land (i.e., all of the heirs received a portion of the title to the entire allotment, or land parcel, the fractional interest depending upon the degree of relationship to the deceased).

The original copy of this Allotment Register is housed in the Federal Records Center in San Francisco, California. The book in which the record was kept has a cover title of "Sanitary Record of Sick, Injured, Births, Deaths, etc."

The Concow Indians are a branch of the Maidu. They lived in Butte County, California on Concow Creek in the valley of the same name, from which they take their name. They were transferred to Round Valley Reservation in Mendocino County, California, before 1885.

A comparison of the ages given on this Allotment Register with ages of the same persons in the censuses of the Concow Indians indicates that the information in this register was recorded about 1894.
