Last surviving descendant of Lincoln dies at 81

Associated Press

1985

Dec

HARTFIELD, Va. — Robert Todd Lincoln Beckwith, the last surviving descendant of Abraham Lincoln, died on Christmas Eve at age 81.

Beckwith, the great-grandson of the 16th president, had lived in a nursing home in Saluda, about 45 miles from Richmond, which was the capital of the Confederacy.

Beckwith was married three times, but his lawyer said he was childless.

Last year, Beckwith told an interviewer for Life Magazine that in his youth, he had enjoyed sailing on the Chesapeake, raising Black Angus cattle on his Virginia ranch, and car racing. "I'm a spoiled brat," he said.

Abraham Lincoln and his wife Mary Todd had four sons, but only one survived to manhood. One son, Edward, died in infancy; another, William Wallace, died in 1862 at age 11 and a third, Thomas, died in 1871 at age 18.

The oldest, Robert Todd Lincoln

Lincoln

as Secretary of War under President James A. Garfield, was Minister to the Court of St. James and president of the Pullman company. He died a multimillionaire in 1926 at age 82.

Robert Todd Lincoln and his wife, Mary, had three children. A son, Abraham Lincoln II, died at age 16 while on a trip to Europe in 1890. Their youngest, Jessie, eloped in 1897 with Warren Beckwith; a classmate and football star at Iowa Wesleyan College.
