Officials identify child who died

The child who died Tuesday while receiving swimming instructions at a Clovis swimming pool has been identified as Matthew Rosenthal, 2.

The child went into spasms in the pool and was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Agnes Medical Center.

William Flaherty, Fresno County deputy coroner, said Wednesday the child had "some congenital heart problems" and had undergone corrective heart surgery a year ago. Death was attributed to cardiac arrest, Flaherty said. No water was found in the child's lungs.

The incident occurred about 6:30 p.m. at Jan Thomas Swim School at 8740 N. Willow Ave. The child was with a swimming instructor. His parents also were present, said a man at the school who refused to identify himself.

Deputies, paramedics and firefighters with the Consolidated Fire District responded.

Child dies after going limp in pool

Tot began gasping during swim lesson

A toddler who began gasping while in a pool at a Clovis swimming school Tuesday was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Agnes Medical Center.

The cause of death of the unidentified boy is unknown, pending the results of the coroner's report.

Fresno County sheriff's deputies said the child, who was between 1 and 2 years old, began gasping about 6:30 p.m. while in the pool at Jan Thomas Swim School at 8740 N. Willow Ave. The child was with a swimming instructor and his parents also were present, said a person at the school who refused to identify himself. He said the child was with an experienced swimming instructor and was in the middle of a half-hour lesson when he went into spasms and went limp.

Sheriff's officials said deputies were told at the scene that the boy had had heart problems.

firefighters with Consolidated Fire District responded.

Officials withheld further details until the coroner's report is completed.

The source at the school said all swimming lessons there are private. He added that six or seven other children were taking lessons at the time.
