The FORT BRAGG ADVOCATE

Fort Bragg's first newspaper began weekly publication on May 26, 1889, the same year the city was incorporated. Not the first paper on the North Coast, the Advocate was a joint ownership of William Heeser, publisher of the Mendocino Beacon (first published 1878) and John Buckingham. Heeser bought Buckingham out in October, 1889 and then sold it to the manager of the paper, Charles J. Cavanagh, December 31, 1892, beginning a publishing career that spanned 33 years. A vigorous promoter of Fort Bragg and an avid bicyclist, he campaigned for concrete sidewalks, street paving, sewerage and street lights for many years. After the First World War, his son, Charles, carried on his father's work until his untimely death in 1923. The elder Cavanagh died March 13, 1925.

The paper continued under the Cavanagh estate for two years until August 13, 1927 when August A. Heeser, son of the founder, purchased the Advocate in a partnership with his friend, E.P. Thurston, of the Ukiah Dispatch-Democrat.

A weekly paper typical of the small town publications of the last part of the nineteenth century, the Advocate consisted of a four page format from 1889 to late 1912 when an eight page edition was offered. Few photographs are to be found in the early issues; the first being in the December 4, 1895 issue. The first and fourth pages were boiler plate consisting of national news and serialized stories with no local content. Pages 2 and 3 contained mostly local items. Birth, death and marriage notices were scattered throughout the local material. Items from other county newspapers were often repeated in the Advocate with little attribution of the source. Consequently, many dates reported as "a week ago last Monday" or "last week" are best estimates by the modern reader.

Before 1906 the paper was cluttered with patent medicine ads which Mr. Cavanagh was loath to publish, but he needed the revenue. With enactment of the Federal Pure Food Act, the medicine ads faded away.

In 1918 a competitor appeared styling itself the Fort Bragg News, an independent Republican newspaper. After struggling along for several years, the News merged with the Advocate April 13, 1927 becoming the Fort Bragg Advocate and News. Still a weekly publication the name was again changed slightly with the February 4, 1949 issue to become the Fort Bragg Advocate-News. The paper experimented with a twice weekly issue from March 2, 1977 to June 15, 1983 when the former, and current, weekly issue resumed. The paper has published continuously from 1889 to date and even through the disruption caused by the great 1906 earthquake which shifted the printing press several inches and spilled all the type cases.

August Heeser continued publication of the paper until 1948 when he sold to a partnership of Russell Kenney and Nelson R. Wilson. In turn they sold to another partnership, Troy L. Maness and William R. Shanks, in 1950 with Shanks acquiring sole ownership in September 1954. The paper is now a locally operated member of the Domrey Media Group which also includes the older Mendocino Beacon.

The paper possesses a paper archive of old issues from 1890 (the first volume is missing) to 1984. Some years in the 1920s and 30s are incomplete, many of the missing paper issues are on microfilm in the Bancroft Library at the University of California in Berkeley. After 1983 all issues are on microfilm in the newspaper's vaults. An effort is currently underway to microfilm all the extant issues and combine the films into as complete a set as possible.

INTRODUCTION

Mendocino County occupies over ninety miles of California's rugged North Pacific Coast. Unpopulated by other than native peoples until 1851, a flood of immigration began when the immense stands of ancient redwood forests were discovered in 1852. Trees so large that gunpowder was sometimes used to reduce their bulk to get the logs into the sawmill provided lumber, shingles and railroad ties for boomtown San Francisco and goldrush California. Thousands of people came from the eastern United States, provinces of Canada and Northern European countries to work in the woods, sawmills, railroads and harbors.

Redwoods grew along most small streams and rivers flowing into the Pacific Ocean for about ten miles back into the interior coastal mountains. Along the streams lumber camps and small villages sprang up. As the nearby timber resource was depleted, railroads were thrust up the twisting waterways to bring down more logs, until, at last, the groves were all harvested. Then, with no more work, the population moved away and the little villages vanished leaving little sign of their brief existence other than some overgrown foundations and graveyards.

About fifteen communities of Mendocino County survived, four of which became incorporated cities. The earliest settlement and today's most picturesque is Mendocino, founded in 1852. The center of the earliest lumbering, Mendocino's population flourished and declined along with the lumber market. Today, the largest city on the County's North Coast is Fort Bragg, founded in 1857 as a military post because of increasing problems of the incoming white population with the indigenous peoples. The post was named by its founder for a West Point classmate, Braxton Bragg, later a major general in the Confederate Army and a thoroughly detested man. After the Indians had been relocated to the interior of the County the post was closed in 1864. The small community near the fort did not prosper until 1885 when a sawmill was relocated from a played-out area some miles north. The post office was established in 1886, incorporation of the city occurred in 1889, and the first newspaper, the Fort Bragg Advocate began publication in May 1889.

This book is a collection of items from the Advocate of births, deaths and marriages for the years 1889 through 1909. Later volumes are planned for subsequent twenty years periods. Some of the news items were edited to provide a normal presentation of information; minor extraneous material was deleted. The original papers or microfilm copies may be referenced for the original item.

