INTRODUCTION

THIS VOLUME

This book is a bonus to the genealogical community. The previous volume, number ten in the series, was believed to be the final output on the continuum of life on the Mendocino Coast. Fate, however, provided opportunity to extend the methodical collection of data from the press for another decade. Specifically, this volume covers the decade from 2000 through 2009. The entire series now extends from 1889 through 2009, a period of 120 years.

Mendocino County occupies over ninety miles of California's rugged North Pacific Coast. The county has two distinct parts - the coast that some have compared to England's Cornish seascape and the interior mountain ranges and valleys. The coast is a microclimate moderated by the cold waters of the Pacific Ocean while the inland areas are subject to greater extremes of temperature. The coast was the scene of an extensive logging industry from 1852 until after World War II when an inexorable decline in timber harvesting and the collapse of the fishing industry eliminated the industrial base of the region. The coast continues to be an attractive tourist destination especially for those seeking relief from the intense summer heat of interior California. Moderate population growth is maintained by continued settlement by retired persons.

The format of this book is the same as the previous volumes. The contents are abridged versions of the items from the Fort Bragg Advocate News (FBAN) with some from the Mendocino Beacon (MB), which is owned and produced by the same interests, and a few entries from the Santa Rosa Press Democrat (SRPD) for persons related to the coast. The first section of this book contains an alphabetic listing of the Births from the papers; the second part describes the Deaths while the third section details the Marriages reported. The final section of the book is the Name Index.

The entries are abridgements providing basic details for the span of three generations. The obituaries as published may contain more collateral information, and the researcher is encouraged to refer to the original in the newspaper's microfilms or in the Mendocino Coast Genealogical Society's extensive card file located in the Mendocino County Library's Fort Bragg branch at 499 E. Laurel Street in Fort Bragg. The card file contains all the material contained in this series of volumes plus the 1890 Great Register, funeral home records and other related material. Indeed, the format of these volumes was dictated by the need to display the information on 4"x 6" card stock.

Demographic changes in the Coast's population during the first decade of the 21st century have presented some challenges in the preparation of this volume. A growing influx of Hispanic peoples and their matrilineal naming convention brought some conflict with the more usual patrilineal naming practice resulting in an increase of the indexing of surnames. Marriage as an institution also has changed over the years. Reportage has radically decreased and often the newly married brides retain their maiden names or employ hyphens linking the old and the new causing definition problems for the indexer. Many Marriage items are merely congratulatory notices for anniversaries which in most cases are well deserved.

THE DECADE IN FORT BRAGG

The year 2000 being the last year of the twentieth century was marked by a general fear that all the computers in the world would fail because of programming unable to assimilate the number change from 1900 to 2000. As with most predictions of doom, any disruption proved to be minimal.

Fort Bragg as a lumber industry center received a major blow on September 30, 2002 when its major employer, the last major redwood sawmill on the coast, was permanently shut down. Despite the end after 117 years of the timber era this City by the ocean faced a new life with major improvements to the environment and quality of life.

A new high level four lane bridge across the Noyo River and a new park on the Pomo Bluffs above the river's entrance to the sea were built. Rehabilitation of the entire downtown area brought a fresh look to the city. A one year- long remodeling of the Mendocino County library branch in Fort Bragg was accomplished without service interruption. A new multi million dollar aquatic center was built. A new children's park was constructed amid great acclaim. Sierra Railroad purchased the California Western Railroad and continued to run the popular "Skunk Train". The famous Glass Beach area was taken into the State Parks system. An old railroad trestle bridge across Pudding Creek was restored as a trail link. But, biggest news of all, Fort Bragg's "Front Porch", the entire acreage of the former mill site along the ocean, was acquired by the city for development and recreational purposes. Even given the stressful economic downturn of the latter years of the decade, Fort Bragg survived and prospered..

THE MENDOCINO COAST GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY

The Society, founded in 1976 continues to support and encourage the assembly and retention of local history of the people of the Mendocino Coast. This series of books represents the biographic history of many thousands of individuals in the period 1889 to 2009 as reported in the local newspapers.

Begun in 1994 to save vital information from the slowly disintegrating newspaper files, the Society's efforts evolved into not only a series of published works, but, as mentioned before, an extensive card file that has expanded to include information from a wide variety of other published materials. Consolidation of this biographic information into a central file allows the researcher of a family's history to swiftly review generations of related persons.. In addition to an extensive reference library, the Society also maintains computer access in its facility to facilitate searches on worldwide data bases. Public meetings are scheduled monthly with special programs designed to assist persons interested in finding their roots.

This series of books exemplifies the children's hand game of "Paper covers Rock". In the genealogical sense that means newspaper items contain more family information than tombstone inscriptions. The creation of these books was honored in July 2001 by the California State Genealogical Alliance and again in November 2002 by the national Federation of Genealogical Services. Your editor wishes to express his appreciation to these bodies for their friendly interest and recognition.

Special thanks are directed to the individual members of the Society and to the many interested persons that have supported this effort to save our history.
