Donald Priest

'His feet had died'

Boy awaits second ordeal of amputation

PALO ALTO (UPI) — Doctors began tests today on a brave 10-year-old plane crash survivor who lived through a five-day ordeal in the High Sierra but must have both of his frostbitten feet amputated.

The boy, Donald Scott Priest, was transferred from a Fresno hospital to Stanford Medical Center by ambulance Tuesday after a last-minute visit from two of his baseball idols, Oakland A's pitcher Mike Norris and outfielder Ricky Henderson.

Accompanying Donnie on his 200-mile ride was his father, Donald C. Priest, 39. The boy's mother and stepfather died in the plane crash which occurred Jan. 3 during a blizzard near Yosemite National Park.

The boy, who was found alive Friday by rescue teams who had almost given up hope of finding the wreckage, had been considered in good condition. But doctors at Fresno's Valley Medical Center failed in their attempts to revive circulation in his frostbitten feet.

After learning of Donnie's lone survival against tremendous odds, Oakland A's Norris and Henderson dropped in to visit with him Tuesday. A hospital spokesman said the boy also was "thrilled" with Sunday's

San Francisco 49ers victory over Dallas in the National Football Conference championship game.

Priest said his son was aware that his feet were going to be amputated above the ankle.

"We told him that his feet had died," he said.

The boy's father said he was encouraged by doctors, who said advancements in prosthetics would give Donnie mobility and that he would not be on crutches the rest of his life. He said he was told his son would even be able to jog eventually.

"We tried not to talk about the accident with him," Priest said. "We want him to remember the good times he had with his mother and stepfather."

After the crash, Donnie lay for five days under a pile of sleeping bags in the passenger compartment of the plane, which was nearly buried under the snow of White Mountain in the High Sierra. Temperatures dropped as low as 20 below zero before searchers found him, officials said.

His father said he never gave up hope his son would be found.

"You never give up hope," said Priest, "when there is a loved one involved."

Services pending for Noah Dietrich

The Ventura County (Calif.) Star-Free Press

Tues., Feb. 16, 1982 B-9

PALM SPRINGS (UPI) — Funeral services are pending for Noah Dietrich, who died Monday at the age of 92.

Dietrich ran Howard Hughes' financial empire for 33 years before the two men had a bitter falling out.

Dietrich, whose biography of his boss was used as the basis for Clifford Irving's bogus Hughes autobiography, died of an apparent heart attack in the emergency room of Desert Hospital. His wife, Mary, was at his side. The cause of death had not yet been determined, but Dietrich had suffered heart problems in recent years.

Funeral arrangements are pending at Forest Lawn Memorial Park in Glendale.

Dietrich was a young accountant in Southern California when he heard that Hughes, a 19-year-old millionaire from Texas, needed an assistant. The two men met in 1925 and Hughes hired Dietrich as his chief of operations.

He directed the reclusive billionaire's business interests until 1957, earning $500,000 a year, and after being fired filed a $51 million lawsuit against his former employer. He also served for a time as vice president of RKO Studios.

In 1972 Dietrich wrote the biography "Howard, The Amazing Mr. Hughes," which detailed the billionaire's political contributions and raised questions about his mental capacity.

In his book, Dietrich said the eccentric Hughes stayed in hiding for more than a decade because he was haunted by a fear that his appearance would raise questions about his sanity. Dietrich claimed the eccentric billionaire had suffered serious head injuries in three airplane crashes.

A first draft of the biography was allegedly obtained by Irving, who wrote a book that he presented as Hughes' autobiography. Hughes broke a long personal silence to denounce the Irving book as a hoax and fabrication.

"He was the eccentric son of an eccentric father," Dietrich said of Hughes in a 1972 interview.

Noah Dietrich
Ran Hughes empire

"Those three plane crashes have damaged his brain. He cannot appear in public because he is afraid he will not appear sane. His last words to me were, 'Noah, I can't exist without you.' I told him: 'Keep your hands outta the business. It's set up to run itself.'"

Relations between Dietrich and Hughes grew strained over the billionaire's penchant for leaving the most urgent financial matters of his empire dangling for months while focusing on more trivial matters.

Camarillo family's service Thursday

A memorial service for the William E. Hanson family of Camarillo, who died in a plane crash, will be held at 1 p.m. Thursday at the First Lutheran Church in Camarillo.

The Rev. Orville Hiepler, pastor of the church, will officiate during the memorial service. The Hanson family had been active in the church since joining some seven years ago.

The bodies of Hanson, 44, his wife, Sylvia, 46, and their children, Cathy, 15, and Douglas, 13, were found Monday in the wreckage of their single-engine Viking Ballanca some 25 miles west of Flagstaff, Ariz.

The family had left Camarillo Airport Nov. 24 for a Thanksgiving Day visit to relatives in Flagstaff. Their plane was last seen at the Kingman, Ariz., airport that evening when the plane was refueled.

A series of fierce storms hit western Arizona at the time.

The storm dropped a blanket of snow, interrupting a massive air and ground search for the Hansons' plane throughout a 150-mile area.

Arizona officials said the wreckage of the plane was found in a level, open area by a U.S. Forest Service employee trying to recover a tractor left in the area.

Hanson was an industrial specialist for the Navy at Point Mugu. Mrs. Hanson was an adult education teacher for the Oxnard High School District.

A church spokeswoman said that in lieu of flowers, memorial gifts could be sent to the First Lutheran Church, 380 Arneill Road, Camarillo, to go toward the church's chapel-music room building fund.