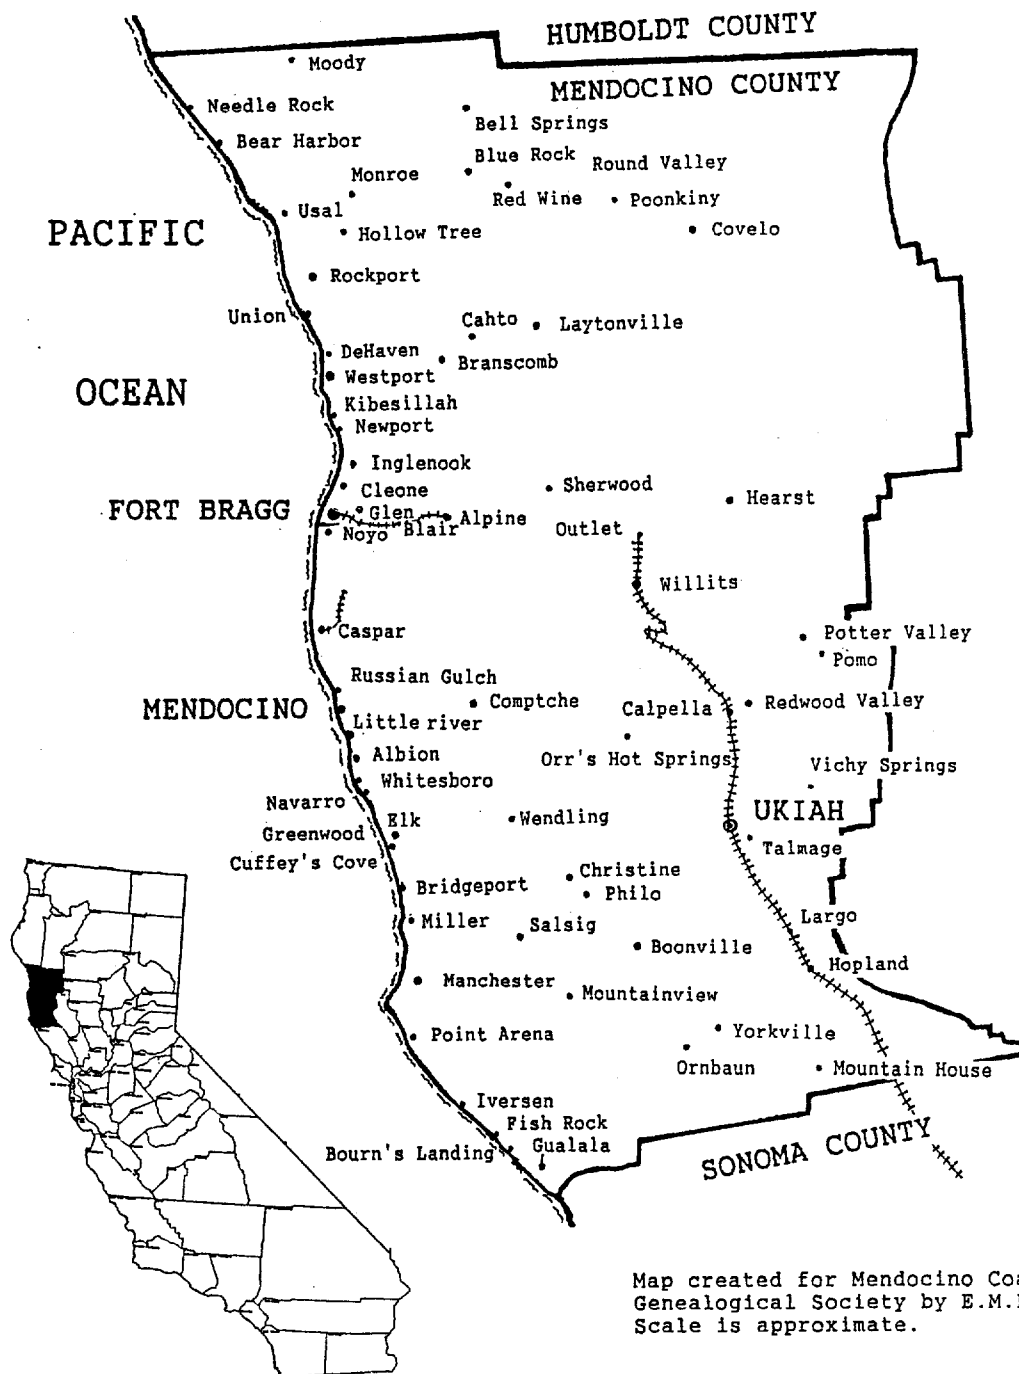

In the late nineteenth century local newspapers provided a record of the events important to the local population. Even after a person moved to another area, events in that individual's life were often reported. The editors of the Advocate reprinted items from other local papers which thus provided countywide news for coast readers. After 1905 the advent of the telephone and improvement of land transportation were reflected in more timely publication of news items.

In the time period of this book (1889-1909) children and women's names are lacking. Birth announcements usually mention the father's name, rarely the mother's and seldom the child's. The death of a child, especially before 12 years, was announced as the child of the father. Women's death notices rarely mention the deceased's maiden names; only their married name reported, i.e. Mrs.A.B.Smith, wife of A.B.Smith, or, sometimes, Mrs Anna Smith. Fortunately, marriage records often gave the name bride's maiden surname.

The Mendocino Coast Genealogical Society has supported and sponsored the production of this book as a community project to record the local history of Fort Bragg's pioneer settlers and their children. The assistance and enthusiasm of the publisher and staff of the Fort Bragg Advocate-News, successor to the Fort Bragg Advocate, is gratefully acknowledged and deeply appreciated by the Society's researchers. A short history of the Fort Bragg Advocate newspaper appears on Page 70.
